Car Careens Into Ditch; Bursts Into Mass of Flames; One Man Fatally Burned

Three Huntingdon Youths First at Scene of Accident—Extricate Victims From Blazing Wreck

Three Huntingdon youths went to the rescue when a spectacular accident occurred on the Malone-Tout River Road three miles north of Constable shortly after midnight Sunday morning. In the accident, Lawrence Hodges of Malone was fatally burned and his two companions badly injured when the car in which they were riding toward Malone failed to make a turn and sideswiped three trees, turned on Constable.

Hodges' companions were Emery Raymond, Jr., of Wilmington, Delaware, owner of the car, and Earl J. Larmway of Malone.

The accident occurred on what is known as the Rogers curve. Messrs. Carman Stark, Nicol Stark and Clarence Duncan of Huntingdon were returning from Malone at the time. They noted the American car coming at a fair rate of speed. They claimed they narrowly missed being hit by the American car. After the American car roared past they glanced backwards to see that the lights of the car had gone out and sparks were flying from it. The Canadian youths hurried back to see that the American car had careened off the road, hit three trees and was a much battered heap of metal. They found the first occupant of the completely wrecked car bleeding profusely at the head. He was found lying against the fence between the second and third tree that the car had hit. The second occupant was found lying in the road. Canadian youths for help struggled behind the car to see what happened. Soon afterwards the car burst into a mass of flames. The gas from the leaking tank had spread all around the car on the roadway and made of it a veritable mass of flames, shooting up to the height of the nearby trees. This fire prevented for a time the Canadian youths going to the other side of the car. After awhile they circled their way around to find the second occupant of the car lying on the road with his clothes on a mass of fire. They pulled him off to the side and rolled him in a blanket to extinguish the flames. The third occupant was found some distance away lying against a cement post. All of them were unconscious.

The three victims of the flames were rushed off to the Alice Hyde Hospital at Malone in the cars of Dick Martin of Malone and Alex. Thompson of Kensington.

The car which at this accident occurred would appear to be a dark colored sedan. The exact make of the car is not known. The accident which has happened there in the last few months.

State troopers visited the three aforementioned Canadian youths on Sunday in connection with the inquiry which will be held on Monday. It is likely that some of them will be asked to be present at the inquest since they were the first at the scene of the accident.

CAR TAKES TO THE DITCH; NO INJURIES

A car driven by Mrs. Charles Pinsonneault of Malone went out of her control on the Cazaville road near the home of Mr. Oscar Quereau on Friday afternoon and went to the ditch, hitting a tree and badly damaging the car. The other occupants of the car were Miss Arsenault and the infant daughter of Mrs. C. Pinsonneault. None of the occupants of the car were injured to any extent.

The Women Start Work On $30,000 Sewer Here

Work Started on Chateaugay Street Sewer on Monday

The $30,000 Chateaugay Street, Huntingdon, sewer project got under way on Monday when work was started at the east end of Chateaugay Street.

About nine men commenced the work which is to dig an outlet from the sewer into the Chateaugay river. When this is completed work will commence on the sewer proper. The digging will not proceed fast but will be done in sections in accordance with the speed at which the tile for the sewers can be laid. Some 20 men are engaged in making the tile at the rink, which tile should be entirely completed shortly.

It is probable that more than the work on Chateaugay Street later on. It is hoped to distribute the work amongst the unemployed as much as possible.

Work on widening and resurfacing of Lake and Hunter streets in Huntingdon has now been completed. These streets now present a much improved appearance which fact is generally appreciated by the citizens.

The W.C.T.U. Rally Held At Franklin

Numerous Addresses Heard Re Affects of Alcohol and Narcotics

The annual W.C.T.U. Rally of the School of Methods met in the United Church, Franklin Centre on Friday, the 14th. The church was decorated with autumn flowers and ferns. On arriving we were hospitably welcomed by the members of Franklin Union.

The morning session opened with a singing led by the pastor, Rev. T. F. Duncan, who gave an interesting talk on each of the hymns sung. Mrs. N. W. Reese presided at the organ during the day. The County President, Mrs. Roy Blair, in the chair. The afternoon session was opened by the secretary, Mrs. W. B. Levers. A letter was read from Miss Bazin from New York and regret expressed at the absence of Mrs. P. McArthur, 1st vice-president, thro illness. An invitation was extended to hold the County Convention in Brooklet in June. Several suggestions were made for the work of the various departments.

The president urged that each union have a medal contest. Rev. Mr. Woodside led in the noon-tide hour of prayer. A delicious dinner being served in the basement and a social half hour spent out of doors.

The opening devotional period of the afternoon session was conducted by the two ministers present, Rev. Mr. Woodside and Rev. Mr. Duncan. Mrs. Roy Blair, in a short talk told us that the liquor interests spend 25 million dollars a year in advertising. These people concentrate their efforts chiefly upon the young, telling them that liquor is not only harmless but beneficial. Traffic officials report that, of the 36,000 fatal accidents each year, one-third are attributable to off-see drivers. The Women's Christian Temperance Union is raising a fund of one million dollars, no part of which will be spent for any purpose except that of temperance education in various forms. A scientific world declares alcohol a dangerous habit-forming narcotic, best left alone. When this is universally known the attitude of the individual and of the nation will change and beverage alcohol will cease to be the social and economic problem it has always been. Surely this is an ideal world making sacrifice!

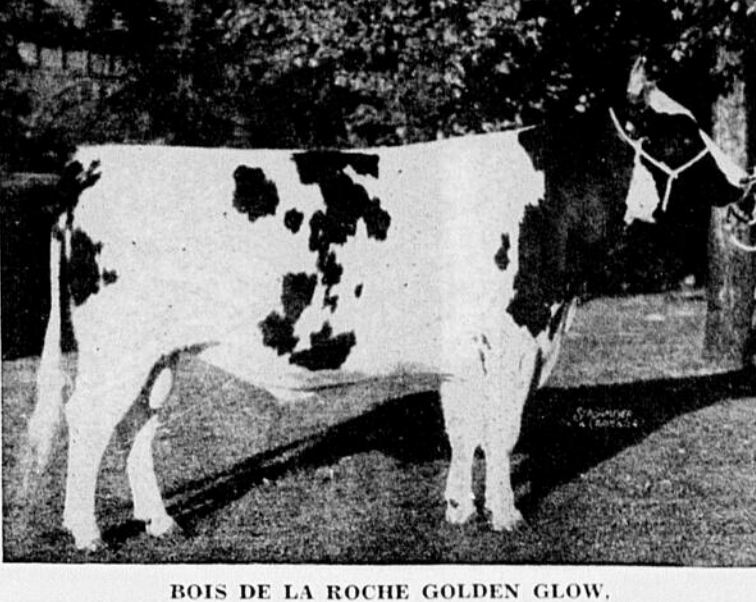

A parliamentary drill was put on by eleven ladies from the different unions. Five of the unions present contributed some item to the program of the afternoon—Mrs. Anderson and Miss Maw gave a vocal duet for Ormstown. Mrs. Whitehead, of Franklin Union, recited, "Ma Peasley takes a chance" and as an encore, "Pat's Panorama". For Athelstan, Mrs. Henry Wilson gave us some good advice, she stressed the fact that we needed to be stirred up and urged each member to be an exciter and as next year is to be a big year in our work to get busy and do all we can in view of this.

Mrs. Duncan, for Brooklet's item, sang very sweetly, "Have you been through the garden with Jesus" and for Huntingdon Mrs. Davis gave a reading, "Poor Mother."

Mrs. J. H. Woodside was made supt. of Lord's Day Observance in place of Mrs. E. C. Boyce.

Mr. James Kiniburgh, of Toronto, was present, and on being called to the platform spoke a few words, citing some of the times in the world war he had seen, run given out where it did more harm than good.

The Week at Ottawa

Preparations to Give Royal Welcome to Their Majesties — Propose International Agricultural Conference

By Spectator

Canada will make full preparations to give an impressive as well as warm and loyal welcome to Their Majesties when they arrive here next summer. The warmth and loyalty will be a natural expression of feelings of the people, but there is also plenty of work to be done by government officials in arranging details of the visit. This will be the first time that a reigning monarch has set foot in any of His Dominions, and credit must be given to the Governor-General Lord Tweedsmuir and Prime Minister Mackenzie King for the happy opportunity to be given Canadians of greeting their sovereigns on Canadian soil. Coming as it does at the close of the period of extreme world disorder there is something peculiarly appropriate in the visit to the senior Dominion of the month of the great democratic union of states which is the most potent force for peace in the world.

It is being suggested that the King may prorogue parliament at the end of next session. Of course while the King is in Canada the Governor-General will have no official position. He is the King's representative. But it is unlikely parliament will be prorogued by the King unless the end of the session can be made to coincide exactly with Their Majesties' arrival. The session will probably be over before the King arrives. Still it is felt that there may be other visits. A very happy precedent has been created, and it is possible, according to some, that Their Majesties might be induced to favor Canada with a visit every five years. It has to be borne in mind however, that there are other great Dominions and India, and that Their Majesties live a busy and anxious life in these days of vigilance and trial in Europe.

The city of Ottawa will make a great effort to get its plans for civic

FIRE OF UNKNOWN ORIGIN THIS A.M.

A fire of unknown origin took place around 2:45 a.m. this morning at the house belonging to Mr. Urgeel Faubert, Borden Street Ormstown. Mr. and Mrs. Adelard Leduc and infant child were occupying the house at the time. The fire was well started before the fire reels arrived on the scene, and although the volunteer firemen extinguished the blaze in a short time and managed to save the main walls, the inside of the house was entirely burned. The family residing in the house were unhurt, and the building was partially covered by insurance.

Asks That Roads be Kept Open

A Godmanchester Township Taxpayer Pleads to Have Roads Kept Open

The following letter to the Gleaner pleads for the keeping open of the roads during the winter:

Huntingdon, Que.
Editor of The Gleaner.

Dear Sir:—

The Godmanchester Council and a large group of the taxpayers seem to have reached a deadlock on the question of winter roads for motor vehicles. It appears they are divided according to personal opinions and their own situations. Those living on or near the highway, which are indifferent or hostile to the claims of back concession or side-road dwellers. Most of them want to grab the public benefits and deprive the others of the same.

Now, the Township Council are elected to look after such affairs. No individual taxpayer outside the Council should have to be placed in the humiliating position of begging for contributions to keep roads passable in winter. It is a disgrace that when this Municipality has a reserve fund of several thousand dollars drawing back interest, and no outstanding liability whatever.

Concessions and side-roads can all be kept open for motor traffic in winter. Sufficient horsepower and merris plows are all that is necessary. There is no tax or restriction put upon those who use the roads; they are free to everyone whether they live on the highway or back of it. Every one who encounters a situation encountered when the highway is clear of snow and other roads covered. School children have to be got to school, milk trucks make their rounds, feed, gas, oil and other products delivered to farms—all involving motor vehicles.

To add to the confusion, many farms do not keep horses shut to travel just for a few trips. Closed roads in winter are a definite hindrance to business and trade of all kinds, which frequently involves buyers from the United States during all months of the year.

Doctors, veterinarians, mail drivers, and inspectors cannot make visits without extra delay and confusion when change of vehicles half way to a destination is made necessary.

Whether attending to all the side-roads and main Ridge Road in Godmanchester during the winter involves raising the tax rate or dipping into the reserves is of little consequence beside the importance of the loss and inconvenience to be endured if the matter is neglected or improperly accomplished.

Godmanchester "A Township that has justifiable pride in its beautiful farms and its all-round progressiveness" reads the advertisement in Anniversary Gleaner.

Well, the Council better get busy and demonstrate some of this boasted "all-round progressiveness," and not leave it to those who hold no office to agitate, collect private subscriptions and generally to interfere with the statutory duty of the Council.

Yours truly,
DISGUSTED TAXPAYER

More Than a Million and A Half Pounds of Tile Are in the Making at the Rink

Romeo Brunet Has Twenty Men Rushing to Completion the Tile to be Used in the Chateaugay Street Sewer

There's real activity at the Huntingdon Skating Rink these days. And it's not early season hockey practices!

Instead, Romeo Brunet of Ormstown has made the rink a hive of activity, making over five weeks' work in the making of new sewers on Chateaugay Street, Huntingdon.

A gang of about 20 men are rushing to completion the tiles and the next week will see them going down the home stretch.

After the tiles are completed they are placed in the field adjoining the rink. When they're all out there will be more than one and a half million pounds of tiles, about 765 tons of them, or in the neighbourhood of $7,000 worth of tiles—whatever you want to look at them.

Mr. Brunet is making 700 thirty inch tiles, 400 twenty-four inch tiles and 200 fifteen inch tiles.

When these tiles have been made within a period of five weeks, they are but three other contractors in the Province of Quebec who make cement tiles of the same fine quality as Mr. Brunet. Hon. Martin B. Fisher was a recent visitor to the Huntingdon Rink where he expressed pleasure with the progress made by the cement tile making outfit.

Mr. Brunet is hoping to secure the rink next year to establish a tile-making plant here as well as at his plant at Ormstown. Mr. Brunet first started making tile at Ormstown, 12 years ago. At that time it was on a small scale and with little forms. Since that time Mr. Brunet has made considerable progress both as to quality and volume. The first tiles he sold were to farmers in the immediate vicinity. Now he sells all over the counties of Huntingdon, Chateaugay and Beauharnois.

When these tiles are used in the new sewer it is expected that the usual trouble of cellars flooding in the spring will vanish.

A piano duet was strikingly rendered by Miss Rita Smith and the leader of the choir from Ormstown, Dr. Jean L. Moreau. Because of her youth the playing of Miss Smith was rather outstanding. Later in the program another piano duet, rendered by the same two, entitled, "Danse Du Démon."

Mr. Robert Baglow of the Ormstown High School teaching staff rendered a fine solo number of "Forza Del Destino" by Verdi was given by Messrs. S. Popek and A. Langevin in a manner that brought much applause.

Problems Facing Parents, Teachers in Quebec Today

Leslie Buzzell of Montreal, Addresses the Hemmingford Parent-Teacher Association, Speaking of Many Pertinent Problems

Leslie Buzzell of Montreal delivered the following address before a recent meeting of the Hemmingford Parent-Teacher Association, which address will undoubtedly be of interest to many parents and students alike.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I am very glad to have this opportunity of speaking to you on some of the problems which exist in our educational system.

I do not need to tell you that the subject of school education is much in the limelight these days. For the past year the press has been full of it. And why? Because not only certain of our educational authorities but also the public at large appear to have become convinced that there is a great deal wrong with the system and that reforms are very necessary.

How does it happen that I have been asked to talk to you to-night on this important subject? Let me explain. In the first place, I want to make it quite clear that I lay no claim to particular expert knowledge, but I can claim this—that I am profoundly interested in the subject and tremendously impressed with its importance. I have too, in my humble capacity of a citizen, a right to form my own judgment, given it a great deal of thought.

Many of you can no doubt put up a similar claim on behalf of yourselves. Why otherwise would you be associated together as you are? Parent-Teacher Associations have come into being for the very purpose of stimulating interest in and helping the great cause of education.

We live today under conditions which may be described as complex. We have complex business and financial systems, our social relationships are complex and we have a complicated governmental system—democracy. We thank God for democracy, but democracy, pleased as we are with it, brings its own peculiar problems. Never before in the history of our country has there been such a great need for an enlightened and clear thinking citizenry as there is today.

I think that our basic problem can be summed up in the following paragraph which was included in the brief submitted by The Montreal Board of Trade to the Rowell Commission:—

"The Montreal Board of Trade holds the belief that one of the purposes of Confederation was to make Canada a national entity in which business could be conducted under a common set of regulatory conditions throughout the Dominion. Unfortunately today it is borne in upon any business enterprise extending across

Casein "Wool" Opens New Possible Outlet For Local Casein, Milk Powder Plant

Local Plant Operated by Tremblay Brothers Has Enjoyed Favorable Progress Since its Establishment In Huntingdon—Manufacturer of Casein and Milk Powder Most Interesting

The town of Huntingdon possesses the one and only Powdered Skim Milk and Casein plant in the Chateaugay and the developments are occurring at this plant lead one to believe that it might become one of Huntingdon's best and most prosperous industries.

The managers and owners of the plant, Tremblay Brothers, who have been manufacturing casein in Huntingdon for the past three years, informed the Gleaner recently that a synthetic fibre having the appearance of wool can be manufactured from casein, a milk by-product. Should the experiments and analysis which are presently being taken care of in laboratories, prove that wool can be successfully manufactured from casein, the local plant will not be able to supply the demand.

The manufacture of casein is most interesting. Firstly milk is bought from local dairy factories only, who acquired it from the farmers of the Chateaugay Valley. This milk is treated with muriatic acid and brought to the same consistency as cheese. After it has been pressed through heavy presses it is shredded and placed in drying machines. The temperature at which this mixture is subjected in the drying machine depends upon the humidity in the air. This dried substance is ground and sifted. After passing through these various stages, the casein which is now prepared and ready for use is furnished to the many buyers who purchase it locally.

When casein is ready to be shipped to consumers, it is packed in bags. This is practically imperishable.

The Huntingdon casein plant is situated on Lorne Avenue and on the second story of the building. On the first floor is the skim milk plant from which milk powder is made. The machinery for making powdered skim milk was installed in the premises only a few weeks ago and the success obtained from this production is most encouraging.

To produce powdered milk several stages must be passed through before it is ready for use. The farm milk is first brought to the factory, then to the local dairies who in turn sell it to Tremblay Brothers of Huntingdon at prices fixed by the market. This undiluted skim milk is used in large quantity at this plant, an average of 12,000 to 15,000 lbs. are consumed daily.

The skim milk is heated in a vat which can contain approximately 1,000 gallons of this fluid. It is subjected to a temperature varying from 80 to 170 degrees. This temperature does not vary under or over this point, as at that stage the milk cannot sour. After it has been subjected to this temperature for some time it is transported between two hot rollers which are heated up by 60 to 80 lbs. of steam pressure with a varying temperature of 300 degrees. Milk falling on these rollers is heated to such an extent that the water content in the milk is almost completely removed. With the water removed it leaves nothing but natural food value of the best sort or powdered skim milk. This food contains an amount of protein varying from 36% to 38%.

Before it is ready for use, the powdered skim milk is passed through a brush-grinder. Milk powder is used chiefly for poultry feed or animal feed. It is sold in great quantities to wholesalers in Montreal and residents in the surroundings use it on their farms.

The personnel of the Huntingdon Casein and Powdered Skim Milk plant is formed of the following: J. Adrien Tremblay, manager and owner, who is ably assisted by D. Hardy, E. Beaulne, F. Beaulne, F. Grenon Sr.

As a commercial raw material product which is the largest possible amount it is not edible. Materials such as buttons, cellophane, glue, paper finishing, etc., along with wool can be manufactured from casein.

It has been recently discovered that the finest wool, although synthetic, can be made from casein. This was great news to the local plant operators. The output of casein since its establishment in Huntingdon three years ago has not varied to a great extent. This staple occupation is attributed to the supply of milk furnished to the local casein plant, being the same throughout the year.

Indian Summer

WE have enjoyed a magnificent period of Indian summer of late which goes a long way towards helping to forget the wintry blasts not so far distant.

And with this Indian summer has been some autumnal scenes throughout the countryside that are veritable gems of soothing beauty. A drive throughout the countryside towards Atholstan, Rockburn, Covey Hill, or in any direction for that matter, will provide nature lovers with picturesque scenes that can not help but draw expressions of true admiration. Travellers on the highways, but more so on the byways, can pass along avenues decorated alternately in tones of subdued splendor and in all the color glories that Nature, the great artist, can provide. Try it. It's a soothing tonic.

Celebrating Holidays

CANADIAN people had many reasons to be thankful on the recent Thanksgiving day.

One reason, however, that is not generally recognized, is that Thanksgiving fell on a Monday, thus giving a nice long week-end holiday. Because of it, families were united and holiday trips made possible. Wage earners gained a long week-end for rest and relaxation.

Such Monday holidays are a potent and convincing argument that all statutory holidays should be celebrated on Mondays. For example, Victoria Day, Dominion Day and Remembrance Day could be celebrated every year on a Monday rather than allowed to fall willy-nilly throughout the week.

From the employer's point of view, it is a costly proposition to halt production of a large factory for a single day. From the standpoint of the employee, it means a "long" week-end, the possibility of a trip, not just a break in the usual routine. From the standpoint of the hotels, railways, buses, steamships, garages and other persons interested in tourist traffic it would be "manna from Heaven," for tourist figures always jump enormously on "long" week-ends.

It's a good idea to let the holidays fall where they may, but celebrate them on the week-end. If we are going to have the holidays anyway, let's have them where they will do the most good.

People should make clear their wishes to their members of Parliament, who, made aware of the popular feeling, can press the government to have the necessary legislation prepared.

On Going Back

SAM MCGEE returned to the Yukon the other day. He returned for a visit to the country in which Robert L. Service wrote concerning him a poem practically every one in this country has heard or heard of—"The Cremation of Sam McGee."

But a return to his old haunts revealed many changes. Nearly all his old "Sourdough" pals of the gold-rush days have disappeared one way or another; and "They're using airplanes up there now instead of dog teams," he said on returning to Vancouver. Sam now lives in Montana.

With advancing years there comes an impulse to revisit earlier scenes. Many former residents of Huntingdon come back to the old home town to see again their childhood acquaintances and scenes of activity. But they invariably find things changed. Many of those who returned to Huntingdon to the Old Boys' and Girls' Reunion after an absence of many years found things changed in a way. People move away. New people move in. A new atmosphere is made. Material changes are made. Time marches on. The only unchangeable thing in life is change itself.

Sam found things sort of different and disappointing when he went back to the Yukon. So often old timers do when they go back to scenes of early activity.

For Better Relationships

THAT many American universities seek to create an even greater bond of fellowship and understanding between the people of Great Britain and of the United States is evidenced in a letter sent to the Gleaner from the Hopper Peace Foundation of Oglethorpe University of Oglethorpe, Georgia.

The letter states in part, "It is fitting that Oglethorpe University should announce a plan to establish, as a part of the Hopper Peace Foundation, a King George V. Memorial for the purpose of fostering the close relations which have existed between the British Empire and the United States for more than one hundred years. The present day political unrest in the field of international relations makes it imperative that these harmonious relationships be intensified between the two great English-speaking democracies."

Towards this end, the King George V Memorial which Oglethorpe University has announced, seeks ways and means to provide scholarships and fellowships for Oglethorpe graduates in British Universities and for British students at Oglethorpe. The fund which Oglethorpe University is seeking is expected to provide the financial means to American students who seek to study in Great Britain and to British students who seek to further their education in the United States.

Since such students inevitably become leaders in the districts where they later reside it seems commendable that the establishing of such scholarships be encouraged. And this for the reason that, having had intimate acquaintance with the life and problems of the other country, the student might finally return to his native land, giving to his native countrymen a truer picture of the "other folks."

Retreat From Reality

FLEEING the reality of international conflict, a group of harassed ladies and gentlemen recently decided to attend a movie, where they hoped to have their minds diverted from facts to fancy. They selected a movie that had been favorably reviewed as having all the elements of successful comedy, without a foot of serious matter in it. The name of the movie was "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife."

Comfortably seated in protecting darkness, the groups began to watch and listen to the make-believe world of Gary Cooper and Claudette Colbert.

The horrible reality of Europe began to be almost forgotten. For the first time in days and nights of anxiety, members of the group chuckled, laughed. Everything was going fine.

Then it developed that on the screen Gary Cooper was having trouble sleeping. He told Claudette about it. She proposed a remedy.

"The thing to do," she told him, "is to put yourself to sleep by spelling some hard word. You lie in bed, and you slowly spell out the letters of this word, starting with the last letter. Between letters you yawn, breathing deeply. It is a sure way of putting yourself to sleep."

The group of seekers-after-unreality was watching and listening attentively, the miserable world outside the theatre now completely forgotten.

Then Miss Colbert said: "A good hard word to use for the purpose of spelling backward in this way is Czechoslovakia."

New Spirit in West

A TWENTY-EIGHT page issue of the High River Times of High River, Alberta, came out of the west this week into the Gleaner office.

It is a special streamlined "Harvest and oil issue" depicting progress along these lines in Alberta. The excellence of the edition reflects the enterprise and aggressiveness of the publisher, Charles Clark.

An extract from an editorial reveals the turn in the tide of the feeling of westerners following a long period of depressing times. Let the editorial speak for itself:

"Here and there in this issue, will be found references to community experiences of the past eight years. This period has undoubtedly been the most difficult in all western agricultural history. To read the records of those early years of the depression, to recall the buffetings of low prices, and untoward crop conditions, is to realize that we have all done rather well to come through as we have done."

"The past two years give substantial indication that we are entering a more sunny period after a long stretch of gloomy weather. The stamina and endurance of our people have been tested as never before, and have been proved beyond question. They have taken the bad with the good and have never lost confidence in the productivity of the soil, and the desirability of the district."

Rackets

IT has been said that two things which will always be with us are death and taxes. At times one is inclined to think that another could be added to the list, namely, rackets.

The district around Huntingdon has had a taste of at least two rackets lately.

One of these rackets was brought to a sudden temporary stop recently with the arrest and conviction in Montreal of men connected with it.

It was an old, old racket with a new kind of trimmings . . . the photo racket.

There were at least six residents of the Herdman district who "fell for it" and it is likely that many more people in other sections of the district were victims also. If all the facts were known it would be no surprise to learn that the photo racketeers took hundreds and hundreds of dollars from innocent victims throughout the Chateaugay Valley.

During the summer, men visited homes in this district asking the people if they had any photos which they wished enlarged. Many of them had. The photo racketeers said they would make an enlargement for say about $2.50 to $4.00 depending on the size. This was done.

Then the photo racketeers praised the enlarged photo as one of rare beauty. Good enough to win a prize of no small amount! In fact, the photo racketeers stated, they were putting on a great photo contest with $5,000 in prizes. The photo stood an excellent chance of winning one of the large cash prizes. To make it a real contender for the cash prizes, however, it would be best to have a fine frame made for the photo. They had a real beauty—one inlaid with gold—for $25. What was $25 when there was a chance to earn a large cash prize? So the victims bit—and plenty of them bit. They paid for having the photo enlarged. They paid for a real expensive frame. But they never saw one of the cash prizes. And neither did anyone else.

Complaints went into the police. The police rounded up the racketeers. And the "fini" was written to another chapter of the age old photo racket.

One of the mysteries of life is why people "fall" for some stranger coming in and selling them something which they could get right at home from reliable people they know. It was ever thus, however, and probably always will be. It has been said that there's a sucker born every minute. And the birth rate along that line hasn't dropped off in the least with the passing of the years.

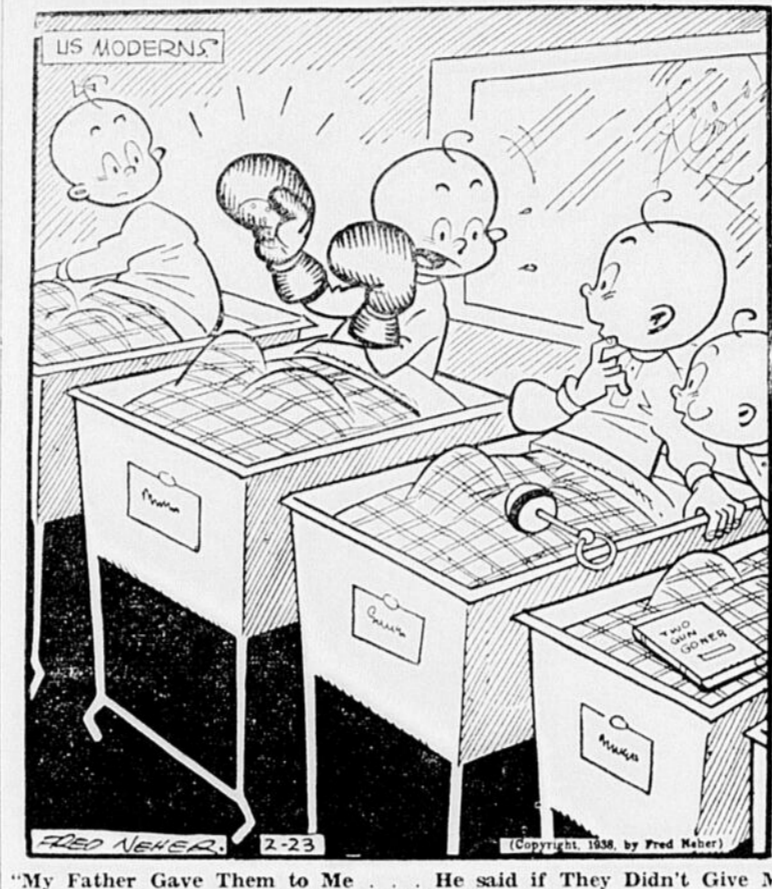

The next racket is the bootleg gas. Small independent gasoline companies are reported to be mixing their gasoline with a fuel oil, thus enabling them to sell it to retailers at two or three cents a gallon under the price of reliable gasoline dealers. It is claimed that some of this gasoline has been sold not so very far from Huntingdon in the Chateaugay Valley. Government inspectors have been checking closely and, it is stated, have found some cases where the gas has not come up to the octane test.

There are some people who do not blame the gas dealers for trying to make a half decent profit on gasoline. As it is they make about three cents a gallon, and if it were figured more closely, probably not as much as that. On the other hand the Government gets six cents a gallon on the gasoline without hardly laying a hand on moving it from production to consumer. It hardly seems fair. But the public, the dear public, always get the dirty end of the stick. They pay the piper. Whether they get fuel oil in their gas or another couple of cents of Government tax slapped on, they pay, and pay, and pay, and so on, ad finitum.

The Government does help, however, to protect the innocent public from rackets by checking up on the racketeers. However, the Government can do little about it if some people refuse to help themselves by being so gullible as to "fall" for some tales of strange salesman. They must be ever on their guard for them. Some day they might finally realize that it is cheapest in the long run to buy their goods from reliable merchants at home whom they know personally and can trust.

GIRL TRAVELS FAST

You'd hardly guess that Wilhelmina Keiser is one of the fastest girls in the world! But she is, for every day of the week she manages to have breakfast in Amsterdam, drop in to London for lunch, and be back again in Holland for tea! She's an air hostess aboard one of the Dutch K.L.M. liners, and her job is to make timid passengers courageous, fussy ones comfy, and big-business men less bored than usual.

One glance at Wilhelmina in her trim blue jacket and white shirt-bow is usually sufficient to bring a smile to the face of the most worried traveller. For this charming Dutch girl is, to say the least of it, "easy to look at." Before she took up her job as an air hostess, Wilhelmina was a teacher in a school in Holland. She speaks five languages fluently, and has a smattering of several others. Most of the hostesses employed on the Dutch air liners are said to remain after six months in order to be married. They get as many as 90 proposals of marriage every year. "Yes, I've heard of that," Wilhelmina replied with a quiet smile. "But I must be different, for, to be perfectly honest, I've never had one proposal!"

BEST DIVORCE CURE

Celebrating his golden wedding anniversary last week, Judge Joseph Sabath, of Chicago, said that hearing 45,000 divorce cases had not soured him on life, especially married life. "In fact, I am happier and more optimistic than I have ever been before," he asserted. The judge thinks that hard work and the struggle to make a living and get ahead is one of the best antidotes, for domestic trouble. Three air liners are said to have carried a poor immigrant boy from Bohemia, "Joe" Sabath, then 18, married Regina Mayer. He was making $10 a week in a store. They bought $115 worth of furniture and rented a basement apartment at $7 a month. When he got a $2 raise two years later, they moved out of the basement. Sabath began going to night school where he prepared himself for the legal profession. In his career as judge in Chicago's superior court, he has effected 3,600 reconciliations, 40 per cent of them permanent, out of the 45,000 divorce cases brought before him.

RAYON FOR TIRES

Newest to which rayon is being put is in tire fabric, replacing cotton. Two of the largest tire manufacturers have discovered that rayon is a better substance for binding rubber than cotton because it is more heat-resistant. A tire on an automobile wheel whirling along at 50 to 60 miles an hour often produces a temperature as high as 220 degrees which bakes the cotton cord and lessens the life of the tire. Experiments seem to prove that heat makes rayon stronger instead of weakening it. Should rayon replace cotton in tire making, it will mean the loss of a market for 283,750,000 pounds of cotton annually.

Letters to The Editor

Dear Editor:

This is an age of discovery, an era of invention, a period of progress, a decade of that which is wonderful and marvelous. It is a time when science wrests from field or stone, or air, a new instrument of construction, destruction,—and sometimes instruction.

In the last issue of your worthy paper, you gave to a waiting world, the greatest of them all, a teacher who apparently has thrown aside all hope of self-preservation, and who dares, not only to think differently from the masses, but to do so publicly, and in print.

It may be true that not every opinion expressed in "Teacher's" letter is unassailable. It is undoubtedly true that hundreds will disagree. The fact remains, however, that in essence, the writer has briefly, lucidly, and eloquently opened up a question which is of the greatest importance to our educational welfare. I congratulate him (or her).

Is this a voice crying in the wilderness? Is it the opinion of one who is a pioneer, of one who will receive no honour in his own day or country? I do not think so. He may be ahead of time, but not so much as many may judge. I believe that before long, in principle at least, his unorthodox views will be adopted and merged into the school systems of this country.

I wish that I had the ability to express my views upon the theme of this letter in such a way as to do it justice. I am not a faddist. I am not committed to any particular "ism", or panacea. I believe, however, that free expression of varied opinion by all those who have them to express, is one way in which intelligent and progressive action may result.

I can well imagine "Teacher's" dilemma. On one side, in an ever swelling chorus, she hears: "Educate the child far beyond the text book. Read much from outside sources. Have the pupil read that which will increase the scope of his vision. Give him the broad viewpoint. Have him read for enjoyment. Teach him civics. Teach him to sing. Provide him with manual training. Furnish him with physical culture. Teach him manners. Give him visual education. Tender him advice as to suitable vocations. Keep him in. Don't you dare keep him in."

And then, comes from all directions in a mighty raucous chorus which sends a devastating chill down the tired vertebral column of the zealous well-meaning teacher, this one terrifying message:

"Hey, you, pass those pupils in June."

Is it any wonder that most teachers creep back on shaking limbs to the old throne, their desk, and there, on bended knees, renew their fealty to the "five foot book-shelf?"

Either of the above practices can be abused. We all tend to go to extremes, but can we not have a more happy medium? It is not necessary to forsake the book and embrace an impossible and fantastic idealism.

Must we not strive, however, to change the haunting fear of long hours of home work, the intense strain of final examinations, for something happier, something more realistic, something that fits in with the buoyant, joyous life that every boy and girl should have as his or her natural birthright?

Yours sincerely,
 A Would Be Teacher.

Dahlia's Whatnots

Faint, Yet Pursuing? At last, I have hit a nail on the head. On Sunday evening my neighbour propounded in my hearing this query: Why does a traffic cop who draws a salary for protecting the lives of the public including tiny children, from reckless motorists, station himself at a crossroads so that he can be seen at a distance of 300 yards or more? The questioner appeared to think that the officer must lack either brains or courage. Now, I had seen and heard so many proofs of the bravery, quick-wittedness, and kindness of traffic policemen at busy city intersections that I thought his country cousin might have some creditable motive for making himself so conspicuous, and I began to wonder if it was not because he was so honourable that he felt it was a contemptible thing to hide in ambush and rush out and frighten the speeders, let alone arresting them. It would be just too bad to deprive the drunken or reckless driver of his remaining ounce or two of self-control; why, he might be crossing with the traffic officer.

Thinking thus, it seemed a little odd that quite soon afterwards, for the first time in my life, I happened to see a traffic cop with another traffic cop, to whom I put some enquiries as to the manner in which he was supposed to protect the public in respect to life and limb. I was informed that a man on such a duty was supposed to stay in the open, and was not expected to give chase after the lawbreaker. It seems that the sight of the officer and his motorcycle, if the driver is not too drunk or speedy to see him, is supposed to do the trick, i.e., to remind him gently that he is a lawbreaker—gently, not forcibly. Thus the officer is in a fair way to develop into a Chevalier Bayard, Class B, if not "sans peur, sans reproche"—from the speeder. It is gratifying to discover at least one class to whom honour is dearer than life itself, only that the honour is one man's, that of mothers, or perhaps of young babies.

One man, whose forte seems to be the solution of problems, both public and private, suggests that it would be a wise economy to dispense with the traffic cops and station official motorcycles in prominent places to warn the speeders. But I am rejoiced to find the cop so "honourable" a man. Yet should some faithless reader accuse me of using that adjective in the ironic sense in which Mark Antony (was) later had helped to slay Julius Caesar, all I can say is that the press, if it deserves the liberty it now enjoys, should be an agency for the public welfare.

Whatever you think ought to be done about it, be sure than in giving your sympathy to any killed or maimed that the speed mania may leave in his track you retain a proper amount for the driver's nervous system as well as for the traffic officer's health. He is exposed not only to the four winds of heaven (he must not, he cannot, due to his keen sense of honour, take shelter behind a tree) but also to the current of air inseparable from the motion of his cycle. Fortunately this is moderated by his instructions which say in effect: "Catch 'em if you run to you, but don't run after 'em, at least not in undignified haste." The taxpayers stand for you, such and uniform, which latter we don't wish you to rumple.

Now, some of the officers are far from having as attractive a personality as the young man who answered my questions, and the speeder, for your such and uniform, there probably are half a dozen car-owners who frequent every crossroads and who dash madly past such corners devoid of any sign of either conscience or judgment.

Up and at them.—I read that the K. of C. at a recent convention had resolved to wage unremitting war upon the Communists. While giving all due credit to their good intentions, would it not be easier to start on the Fascists? If the general run of their young fellows, mild-tempered and generous-souled, as the Fuehrer and Il Duce, our worthy K. of C. might put them in their place and only get well "het up" as the broad Scotch puts it, and be in fine fettle to tackle the Reds.

A young businessman from the city told us how bitterly his Hebrew acquaintances criticized Chamberlain's restraint in dealing with the oppressor of their kinsmen in Germany.

Our young friend agreed with them in his secret heart to a certain extent, but after a certain help he pitched in and stood up for the English Premier.

He also said that when the war clouds were black, he noticed a falling-off in the turn-out at the armory gatherings. Do not blame the boys and men too severely. They know, by this time, that war is no picnic, and that there has been most unjust discrimination in the allotting of pensions as between officers and privates and the dependents of the different ranking soldiers.

Facts of Interest to Movie Fans

MARGARET SULLAVAN Margaret Sullivan's first motion picture role carried her from screen obscurity to stardom overnight.

A descendant of distinguished Americans, she was born to Cornelius Hancock Sullivan and Garland Hancoll Sullivan, members of old Virginia families, at Norfolk, Virginia, on May 16. At the age of three she was taken to Montreal, where she was given recitations at social gatherings. When she was six she began studying dancing.

Educated in private schools and Sullins College in Virginia, Miss Sullivan, after graduation, joined E. E. Clive's dramatic school and company at the Copley Theater in Boston. Later she helped organize, with a group of collegians, a dramatic company at Cape Cod where for three summers she played juvenile leads with the University Players and returned to Norfolk for a year of debutante events in Virginia society.

In the following year, she rejoined the University Players and appeared in such plays as "Constant Nymph," "Coquette," "Firebrand" and others, and toured the South in the feminine lead in "Strictly Dishonorable." The company returned via Princeton where Elmer Harris saw her performance and offered her the starring role in his Broadway production of "The Modern Virgin." The play brought her immediate praise from the critics and during its season, run her popularity increased steadily. At the close of the play she appeared in the leading roles in "If Love Were All" and "Happy Landings." Then came a season of stock and in 1932 a return to Broadway in "Chrysalis." Early in 1933 she succeeded Marguerite Churchill in "Dinner at Eight" on Broadway.

She appeared on the screen in "The Good Fairy," and developed an enthusiasm for film work. Her popularity spread so rapidly that when she visited England in 1934 that country's critics gave her equal honors with Hepburn and Bernier as England's choice for the three greatest actresses of 1934.

She is married to Leland Hayward, theatrical agent. They have a baby daughter.

Shortly before starting "Three Comrades," Miss Sullivan signed a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring contract. She next starred in "Shop-worn Angel," with James Stewart and Walter Pidgeon and then in "The Shining Hour" with Joan Crawford, Melvyn Douglas and Robert Young.

When the latter assured him he was, he was feeling well, the first man stated that he had heard the second had just passed away a short time ago.

BLUEBERRY CULTURE
As far as is known there are no commercial plantings of cultivated blueberries in Canada, but considerable interest is being shown in three experimental plantings at the Dominion Experimental Station, Kentville, Nova Scotia. There is also a small planting of cultivated varieties at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. Results at Kentville would indicate that the blueberry will thrive under the local conditions of cultivation. Most of the varieties are hardy, comparatively free from disease or pests, and properly handled may be depended on to give a good yield of large fruits. The soil for blueberries is important. The plant apparently requires a good moisture supply but not a water-logged soil. Information as to soil types, preparation for planting, cultivation, fertilizing, pruning and varieties is contained in a publication which may be obtained free on request from the Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Proposed International Agricultural Conference
The suggestion of Mr. Bracken, premier of Manitoba that an International Conference on agricultural products marketing problems should be held in Winnipeg next December throws further light on the unfortunate condition of markets for wheat and other agricultural products. Whether or not suggested by some of the duty of calling the conference suggested by Mr. Bracken's foresight should be laid on the shoulders of federal rather than provincial authorities is not the most important point. The wheat Advisory Committee in London some months ago issued a report which warned of impending huge surpluses of wheat and suggested some concerted international effort should be made to deal with the surplus problem. Canada's wheat export surplus, after provision made for domestic consumption and future seeding requirements will be about 230 or 240 million bushels. Canada has guaranteed the wheat producer 80 cents a bushel on the most important point. The wheat wheat delivered at the head of Great Lakes. This is much higher than the price on world markets. The government's action may in perfect fairness be said to have two aspects. On the one hand it saved the West from the perils of a moralized market and on the other hand has put a pretty heavy burden on the taxpayer.

The Bren Gun Probe
The Royal Commission investigation of the Bren light machine gun contract made by the government of national defence with a firm in Toronto is still proceeding and will likely not be finished for some days. The complaint has been made at the investigation that the case is being tried by the newspapers and the public. It has been suggested that all should keep an open mind until all the evidence is given and until the Royal Commissioner, Judge Davis, who is held in high respect for his fair dealing gives his report. The suggestion is undoubtedly a good one.

PARKLAND BROME GRASS
The "Parkland" variety of brome grass, according to W. J. White and Mr. M. Stevenson of the Dominion Forage Crops Laboratory, University of Saskatchewan, is the result of several successive generations of selection within inbred lines. It differs from common brome grass essentially in that the plants lack the strongly spreading underground stems which are typical of common brome; and the general type of plant which composes the strain is dense and leafy, as opposed to the more open-growing, coarser types found in the common type. The "Parkland" variety is slightly lower in seed yield than typical commercial brome, but yields of over 200 lb. of seed per acre have been obtained under favourable conditions.

is meant no narrow sectional thing, rather a spirit of the opposite of selfishness, the desire to help and cooperate with others.

We must all keep in mind one exceedingly important truth. It is that the school children of today are those who will have to do the thinking and make the decisions of tomorrow.

If we were scrapping our present school system and starting afresh, what would we aim at? We would aim at an ideal system. Let me leave with you one or two ideas which we would take into consideration in setting up our ideal system.

1st. I believe that first and foremost there should be an enlightened public interest in education.

2nd. I believe next that the teaching profession is one of the finest in the world and that this fact should be recognized and the teacher accorded the standing in the community which he deserves.

3rd. I believe that the jurisdiction of a school system should extend over natural areas without regard to municipal boundaries.

4th. The governing body should be composed of individuals properly qualified to grapple with the problems that confront education and who are sufficiently public-spirited to give the necessary time.

5th. There is need for a teaching staff that is well trained, well paid and possessed of an open mind regarding any constructive changes in education.

6th. Teacher training itself should prepare teachers in every respect to be not only the people who impart knowledge to the youth of the country, but also leaders in the community.

7th. The schools of the system must provide adequate libraries in order that the children's horizon of knowledge may be enlarged beyond the bounds of the curriculum.

8th. Sufficient money must be spent on education to ensure that all educational advancements that have been proved to be successful can be put into effect.

What are our aims as parents insofar as our children's education is concerned? I believe that there are four main requirements—

Character Development
A Well-balanced Education
Proper Physical Development
Co-operation between the School and the Home.

It seems to me that if these four requirements are met, that is, character development, a well-balanced education, a proper physical development and co-operation between the school and the home, a youth at the age of seventeen or eighteen years should be prepared to take his place in society, armed with strength of character, good morals, the faculty of thinking clearly, a sound practical education and the ability to be happy in his social relationships.

For the purpose of convenience, I propose to deal with these requirements separately, but I must make it clear that I believe they are all interwoven and form part of school education. How can these four main parental aims be attained?

The first point to which I refer is character development. How can this most easily be achieved? My answer is—the teacher. If a child is under the influence of teachers who have strong characters and who are persons whom that child respects and admires, then all will be well. These teachers must be persons who are entitled to the respect of the community, whether or not that respect is accorded to them. They must be good citizens. They must be carefully selected and trained and they must be under the constant supervision of enlightened educationists. It follows that they must have social security both during their teaching careers and after. They must be afforded the opportunity to teach the three R's.

Little of this is permitted under the present system. I am confident that if a child is under the guidance of such teachers, the character development of which I speak will inevitably result.

My second requirement is a well-balanced education. I believe that the following points must be considered in the development of an adequate school training:

The curriculum should not be confined to teaching the three R's. It should provide an elementary grounding in the essential arts and sciences, the importance of public health, citizenship and so forth. But little effort has so far been made in this direction.

The text books used in the school should be unprejudiced, unbiased and the product of the best educational brains. While the books should be up-to-date and accurate, they should not be educational exercises. Does it not follow that the text books should be supplied by the schools? Unfortunately if parents must pay for these books, many will inevitably feel that the old text books would probably do as well. This is short-sighted but natural in this direction.

The equipment in our schools is inadequate. Libraries should be well-stocked and well supervised. The necessary technical equipment for practical sciences such as physics and chemistry should be available. The equipment in these subjects should include microscopes, pictures, radios and so forth. In order that advantage may be taken of these mediums for educational development.

The aesthetic side of a child's education is very important. Music, nature, public speaking and dramatics all should have their place in the daily work. I know that most educationists appreciate this but many parents do not.

Classes must be of moderate size. It seems incredible to me as a layman that the best educational results can be obtained in classes of forty or forty-five children, such as exist in many of our schools. Do you not agree with me that special classes for deficient or retarded children are essential? Children of limited capabilities should be taught in special classes so that they will not interfere with the advancement of normal children or be a bad influence on discipline in the class.

For their own sakes they should not be the butt of the jokes of their brighter companions nor be subjected to the humiliation of continually being unable to keep up with their classmates.

I feel that examinations should be eliminated as far as possible and that the child's standing in the classroom throughout the year should govern promotion from one grade to another.

At certain times in the child's school life special attention is necessary. For example, I believe that the child should start his school life in a kindergarten where he learns the value of discipline and co-operation at an age when work is still a matter of play. Again, when he reaches the ages of twelve to fourteen, surely he should be placed in a junior high school where his peculiar bent and inclinations may be directed into the proper channels.

My third point is the necessity for adequate physical development. The first essential is proper school buildings which should be, I suggest, of medium size and built in carefully chosen locations in what may be termed the natural school area. This point would seem to be obvious, but unfortunately it appears that our schools are sometimes built to satisfy sectional interests rather than in accordance with the logical requirements of the whole community. I also believe that great attention should be paid to the lighting and ventilation of the schools, as defects of this kind hamper a child's development and retard his educational progress. I understand that Quebec has the highest per capita rate of tuberculosis of any province in the Dominion. Our school system as a whole must recognize and combat the prevalence of this disease. Gymnasia are essential and the playground should be more than a stretch of gravel. If the child is to have a proper physical development, it seems necessary that he should take part in organized sports and that his play as well as his classroom hours should be under the supervision of a competent personnel.

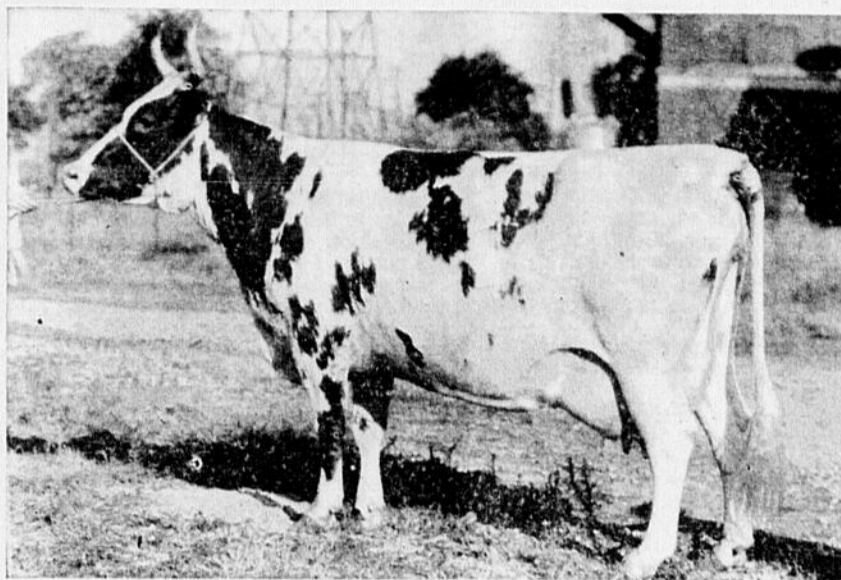

My final point is that as a taxpayer I require that what money is at the disposition of the school system must be well spent. Whether the school board be elected or selected it must be run with the maximum efficiency. These boards must see that the most important individual in the school system, the teacher, is compensated in accordance with his deserts and that outstanding merit and length of service are rewarded.

I have already stressed the great value of education to our communities and our country as a whole. I believe that value to be well high and estimable. I also believe that proper educational facilities developed, education would be the means of providing benefits to the community in ways which are today hardly realized and to an extent which is by no means generally recognized.

One of the ideals to be aimed at by an ideal system is, as I have already stated, the development of clear-thinking citizens. Is it not much better to expect that the education accorded the recognition which it merits and adequate funds provided for an efficient educational system, the solution of many of our community and national problems would result? There is little doubt that through the medium of education savings could be effected in many fields outside of the educational sphere and educational revenues be acquired which would make manifold returns to the public for any excess expenditure which was devoted to education itself.

I think many of our social and national problems of today are due to the fact that the public does not appreciate the value of education. It is not prepared to spend the money that our school system requires nor to accord to the teachers the support and standing in the community which they are the persons responsible for the character of the citizens of tomorrow, are entitled to receive.

also wish to raise the question whether the schools should not do more to promote public health to prevent contagious diseases and to expose the evils of malnutrition and unscientific feeding. The fact that it is impossible to teach many parents the essentials regarding public health does not, I feel, relieve the schools of their moral responsibility (which may be a limited one it is true) for the physical health of the child. After all, as a parent I insist that the mental and physical development of the child is a community concern.

My last requirement as a parent is co-operation with the principal and the teacher. Surely it is a parent's right to have a constant interchange of views with the teacher regarding the child's peculiar problems and that if either of them fails to do his share in this respect, the delinquent party must be convinced of his error.

I also believe that to obtain a proper view of the child's relationships in the society in which he finds himself, it is extremely important that the parent should learn the views of other parents and teachers. The solution of community problems may largely lie in well-organized, well-regulated Parent-Teacher Associations. So far only a few efforts have been made in this respect by progressive principals and teachers.

We have been discussing the school system from the point of view of parents. As taxpayers, we are interested in four points:—

(1) Education must be treated as a community problem in which we cannot refuse for another's child what we desire for our own.

(2) Taxpayers must be made to realize that the school systems must have sufficient moneys to meet the educational requirements which I have outlined.

(3) The system by which these funds are raised must be equitable.

(4) The money, once raised, must be properly spent.

My first point is that education is a matter that concerns the whole community. It should be compulsory. The proper relationship of the taxpayer to the school board must be established so that the former realizes and appreciates that the board is his servant. He must make the board constantly aware of an active public interest. Insofar as the individual board is concerned, it should have jurisdiction over whatever may be the natural school area without regard to purely arbitrary municipal lines. The school boards, principals and teachers must do everything in their power to make the public realize that the problems of our schools are ones in which the public is vitally concerned.

I feel that too great emphasis cannot be placed upon the necessity of the provincial education authorities constantly taking the lead to improve educational standards and to educate the public in the social values of a well-rounded school educational system.

My second point as a taxpayer is that the schools must have sufficient moneys to maintain and improve the existing standards of education. If real estate is so burdened that it can bear no larger taxes, and school fees may prevent children from attending the higher classes, the only answer is a revision of the taxation structure to provide funds for education from other sources of revenue.

My final point is that as a taxpayer I require that what money is at the disposition of the school system must be well spent. Whether the school board be elected or selected it must be run with the maximum efficiency. These boards must see that the most important individual in the school system, the teacher, is compensated in accordance with his deserts and that outstanding merit and length of service are rewarded.

I have already stressed the great value of education to our communities and our country as a whole. I believe that value to be well high and estimable. I also believe that proper educational facilities developed, education would be the means of providing benefits to the community in ways which are today hardly realized and to an extent which is by no means generally recognized.

It is not prepared to spend the money that our school system requires nor to accord to the teachers the support and standing in the community which they are the persons responsible for the character of the citizens of tomorrow, are entitled to receive.

The Women In Politics In Canada

chewan, Alberta, and British Columbia, had granted women the right to vote in municipal and school elections, now all the provinces with the sole exception of Quebec, have given women a right to vote in Provincial as well as Dominion elections. The year 1918 was memorable for full suffrage victories for women in Great Britain, (Scotland and Wales) Austria, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Hungary, Ireland, and one state in Mexico. In 1919, Sweden, Serbia, Rhodesia, and the East Africa Protectorate gave the ballot to women. In England, a law was passed in 1919, which gave them equal rights with men to be elected to the House of Commons, and in December of that year, Lady Astor was elected to that body.

It is interesting to know that prior to the years named, New Zealand had given women the franchise as had also Australia. Norway was the first European country to give women the franchise, and in Iceland, Finland, and Denmark, women are eligible to membership in the law-making bodies of their country. In 1916, Holland gave women the ballot, while in 1917, bolshevik Russia placed full voting power in the hands of its women.

The Government of China is pledged to advance women's suffrage, which already exists in one of its provinces. In Rangoon, Belize, Bombay, and Baroda (India) women have the municipal vote.

Canada has now four women in Parliament. Our first Canadian Member of Parliament, Miss Agnes McPhail, a school teacher, was elected in 1921, as member for Grey-Speaking of her nomination. Miss McPhail says, "It was the most thrilling experience of my life. Ten men and myself were chosen as candidates, and it seemed wholly unlikely that the woman would win. I remember, they balloted from 2 p.m. until 6 p.m., and everyone was surprised that I was elected."

When I first entered the House of Commons, I found the opposition to me extreme, and the criticism unjust and continuous. I believe, the men resented deeply the fact that another sanctuary had been invaded, and believed the fine old spirit that had prevailed would be broken. It is only of recent years that I have been received into the fellowship of the House of Commons."

What Miss McPhail has had to do, agriculture, problems, international relations with a view to establishing peace, encouraging greater opportunities for women; to reform of our penal system, and to social problems generally.

In contrast, Mrs. Geo. Black, who followed Miss McPhail's footsteps three years ago, was received with an open arms into a House of Commons that knew her well as their former Speaker's wife. Mrs. Geo. Black came to Parliament as many women go into business; to take her husband's place. Her preparation was many years' experience as wife of the Governor of Yukon, who was elected to Parliament in 1911, and later made Speaker remaining un-illness kept him at home. Mrs. Black who is 72 years, says, "I suppose at my age I ought to be at home knitting, but here I am in Ottawa, thanks to the loyalty and chivalry of the men in the Yukon."

She explained what she meant, by the story an old-timer with opposing politics, who had come to her, shortly before the election, and putting his arm around her shoulder, said, "Old lady, we don't want you a darned bit, but we are going to vote for you just the same."

"That is all very well as joke but undoubtedly, she is in Parliament representing the Yukon Territory, because, no one knows better than she, the life and needs of its people. She is striving for good roads, the development of the territory, health measures, and tourist traffic, and she is intensely interested in her work."

When Mrs. Cairnie Wilson was made a Senator in 1930 the general conversational remark was, "Well, if they have to put a woman in the Senate, they certainly could not have chosen a better one."

Her father, the late Honourable Senator Robt. McKay, she inherited an unusual aptitude for business and knowledge of the administration of governmental affairs. Her outstanding achievement was in 1922, when she called a meeting of the wives and daughters of the Liberal members of Parliament and with an original membership of 1000 started "The National Federation of Liberal Women of Canada," and as a result of her efforts, she is able to speak French fluently. A hostess, diplomatic and hospitable, whose dinners bring many of the most important men of the country together, she is also the devoted mother of 8 children.

Senator Iva Fallis made her first big step toward the Upper Chamber from the political platform of the great Winnipeg Conservative rally in 1929, when the Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett was chosen leader of the party. In political circles they still talk about the amazement caused by the pretty dark-woman's oratory in that great crowded auditorium.

Iva Campbell Fallis had had a good grounding in politics, as she had heard them discussed over the family dinner table so freely, that she grew up more interested in them than any thing else in the world. High School, she ran away from classes to attend a trial for protesting her long suit and she enjoys it thoroughly. Quiet in manner, calm and collected, she is liable to speak in Kingston on Monday, Toronto on Tuesday, Niagara Falls on Wednesday, and in Ottawa on Friday, and never seem fussed. Senator Fallis loves the country, and is never so happy as when she can pay a hurried visit to her farm home near Peterborough, where—as she expresses it—her husband "keeps the home fires burning."

Women in Parliament worked for their jobs, and work to hold them. Is there room for more women in Parliament? The answer seems to be up to the women. Their number is increasing in public life, and it may be only a matter of time 'till the parliamentary quarter have company. There are at least thirty woman members of school and collegiate boards throughout the country. Who is next in Parliament? There is room.

Women in the Erstwhile Man's Profession

As was mentioned before, women's place was in the home, anything outside the home belonged to man, but we have seen in Biblical times, Deborah, a prophetess, leading the Israelite army to victory. In early English history we have Broadsea leading the Britons against the Roman invaders. Some of the best sovereigns of the world have been women—some of the worst also (Jehazabel) Victoria, Elizabeth, etc. Shakespeare in the "Merchant of Venice" shows us how Portia as a judge was so clever that she drew forth praise from Shylock, the Jew, as "A very Daniel come to judgment," and by her astute reasoning saved her client Antonio. Thus as generals, rulers and judges, they proved equal to men. That the feeling, so strong years ago, against women as doctors, lawyers, clergymen, etc., is dying away, is proven by the fact that many women graduate today in these professions and make good. In the United Church today we have one, if not two, ordained ministers. I wonder how many of you know that the Hotel Dieu Hospital in Montreal was founded by a woman—Jeanne Mance—in 1642. Of course it has grown since then, but it owed its start to a woman's effort. Then, too, our General Hospital owed its beginning to the efforts of a noble band of women called "The Female Benevolent Society," who established soup kitchens, and a small hospital of 4 beds for the needy sick. So successful were these ladies in caring for the destitute sick that some of the business men decided to help and a larger building was secured and equipped, hence the Montreal General Hospital of today has grown from this small beginning. In nearly every walk of life, women are entering and making good, not in so doing are they neglecting their homes, for are we not studying how our homes may be made more sanitary, work done with labor-saving devices, our leisure and opportunities made the most of, etc., so I could go on and enumerate the many ways in which women have entered into and made good—authors, writers, newspaper correspondents, aviators, ambulance drivers, heads of business firms, etc., but time presses, so I will close with the hope that in these dark times, women will not forget to strive for peace, pray for peace, and bring whatever influence they may have, to bear upon those in power to do all they can for peace, that lives may be spared, and brotherly love be engendered. Since writing these lines, the war clouds have lifted, peace seems to be established—for a time at least—and who knows but what women's prayers and influence may have helped to bring this about.

in displays will be prepared by experts. Plaards and streamers bearing the inscription: "SEE WHAT THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC PRODUCES FOR YOU" will be displayed in these stores while a special seal will identify each article of Province of Quebec origin.

It is also the intention of the authorities of the Department of Commerce to follow up this vigorous campaign of propaganda. In this connection, Mr. Louis Coderre, deputy minister of Commerce and Industry who was kind enough to accept the presidency of the Committee on Organization for the "Quebec Products Week" makes the following statement to the press: "This is the first time in the business history of our Province that so big a movement was undertaken by the provincial administration and business men to acquaint the consuming public with the resources of our soil, our fisheries, our mines, and our numerous industries. We most earnestly trust that this initiative, entirely approved by all, will mark the beginning of a sustained and constant effort to keep before a public desirous of knowing them, the splendid home products available here. To this end we are now putting the finishing touches to the organization of an association of business men convinced of the excellence of this economic principle—that quality for quality and price for price the preference ought to be given to the fruits of our own workmen's labor, whether of soil or industry. An association, shall I say, of business men who in the language of business, will push the sale of our own products."

We hope to receive from a public careful of its own interests helpful towards the success of our enterprises, and anxious for the economic progress of the Province of Quebec, the same enthusiastic support as is being manifested by our industrialists and merchants. For this movement, there could be no better guarantee of brilliant success for the "Quebec Products Week" than this movement. There could be no better guarantee of brilliant success for the "Quebec Products Week" than this desired support from the consuming public.

"The Ticker Tape Murder"

By Milton M. Propper

Escape

"Mr. Nixon plunged headlong into the woods. On every side were heavy thickets, bushes, hindering his flight, but hiding the direction of it. About him was a black darkness; and the rain was a torrent, accompanied all the while by long, dull booms of thunder. Not the kind of crashes that follow lightning, but the soft, muffled, and constant roll of sound drowned out his crashing footsteps."

As though the girl was experiencing every moment of terror of the man she loved in his dreadful predicament, she dramatized the scene in vivid, indelible phrases. "Can you grasp it, Mr. Gilmore, like a hunted animal running blindly into thickets, torn by briars and brambles, dodging and twisting through that terrible storm to save his life? Running, stopping to listen, believing he heard them on his trail and going on again gasping for breath, stumbling and picking himself up with an effort and running on and on through the woods? Twice he hid as he heard them approach cursing that the storm prevented them from either seeing or hearing him; and when they had struggled by, doubled back again. The first time they discovered the trick and retraced their steps, knowing that they could not let him escape after what had already happened. But the second time, he succeeded in throwing them off."

"It was the darkness that saved Mr. Nixon. As the two men came nearer, he crouched down in the hollow of a split tree, holding his panting breath with an agony of effort. They passed him, beating the bushes within two feet of him, so that he could have reached out and touched them. But, mercifully, they did not find him and no telltale flash of lightning gave away his hiding place. Throughout, the storm protected him well."

"By sheer good fortune, he found his way into the clearing. During his flight, Mr. Nixon must have been cutting directly through the woods, all the while. For long minutes after the footsteps of his pursuers died out, he remained in hiding, not daring to stir. But finally, certain that he was safe, he went on in the direction away from the road where his flight had begun. If he had known what a large area Pelham covers, he would never have avoided the road; it is so large that children have wandered about it in circles, lost for days. But he found his way out. He finally caught a glimpse of our lights near the edge of the woods, and worn and sick, managed to reach our door."

The recollection of her first view of the financier, in the pale lamplight that illuminated the doorway, caused her voice to break in a moan of sorrow. The narrative had strained her nerves to the breaking point; it was not until Gilmore had procured for her a tumbler of water from the kitchen that she was able to speak again.

"Perhaps you had better rest a while," he suggested solicitously. "I realize that this is not very easy for you and I wouldn't want you to overtax your strength."

Martha smiled sadly as she returned the glass to him. "No, no, I'm quite all right now, thank you. I think I can finish now—there isn't much more left to tell."

She plunged once more into her narrative. "Mr. Nixon had not recovered from his terrible experience, even after he had dried himself by the fire and rested."

"While I was out of the room, making tea for him, I suppose it was that Mr. Nixon gave Frank the money he had brought. He was still trembling and coughing; he had not been well since his narrow escape, and he had cold worse. He was in no condition to leave, and when he looked at his watch and said that he must go on, I pleaded with him to wait till he was feeling better."

"To Newfield."

"He took out his watch? Did you notice whether it was broken or not? It might have been shattered in his flight through the woods."

"It was perfectly all right as far as I could see," Martha replied after a moment's pause. "It must have been going because it agreed with our kitchen clock. It was quarter of 8, then."

Gilmore nodded and indicated that she continue.

"But Mr. Nixon wouldn't hear of remaining. Even though he wasn't well, he insisted on following what had been his original plan in coming to Newfield. He was going back to Newfield to catch the train to Cape May. He had counted, of course, on being driven back by the two men who had brought him, but now he had to depend on Frank and Clem to get him there. There wasn't much time left, considering that Newfield was twenty miles back and it was already ten minutes to 8."

"Do you know what train he intended to take, Miss Marley?"

"It's an express to the shore," the girl replied. "It gets to Newfield at 8:25 and stays for five minutes. I believe, till an Atlantic City train with which it connects comes in."

"The detective that up suddenly, the 8:25 train for Cape May, at Newfield, was, at Camden, the 7:45 train which, according to Higgins, Russell Stirling had taken. At last he found the first glimmer of consistency in a series of facts that were, for once, compatible with each other."

"But by going to Newfield," he objected, "Nixon would be going back toward Philadelphia. Wouldn't it have been better for him to go in the other direction to the nearest station toward Cape May, say, Oldroyd, twenty miles further on?"

"Even as he asked the question, he recalled that the 7:45 express stopped at Oldroyd only on the request of passengers. That, in itself, explained the peculiar arrangement by which Nixon doubled on his tracks, but Martha's reply presented another reason for the plan."

"That wouldn't do," Mr. Gilmore, even though he would have had till later than twenty minutes after 9 to make the train at Oldroyd; but he said that he had arranged to meet some one at Newfield, and he wanted to keep the appointment. I think he was most influenced by a nervous but natural anxiety to get away, among people again, and going to Newfield was the quickest way."

Better and better. Rankin's ideas were now beginning to be corroborated and Gilmore put his next question eagerly.

"He wanted to meet some one? Did he let anything fall about whom it was?"

"He merely said he wanted to leave," the girl said. "and Frank promised to do his best to make the train for him. As it was still storming, we wrapped Mr. Nixon in blankets in the machine, so that he would not be cold during the ride, and to prevent the chance of a complication setting in."

She mentioned nothing further. Gilmore observed of the situation existing between her and the financier. Whether the latter had expected to her his willingness to assist her in her difficulties, he did not know; but if he had, Gilmore believed Martha would have eased his mind by informing him that she bore him no grudge.

"So Mr. Nixon did not take his coat along, when he left," he observed. "Exactly what was the reason for it?"

"The Motive?"

"It was not fit to wear in public any more. You saw his condition, Mr. Gilmore—nearly dead and terribly soiled. If he had that on, it would have attracted attention to himself at once and told people that something was wrong. So it was left at our house; but he had blantly intended, in his condition, he had no business leaving us, but since he insisted we could only do our best for him."

"There was nothing more she could tell him. It was almost half past 9 when Frank had returned with the information that, by driving recklessly and disregarding the dangerous wetness of the roads, he had barely reached Newfield in time to get the train. A journey of twenty miles in less than forty minutes, it had been something of an achievement. And after that, she knew nothing of Philip Nixon until that numbing, dreadful moment, when she heard Dr. Curtis name the financier as the victim of the 'accident.'"

"You see," Martha concluded, "why my brothers said that if I told anything, I would be making matters worse for them? I would be giving you the motive that you needed to complete a case against them. And then, of course, I didn't know that Frank really had taken Mr. Nixon to Newfield—I had merely his word for it. But then, he must have—wouldn't have led to me."

A moment of quiet followed her last words. Then Gilmore rose and took her hand.

"May I say, Miss Marley, that I admire your pluck tremendously? I appreciate the confidence that you have placed in me; you may be assured that I shall make no use of your story except in case of dire necessity. And I shall remember my promise to you."

She rose, too, a sudden catch in her voice, trembling slightly.

"Thank you, Mr. Gilmore,"—and in her earnestness, her eyes began to fill with tears—"I am tremendously grateful to you—I don't know how to express my gratitude for your consideration."

Gilmore felt the warm, sincere clasp of her gentle touch after he had taken his leave, followed by Aunt Mercy's somewhat malevolent glances, until he had boarded the street car back to town, and turned his thoughts to his case and the effect Martha's story had had upon it.

That it was true, there was never a doubt in his mind. As far as the girl knew the facts, they were absolutely correct; too many details connected with what he already knew to possibly make it a creation out of whole cloth. The shots overheard by Mrs. Colby, the completed story of Frank Marley's message to the financier and Clem's possession of the latter's bank notes, Nixon's safe arrival at the Marley farmhouse, and how in his flight, Nixon had left his overnight bag with his attackers—all these things were clarified. It was no coincidence that the Ferris gang should have attacked so near to Nixon's destination. They had just taken the financier from the train, it was their first opportunity, the first lonely road, where they could act under the additional protection of the rising storm.

Even the incident of the overcoat, and how it was left with the Marsons, but a logical sequence to the financier's mad escape through the woods. And following that, in natural order, was his return to Newfield where he could take the train and continue his journey to the shore.

The man who he had agreed to meet was, of course, Russell Stirling. It looked very much as though Rankin had been correct in his theories. Influenced as much, perhaps, by his own interests in retaining at least some of the shares due him from the broker as by the latter's desperate insistence, he had consented to bear what he had to say. In all probability it had been arranged that Stirling would be met at Newfield by Nixon in his yellow limousine and make the rest of the journey with him by machine. But when the financier had decided to take the train to Newfield, and had no opportunity to inform Stirling of his change of plans, he intended to return by the jitney to Newfield, where he would join Stirling on the train. Together they would thus continue to Cape May.

The turkey dinner, which St. Andrew's Presbyterian church served on Thursday evening, Oct. 13, in honor of their 75th annual supper was most decidedly successful. Favored by a fine evening, many came from comparatively distant places to join in celebrating the occasion.

The ladies of the congregation, upon whom fell the greatest burden of preparing for such an affair, are to be highly commended for the manner in which they so faithfully and successfully discharged their varied responsibilities. At the conclusion of the supper, a very fine programme was presented, consisting of a one-act play, "The Case of Dr. Graves", by some members of the Athelstan Y.P.S., Irish and Scotch songs, tap-dancing, Irish wit and humor by students of McGill University and the Presbyterian College, Montreal.

Ladies' Aid Society. The regular monthly meeting of the Presbyterian Ladies' Aid Society was held on Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. J. Leslie Elder. There was a good attendance of members and visitors who busied themselves in quilting and piecing quilt blocks. Lunch was served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Jas. Macfarlane, Miss M. J. Sayer and Mrs. Watson. The business meeting was conducted by the president, Mrs. Jas. Macfarlane and the chief item of business was deciding whether to go forward with plans for the annual chicken supper, or cancel for this year. By a majority vote, it was finally decided to drop all plans for supper, and instead make a canvas of the families of the congregation to see what support they were willing to give as a free-will offering. The report of the ladies appointed has a very optimistic note, the returns already in excess of the yearly average with several more families to visit.

P.Y.P.S. The P.Y.P.S. concert held in the Munro hall on Friday night drew a very large crowd, who were favored with a fine programme. There were three main items, a sketch put on by the young people, assisted by four black-faced comedians, who entertained with the usual jokes, etc., a one-act play, given by the young people of Elgin, and finally, a play given by members of Athelstan Young People's Society. Rev. W. S. Duncan, very ably trained the young people in the chorus, played the piano accompaniment and also wrote the words and music for one of the numbers. Total receipts were $42. The Y.W.A. also put on a sale of candy, which soon sold out.

Friends of Miss Christina Elizabeth Cameron were deeply grieved to learn of her sudden death at her home in Westmount on Wednesday evening of last week. Miss Cameron was born in Montreal, the youngest daughter of the late Allan C. Cameron and his wife, formerly Elizabeth Scott. She trained as a nurse in the Postgraduate Hospital, New York, and served overseas as a nurse from January, 1915, until the end of the war. Returning to Montreal, she served in the temporary military hospital at the Presbyterian College.

She was a member of Stanlev Presbyterian church and a teacher in the Sunday school, always taking a deep interest in missionary and temperance work and an active part in the work of the King's Daughters. For four years she was Provincial president of the W.M.S. Congratulations

"I got the Anniversary Number of the Gleaner when at Sioux Lookout for a few minutes last Tuesday. What an encyclopedia of the district it is! To native sons in far places and old timers it will be worth the year's subscription in itself. Sons of Huntingdon are surely scattered around. I have even found one off-shoot here in Pickle Lake—a young Johnston, who is clerk and radio operator for Canadian Airways here. His father is a Huntingdon Johnston, a carpenter who has lived in Winnipeg for twenty years. I have shown Johnston and a few more the copies I have of the Gleaner and they think it is a great paper for a town of that size. Sioux Lookout has about the same population as Huntingdon, but has a much smaller paper."

So writes Pilot J. H. Compton, of the Ontario Provincial Air Service, Department of Lands and Forests. He subscribed to help a contestant in the recent contest and seems to be getting his money's worth through Mrs. Louis Morris of Westmont, who writes verses for greeting cards and finds it profitable, was also delighted to receive an Anniversary Gleaner. "Add my congratulations to so many others. There are many items that are interesting in its pages. For example, I see the face of our old family doctor who was my babyhood doctor—Dr. Hingston. My parents loved him. I seem to remember him when I was a little girl of eight or nine. So Huntingdon may be proud to think he was a son of hers, and also of many other famous men. I found the paper very interesting and want to thank you for sending it to me."

"Alolph Hitler has done more to strengthen, to unite, to solidify the Jews of the world than any man since Moses. It always has been my contention that the Jew, left in charge for two hundred years throughout the world, would lose his aggressiveness, his tenacity and neurotic ambition; would be completely absorbed and would vanish as a type from the face of the earth."

Edna Ferber in Woman's Home Companion. Miss Ferber, who gained fame and wealth through her novels, Cimarron, Show Boat, etc., started as a reporter in a small town newspaper office at $3.00 a week. A year and a half later she was fired because she was too aggressive and successful! This was the neurotic ambition of the young Jewess sufficiently stimulated to ensure her future fame and fortune.

Peace Treaties? Another fruitful cause of war is the last war. I heard J. S. Ewart and another gentleman talk on this subject the other day and they both agreed that the seeds of possibly twenty wars lay in the Treaty of Versailles. The Treaty of Versailles is a most unjust and inequitable piece of work. It has been followed by several treaties in an effort to patch up the damage. Agnes Macphail, M.P., at County Women's Institute Convention, Howick, May 1938.

Many people of the Counties of Chateaugay and Huntingdon will recall this eloquent address by Miss Macphail, advocating international peace and harmony. "To expect to achieve harmony through uniformity is an absolute nonsense. We will never get international harmony by trying to put people into one mould," said Miss Macphail.

This was a memorable Convention in many respects. Rev. R. L. Bailarone recounted that some 15 years before at the suggestion of Mrs. Jean Muldrew, he called a public rally for the purpose of forming a Women's Institute. July one woman turned up—Mrs. James McKel. Mrs. Laura Rose Stephen, first official organizer for Canadian Institutes, also spoke on "Living a PLAN FURTHER FINANCING. In view of the $12,000,000 loan which the provincial treasury paid on October 1 and the $50,000,000 loan which comes due in November there will be some financing as necessity arises. Premier Maurice Duplessis has stated: "The financing would be according to good business methods," he added.

On taking office, the Premier declared, the National Union found that the statement of affairs brought before the House every year by the Taschereau regime was "purposely misleading and untrue" with the result that the present government had to pay "millions in accounts due by the old regime and which they left unpaid to present an apparently better standing."

Although the National Union was elected to office in August of 1936, claims dating back as far as 1930 were made on it, he stated. The old regime, Mr. Duplessis asserted, established its budgets not on revenue and expenditures but on cash receipts and outgo "and their way to show a surplus was not to pay their bills."

Referring to criticisms from Liberal spokesmen on the province's finances, the Premier observed: "It makes me laugh when I see representatives of this discredited regime and accomplices of unfair and misleading tactics have the nerve to talk about finances."

As a matter of fact, he added, the old regime, for the last 10 or 12 years of office, "did not pay their bills on time and did not mention them in the statement of affairs given the public."

OLD GLASGOW HERALD

A copy of the Glasgow, Scotland, Herald of February 26, 1859. Mr. Reg. Cooper of Huntingdon changed to the Herald while examining some old papers.

Some of the advertisements in the issue read as follows: "Wanted, at present, an active young man, who has been bred to the grocery trade."

"Wanted, a young woman to take charge of a Spirit Shop, about 20 to 25 years of age."

"White sound teeth are indispensable to personal attraction, and to health and longevity by the proper maintenance of food. GOWLAND'S OODONTO or Pearl Dentifrice, which proves and imparts a pearl-like whiteness to the teeth, eradicates tartar and spots of incipient decay, strengthens the gums, and tenders the breath pure and fragrant."

"The present hour the destiny of Europe during many years depends on the will of one man, and may be decided by the state of his mental or bodily health, or by his humour at any given moment. So must it always remain, as standing armies will destroy the action of public opinion, and place the fate of mankind in the hands of a single potentate or courtier."

CAR HITS BUGGY

The occupant of a buggy proceeding along a sideroad near Howick was struck by a car on Monday evening and thrown into the ditch. The driver of the car in the case, a hit-and-run driver, proceeded on his way, returning to the scene of the accident, it is claimed. A Provincial officer was in Huntingdon on Tuesday enroute to Trout River to check up on whether the suspected car had proceeded through that point since it was thought it was heading for Howick. The buggy carried no light. The occupant of the buggy received a severe shaking up, it was stated.

ETHICS OF EQUETTE TABLE MANNERS

Well-poised people never are appalled by the array of silver on a table. They know precisely for what each piece is intended, and they know exactly how each food should be taken.

There are certain foods that require the use of neither knife, fork nor spoon. Such foods are known familiarly as "finger foods" and include olives, radishes, celery, artichokes which are taken apart leaf by leaf, corn on the cob, dry cakes and cookies, hot-buns. Fruits such as oranges, apples, grapes, peaches, and plums are all eaten with the fingers. Bananas are peeled into a plate and taken with the fork. Lobster claws may be pulled apart with the fingers; and shrimps, when served whole in their shells, may be separated, peeled and conveyed to the mouth with the fingers.

Well-bred people do not butter a whole slice of bread and bite into it. Bread should be broken off into mouthfuls as desired, each small piece buttered separately.

Asparagus is not a finger food. It is disgusting manners to take up a dripping vegetable in the fingers, hold it up to the mouth and then suck it into the mouth—and yet we frequently see people whose table conduct is otherwise faultless do this very thing. Asparagus should be taken with the fork, the tip being cut off with the blunt edge of the fork and so conveyed to the mouth. The end of the stalk may be taken up in the fingers if it is not dripping and greasy; but fastidious people prefer to leave the stalk rather than display messy manners.

sales Tax Hurts Business—Burden to the Working Man (Port Erie Times-Review) There is a growing feeling that government control is doing an immense damage to business, and stands in the way of a very true sense of a return to the prosperous times of a decade ago. Perhaps no greater hindrance to business exists than the federal 8% sales tax. It actually retards business recovery because it lowers the buying power of the masses and, to a greater extent than any other, of the working man. The average working man has a difficult enough task to live comfortably as it is, and his lot is made infinitely more difficult by the fact that he must pay 8% sales tax to the government on practically everything he buys. True, in a good many instances, it is hidden in the retail sales price and is not brought forcibly to the consumer's attention; but every working man can be assured that out of every $100.00 he is paying out, he has at least $80 in this one tax alone. He has enough other taxes, municipal, provincial and federal, to contend with without this sales tax, which eats at the very vitals of the nation's buying power. It is hardly to be hoped that the politicians who walk our parliamentary halls in this era of Canadian history will do much about the matter. Most of them are far too much concerned with jumping to the snap of the party whip, and his sole interest in the welfare of their particular party is of much greater import than the living conditions of the working man upon whom they have foisted this abominable sales tax. Fortunately there is a federal election in these days, and the real politics will return. Likely among those promises will be one to reduce the sales tax, and that is a promise that the elector should make sure is carried out. Seeing it is the fashion in these days to use the taxpayer's money to bribe them to the polls, perhaps Mr. King will have the foresight to cut the sales tax in half before the next election, and add the promise to abolish it altogether when, and if, he is re-elected.

Farmer is Hurlled Thro' Windshield

Car Goes Into Ditch And Farmer Hurlled Out of Car. Roland Struthers, 39-year-old farmer of Lacolle, was instantly killed on the Lacolle-Hemmingsford highway, near Lacolle, at 9 o'clock Monday night, when he ditched his automobile and was hurled through the windshield against a stone wall.

The accident occurred at Pleasant Valley, a small community situated about midway between Lacolle and Hemmingsford. There were no witnesses of the actual mishap, but from the position of the wrecked car, it was judged that Struthers was driving towards Lacolle when he apparently lost control of the machine and sent it crashing into the ditch. Thrown clear of the wreckage, his head struck a stone wall nearby.

His body was found a short while later by John Barriere, a farmer of the district, and his son, Philias, and they called police and Dr. J. Dussault, of Lacolle, to the scene. The victim had died instantly. It was found of a crushed skull. His body was removed to a Lacolle undertaker's establishment and Dr. J. A. Sabourin, district coroner, was notified of the case.

Motor Cars and Revenues

(Orillia News-Letter) One way or another motor cars play a big part in Canada's economy these days.

Not only do they speed up travel, bring various parts of the country together, occasion huge expenditures on roads and cut into railway traffic, but they on the other hand provide a great deal of employment and bring in substantial revenue through license traffic and through taxes, license fees and so on.

In 1937, for example, the nine provincial governments collected $25,913,965 in licenses from motor vehicles, drivers permits and so on, while the various gasoline taxes yielded another $38,373,047, or total of $64,287,012.

In contrast, $57,531,978 was devoted in 1936, to road building and improvement. At the end of 1936, there were to be 311,198 miles of surfaced and 90,359 miles of unsurfaced roads, exclusive of streets in cities, towns and incorporated villages, reported to the Bureau of Statistics.

Using Canada's highways in 1937 were 1,319,702 motor vehicles registered in this country, and in addition, 1,332,367, which entered from foreign lands, 1,382,366 of which were coming from the United States alone. The estimated total expenditure of visitors motoring to Canada from the United States in 1937 was $181,332,000.

By and large it's a pretty big business and there is considerable doubt as to whether a further increase in gasoline tax, as has been tentatively suggested, would bring about the proportionate increase in revenue. It might be the last straw to kill the goose which has been laying the golden egg.
