Forges du St-Maurice ironworks feature old stamps

Canada Post issued a stamp on August 19 commemorating Les Forges du Saint-Maurice. The unveiling of the stamp took place in Trois Rivieres at the site of Canada's first industrial complex.

The Saint-Maurice Ironworks began operations in 1738 through the efforts of Gilles Hocquart, who served as Intendant of New France from 1729 to 1748.

The Industrial complex, which at its height had a population of 425, was situated in a location that provided an abundance of natural resources to operate an industry of this scale.

The energy needed to drive the overshot wheels, which in turn powered the bellows and hammers, was provided by the Lavoir Creek. Local iron was melted down with the charcoal made from wood that was in abundance around the forge.

MADE AT THE FORGE

The forge was forced to close down in 1883 when the use of coke in other smelters made the charcoal smelter obsolete. In 1973 the government made the site a National Historic park.

While attending the ceremonies, one was reminded of some of the objects produced by such a forge that appears on other Canadian stamps. The Heritage series, which first made its appearance in 1986, features three stamps with articles which were more than likely made at this forge at one time. They are the 37-cent plow with an iron tip, the 55-cent iron kettle and the 64-cent wood burning stove.

Don't miss the opportunity to visit Les Forges du Saint-Maurice. You will find it most interesting.

Chickenfat writing about collecting dead horses

It is very still and silent in the bar. An enormous satellite dish outside is plucking television signals from space and every patron is glued to the set. Conversation has died. Drinks stand forgotten. Tadeusz starts to order and is angrily shushed. Barmaid and customers are totally absorbed in the weighing of fish.

This fish weighing takes place inside a domed sports stadium packed to the walls and rafters with cheering spectators. The Master of Ceremonies, arbitrator elegantiarum, roars an introduction to the great, the one and only, somebody-or-other and his voice reverberates around the huge arena as the crowd goes mad with cheering.

Then enters the Great Personage himself standing up in a boat on a trailer hauled by a pickup truck. He is acknowledging the adulation surrounding him, bows left and right, reaches unto a box beside him and scatters largess over his excited fans. It is hard to tell just what it is that he throws but it isn't flower petals. Probably fishbait.

The Great Personage reaches the weighing stand and the crowd grows hushed. It is deathly silent in the bar, too — so still and silent you can hear the little bubbles rising in the glasses and softly bursting — pop, pop, pop-pop.

The Great Personage draws out the moment, then reaches into a chest at his feet and pulls out ... a fish.

He holds it high so all can see and the applause is deafening. Everybody is screaming and leaping up and down with joy. The fish is passed up to the weighing officials and the Master of Ceremonies begs for silence. Everybody holds their breath.

Figures are flashed on a huge screen — 8 pounds 6 - 9 - 7 - 10. The fish is alive and flapping about so that it takes a while for the scales to settle down but the numbers come to rest at 8 lbs. 9 ozs. The Master of Ceremonies shouts it to the crowd and the stadium goes mad as everybody leaps to their feet cheering wildly once more.

In the bar, people are slapping each other on the back and some jump up and cheer, too. One opportunist grabs the barmaid and kisses her.

"8 lbs. 9 ozs!" she shouts, kissing him back. "I had three babies weighed less than that!"

Everybody laughs but the Master of Ceremonies is already announcing the entrance of yet another Great Personage and silence descends once more as yet another pickup drives into the stadium towing yet another champion tossing kisses and fishbait to his fans.

Emotionally drained, Tadeusz tiptoes out.

Chickenfat says Tadeusz, should stop writing about his years collecting 'down and dead' horses and mention that he is now in the antique business.

Actually, it isn't quite antiques. More used plumbing.

He deals in windows and doors with leftover life to live, pre-tested nails, nuts and bolts, knickknacks, geegaws, gimcracks and thingumajigs that might be worth a lot of money some day.

And he's something of a specialist in second-hand coffins and one-owner tombstones.

In fact, his is probably the only antique showroom in all the Townships — perhaps in all Quebec — featuring a second-hand coffin and a slightly-used tombstone.

Chickenfat, you see (who is built along lines popularized by Obelix, the Gaul), will buy or sell virtually anything — although he'd rather trade than do either. Tadeusz briefly worked as his assistant soon after he arrived in this country and recalls a load of brass and copper taken out to Steinberg's in Rock Forest one winter. The price was down. Chickenfat refused to sell and we drove away.

EVERYBODY WAS HAPPY

But on the way home, we stopped at a pond, broke the ice and filled every radiator, every pipe and fitting with all it would hold. Everything froze solid on the truck overnight and Chickenfat returned to Steinberg's next day, hat in hand, head hanging, mumbling that he'd decided to accept their offer after all. His load was weighed and everybody was happy.

He used to trade horses when he was young — and his father before him — and was not above tucking a little turpentine up a tailpipe to make an old horse strut like a young one. Most of that celebrated breed of horse-traders have since gone into the used-car business but Chickenfat is shocked by dishonesty and goes his own way.

In maintaining his freelance status, he sometimes gets stuck but figures that's all part of the game. That's how he came by the tombstone and coffin.

His mother-in-law was rushed to hospital at 84, deathly ill, and Chickenfat saw an opportunity he couldn't pass up. He won't talk about the details but she'll be 92 on Halloween and both the undertaker and monument-maker refused to take their merchandise back.

After barking his shins on the stone over the years, he finally moved it and the coffin to the center of his showroom as a conversation piece.

Actually, it isn't really a showroom. More of a shed.

But he plans to letter a big sign on one end of it as soon as he can promote some paint. "CHICKENFAT'S ANTIQUES", it will say. "Bought, Sold or Swapped."

Then in smaller letters underneath to satisfy the language police; "French Spoken On Request." "Life," says Chickenfat, "is a blind horse in a burning stable."

SPEAKING OF LANGUAGE:

The vigor of English lies in its bald-faced piracy from almost every language on the globe and outright defiance of all rules and regulations. Certain four-letter words, for example, have been vigorously suppressed for hundreds of years but are as boisterous today as ever they were because language belongs to the people, not the authorities.

French has other problems. It is not long ago that the word 'Office' was taken to court and declared acceptably French and not long before that when 'Stop' was officially ejected as too English.

Now Malcolm Stone, who writes a fine column in the Stanstead Journal, has recorded the birth of a brand new threat to French purity that appeared in the August 20th La Presse.

"Vous me connaissez," said Jean Perron of the Nordiques, "Je ne boulechte pas."

Words have a life all their own and the verb 'boulechiter' is so expressive and forceful it should have a long and happy career ahead.

Last week, a wire service announcement struck our editor's fancy and he passed it on. The Montreal Opera opens its season tomorrow with Madame Butterfly and featuring subtitles in both official languages.

That means Cio-Cio-San, a Japanese geisha in love with an American lieutenant, will sing in Italian with simultaneous translations into English and French.

For those of us more familiar with horse opera than Grand Opera, a word of explanation. Both are dedicated to sex and violence but when people get shot in a horse opera, they bleed. When they get stabbed in Grand Opera — a not uncommon occurrence — they sing.

The art, in short, requires a certain suspension of disbelief and Beverly Sills' lead in making opera more accessible to New Yorkers with subtleties was a mixed blessing. You can get away with things in passionate Italian that just won't do in everyday English or French and things that wow 'em in New York may not play at all in Quebec.

NOT PROFOUND IN QUEBEC

For a convenient example, take Puccini's La Bohème, another Montreal offering this season. That opens on a freezing Paris garret with a poet and a painter bemoaning their poverty. Rudolfo, the tenor poet, stares out the window and sings that all the chimneys in the city are dutifully smoking but theirs. Baritone Marcello replies from his easel that their stove hasn't had wages in a long time. Well, sighs Rudolfo, "forests are of little use under snow."

Now that might sound very profound in New York or Milan where they know little of forests and less of snow, but Quebecers know all too much about both.

Then Marcello says his fingers are so cold they feel as if they've been touching the icy heart of the Beautiful Musetta and both fall to comparing love to a furnace in which men are consumed while women, who lit the fires, stand idly by.

As Anna Russell used to say, "I'm not making this up, you know."

Centennial Theatre has season bursting with goodies

By Rossana Coriandoli

LENNOXVILLE — Come and Discover... that's the call coming from Bishop's University's Centennial Theatre. The 1988-89 season looks like a busy one, filled with visits from big names from across Canada and beyond.

The season is also organized to give its prospective audiences the choice of subscribing to a particular type of show, whether it be classical music, dance or jazz.

As Centennial Theatre's Colleen Servant emphasized at the press conference to launch the new season, "the subscription packages are really economical." The price for a subscription to the three classical music performances of the season is $40 and for the jazz subscription it's $30.

The season begins next Friday, September 16, with the dance series. This subscription package was designed in collaboration with the Centre Culturel of the University of Sherbrooke. It includes a wide variety of styles of dance, ranging from classical to avant garde.

Among the performers in this series is the Montreal-based, New York dancer/choreographer Dulcinea Langfelder performing her creation "Vicious Circle".

RUNNING IN CIRCLES

Langfelder, who among other things choreographed the theatre production "Napoleon" with French singer Serge Lama, said her solo performance is based on a story her father used to tell her. "It's about a little girl who can't stop running and keeps running in circles," she explained.

Langfelder is also working on a new creation, "The Lady Next Door". "This one is about the little girl in 'Vicious Circle' who grows up," she said. "But she grows up less optimistic. She's fed up with running."

Also in the dance series is "Fortier Solo" performed and choreographed in part by Paul-André Fortier, co-artistic director of Montreal Dance. Finally the Centre Culturel will host three dance performances by Les Grands Ballets Canadiens, Ballets Eddy Toussaint and Les Ballets Jazz de Montreal.

In the jazz series will be pleasing many local jazz enthusiasts. The great vibraphonist Gary Burton will be opening the series on September 22 with pianist Makoto Ozone. Jazz composer Carla Bley, accompanied by bassist Steve Swallow will perform in December and in January it will be the turn of one of the pioneers of the jazz/rock movement, guitarist Larry Coryell.

As for the real crowd-pleaser, the classical series begins on November 26 with Trio Lyrika, featuring Sherbrooke pianist Marie Fabi. The 30-year-old and Juno Award-winner Alegri String Quartet, which played at Centennial eight years ago, is back in February. Centennial is also hosting the visiting Amsterdam Guitar Trio in January. And finally, the classical music series will end with a recital by the master of the 20th century repertoire, Louis-Philippe Pellerier.

ROCK/SALSA CONCERT

But the 1988-89 season at Centennial Theatre is even more diversified than that. Rock fans will be pleased to learn that Canadian band 54-40 will be giving a performance on September 26 followed by the nine-piece ensemble Manteca, which is sure to please rock/salsa fans.

But there's even more. The season is also including the entertainment needs of the little ones with the young people's program. The special program is organized in cooperation with the regional school boards and is subsidized by the Secretary of State. Local puppeteer Tim Gosley, known as Basil the Bear on TV's Sesame Street, will be performing his show based on Hans Christian Andersen's The Ugly Duckling.

The Noval Scotia-based mime and circus troupe Jest in Time will amaze kids with their gestural theatre. Finally, there will also be classical music for kids with Trio Arabesque performing their "Musical Encounter with Birds and Animals".

Servant was proud to say it was not difficult trying to get such big names to perform at Centennial.

"It's a beautiful theatre," she explained. "It's an intimate theatre, acoustically great. I think it's a real gem. Artists really want to come here."

Servant added that the theatre, which seats 500 people, is just the right size for intimate performances, and that is why organizers have concentrated on small acts.

Baseball and space can be more than a little fun

By Melanie Gruer

SUTTON — What do you get when you put an astrophysicist, a mathematics teacher and an astronomical artist together? A baseball game you play with cards.

All those people really make up only one person, Kara Szathmary, the inventor and co-creator of Quantum Baseball, the latest baseball board game.

Szathmary, a native of Hungary, lives with his wife and three children off the beaten track, somewhere near Sutton. Last winter Szathmary's two sons were looking for something to do. They asked their father if he knew a baseball game they could play with cards. Szathmary was busy and didn't want to be bothered. But like a dutiful father, he took a few minutes, made up a few rules and bang, the inklings of Quantum Baseball sprang to life.

Szathmary, a baseball fanatic, said he had been taking his kids out to a nearby sand lot for years to try to get them to love baseball as much as he did. But it was the cards that endeared them to the game.

EXPOS GAME

But Szathmary couldn't let the idea of the game die. A mathematics teacher at Champlain College in St. Lambert, Szathmary took the idea back to his office and, to his delight, was able to work out the game mathematically. He admits, most players won't care if the game does work mathematically but he says because it does, they will see that statistics on the game are just like those of a real Expos game.

After a fair bit of research Szathmary and his wife Gail, who co-created Quantum Baseball, decided to market the game themselves. They had the deck of 60 cards and the game board (actually a plasticized cloth) manufactured in Sherbrooke.

Creating the game was easy. Both Szathmarys are artists: Kara's paintings depict space and Gail paints on silk. They both had ideas on how the game should look and came up with a final product in bright Barnum and Bailey reds and yellows. The shiny game cloth looks like a playing field and the cards have a baseball in the centre of constellations. The teams have names such as the Big Bang Basers, the Rebels, the Grass Stains and the Black Hole Bandits.

Szathmary says the names show astrophysicist have a sense of humor.

The Szathmarys say they don't know how many of the $29.95 games they have sold so far. They say they have given away many of the games to promoters. All the Expos have a copy of the game which Szathmary says they play when they're on the bus. And because Szathmary has connections at NASA, some astronauts even have copies of Quantum Baseball.

PICTURES OF SPACE

And those spacey connections have certainly helped promote the game. Szathmary is the president of the International Astronomical Artists Association, a group of artists around the world that paint accurate pictures of space. His work with the association has introduced him to several astronauts and people that work on the ground in space centers. And because of that, Quantum Baseball may soon be played in space.

"The astronauts needed leisure activities in space. We've sent games to Ames Research and they're now testing it," Szathmary said. As well, the U.S. Naval Office may soon begin testing the game to use on submarines.

And some of Szathmary's astronomical artist friends who work on the Star Trek series may implement the game on the show this fall. "Some of the artists were trying to fit baseball into the script. They may use this and adapt it for the 24th century. After all, that's how the west was won — by card games," says Gail.

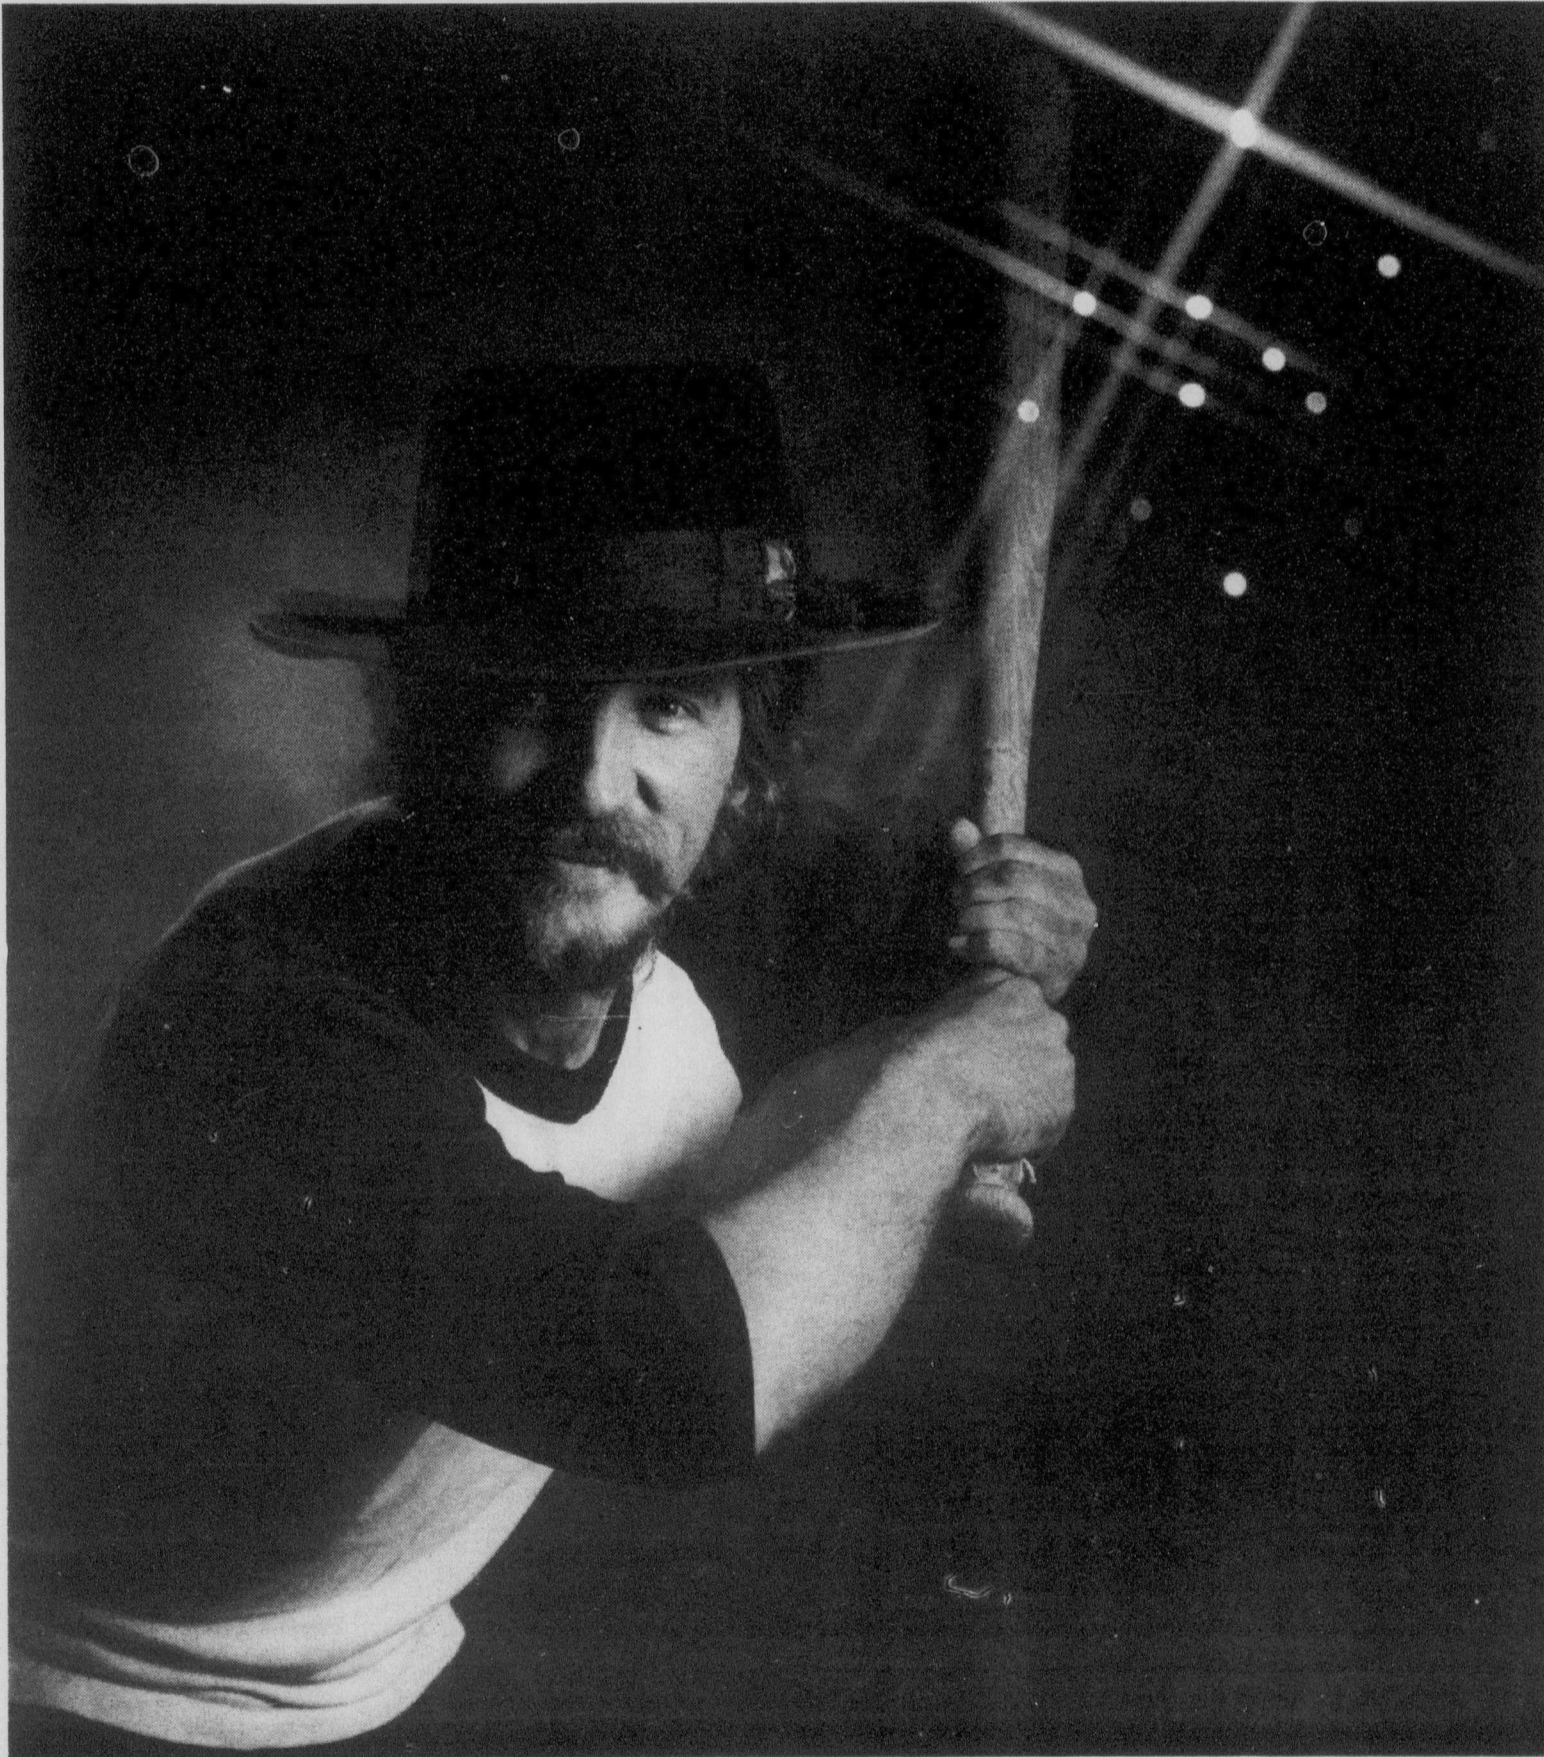

But there's just one small dispute to be ironed out. Szathmary calls Quantum Baseball a baseball game. Gail says it's a card game. "A good card player can beat a baseball player," Gail says. You don't have to know anything about baseball to play the game, Szathmary says, but a few ideas about odds in card games helps.

Szathmary says the game is just like real baseball, without the physical activity. Because of its mathematical basis, you can generate statistics from the game. Players can hit runs, hit to the outfield and even steal bases.

The Szathmarys hope the game will be popular with college and university students so leagues can be set up and winners will get their names on the No Ball Prize Trophy. The sculptured trophy was designed by a Townships artist and sits in the Szathmary's living room, waiting for the first winner.

Now that the game is on the market the two will be busy selling. Szathmary will also be busy teaching, painting and looking forward to his spring trip to Siberia where he has been invited to witness the landing of the Soviet space craft from Mars and Phobos. He will also go to Los Angeles with the artists association in time for the U.S. landing on Neptune. There they will gather data on Neptune so their paintings will be factual and accurate.

And besides all that Szathmary will still be dreaming of baseball, baseball, baseball.

Szathmary lives with his wife Gail and their three children somewhere near Sutton. With his wife he created a baseball board game that may be going pretty far; as far as space.

Columbus' descendant re-creates Bahamas discovery

SAN SALVADOR, The Bahamas — On Oct. 12, 1992, Christopher Columbus will step ashore on the Bahamian island of San Salvador. That moment will be the high point of a dramatic re-creation of the discovery of the New World 500 years earlier.

The Christopher Columbus who arrives in 1992 is now a captain in the Spanish navy and a descendant of the famous explorer. His lineage was authenticated before he was picked to lead the voyage that will mark the 500th anniversary of the day in 1492 when, according to the schoolboy rhyme, "Columbus sailed the ocean blue."

The modern-day Columbus will sail here from Spain on one of three ships that will be replicas of the ones the explorer used — the Nina, the Pinta and the Santa Maria. The Spanish government is building them from wood taken from the same forest that provided timber for the originals. Accompanying Captain Columbus will be a crew composed at least in part of sailors descended from the explorer's crew. The only major difference will be that the 1992 voyage will be tracked by satellite.

MET BY VISITORS

When the Spaniards stepped ashore here in 1492 they were greeted by Arawak Indians, gentle people who had fled to The Bahamas to escape the Caribs — warlike cannibals who lived further south in what we now call the Caribbean.

When the modern-day Spaniards come ashore in 1992, they will be met by excited Bahamians and visitors from all over the world who will be participating in an event 10 years in the preparation.

The job of planning locally for the 500th anniversary — the Quincentennial — rests with a commission The Bahamas government established in 1982. Its chairman is Philip Smith, a member of Parliament whose constituency includes San Salvador, an island 200 miles south and east of Nassau.

The commission is sifting through a number of proposals — some simple, others grandiose — for marking the Quincentennial. Although the event is still a few years off, here are some of the projects that are most likely to be undertaken:

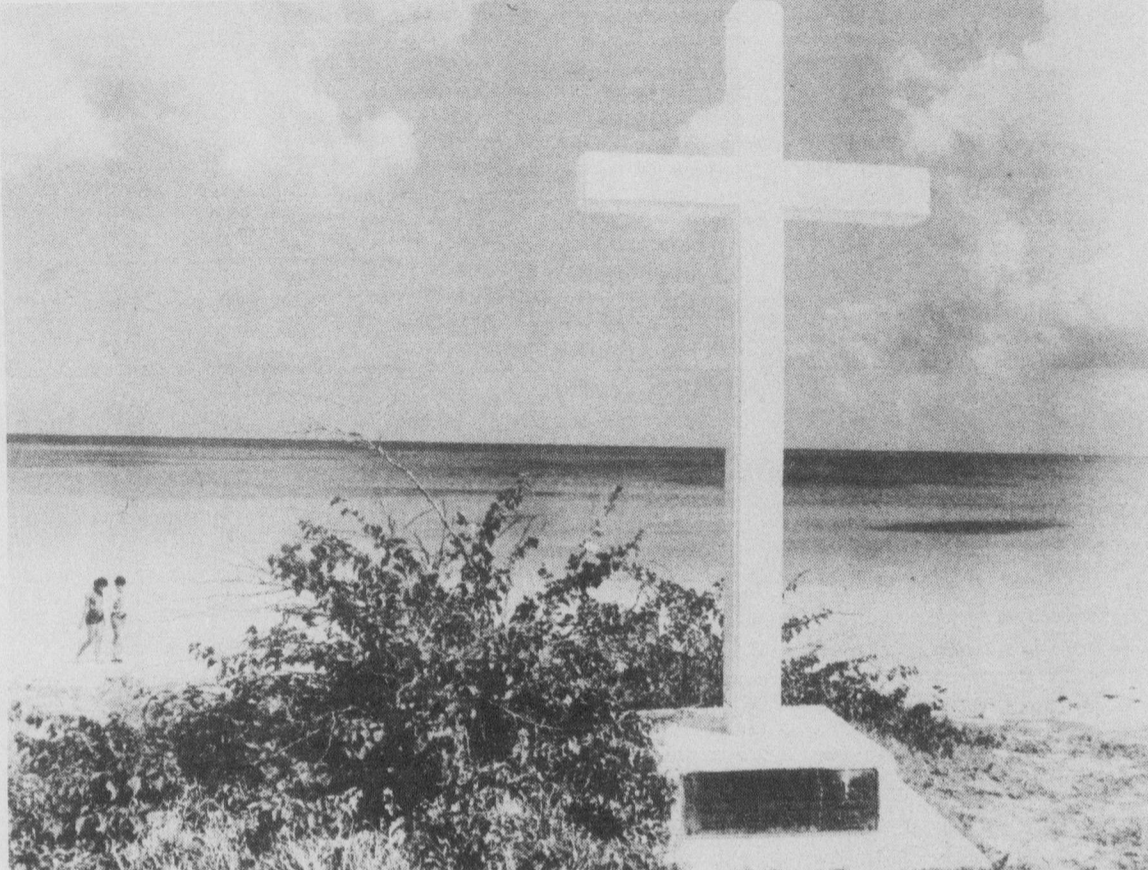

*An international Christian service at the site of Columbus's landfall. Smith notes that Columbus's arrival marked the introduction of Christianity to the Western world. "Muslims have Mecca as a focal point of Islam, so why not have San Salvador as a focal point for Christianity?" Smith explains.

*A landfall park incorporating a chapel, museum and the re-creation of an Arawak village. Smith says the park will definitely be established, but what form it will take has not been decided. It might contain commemorative monuments from various countries, it might be something as elaborate as a theme park. "The long-term maintenance and practical utilization will be major factors," says Smith.

*Resort facilities — something San Salvador lacks — are being studied, as is a centre to which young Bahamians, and perhaps young people from around the world, could come to study the cause of peace.

Other ideas include cultural and sporting events, creation of a national museum and library and international regattas to expose the sailing world to the 100,000 square miles of beautiful Bahamian waters.

Between now and 1992 the world

A simple white cross marks the spot where Columbus' first landfall in the New World is believed to have taken place. Somewhere on this white sand beach known as Long Bay, the Great Discoverer became The Bahamas' first tourist.

will hear a lot more about the Quincentennial. Spain, which is playing host in 1992 to both a world's fair and the summer Olympics, is showing a great interest in the Bahamian ceremonies, Smith says.

INTEREST AT HOME

The Quincentennial commission's biggest task is igniting interest at home. One way of arousing interest is printing colorful posters about Bahamian heroes, many of whom are virtually unknown in The Bahamas. One is Joseph Spence, a folk guitarist who, Smith says, was well known in the United States. Another is Paul Meer, an interpretive dancer who performed before every crowned head in Europe. Smith says there are many Bahamians living today who don't realize that their ancestors were heroes for fighting against slavery 150 years ago.

Smith also speaks passionately about another aspect of Columbus's arrival. He believes that it was on that historic day in 1492 that a white man, a black man and an indigenous Indian met for the first time.

The black man, Smith says, was a member of Columbus's crew. Some historians argue this point, just as they do about the precise location of Columbus's landfall in The Bahamas.

There's no argument about one thing: Oct. 12, 1992, will be a date to remember in the country where Columbus first set foot in the New World.

Antigua large enough to have variety for tourists

ST. JOHN'S, Antigua — In an article published by Gourmet Magazine in November, 1981, Doone Beal had nothing but praise for this little Eastern Caribbean island.

"Digging one's toes into the warm, white sand," he began, "a rum punch at one's elbow, palm trees rustling overhead, and a peacock-blue ocean lapping nearby, epitomizes the Caribbean dream. It can be a triumph of hope over experience, of travel brochure over reality, but Antigua, one of the Leeward Islands, fulfills that dream in handsome profusion."

Although it embraces an area of only 280 square kilometers, well under half the size of Metropolitan Toronto, Antigua is still large enough to offer the holidayer much variety, and with a good range of hotels ringing the island (almost all of them facing onto a white sand beach), there are many bases from which to engage in exploration.

Not all visitors here arrive by plane, although most of them do. Yachtsmen from around the world target the island, especially during the annual Sailing Week in late April, and every year thousands of visitors drop by for a day as passengers aboard the rising tide of cruise ships that abound in the Caribbean.

NAMED AFTER HIM

Antigua has been a sailor's island ever since the English naval hero, Admiral Lord Horatio Nelson, arrived at the age of 26 a bit more than 100 years ago to take charge of Britain's main Caribbean naval base at English harbor. It was part of Nelson's assignment to complete the Dockyard that has been named after him and is now, with some surrounding territory, a national park.

The Dockyard fell into ruin when the British Navy abandoned it around the beginning of this century, but it has been restored, with the help of funds raised, particularly in the U.S., Canada and Britain, by the Friends of English Harbor. So masterfully was the restoration done that you get the feeling that this is what it looked like in Nelson's day.

High above, overlooking the Dockyard, is Shirley Heights where the British Army was stationed when Nelson was the naval commander. It offers some magnificent views of the island and is frequented by visitors from the world over, among them young lovers who find it a romantic place to pledge eternal troth.

Today, the Dockyard is not only the major single lure of Antigua, but the top attraction of the entire eastern Caribbean. Three places are particularly worth taking in — the Admiral's Inn, which operates one of the best restaurants on the island; the Copper and Lumber Store, now embracing a small number of fine apartments (excellent place to stay, but you must book well in advance), and the Admiral's House which has been turned into a museum centered around Nelson's days on the island.

But Antigua, sunnier and drier than most islands of the Caribbean, has more than Nelson's Dockyard to attract holidayers to its shores and keep them active. For Canadians, northern Europeans, and visitors from the northern U.S., the most popular time of year is from just before Christmas until the end of March, a period the island hoteliers call the high season. Hotel rates are higher then, up to twice as high as those prevailing during the rest of the year, the so-called off-season which stretches from mid-April to mid-December.

Winter visitors miss the abundance of flowers that are in bloom in summer and the great variety of fruit that is available then. But if you want to escape from northern snow and cold temperatures, you have to give up something. The average daily high temperature in December through March is around 27.7 Celsius (82 Fahrenheit) and the average mid-night low a pleasant 21 (70). The Trade Winds assure cooling breezes, making activities like golf, tennis, hiking and horseback riding very pleasant.

Water sports of every kind abound, and because the island is blessed with far more than a fair share of fine beaches (365 of them, the Tourism Board says), there is no end to the opportunities for swimming, snorkelling and sunbathing.

Currey Vietnam novel a facet of complex puzzle

Fatal Light by Richard Currey
(DUTTON-LAWRENCE — FITZHENRY & WHITESIDE):
$23.95, 195 pp.

To date, most of the literature and films inspired by the Vietnam War have been either reportorial in nature (Michael Herr's Dispatches) or based on pure narrative (Oliver Stone's Platoon). Many of the books follow the basic pattern familiar to students of other war stories: a narrator, journalist, observer of some kind depicts the war's impact on a small number of men, usually a platoon, following them into action and chronicling their reaction to the hell of battle. The Vietnam conflict had such a homogeneous impact on the men that suffered through it that their stories usually carry the familiar baggage of clichés, with the emphasis on the combat footage, when the story made it onto the page or screen.

Richard Currey's book is another telling of the Vietnam story, with the slight twist being that its author was a four year combat medic who concentrates not on pure narrative but on an almost poetic interpretation of the events he saw. Currey's book is a spare, lean narrative told by a young American who is as revealing about his growing up in the United States as he is about the culture shock that jungle warfare represents for him.

In addition to the stock fare such as the old woman being gunned down, or having her dog's head shot off, the narrator who makes the fateful error of shooting an unarmed Vietnamese man who had been skulking in a darkened doorway of a hootch, or the seasoned combat veteran who goes berserk and begins killing indiscriminantly, Currey's book looks at the sentimental side of war.

The narrator carries on a running series of letters and cards with his beloved grandfather and girlfriend Mary, indicating that he comes from a rural setting on the Ohio River, where West Virginia and the state of Ohio meet. His interchanges with his grandfather reveal a typically middle American background, something right out of an old Norman Rockwell painting of barber shops and rustic farm settings.

It is the juxtaposition of this type of familiar American background with the horrors of combat that plunges the poetically rendered, but stunningly gruesome, scenes of carnage into stark contrast. Just after Currey describes the army's induction process and the family background of his narrator, we come upon this scene from a chapter titled "In-Country". An MP has just announced that the medic unit must check out a jeep that has detonated a land mine. "I climbed into the van: shoveled bodies like piles of old hose. One Vietnamese man, a prisoner, had lost his right arm and his pants. A sergeant looked like he was sleeping. A decapitated lieutenant's head had rolled to the front of the van where it stuck, looking at me. 'Let's move this inside', I called out, my voice clouding in front of me, and I leaned for support and my hand went through the sergeant's shirt into his gut that was still warm and the darkness of him froze around my hand, jerking awake from a nightmare, pushing my arm out, into the night, folding back a sleeve to reach blind into black, acidic water, his body talking between my fingers, sending one short gut moan for the bad light the explosion let in, and I lifted my hand out covered with his blood and shit. I looked at Howard. It was raining into his coffee cup, coffee splashing to his thumb and wrist. 'Man,' the MP said, 'you shoulda seen that jeep.'"

Fatal Light takes us into the same territory as Stone's "Platoon", but with the difference that Currey's eye for the poetic image and his ability to find beauty in the midst of inhuman slaughter never falters.

Lying in hospital after being wounded, Currey's narrator reflects on the jungle beauty he has seen: "The blush of frangipani blossoms and heliotrope wheels of green, iridescent an diffuse, the skin of canopied light all around us. There are one thousand four hundred and thirty-six distinct shades of green in the typical rain forest, an instructor told us at Jungle Warfare School. White people can discern only twenty-eight of these shadings, he added after a moment."

Another element of Currey's book is that he manages to take his soldier home where he experiences the strange dichotomy that America suffered during the Vietnam War. His grandfather provides him with solace and an easing back into civilian life amid a nation that neither welcomes him home as hero, nor appears to understand the tremendous hardship he and his mates have endured for flag and country.

Richard Currey's Fatal Light may not be the definitive book about the Vietnam War — if it ever could be written — but it is another facet of a complex composite puzzle that is slowly being put together by writers and film-makers.

RECORD REVIEWS

Little Feat Let It Roll (WARNER BROS. — WEA)

Legendary band of the 1970's, darlings of Rolling Stone but never quite commercial, Little Feat had a string of albums that were masterminded by slide guitarist/songwriter Lowell George. Although they never quite matched the hype and publicity generated about them, Little Feat faded from sight when George died in 1979, much lamented and symbolizing the end of the era.

A decade later Little Feat is back on the scene with a dynamite album and some solid personnel additions. Joining the Feat are Craig Fuller, a guitarist/songwriter who toiled with a two-album outfit known as American Flyer which produced great music but slender sales and Freddy Tackett, whose name many album owners will recognize as being credited for guitar embellishments on a host of rock and country/rock albums over the past 15 years or more.

Aboard from the original roster are Paul Barrere on guitars and vocals, Sam Clayton and Kenny Gradney providing percussion and bass, Bill Payne the original keyboardist, and Richie Hayward the wildman drummer of the Feat.

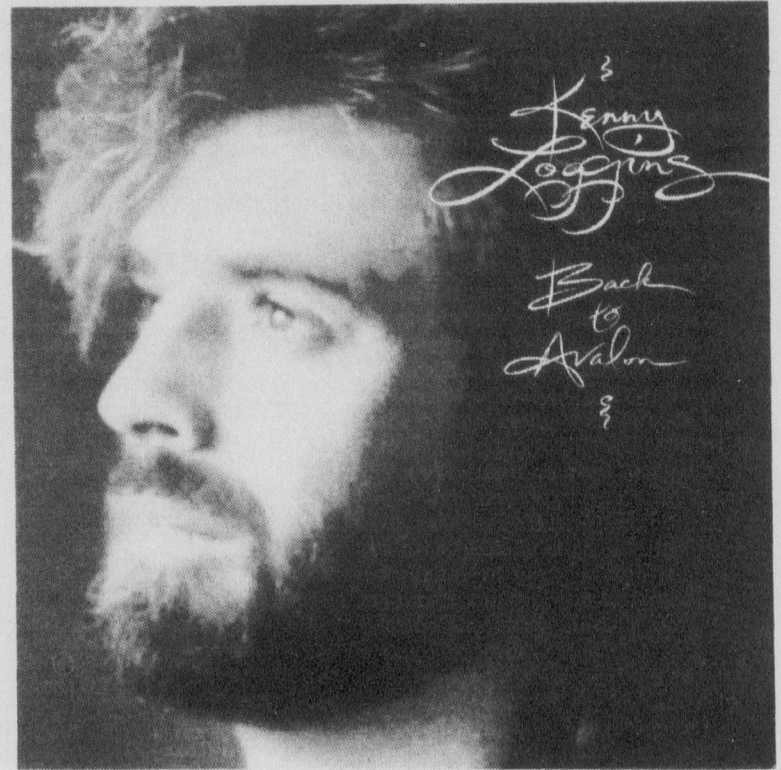

If you can honestly listen to "Hate To Lose" and still be seated, well you just aren't alive. Tackett lays down the slide guitar that George used to provide and Payne's frantic piano pounding keeps this one jumping from the first bite of the needle on these tasty grooves. Fuller provides the lead vocals on "One Clear Moment", sounding as good as he did with American Flyer, and "Cajun Girl" gives Bill Payne the spotlight for a piece of rollicking gumbo rock, New Orleans style.

Impressive studio help on this welcome return by Little Feat came from Linda Ronstadt, Bonnie Raitt, Bob Seger and Shaun Murphy, whose vocal additions make this a strong album from a vocal point of view. Hearing Little Feat pumping out great music again is a small pleasure; to have the band sounding so first rate with the new line-up and performing fresh material with the old verve is just an unexpected bonus. Little Feat rides again!

Kenny Loggins Back To Avalon (COLUMBIA)

Even as Kenny Loggins perfects his movie soundtrack singing — "Footloose", and now the theme to Caddyshack II, "Nobody's Fool" — he may just be setting himself up to be called the white version of whatever it is that Prince has become in rock.

Loggins, who was half of one of the most memorable duos in seventies rock as Loggins & Messina ("Your Mama Don't Dance", "The House At Pooh Corner"), can't seem to figure out what brand of rock he wants to sing next. On "Tell Her" he does a tribute to "Brian and The Boys de la Beach" which turns out to be what the Beachies would have sounded like had they ever embraced disco. On various other tracks Loggins appears to favour some speeded up Hall and Oates vehicles, sprinkled with various guest artists.

Part of the uneven nature of Loggins's latest album product must be laid at the feet of the array of producers that toil on the record. Their multitude means that the record has nothing of the even texture that album fans expect — Dennis Lambert, Peter Wolf, Richie Zito, Richard Page (of Mr. Mister), Patrick Leonard and Georgio Moroder alternately produce the ten tracks, making for an ever-shifting approach to the sound of this record that does not enhance it measurably.

A duet with ex-Dobbie, super-successful solo artist Michael McDonald, titled "She's Dangerous" could be culled from this set and thrust into prominence, but the balance of the tracks, with the exception of a Martin Briley song, are forgettable filler.

VIDEO SCREENINGS

Suspect (RCA/COLUMBIA VIDEO)

In classic courtroom drama movies like Witness For The Prosecution (1957) with Charles Laughton as the defense attorney, or Anatomy Of A Murder (1959), with James Stewart for the defense, the emphasis was on the characterizations developed by the film. When much of the focus of a film is relegated to argumentative lawyers plying their trade in front of a judge and jury it is imperative that the lead roles be assigned to believable, convincing actors.

In Suspect, a better than average court flick, the defense attorney is played by Cher. Throughout the film it is almost unavoidable for the viewer to not keep repeating, "this is Cher playing a defense attorney, and she's not too bad!". But even as you say that the whole concept breaks down.

Suspect is about a deaf and dumb war war veteran accused of murdering a young Washington secretary, who finds Cher the only human being to come to his rescue. Cher's character, Kathleen Riley, has a rough road to hoe as a feminist attorney in a male-dominated bastion of privilege, but she doggedly stays on to defend Carl Wayne Anderson, the mute played with haunting and brooding sullenness by Liam Neeson.

One of the jurors on this grisly case turns out to be Randy Quaid, who had better choose his next few roles with care, before he becomes completely stereotyped as a grinning one-dimensional hunk. Quaid plays Eddie Sanger, Washington lobbyist without a single scruple, who strangely enough becomes convinced of accused suspect Anderson's innocence. Quaid and Cher become romantically involved, in spite of the stringent pressures for attorneys and jurists to avoid any personal contact.

The secretary's murder leads to an involved Washington scandal, and Cher's defence of the social pariah uncovers some irregularities in the legal structure even as she wages a tough fight in the courtroom. Sigourney Weaver, Kathleen Turner or Debra Winger could have pulled off Cher's role without a moment's hesitation, but Cher as the defense attorney requires extraordinary acting ability. WHAT'S ON

Movies

This week at the Capitol Cinema in Sherbrooke is the latest 'Brat Pack' movie, Young Guns. Starring such young up-and-coming stars as Emilio Estevez, Keifer Sutherland and Charlie Sheen it's set in the 'Old Far West'. You can guess the rest. Mostly, it's one more narcissistic opportunity for the young bunch in Hollywood to showoff.

Showtimes are Saturday, Sunday and Monday at 7 and 9.

At the Cinema Princess in Cowansville this week you can see License to Drive. This latest attempt by Hollywood to cater to what it thinks teens want from a movie stars Corey Haim. He plays a precocious teen who takes a joy ride through the streets of L.A. without a license. Showtime is 7:15.

Also at the Princess is Bruce Willis in Die Hard. In his latest movie, Willis (of Moonlighting fame) stars as a N.Y. cop who gets caught up with a band of international thieves by mistake. It's guaranteed to keep you on the edge of your seat with the perfect amount of suspense, and despite the silly ending worth the price of admission. Showtime is 9.

As for across the border at Merrill's Showplace in Newport, you can see Die Hard. The showtimes are 6:45 and 9:10 during the week with Saturday and Sunday matinées at 1:45.

Also at Merrill's Chevy Chase is in a not-so-funny movie, Funny Farm. Showtimes are 7:15 and 9:20 with Saturday and Sunday matinées at 2:05.

Finally, Merrill's is also showing Young Guns. The showtimes are 7 and 9:15 during the week with Saturday and Sunday matinées at 1:55.

Alain Desrochers is showing his works at the art gallery of the Caisse Populaire de Sherbrooke-Est. For more information read the Events section.

Geordie bringing kids' show to Eastern Townships

Montreal's Geordie Productions, whose theatrical presentations have been a popular favorite with thousands of children and teens for the last eight years, will present three productions during its 1988-89 season.

Starting this month the line-up features the return engagement of the innovative hit musical From You to Us to You, which will be seen on a fall tour of elementary schools throughout Quebec and Ontario. A sequel to that show, From You to Us to You Two, will be presented during a public performance run late next winter.

As a season finale the company will go out on a spring high school tour of Quebec and Ontario with the Oscar Wilde classic comedy The Importance of Being Earnest.

The season kicks off with an extensive elementary school tour, beginning September 12, of From You to Us to You, the pilot project created last year by Geordie Productions, in collaboration with Double Take Theatre, which directly involved Montreal school children in theatre by having them write their own material in a city-wide creative writing challenge.

These submissions, on the theme of "wishes, lies, and dreams", were the basis for the final full-scale production directed by Corey Castle and featuring a cast of four adult actors. The show was presented at the Saidye Bronfman Centre last February and March, and more recently, at the Edmonton Fringe Theatre Festival.

From You to Us to You will be playing this fall in cities all over the province, including Gaspé, Sept Îles, and Quebec City, as well as in the Eastern Townships, and the Laurentians. It will also be seen throughout southeastern Ontario, including Ottawa.

A sequel to From You to Us to

You, is already in the works, with Geordie Productions set to hold a new creative writing search among Montreal-area school children on the subject of "troubles, triumphs, and tomorrow". The result will be From You to Us to You Two, to be presented during a public performance run at the Saidye Bronfman Centre from February 19 to 24.

The season wraps up with a Quebec and Ontario spring high school tour of Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, the uproarious Victorian comedy about mistaken identities.

Founded in 1980, Geordie Productions, run by Artistic Director Elsa Bolam and Administrator Corey Castle, is a non-profit theatre company presenting quality entertainment geared to young audiences. Classics such as Charlotte's Web and Animal Farm have been presented in the past. As well, the company also encourages new Canadian material, such as the hits The Mystery of the Oak Island Treasure, and The Last Voyage of the Devil's Wheel, both by Canadian author Jim Betts, coproduced with Youtheatre.

For more information about Geordie Productions' 1988-89 season, call (514) 845-9810.

Le Corbeau opens its new gallery in Sutton

A special invitation is sent forth to all professional artists in the vicinity of Sutton, Frelighsburg, Dunham, Cowansville, and in all the surrounding Townships. An art gallery has opened its doors in Sutton, that wishes to represent and promote local and regional artists.

Sutton is witnessing a phase of extensive cultural and touristic development. The immediate region has become a regular haven to intellectuals and art lovers, attracting creative artistic inspiration in its wake. Now it is up to the artists to take advantage of this fascination for the arts by exhibiting works at Atelier Le Corbeau Art Gallery in nearby Sutton.

All disciplines are solicited; painting, etching, photography, sculpture, ceramics, textile, paper, along with all mediums, styles or trends.

There are only two important conditions. The artists must have achieved at least two major solo exhibitions in a renowned art gallery or institution. The art works must be recent and the principal activity of the artist must be the development of his or her art.

Everyone interested in taking a look at the new gallery is welcome to go and admire the achievements of local talents.

For more information call Walter Bernatchez at 538-2712 in Sutton, or visit the art gallery at 12 Main Street North in Sutton. The gallery is open Wednesday to Sunday from one to ten p.m.

The winner in each category will be announced at an awards reception to be held in Montreal on Friday, November 4th, at 6:30 p.m. at the Ritz Carlton Hotel. They will each receive a $2,000 prize.

President Richard King said the QSPELL board was "elated" at both the quantity and quality of entries received.

QSPELL received a total of 81 entries for the three awards (18 in the fiction category, 37 in the non-fiction category and 26 works of poetry). The awards were open to authors who have lived in Quebec three of the last five years. Because this is the first year the QSPELL awards have existed, works were considered which had been published in the two years preceding May 1988. Subsequent awards will be based on submissions published during the previous year.

The three judges in each category were chosen by a small committee of the QSPELL board. They remain anonymous until the awards are presented.

Friday marks opening of Summer Olympics

Time honored traditions observed in Seoul

By Anne Wheeler

Since the beginning of the Olympiad in ancient Greece, time-honored traditions have evolved that continue to be observed every four years. This year will be no different as Seoul, Korea is host country for the 1988 Olympics, which begin Friday, Sept. 16, and continue through Oct. 2. NBC will cover the XXIV Olympiad.

Among the Olympic traditions preserved are the Olympic mascot, the Olympic motto and the Olympic emblem, which reflect the flavor of the host country; and the Olympic creed, symbol, flag, flame and oath, which have remained the same throughout all time.

Surely viewers remember the cute bears Hidy and Howdy from the Winter Games in Canada in February. Those mascots relayed the outgoing nature of the host country.

Echoing the ambiance of Seoul, this summer's Olympic mascot is Hodori, a Korean tiger cub. The name was selected in April 1984 from among 2,295 names submitted by the Korean public. The "Ho" of Hodori comes from the Korean word for tiger; "dori" is a common masculine diminutive.

The universally accepted Olympic motto, "Citius, Altius, Fortius," means "Swifter, Higher, Faster." But each host city also creates an Olympic motto. "Harmony and Progress" is the motto of the 1988 Seoul Olympics. Adopted in June 1984 by the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee, the phrase reflects one of the main goals of the Olympic movement and an unwavering historic desire of the Korean people.

The emblem of the Games in Seoul consists of a traditional Korean decorative motif known as Sam Taeguk on top of the Olympic symbol of five interlocked rings. The various swirling, upward and inward motions in the design represent harmony of heaven, earth and man in the universe, peace through the Olympic Games and the gathering of people from around the world for the Games.

Time-honored symbols of the Olympics include the creed, the symbol, the flag, the flame and the oath. The creed reads: "The most important thing in the Olympic Games is not to win but to take part; just as the most important thing in life is not the triumph but the struggle. The essential thing is not to have conquered but to have fought well." The symbol, five interlocking rings, represents the five continents that compete in the Games (Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and the Americas). The flag, the rings on a plain white background with no border, is handed down from host city to host city. The flame, signifying the opening and closing of the Games, was a sacred flame originally burned at the altar of Zeus, in whose honor the Games were held. The oath, said by an athlete from the host country after the lighting of the flame, reads: "In the name of all the competitors, I promise that we shall take part in these Olympic Games, respecting and abiding by the rules which govern them, in the true spirit of sportsmanship, for the glory of the sport and the honor of our teams."

Live entertainment returns to television

Live entertainment returns to prime-time when the debut of Live! Dick Clark Presents... airs Wednesday, Sept. 14, on CBS.

"America's Oldest Teenager" will present contemporary musical and comedy acts as well as entertainment legends, novelty acts and offbeat segments in his new show.

Guest starring on the premiere show is a man acknowledged not only for his showmanship, but also for his humanitarian work, Harry Belafonte, who rarely makes television appearances. Also featured on the show will be Louie Anderson, one of today's rising comedy stars; and Vanessa Williams, controversial former Miss America, who will be performing her current chart hit, "He's Got the Look."

Mentalist Max Maven involves the studio audience in his intuitive gymnastics, and Mr. Escape, Steve Baker, one of the world's greatest escape artists, will perform an underwater escape in full view of the audience and television cameras while chained, handcuffed and anchored in a water tank.

Another feature of the show will be the (Ohhhh, Noooo) return of Mr. Bill, the clay man who appeared as a "regular" on Saturday Night Live its first seven years.

Of course, since the show is live, one of its most unique features is that guests and attractions may be added to the program's lineup right up to showtime.

"Let's Talk"

Q: I would like to know if Randy Travis is married. If so, what is her name—when and where was he born and how tall is he? Is there a Randy Travis fan club? If so how would I go about joining? —Patty Daniels, Florahome, Fla.

A: No, handsome Randy has not married yet, however, there is a lady in his life. Hailing from the little town of Marshville, N.C., 29-year-old Travis began singing and playing guitar at age 8. Talent shows, and years as both semi-pro and pro eventually led him to Nashville where he now makes his home. You may write his fan club for more information: Randy Travis International Fan Club, 1601 Allenbrook Drive, Charlotte, N.C., 28208.

Q: Whatever happened to Gardner McKay, who played Adam Troy in the TV series Adventures in Paradise? I have never seen his face nor the series again. I even fell in love with the schooner Tiki—and I can't swim! —Gail Kesler, Kingman, Ariz.

A: Handsome, square-jawed Gardner McKay was a minor supporting player before he sailed the South Seas as Capt. Adam Troy in Adventures in Paradise. The romantic free-lance skipper became so thoroughly stereotyped that when the series ended he could hardly find any work. He later became a moderately successful TV writer. As for the Tiki, it was probably scuttled with the series.

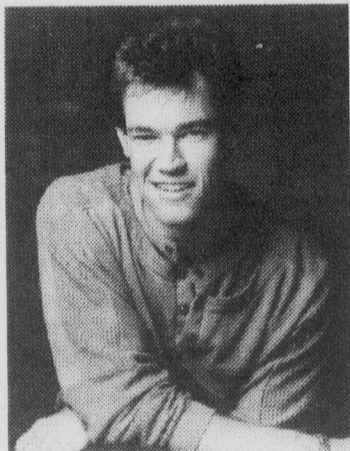

Q: Is Art Carney of The Honeymooners still alive? If he is, is he married? Please tell me all about him. —Holly Oberhausen, Russellville, Ky.

A: Art Carney was born in Mt. Vernon, N.Y., Nov. 4, 1918. He began his career as a comedian with a danceband and developed his comic skills as a second banana to such funnymen as Fred Allen, Edgar Bergen and Bert Lahr. He won instant fame when he appeared as Ed Norton in The Honeymooners. He is still active in the profession he loves so well. Yes, he is married and when not filming in Hollywood, he and his family reside in Connecticut.

Q: Please tell us who plays the part of Ray Luca and Pauly on Crime Story. The list of the other cast members would be nice too. —Elva Price, Big Spring, Texas

A: Crime Story starred Anthony Denison as Ray Luca; John Santucci as Pauli Taglia, Dennis Farina as Det. Lt. Mike Torello; Stephen Lang as Atty. David Abrams; Bill Smitrovich as Det. Danny Krychek; Steve Ryan as Det. Nate Grossman; William Campbell as Det. Joey Indelli; and Paul Butler as Det. Walter Clemmons.
