Shakespeare comes alive with help from the Beatles

By Sarah Howard

Shakespeare and The Beatles make for a seemingly unusual combination in Bishop's University professor and playwright George Rideout's most recent project: A Beatles Midsummer Night's Dream.

The pairing is not so unusual though, argues Rideout. Shakespeare and The Beatles were particularly productive over a five-year period, he said — 1595 to 1600 and 1964 to 1969, respectively. While The Beatles started off by writing songs like 'I Wanna Hold Your Hand,' they underwent a transformation throughout this period, becoming increasingly more musically and lyrically complex. Likewise, A Midsummer Night's Dream was also one of his earlier works. His writing progressed and he later wrote Hamlet, thought to be the crown jewel in his collection of masterpieces.

"It is this marriage of brilliant minds that makes (the play) so interesting," Rideout said. "And it is what makes it such a pleasure for me."

Having already decided that his adaptation of Shakespeare's classic play would be set in the 1960s, The Beatles' music seemed the perfect choice to accompany the original text.

In order to transform the play into a musical, Rideout cut roughly half the text and then inserted Beatles songs into the appropriate moments in its place.

"In many cases," he said. "The songs are saying exactly the same thing as the text, so we could cut out text and replace it with music."

When the character Helena learns that Demetrius, the man she loves, has

According to director George Rideout, the works of William Shakespeare and The Beatles go hand in hand sometimes.

fallen for her friend Hermia, Rideout has her sing 'Yesterday.'

"Yesterday's lyrics ultimately say much of the same thing as Helena's soliloquy," he explained.

Rideout believes A Midsummer

Night's Dream to be the most accessible of Shakespeare's plays, and the choice of music will only make it more so.

"We're not naïve," he commented. "The Beatles are going to be the draw."

Producing a musical is extremely hard work and the genre has numerous inherent challenges specific to it.

"The difficulty is finding singers who can also act and actors who can also sing," Rideout noted.

Spring calls for delicate ricotta and spinach dumplings

Spring brings with it a certain lightness of being, a yearning to shed those layered sweaters, to de-clutter our homes, don our flip-flops and head outdoors to eat fresh salads and grilled meats.

These gnudi, which are a sort of gnocchi originally from Florence that look like dumplings, are perfect for the season. Mild-flavoured and feather-weight, they can be paired with chicken breast or fish for dinner, or even served on its own, as the Italians would do. Needless to say, the fresher and better the ricotta, the more delicate the end result.

RICOTTA AND SPINACH GNUDI WITH SAGE BUTTER

Ingredients: (for four people)

1/3 cup frozen chopped spinach, thawed
350 g. fresh ricotta cheese
1 egg
1/2 cup grated parmesan (the real stuff)

ALEX'S PANTRY

1/3 cup all-purpose flour
Salt, white pepper
1 pinch grated nutmeg
4 tbsp. butter
8 fresh sage leaves or 1 tsp. dried sage

Directions: In a small pot, gently melt down the butter, then add the sage. If using fresh sage, rinse it and chop it up coarsely. Let the sage infuse the butter with flavour, at the lowest possible heat setting, for at least 25 minutes. Add salt and white pepper to taste.

Bring water to a boil in a large pot with a sprinkle of salt. In a bowl, combine the ricotta, the spinach, the egg, half the parmesan and half the flour. Add salt to taste and a small pinch of nutmeg. Using your hands, form eight dumplings. Place the remaining flour in a soup plate. Roll the dumplings on the flour so they are coated in it, patting off the excess.

Gently drop the gnocchi in the boiling water. When they rise to the top, after about three to five minutes, scoop them out and set them on a serving bowl. Pour the aromatic butter sauce on top. Serve with the remaining half of the grated Parmesan on the side.

Shiso adds zest to tempura

The herb: Shiso; also known as perilla, rau tia, oba, or beefsteak plant if it's the red-leaf variety.

The scoop: Although it's an annual, this herb is so loved that it's replanted every growing season throughout Asia, especially in Japan, Korea, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

When crushed or bruised, the leaves emit a pungent, mint-like aroma, but the flavour is even more intense. Some shiso may remind you of an aromatic basil.

In Japan, shiso is used to wrap certain sushi, or dipped in batter and deep-fried as part of a tempura. In Vietnam, it's often used as part of the small plate of fresh herbs served with grilled meat.

VEGETABLE TEMPURA WITH SHISO LEAVES

Serves four

Oil for deep frying
1 medium carrot, cut into diagonal slices
8 green onions, cut into 3-inch (7.6-cm) lengths

1 flat red onion, cut into 8 wedges
8 small white mushrooms
1 red sweet pepper, sliced into eighths
1 medium zucchini, cut into diagonal slices

1 package shiso leaves

For the batter:

1 cup (250 mL) all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons (30 mL) cornstarch
1/2 teaspoon (2 mL) salt
1 egg, separated
1 cup (250 mL) soda water or beer

Directions: With a light wire whisk, stir flour, cornstarch, salt, egg yolk and soda or beer together, beating lightly to combine. (Leave a few small lumps). Beat egg white until stiff, and fold into batter. Use at once.

Dip vegetables in batter, a few at a time, and slip into canola oil heated to 400 F (200 C). Watch carefully, and turn once. Remove to papertowel-lined basket as soon as golden-brown (about two to three minutes). Place in turned-off oven until remaining vegetables have been dipped and fried. Serve with a selection of tempura dipping sauces.

Nkosi's story has inspired choir to do more

COURTESY ALLYNA HARRIS

This year, the funds raised by the women's choir Choromundo will be donated to Nkosi's Haven, a shelter for women and children with HIV and AIDS in South Africa.

By Thomas Ledwell
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Music of the world is coming to the Townships compliments of the Choromundo women's choir, which will be performing a medley of music from around the world in North Hatley and Knowlton.

For the past seven years, the Townships-based choir has staged concerts to benefit non-government organizations (NGOs) working in developing countries around the world.

"We look for a community-based project that is not necessarily supported by any big NGOs or government organizations, like the Red Cross," said choir director Allyna Harris, who founded Choromundo in 1999.

"The music we do is traditional, community-based music that is passed on from generation to generation. It's sung at parties, festivals, and different kinds of gatherings. We like to tie in the music with the causes that we support. Every year the money has gone to something where we feel we can have an impact."

Over the years, money raised through Choromundo's concerts has helped organizations in several countries on several different continents. The choir's first benefit concert — Seeds of Survival — raised money for struggling communities in East Timor.

Since then, money from the concerts has been sent to a rural women's group in Mozambique after floodwaters devastated the country six years ago. The choir has also supported Families for Children, which runs orphanages for children in India and Pakistan.

This year, the funds raised will be donated to Nkosi's Haven, a shelter for women and children with HIV and AIDS in South Africa.

"In the fall, I picked up a little book at the Haskell Library called We Are All the Same," said Harris, referring to the book by journalist Jim Wooten about the life of Nkosi Johnson.

"I found the story really inspiring. This little boy was born HIV positive and for most of his conscious life — which only lasted until he was 12 years old — he worked to make life better for people with AIDS. One of his dreams was to create a home for mothers and children with HIV and AIDS."

Nkosi's Haven is the realization of that dream. When mothers succumb to AIDS, their children are provided with shelter, food, medicine, and education.

Harris was so inspired by the story she proposed Nkosi's Haven be the beneficiary of this year's concert series. The choir members agreed.

"There's a bigger focus on African music than usual," said Harris. "We love singing South African music anyway, and every year we do two or three songs from South Africa. This year I think we'll do six, as well as another song from Ghana."

Harris added there is a new twist for this year's concerts. Two musicians — Gaëtan Gagnon and Dominique Porret — will be joining Choromundo on the African drums.

The choir's repertoire will also

Henderson wins U.S. independent publishers award

By Stephen McDougall
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD

Quebec anglophones may be invisible in this province and even in the rest of Canada and North America, but only because they have not made enough effort to be heard, says Montreal author, teacher and politician Keith Henderson.

"Many anglophones are in denial about their situation," he said in a recent interview. "They are being ignored by the provincial and federal governments and their civil rights are constantly put aside. But most Quebec anglophones do not want to talk about their situation because it has become too large a problem for them to grasp and do anything about."

But that same fate has not come to Henderson, who recently won the United States' Independent Publishers Award this year for the best fiction from Eastern Canada.

The award was given for his latest book, The Pagan Nuptials of Julia, a collection of nine short stories about life as an anglophone in this province.

In the book, the characters are for the most part anglo Quebecers who have refused to leave the province of their birth and the price they pay each day for that decision.

Not only do they have to deal with the constant threat of Quebec nationalists and their promise of yet another separation referendum, but also with the divisiveness of their own community, some of whom accept their second-class linguistic status in the eyes of the Quebec government and others who reject it, but have no means of changing their situation given the lack of support they get from their community.

In one story, After the referendum, a university professor hosts a dinner party at a historic inn owned by a French Quebecer. The guests are anglophones from other provinces who have sworn their allegiance to the nationalist political chic, praising the memory of the late René Lévesque and defending the discriminatory Bill 101 language law as necessary for the survival of Quebec society. But when they try to express that allegiance with English songs in the parlor of the inn, the owner tells them to leave despite their having paid for the use of the inn in advance.

"It was too close to the referendum," said one of the guests explaining the owner's anger. They didn't get the YES vote."

But the professor rejects that argument, believing instead that it was the boorishness of the guests who had the audacity of celebrating a private party at a francophone inn in the language of English.

Henderson believes anglophones have a right and a duty to express themselves in their language in Quebec and to let the rest of North America know they exist and need help to continue that existence.

But he also knows such a notion is not politically popular given that Quebec repeatedly makes demands for special powers and status or else it will threaten to leave and make up its own country.

"Every little voice counts in this situation," argues Henderson. "If we say nothing and do nothing, then we are forgotten and taken for granted when decisions are made by Quebec and Ottawa and even Washington."

An English professor for the past 30 years at Vanier College in Montreal, Henderson became known in the Quebec literary and journalistic groupings as a "destabilizer" because he advocated federalist ideas such as no special status for Quebec and the elimination of Bill 101, which he argues makes English a bad word in the province.

He was also leader of the recently disbanded Equality Party, which argued for more anglophone rights in the province and spelled out the potential dangers of a separate Quebec.

Henderson says he has no intention of giving up the fight for a federalist Quebec where both languages have equal status and the idea of independence becomes passé. And he said his writings (this is his fourth book) will continue to express that dream along with the divided feelings and frustrations that many anglophones in Quebec still endure.

"I may be ignored in Quebec, but I am read by Americans and I have given lectures at American embassies about the separatist threat," he added. "Without American recognition, Quebec can never get its independence and it knows it."

Other books by Henderson include two novels, The Beekeeper and The Restoration, and a collection of political essays entitled Staying Canadian.

O'Riordain's show of strength

By Alanna Fahey
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Seann O'Riordain, an artist dwelling and working in Sutton will be having a solo exhibition at Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu's ART(O), La Coop Creative, a gallery owned by Gilles Gemme.

It is an experience O'Riordain has, like his art, carefully and without surrender to the mediocre, crafted with excellence. He is deliberately creating thoughtful exhibitions and sharing with us his journey into strength and the world where art cuts seamlessly to the power of the human condition.

His work is fresh and without pretense, making the leap from spirituality to consciousness.

The Record recently talked with him about his last exhibition, his new exhibition and his ever evolving body of work.

The Record: The last place you showed was at Galerie Agur in Sutton, in 2005, were you pleased with the experience?

O'Riordain: "My experience with Agur was wonderful. I was very pleased with their efforts."

The Record: Showing with other artists always creates an interesting dynamic. Was there an opportunity for you to discuss the process of creation with the other artists who exhibited with you during that show?

O'Riordain: "Yes, there was an opportunity to discuss the creative process with the other artists. Inspiration is a wide and varied thing."

The Record: Who were the other artists in that show?

O'Riordain: "Patricia Barrowman, sculptor/painter and Peter Cernat, painter."

The Record: Have you kept in touch with them?

O'Riordain: "I have unfortunately not kept in touch, I would love to have, however, keeping in touch regardless of how much I would like to, is not one of my better suits."

The Record: Since that show where have you been?

O'Riordain: "I have been in self imposed exile, working and growing. My studio has been my country. My island."

The Record: What have you been thinking about?

O'Riordain: "I have been thinking about paths, roads. We all have our own to find and forge."

The Record: While you are painting, what have you been thinking?

O'Riordain: "The tin shed, in other words, the human spirit. I have been looking for clarity, mostly in everything... simplicity.... a vast empty room...

a desert, an endless desert of comprehension, no obstructions, where anything false is consumed by the sand. Just simplicity, it is of course right under my nose.

The Record: Is your daughter becoming more and more of an inspiration to you and your art?

O'Riordain: "My daughter is the one who reminds me that it is all right under my nose."

The Record: Is she watching her daddy paint?

O'Riordain: "She sometimes paints with me when we are outside. Lots of questions, she questions everything. I always tell her what I am doing and then she tells me what she is doing."

The Record: Are you teaching her some of the vast knowledge you have about painters and technique?

O'Riordain: "She is the one with the vast knowledge."

The Record: Do world events have any influence on your art?

O'Riordain: "Any event can influence my work, simplicity, I think, in part is gained by remaining open."

The Record: Does everyday seem like a new window of creation for you?

O'Riordain: "Everyday is a window — a doorway, that I intend to go through, always."

The Record: Your brother was an important part of your life, have you been able to touch your grief over his death with your art?

O'Riordain: "The passing of my brother was a very dark event for me, however, like all things it must change, transform into something new, that is the way of all things, so it seems. Now I celebrate my time with him, go forward, my work has been instrumental in this."

The Record: What are your intentions with your art?

O'Riordain: "I intend to make art I believe in."

The Record: What is your wish for yourself, your art and your family?

O'Riordain: "To go forward and grow towards the light."

O'Riordain has found something new to inspire him.

"I have recently been inspired or influenced by the idea and voracity involved with the idea of graffiti, writing on the wall, symbols and so on," he explained. "The gut feelings and impulses involved in leaving your thoughts on a piece of public wall

— an extension of my Wailing Wall ideas. "There is a fearlessness involved that attracts me, a bold and somewhat crude spontaneity, a show of strength... the inner landscapes of the human condition."

Our Cameras In Lennoxville

LENNOXVILLE-ASCOT HISTORICAL & MUSEUM SOCIETY

The Lennoxville-Ascot Historical & Museum Society presents Our Cameras, the summer exhibition, on the second floor of the Uplands Cultural and Heritage Centre in Lennoxville. Dating from the 1890s to the 1970s, most of "our" cameras are of the hand-held variety. These were used by "us", amateur photographers, for snapshots of family members, holidays, celebrations, and local neighbourhoods. These cameras were personal possessions, "ours". The cameras from the LAHMS Collection provide a glimpse into the history of photography - from a camera using glass plates to those using various film sizes, through the advent of cartridges, colour, flashes, slides, and the Polaroid. As might be expected, Kodak cameras are well represented. Mention old cameras and many people think automatically, "Brownie". Why were they called "Brownies"? Come find out and also discover the Brownie-Eastern Townships connection. We also had our own well-known local photographers, some of whose works are featured. Everyone is invited to the Opening on Sunday, June 4, 2 to 4 p.m., at Uplands (second floor), 9 Speid St., Lennoxville. The exhibition will continue through the summer. Winemaker of the year at Manoir Hovey on June 6

Rarely does a winery open for business and, a mere three years later, manage to be one of the most respected and talked about in the region. Peninsula Ridge managed just that: It was established in the fall of 2000 on 80 acres of prime Niagara, Ont., land, and — amazingly enough — it is already well-known for the high quality of its wines.

The merit belongs in great part to French winemaker Jean-Pierre Colas, whose claim to fame came in 1996, when his chablis Les Clos Grand Cru was heralded wine of the year by Wine Spectator magazine. Colas will bring his talents to North Hatley's Manoir Hovey on June 6 for a special evening of wine tasting.

The Manoir's chef Roland Ménard and sommelier Steven Monfette have carefully chosen the dishes that will be paired with the wines, including a surprise dessert that will highlight the delicious Ratafia fortified wine, described by Colas as "dangerously smooth and deceptively powerful". Only the best wines from this Ontario producer will be poured, including its flagship red, the Arcanum. The festive evening will begin at 6:30 p.m. with an aperitif and canapés in the historic Tap Room, followed by a six-course dinner, mignardises and coffee.

Last month Colas was named Ontario's Winemaker of the Year based on his consistent winemaking ability.

Colas will conduct the tasting in French and English. Only 30 places are available, so early reservations (1-800-661-2421) are strongly advised.

So he opened auditions up to all students who wished to be involved in the production. Those who made the cut then found themselves thrown into a rather gruelling rehearsal schedule. "It's challenging, and I like it like that," said cast member Stephanie Hig-

Lilly Dion, a McGill University student who is studying at Bishop's this spring, added: "Music brings a whole different dimension to a play. Music and choreography allow you to explore your character in a completely different way — to see a different side of your character."

include songs from Croatia, Haiti, Jamaica, Georgia, and Taiwan.

"We sing songs from about 30 different countries now. Eventually, maybe we'll have the whole globe covered."

Choromundo performs all of the songs in their original languages. Harris said she attends an international singing camp each year where she learns music from around the world.

"I've learned a lot of the style and pronunciation directly from native speakers and ethnomusicologists who have studied the music."

Harris said some songs in the repertoire were not learned through hands-on training, but noted with a laugh, "If I haven't learned the song from a teacher, I've learned it from listening to a recording a hundred times."

Members of Choromundo have a strong peace-building character and a true desire to use their music to help others who are less fortunate, said Harris. She added $2,000 can make a big difference to small groups working in developing countries.

"If everybody did a little something the world would be a better place. I really believe it, and I think everyone in the group really believes it too. When we can sing for something greater than ourselves, I think it makes our performance more profound."

Favourite hiding spots

By Siri Agrell

Whether it is in the garage, the study or even just sitting in a La-Z-Boy recliner playing video games, men feel the need to get away from women occasionally, according to a new book chronicling the gender's favourite hiding spots.

Where Men Hide, written by James Twitchell, an English professor at the University of Florida, chronicles the evolution of the male-only space from opium dens and speakeasies to hunting lodges and strip clubs.

Men are not trying to escape out of anger or any negative feelings toward women, Twitchell said, but simply because they crave a place to be alone or to share the company of other men.

Twitchell had some strange inspiration for the book. He became interested in male space after the capture of Saddam Hussein in 2004, when the former Iraqi dictator was found in a tiny "spider hole" burrowed in the ground.

"All over the world, people wanted to know about his hidey-hole," Twitchell said. "I became really intrigued about the interest in that. Men are really interested in where you go when there are no women. What's it like?"

And while Twitchell admits it was not women from whom Saddam was hiding, he said the famous dugout shares much in common with more popular male-only haunts.

"They're dreary, they're dank and they tend to be underground," he said. "If you look at opium dens or prohibition speakeasies — they're always downstairs. The caveman motif is not entirely inappropriate."

As he began his research on the book, writing chapters about everything from the barbershop to new "mega churches" that advertise male-only activity groups, Twitchell stumbled upon a series of photographs published in Esquire magazine.

They were by a New Jersey-based photographer named Ken Ross, who had been documenting what he called "man space."

The two teamed up, and Ross' photographs now illustrate the book.

The book goes back in time to look at old male-only clubs and lodges, hunting camps and cigar bars, and travels to current-day equivalents.

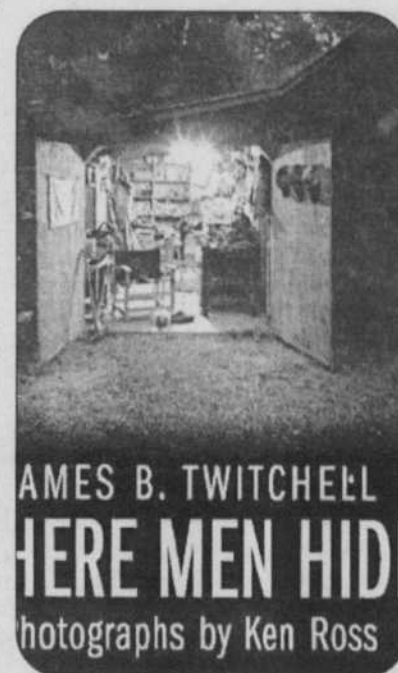

Twitchell found that in the mid-20th century, the average man would spend approximately four hours a week in his lodge and six per cent of his disposable income on the outfits he wore there.

Those days are over, and Twitchell said the era of clearly defined male-space is a thing of the past. But this is not, he said, because women have infringed on their space, but simply because of the advent of technology.

He does believe there is a resurgence of interest in male clubs and activities in the Western world, just as many women are exploring the appeal of more traditional female gender roles.

What it mostly comes down to for men, he said, is finding a place where you can smoke or fart, and be with the guys and "tell the same jokes over and over again," Twitchell said. "It's really kind of sweet."

Violence has never been a stranger to TO

By Mike Gillespie

Violence has never been a stranger to Toronto. Even on that cold, 19th-century winter's day, the city was living up to its reputation. A minister, no less, was on his back on the floor of his Jarvis Street church, his head bloodied and a letter opener buried to the hilt in his neck.

The clatter of hoofs on cobblestone and the sound of an emergency bell signalled an ambulance's arrival. But for naught. The Rev. Charles Howard, minister of Chalmers Presbyterian Church was beyond redemption. Not only had he lost his life, but his watch and boots, too.

As "two-faced as January" is how Maureen Jennings describes some of the assorted street people-cum-suspects who parade through the pages of her latest Victorian mystery. And there's no getting away from it: even then, it was never Toronto the Good.

Vices of My Blood (McClelland & Stewart, $22.99) is the sixth in Jennings' series starring curmudgeonly detective William Murdoch. Sad to say, as Jennings will tell you, most of this series is based on fact, cases extracted like skeletons from Toronto's closet — the public library.

It's the hundreds of hours of research that allow the author, herself a Torontonian, to paint the city in its true colours of the day: bleak, grey, unforgiving.

Just about the personality of Murdoch, who pedals to crime scenes on his "wheel" — pulling sleeves from beneath department-issued coat to cover frozen fingers and assiduously picking his way along horse-manured streets. There's not a whole lot for the detective to be cheerful about. The love of his life is dead, his latest flame is overseas, and he shares his home with a bunch of misfits, including a young woman who seems to turn on and off like a tap.

But, still, few criminals can better the warm-hearted detective from Toronto's No. 4 police station at Parliament and Wilton. Though the minister's death, evidence suggests, seems a cut-and-dried affair — a grisly case of robbery, with vagrant written all over it.

Yet there's no denying, Murdoch surmises, the pastor's pregnant wife appears oddly defensive, the woman who found his body, a bit too upset, and the surly grocer across the street from the church, too sour for his own good.

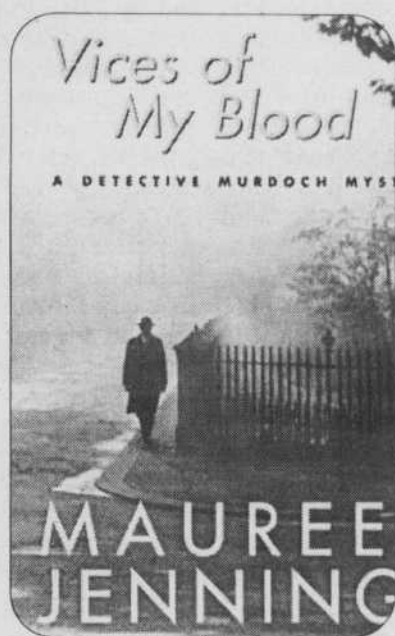

There's also a group of "queer plungers" who fake injury for money, and more than a handful of poor — and no doubt angry — families refused welfare assistance by the minister. But was their anger enough to kill a man of the cloth?

Murdoch pulls that shortlist of rejects and begins back-checking their cases. Even then, by today's standards, Toronto had a bulging welfare role, one that pulled a then-staggering $13,000 a year from the public purse to feed an estimated 11,000 destitute.

Ministers, like the unfortunate Rev. Howard, were often the arbiters of "real" poverty. It was on their say-so the poor received bread and coal and a daily bowl of soup. It was their job to weed out the malingerers or "women of intemperate and immoral habits" and save the city some cash — $1.18 a head per year.

As was his way, Murdoch takes it upon himself to dole out cash from his own pocket to some of the starving families he meets along the way.

T-BONE BURNETT

Twenty Twenty: The Essential
T-Bone Burnett

Columbia/DMZ/Legacy

For the better part of 40 years, T-Bone Burnett has had his hand in producing some of the finest acts around. He was behind the controls for everyone from Roy Orbison to the Wallflowers, and from Elvis Costello to Gillian Welch. He has even worked magic, putting bluegrass back into the mainstream producing the soundtrack for the film O Brother Where Art Thou? As dynamic as his past appears, Burnett's long career as a musician has won him the favour of critics and a cult fan following, but no smashing commercial successes. This two-disc retrospective of Burnett's brand of lyrically driven music is more than just a starter kit. It's a guided tour of Burnett's 40 years of musical creation. While it might be too much for those unfamiliar with Burnett's work, it is a diverse array of sound from a man who has long since proven he knows his music.

THE MINIATURES

Dead Flowers
MapleMusic

The guitar line that ushers in the opening track — 'Any Day Now' — sounds as though it may have come straight from a Franz Ferdinand album. But that's far from an insult for this Kitchener, Ont., based foursome. Miniatures frontman Ian Smith has a minor love affair with Britpop and all other British things, and it comes through in the music. The best parts, that is. This is The Miniatures' third full-length effort. The best songs here have a twinge of dance stirred in with the rock, just enough to give the songs a different drive. This album puts the band on track to receive the Canadian-band-that-wants-to-be-British moniker, but there are some excellent dance rock songs on this album. Besides, Britpop is sooooo hot right now.

IRMA THOMAS

After the Rain
Rouder

When it comes to paying dues, Irma Thomas has been there, done that. A teen bride who had three kids by the age of 17, she found her outlet as a soul singer, recording a number of top 40 hits in the 1960s. But the music business didn't treat her well, and she vanished from the public eye for a while, opting to sell auto parts while still in her 30s. Now, at age 65, she has a new CD, and the years have not diminished her talent. The New Orleans singer calls the new CD After the Rain, recorded after hurricane Katrina had wiped out most of her life in the Big Easy. It's difficult to pick a favourite track out of 13 very good ones, but the closing 'Shelter in the Rain' gets my vote, as Thomas sings for all those people struggling to get through a tough period. And she knows a thing or two on that score.

MOTHER OF PEARL
You Gotta Love Life
Festival

You Gotta Love Life, the second recording from Vancouver all-female jazz quartet Mother of Pearl, marks the arrival of reeds player Karen Graves as a vocalist. Already a talent on saxophones and flute, Graves takes the lead vocal for most of the 11 tracks, and does a good job on all of them. She swings on her own title track, one of seven original compositions from band members, and does some scat singing on 'Tea for Two', rearranged in a tricky 7/4 time signature (and retitled 'Tea for Seven'). Her most ambitious vocal comes on 'Woul'da Coulda Shouda', written by bassist Wendy Solloway and pianist Brenda Baird, where she does a decent Annie Ross imitation as she rapid fires the trampolining vocal lines.

JAMES HILL

A Flying Leap
Borealis Records

I think we've all said it at one time or another: "There just isn't enough ukulele music around." Well, stop whining and give James Hill a listen. The 25-year-old Langley, B.C., native can sure pick it, and we're not talking proboscis here. Playing a variety of ukes and a variety of styles, Hill rips through an energetic (but short, at 35 minutes) set. 'Uke Talk' opens things, all fast strumming and sublime voicings, with a few bent blues notes thrown in. A couple of the faster tunes approximate rags, things Scott Joplin might play if he played the ukulele. The most ambitious work is Hill's 'One Small Suite for Ukulele', a composition in three parts played with cellist Anne Davison (Hill adds violin himself), which has a dash of Bach.

UGETSU

Live at the Cellar
Cellar Live

Some of Vancouver's finest jazz players come together for a live set at the famous West Side jazz club. The sextet Ugetsu performs five originals and three songs by others, allowing each musician to stretch and make a statement. Wayne Shorter's 'Backstage Sally' swings hard and has terrific solos from saxophonist Jon Bentley, trumpeter

Brad Turner and bassist Andre Lachance. Turner highlights his own song 'King for a Day', along with trombonist Rod Murray, as pianist Ross Taggart rolls out block chords. Later, on Taggart's bebop number 'Maybe Yes, Maybe No', the pianist burns on a long piano solo that restates musical themes and comes up with fresh ideas. If you have trouble finding this disc, it can be ordered through www.cellarlive.com.

THE RACONTEURS
Broken Boy Soldiers
V2

Noted rockstar/designer Jack White offers a lesson in building the perfect rock track: Announce the drums, slip in the moody bass, drop a stiff riff against the beat, step it up rhythmically then bring the chorus crashing down like a hard-candy glacier. 'Steady, As She Goes' is the supervulcanized single needed in early 2006.

And the project? Not quite a supergroup, it finds Jack White in full rock-warlock yowl, with power-popster Brendan Benson offering the yin component. Tight, weighty garage rawk (34 minutes) with the Revolver psyche-pop accents that denote a major project, as opposed to quickie kids banging out scrappy riffs. Does Jack sound better in a full band? Watch this sell six million and decide.

DAVID CLAYTON-THOMAS

In Concert: A Musical Biography
Justin Time/Fusion III

Recorded last October in Toronto, this live album finds David Clayton-Thomas fronting an 11-piece band and looking back at his career as a solo artist and, particularly, as the longtime lead singer of Blood, Sweat & Tears. The veteran blues and jazz singer's band, including Doug Riley on keyboards, bassist George Koller and a six-man horn section led by Bruce Cassidy, is a tight unit and their arrangements of BS&T hits like

'Spinning Wheel', '(You've Made Me) So Very Happy' and 'Lucretia MacEvil' are every bit as good, if not better, than the originals. Clayton-Thomas' interpretive skills have deepened over the years and he also offers very compelling versions of 'Don't Explain' and 'God Bless the Child.'

DVD of the week

By Sarah Howard
DVD REVIEW

Felicity Huffman's Best Actress Oscar nomination for Transamerica (2005) was well deserved. Huffman, of television's Desperate Housewives, plays Bree Osbourne, a male-to-female transsexual who, on the eve of her operation, learns that a past, rather clumsy sexual encounter resulted in a son.

Now 17, Toby (Kevin Zegers) is incarcerated in New York when Bree finally pays him a visit. Posing as a Christian missionary, she invites Toby to drive home to Los Angeles with her, secretly planning to reunite him with his stepfather along the way.

Transamerica, written and directed by Duncan Tucker, is surprisingly less about sex than one might imagine. Laced with a quiet, wry humour, it is a poignant film about the nature of families and acceptance.

Huffman creates one of the most memorable and empathetic characters in recent years, and the film is worth seeing if for no other reason than to witness her complete transformation.

Vaughn accepts media scrutiny, talks about Break-Up

By Jamie Portman

Vince Vaughn isn't used to being in the spotlight when it comes to his romantic life. He's not accustomed to having everybody from the most inquisitive tabloid journalist to TV icon David Letterman speculating about the true nature of his relationship with Break-Up costar Jennifer Aniston.

But ask him how he's dealing with the intensified scrutiny, and he tries to shrug this whole media frenzy off.

"You don't take it personally," he says breezily. "You know that they're doing their job."

He admits he and his friends were really "vulnerable and nerdy" when they started acting and says the idea of fame was far from their minds.

"I was happy to get a line on a television show or do a television commercial. I always felt that an actor's job was to work. I was coming from such a removed background and was excited to have a chance to act. I never thought or had a game plan of celebrity or being famous. That was never on our minds."

He suggests it was easier when there was only one major Hollywood celebrity show — Entertainment Tonight.

"There wasn't all this kind of attention on being famous. I feel now you have so much more of a focus on celebrity or being famous and unfortunately less focus on being a good actor or making good movies."

He wants The Break-Up — which is based on his idea for a comedy detailing the anatomy of a disintegrating relationship — to be successful because it is perceived as a good movie, not because it stars two people who are the targets of ongoing media speculation.

For him, being accepted as a good actor is what really counts.

"All that other stuff is just ridiculous on some kind of level to me. It's not that it makes me mad or that I can't stand it or anything. It comes with the territory and you just sort of laugh at it and you don't make it your focus. It's not what you concentrate on."

When Vaughn and Aniston did a weekend of publicity for the film recently in Los Angeles, they met the media separately. Neither actor was talking about the alleged romance but both made it clear they loved working together.

Vaughn says that when he and his fellow writers were working on the screenplay, Aniston was the only person he had in mind for the role of Brooke Meyers, the young woman who discovers that the guy she's living with can be an unfeeling slob.

"She's so good with comedy and she's also a very good actor," Vaughn says. She also has an inherent quality where she's very likable. So there's a warmth to Jennifer — these characters are very flawed, so it's important to have that."

Vaughn admits that he's always "gotten along pretty well with women. I love women. I really enjoy the friendship part of a relationship as well."

In fact, he says friendship is the most important part of a relationship — along with a sense of humour.

"I like someone who can make me laugh because I like to laugh at stuff — especially myself. I think you have to roll with life. Life is always peaks and valleys. There are going to be good times and bad times, and when all the good things are there, the biggest thing for me is having someone that makes you laugh and that you have a friendship and trust with."

Sir Ian McKellen has left no doubt that he agrees with the Mutant revolt that his Magneto character leads in the new X-Men hit, The Last Stand. In this latest instalment of the X-Men saga, Magneto is the person most strongly opposed to a new "cure" which would deprive Mutants of their unique qualities and allow them to become part of the population mainstream.

As a gay actor, McKellen finds such an idea equally alarming in real life.

"It's abhorrent to me, as it would be if a person said I needed curing of my sexuality, or if someone said that black people could take a pill which would 'cure' them of being black."

Viggo Mortensen, who worked with David Cronenberg in last year's critically acclaimed The History Of Violence, will reteam with the Canadian filmmaker for a new London-based thriller, Eastern Promises. Naomi Watts will costar as the hospital midwife who is dragged into an underworld nightmare when she tries to discover the identity of a dead patient. The film is being coproduced by the BBC and Focus Features.

Disney has tentatively inked in a summer 2008 release for Prince Caspian, the second instalment of its Narnia chronicle. At one point a Christmas, 2006 release date was envisaged, but due to technical challenges, this was shifted to December, 2007, and now has been delayed again.

Jeff Bates shines on second album

Music

There's no doubt Jeff Bates has one of the best voices in country music today. Put his voice with a few great songs, and you get Leave the Light On, his second album. The new collection is filled with catchy, fun and thought-provoking material.

Bates certainly has a sense of humour, and seems to like making fun of himself when he sings about prison and heartache (both of which he's been involved with). That kind of humility is always surprising and speaks a lot about his personality.

He is an awesome songwriter and should have included more of his own material on this album, as he only contributes two songs. He wrote almost all of the songs on his debut album - Rainbow Man. Still, he takes the tunes he didn't write and makes them his own.

This is a solid, consistently good album that will have you singing along. The CD opens with the single version of 'Long Slow Kisses', a song that stayed on the country charts for 37 weeks without breaking into the top 10, mainly because of lack of promotion and that the song had been laying around as an album cut for over two years before RCA/BMG got around to promoting it as a single.

This version is more musical and less narrative than the version found on his debut album. The second cut, 'Rub It In', is an excellent cover version of the mid-1970s smash for Billy 'Crash' Craddock, but everything else on the album is new material.

There are two almost autobiographical songs, 'That'll Get You Ten' about the challenging daily choices we have to make, and 'One Second Chance' which is the first single of the album and Bates' personal favourite. It's a humorous story about life in jail and how difficult it is finding work as an ex-con. Of course for Bates it's a been-there-done-that experience that he sings about.

'Mama Was A Lot Like Jesus' is about a poor woman, like Bates' own mother, who could "make a bag of groceries last two weeks" and who had plenty of forgiveness and love to give away.

There's a song about a good woman, 'The Woman He Walked On', that is oddly touching while 'No Shame' is an upbeat love song. 'Leave the Light On,' sounds even more romantic because of Bates' deep voice when he sings: "So baby, leave the light on/I wanna look inside your lovin' eyes/And watch you when you breathe/So leave the light on/ When you're making love to me."

Throughout his sophomore release, Bates displays a level of vulnerability and emotional depth that isn't that common among today's country male singers. This is reminiscent of the work of Conway Twitty and Charlie Rich - romantic, provocative and sensual.

'What I Know', about the end of a relationship, was recorded live and is a tongue-in-cheek delight. Producer Blake Chancey makes the most of Bates' vocal qualities with arrangements that include guitar-and-fiddle-driven twang, and a steel guitar for the ballads. This is a fine example of how Nashville can be contemporary without losing its country roots.

'Hands On Man' is a tongue-in-cheek ode to the guys who like to get down and dirty, while 'Good People' is another number that showcases Bates' powerful renditions.

Overall, Bates returns with a stellar sophomore effort. Leave the Light On is much stronger than his debut. A singer/songwriter/musician to be dealt with, this good ol' Mississippi boy may just be the future of country music, if radio can ever get over the fact that he is a traditionalist. Great album to add to your collection.

MUSIC FEST

The 12th edition of the Music Fest, which takes place on the Ayer's Cliff Fairgrounds is on rain or shine this weekend to benefit The Children's Wish Foundation of Canada.

This annual event usually kicks-off on Saturday morning but exceptionally this year, there will be a Friday night show featuring the excellent country music group, Desert Heat. The members of the band are getting ready to leave for Music City to be part of another music fest (Nashville's Fan Fair). You can go to <http://www.decouvertescountry.com> in order to see the video of an interview I did with Desert Heat in the studio of CFLX-FM (95.5). You'll also hear an acoustic performance they offered live while there.

This is a show not to miss, Friday night at 9 pm and it will be my pleasure to introduce this great Canadian country group.

Jennings opens a window on the realities of a late Victorian city, a city reeking of despair but trying to build a future based on justice and decency for all. There wasn't a whole lot of magic to be found in those times - unlike in Jennings' writing.

She has been turning out Murdoch mysteries since 1997 when the first, Except the Dying, was published to wide acclaim. That novel and a later one, Let Loose the Dogs, were shortlisted for a number of mystery awards. Others in the series were Poor Tom is Cold, Under the Dragon's Tail and Night's Child.

Three of Jennings books have been filmed as episodes of Murder 19C, starring Peter Outerbridge as Murdoch and Keely Hawes as coroner Dr. Julia Ogden. The series was broadcast in Canada and in the U.K. CHUM Broadcasting has also announced plans for a TV series based on Jennings' books.

The author has been likened to bestselling British author Anne Perry "in her clear-eyed look at the social ills of the period," and for bringing a Victorian Toronto back to life for untold numbers of readers who finally get to "feel the chill of the poorly heated rooms" and to "sympathize with all those at the margins of society."

If you want to step back in time, see a developing city stripped to its basics, breathe in a little nostalgia while walking the streets of a latter-day Toronto, let Jennings be your guide. There's really none better.
