Viewpoint's latest exhibit flirts with reality

By Vanessa Lee
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Don't ask Hélène Gagnon what inspires her art. She doesn't believe in it.

"I don't believe in inspiration," she told The Record recently. "I believe in a lot of hard work. I believe in all of the information that bombards our brains on a daily basis. If I don't know enough about a particular topic, I will research it. I'm not going to wait to be inspired."

Gagnon is, however, influenced by nature and the feelings it gives her. This is demonstrated in her current exhibition, Substratum, which is on display at Viewpoint Visual Arts Centre in Saint-Isidore-de-Clifton.

"I use textile, leather, leather wire, wood, and rocks. My show consists of 10 acrylic paintings and soft sculptures," said Gagnon, who has lived in Quebec City for many years. "The soft sculptures are made with textile materials, and are tools to make you dream. As for the paintings, they propose a vision of rocks that have shivers, and mirror the trees that surround them."

Viewpoint director Michèle Saint-Jacques pointed out a deepness in Gagnon's art that is open to interpretation on different levels.

"She likes to play with similarities and differences; kind of like a paradox. What I find interesting is it has deeper meaning, but it's very light in the process. It's transparent and joyful," Saint-Jacques explained.

Saint-Jacques said there is also a notion of illusion in Gagnon's work.

"It's flirting with what's make-believe and what's reality. Sometimes it's a struggle and sometimes it's in harmony. It's art that is open to interpretation and that asks questions about figuration," said Saint-Jacques.

Added Gagnon: "The goal of the gallery is to promote art in a rural setting. I think, and I hope I have helped them achieve that objective."

HÉLÈNE GAGNON'S WORK IS ON DISPLAY AT THE VIEWPOINT VISUAL ARTS CENTRE IN SAINT-ISIDORE-DE-CLIFTON UNTIL OCT. 30. THE CENTRE IS OPEN SATURDAYS AND SUNDAYS FROM 1 TO 5 P.M.

Brandade is foolproof way of cooking fish

Food

As some of you know, my husband's family has an inn and restaurant here in North Hatley.

I've convinced the chefs to let me go in once in a while to cook with them — it's absolutely thrilling! — and learn some of their tricks.

This week, I was shown how to make chef Francis Wolf's fish brandade wrapped in cabbage leaves, which I found delicious but a little too labour-intensive for home.

So I eliminated the hardest part of the recipe, which involved rolling up the brandade in cabbage leaves, tying them with strings, carefully sautéing the resulting roll and then removing the strings before serving.

I'd never have time (or patience) to do all that at home. I suggest, instead, that you simply scoop the brandade onto the blanched (flash-boiled) cabbage leaves, no rolling required.

This is a great recipe because it allows you to use any kind of boneless white fish (a big plus in the Townships, where good fish is rare and pricey), and prepare it as far as two days in advance. You can even use frozen fish fillets (here the chefs would disagree with me, but hey) — as long as you thaw them slowly and get rid of all excess water.

FISH BRANDADE ON CABBAGE (FOR FOUR)

750 grams white de-boned fish (halibut, monkfish, etc.)

PANTRY

400 grams russet or Yukon Gold potatoes

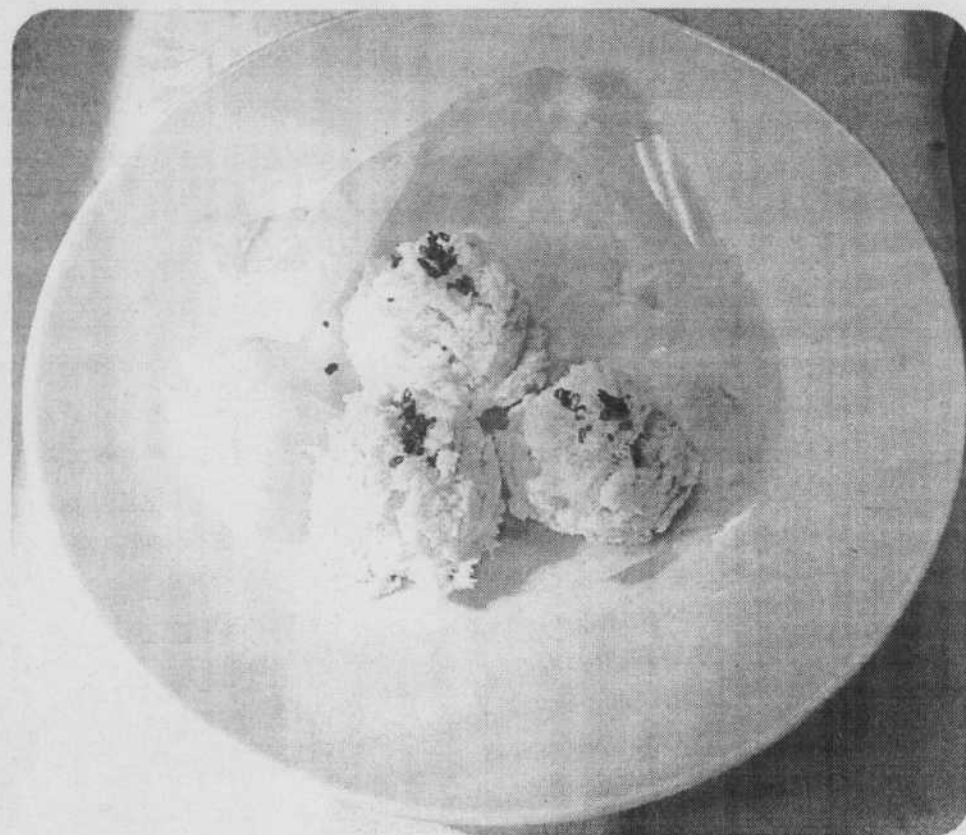

250 ml. extra-virgin olive oil, plus some for drizzling at the end
1 head green cabbage
3 garlic cloves
100 ml milk
2 bay leaves

Directions: Peel the potatoes and place them in a pot filled with cold water. Cook on high-heat for 20-25 minutes until tender. Mash and reserve.

Fill up that same pot with more water and bring it to a boil. Place the head of cabbage in the boiling water. Using tongs, pull off leaves one by one carefully so they don't get ripped up. It takes about one minute for the outside leaf to detach itself from the head of cabbage. As you remove cabbage leaves, place them in a big bowl filled with cold water and ice cubes. Once you've got four nice-looking leaves, stop this process (and do whatever you want with the rest of the cabbage). Cut off the thick, hard vein in the lower part of each leaf.

Peel and finely chop the garlic. Put fish, olive oil, garlic and bay leaves in a pot and cook it on low to medium heat. It will look like you have too much oil, but that's normal.

Eventually, all the water from the fish will evaporate. Stir often, tapping down on the fish flesh so that it comes apart. Keep cooking until the fish incorporates all of the olive oil and you end up with a coarse fish paste.

Add the mashed potatoes and the milk and stir vigorously. Add salt and pepper to taste, and discard the bay leaves.

Place one cabbage leaf in the center of each plate, and on top of it, three scoops of brandade (use an ice-cream scoop). Drizzle some top-quality extra-virgin olive oil around the plate, microwave it for a minute or so and serve. You can refrigerate the blanched lettuce and the brandade for up to three days, and simply re-heat it whenever you want to serve it (microwave works best). You can also serve this as a spread, on crackers.

Go for the gold at farmers markets

By Judy Schultz

I once did an entire section on blue food, and was amazed at what turned up. Now, we're going for the gold.

In September, farmers markets are a motherlode of gold/yellow/orange vegetables grown near home.

In a fast pass through my usual weekly farmers markets, I found yellow squash (summer, pattypan, gold cushaw, yellow crookneck, yellow custard squash, spaghetti squash), yellow pumpkins, yellow carrots and golden beets; rainbow chard with yellow stems, lemon cucumbers, couisa (Lebanese) squash, yellow and orange peppers; yellow tomatoes, yellow onions, yellow sweet corn, yellow string beans, and some rarely cultivated golden sweet pod peas from India, with lemon-yellow edible pods.

WARM BACON, YELLOW TOMATO SALAD

Serves six

Yellow tomatoes have less acid, and taste slightly sweeter, than the red ones. The classic BLT takes on a fresh look in a salad bowl, and we prefer this with crisp iceberg lettuce on the bottom. I like to add avocado to this dish.

3 pounds. (1.5 kg) yellow cherry tomatoes, halved 12 basil leaves, rolled and shredded
1/2 cup (125 mL) red onion, diced fine
1 avocado, diced (optional)
1/2 pound (250 g) thick-sliced bacon
1/4 cup (50 mL) tasty olive oil
1/2 teaspoon (2 mL) Dijon-style mustard
1/4 cup (50 mL) red wine vinegar salt and freshly ground pepper
1/2 cup (125 mL) mayo
1/2 teaspoon (2 mL) curry powder

Directions: Put halved tomatoes, basil leaves, onion and avocado in a glass bowl. Dice the bacon in large chunks. Fry until crisp. Drain excess fat from pan.

Mix together oil, mustard, vinegar, salt and pepper, mayo and curry powder, and pour into bacon pan. Bring to a simmer, stirring. Pour over salad and fold in gently. Serve immediately, alone or on a bed of torn iceberg lettuce.

KOREAN PANCAKE WITH YELLOW PEPPERS

Serves four

Yellow peppers: They're so mild and sweet, you could fry them and use them as a sauce for pasta, or as a sandwich filling with melted mozzarella, or stuffed and rolled. But we like them this way, as an appetizer pancake.

1 cup (250 mL) all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon (5 mL) salt
3/4 cup (175 mL) water
1 large egg
3 tablespoons (45 mL) soy sauce
1 tablespoon (15 mL) rice vinegar

1 teaspoon (5 mL) sugar
2 tablespoons (30 mL) canola oil
1 small yellow onion, finely diced
1 yellow sweet pepper, sliced into thin strips

Directions: Whisk together flour, salt, water and large egg until a pancake batter consistency is reached. Cover and let rest 30 minutes. Meanwhile, make dipping sauce: stir together soy sauce, rice vinegar and sugar. Set aside.

Heat oil in a large non-stick skillet. Add onion and fry until transparent. Ladle half the batter over and around onions. Arrange pepper slices in a single layer over onions.

Ladle remaining batter over top. Cook pancake until pale golden on underside. (two to three minutes.) Using two spatulas, flip the pancake. Cook until set.

Slice into wedges and serve with dipping sauce.

Sutton to be centre of jazz universe

The Sutton Jazz Festival's fourth edition — to feature performers such as The Sharron Gozzo Trio, The Joel Miller Trio and The John Samborsky Jazz Experience — begins today (Sept. 23) and runs until Oct. 15 at Alec and Gérard Pelletier Hall.

The Sharron Gozzo Trio will kick off The Colors of Jazz festival on Friday, Sept. 23. Having performed on both sides of the Atlantic, vocalist Sharron Gozzo is a welcome arrival to the Sutton Jazz Festival, with John Samborsky on bass and Peter Gossage on guitar. Her style is reminiscent of Billie Holiday and Etta James.

The Homebrew Dixieland Band brings the heat and joy of New Orleans jazz to Sutton on Sept. 24. This toe-tapping, hand-clapping music is performed by Stanley Lake (trumpet and vocals), Dave Sutherland (clarinet and vocals), Dave Reilly (trombone and vocals), Dave Grey (tuba), John Samborsky (guitar) and Jean Lavigne (percussion).

Winners of the Grand Jazz Award at the 1997 Montreal International Jazz Festival, The Joel Miller Trio performs Sept. 30.

The Vivienne Deane Trio, featuring the vocals of Montrealer Vivienne Deane, with the incomparable Tim Jackson on piano and Alex Bellegarde on bass, are set for Oct. 1.

The Claude Prud'Homme Jazz Ensemble — guitarist Claude Prud'Homme, Michel Guignet (trumpet and flugelhorn), André Lafleur (bass) and Serge Hamelin (drums) are ready to entertain on Oct. 7.

Having performed their exciting progressive music at the Montreal Jazz and Off Festivals alike, the LML Trio is back by popular demand on Oct. 8 to explore the many avenues of improvisation with Claude Lavergne (drums), Roberto Murray (sax) and Serge Lavoie (guitar).

Mainstream jazz, featuring John Samborsky on bass, the drums of Pierre Gauthier, the guitar of Peter Gossage, Dave Sutherland on saxophone and flute, and Stanley Lake on flugelhorn will show their stuff on Oct. 14.

Having performed at the major Jazz Festivals in Canada and around the world, saxophonist Dave Turner is joined by the legendary jazz veteran Nelson Symonds on guitar, Dave Gelfand on bass and Claude Lavergne on drums to close out the festival on Oct. 15.

Tickets on sale at the door are 15$. Trio Passports (three concerts for the price of two) also available.

Don't Dress For Dinner This Weekend

NANCY NOURSE/CORRESPONDENT

QNEK Productions treated the audience at the Haskell Opera House in Stanstead to a delightfully entertaining and at times somewhat confusing rendition of Don't Dress for Dinner by Marc Camolletti. The play is being directed by award-winning Lynn Leimer. Those who have not seen it have another chance this weekend as the production will also be showing Sept. 23 and 24 (beginning at 7:30 p.m.).

BRIEFS

Morrison returns to Antiquarius Café

Singer/songwriter Kate Morrison will perform an intimate concert in Sherbrooke's Antiquarius Café on Saturday, Sept. 24 beginning at 7 p.m.

Tickets are $10 and are available by calling 819-562-1800. Antiquarius Café is located at 182 Wellington Street North.

Gospel music in Fleurimont

Gospel music lovers are invited to the Julien Ducharme centre in Fleurimont this weekend for performances by the Lemaire family. Raymond, Mariette and Tabitha Lemaire will perform Saturday, Sept. 24 at 7 p.m. and Sunday, Sept. 25 at 10 a.m. There will also be a workshop on Saturday at 2:30 p.m. The shows are free. For more information, call 819-569-8951 or 819-347-1494, or go to www.lumieresdesnations.org.

Granby singers selling apples

The Petits chanteurs de Granby will hold their annual apple selling fundraiser this weekend. The amateur singers will go door-to-door in some Granby neighbourhoods on Saturday, selling apples by the bag ($4) and by the box ($8). Stands will also be set up at three locations, Rone Le Régional (St-Jude Street North), Dépanneur Ultra Denison (Denison Street East) and Dépanneur Ultra des Cantons (Principale Street). Call 450-378-5891 to place orders.

Gangsta redemption seduces Toronto

Movies

TVA FILMS

The Toronto-City Award for Best Canadian Feature Film went to our pick, director/screenwriter Jean-Marc Vallée's C.R.A.Z.Y. Familia deservedly won the Best Canadian First Feature.

By Donnelly
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD
TORONTO

“When you make a little film like ours in a foreign language, you don't expect to find an international market,” said Gavin Hood, director/screenwriter of Tsotsi, as he accepted the biggest prize of the 30th Toronto International Film Festival (TIFF).

The People's Choice Award, voted by ordinary festival goers, guarantees it will. Toronto is recognized for sophisticated, savvy audiences who “give the best Q & As in the world.” When they choose, moviedom pays attention. Commenting on the trophy's heavy weight, an ecstatic Hood said “Maybe I'll melt this down for our next production.”

In English and subtitled patois Afrikaans, Tsotsi shows the gut-wrenching, tear-jerking transformation of a ruthless thug or “tsotsi”.

Knowing this shantytown gangster story was based on Athol Fugard's novel (many of his plays have been lovingly produced at Montreal's Centaur Theatre), we had high expectations and were not disappointed.

Nineteen-year-old Tsotsi shoots a woman and steals her BMW, only to discover her baby on the back seat. The crime unleashes memories of his violence-ridden childhood, driving him towards life-altering choices.

Presley Chweneyagae, in his first feature, conveys Tsotsi with brutal, conflicted intensity. Already a big winner at Edinburgh, Tsotsi will now compete for Best Foreign Film Oscar.

That Fugard considers it “far and away the best film that has been made of something I've written” and “one of the best films ever to come out of South Africa” can't hurt. Neither does the great post-apartheid “Kwaito” dancehall soundtrack.

The Australian Look Both Ways won the prestigious Discovery Award and $15,000 prize, chosen by the 750 attending media. Another example of a ‘small film’ lifted to the international stage by TIFF.

Look Both Ways resonated with us and got Nelly's vote. The paths of several characters intersect one sweltering weekend as each faces Monday's moments of reckoning.

Writer/director Sarah Watt opens the film with a spectacular train accident and examines those who witness, experience or are otherwise affected by it. For Meryl, it's another calamity in a slew of catastrophic events.

Inhibited by dread, her inner imaginings are freely expressed through beautiful, hand-painted animation. She meets Nick, a photographer grappling with his mortality after tests reveal he has cancer. His front-page photograph has captured the anguish of a woman who recognizes the man killed by the train as her husband.

It both traumatizes and stimulates empathy in a movie that finds hope amid the depths of despair.

We were right — Quebec movies are tops — and it is good to see that recognized by the TIFF juries. The Toronto-City Award for Best Canadian Feature Film went to our pick, C.R.A.Z.Y., director/screenwriter Jean-Marc Vallée's kaleidoscopic family epic.

Here, rebellious Zac, one of five brothers, struggles with his sexual identity against conservative traditions and his father's homophobia. Our hero's conflict is echoed by Quebec's, invaded in the 1960s-70s with American culture and music.

Nelly's conversation with the filmmakers revealed that only one English-subtitled copy of C.R.A.Z.Y. exists for Quebec and it's in Montreal. Already a hit in French, C.R.A.Z.Y.'s first run in Sherbrooke hardly registered on our radar but the $30,000 prize could herald a comeback.

Maybe some of that cash should fund another English-language copy for the anglo-Quebec market? Despite preconceptions, the ‘two solitudes’ share a common culture, if only they are allowed to communicate.

Familia deservedly won the Best Canadian First Feature in a split decision with Michael Mabbott's The Life and Hard Times of Guy Terrifico, a mockumentary satirizing the country music biz. First-time director Michael Mabbott was overwhelmed. He told Nelly he'd love to see Terrifico entertain the Townships.

Familia, Louise Archambault's debut feature, is a woman's movie men can appreciate. Leading actress Macha Grenon, who accepted the award and prize money (half of the shared $15,000), plays a married working mother. But where's her husband? When her childhood friend, addicted to gambling, turns up with a gutsy, neglected teenaged daughter, her ordered, suburban life is turned upside down. Three generations of mother-daughter relations fuel this powerful, unpredictable story.

Sa-kwa won the FIPRESCI Prize, awarded annually to an emerging filmmaker. Perhaps the jury representing the International Federation of Film Critics was swayed by the message of “an emotionally damaged woman” in modern-day South Korea who chooses single parenthood over two inadequate

With few words 'book' artists speak volumes

NY art exhibit part of international summit on post-9/11 arts and culture

By Giancarlo La Giorgia
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD

On June 2, 2003, a sketchbook began a 97,000-km transatlantic journey.

The art project known simply as 'book' was circulated randomly among four artists: Mac Premo and Duke Riley, two friends living in Brooklyn, N.Y.; Oliver and Rory Jeffers, brothers living in Belfast, North Ireland.

Each week for 36 weeks, a different artist would draw in book, for a total of nine entries each. Part of every entry extended onto the following page, leaving each artist to respond to the preceding spread — a stunningly beautiful, visual "conversation".

I discovered book online earlier this year at www.lookatbook.com, and decided to interview its creators, via e-mail, using much the same methods: nine questions, forwarded in random order over a period of several weeks, with each artist contributing only a portion of the answers, resulting in a total of 36 individual responses.

Much like book itself, our conversation was at times profound, at times absurd, but altogether captivating.

Q1: Although many quicker and more efficient methods of communication exist, you chose book to be a 36-week-long, four-way conversation, "spoken" through a pidgin language of images, icons, numbers and slogans. Why?

Mac Premo: Image making may not be the most efficient means of communication, but it is the most effective way for us to communicate a multivariate idea. We chose to converse in pidgin precisely because it is pidgin. If we were writers, we would have written.

Rory Jeffers: Mac had already bought the book, he also felt Duke's spelling was so terrible, and that it would be impossible to get him to spell-check anything. So, if he was going to communicate anything to anyone, it would be best to avoid written language as much as possible.

Duke was under the impression that pidgin language was spoken by birds and decided (Oliver Jeffers) would be the first person in the last 200 years of medical history to catch a disease from working with pidgins in his bare feet.

Q2: You raise a good point. Absurdity, irreverence and sarcasm are prominent elements within book, and often, the least serious entries are the most interesting. How did humour spontaneously become book's common denominator?

COURTESY BOOK PROJECT

According to one of the artists, image making may not be the most efficient means of communication, but it was the most effective way for them to communicate a multivariate idea.

Duke Riley: There was a much wider range of acquaintance amongst the four of us at the beginning of the project, ranging from sibling to almost strangers. There was a certain amount of risk involved in the project and it was purely coincidental that in Belfast, a respectable way to both get to know someone and conduct a relationship with a sibling/friend is to mock them.

Also, humour provided a palatable starting point for [book's] audience as well as housing thinly veiled cynicism toward pretty much everything.

I think we (the four of us) all figure that advancement occurs through tests and observation, and that the material world around us is testable. One effect of this viewpoint is to make scarce that which is sacred. Another effect is to make prevalent that which is a big word that will confuse Rory.

Q3: It has been said that the act of observation changes the object being observed. By incorporating an audio commentary track (with your own intentions/interpretations for each spread) into the exhibition, aren't you interfering with the observer's own perception of book?

Duke Riley: Firstly, it is difficult to solve any problem when you are given no clues. If book were created by one person, there would be no mid-process interpretation differences. Also, you assume it was entirely for the viewers benefit.

Oliver Jeffers: The audio provides a voyeurist experience for the viewer into fragments of our own somewhat-drunken attempts to explain our interpretations to each other.

Rory Jeffers: It also has something to do with us all liking the sound of our own voices.

Mac Premo: It has also been said that Schrödinger's cat was notoriously vain. Well, at least he was perceived that way.

Q4: When critiquing his last contribution to book, Mac said that he disliked "the idea that art can be something that you (the artist responsible) don't even know what it's about," arguing that it "shirks responsibility" and is "a bit lazy."

To this, Duke replied that "Sometimes the best plan is no plan." So, which is it: book had a plan that wasn't followed, or there was no plan to follow?

Rory Jeffers: It's both, Mac is a martyr and Duke couldn't care. Actually, an important part about art is how it is misinterpreted, or rather, how it isn't spelled out to the letter by the artist, letting the viewer add their own perspective to the equation. Therefore it is impossible to assume complete responsibility without treating your audience like an engineer viewing an illustrated manual.

However, if the artist is exonerated from any responsibility of meaning, you end up with masturbatory drivel. The trick is to find the right middle ground, for the artist to direct his interpretive skills without completely controlling them.

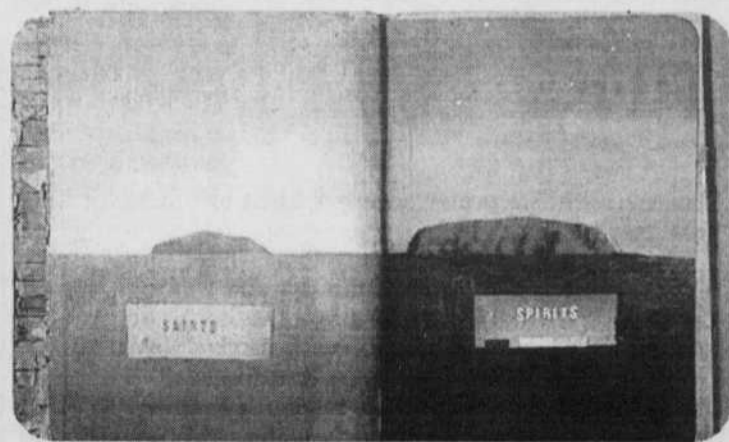

Duke Riley: Book addressed this challenge by dividing the responsibility of the project as a whole between the four of us, revealing the development of a plan as it unfolded and revealed to us through the artistic process.

Oliver Jeffers: It's all very well for an artist to take responsibility and plan appropriately for a piece of work they alone have created. But what artist would attempt to plan and take responsibility for the artistic integrity of a four-way dialogue, the entire point of which was the interpretation process between transmitting and receiving? OK, maybe Mac would.

Q5: Judging by the photos on www.lookatbook.com, there certainly was no lack of planning and fussing over the large, ambitious, high-tech installment last fall at the Laganside Weir, in Belfast. How did the exhibition turn out?

Mac Premo: Our 2004 exhibition wasn't so much fussing as it was an appropriate staging. The space advanced certain aspects of the project; the tunnel denotes a sense of linear passage that is very much part of book. Another facet of book that was exemplified by the tunnel under the weir was the crossing of water.

Oliver Jeffers: About 200 yards had to be walked under the River Lagan to get from the entrance to the room where each spread was presented.

Rory Jeffers: That, plus the tunnel was black, square, full of pages and people queuing up to start the experience at week one and follow the journey that the artists had taken right through to week 36. The queue was partly due to the audio commentary, which showed a journey of a different kind.

Duke Riley: At one stage on the night we recorded, we realized we had consumed a full litter of whiskey. The gradual procession through such a vast space also had a sort of intoxicating, hypnotic effect. A couple of [local drunks] wandered in on opening night and managed to stay for about 40 minutes and listen to all 36 tracks.

Q6: The location and context of book's upcoming exhibition is quite different from the Belfast show? How does book fit into the Lower Manhattan Cultural Center's What Comes After: Cities, Art & Recovery program?

Oliver Jeffers: Because anything fits anywhere, if you squeeze it the right way. Both Belfast and New York are cities that have two vowels in their name. In phonetics, a vowel is a sound characterized by an open configuration of the vocal tract (consonants are characterized by a closure at one or more points along the vocal tract). "Vowel" comes from the Latin "vocalis" ("uttering voice" or "speaking").

Duke Riley: Speaking is something that occurs in every city too, of course but there is no place this answer is going. Whether or not one chooses to speak directly to the condition of his environment does not solely determine its effect; as New York and Belfast are the respective artist's immediate environments, a program that deals with art's role in a city's healing process is abundantly relevant.

Q7: What message do you hope visitors of book's exhibit, and Art in Recovery in general, will walk away with?

Rory Jeffers: The world is as big as you make it.

Duke Riley: Although there is a significant amount of social and political commentary, there is no overall political agenda. We dabbled in approaches, examining ourselves and each other from national, regional and individual standpoints.

Seemingly insignificant undercurrents bind the project together; the world functions similarly.

Mac Premo: Context can be infused arbitrarily or recognized as relevant to a process, even after the completion of that process. (This is already jumbled. I have to go catch a plane to Croatia. Oliver, can you please help me?).

Oliver Jeffers: There is no one single message. If you're asking us why we make art, it's because we have the tools, ability and motivation to do so. I create art not so much to answer questions as to ask them, even of myself. I create art to provoke a reaction, even if it's not the one I intended. I observe and learn. What do I hope people who view this show will walk away with? Maybe an understanding of how art is integral to the world, not a decorated add-on, especially to cities that are grieving and recovering.

Q8: So, what's next (both for book, and the four of you)?

Mac Premo: The four of us can now be referred to in the singular as OAR. An oar is a sort of prosthesis or extension that propels and navigates one form of matter through another. As for book, it will be exhibited this September in New York, then maybe L.A.

Rory Jeffers: Then maybe Estonia. The book show in New York will be followed by the much anticipated 'Building'.

COURTESY BOOK PROJECT

Book will be part of the What Comes After: Cities, Art & Recovery program in New York City.

The story of a unique Belfast building told through art and architecture.

Oliver Jeffers: Here we are using old electrical equipment rescued from an abandoned substation to create art telling the building's history. Then, I don't know.

Duke Riley: Our main objective is finding new ways to challenge ourselves creatively. Although there are traces of book in our next project — in its title and aesthetic — the collaborative process is completely reversed. We are going from a pre-arranged format, with no communication, to the four of us working simultaneously in one room, in four different mediums, ranging from animation to painting to sculpture. (I sound like some clown promoting a reality TV show.)

Q9: Finally, any parting shot as to why you'd recommend that people make the trek to NYC to check out the book exhibition?

Rory Jeffers: Roll up! Roll up! Come see the greatest show on earth where an eclectic assemblage waits to greet you!

Duke Riley: It's worth it, because book is just a front for an international illegal gambling ring we operate in the basement below the show, where people bet on fights between deranged orangutans and gardening androids.

And if a trek is involved, then that's half the reason right there: If you get caught between the moon and New York City. The best that you can do is go see book (we are so gonna get sued by Christopher Cross).

Mac Premo: If you don't like art, you probably shouldn't make the trek, unless you like baseball. In September, the Yankees will be surging past Boston, and the Mets will be fighting for a playoff spot. There's nothing like New York baseball in the fall. The end.

BOOK'S EXHIBIT AT THE LMCC SWING SPACE (15 NASSAU STREET, A FEW BLOCKS FROM GROUND ZERO) RUNS UNTIL OCT. 9. YOU CAN ALSO CHECK OUT ALL 36 OF BOOK ENTRIES, WITH THE ARTISTS' AUDIO COMMENTARIES, ONLINE AT WWW.LOOKATBOOK.COM.

partners. But we preferred other films by emerging filmmakers.

We loved Big Girl, the Bravo!Fact Short Cuts Canada Award winner ($10,000). Humour, good writing, assured acting, infuse this focus on a single mother's nine-year-old daughter and her relationship with mom's boyfriend.

In closing, TIFF director Piers Handling said "I hope we have kept to the spirit of the Festival's founders to bring the best films in the world to the public." We can attest to some duds too and, with a 40 per cent increase in industry delegates (over 1,000), the focus seems to be changing.

JAMIROQUAI

Dynamite
(Epic)

Jay Kay can still put together a great funk album. The grand puba of Jamiroquai hasn't changed the formula much over the past decade, mixing energetic funk with danceable beats. Too bad he sounds like he's stuck in the late 1990s when their single 'Virtual Insanity' lit up the charts in North America. None of the songs on Dynamite are able to reach the same level of excellence that song managed to achieve. Longtime fans will be disappointed. Songs like the title track and 'Electric Mistress' establish a nice groove, but stick to a middling tempo that goes nowhere. Excellent for playing at a club, say, but not conducive to private listening.

DAVID GRAY

Life In Slow Motion
(Ato Records/RCA)

It seems that David Gray will forever be trying to get away from the success of his single 'Babylon'. The uber-successful song made him an international star and the theme music for "very special episodes" of TV's most popular shows. Unfortunately, Gray should be running the other way.

While the songs on Life in Slow Motion are good, none of them stand up and take hold of the listener. The slow pace of the album, plodding from one midtempo composition to another, doesn't help things along either. It's always commendable when a musician tries to branch out. But Gray is branching out in a way that sounds wrong.

THE HECK

The Heck
(HRM/Bodog)

This trio is still teenaged but it plays with an assurance beyond its years. It's hard rock, basically, bordering on heavy metal of a backdated kind, circa the '70s. The direction and most of the songs come from guitarist Bryan Steeksma, who has provided a few flashy, white-hot solos and throws in a few fills atop a generally thick-sounding attack. Though the songwriting generally is so-so, a few songs stand out and show what potential The Heck has — 'Sin' and 'Painted Red' to name just two.

COHEED AND CAMBRIA

Good Apollo I'm Burning Star IV, Vol. I
(Equal Vision/Columbia)

Don't let the very long and nonsensical album title throw you off. This isn't the new Styx concept album. No, this is something much different and just as strange. It's the new album from the metal-tinged emo outfit known as Coheed and Cambria. On this one, the band indulges their love of Pink Floyd, putting together a track list of songs that would seem at home on Dark Side of the Moon or Wish You Were Here. Coheed and Cambria have always had a dramatic flair in their music, something that singer Claudio Sanchez's nasally falsetto underscores. Who knows why the songs work, but they do.

AMANDA WILKINSON

Amanda Wilkinson
(Universal South)

We all knew this was coming. Amanda was always the big draw in the Belleville, Ont., family act, the pressure has been on for a while from the American record company for her to ditch brother, Tyler, and dad, Steve, and, frankly, the last Wilkinson record wasn't so great. She has hot-shot producer Tony Brown and the best songwriters in Nashville on her side and this could maybe do something. 'Pontiacs' is solid, 'Hearts Open Slowly' is a really fine ballad and 'Life Is a Beautiful Thing' is the perfect vehicle for this perennial optimist. Bottom line, she's a great singer.

honed its sound to be sharper and more melodic; hardly pushing any boundaries. That said, when you've got as potent a sonic asset as David Draiman, you use him. A classical singer in the Dio/Nicko McBrain vein, his soaring growl demands respect and gets it, mostly. The second half of the disc falters and the cover of Genesis' 'Land of Confusion' is just wrong. Key track: 'Just Stop.'

STEVE DAWSON

We Belong to the Gold Coast
(Black Hen Music/Koch)

Steve Dawson, Vancouver master of all things strung that one can strum or pluck, adds yet another instrument on his new CD: voice. Dawson sings on five of the 15 tracks, and while no one will mistake him for Alison Krauss, he accounts himself well at the microphone, his down-home vocals in step with the roots material here, most of which he wrote. Doubling up on as many as five instruments on one song, and backed by a band of like-minded players, Dawson gets a lot of sounds on one track. The firm-beat 'Fried, Dyed and Laid to the Side' maintains a good balance between the acoustic instruments (slide guitar, upright bass) and electric devices (pedal steel, samples). The same goes for 'Slip By', a foot-pumping number on which Dawson backs his electric guitar solo with a lightly stroked mandolin.

TRACY CHAPMAN

Where You Live
(Elektra)

The Tracy Chapman who brought us 'Fast Car' 17 years ago has had her musical ups and downs but this is certainly a good spike. A distinctive singer and songwriter, there's an almost hypnotic quality to her style that will catch you every time. Never an idealist, '3000 Miles' is a bleak look at the desolation of inner city USA while 'America' is an unblinking take on the inherent, ravishing imperialism of her country. She doesn't lighten up much on the romantic front, either, especially on the hard-hearted 'Never Yours'. She's dark but she's very good.

ONE TAKE: VOLUME TWO

A CD and Music DVD
(Alma Records)

From a performer's standpoint, the essence of jazz is the first take. Musicians do it when they take the bandstand or get together to jam. Alma Records wants to capture that first-take essence with its One Take series. Volume Two continues that concept, this time mixing saxophonist Phil Dwyer, pianist Robi Botos, bassist Marc Rogers and drummer Terri Lyne Carrington for eight tracks.

DVD of the week

By Katherine Monk

Lords of Dogtown (out Sept. 27): Catherine Hardwicke's frenetic take on the Dogtown and Z-boys story has so much energy and macho bravado, she nails the intangible essence of youth in every frame, without long, expository monologues about loneliness and a lack of love.

Based on the true story that gave birth to modern skateboarding, as well as extreme sports as a concept, Lords of Dogtown follows the stories of real life '70s skate punks Stacy Peralta, Tony Alva and Jay Adams as they transform a whitebread curiosity into an adrenaline-pumping spectacle and corporate industry. Outstanding performances allow the particulars of each story to hit the universal, and give Hardwicke the chance to make a film that's more than biopic — it's a rare glimpse into the truth of a single moment that changed popular culture.

Townships author commits murder

A real treat this week: A first novel by a Townshippier – and set in the Estrie as well! Former CBC journalist Louise Penny serves up a delicious tale of pastoral village life, liberally seasoned with greed, jealousy, remorse, and murder.

THE AUTHOR

Penny will be a familiar name to many readers, for many years she hosted a news and public affairs program on CBC radio. Born in Toronto, she and her husband Michael Whitehead and their two golden retrievers now make their home near Sutton. When she's not writing, gardening, or volunteering in the local library, she and Michael enjoy travelling – especially to London and Paris. It's a tough life.

Like many authors, Louise came to writing after a fully and varied career.

I asked her what prompted her to make the leap. She said "Since I was a child lying on my bed and staring at the ceiling, playing with my imaginary friends, I've wanted to write. Now every day I get to go to my study and play with my imaginary friends, and get paid to do it. Mother was wrong, though only this once."

STILL LIFE (HEADLINE, 2005)

The village of Three Pines, located about 20 minutes east of Montreal, is a venerable slice of Quebec history. Founded by United Empire Loyalists over 200 years ago, except for electricity and indoor plumbing, it has remained largely unchanged. True, the mill and blacksmith's forge have been replaced by B & B's and book shops, bistros and boulangeries; but everyone knows everyone else, people don't lock their doors when they go out, and there is no local police force.

Crime is virtually unknown, and limited to petty acts of vandalism. But there is a snake in this Eden: Jane Neal, a local retired schoolteacher, is found dead in the woods, dispatched by an arrow through her heart. Who could have wanted her dead?

Enter Chief Inspector Armand Gamache of the Sûreté du Québec's homicide squad. At first Gamache is out of his element, more familiar with the leafy surroundings of Outremont than with the rural (and largely anglo) setting in the Townships. But he is a keen and impartial observer of people.

Suspended Sentences

Assisted by Inspector Jean-Guy Beauvoir, and hampered by a less-than-helpful neophyte, agent Yvette Nichol, Gamache must untangle the twisted skein of village life.

Jane Neal had recently submitted a painting for a local competition: It provoked both outrage and humour, not least for its absolute lack of technique. But the painting is a document as well, and it holds a vital clue to Jane's death.

Gamache meets a cast of characters familiar to anyone who has spent any time in the Townships, and has experienced both rural and anglo village life. Like his literary predecessor, Simenon's Inspector Maigret, Gamache moves quietly and deliberately amongst people's lives, sorting out the detritus, and laying bare their secrets.

RECOMMENDATION

First novels are notoriously risky business. Typically new authors struggle to find their 'voice' – a distinctive style that makes them interesting and unique. Moreover, there are the inevitable teething problems of structure and pace that demand extensive rewrites. Small wonder, then, that so few new authors emerge each year.

Still Life is an exception to those norms. A runner-up for the Debut Dagger Award in 2004 (for Best First Novel), when Still Life was offered to publishers, Headline (a major player in mystery fiction) made a pre-emptive offer for the book, part of a three-book deal.

The foreign rights were subsequently sold by auction (almost unheard of for a first author) to St. Martin's Press in the US, Oldmann (in Germany), and Unieboek (in Holland). It is also scheduled for release in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa – all this while Louise is quietly at work on her second novel.

Louise Penny has her finger firmly on the pulse of village life in the Townships. The novel resonates both among people who know the Townships, and those who are new to village life. If that were all there was to Still Life, it would still be a revealing portrait of a place and a people. But it isn't all, by a long shot: Still Life is an original and well-told story, with a puzzle at its centre, and enough clues and red herrings to satisfy the most inveterate mystery buff. I recommend it highly, and along with, I suspect, many others, I look forward to the next in the series.

Lenon's first wife tells all about musician

By Jamie Portman

John Lennon's first wife has painted an unflattering image of the late Beatle as a violent and insecure bully who couldn't control his temper and once struck her in a burst of jealousy.

"I discovered that John's temper could be frightening," writes Cynthia Lennon in her new memoir, John, to be published at the end of this month. "He wanted proof, daily, that he mattered most to me. All sense of reason disappeared and his tantrums were awesome; he would batter away at me verbally until I gave in. Then he was back to his usual self, apologetic and loving."

Excerpts from the new book started appearing in the London Sunday Times on the weekend.

Cynthia says the only time John actually hit her was early in the relationship when they were both art students in Liverpool and he was told she had been seen dancing with his close friend, Stuart Sutcliffe.

She says Lennon "went mad" despite her efforts to reassure him and was still out of control the next day when he followed her to the ladies washroom at school.

"When I came out, he was waiting with a dark look on his face. Before I could speak, he raised his arm and hit me across the face, knocking my head on the pipes that ran down the wall behind me. Without a word, he walked away, leaving me dazed, shaky and with a sore head."

Cynthia says she was prepared to put up with his jealousy and possessiveness but not his violence, and decided the relationship had to end. It took John three months to apologize and to convince her to resume their affair.

"Although he was still verbally cutting and unkind, He was never again physically violent to me."

But John Lennon could still be physically violent to others. At a party celebrating the release of The Beatles' third single, 'From Me To You', host Bob Wooler made a joke about his relationship with the group's manager, Brian Epstein, who was gay.

"John, who had had plenty to drink, exploded. He leapt on Bob and by the time he was dragged off, Bob had a black eye and badly bruised ribs. I took John home as fast as I could and Brian drove John to hospital."

Since John's death, there have been persistent rumours of a gay affair with Epstein, but Cynthia Lennon discounts them.

"Nothing could be further from the truth. John was 100 per cent heterosexual and, like most lads at that time, horrified by the idea of homosexuality."

Commenting on her own sexual relationship with the moody Beatle, she says he was "a demanding lover who insisted that I put him before everything else."

But she also emphasizes that she always believed in John and saw in him the potential for real creativity.

The two were married in 1962 after Cynthia became pregnant, but they split up in 1968 after he met Yoko Ono. The Beatles broke up shortly afterwards. Cynthia, now 65, married three more times.

She says the real strains on their marriage before Ono appeared on the scene were due to his drug-use rather than his sexual infidelities.

According to the Sunday Times, subsequent excerpts from the book will paint a devastating portrait of Ono's behaviour, especially following John's 1980 murder. Cynthia was told personally by Ono not to attend his funeral because "it's not as if you're an old schoolfriend of mine."

Redford made for role in Unfinished Life

Movies

By Katherine Monk

Robert Redford has been waiting a long time for Einar Gilkyson to walk into his life. Though a celebrated actor for more than 30 years, the committed and socially responsible movie star has picked up his prize hardware as a director — not as an actor — which always left the impression of an unfinished (professional) life ... until now.

Einar Gilkyson is the part Redford was, in many ways, born to play.

A terse, reserved and emotionally shut-down rancher, Einar represents the essence of manly pathos in the midst of a rambling, and potentially tragic, family soap opera propelled by two women.

The first dramatic engine in this Lasse Hallstrom movie clicks with Jean (Jennifer Lopez) in the opening scene. Beaten and bruised, we see Jean and her daughter Griff (Becca Gardner) sitting at a chipped kitchen table while the weak and weepy boyfriend attempts to apologize for his violent acts committed in "the name of love."

Jean knows she has to leave her abusive boyfriend, but there's something behind her bruises and blood-red eyes that seems to long for punishment.

She welcomes the violent self-effacement, the emptiness and pain of being in a completely negative space.

Only when she looks at her daughter does she see the bigger picture, and before she has a chance to change her mind, Jean and Griff head for the hills. With nowhere else to turn, Jean brings Griff to a small ranch tucked away in the wilds of Wyoming (actually British Columbia's Interior) where Einar and his cowboy companion Mitch (Morgan Freeman) shuffle through the rancher's routine by rote.

The routine is all they have left. Having sold the livestock to pay for the land, Einar spends his days fixing fences, tinkering with the pickup, milking the cow and taking care of Mitch — his best buddy who suffers from constant pain in the wake of a grizzly bear attack.

Everyone in this film is broken, and few directors have the ability to show off the glimmering shards of loss — without losing the overall shape of the fractured drama — quite like Hallstrom (My Life as a Dog, Cider House Rules).

MIRAMAX FILMS

In Unfinished Life, Einar (Robert Redford) and his cowboy companion Mitch (Morgan Freeman) shuffle through the rancher's routine by rote.

Hallstrom has a palpable empathy that allows him the strength and softness to pick up the jagged edges of character without cutting himself, or his actors, in the process.

It's a difficult balance, especially given the weight of each personality taking part in this film. Redford is an icon, and that means everything he does comes with an internal set of expectations regarding his image as the moral conscience of his generation.

Similarly, Jennifer Lopez comes with her own deluxe set of show-business accessories, making Hallstrom's job of stripping away layer after layer of screen ego and celebrity that much harder.

He pulls it off, but you can feel the battle as Lopez and Redford wrestle for emotional power.

The good thing is, all this tension plays into Hallstrom's dramatic design since Einar and Jean are estranged in-laws. Einar blames Jean for the death of his only son, while Jean wrestles with survivor guilt and the need to erase herself through sex, abuse or, in the case of Einar, complete ambivalence.

Their mutual need for self-destruction sets up Einar and Jean as two mountain goats butting heads on a high cliff, and Hallstrom finds just the right angle to capture as much of this drama as possible.

Playing on Redford's natural coolness and control freak propensities, Hallstrom unlocks a secret door in the actor's persona. When Einar casts a withering look at Jean and her constant need for drama, there's a flicker of judgment that flashes behind Redford's steely blue eyes — to the point where I couldn't help but wonder just how much of that was acting, and how much of it was Redford sizing up the over-inflated cult of J Lo.

That I could never really tell where the limits of character stopped or started added an extra — and much needed — dimension to An Unfinished Life.

Without those prickly edges, the movie could have easily collapsed into a predictable fall drama engineered to manipulate the heartstrings.

For instance, there's a whole storyline about Mitch and his bear that feels entirely overdone. Sure, the bear is symbolic of the lost frontier and the fading machismo of our two aging cowboys, but the mechanics of the subplot are all too visible, and make for some forced moments.

The good stuff comes through Hallstrom's attention to character detail and the subtleties of each performance crashing up against the rest.

It comes through Einar's straight-edged anger rubbing up against Jean's pooling reservoir of pain. Sooner or later, we know the skin will break and the catharsis will come, but Hallstrom waits for just the right moment without overstretching our patience.

Redford may not get the acting prize he deserves for bringing Einar to the screen with such contained power because he's forced to keep so much of the character bottled up like an aging bottle of Aquavit.

Yet, this is the strongest performance of his career, and anyone brave enough to take a swig of what lies beneath his icy, Einar exterior will feel the buzz of an actor in a pure, distilled state.

Brooks and Dunn still doing it right

Music

Kix Brooks and Ronnie Dunn are two of the most talented guys in Nashville and as a duo they're probably the most successful duo in the history of country music.

For over a decade they have been perennial Duo of the Year nominees at every award ceremony presented, including the upcoming Country Music Awards.

Their last two albums, Steers & Stripes and Red Dirt Road, are considered by many as little gems, with reason. It's hard for any artist to provide the same quality after many years in the industry, but Brooks & Dunn manage to release a great album one more time.

Producer Tony Brown, who worked with Brooks & Dunn for the first time on their latest, is one of country music's best by far.

He didn't try to get B & D away from the well-defined style they're famous for. Instead, Brown worked even harder at making it sharper than ever.

This new album, Hillbilly Deluxe, doesn't showcase two artists trying to expand their horizon, but rather two pros doing what they do best.

And this is alright because that is probably what fans want.

If Brooks & Dunn is not your favourite duo, you would probably like to see them take more chances and explore new avenues, to discover how versatile they can be. But, Hillbilly Deluxe is still an album that fans will adore, but most of all it is very radio friendly. Out of 13 songs, there's not one track that would not make it in the top 20.

Good for the guys, they deserve it. The new album features Dunn in top vocal shape, singing his rowdy honky-tonks and great love ballads with equal polish and perfection.

You find Brooks singing a few numbers and even though his vocals might shine a little less than Dunn's, what he lacks in power, he makes up for with the heart and passion he breathes in every number.

I must say that everything flows together exceptionally well. The topics are pretty well the same ones we find in country music all the time. B & D have themselves said of this album that it was somehow their most country in a long time, but I do not agree.

Well at least not for the numbers covered by Dunn. Of course Brooks has always been the one who sounded more country.

Two superb singer/songwriters, Brooks & Dunn penned the major part of the material found on this collection. They've also co-written with some of the best songwriters in Nashville, including Bob Dipiero, Craig Wiseman and Terry McBride.

Sharing the task of writing with other artists brings another dimension to their sound, and this is interesting.

The first single released, the very punchy 'Play Something Country' is an up-tempo number set to infectious music, sure to draw you to the dance floor. 'She's About as Lonely As I'm Going To Let Her Get', is a jukebox weeper with great vintage quality. It will probably turn out to be a classic one day, just like George Jones' 'He Stopped Lovin' Her Today.'

'One More Roll of The Dice' is about gambling with love. The song is a reminder of Tom Petty's work.

Brooks & Dunn offer a nice mix of hook-filled songs, so catchy that by the second chorus you'll find yourself singing along.

Dunn puts all his soul into the very sensual 'Whiskey Do My Talkin.'

There's a fair share of beautiful ballads on which Dunn sounds breathtaking, but from the very beginning, he has always been famous for singing the weeping numbers. Among the noteworthy there's the beautiful 'Believe' about a young man who learns about faith from an older man.

There's also 'I May Never Get Over You', a pure country tear-jerker. 'Again' is a gorgeous ballad written by Radney Foster. Foster's fans will recognize his style after the first two lines. Dunn does a wonderful job and as usual, doesn't have any problems making it his own.

Brooks for his part shines on the earthy 'My Heart's Not a Hotel' as well as on the toe tapping 'She Likes To Get Out Of Town.'

There's also a cover of Nicolette Larson's hit of the mid-80's titled 'Building Bridges'. In order to help them out, Brooks & Dunn have invited Vince Gill and Sheryl Crow to handle the backvocals.

Brooks & Dunn seem to have found the recipe for mainstream success and they stick to it. Others who started at the same time have long been gone while the duo is still at the top of every country music chart.

Scorsese's No Direction Home a masterpiece

By Alex Strachan

When Martin Scorsese's three-and-a-half-hour documentary, No Direction Home: Bob Dylan, bowed earlier this month at the Telluride Film Festival, Dylan devotees reportedly hailed the previously unseen film as one of the great films about rock 'n' roll - right up there with A Hard Day's Night, Woodstock, the earlier Dylan documentary Don't Look Back and Scorsese's own The Last Waltz.

For more than 40 years, Dylan has been one of the most enigmatic and secretive artists of his time, but as of Monday, anyone with a working TV set and access to PBS will be afforded a portrait of the artist as a young man.

Scorsese's exhaustive, some have said spellbinding film, covers the five years from 1961-66, when Dylan evolved from Midwestern piano man to reluctant cultural prophet. It incorporates rarely seen performance footage with interviews with musicians and artists whose lives intertwined with Dylan's during those years. For the first time, Dylan talks openly and extensively about this period in his life, his journey from his birthplace in Hibbing, Minn., to Greenwich Village, N.Y.

The Bob Dylan Archives made available rare finds from its film, tape and stills collection, including footage from the 1963-65 Newport Folk Festivals, as well as previously unreleased outtakes from D.A. Pennebaker's 1967 film, Don't Look Back.

Scorsese and his producer Jeff Rosen interviewed ex-muse Suze Ritolo, Allen Ginsberg, Pete Seeger, Dave Van Ronk, Joan Baez, Al Kooper, Mavis Staples and Maria Muldaur, among others. In the end, though, their film keeps coming back to Dylan, the man, and his songs - "a torrent of words," in the words of American music critic Edna Gundersen, "about tyranny, justice, love, betrayal and redemption."

"I tried to make as honest a film as possible, without unnecessary restrictions," Scorsese told reporters earlier this year. "For me, of course, I'm on his side, so I think it was always obvious that I would come off as pro-Dylan."

No Direction Home ends in '66 for a reason, Scorsese says.

It was a time of fertile change, both on the ground, in politics, and in the zeitgeist, in popular culture. Dylan suffered a motorcycle accident that year, and retired from public view. There is scant little footage from the intervening years since.

Martin Scorsese's No Direction Home: Bob Dylan premieres Monday (Sept. 26) on PBS' American Masters, and concludes the following night, on Sept. 27. Check local listings for times.
