Rotarians Organizing "Boys' Club" Building Located On Bouchette Street

Huntingdon Rotary Club is launching itself into what might well become one of the finest things for the future welfare of the community at large. For the past month Mr. Fraser Woodhouse, Montreal, has been with the Rotarians each Monday, schooling the Rotarians as to how to organize and conduct a "Boys Club". The Rotarians have been sold on the idea of such a club as a very essential asset to Huntingdon. To start with the boys who will be eligible to join the club will be those of 9 to 12 years of age. So sold on the idea of the Club, the Rotarians to a man have signified their willingness to help on the evenings that the club will be open. It is expected that about five or six Rotarians will be present each evening.

The "Boys' Club" will have as its headquarters the building Mr. Charles Lalonde had built for a pool room. The building is located on Bouchette St. and measures 35 feet wide by 75 feet in depth. The Rtary Club has rented the building until May, 1960. It is heated and has hardwood floors. At the present time it is receiving some renovations so as to make it adaptable to the Boys' Club activities.

During the past two weeks a number of the Rotarians who are mechanically inclined and like to do woodwork, have been making games that will be required by the Club.

Mr. Fred Anderson is to be at the head of the Boys' Club, and his right hand men on the committee will be Douglas McGerrigle, Jr., MacKee Cluff, Maurice Melnyk, Hector Provost, Francois Cleyn and the Club President, Norbert Bourgon.

It is expected the official opening will take place on Wednesday evening, Nov. 18. For this opening night an extra special programme has been arranged and the following night the Club will get into real organization for the boys.

Although the Rotary Club has already subscribed considerable money toward the foundation of the Club, the general public can also lend a helping hand in many ways. To keep a sizeable group of boys in action it will take a great many games. Naturally boys want variety of games to play, so if Gleaner readers have games which boys can play indoors and would be willing to donate same for the good of the cause, it would be appreciated if they would contact the above named Rotarians. The same applies to furniture, mainly tables and sturdy chairs.

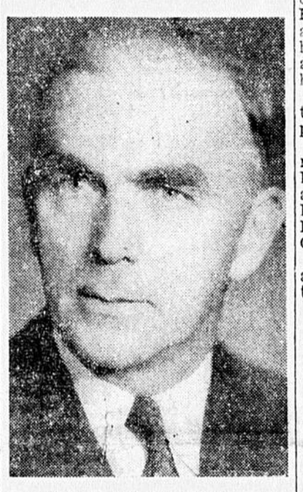
R. F. WALSH HONORED IN CURLING CIRCLES



R. F. "Dick" Walsh

It was pleasant reading to learn that R. F. "Dick" Walsh, Montreal, and a native son of Huntingdon, was fittingly honored as one of Canada's most enthusiastic curlers who has done so much for the good of the sport in the Montreal area. He was named a honorary life president of the Chanteclerc Club, which is one of the outstanding clubs in Quebec Province and is located at the Hotel Chanteclerc, Ste-Adele en Haut, Que.

A gold plaque, suitably inscribed with what Walsh had done for the club, was made by president Phil Martin at a dinner meeting in the Mount Stephen Club.

A past president of Thistle Club, founding president of the Town of Mount Royal Club, Dick Walsh has also been a vice-president of the Caledonian Curling Club in Scotland and is the only Canadian to ever be appointed to an honorary office in the Grand National Curling Club of America, the ruling body in the United States.

He has also served as president of the Canadian Branch of the Royal Caledonian Curling Club and in his 25 years of curling he has been responsible for guidance to many new clubs that have joined the ranks.

Five past presidents of Chanteclerc were also honored with presentation of special medals.

They are Murray Hayes, Montreal city councillor; 'Hammy' Hammond, onetime McGill grid ace; Bert Barnabe, owner of the Huntingdon Chateau, and Pete Daigle, noted golfers and Lorne Campbell.

George Powell, general manager at Chanteclerc, presented the medals.

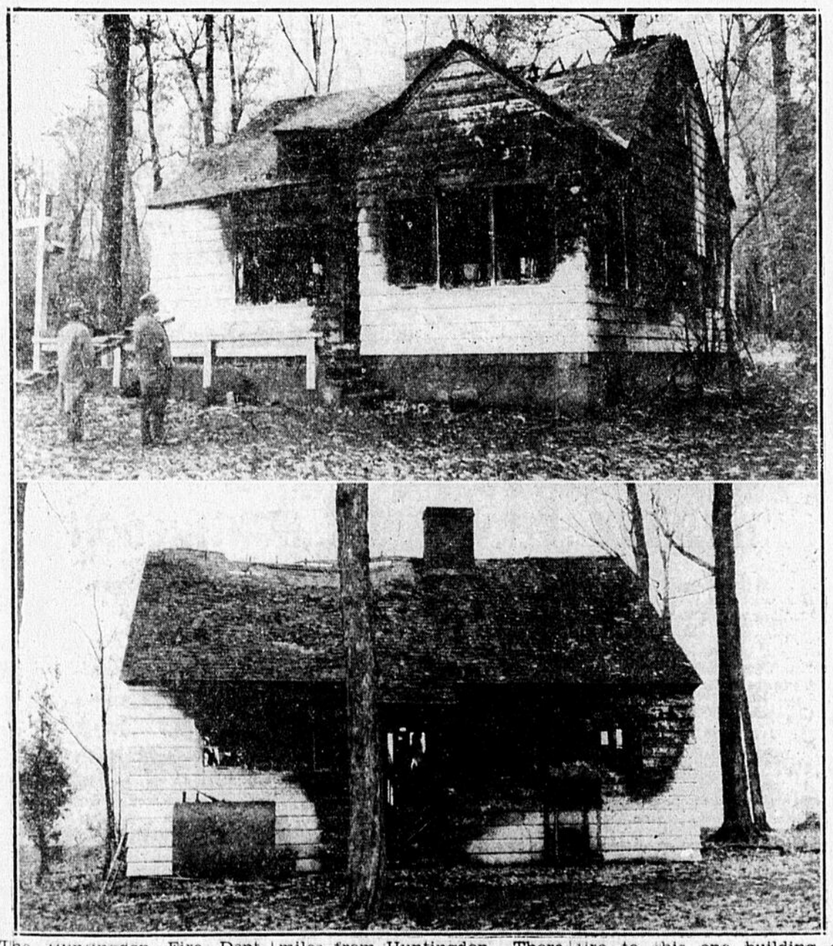
Firemen Keep Fire Under Control At Port Lewis



The Huntingdon Fire Dept. received a call for a fire at Port Lewis at 10.38 a.m. on Friday and were on the scene with their equipment at 11.05. The fire was at a cottage owned by Mrs. Therese Amiot, of Valleyfield, who was away at the time. The situation is in the Parish of Ste. Barbe, about 8½ miles from Huntingdon. There are several cottages in the area and there was the possibility that the fire might have spread. The firemen did not arrive in time to save the cottage, but they quickly got the fire under control and prevented it from spreading. The above photo shows front and back views and shows that the firemen kept the fire to this one building and while the interior is burned out, a greater part of the building is still standing. Six men went with the trailer pump and they used 500 feet of hose and three lines. The cottage is a total loss. People in the area were quite loud in their praise of the firemen and the good job they did in controlling the fire.

Huntingdon Liberals Make Organization Plans At Well Attended Meeting

E. C. Martin, President

The Huntingdon County Liberal Association held a meeting at the County Building, on Wednesday evening, with a very good attendance. Mr. Lyman Roberts, who is well known to many in this area, was chairman and introduced the various speakers and topics that came under discussion. Mr. Albert Latreille, President of the local association, welcomed all and expressed pleasure at such good attendance.

Mr. Roberts in his opening remarks said that there were some doubts that such a large meeting would result, but it showed that there is interest and it has only to be aroused. He said the Liberal organization in the Huntingdon area was brought about more than sixty years ago. Throughout this time all candidates have been chosen at a convention. Your present member has never faced a convention. There was no women's organization before the women had the vote, but it is a very valuable asset to the Liberal Party today. The Liberal organization in Huntingdon will carry on in the fine traditions of its past, but it must become active. Mr. Lesage wants activity in all sections so that a strong Party will take part in the elections.

Mr. P. Ferland gave the translation of these remarks in French.

Mr. Francois Cleyn, who with a committee had been responsible in drawing up a draft constitution for the local association, then presented this to the meeting for approval. The draft follows:

Draft — Constitution

IX. AMEDMENTS. — This Constitution may be amended by a vote of two thirds of the members present at any general meeting of members duly constituted.

Mr. Cleyn also proposed the slate for the executive of the Huntingdon County Liberal Association, as follows:

President, E. C. Martin, Huntjingdon; Vice-President, Jean Lussier, Franklin Centre; Treasurer, Kenneth Fraser, Dundee; Members: Ste. Barbe, Ludovic Brisson; St. Anicet, Albert Latreille, Lucien Perron; Godmanchester, Alex Robb; Huntingdon, Gerald Brisebois, Mons Duke and Mr. Soucisse; Hinchinbrooke, Henry Wallace; Elgin, Leslie Hay; Havelock, Keith Curran; Hemmingford, Henri Philion and Beattie Barr.

The draft of the constitution and the slate of the executive were unanimously approved by the meeting and a vote of thanks was given Mr. Cleyn for his work in connection with these.

Mr. Lionel Robb, Valleyfield, was called on to say a few words. He said that he saw from this meeting that the organization is maintaining the fine tradition of the Liberal Party in Huntingdon, that we know so well. The ladies have also a fine tradition in their organization. Reminiscing a little, Mr. Robb said he always associated political meetings with cigars and cigar smoke. He recollected when he was quite young that meetings would be held in his farm home and the atmosphere would be dense in cigar smoke. He wished the association every success.

Mr. James Smythe offered his thanks to the whole organization and thanks to Mr. Cleyn for his work and also to his committee. He said it was a good meeting tonight as a result of good effort and organization.

Mr. Lucien Perron, mayor of St. Anicet, pledged his support to the organization.

Mr. Ferland first addressed the gathering in French and then in English. In introducing him, Mr. Roberts explained that Mr. Ferland had the confidence of Mr. Lesage and it is known that he gets results.

Mr. Ferland said he wished good luck to the organization and urged on everyone present to start a recruiting campaign to see that they had the six members for each poll. Elections are won, he said, by all working together. All should learn the duties of the poll and work silently for success.

Hallowe'en Quiet, Rotary Party Proves Another Success

Hallowe'en passed off quietly in Huntingdon and there were no serious consequences from tricks. An enlarged police force patrolled the area, but very little was done to cause alarm.

The Huntingdon Rotary Club held its usual Hallowe'en Party for the children at the Huntingdon Theatre and about 625 children were in attendance. Every one of them had a very good time, some interesting films were shown and the usual treats were handed out.

Judging the many and varied costumes was quite a task for the judges: Mrs. Leo Cappiello, Mrs. Paul Lefebvre and Mrs. Norbert Bourgon. But after an exhaustive checking they made the following selections:

Age — Up to 6 Yrs. — 1st, Bride & Groom: Sandy Brunette, Ray Brunette; 2nd., Indian Girl-Squaw, Monique Lefebvre; 3rd., Rags, Michelle Lefebvre.

6 Yrs. to 12 Yrs. — 1st., Canon (Priest), Michel Foisy; 2nd., Balloon Vendors, Bruno Derepentigny, Rolland O'Connor; 3rd., Lassie, Andre Brunette.

New Signs On Lake Street And Plank Road

As stated in last week's Gleaner, new signs would be put up to mark the intersection of the Ridge and Plank Roads at the outskirts of town, these signs have now been placed. Going out from town, on Lake Street, there are now six signs. Starting on this side of the railway track is a sign — 1,500 feet to Intersection; at a further distance is a sign — Slow; this is followed by others at specified distances — 500 feet Stop;, Danger, a crossing sign and then Stop. On the opposite side and approaching the intersection on the Plank Road are similar signs, but less the Slow and 500 feet. The above photograph gives some idea of the placement of these signs on Lake Street. If the proper attention is paid to them, it should be evident that this crossing is a dangerous one and requires every caution on the part of all vehicle drivers.

No New Taxes For Town This Year Is Decision

The Huntingdon Town Council met on Monday evening at the County Building for a regular session, with all members present.

Following the reading of the minutes and passing a number of bills for payment, a letter was read from Mr. Albani St. Jean with reference to the sewer that goes under his house. In the letter it stated that Mr. St. Jean intends to block this sewer and to connect with the one which runs along Wellington Street. It is this sewer which featured in the recent case in which the town won a decision. The council discussed this at some length and the general feeling was that Mr. St. Jean could not take this action as it would cause trouble for other users of the sewer. It was decided to refer the matter to the lawyers, Messrs. Cosette & Cossette and ask them to look after it.

A letter was read from Cossette & Cossette in which they set forth their fees amounting to $300 in the St. Jean case.

The Secretary, Mr. Martin, read a letter regarding the finding of the judge in the St. Jean case.

A letter was read from Excelsior Lodge I.O.O.F. requesting the Town to remove the hydrant from its property on Chateauguay Street. It was stated that the hydrant was on Town property and the Lodge had been so notified on a previous occasion. One of the Aldermen said that they should be asked to clean up this lot and complained that there is a large hole there.

A resolution was passed to extend the time on the note with the Bank for $50,000 until the end of the year. It was stated that taxes are coming in and these will be paid on the note to clear it.

A plan was submitted by Mr. A. Somerville, M.P.P., regarding the road at Garden City. This showed a grass boulevard with blacktop on either side. The council approved the plan except that the boulevard should have a cement curb around it to protect it from cars running over it. All thought this would be a great improvement when completed.

Several Charity Cards were refused.

Mr. Stark was present to get the findings of the council on snow plowing for the ensuing season. He asked for a $2,000 guarantee for the season, based on what had been paid the previous season. It was finally decided to give a guarantee of $1,750 for the season for the same type of work that was done last season.

It was decided that no overnight parking of cars is to take place on Chateauguay Street, during the winter season. The police were instructed to enforce this and if necessary to impound cars that are so parked.

An amount of $25.00 is to be given to the Huntingdon Branch Canadian Legion Poppy Fund.

Pro-Mayor for the next three months will be Alderman S. Gaw.

Uldege Leduc asked the council for a water connection for his building lots at the rear of Henderson Street. It was decided that water will be given for a house he is building at the end of the street at such time that this may be needed.

Alderman Leduc asked for a cancellation of the water taxes of Mrs. Eugene Lefebvre. After discussion it was decided to cancel an amount of $43.00.

There was some talk of increasing the Garbage Tax. But it was decided there would be no increase this year. A study will be made of the financial statement at the end of the year and further decisions will be reached at that time.

Mr. Rene Rouselle is to be asked to make a survey of premises which are using more than a normal supply of water. He is to report on this at the next meeting of the council.

Kenneth Stevenson Killed While Changing Tire On Truck

An accident claimed the life of Kenneth Stevenson, of Dewittville, on Tuesday, while he was going about his regular duties of taking milk to the Montreal market. The accident occurred near the approach to Mercier Bridge at the turn-off going toward St. Constance, at about noon.

Stevenson had evidently had trouble with a tire on the milk truck and had changed the wheel and tied it back into place on the back of the truck. While doing this a car drove into the back of the truck and pinned the unfortunate victim, killing him instantly.

The details of the accident are quite meager at this time as the police who investigated had not released their story. It is reported the driver of the car was injured and a woman passenger was killed. There is no answer as to why this driver should run into the back of the truck at this point on the highway in broad daylight.

Kenneth Stevenson is well known here in this district and was employed as driver on one of Dave Rennie's trucks. He is the son of Mrs. Etta Stevenson, of Covey Hill, and husband of Lola Anderson and the father of four children, three boys and a girl.

Mr. Rennie was notified of the accident and left immediately to attend to details and have the milk delivered. When he returned on Tuesday evening he was unable to add much to the facts that by this time were already known. The police were to have given him the facts, but at that time had not done so.

Known, as he is, the news of Kenneth Stevenson's untimely death came as a great shock to his family and friends here.

The Country Banker

The day's work is finished. The last of the clerks has left, homeward bound. The manager, relaxing for an hour, reflects on the past and on the future.

As he looked outside through the window, he saw that darkness had begun to fall. In this peaceful spot, even the twilight seemed to come more softly than in other places. From away down the street came a melancholy note—the honk of a departing automobile. Even so (reflected the Country Banker reminiscently) do the wild geese honk as they fly home at evening.

Strange the feeling of mild exhilaration that one still felt, at hearing the call of the geese in the night sky. Perhaps it is, of all the noises made by wild things, the most significant of freedom. Liberty to go where one likes, to live where one pleases, to see new things and strange!

Well, it would not be long now till he, too, had the same freedom. Yoked to the Bank's service at sixteen—just in time (he reflected) to see the Great Depression of 'Ninety-three—he would not be here much longer. Forty-three years of branch banking—"a money changer in the temple", that was the new stock phrase, wasn't it?—and now, within twelve months of retirement on pension. This "money changer" would, in any case, be "driven from the temple of finance" when they put him on the pension fund at sixty. Would one feel like the wild geese, free to roam at last? Or would one, in the coming years, be just an old man at a loose end?

Forty-three years of branch banking—a long, long time. Half of it spent in this place. Though now he thought of it as "home", and had done so for years past (it was thronged with memories), there had been hours, nevertheless, when he had wanted almost desperately to be somewhere else.

He remembered, with a chuckle, the telegram that he had written some years earlier, when the then Head of the Staff Department, himself about to retire, had been entertained at dinner by the senior men in the Bank. "Seventeen years ago" (had run the message that he sent through Head Office) "you put me under a debt of gratitude by sending me to this branch. I have never forgotten you. But for the last sixteen years I have asked myself Have you forgotten me? Here's hoping that your successor will remember! Good-By, Old Man, and good luck!"

The new man in the Staff Department and not remembered: or, no doubt, in his wisdom, he had thought both branch and manager well suited to one another. Whatever the story behind it all, the fact remained that, for half a working lifetime, he had stayed in this one spot.

Cases like his own, after all, were not uncommon. A man came into the Bank's service as a junior. He was transferred, once in every few years, from post to post and from branch to branch. He presently found himself a full-fledged manager, lord of a little domain with half-a-dozen clerks for subjects. There he might stay, for a long time.

In the first flush of pride, he would drive around his district, making friends for the Bank, and for himself also. He would note the signs of good farming on this property, the signs of bad farming on that; realizing that, to the man who can read these signs with an understanding eye, every fence and every furrow tells a tale of human character: knowing his people by the state of their properties, and judging them as credit risks accordingly.

Then would come the stirrings of ambition: desires for a larger world. The call of the big cities would be felt insistently. The sight of an old schoolfellow's swift success, in a get-rich-quick line of business, would stir the pangs of envy.

To most men there comes a stage in life, when the one thing that seems to matter most is the prospect of "getting on". The Good Book warns us to shun, like the lusts of the flesh, "the pride of the eye and the joy of life". But for almost all men even for branch bank managers) when the blood is warm, these things have an attraction. They look like the hallmark of success. One wants them: sometimes one wants them badly.

That mood passes also (mused the Country Banker); fortunately for most of those that it afflicts. Looked at from a distance, from inside the country branch, the men who go to the big cities have an interesting time. They meet new people. They get all the latest ideas. They lead a stirring life—a life of everlasting bustle. But how much do they really get out of it, when all is said and done? Do things grow peaceful as they get older? Or is the rush endless, and do they just get tired?

How did the tag run that one picked up at school as a youngster? The tag out of the speech that Hamlet made, at midnight on the battlement? It still stayed in the back of one's head, and it fitted, not so badly, the men that went to the cities. "For every man hath business and desire", said Hamlet, "such as it is".

Whether the fellows who left for the cities, years ago, had found a greater happiness, only their hearts could tell. The picture they presented to the world was usually cheerful: but one couldn't judge by that. If they mostly met with disappointment, they kept the fact to themselves. Meanwhile, the Country Banker, the fellow like himself, stayed a Country Banker. Here was his place. He had to be philosophic about it. And in time, by George! he did become a bit of a philosopher. He was happy to be here.

He sat down at his desk, to fill and light a last pipe. For him it was part of the daily ritual of closing—a last part, added by himself.

Half-an-hour ago he had checked the teller's cash, had assisted in the double-locking of the teller's box and supervised the placing of it in the vault. With his accountant he had shut the vault and set the time lock. Before putting away the day's cheques he had looked over them: making here and there a mental note. He had signed the day's mail, and the clerks had departed. Except for himself, the branch was deserted: he was generally the last to go. With the lighting of his final pipe (that would carry him the distance to his own front door) the routine of the day was completed.

On the desk beside him lay the Manual of Rules and Procedure: the bulky loose-leaf volume in which all these things, and many more, too, were laid down in writing for the Bank's staff. Here and in Newfoundland and Havana, from Halifax right across the country to Victoria, the same rules governed. Hundreds of his fellow-managers, in as many branches, followed in detail the same nightly practice, and at the same time.

Well could he remember the feeling of irritation, the sense of protest with which, as a lad in his 'teens long years ago, he began to take part in this elaborate ritual. To do things exactly so—with a watchful accountant over one—to do just as one is told, and not act in slapdash fashion by the light of nature—that is what youngsters often find so hard. To have to be taught by the manager just when and how things must be done; to make sure, in closing the branch, that everything was straightened off "shipshape and Bristol fashion"; with many juniors, as with himself in those days, at first it often went against the grain.

Some of the juniors never could get into the way of things. Too much in a hurry, they left the Bank in many cases, to look for something simpler; the manager himself sometimes found it necessary to recommend the change.

But that mood also, the protest of youth in a hurry, passed away. Now that one was older, one could realize the comfort of doing things just right. Just as in Church, there was comfort in familiar ceremonies, here too there was a satisfaction in this office: that day by day, wherever the Bank had branches, the same things were done in the same order. Here in this branch, were deposits of more than $400,000. The cash on hand alone was equal to the branch salary list, of himself and all his little staff, for eighteen months. There was too much as stake for any slipshod procedure: the directions in the Manual of Rules and Procedure spelt safety.

Safety: this was a word that might stand as a banker's motto. Here and in every town and hamlet in the country, day by day the people brought their money for safekeeping. Even in this little branch—a sort of Birdseye Centre to the city man—there flowed a steady stream of cash into more than a thousand savings accounts. Last week the branch had received over thirty thousand dollars; and almost as much had been paid out again. For the stream was a two-way flow. People came with complete confidence and left their savings in the banker's custody. They came with equal confidence, sure that they could take them out at any moment. They took the banker for granted, just as they took the milkman and policeman for granted. Of course he would have the cash available the moment it was wanted! and in the right denominations too!

People took all this for granted; but they didn't stop to think what it involves. They didn't conceive of banking as an art, or think that the banker had to have a special skill. He was just a benevolent old party who took their money, looked after it for them (and paid them for the privilege of doing so), returning it to the depositors whenever they required.

People took a lot more than this for granted. Whom did they come to for advice, when their finances needed straightening? The banker. He was the trouble-man: the father confessor to the district—whose absolute discretion was assumed as a matter of course; whose knowledge of ways and means they relied on. And if money were needed before the grain or stock was sold, or to meet a sudden emergency, to whom did they come for accommodation?

There must always be cash for the depositor, no matter what else the banker may be doing. No matter how many depositors march in at once, he must pay them out in full. But he must also be ready to lend at any time, for business purposes and for private needs; and having made a loan, he must be just as quick to find cash for the borrower. Some people thought it funny, when bank Presidents, at shareholders' meetings, pointed to their "liquid" position. But Lord! if the Bank did not keep liquid, what would happen to depositors and borrowers?? Nevertheless, it would quite surprise some people to be told that banking was an art!

That was the thing one really set out to learn, when one came into the service. First, as a junior, the details of routine—the little things that came so hard at first. But learning the routine did not make anyone a banker. When once you knew the Manual, you had to study men.

For half one's working life, all the time in training: learning from a manager, watching him doing his job. So did one qualify for management — and get a branch of one's own. Then for half a working life, with youngsters in one's branch to be given the same training. Watching them, cautioning this one and encouraging another, reporting on their progress to the Staff Supervisor.

What was it that F—— used to say, years ago, when he was General Manager? "Every successful business man, and every successful banker, has really been a teacher all his life. For if he has not been a teacher, if he has not trained successfully the men who will carry the load when he goes, then he can write his ticket as a failure." There was wisdom in that—to think that each of us is teaching all the time. Doubtless (thought the Country Banker) with only partial success—for he could well remember, here and there, the youngsters he had failed to train—but at least, he hoped, with success in some degree. Soon he would pass out of the picture. Someone else would be send down by Head Office to take over his responsibilities. No more would he have daily charge of the branch and the small staff that ran it. But perhaps, by some of the clerks, he might be remembered as a teacher. Here and there, indeed, in the Head Office and other branches, a few men might from time to time gratefully remember things he once had taught them.

You studied men: and as you learned human character, you gained a little skill in banking. It looked a simple thing, to make a loan and take collateral security. No risk at all, when the loan was amply covered by collateral! But how many people who took that point of view had ever thought of what would happen, if bankers' loans were to go wrong on a large scale!—if bankers had to realize on large blocks of collateral?

Grain in barns through the country-side, stock grazing in the fields: these were the security for his loans, reflected the Country Banker. Farmers and stock raisers came into the branch and turned their grain and their cattle and hogs into money, while still the grain was in the barn, while still the stock was in the fields. With it they bought plows and fencing, clothing and shoes for their families, and paid their taxes on the due date. The system worked.

But it did not work automatically. It worked because the banker watched the market, and because he knew men. To lend the stockman and the farmer money, to leave them free to sell their own products, to let them deposit the proceeds and so cancel the loans—to do this with judgment—that was good banking. That kept the country-side going and helped everybody. But in order to do this, you had not only to know the client, but also to think for him. Injudiciously to lend the stockman or farmer money, to see the collapse of his market and perhaps the demoralization of the man, to witness the desperate shifts he made, in seeking assistance from the neighbours, to press him for the loan and sell him out—that was the mark of the poor banker. That harmed the country-side It hindered everybody. The Bank itself, faced with the task of realizing on pledged stock or grain—handling the goods instead of handling the money—the Bank would likely suffer too. Should it ever have to do this on a large scale, it would undoubtedly suffer loss.

No, you had to know men and markets. Whatever the collateral you took, you really lent on character and judgment. Your slowly moving loans were mostly the record of your own mistakes. You might —or might not learn from your mistakes: but whenever you made a mistake, it meant that someone else, some client of the Bank, had got himself into difficulties—as well as his banker. If you had refused him the loan he wanted, perhaps he would have liked you less. But he would certainly have had an easier time—free from loss and worry.

Sometimes the greatest kindness you could do for a fellow

The Country Banker . . .

would be to turn down his application for a loan. You could save him from probable, and even from certain loss. But, strangely enough, you couldn't convince him of it. He came into the branch as if you were a Fairy Godmother—as if you were there with unlimited funds. He put before you some risky notion, promising quick profits. He was ready to pledge all that he had in the world to get accommodation. The security was there. The Bank would be fairly safe in lending. But you knew that the client wouldn't be safe. You knew that the profits wouldn't be there when the loan matured. There would probably be losses instead. You didn't want to have to press him then—still less to have to sell him out. So you refused to lend him anything; and, like as not, he went off in a huff. You did the man a kindness: and you got no thanks for it. Sometimes you took a conservative line, you turned down lots of applications and were called hard names: but you helped in this way to keep the country-side solvent.

. . . Well, a few realized, perhaps, that you really were guarding them. Some would afterwards remember, when people elsewhere found themselves in straits, that the Country Banker had saved them from getting in too deep. One or two would even come to value the Country Banker's judgment more than the money which he had to loan. But these were the rare spirits...

And what of the other side of the picture? What of the time when caution was asleep? What of the loans you sometimes made because you liked and respected a fellow?—whereas a strange manager would probably have turned him down. When did you make a mistake, and loan incautiously, when you did let a man borrow for some rash venture that involved him in loss, generally you found, in examining yourself, that liking had clouded your judgment — that you might best have served the man by forgetting that you were his friend.

But that was not often. You couldn't run a banking business on a personal basis. Just as the doctor did his job, considering every problem quite impersonally, so you had to follow the same professional tradition. Within your office, you put aside all personalities.

The doctor did not let his liking, or his dislike of the patient affect his judgment of a case. He kept cool and was careful. For if he got excited or careless his judgment would probably be wrong, or treatment ineffective. He just kept going, with the same dry smile for everyone, and the same quiet air.

So, too, with the Country Banker: the client's interest demands unbiased judgment, whether you like him or not, the fact doesn't matter. In any case, you put your experience at his disposal. To serve him you have to cultivate detachment.

The pipe, that should have carried him to his own front door, was now quite cold. He must have been day-dreaming, here in the dusk of a Spring evening. This would never do. Quickly he knocked out the dead ashes, put back the seasoned briar in his pocket, carefully locked the door behind him, and stepped into the darkening street.

Again came a melancholy note —this time it was the call of the wild geese winging northward—not just an imitative automobile with the clutch in.

Invisible in the dark sky, the flight of birds was passing overhead. The geese were bound, no doubt, from Winter quarters in the southern marshes to Summer quarters in the northern lakes. Again the mild exhilaration that the same call regularly gave! Nothing so significant of freedom.

Well, it would not be long now till he, too, had the same freedom. Twelve months more and they would retire him on pension. Would one, at sixty, feel free to roam at last?—to see the Scottish heather, live under Mediterranean skies, laze on Californian beaches, as one had sometimes dreamed of doing?—or would one, in the coming years, be just an old man at a loose end?

Probably (concluded the Country Banker stepping out for home) one would end by remaining right here, where one had been living for so long. There is much to be said for moorland heather, for southern skies and beaches: but here in this country-side one has made the folk, in a real sense, "one's ain folk". For the whole of a generation one has quietly been serving them; in small things mostly, sometimes in the greater things as well. For all that service one is well rewarded; if not in wealth and all that wealth brings, then in something better, which is friendship. For here—and not elsewhere—one feels one is at home.

Egg Producers' Registration

Ottawa. — Canadian egg producers were warned by the Agricultural Stabilization Board that they will not be in line for deficiency payments that may be made unless they are officially registered.

A spokesman for the Board said many egg grading stations across the country are reporting producers' markettings, but that many of the producers have no registration number and therefore cannot be included for participation in the federal price support program.

This program, which replaces the policy of direct purchases of eggs by the Board, went into effect October 1.

An egg producer may be eligible for a deficiency payment on Grade A Large and Grade A Extra Large eggs up to a maximum of 4,000 dozen in one year.

To qualify for any payment that may be made, every owner of a flock must be registered and the registration number must be shown on each shipment of eggs to the grading station.

Producer-graders marketing eggs produced from their own flocks direct to retail outlets for re-sale to consumers should similarly use registration numbers.

All registered egg grading stations have a supply of registration application cards.

It's bad enough to be a quitter. But it's worse to finish something you never should have started.

Regional Meeting of Presbytery W.A. Held At Ormstown

The sixth Regional Meeting of the Presbytery Women's Association was held on Oct. 30th, in St. Paul's Church, Ormstown, with Mrs. Tolhurst of Howick and Mrs. Crook, Valleyfield, presiding.

Registration and sale of luncheon tickets started at 10 a.m. and morning session opened at 10.15. Theme for the meetings was "We Are All Brothers". The devotional period was conducted by Mrs. Thomas Van Vliet and Mrs. Gaudine of Lacolle. A word of welcome was given by Ormstown President and an invitation to lunch in MacDougall Hall. All the ladies went over to the hall where the Rev. P. Jones was introduced by Mrs. Erry of Montreal. Rev. Douglas Pelkey was to have been guest speaker but at last minute was prevented from coming and Rev. Jones replaced him. He showed a film strip, "I Found A New World", also a movie, "The Ones From Opatu". These pictures were most interesting and instructive and depicted life in Africa and showed the great strides being made in the Christian way of life. They were followed by another film, "Angola Awakes" which showed a very modern country. A vote of thanks was tendered Rev. Jones for an interesting program. A hearty luncheon was enjoyed by the ladies, there being about 100 present.

Afternoon session commenced at 1.30 with a brief Memoriam Service. Rev. Loree gave a word of welcome from his Session and Mrs. John Wallace sang "Just For Today". Roll call was responded to by 89 ladies from 12 districts. Offering was dedicated by Mrs. Murray of Hemmingford. Mrs. Erry, Presbyterial President of W.M.S., and Mrs. Meadows, President of W.A., introduced the Secretaries of the various departments from Montreal and they all read interesting reports of their work. The treasurer gave a very satisfactory report. These reports were followed by inspiring addresses by Mrs. Erry and Mrs. Meadows. Mrs. Wallace Rennie reported for the Courtesies Committee. Hemmingford extended an invitation to the Conference to meet there in 1960. After a hymn and the benediction the ladies met in MacDougall Hall for a light tea provided by the members of the Evening Auxiliary.

O. Monique, F. Pringle Start New Business

A new business will soon be started in Huntingdon which will be serving the farmers of the area. This business is the Daffin Feedmobile and is owned by Ovide Monique and operated by Ferns Pringle, both of Huntingdon. It comprises a machine that will grind and prepare feed for cattle right on the farmer's own premises. It is brought right to the door and does the job in a very short time and with very little handling. A truck accompanies the mill, which carries necessary feed supplies for the proper grinding and mixing of feeds. Messrs. Monique and Pringle will fly to the factory at Lancaster, Penn., on November 8th, for the purpose of taking a course of training in the operation of feedmobile. They will be inschool for about a week and then will return home with the equipment on November 16th., ready for business with their mobile mill.

There are over 70 units of this kind in Canada and this since the past two years, located from Alberta to P.E.I. They serve 10,000 farmers, large and small. There is no farm too large and none too small for this machine to operate. Since their operation, 236,250 tons of finished feed has been processed annually. The value of this is approximately $16,537,500.00.

Further particulars of this venture will be found on another page in the advertising columns.

Ormstown Poppy Day Campaign And Remembrance Program

In the past few years, unfortunate veterans have never had need to seek for aid in Ormstown but the only way to help them is by building up the Poppy Fund. This fund can be used for no other purpose than the helping of needy vets and their families. It is hoped that everyone will give generously.

The annual Armistice Day dinner will be held in the Anglican Church Hall on Saturday, November 7th, at 7.30 p.m., when the speaker will be Rev. John B. Hall. All veterans are cordially invited and tickets may be obtained from members of the local Branch of the Legion, Messrs. William Frost or Bill Bennett.

The annual parade of Veterans will be held on Sunday, November 8th; the parade assembly at 10.30 a.m. at the Legion Hall, Prince Albert St.

Editorial Notes

As Others See Us -- Could It Be?

WE believe that Huntingdonians are proud of their town and the surroundings and would be ready to defend its good name at any time. Yet some things go on and are taken for granted.

One eyesore and which we believe to be a distinct blot on the appearance of the main shopping centre, is the untidy vacant lot which is the result of a fire. If the owners of this lot will not make an effort to clean this up, then the town should do it in the best interests of appearance and health. The lot has been cleared off to a great extent, but that final clean-up has been neglected, which would at least give it a neater appearance. The residue of the ash and cinders makes it an untidy spot in a business area.

Several stores in this area have renovated their premises and these present a much improved appearance. This improvement is marred however, by the rest of the street and to the stranger coming to our town presents a run-down and neglected look. We can never know who might be looking at our town and perhaps have it in mind for some new development, or the establishment of a new business or manufacturing project. First appearances count a lot and if the town bears a neglected appearance it is no inducement to a newcomer.

It has been reported to us that a stranger did come to Huntingdon quite recently and was in conversation with one of the business men of the town. This conversation ran something like this: Why has your main street such a depressed look, is business poor here? What does your business depend on? Everything looks so run-down that it strikes me there is not too much business here. The reply was: You are wrong sir, we have quite a bit of industry here and business should be good, we find it so. We have several textile mills, two dye plants, a Fry-Cadbury Milk Plant, a newspaper, and several smaller manufacturing concerns besides the regular complement of general business and offices. Besides all that, this area is considered to be one of the best dairy farming districts in all Canada. The visitor replied: That is most surprising to me, this is my first visit to Huntingdon and when I drove into your town, it struck me as being in a depressed condition. What is your council doing, do they not think along the line of improvement? I see the sidewalks have been patched here and there as if there was a shortage of money to do a better job.

Pride in a town is more than just believing it. It means that we must take pride in our business places, our homes, etc. A regular coat of paint as often as needed can do a lot to improve and brighten our premises and will do a lot to attract the visitor. It also shows a degree of progressiveness, that we are alive and doing. Attractively dressed store windows do much to give the impression that business is good and that the man behind is progressive and out after it. Our main street should be the mirror of our town, its appearance all the way through reflects on the visitor and causes him to think well of it. What do you think as a visitor, when you visit other towns and cities? Every one has its run-down section, but you do not stop there. You go on until you find a more atractive part, one that is inviting to you. Other visitors who come here form their opinions in the same way. However, it is not always that they voice their opinion for they may not stop to do so.

Cost may be a factor, but the cost of improving the appearance of our premises and keeping our town with a well-kept look, can be a valuable asset to everyone. If we want to invite new industry, new business to fill up the vacant lots, then we must try to show that we are really progressive and not just "don't care." It is not fair to those who try to improve their buildings and business, all must try to do their best and keep the main shopping area attractive and well kept. They will find that it pays dividends to them with better business returns.

Enterprise is an important word and progressiveness is a part of enterprise. New ideas of display and sale of goods shows an enterprising shopkeeper. These idea catch on with the shopper and helps him to know where to shop. Huntingdon is the only large shopping area for many miles in any direction one may choose to go and for this reason it should be always buzzing with enterprise. Let us justify our pride, let strangers to our town know that we are proud of our town, that we are full of life and are really looking and going forward.

Liberal Groups Organizing

THERE is a new life being breathed into the Liberal Party organization in this area. It is being done cautiously, but insistently. Every move being made is according to some prearranged plan that will no doubt emerge at election time into a concerted effort to regain lost power.

There is an air of confidence among the supporters that has not been seen for many years. Pervading the air at all meetings held of late is a quiet feeling that the next election will see changes for the betterment of the position of the Liberal Party in Quebec. Determination is evidenced in the countenance of each and every member and close attention is being paid to the advice and guidance of the leaders and organizers. There is a rallying to the fold of the Party of many of those who in past elections have shown little interest until too late. Now, preparations are being made well ahead in order that plans will be complete when the call for duty is sounded. The duty, of course, is that every effort will be expended toward trying to secure the return of the Liberal Party to power in this Province. Each meeting is in serious vein, there is a big job to be done if the success looked for is to be achieved. The members have great confidence in their new leader, Mr. Lesage, they feel he will lead them to victory and they are willing to follow his advice and leadership in an attempt to attain that victory. Confidence in a leader can accomplish much. The right men must be chosen that the leader may have able support to carry his campaign to a successful conclusion and also to have a strong company if elected.

The Liberal Party seems determined to have a strong and efficient organization and to seek the support of the electorate when the time comes for an election.

Can't Fool Animals

TRAVELLERS now for several months are free of that summertime puzzle — trying to figure out which places are operating on daylight saving time. They're all on standard time until the clock-switching starts again next spring.

This daylight saving business started in England in 1916, and the U.S. followed suit. In Canada and the U.S. daylight saving time was in effect all year round from 1942 to the end of the war, as a measure to conserve electricity. Britain, in fact, adopted double daylight time — two hours ahead of standard.

Some places of course retain standard time. Alberta and Prince Edward Island, by provincial laws, are on standard time all year round. So are the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and among cities, Fort William, Port Arthur and Windsor in Ontario.

The animals, big and little, wild and domestic, keep time by their natural instincts, as every farmer and pet-owner knows. There was a particular illustration of this the other day in Toronto, which with a multitude of other places returned to standard time for the winter.

Tuffy, an elderly and sedate cat, had spent the summer nights outside in the garden, but as the weather turned cooler he moved indoors for the night.

In recent weeks Tuffy would arouse from slumber atop the television set and stalk into the home-owner's bedroom with piercing miaows, demanding to be let outdoors immediately — at exactly 6.55 every morning. After a stroll around the garden, Tuffy returned for breakfast.

The house-owner had carefully changed all the clocks and his wristwatch back one hour before retiring on October 24, and looked forward to an extra hour's sleep.

Early next morning Tuffy came into the bedroom. Startled, the home-owner looked at his watch. It was 5:55.

He looked at the cat, which glared impatiently back, and thought to himself that Tuffy must be getting confused in his old age.

Then he remembered the clock was an hour earlier than it had been at this same moment the day before.

Tuffy had never changed from standard time.

In Canada — as from October 28 to November 5 — the Mission will visit and inspect various Experimental Farms and other Agricultural Research projects, Agricultural Colleges, and also take part in conferences. A similar but more extensive programme will be followed in the United States as between November 6 and November 20.

At Terrace Bank

Since it would appear from the programme of the Mission that Terrace Bank is one of a small select group of privately owned farms to be visited by the Mission in Quebec and Ontario, it must be assumed that Messrs. Ness of Terrace Bank were accorded a very high honour indeed. Recognition indeed of their practical and scientific farming operations, as outstanding cattle breeders and milk producers.

Introduced as being two outstanding graduates of Macdonald College and as practical up-to-date farmers and livestock breeders, J. Earle Ness and his son Robert E. Ness, cordially welcomed the party at Terrace Bank. Robert E. Ness then gave a summary of their some 300 acre farm operations, conducted their guests through the byres and explained their feeding and milk production operations. All of which seemed to be of considerable interest to the party as evidenced by the numerous questions that were asked with respect to cropping, feeding costs, etc.

Finally, the milking herd of Terrace Bank Ayrshires, in a nearby field, was inspected and discussed.

Prior to the Terrace Bank visit, the Mission met a group of district agronomes, including Leon A. Beaudin of Huntingdon, and had lunch with same at Ecole d'Agriculture, Ste. Martine.

The Holstein farm of Edouard Jodoin, Ste. Martine was also visited.

From Terrace Bank the party returned to Ste. Martine for dinner and a further conference.

Behind Khrushchev's Peace Talk

By LEWIS MILLIGAN

"Notice where Russia wants Italy to sell them goods in the amount of $100 million on credit. With all this sudden desire for total disarmament and lovey-dovey peace talk by Mr. K., along with other proposals for more trade with the West, could it be that the Reds are in pretty bad financial circumstances? Mr. K. may be more worried about his own hide than world peace."

That is a quotation from a letter just received from a Second World War veteran who is hibernating in the country after a heart attack. He is thus on the outside looking in, and in that brief paragraph he has sized up Premier Khrushchev's latest dramatic performance on the world's stage. It is doubtful however, that Mr. K.'s sudden change of front is due to financial troubles. That request for a mere hundred million dollars credit from little Italy is just a bit of strategic by-play to get into the big western market by the back door. There is no doubt that the Russian proletariat want peace and are getting vocally impatient at the delay of the promised Utopia of communism.

The American Exhibition in Moscow, with its rich display of consumer goods was a revelation to the huge crowds of Russian people who attended it. Mr. Khrushchev himself was one of the spectators, and his later visit to the United States must have impressed him with the contrast between the high standard of living under a free democracy and the bare existence condition of his own people under a social system that he had boasted would ultimately be adopted by the western world.

At the same time Mr. Khrushchev is unconsciously paying a bask-handed compliment to the social system of the United States by telling the Russian people that the Soviet would catch up with American production of consumer goods. He must have a pretty low opinion of the intelligence of the Russian proletariat, when he condemns the capitalist system as obsolete and oppressive, and in the same breath holds up the standard of living of the greatest capitalist country in the world as an example for their achievement.

There must be little comfort for the Russian proletariat in the fact that the United States is falling behind in the production of rockets and sputniks. If they were given the choice between free trips to the moon and a better standard of life on this earth, they would gladly dispense with the Soviet scientists and forget all about the vacuous regions of space. They would prefer to fill the vacuums in their own homes and stomachs, and they have recently been giving voice to that preference.

Mr. Khrushchev, in his "lovey-dovey peace talks", is more concerned with peace at home than in the world at large. The Soviet announcement that it is going to provide the people with vastly more and better consumer goods, explains a lot. Tennyson put it into two lines of his Locksley Hall:

"Slowly comes a hungry people, as a lion, creeping nigher,
Glares at one that nods and winks behind a slowly dying fire."

The Week In Quebec

QUEBEC (CP) — Quebec's 25,000 civil servants this week received news the Quebec Government is going to spend more than $7,000,000 this year to increase their salaries under a new reclassification approved by the Cabinet.

Premier Paul Sauvé signed a 2,000-page Order-in-Council putting into effect the new classification and the salary boosts as of Nov. 1 for 19,169 government employees who fall under the authority of the one-man Civil Service Commission.

The Premier said increases were provided for on an annual basis over the next four years.

For 6,000 other government workers whose salaries are set down by laws, employees of government boards, committees and commissions, tradesmen, and unskilled workers, salary revisions will be announced in a few weeks.

Mr. Sauvé said the increases of these workers will also be retroactive to Nov. 1.

Average annual salary increase is $394 for permanent employees and $265 for temporary employees.

The Premier said the Quebec Government wants to attract young people who are interested in making Civil Service a career. Specialized people, engineers, architects, technicians, should be paid a scale of salaries comparable to that paid in the Federal Government service or private industry.

Major reforms in the treatment of the criminally insane now kept in Montreal's Bordeaux jail are going to be put into effect within a year.

Health Minister Arthur Leclerc of Quebec said this week the construction of new mental hospitals and expansion of existing institutions will enable the Provincial Government authorities to eliminate within a year an "abnormal" situation at the provincial prison.

Dr. Leclerc made the statement when asked to comment on remarks made earlier by Jacques Hébert, Montreal writer, who has just published a book called "Scandal at Bordeaux".

Mr. Hébert spoke to newspaper men at a reception to mark the launching of his book in which he says some 700 mental patients are kept at Bordeaux jail's hospital for the criminally insane without receiving proper treatment.

The Health Minister said it was true that an abnormal situation prevailed at the huge jail.

He said the new hospitals for mental patients at Joliette and at L'Assomption, additonal facilities at Baie-St. Paul's Ste. Anne hospital, and transformation of Montreal's old Ste. Justine Hospital will provide 4,000 additional beds for mental cases within a year.

Governor-General George Vanier left by train Thursday night to return to Ottawa after his first visit to Quebec City since he was appointed the Queen's representative in Canada.

Before his departure he made a brief address at City Hall, saying Canadians can take pride in the survival of the French culture in Canada 200 years after the British conquest.

Gen. Vanier, accompanied by his wife, came from Montreal after a stopover there.

The Public Service Board has authorized establishment of a ferry service across the St. Lawrence River between Matane on the St. Lawrence River South Shore and Godbout on the North Shore.

The service will be operated by La Compagnie Traverse Matane-Godbout Limitée.

The Board said economic conditions in the Matane region — 250 miles East of Quebec City — have deteriorated in the last few months. They could worsen if the request for operation of a ferry service was denied, the Board said.

The Week At Ottawa

OTTAWA (CP). — Government officials have warmly welcomed a proclamation by the International Monetary Fund that should clear away long-standing barriers to Canadian trade.

The IMF declared last week at Washington that, with a limited exception, the world's trading nations no longer can claim to discriminate against dollar imports on the grounds of a shortage of gold and dollars. It said the IMF's some 70 member countries should act "with all feasible speed" to eliminate this discrimination.

Canada and the United States have sought the move for some time, for it should eliminate most of the discrimination practised against Canadian and U.S. imports by many countries.

No time limit was set, though officials here say fund directors were talking in terms of months. Once carried out, the move could open some door in Europe to Canadian grains, fresh apples, meats and canned fruits and vegetables. And it could drop United Kingdom barriers to bacon, drugs, tobacco, synthetic rubber, fish and other products.

Must Compete

But even with the discriminating walls — mainly quotas or prohibitions — coming down, the result in dollars and cents will depend on whether Canadian goods are competitive and on whether exporters work hard enough to develop the reopened markets.

Most non-dollar countries imposed the restrictions after the Second World War to protect their foreign exchange reserves of gold and dollars against too heavy buying of dollar goods from North America.

In many cases this resulted in Canada losing concessions granted under trade treaties even though Canada had granted concessions of its own to obtain the treaty benefits.

International agreements, chiefly under the IMF and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, recognized the right of countries having balance-of-payment troubles to use discriminatory restrictions.

Recently many countries have dismantled many barriers against dollar goods—a trend expedited last September when the United Kingdom and most West European countries made their currencies freely convertible for external trade purpose. Nevertheless, some discriminations remain and one official here said the IMF decision removes the "legal cover" for them.

The Washington announcement came on the eve of the GATT meetings that opened in Tokyo last week.

Housing Fund Empty

A three-month rush by borrowers has exhausted the federal government's housing loan fund. Works Minister Walker announced that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will approve all eligible loan applications now in its offices, but no new applications will be accepted — whether from builders, home owners or limited dividend companies.

In Toronto, a spokesman for the National House Builders Association said it would seriously affect the winter work programs. A spokesman for Consolidated Building Corporation Limited said it would probably have to lay off more than 1,000 workers because of the loans cut-off.

In effect, this means that persons seeking a new mortgage in the next two months or so must turn to banks and other private lenders — who recently have sharply reduced their housing mortgage lending.

The announcement also said the government will move "very early" in Parliament's next session, expected to open in January to ask for more money for housebuilding loans.

Parliament last spring voted $250,000,000 to bring the total allocations to the federal housing fund to $1,000,000,000. All of that now has been invested — and all but $100,000,000 of it since September 1957.

The announcement said winter house construction will reach "a very high level." It will include 20,000 housing units financed by federal loans made in the last three months.

Mixed Reaction

Reaction from the housing industry was mixed. "Builders are still clamoring for funds," said John Caron of Montreal, chairman of the Canadian Construction Association housing association.

W. G. Clements, secretary-manager of the Toronto Metropolitan Home Builders Association, said everyone knew there had been a heavy demand, but "I don't think anyone knew it had reached this stage." It would be serious for those who had not yet applied.

A spokesman for the Canadian Construction Association said however the industry was "reasonably satisfied" with the amount of work provided under the government lending program.

Butter to Britain

While Prime Minister Diefenbaker last week heard a consumer complaint about the first 10,000,000-pound sale of Canadian butter in Britain, his government was looking into the possibilities of a second one.

The complaint came from the Canadian Association of Consumers whose president, Isabel Atkinson, told reporters the protest was against the disposal of Canadian butter abroad at less than the price available in grocery stores at home.

The government closed a deal earlier this month under which 10,000,000 pounds of its surplus butter was sold to Canadian exporters for sale in Britain. The price to the exporters was 56 cents. It was part of some 100,000,000 pounds of surplus butter the government bought at 64 cents a pound.

Nuclear Blast

Prospects for an atomic blast under Alberta's Athabaska oil sands brightened last week when it was reported in Washington that Russia has agreed to withdraw its insistence that any international ban on nuclear explosions should include even those for peaceful purposes.

Dr. John Convey, head of the federal mines branch, said in Ottawa preparations now would proceed.

The nuclear explosion would be the first in Canada. It would take place under the sands 175 miles northeast of Edmonton, in an experiment to see whether the resulting heat separates oil from the sands so it can be retrieved. Richfield Oil Corporation of Los Angeles is putting up the $1,500,000 needed for the initial experiment.

Canadian Politicians 'Dull Humorless Windbags'

Dull, flannel-mouth politicians are responsible for the public's lack of interest in Canadian politics, says a prominent Canadian writer.

"The reason only 78% of all eligible voters go to the polls in a federal election is that people are bored with Canada's do-nothing, say-nothing politicians," Hugh Garner reported in a current magazine.

Garner recalled the days when politicians were showmen. One of the greatest, Sir John A. MacDonald, was attacked for his love of drink by George Brown of the Toronto Globe. Sir John told an election crowd, "I know that you would rather have a John A. drunk, than a George Brown sober."

"Canadian have become apathetic. Voters have dismissed casually, the highway contract scandals in Ontario, the arrest of a B.C. government minister for taking bribes and the demagogy and patronage of the Union National government in Quebec," Garner said.

Two clerical professors at Laval University wrote a treatise on corruption in Quebec election machinery. The majority of the voters in the province ignored them. Quebec has the biggest turnout on election day. "Voters are bought with free whisky and beer; everything is given away from washing machines to unemployment insurance benefits," Garner charged.

Quebec also leads the country is spoiled ballots. In Montreal-Ste. Anne there are 61 spoiled ballots for every thousand cast.

"I don't advocate compulsory voting as they have in Australia," said Garner, or even a 100% vote. In Russia almost 100% vote, but look what they've got! We don't need compulsory voting; but we need compulsory causes to vote for and against!"

Books Of Remembrance

by Dorothy Barker

The child's eyes were as blue as a May sky and she was not the least embarrassed when she repeated her question, "What is that?" Alan Beddoe, the man largely responsible for the beautiful hand illumination of the two Books of Remembrance in the Peace Tower of Canada's House of Parliament, tried not to look too incredulous.

He had been making a correction in the first book of names commemorating those who gave their lives in the cause of human rights in the first war. He was unmindful of the large group of students who stood behind him watching the operation, until this teenager spoke to him. To a man who has spent twelve years of his life designing and executing, or directing the execution of the beautiful pages, her question seemed almost sacrelligious.

But Alan Beddoe is a patient man. If he were not, the pages of vellum, with their unique heraldry and significant art, would not reflect the perfection they do.

Quietly he turned to the youngster and said in his modulated voice, "This, my dear, is the Book of Remembrance." But the child was not satisfied. She tried his good humor further. "Remembrance of what?"

"In this book and the second Book of Remembrance are the names of those who died in the two world wars," he informed her.

"Then my mummy and my daddy must be there, "said the girl.

After some questioning, Alan Beddoe and I found out the young girl had emigrated to Canada from her native Germany only two years earlier. Her mother and father were killed in a blitz of Germany during the war and she had been adopted by a uncle before he left to establish himself in Canada. She was reluctant to discuss her uncle too thoroughly and it took little effort on our part to picture him as an escapee from Russian tyranny.

I had stood in the Chapel of Remembrance once before. On that occasion, the hushed reverence with which visitors to the Parliament buildings viewed the stained glass windows above the bronze altar and the carvings in stone on the walls of the circular room was not broken by even a whisper. Yet, when the young girl broke the silence with her question, it did not sound irreverent.

It was with mingled pride and understanding that I listened and watched this member of the Red Chevron (veterans who enlisted in 1914) and Lieutenant Commander in Canada's Navy during World War II, explain to one of our newest Canadians, why it was unlikely the names of her parents would be listed in the second book. He was gentle and sympathetic, not at all impatient as one could expect a man of his stature might be under similar circumstances.

Though it was my intention to relate this week, the story of how these two beautiful Books of Remembrance were created, I think it is more important that I tell you of this incident. It seemed prophetic to me, that there was no sense of country or racial heritage in the mind of the young girl. The beauty of the chapel, the color and artistry of the books, the serenity of her surroundings seemed to appeal to her as a suitable place to have the memory of her parents perpetuated. The fact that the books memorialized a time in histofy when her country and ours were at war and that our aircraft had probably carried the bomb that had killed her parents, apparently had not embittered her attitude toward her adopted homeland.

I suppose it is impossible for us adults to maintain the simplicity of the child mind, unencumbered by hatred and greed, resentment and suspicion. But it seemed to me that I had been privileged to witness this exhibition of unselfconsciousness on the part of the girl, her interest in the tale the man Beddoe told and his very touching reply to her question. It proved a challeinge to my own thinking. I was not sorry I had come many hundreds of miles by rail to revisit the Chapel. Memory of this day would always remain a gem among my collection of experiences.

We have buildings located all over the District of Beauharnois. There is one near you. Let us show you the simplicity and economy of this type of construction for agriculture and industry.

Poppies Will Aid War Veterans In Memory Of The Fallen

Poppies will bloom in millions of coat lapels all over Canada on Nov. 7, Poppy Day, and on Remembrance Day, Nov. 11.

The poppies, together with the Cenotaphs and Crosses of Remembrance that will be the scenes of memorial ceremonies on Remembrance Day, are evidence that we have not forgotten the sacrifice made by more than 100,000 service men and women who did not return from Canada's wars.

While the monuments pay perpetual tribute to the war dead, the poppies we wear and the poppy wreaths we display do an equal honour to their memory.

These tokens of Remembrance show that we are keeping faith with the dead by helping in their name, the many who did return, and who are now in need of help.

They are the veterans who bear the honourable scars of war in the form of disabled limbs, premature old age, or other consequences of the long and bitter campaigns of modern warfare. Many of them need help such as the aid the Poppy Fund brings them.

It should be remembered that all veterans of World War I are now elderly. Only a few, those who enlisted at 18 or less, are now under 60.

Among these veterans are many aged men who fought in the desperate Battle of Ypres in April 1915, when the Canadian lines stood firm against heavy odds and saved the free world of that day from sudden and stunning defeat.

Many World War II veterans are also reaching the higher age brackets and need at times the kind of help the Poppy Fund offers.

When the emergency of sudden or prolonged unemployment, sickness or other disaster strikes, the Poppy Fund can help a war veteran with essentials, such as food, fuel and help with the rent.

The need for this kind of aid moved up sharply during the past year, with increasing unemployment and higher living costs.

Besides emergency relief, Poppy Fund helps veterans in other directions. There are the Vetcraft Shops in Montreal and other centres, where disabled and aged veterans make the Poppies and wreaths for the annual Poppy Day.

Then, by supporting the Canadian Legion's Service Department the Poppy Fund helps veterans and dependents with pension and other problems, such as obtaining medical examinations and hospitalization, War Veterans Allowance, Widows Allowance, and other rights and benefits under the Veteran's Charter. Most veterans are not fully aware of these rights and benefits. The Service Department interprets the statutes and regulations for them and presents claims on their behalf before the Government. During the past year 427 claims, worth in all about $45,000, were successfully adjusted by the Service Department at the Canadian Legion's Provincial Command headquarters in Montreal.

Emergency relief and other Poppy Fund services are freely given in the name of those who gave their lives in Canada's wars. These services can be given only if the public accords generous support to the Poppy Day appeal.

Canadian Natural Gas For The United States Via Pipe Line

The federal power commission at Washington has authorized the import of natural gas from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited into the north-central United States.

The Canadian company, which has been trying for more than four years to get Alberta gas into the U.S., now must secure the necessary export permit from Canada's new national energy board. It also must get authority from Alberta's conservation board to provide sufficient gas to meet all its domestic and U.S. commitments.

The U.S. commission agreed to allow the gas-import sponsoring company, Midwestern Gas Transmission Company of Houston, Tex., to take the Canadian gas at Emerson, Man., and transport it through four northern states in a proposed new $52,000,000 pipeline system.

The FPC also approved a companion project by Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line Company of Detroit to build a $24,000,000 pipeline to move some of the Canadian gas into its own markets.

Huge Quantity

Midwestern would import 204,000,000 cubic feet of Canadian natural gas daily, pumping it through a proposed 504-mile pipeline for ultimate consumption in North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Under the commission's order, Midwestern must file with that body "satisfactory rates and its firm proposals for financing as finally consummated, and certain changes in the proposed rates and tariffs". The order also provides for future commission review of most of Midwestern's rates.

The Michigan Wisconsin company will buy 158,000,000 cubic feet daily of the Canadian gas from Midwestern.

At Ottawa, Trade Minister Churchill said the Washington decision to allow import of Canadian natural gas into the north-central U.S. "will be welcome news to Canada, because it's been so long delayed".

"This clears the way now for consideration of Trans-Canada's application for export by the national energy board", he said.

Towards Summit

After months of talk, it was announced last week that a western summit meeting has been arranged. Prime Minister Macmillan, President Eisenhower, President de Gaulle of France and Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany will gather in Paris in mid-December.

The western meeting is expected to be held a few days after the foreign, defence and finance ministers of 15 NATO countries have their annual conference at Paris. The meeting of western leaders will try to work out an agreed attitude to take with Premier Khrushchev at a Big Four summit meeting some time next year.

Premier Khrushchev said at Moscow last Saturday that President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan agree with him that there should be a summit conference "the sooner the better".

Khrushchev made no direct reference to President de Gaulle's suggestion that the summit meet be held off till next spring, but Soviet leader predicted that his forthcoming visit to France will be useful for France, for Russia and for world peace.

Among Khrushchev's major points, he said disarmament is the most important problem of the present day, and while Russia wants complete disarmament it is willing to consider other proposals.

The Soviet leader also said that Russia supports Red China's determination to take Formosa "until the question is solved".

At another point, he said: "We regret the incidents on the Indian-Chinese frontier, especially where they involved casualties, and we hope they will not be repeated. We hope the difficulties will be solved by negotiations".

Canadian Proposal

Canada's proposal for a world-wide attack on the problem of atomic radiation is before the United Nations General Assembly, with immediate support from all parts of the world except the Soviet bloc.

External Affairs Minister Green, who announced the proposal in his first speech to the UN on Sept. 24, has stressed that he hoped the resolution could be kept out of the arena of the cold war since it dealt with a subject of anxiety to all mankind.

The resolution asks that a UN committee study samples of food, soil and air in consultation with various agencies including the UN's food and agriculture organization and the world meteorological body.

The Russian objection apparently revolves around the possibility of espionage in connection with the Canadian ideas of sampling and extending technical assistance to those countries not equipped with the necessary laboratory facilities for work of this kind.

Mexican Disaster

President Adolfo Lopez Mateos has directed application of Mexico's entire resources to sending relief to the storm-lashed west coast, scene of what has been called the worst disaster in Mexican history.

More than 1,000 persons have died — and the toll may reach 2,000 — in the states of Jalisco and Colima, and less severely-stricken Michoacan and Nayarit, as a result of the catastrophic storm.

Food, medicine and clothing was dispatched by ships, planes and helicopters to the devasted areas. Boats and military planes were continuing to pick up survivors and search the flooded areas for more victims. Most of the deaths were by drowning, but deadly scorpions are believed to have killed many of the victims.

Sunday Sports

A United Church minister writing a guest column in the Winnipeg Tribune said the real question behind the Sunday sports controversy is whether "business as usual" is wanted on Sundays.

Rev. Ralph Clark of Hamiota, Man., presented his arguments against commercialized Sunday sport in the last of the daily columns he had been writing for a week.

His stint as a sportswriter was his part of a bargain which grew from a controversy with Tribune Sports Editor Jack Matheson. Last week Matheson served as Mr. Clark's assistant in the Hamiota church, and defended Sunday sport from the pulpit.

HOWICK.—The October meeting of the Howick Home and School Association held Thursday evening, Oct. 29th., in the School Auditorium with Mr. H. Brady presiding. Mrs. J. Holmes reported the U.N.I.C.E.F. cans had been donated by the Green Giants Co. It was the general feeling of the group, that the meeting of the teachers in the classroom before the business meeting could be held more often. Mrs. Brodie MacFarlane reported an average of 156 meals a day, had been served in the cafeteria last term, as compared with an average of 66 meals in 1950. And that a new potato peeler had been purchased from surplus funds.

U.S.S.R. Envoy Presents Tree

Ottawa. — The planting of a Siberian crab apple tree at Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, was the occasion for expressions of goodwill towards Canada by the Soviet Ambassador, A. A. Aroutunian.

The envoy donated the tree, flown in from Moscow, as a replacement for the famous berried crab, malus baccata, which stood for approximately 60 years in front of the administration block now known as the Saunders Building.

In planting the four-foot high tree in approximately the same spot where its predecessor was blown down by a wind in 1955, Mr. Aroutunian remarked there "are a lot of common features between the USSR and Canada in geography, etc., and it not accidental therefore that the ties between Russian and Canadian agriculture began as far back as the middle of the last century.

"Many varieties of agricultural crops such as wheat, apples and other fruits being developed in Canada have the same origin as those in the USSR. A good example was the Russian apple tree at the Experimental Farm. Unfortunately the apple tree perished but nevertheless the ties between our countries, and in the field of agriculture, are still growing stronger. We believe that the development of good relations between our countries in agricultural and other fields would be to the mutual benefit of both our countries.

"It is a common rule that people when they want to mark a happy event or to express their good intentions usually plant for this purpose a tree which is a symbol of peace and friendship.

"Nowadays one can feel that the international tensions are lessening, the ice of the 'cold war' is thawing, the relations between all nations are improving. We believe that this will lead to better mutual understanding and friendly relations between our nations. We have a good sign of this in the recent announcement that the Soviet Academy of Sciences and Canada's National Research Council agreed on an exchange of lecturers and research workers in the academic year 1960-61.

"Let this small tree serves as a symbol of a new period in the development of scientific ties and good relations between our countries . . ."

The Ambassador was welcomed by Deputy Minister of Agriculture J. G. Taggart and was accompanied by Dr. C. H. Goulden, Assistant Deputy Minister (Research).

Dr. Goulden recalled that the first director of the Central Farm, Dr. William Saunders, obtained seed of the Siberian Crab Apple tree from Siberia. From this seed 3,000 seedlings were grown, one being planted at the site where the ceremony was taking place. The tree flourished and pollen from it was used in many crosses with commercial apples leading to such varieties as Columbia, Osman, Pioneer and Robin.

This first group of varieties were in turn, used in other crosses for the production of such varieties as Traill, Rosilda and Wapella. These are hardy crab apples that make up most of the trees grown in prairie gardens in Western Canada.

A plaque recording the event was placed after the tree planting ceremony.

Vacuum Cleaner As Polio Aid

Doctors at Ham Green Hospital, Pill, near Bristol, England, have successfully adapted a lightweight British vacuum cleaner as a breathing aid for poliomyelitis patients, according to information received by the the Health League of Canada.

In doing so, they have made it possible for patients hitherto confined to a small radius near their beds in the wards, to move freely in wheel chairs, to make excursions near the hospital, and to take journeys by train or other transport.

The doctors have adapted the cleaners to convey air from them to patients' mouths, a small plastic mouthpiece being held in the mouth. This is unobtrusive, and the patient is easily able to control the flow of air through this mouthpiece.

In its ordinary form, the apparatus is familiar to hundreds of thousands of housewives as a small hand cleaner, but the doctors saw it as a medical instrument; weighing only five pounds with a high delivery of air at a satisfactory pressure, it was found to be suitable as the basis of the portable breathing aid required.

The mouthpiece is held in the patient's teeth. The machine is switched on, and the lungs are inflated as required. Biting the mouthpiece stops the air supply and permits exhalation.

The simple breathing movements are easily mastered by the patient. Breathing by this method can go on for long periods, or the apparatus can be used for intermittent short periods as needed. The machine is battery-driven.

Talking is possible through the use of this machine, and the expansion of the lungs is extremely good. Wheel chairs have been adapted to carry the apparatus, or it may be transported by hand. Short and long journeys are undertaken which were never before visualized, and in addition, patient's morale is substantially improved.

A lot of fellers who complain about the boss being so dumb would be out of a job if the boss were any smarter.

BLOW-UP- HANGER

Blow-Up Hanger is ideal for drip-drying clothes because it does not stain wet fabrics and its rounded shape allows air to circulate within the garment. Made of light-weight "Fabrilite", it flattens completely for travelling and is easily re-inflated.

Drastic Changes In Cigarettes

Within the past two years drastic changes have been made in all the component parts of American cigarettes in a behind the scenes campaign by the industry to cope with widespread fears of a link between cancer and smoking. And the same trend is evident in Canada, reports the November issue of The Reader's Digest.

Two years ago, with many smokers swinging to filter-tips for protection, the Digest had a firm of consulting engineers and chemists test both Canadian and U.S. cigarettes. The tests indicated that filters actually did little better than plain-tips in eliminating tars and nicotine.

The current issue reports on new tests and research to see what has been happening since. It finds that every U.S. manufacturer has been competing in an industry-wide drive to produce better, and perhaps "safer", cigarettes. Their new cigarettes "are milder, better filtered, lower in tar and nicotine. And if the promise pays off, they may be the 'safer' (but not yet safe) cigarettes the public has been asking for."

The tests of Canadian cigarettes indicate that all along the line they now are lower in both tar and nicotine content than they were in 1957. And filter-tips have now opened a gap in effectiveness between themselves and the plain-tips.

For example, in 1957 none of the Canadian filter-tips tested had less than 20 milligrams of tar. In 1959 six qualified for the so-called low-tar category between 15 and 20.

FATHER ALBANEL

Many missionaries combined their task of Christianizing the Indians with that of discovering new horizons and thus broadening the territory of New France. Father Charles Albanel was one of these missionary-explorers.

He came to this country in 1648 and was in charge of the Mission of Tadoussac, a post he held until 1660. Then we see him, in succession, as head of the Missions at Capde-la-Madeleine, Chambly and Sillery.

It was the far north, however, which irresistibly attracted the missionary. In 1669, Father Albanel came back to Tadoussac. Because of his acquaintance with the Indians of the north, the authorities of the colony decided to entrust him with an expedition to Hudson Bay, where for some time English traders had challenged the Arctic waters to trade in furs.

It appears that Father Albanel was the first white man to reach these far northern waters by land. During his trip, a most hazardous one, he explored Mistassini Lake and Rupert River. At the same time he did not neglect his main task, that of bringing souls into the Christian faith.

After this first exploratory trip, Father Albanel returned to Hudson Bay to continue with his mission. However, difficulties with the Company made it necessary for him to leave the northern regions.

It was in the west that he continued to toil both as missionary and as careful observer of geography, of plant life and climate; in short, of everything that could be useful in the discovery of new lands.

A man of great energy, Father Albanel is among those who laid the foundations of present-day Quebec, whose achievements are beyond number.

Your City Want Industry? Here's How To Attract It

Too many communities forget that they have obligations to local industries.

Industry is essentially a customer of the community. As in any other the relationship won't work successfully very long unless it's a two-way, value-received arrangement.

Both industry and the community, W. H. Evans, president, Canadian Manufacturers' Association, told the Lake Ontario Development Association in Peterborough this week, have to learn to give as well as to receive.

Object of the meeting, sponsored by LODA: To create better relations and understanding between municipal authorities and industrial management.

Mr. Evans outlined these basic ingredients as essential considerations for any industry contemplating location in a new community:

• EXISTING local and connecting transportation facilities are tops in importance.

The industry must be assured of a smooth flow of materials into the plant and finished products from it to customers.

This means proximity both to main railways and good access to major highways.

• LOCAL POWER, water and fuel supplies are almost as important.

Management must make absolutely certain that these are sufficient to allow not only for immediate needs but all conceivable future expansion.

• OTHER ESSENTIAL municipal services which the employer must take into account:

Effective fire-fighting equipment and forces, adequate police protection and provision of satisfactory sewage and garbage disposal facilities.

• A VITAL FACTOR: Number and skill of the potential employees available in the immediate area.

• CLOSELY ALLIED: Availability of adequate housing educational, religious, cultural and recreational facilities.

• ANOTHER significant consideration:

Reputation of the community in dealing with industries previously established there and whether any failure of an industry has been due to the industry itself or the community.

At a time when building costs are soaring, sound existing plants which are unoccupied invite suspicion.

The question: Why haven't other employers been tempted into taking advantage of them, thereby cutting their location costs considerably?

A possible answer, said Evans, is that the local business climate is unfavorable enough to jeopardize chances for an industry's success.

By business climate is meant the attitude of local public servants in the fields of taxation, courts, law enforcement.

This factor, Evans warned, is getting more and more important because of the way in which some short-sighted communities have in recent years allowed their public servants to strangle the industrial goose that lays the golden eggs of local prosperity.

Some of the methods they use: Discriminatory taxation, unwise zoning regulations and building ordinances, municipal officers turning a blind eye to law breakers and brutal abuse of persons and property of law-abiding citizens.

The entire question of local business climate, Evans emphasized, is one that no industry dares treat lightly for a mistake in judgment can prove costly.

A bad reputation in this area can cancel out all the other advantages a community might have.

Cost of carrying on business in one place as compared to another is a major factor which any industry must consider.

Where a community has wage and other cost disadvantages, it must try and offset these in other ways.

some of the ways suggested by Evans.

Encouraging effective application of employee skill care and effort on the job.

Embracing and not resisting technological advances.

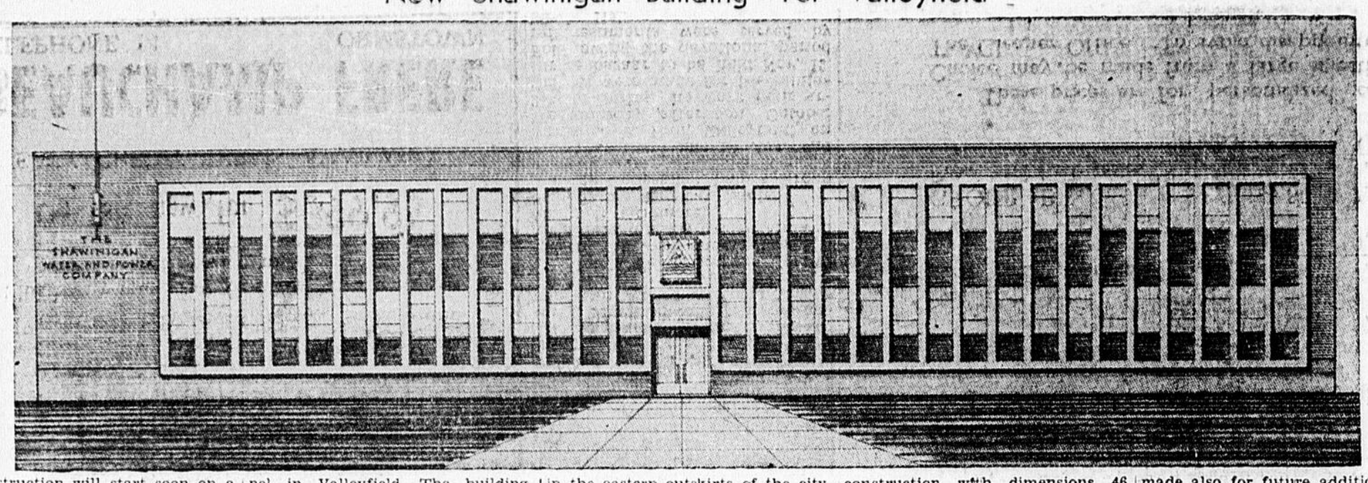
Co-operation in elimination of featherbedding and other restrictive and cost-raising practices.

Pursuing consciously and deliberately a policy designed to protect, where deserved, the community's bread-winning employers.

Standing of a community in the eyes of any employer depends to a very large extent on the "thought leaders", the people who have a tremendous influence for good or ill — educators, elected representatives, clergymen, union leaders, local retail merchants, professional people, the press.

Letting the grass grow under your feet won't postpone its growing over your head.

New Shawinigan Building For Valleyfield



Construction will start soon on a new office building for Shawinigan Water and Power Company personnel in Valleyfield. The building, shown in the sketch above, will be located on Msgr Langlois Boulevard in the eastern outskirts of the city. It will be of reinforced concrete construction with dimensions 46 feet by 150 feet. Provision has been made also for future addition of a stores area and garage.

Unsliced bread will slice more easily if stored in the refrigerator for a day.

Sandwich Fillings

Seasoned butters make delightful spreads or fillings for dainty, fancy sandwiches and canapes. Add any of the following to creamed butter and mix well.

Bacon with paprika and chili sauce; devilled ham with chives; cheese, nippy cheddar, blue or parmeson, with onion juice; chives, parsley or watercress with lemon juice and worcestershire sauce; chopped chives, parsley, mint and chervil with lemon juice; dried thyme, basil, tarragon, minced parsley and onion; lemon or orange juice with grated rind and dash of nutmeg.

One man to another, "I took a honey dew vacation. You know the kind where you stand around the house and your wife says 'Honey, do this' and 'Honey, do that.'"

Another member said "You're lucky! You had only two weeks' vacation. I had three."

Drive carefully — an accident could make your vacation permanent.

UNICEF COLLECTIONS AMOUNT TO APPROXIMATELY $125.00

Hallowe'en 1959 in Ormstown had a different outlook from previous years.

A UNICEF program sponsored by the Young Parents Club and organized by a committee with Dr. Andrew Kelen, chairman, assisted by Mrs. Lindsay Cullen, Mrs. Hollis Rowe and Mrs. Alan Hooker, was successfully carried out.

From the introduction of the plan to the final count of the collections, the committee received most gratifying co-operation from the press, the school personnel, parents and children.

On Saturday evening, between the hours of seven and nine and on Monday morning returns were brought in and the Purity Ice Cream Company provided a treat for each child.

Among the top collectors were: Keith Bryson, Donnie Sutton and Jackie Campbell.

A Jitterbug Contest with music by Mrs. Murray McEwen, Messrs. Eric Wyler and Bud Pearce and contestants Connie White, Shirley Ovans, Cookie Barrington, J. Remillard, C. Roy and F. Jones has been arranged and should prove an interesting innovation to the program.

Sandwich Hints

For fancy sandwiches, use day-old bread. It's easier to spread and hold its shape. Have butter at spreading consistency. If melted, it will soak into the bread instead of coating the slices.

Lettuce should be added just before serving to remain crisp.

Prepare sandwiches in advance and keep refrigerated until used Open sandwiches should be placed in a pan and covered with waxed paper and a damp towel.

For pleasant eating, cut ingredients finely and always season with care.

Lunch-box sandwiches should be individually wrapped to prevent mingling of flavors. Use a variety of breads and rolls to avoid monotony.
