Quebec going to abandon its provincial police force?

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec government is considering disbanding the 4,300-member provincial police force unless the two sides soon solve the lengthy contract dispute with the officers, La Presse said Sunday.

The French-language daily said in a published report that the government is considering decertifying the police union and assigning the officers to municipal police forces across the province as specialized squads.

The newspaper, citing unnamed government and police sources, said Justice Minister Pierre Marc Johnson has discussed the measures with cabinet colleagues and police force directors.

But Raymond Richard, president of the policemen's union, said reports of the force's break-up are probably part of an unofficial strategy to frighten the officers.

The government has made no direct threat to the union and the idea itself is not new, having been raised in a report prepared for the provincial justice department some years ago, Richard added.

"It doesn't worry us in the least," he said in an interview from Quebec City.

Johnson said Friday the latest round of contract talks between the two sides broke down because the police union continued to pursue the salary issue the government refuses to discuss.

Premier René Lévesque said last week that the government would have to take steps to end the dispute unless it was soon settled.

"What has been built up over the last 20 years is in the process of being demolished," the paper quotes police director Jacques Beaudoin as saying in an interview.

NOT IN CONTROL

Beaudoin said earlier this month he could no longer control his men because union directives for a pressure campaign were being given priority over his orders.

That prompted Johnson to withdraw provincial police from the security net around the summit that ends today in Quebec City between U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

The union refuses to call off a pressure campaign since last summer when the government rejected the wage recommendations of a Quebec Labor Department arbitrator and imposed a contract that will pay an average of $2,000 less a year.

Leaders name acid rain ambassadors at summit

'Then there's the one...' Irish jokes were the order of the day as Brian Mulroney and Ronald Reagan met Sunday at Quebec City airport.

Mulroney, Reagan spend rest of time praising each other

QUEBEC (CP) — President Ronald Reagan and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney kicked off their Shamrock Summit Sunday by agreeing to appoint high-level envoys to study the contentious acid rain issue.

Mulroney, portraying the development as a significant step forward, named former Ontario premier William Davis as Canada's special representative.

Reagan said he "couldn't be happier about getting this underway" and named Andrew Lewis, his former transportation secretary as the United States' representative.

The announcement of special envoys, expected since last week and immediately decried as inadequate by the leading Canadian acid rain lobby group, was announced by the two leaders after the first private meeting of their two-day summit.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes made clear the envoys have no authority to implement action.

They will make their recommendations to Reagan and Mulroney who will then decide what, if any, action should be taken.

The United States has been repeatedly stalled Canadian demands for action on acid rain since Reagan promised his "best efforts" to solve the issue at his 1981 summit with former Liberal prime minister Pierre Trudeau.

This summit began with a chilly, but colorful welcome ceremony at the Quebec City airport, during which both Reagan and Mulroney referred to their Irish heritage.

FLASHY GREEN TIE

Reagan, wearing a flashy green tie to mark St. Patrick's Day, joked that he turns "green with envy" when he thinks of Mulroney's majority in Parliament. Despite Reagan's landslide re-election victory Nov. 6, he faces an uphill battle to get many of his programs approved by Congress.

Reagan is accompanied by his wife Nancy and several members of his cabinet, a move designed to demonstrate U.S. desire to forge a "new partnership" with Canada, U.S. officials said.

The mandate of the two envoys, as described by Canadian and U.S. officials, was vague and deals primarily with exploring ways the two countries can consult and enhance co-operation on issues related to acid rain.

But officials from both sides stressed that the high-level appointments of Lewis and Davis guarantee them access to the president and prime minister.

"The people who have been appointed today represent artists in politics," one Canadian official said.

"Acid rain resolution will require artistry in politics," Davis and Lewis, who will hold their first meeting within the next two weeks, have been asked to report back to Mulroney and Reagan at their next annual meeting, expected sometime next spring.

Canadian officials said they would be paid a token $1 a year for their services which are not expected to amount to full-time jobs.

BELITTLES DEAL

Michael Perley of the Canadian Acid Rain Coalition belittled the agreement as falling short of a joint effort needed to clean up acid rain on both sides of the border.

"It underlines the fact that the president is completely out of step — not only with Canada — but with the rest of the world," he said.

But Canadian officials briefing reporters characterized the decision as the strongest commitment so far from Reagan.

"We're talking action," one official said, attempting to squelch suggestions that the move merely promised more study.

Acid rain dominated the leaders' first meeting, although officials said they touched briefly on East-West relations.

Speakes said Reagan was "very interested" in Mulroney's views on Mikhail Gorbachev, the new Soviet leader with whom Mulroney spent 45 minutes last week after attending the funeral of Konstantin Chernenko in Moscow.

Speakes said Mulroney and Reagan demonstrated "solid agreement" on almost every issue they discussed.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said Reagan and Mulroney "See REAGAN page 2."

Six arrested in scuffles with police

QUEBEC (CP) — President Ronald Reagan was smuggled into a side entrance of his hotel Sunday to avoid a noisy demonstration and a scuffle between police and six young men taunting them with black flags, sticks and insults.

Several hundred demonstrators, protesting Reagan's two-day summit meeting here with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, shouted "Yankee Go Home" and "Reagan Assassin" as the American president's motorcade arrived at the Chateau Frontenac Hotel.

Five young men were arrested in Place d'Armes Square facing the main entrance to the hotel courtyard, when police moved in.

Reagan did not see the demonstration, although he was within shouting distance.

The demonstrators — members of the Communist Party of Canada (Marxist-Leninist), people with umbrellas protesting acid rain and others — broke their agreement with police to disperse as the Reagan party approached the hotel overlooking the St. Lawrence River.

Police estimated about 4,000 protesters were in Quebec City for various events Sunday.

About 1,500 of them, protesting a wide range of issues, staged a peaceful rally in the square after a march from the Quebec National Assembly through the streets of the Old City. Most of them then headed onto a cultural event in the basement of a nearby church.

The long line of marchers paraded under sunny skies in crisp sub-zero temperatures to protest U.S. military policy, nuclear radiation, acid rain and a variety of other causes.

The demonstration was organized by a coalition of peace, ecological and left-wing organizations.

The protesters, led by Central American refugees, chanted political slogans including: "A people united shall never be defeated."

Acid rain protesters, bearing a 10-metre inflatable smokestack, were joined by protesters calling for a Free Ireland, support for opposition parties in the Philippines and the overthrow of the Khomeini regime in Iran.

Others yelled: "Arms are for Hugging" and "Jobs, not Bombs."

One sign referred to the so-called "Shamrock Summit" as the Sham Summit. John Harney, president of the Quebec wing of the New Democratic Party, echoed complaints last week by his federal counterparts that the Mulroney government is signing a major agreement with the U.S. to overhaul North American air defence "without first referring (it) to Parliament, the voice of the Canadian people."

Canadian shows too expensive — Juneau

OTTAWA (CP) — The CBC cannot afford to replace its popular American television shows with more expensive Canadian productions, network president Pierre Juneau says.

"You can buy an American program, one hour, for $35,000 to $50,000, like Dallas for instance, whereas these programs cost at least a million dollars now to produce per hour," Juneau said in an interview broadcast Sunday by NewsRadio.

"If we produce them in Canada we can manage to produce them at a lesser cost but it's still much more than the cost of buying an American program off the shelf."

For those reasons, he said, the CBC "cannot afford to replace them."

He said the network will continue to try to satisfy the Canadian viewer's demand for domestic productions such as Seeing Things, Charlie Grant's War and Gentle Sinners.

"We've had for all those programs better ratings than for most of the American programs we put on," Juneau noted.

He agreed Canadians need quality domestic productions.

BRIDGE DISTANCES

"There's so many things that separate one part of the country from the other — languages, ethnic origin, religion, distances. I think we must bridge those distances and stories can do that.

"Unfortunately, we're not telling Canadians enough stories about themselves."

An embargoed text of the interview was made available Friday — the same day federal Communications Minister Marcel Masse pledged to increase funds for Canadian drama, children's and documentary TV programs.

For a year beginning next month, Telefilm Canada, the federal agency which administers a five-year $200-million television program development fund established in 1983, will increase its funding of Canadian productions to 49 per cent from 33 per cent.

The CBC will have access to up to half the fund. Private broadcasters will have access to no less than half.

Juneau said in a statement issued Friday that the CBC "will do everything possible to make full use of the proposals in order to extend its co-operative partnership with the private sector."

He said the new regulations "will enable the corporation to continue working toward its most important objective of increasing the availability of distinctive Canadian programming."

Mexico murder suspects say they were tortured

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Six police officers and a former police agent have been arraigned on charges of kidnapping and killing a U.S. drug agent. Some of the defendants claimed they had been tortured and forced to sign confessions.

The men, six of them Jalisco state police officers, stood behind bars Sunday while officials read more than 380 pages of evidence against them. The accused said they had been beaten and given electric shocks, and had not been fed for a week. One other suspect died in police custody last week.

Judge Gonzalo Ballesteros Tena said "all seven are charged to a greater or lesser degree" with the three most serious crimes — homicide, kidnapping and drug-related offences. He said the degree of each person's charges would be determined later.

He said he did not expect any of the defendants to be released on bail.

Kidnapping carries a sentence ranging from six to 40 years in prison, murder from eight to 20 years, and narcotics violations seven to 15 years.

Ballesteros Tena must decide by late Tuesday whether the evidence is sufficient to consider the men "presumed responsible" for the crimes. If so, he has a year to hear more evidence and reach a verdict. If not, the case is thrown out of court.

The defendants are among 13 people arrested last week in an investigation of the killing of Enrique Camarena Salazar, a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent, and Alfredo Zavala Avelar, a pilot who worked with him. Camarena and Zavala were kidnapped Feb. 7 in Guadalajara and their severely beaten bodies were found March 5 on a ranch 96 kilometres east of the city.

Felipe Flores, a spokesman for the Attorney General's office, said Saturday that authorities are still looking for six or seven other people in the case, including a reputed drug trafficker, Rafael Caro Quintero. Authorities say they have issued several more arrest warrants.

Of the 13 people arrested so far, four were released after questioning, one was turned over to state authorities in Guadalajara on other charges and the other, commander Gabriel Gonzalez Gonzalez of the Jalisco homicide division, died in custody.

Jose Guadalupe Munoz Villareal, the former police agent, told the court Sunday he had heard sounds of Gonzalez Gonzalez being tortured to death.

"We could hear his screams and we knew his voice," he said. "And at a certain time his screams stopped and we heard someone say, 'This ox is gone.'" The Attorney General's office said last week an autopsy showed the cause of death was "acute bleeding of the pancreas" and indicated no signs of beating.

Munoz Villareal showed the court a bruise on his shoulder and burns on his right ankle. He said that in addition to being beaten, his head had been forced into a toilet bowl, carbonated water was forced up his nose, and he was given electric shocks.

Munoz Villareal said he had been forced to sign a confession, "a sheet of paper already written out."

Turkish ambassador recovers

OTTAWA (CP) — Turkish Ambassador Coskun Kirca is in stable condition and recovering well from his injuries after last Tuesday's attack on the Turkish embassy, an Ottawa General Hospital spokesman said Sunday.

The 58-year-old diplomat's condition is "definitely stable," said Claude Dufault.

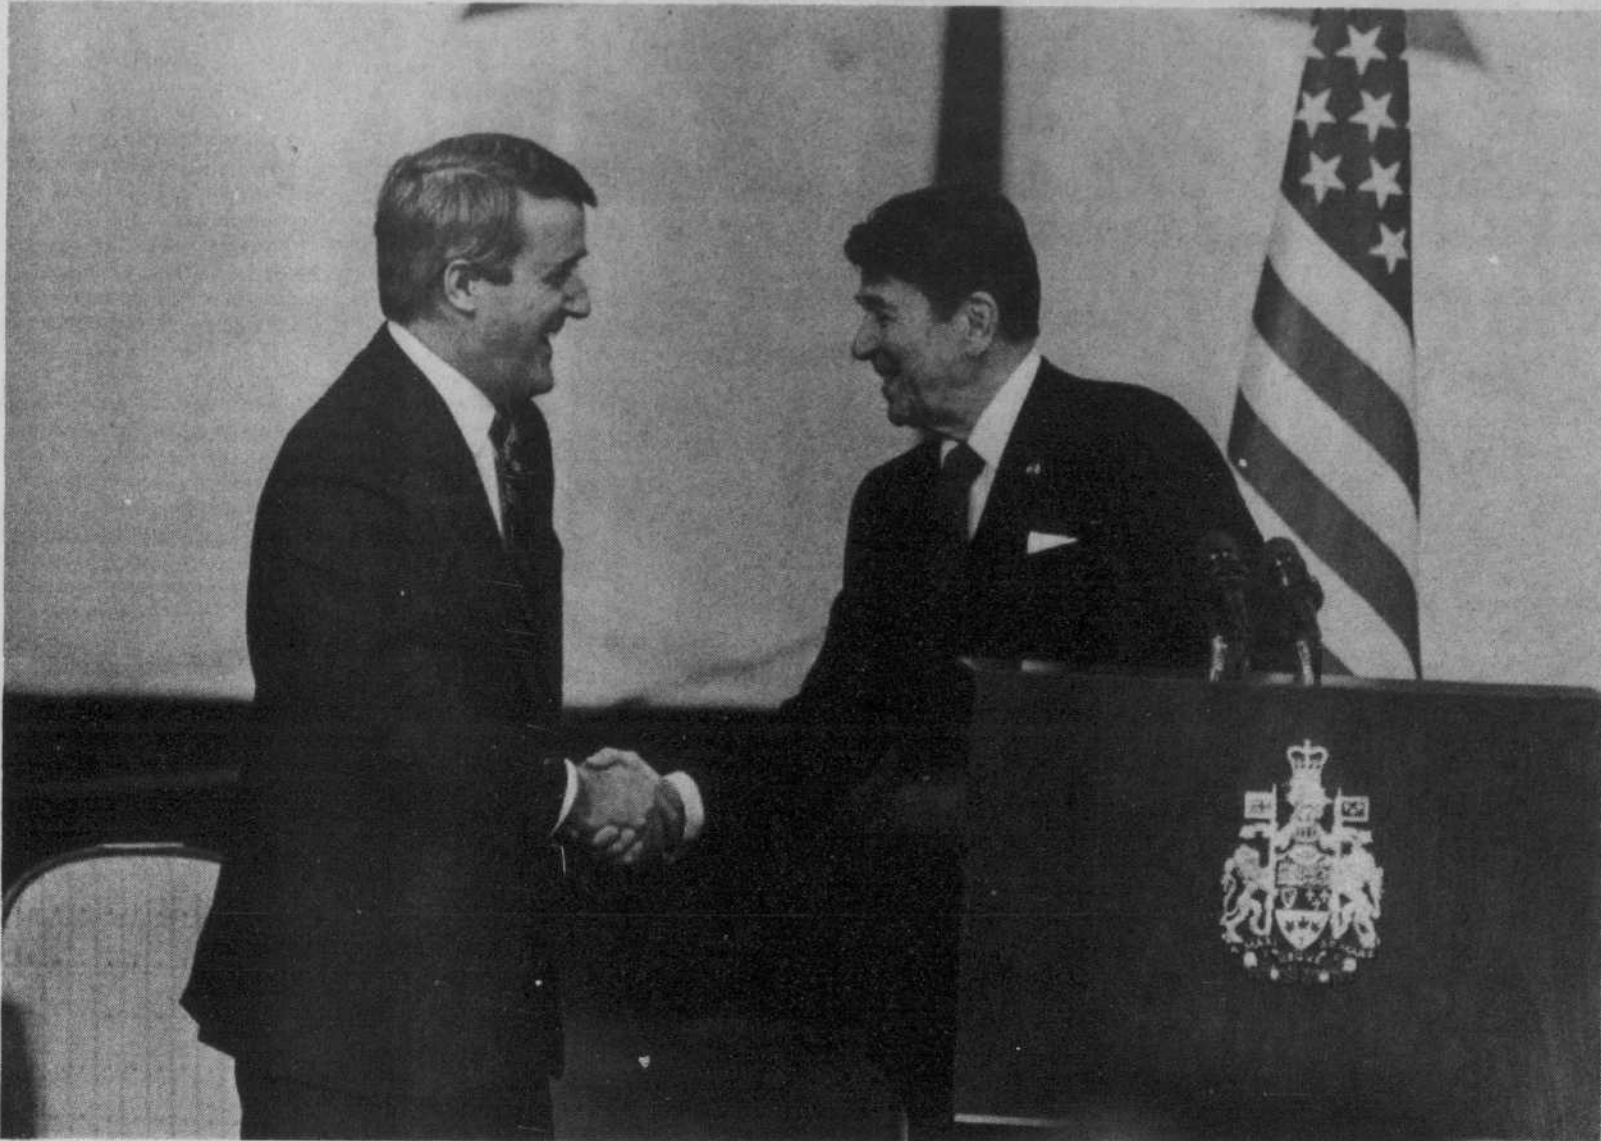

"It is impossible at this time to say how long he will be hospitalized," he added.

Kirca, who underwent surgery for "serious fractures to his right leg, right arm and pelvis," was also treated for bruises suffered when he jumped out a bedroom window to avoid being taken hostage, Dufault said.

Three heavily-armed men, claiming to be members of the Armenian Revolutionary Army, stormed the Turkish Embassy last week, killing 31-year-old security guard Claude Brunelle, blowing open the front door with explosives and taking 12 people hostage.

Reagan approaching acid rain with 'open mind' — U.S. official

Shultz and External Affairs Minister Joe Clark also met Sunday, discussing arms control as well as Clark's visit to Moscow next month.

Canadian officials said Shultz pressed Clark on whether the Mulroney government plans to ease up on a section of the national energy program that gives Petro-Canada, the federal oil company, a 25-per-cent share in all oil discoveries in the North and offshore before 1980. Clark made no commitment, they said.

About 4,000 demonstrators, the majority calling for action to fight acid rain, were scattered across the city as the president's entourage made its way from the airport.

At least six were arrested after causing disturbances, but most of the protests were peaceful.

The acid rain announcement had been in the works for weeks as officials from both sides agonized over how to prevent a stalemate on the issue.

Mulroney raised the stakes by stating before Christmas that acid rain would be at the top of his agenda for the meeting with Reagan.

Canada-U.S. negotiations on a joint acid rain program, initiated in 1980, collapsed in 1982. Those talks were initiated by the former Liberal government and the former U.S. administration of Jimmy Carter.

Reagan has consistently said more research is needed before a costly cleanup program can be justified. Mulroney, echoing the former Liberal government, wanted some joint action taken now.

The result, clearly less than what the Canadian government wanted, is designed to give the impression of some movement by Reagan without committing him to a change in his current position.

Speakers told reporters that Reagan has not changed his view, but that he is approaching the subject "with an open mind."

Regardless, the decision to deal with the contentious issue Sunday was clearly aimed at clearing the agenda for friendlier topics today.

The Reagans, accompanied by Mulroney and his wife Mila, were the guests of honor at a special gala performance Sunday night at the Grand Theatre of Quebec.

Today, the Canadian and U.S. delegations settle in for two hours of talks on arms control, East-West relations, defence and trade issues.

Reagan is anxious to have Mulroney publicly embrace the U.S. approach to arms control, including his pet Star Wars space defence project.

The finale for the visit, Reagan's first foreign jaunt since his reelection, is the signing of three accords.

They include an agreement to split the $1.5 billion cost of updating the Distant Early Warning system in the North, a mutual assistance pact on crime fighting and a West Coast Pacific Salmon Treaty, the subject of 14 years of negotiations.

Mulroney solos, dancers jig, puppets strip, Lévesque applauds

QUEBEC (CP) — Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and President Ronald Reagan stole their hearts away Sunday at a gala concert marking the end of the first day of their summit meeting.

To a standing ovation from the 1,800 invited guests, the two leaders and their wives joined singers, dancers and the audience for a chorus of When Irish Eyes are Smiling.

Mulroney even did a little solo at the end of the famous chorus when he warbled "When Irish Eyes are smiling" sure they steal your heart away."

To encourage the audience to join in, concert organizers had included a printed sheet in the concert program with the words of the famous Irish ditty.

Though their names weren't on the program, the appearance of the two leaders on stage was not a complete surprise. Rumors had been circulating for days that they'd be capping the so-called Shamrock Summit with a blarney touch.

Even Quebec Premier René Lévesque, sitting with his wife Corinne in the theatre box next to that of Mulroney and Reagan, joined the crowd for the rendition of the chorus.

The concert was scripted, like the rest of the summit meeting, with a strong Irish touch throughout. Dancers from the Montreal-based Les Grands Ballets Canadiens opened the concert with a dance to a lively jig tune.

GLITTERING AFFAIR

It was a glittering affair from beginning to end. Mulroney and his wife Mila, in a glittering emerald gown with a jewelled brooch in a low-waisted sash, were greeted with trumpet fanfare at the door of the Grand Theatre in downtown Quebec City.

They remained near the door to greet Reagan and his wife Nancy who was also wearing St. Patrick's Day colors — a two-piece silver and green gown belted in gold.

The concert was hosted by opera singer Maureen Forrester who gave the English introductions, opera singer Claude Corbeil who spoke in French and comedian Jean-Guy Moreau, who quipped that he was there to translate into American.

Moreau, a well-known Quebec impersonator, did imitations of both Mulroney and Reagan.

In the only political jokes of the evening he had Mulroney talking on a blue phone to a senator in Ottawa warning he was going to turn the heat off in the Senate. He imitated Reagan talking to a NASA official who had just seen the dollar going out of sight.

The artists who performed in the hour-long concert, came from around the country.

Acadian singer Edith Butler sang a lively ode to her hometown Paquetville while the internationally acclaimed Ginette Reno performed her latest hit C'est beaucoup mieux comme ça (It's Better That Way).

After Reno's number and a whispered consultation with Maureen Forrester, Reno congratulated PQ manages to snub U.S.

The media often present some interesting contrasts when bilateral or international issues are involved.

"Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's decision to invite President Reagan to Quebec City was intended to signal to the world that Canada's French separatist movement is no longer a threat," reported The Associated Press, the main U.S. wire service.

That may or may not be true. But the Parti Quebecois government showed it still has the strength to at least snub its nose at the federal government.

Just down the street from Reagan's hotel, city workmen were busy Sunday evening hoisting Canadian flags on federal property.

It seems there was a slight omission along Reagan's route into town from the airport. The ceremonial rotunda outside the National Assembly was plastered with with the Stars and Stripes and Quebec's blue-and-white flag.

Nary a red-and-white Canadian pennant could be seen.

Then there's the case of acid rain — highlight of Sunday's opening talks after Mulroney and Reagan appointed special envoys to study the issue.

"Some scientific evidence," reported Reuter, a worldwide news agency, "suggests sulphur dioxide emissions from coal-fired power plants in the central United States blow over Eastern Canada and damage lakes and streams."

Reagan, who's been stalling action for years on the devastating airborne pollution, would have been happy to read that.

But most Canadians, and their neighbors in the northeastern U.S., who have witnessed the destruction acid rain causes, don't have many doubts that industrial emissions in both nations are killing lakes and fish and damaging forests.

la Mulroney on her recently-announced pregnancy.

The Famous People Players from Toronto got a warm reception for their puppets and props that are manipulated in darkness and made visible with fluorescent lighting. To a striptease tune, a dancer peels her garments until nothing is left but darkness.

Other performers included dancer Jeff Hyslop and Quebec entertainer Michel Lemieux who creates sound and light performances with electronic wizardry.

Marc Garneau, Canada's first astronaut, made a brief appearance, rising from the middle of the stage in a cloud of smoke to the theme song from the movie Star Wars, which is also the popular name for Reagan's space-based weapons research program.

The finale took up the Irish theme again with a pub and a troupe of tap dancers from the National Tap Dance Company of Canada and the Quebec folkdance group Les Sortilèges.

When the curtain went down green and white balloons floated down from the ceiling to close the concert.

Convoy outsmarts demonstrators

Ronald Reagan and Brian Mulroney entered Quebec City's Château Frontenac hotel by a rear driveway Sunday to avoid a confrontation with protestors waiting for them out front. While the demonstrators chanted 'Reagan go home', the two leaders chatted about acid rain on their way inside.

Low-cost housing for border elderly; Ottawa-Québec to help pay

By Bobby Fisher

ROCK ISLAND — A 10-tenement low-cost housing project for the elderly in the Three Villages area will become a reality if a place to build can be found, Richard Groleau said Friday.

A three-member committee made up of police chief Groleau, Rock Island Mayor Jean Louis Dupont and town councillor Paul Durouchers put together a proposal to erect a low-rent building. The idea has been accepted by the federal Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC).

The go-ahead from the federal government means the group can count upon a $390,000 Ottawa subsidy and at least $10,000 from the provincially-backed Société d'Habitation du Québec (Quebec's housing authority).

"There are two pieces of land that are suitable," Groleau said at a press conference Friday. "One of them meets all the requirements but we need the owner's consent to buy it. That's what we are working on."

MOVE QUICKLY

The border area project falls under the name Live at Home or Vivre Chez Soi. Groleau said events will transpire quickly once land is purchased — construction should begin within four months and tenants will begin to move in four months after that.

"We have to submit a site to the (CMHC) that is suitable," Groleau explained. "It has to meet all the standards of the CMHC and when it's finally accepted — and we have to send this to them by March 31 — then it's a 'go'."

Groleau called Friday's press conference "phase one." He said his committee has hired Pierre Morency and the Société de Restauration de Sherbrooke (SORES) and Fédération des Coopératives d'Habitation Populaires des Cantons de l'Est (GRTS) company "to take care of the technical aspects" of the project. The same group is involved in the similar Paton Mills housing project in Sherbrooke.

"We are subsidized to do this," Groleau explained.

PLENTY OF INPUT

Tenants at the proposed building will have representatives on the board of directors and will have "a great deal of input" into the project, Groleau said.

"It has to be acceptable to the community," he said. "It has to be something that enhances the appearance of the villages, the environment."

"This is a program that not only gives the people low-cost housing but allows them to be active in the administration," Morency added. "In the coming weeks," Morency went on, "we will be consulting the public, searching out the people who can benefit from this."

Groleau said he already has a short list of possible tenants but that "it is not full." Both men balked at giving out rental figures but Groleau allowed that it might be something similar to the format at the Paton Mills site where tenants are charged a percentage of their income.

He also said the committee had the choice of "either restoring something or building from the ground up."

"We decided to build," Groleau said. "It's going to be a flat concrete base and it will go very quickly."

Butterfield aftermath fading, says Mayor Jean-Louis Dupont

ROCK ISLAND — Jean Louis Dupont says the Three Villages area is slowly getting back on its economic feet.

At a press conference Friday to announce plans for a low-rent housing project for the elderly, the Rock Island mayor commented on the financial condition of the Rock Island-Stanstead-Beebe region. Thirty-six-and-a-half months ago Butterfield Division of Litton Industries, at the time the area's largest employer with about 200 factory and office workers, announced it would be permanently closing its doors on May 31 of the same year. At the time many people speculated it was the sounding of the death knoll for the border region.

"The future looks much better than before," Dupont said. "Especially with the new industry — International Cutting Tools — in Beebe. They have 55 or 60 people from the Three Villages area working there now and the owner of the company (Vincent Miniccozzi) told me that in two or three years that may be 250 or 300 people."

MORE INDUSTRY?

International Cutting Tools is a St. Leonard-based industrial cutting tool producing company that opened a division in Beebe. Dupont said the added jobs and prospects of more to come have greatly enhanced the region's drawing ability for other industry.

He said that he "has something" else in mind but that "it is not all set."

And Dupont said a tourist information bureau on Route 55 near the Canadian customs is another project he has been working on recently. "I had a meeting with a representative of the Quebec Tourist Ministry two weeks ago and she came to see the land near the Canadian customs. She said the situation for getting a tourist information office is very good."

"She said she is going to make a report to Mr. Marcel Leger, the provincial minister, and she told me last week that I'm supposed to have some news from her this week or next week."

The primary problem, Dupont said, is that the land is owned by the Canadian government. He said that efforts are being made to get the two levels of government to come to some sort of leasing or purchase agreement.

Dupont said he doesn't know for sure how many permanent jobs might be created but that "maybe for the summer, maybe four or five or six."

Windsor Save Domtar crew to Ottawa — appointments or not

WINDSOR — Members of the Save Domtar committee say they can't wait until next week to meet Prime Minister Brian Mulroney so they will head to Ottawa Tuesday for what they think is the next best thing: encounters with Opposition Leader John Turner and NDP leader Ed Broadbent.

The Windsor survival group has been promised a meeting with the prime minister next week, following his summits with U.S. president Ronald Reagan and the nation's economic leaders this week. But they say next week will be too late.

Although no firm meetings have been set, five leaders of the committee will be in the capital Tuesday, hoping to hook up with Turner, Broadbent or both. "We don't have an appointment with Prime Minister Mulroney," Windsor Mayor Adrien Pelquin said Saturday. "We gave (Sherbrooke Tory MP Jean) Mr. Charest a week to get us one. If we don't get an answer Monday, we'll go to Ottawa Tuesday."

"This has dragged on long enough," Pelquin added.

The mayor was speaking at a parish supper the survival committee organized for more than 500 supporters Saturday.

MP Charest told the crowd the Domtar case "is one of the few files the prime minister has taken personal control of, and I think for that reason there is no reason to become anxious."

NOISE NOT NEEDED

"I invite you to remain calm, and you don't have to make a lot of noise because your demands have already been heard very clearly," Charest added.

The young MP's remarks angered Johnson PQ MNA Carmen Juneau, a Windsor native and one of the survival committee leaders. "We have to start fighting," Juneau said, "and continue all the means of pressure already begun. We have to join hands and stay together."

"In politics you can't take anything for granted."

Richmond Liberal MP Alain Tardif was also distressed at Charest's plea for calm, blaming the Tories for the Domtar impasse.

Michel Bousquet, president of the Save Domtar committee, warned that "we shouldn't feel reassured" by the Conservative's words.

Saturday's supper also featured a slide show vaunting the merits of the stalled $1.2-billion project, which would see the construction of a new mill above town to replace the ancient Windsor fine-paper plant.

Meanwhile, committee members say they have finished delivering 450,000 letters of support to Quebec's 192 MPs and MNAs. The letters, printed on Domtar stationery and enclosed in Domtar envelopes, were delivered by hand in Domtar boxes last week, they said.

Highwater hotel destroyed in fire

HIGHWATER — A fire of an undetermined cause completely destroyed the Highwater Hotel Saturday.

Mansonville fire chief Fred Korman said the 12-man volunteer force received a call shortly before 3 a.m. and upon arrival at the scene found the two-storey wooden-frame building completely engulfed in flames.

"The heat was so intense we couldn't get near the building so we kept the trucks there to prevent any possible damage to adjacent structures," he explained.

Korman said it was impossible to determine where the fire broke out and added, "All the windows were out and it was burning from end to end and top to bottom. I don't know how the owner got out but all he had on was a t-shirt and his trousers."

The firefighters, who had one pumper and a pumper-tanker with a 5,000 gallon reservoir, stayed at the scene until 5:30 a.m. Korman said the firemen could have used pumps and water from the Missisquoi River had the fire spread. There was no call for assistance from other departments and there were no injuries.

The fire chief wouldn't comment on the cost of the loss, stating simply that it was "a very old building."

Cowansville, Quebec, Police Force officers identified the owner as André Marchand and said the building was insured for a total of $75,000 — $65,000 for the structure and $10,000 for the inventory. The police spokesman said representatives of the Fire Underwriters Bureau and QPF arson squad investigators will open an investigation into the cause of the fire.

Truck enters Galt St. living room

SHERBROOKE — Ginette Trudeau-Maheu was beginning some housecleaning Friday morning when suddenly a truck crashed into the front of her home, spewing debris into the living room and causing an estimated $35,000 in damages.

The truck, driven by René Breault of Waterloo, was travelling West along Galt Street East when it hit the small home on the corner of 7th Avenue. Breault was apparently cut off, swerved to avoid hitting a car, and lost control of the vehicle. The sand-filled truck then went barreling through a fence, hit some trees, crashed through the verandah, smashed a large window and finally came to a stop after caving in the wall of the Maheu living room.

"It was like an earthquake — the whole house was shaking," said Maheu, who had walked from the living room into the adjacent bedroom only moments before the accident. "I remember mostly the sound of breaking branches. The first thing I did was dial '0' to get the police and the fire department," she said.

Maheu's husband, Nolin, had already left for work and her two children, seven and 10, were at school at the time of the accident. There were no injuries.

According to Breault, a co-owner of Breault Excavation Inc. of Compton, he was crossing the intersection at 7th Avenue when the light turned yellow and a car from 7th avenue crossed in front of him.

"I didn't see the light turn red," he said. "When saw the car in front of me I tried to turn quickly."

The Maheu home, which had been extensively renovated less than two years ago, is being emptied of furniture this week as the approximately $35,000 in repairs begin.

Sherbrooke fire fighters arrived at the home of Ginette and Nolin Maheu shortly after a truck crashed into the living room of the Galt Street home.

Two died in Woburn summer cottage blaze

WOBBURN — André Pépin, 25, and Brigitte Turgeon, 23, died in a fire Sunday morning in a country chalet near this town 40 kilometres south of Lake Megantic.

Both were local residents.

Although police say they don't suspect foul play in the deaths, autopsies will be performed today at police laboratories in Montreal.

Smoke from the fatal fire was spotted by breakfast diners at the Woburn hotel who thought at first that a nearby sugarmaker had fired up his boiler. But resident Maurice Pépin, a cousin of one of the victims, realized that something else was burning. "I know this corner like my hand," Pépin said. "I understood right away that it was something else." Pépin alerted police when he found out what was burning.

Quebec Police Force investigators led by Dets. Thomas McConnell and Jacques Fréchette have few leads, said QPF spokesman René Côté, but they have already set aside the most obvious possibility, a malfunction in the cottage's woodstove. "There were no ashes in the stove," Côté said.

Police said the couple appeared to have been asphyxiated in their sleep.

Fire leaves 7 families homeless

SHERBROOKE — Seven families are looking for new homes today after damage from a fire Saturday made their east ward tenement block unlivable.

The flames had already taken a firm hold before Sherbrooke fire fighters were called to the wood-frame building at 43-55 8th Ave. north at about 3:15 Saturday. A second alarm was sounded immediately.

Resident Jean-Louis Plante had warned tenants to evacuate while his wife called police. "Someone came and knocked at the front door to tell us there was a lot of smoke out back," Plante said later. "I went and looked and saw that there was a fire upstairs."

The building is not considered a total loss although extensive repairs will be needed before the tenants can return.

No injuries were reported.

Man killed in icy crash

BROMONT (JM) — Blinding snow and slippery road surfaces were the presumed cause of a head-on collision which resulted in the death of Gaetan Quirion, 32, of St. Paul d'Abbotsford, Friday.

Quirion was driving a car which collided with another driven by 21-year-old Daniel Brunet of Granby on Boulevard Pierre Laporte about 250 metres south of the Eastern Townships Autoroute entry ramp at 3:20 p.m.

Quirion was dead at the scene and Bromont Police had to call for help to cut open his car as the ambulance attendants couldn't extricate his body. Brunet was taken to the Granby Medical Centre where he was treated for lacerations and a broken jaw.

Learning from our neighbors

On the first day of U.S. president Ronald Reagan's trip to Quebec City, members of the host entourage of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney were quick to pick up a couple of bad habits from the visitors: the 'backgrounder' and the white lie. Neither is particularly acceptable back in the U.S.A., and neither should be allowed to take root here.

First, the 'backgrounder'. This is a form of news conference which found birth during the presidency of Richard Nixon and has been refined and developed by his successors. At a 'backgrounder' (now a daily event at the White House), spokesmen for the president fill in the gaps in what the top man has or hasn't said and done during the day. Reporters are told at the beginning of a backgrounder, and reminded at the end, that they may not directly quote the people speaking — a complete reversal of their normal practice. The reasoning is that the 'officials' — as they insist on being described — should not take the limelight away from the boss by getting their names in the papers instead of his, and that they will feel more at ease answering questions if they know they aren't going to be held personally responsible for every word later.

The trouble with this is that the 'officials', like any public figure who knows they will not be accountable for what they say, tend to take liberties with the truth, bringing the 'backgrounder' down to the status of a 'below-grounder' when it comes to ethics.

And this is where the white lie comes in. Perhaps feeling that they too had to contribute to the spirit of continental co-operation apparent at the Shamrock Summit, the Mulroney 'administration' — as the Americans cutely called the prime minister's staff — held its own 'backgrounder' Sunday. But press aide Bill Fox, communications director Fred Doucet and company fell into the ethical trap right off the top, telling reporters a little off-white lie. Asked why the Reagan motorcade had made a last-minute change in its route between Quebec City airport and the Château Frontenac hotel, Canada's 'officials' quickly replied that the detour had never happened, although dozens of reporters had seen the change take place and several of the drivers and security police confirmed it. (To avoid the anti-U.S. demonstrators waiting in front, the limousines approached the hotel from the back.)

In fairness to the 'officials', the false denial was a minor lapse; after all, who could blame the big shots for wanting to try a little sidestep on the demonstrators? But in fairness to the truth, it was still a lie, whether big and black or small and pastel.

Fox, Doucet and company should know better. After all, they helped conceive the Conservative 'guidelines' for civil servants talking to the press. Simply put, the Tory guidelines instruct that every word a bureaucrat says to reporters must be considered 'on the record'. As recently as last week, Fox told a reporter (Neil Macdonald of the Ottawa Citizen) that EVERYTHING he says should be attributable to him. EVERYTHING, he said. And what's on-the-record for the civil service geese should be on-the-record for the prime minister's ganders. Canada has a lot to learn from the Americans. But please, not this!

Montreal Le Devoir: A recent opinion poll indicates the Parti Québécois is headed for a heavy defeat in the next provincial election, expected this summer, unless there is a change in leadership within the party....

The poll states that had an election been held about three weeks ago, the Liberals, led by Robert Bourassa, would have captured 56 per cent of the vote, 20 percentage points more than the PQ. On a personal level, Bourassa and PQ Leader René Lévesque were about even. Almost two-thirds of the people polled were satisfied with them....

But the poll also indicates that a PQ led by current Justice Minister Pierre-Marc Johnson would gain 46 per cent of the popular vote. Although this is three percentage points behind the Liberals' vote, it would be enough to allow the PQ to retain power because the Liberals would still be hurt by the electoral map....

With such a control over his troops and the public, Lévesque could assure an orderly transition within the PQ. He certainly won't be able to do this after an election defeat when the hardliners who left the party return to skin the party, show where it went wrong and blast those they consider responsible for the defeat.

One explanation for Lévesque's obstinacy is that he is plugging the gaps through which the dissidents would try to return, and that he would then launch a leadership campaign that would enable Johnson, who is more popular with the public than he is within the PQ, to carry the day.

But this is not the case. Lévesque, who has repeatedly said he will lead the PQ in the next election, now works alone more than ever.

Lévesque is banking on his own popularity and the possibility of a quick constitutional agreement to steer him back into power....

But Quebecers aren't in as such a rush to have the constitutional agreement signed....

At least with Johnson at the helm of the PQ, the election would be fought on a variety of issues affecting Quebec's future and not just on the obsessions of one man. The public wants changes and it is up to Lévesque, who claims to know and love this public, to allow this wish to come true.

Acid rain deal a 'face saver' for PM Mulroney

QUEBEC (CP) — President Ronald Reagan and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney avoided a stalemate over the thorny acid rain issue Sunday.

But their decision to appoint two special envoys to study the issue represents a thinly-disguised political solution rather than a concrete plan for joint action to curb acid rain.

"To a Canadian, I'm sorry," a U.S. official close to the acid rain negotiations said last week after the finishing touches had been put on the proposal. Mulroney, who had said getting progress on acid rain was his top priority for the meeting, tried to make the best of the decision.

He called it a significant step forward that would shift acid rain to the frontburner from the backburner where it has languished since Canada-U.S. negotiations for a joint program broke off in 1982.

"We have managed to break a deadlock," said Mulroney.

Reagan was noticeably less enthusiastic in his comments. While he said he was happy to get things moving on the issue, he steered clear of calling the move a breakthrough.

TO MAKE RECOMMENDATIONS

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes was also quick to dampen expectations, saying the two envoys would have no authority beyond making recommendations to their respective bosses.

The two men who have agreed to take on the job at a token $1 a year are former premier Bill Davis of Ontario and Andrew Lewis, U.S. transportation secretary from 1981-83 and now chairman of the board of Warner Amex Cable Communications.

Canadian and American officials played up the high calibre of the two envoys and said their stature would guarantee them direct access to Reagan and Mulroney.

But their mandate, which says they must report to the two leaders a year from now, was decidedly vague.

They are to consult on regulations affecting acid rain pollution, enhance co-operation on research, pursue means to increase exchanges of scientific data and identify efforts to improve the U.S. and Canadian environments.

None of those guides should cause Reagan or opponents of a control program for acid rain to loose sleep.

However, the plan is a face-saver for Mulroney because he doesn't come away from the meeting empty-handed as some officials feared only a few weeks ago might happen.

STUCK LIKE GLUE

Reagan has stuck like glue to his contention that more research into the causes and effects are needed before an expensive program to clean up emissions that cause acid rain can be undertaken.

Speakes told reporters the president "has not changed his mind," but he is approaching the issue "with an open mind."

In a bid to put pressure on Reagan, the Mulroney government announced a federal-provincial deal earlier this month to cut emissions of sulphur dioxide by 50 per cent in Canada within the next decade.

But experts generally concede that Canada cannot reach its target without action on the U.S. side of the border, the source of about 50 per cent of the acid rain falling in Ontario and Quebec, damaging forests and killing fish in lakes and rivers.

Canadian and U.S. environmental groups quickly jumped on the envoy plan as a mockery.

"President Reagan has found a way to package a do-nothing policy," said

Leslie Bach of the U.S. National Audubon Society. "This isn't progress."

David Hawkins of the National Resources Defence Council was less critical, saying he would give Davis and Lewis two or three months to prove "this isn't a sham."

Michael Perley of the Canadian Acid Rain Coalition accused Reagan of being out of step with Canada and the rest of the world on acid rain.

He attributed Mulroney's attempts to put a bright face on the results to the prime minister's desire to "be a good host."

At the same time, Perley probably hit the nail on the head when he suggested Reagan will not budge on the issue until the pressure in the United States for a controls program is so great that he cannot afford to reject action.

U.S. groups not happy with plan

WASHINGTON (CP) — Four leading U.S. environmental groups reacted with disappointment to an announcement Sunday that envoys from Canada and the United States were appointed to study acid rain.

Officials of the U.S. Clean Air Coalition, the Sierra Club and the National Audubon Society said they had hoped President Ronald Reagan would make a commitment to Prime Minister Brian Mulroney for actual steps to reduce the pollution that causes acid rain.

A fourth, David Hawkins of the Natural Resources Defence Council, said he is willing to give the envoys two or three months to prove "that this isn't a sham."

They were reacting to an announcement in Quebec City earlier Sunday that former Ontario premier William Davis and former U.S. transportation secretary Drew Lewis were appointed to consult on acid rain laws, regulations and research to help settle the longstanding dispute over the trans-border pollution.

NOT HAPPY

Betsy Agle, co-ordinator of the Clean Air Coalition, which represents more than 24 environmental groups, said that "this is disappointing because there are measures of control mechanisms that the president could have pursued and that's what we had looked forward to — from clear commitments to reduce acid rain."

"It's less than a commitment to enforce the current U.S. law and it confines a pattern of far less on the U.S. side than the Canadian side."

Leslie Bach of the Audubon Society said "this isn't progress — this is a continuation of an unacceptable status quo. The Canadians have acted themselves and the time for research has passed. President Reagan has found a way to package a do-nothing policy."

David Gardiner of the Sierra Club said "it is very disappointing. The Canadians are doing an excellent job and I think it is unfortunate the agreement doesn't call on the president to move forward with progress to curb acid rain."

Hawkins said he "gives them 60 to 90 days to talk to see if they are intending to accomplish something otherwise they will prove this is a sham."

On Thursday, the Sierra Club and Audubon Society sent a joint telegram to Mulroney urging him to reject any proposal by Reagan that simply entailed further talk and study of the issue.

While the delivery schedule of the above paper and the reply or lack of reply to my letter may not be of paramount importance in your terms, I feel that it is very indicative of the service being offered by Canada Post.

Daily I hear the horror stories of the service we are being subjected to and I would appreciate receiving some indication from your department that we can look forward an improved service from Canada Post without the never-ending increases in postal rates that you have subjected us to in the past with the implied improved service.

I have once again recorded your performance for the month of January. I regret to note that you have not maintained your November average of 1 mile per hour.

Not for export

Dear Editor:

I would like to see the evidence to support Ronald Reagan's claim that the U.S. is "the champion of democracy."

A few years ago someone did a study of U.S. and Soviet supported dictatorships. The Soviets supported 16 and the U.S. 20. It's good to be on the side of a winner. Also the greatest violation of human rights occurs in the U.S.- supported dictatorships.

The conclusion is rather obvious. Democracy is not for export. Don't knock it, it may be the reason we will have some around at home.

State-run paper calls summit propaganda

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Soviet news agency Tass said Sunday that President Ronald Reagan's visit to Canada is intended to secure Canadian involvement in the so-called Star Wars anti-missile research program.

Reagan flew Sunday to Quebec City for two days of talks with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

"Washington hopes that the visit will help involve Canada more heavily in its militaristic preparations, above all in outer space," Tass said, referring to Reagan's proposal to study a space-based missile-defence program.

The agency said "questions of economic and commercial relations and the problem of 'acid rains' ... were put on the agenda of the coming talks" at Canada's insistence.

But it said "statements made by representatives of the U.S. administration on the eve of the visit leave no doubt that the United States has no intention of discussing these questions in earnest."

"Thus, the solution of the problem of 'acid rains' will be put off again under the pretext of the need of additional research," the report concluded.

Tass did not say what statements by U.S. officials it was referring to.

Also Sunday, the Communist party daily Pravda accused the United States of contradicting the aims of the arms control talks in Geneva by pushing ahead with the Star Wars proposal.

PROPAGANDA PLOY?

Pravda claims that U.S. officials are putting a "propaganda gloss" on the program to make it appear more attractive.

Pravda analyst Tomas Kolesnichenko said the stress on the research aspect of the space weapons program — without reference to deployment — makes the initiative appear more harmless.

American officials are trying to lure taxpayers into funding the program with promises that it will afford a 100-per-cent defence against nuclear war for generations of the future, he said.

"Needless to say, all this is in direct contradiction with the aims of the Geneva negotiations" to reduce nuclear arms and prevent the arms race reaching space, Kolesnichenko wrote.

The Soviets have repeatedly said

U.S. research into a space-based missile defence system threatens the success of the talks.

The Pravda comments came a day after Viktor Karpov, chief Soviet negotiator at Geneva, appeared on national television and alleged the United States is trying to "revise the understanding" about the role of space weapons at the talks.

Kolesnichenko said in his article that Gorbachev's two speeches since becoming leader — to the Central Committee plenum that made him party head and at Chernenko's funeral — received worldwide attention.

Citing unnamed foreign media, Kolesnichenko went on to say that many comments abroad had linked Gorbachev's statements to the success of detente in the 1970s.

Farm stress: 'There's no point driving yourself to an early grave'

With neighbors in almost every rural community in Canada going out of business, farmers are feeling the pressure. "There's no room to make mistakes," says dairy farmer Ken Leppy. This is the first of two stories on the stress farmers are facing today.

By Clyde Graham

OTTERBURNE, Man. (CP) — Ken Leppy knew he had to stop worrying so much about his dairy farm after he ended up in hospital with heart palpitations.

"Of course I was scared," says Leppy, 40, cradling his coffee cup in immense hands on the wooden kitchen table of his farm house.

"My heart was not beating regularly. It was skipping, stopping and that kind of thing," he says, turning his coffee light brown with a flood of fresh cream from a pitcher.

The anxiety attack hit Leppy while he was lying in bed at about 2 a.m. on Jan. 7, 1984.

A few months earlier, he had taken out a loan to expand his barn, build a new milking parlor and double his herd of black and white pure-bred Holstein cows.

"We went through Christmas, New Year's and what."

FEELS PRESSURE

Leppy wasn't the only Canadian farmer who felt he was in a vice. The federal Farm Credit Corp. estimated last summer that as many as 39,000 farmers, or about 17 per cent, were in financial difficulty.

With neighbors in almost every rural community in Canada going out of business, even solvent farmers like Leppy are feeling the pressure.

"There's no room to make mistakes," he said in an interview.

After the attack, his doctor told him there was nothing wrong with him physically.

"There was nothing they could do for it medically," he said. "Basically, what I had to do was cool it."

So he did.

OUTLOOK CHANGED

Today, Leppy, past president of the Manitoba Dairy Association, has a more easygoing outlook.

"This is not to say you are taking a devil-may-care attitude," he said.

"But I think you have to acknowledge the fact that if you are doing your best, and if you can see light at the end of the tunnel, then there's no point in driving yourself into an early grave."

The expansion to his long, red dairy barn did go relatively smoothly and his farm is making a profit today.

But a year ago, there were constant worries.

"In this particular case, it was just an extraordinary workload involved in running the farm while you're building," said Leppy.

"We were actually milking two herds as it were and we did that all summer long."

Then there were cost overruns and shortages of cash when the bills came in.

STRAIN RESULTS

"And you just pile all of these things together and before you know it you are under continuous strain," said Leppy, whose farm is just down the gravel road that runs past Otterburne's church, cemetery and post office.

The town, spread along the tric-

Operating a farm may look idyllic but it can be anything but that when debts start to climb and the pressure mounts.

ling Rat River and dominated by the Winnipeg Bible College, is about 50 kilometres south of Winnipeg.

Ironically, Leppy said he and his wife decided to expand their farm to make life a bit easier for themselves and their two school-age boys.

Since they started farming in 1975, Leppy and his wife had been stuck on the farm seven days a week with morning and evening milkings.

Leppy said that with 35 cows, they hadn't enough production to justify a hired man. But increasing the herd to 60 cows allowed them to take on an employee so they could take some weekends and evenings off.

Everyone in business faces stress, but Leppy, who worked as a salesman before turning to farming, said in many ways the pressures are tougher on farmers.

Starting a farm these days requires taking on a massive debt, he pointed out. Many small businesses can get started with a lot less capital.

"All of a sudden you and your wife have a debt of $350,000. Your house and your living are all part of that."

Most businesses are either incorporated or limited companies, so if they go under, the owner doesn't lose everything. But when a farmer goes bankrupt, he not only loses his farm but his home as well.

"You cannot divorce your living from the business. It's all in one big pot."

Gutsy native woman wins case with Hydro-Ontario

TORONTO (CP) — In a classic David and Goliath encounter, Yvonne LaValley stood up against one of Canada's largest corporations and came out the winner.

Her prize — electricity for her family and about 100 mostly illiterate, unemployed non-status Indians who have been without power because there aren't enough people in their central Ontario community to meet Ontario Hydro's minimum requirements for installing a line.

For years, LaValley, a 39-year-old, native mother of four, has pleaded, prodded, begged and bothered Hydro to plug her tiny isolated community in Sabine Township into the 20th century by installing electricity.

Last week, the utility's board finally gave in by amending regulations to ease the density requirements and allow a line.

About 100 residences in insulated pockets throughout the province will be affected, said Hydro spokesman Terry Young. Hydro's cost for the Sabine Township line is estimated to be less than $180,000.

"It's amazing what you can do if you keep at it," LaValley said in a telephone interview from her three-bedroom, wood-heated log home.

LaValley says her children do their homework by the light of coal oil lamps, watch TV by hooking it up to a car battery and spend hours each week being bused to schools farther afield.

They are only one of only four families with a flush toilet, but without an electrical pump they must carry buckets of water from nearby Lake St. Peter to use it.

Tucked under Algonquin Park and 190 kilometres west of Ottawa, Sabine Township houses a Hydro sub-station built 14 years ago to run power elsewhere. LaValley said that during construction the residents didn't realize the sub-station wasn't for them.

"Hydro should have been more honest," she lamented. "They never explained to the people they would not benefit. All I want is for the poor people here to live decent lives. It's been a terrible injustice."

LaValley formed the Lake St. Peter Native Alliance, a non-profit, charitable organization, to help her cause and cartons of mail in her home are evidence of her lobbying efforts. "It's an obsession with me, such a part of my life that I live and breathe Ontario Hydro."

Caught between Hydro regulations and LaValley's persistence has been Bob Mason, manager of Ontario Hydro's district office in Cobden.

Mason openly admires her gumption and credits her determination for the change in policy. A 10-year veteran at his job, he recommended a change in regulations to the Hydro board several months ago.

Tom Campbell, who took over as Hydro chairman last summer, grew up in Northern Ontario without electricity and took private interest in the case, said Rod Taylor, Campbell's assistant.

The electrical bill for Sabine Township residents will be about $8 more a month than the average bill of $50.

LaValley is ready. "I'd like to say we'll have lights for Christmas," she says.

Gov't letting 'poachers' go free, truckers say

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec Trucking Association called on the Quebec government last week to control "poachers" in the industry who ignore safety, licensing and tax regulations imposed on legitimate businesses.

"The Quebec government doesn't have the political will to enforce its own laws for truckers," Quebec Trucking Association president Arthur Servant told a news conference.

The association demanded the government hire more inspectors to enforce weight and safety regulations, collect fuel taxes from truckers and force the poachers to pay workmen's compensation, health insurance premiums and income taxes.

It said Quebec could recoup hundreds of millions of dollars in revenue annually — enough to make up losses in federal government transfer payments — if its own regulations were enforced.

"All we want is that everybody be treated the same," said executive vice-president Jacques Alary. Legitimate trucking companies have to meet these expenses while the poachers go uncontrolled, he said.

ONE-QUARTER IGNORED

The association, which represents 800 company owners, said about a quarter of Quebec's trucking industry ignores government regulations because they aren't adequately enforced.

It said trucking poachers cost each Quebec driver $71 a year in extra fuel consumption, tire wear and repairs due to road damage caused by overloaded or improperly loaded trucks.

Trucks owned by association members will begin carrying signs describing the problems caused by poachers, the government's inaction and a slogan in French: "That's Enough."

"We don't believe in inconveniencing the public right now," said Alary, but if the government doesn't act, more drastic steps will follow. He refused to say what tactics the truckers were considering.

In 1981, unionized employees of several trucking companies blocked Metropolitan Boulevard, the busiest east-west expressway in Montreal, for several hours with their vehicles to protest government policies.

Alary said that a union driver's job is threatened every time a poacher goes into business. The association says an estimated 10,000 Quebec vehicles — tractors and trailers — are owned by poachers.

They also come from the United States and other provinces, said Servant.

Collect for fun, not profits, experts advise

Plates and pewter, miniatures and models, coins and curios — these are among the objects that dedicated collectors have been accumulating for decades.

Now flea markets, antique fairs and trade shows are introducing the pleasures of collecting to more and more people. But does it make sense to buy collectible items for their investment value?

Investment counsellors warn that knowledgeable or inexperienced collectors could get badly burned in the collectibles market and recommend that people only take up the collecting habit for fun, not for profit.

"We don't recommend that people get into it; we don't recommend that they don't do it," says Tony Anderson of PerCor Financial Consultants Ltd. But collecting things for a profit is only for those people who are already interested in collecting as a hobby, he adds.

Tim Egan of T. E. Financial Consultants Ltd., agrees: "On the whole, our clients do not look on collectibles as an investment."

MUST BE INSURED

In a recently published booklet on investments, the Royal Bank points out a number of problems with the collectibles market as an investment arena.

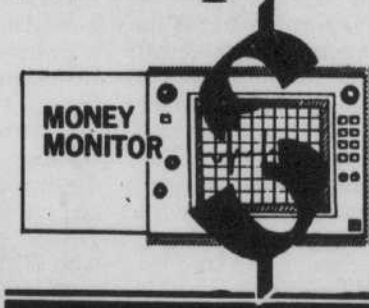

The bank says that collectibles do not generate income through interest or dividends, it may be difficult to find a buyer for a collectible on short notice, and extremely valuable collectibles have to be insured against loss or theft.

Comparing collectibles with other investments, according to a set of investment goals drawn up by the Royal Bank, shows that the collectibles market ranks poorly against such simple vehicles as bank accounts.

The safety of the investment is low because of the volatile nature of the collectibles market, and management time is high because it is necessary to constantly keep abreast of developments in the collectibles market.

By comparison, a bank account is safe, has fair to good income, and requires no management time.

The only area where collectibles as an investment come out ahead is on growth potential. Collectibles have good capital growth potential whereas a bank account has none.

SUBJECT TO TAX

Egan points out another problem with collectibles: they sometimes take on an emotional value for the buyer. "It's not much (investment) use to you if it's stuck up on your wall," he says.

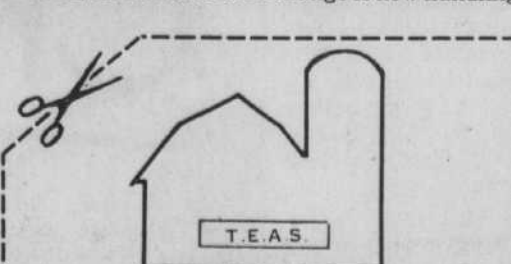

Anderson also notes that collectibles are subject to capital gains tax on any profit of more than $1,000.

This means that if a collectible was purchased for $500 and sold for $2,000, the purchaser would have to pay tax on a capital gain of $500.

Despite these problems, one type of collectible — plates decorated with art prints — is growing in popularity among both investors and hobbyists.

The Bradford Exchange, with its Canadian headquarters in London, Ont., sells new decorated plates across Canada through direct mail coupons. The company, based in Chicago, also has its own brokerage service, which buys and sells existing collections.

After slumping sales during the recession of 1981-82, the Bradford Exchange is now handling

Of enzymes and quarts

I was wandering about the Public Library the other day and glancing at titles. I noticed Kurt Vonnegut's Breakfast of Champions which reminded me of breakfasts with our son during the Christmas holidays.

I have never had patience with people who described themselves as "morning people" or "night people." Most of us never get a choice. We have to be whatever the occasion demands, be it night, day or whatever.

However, now in my more-golden-than-before years, I feel that I have earned the right to be just a little bit touchy before the first coffee of the morning.

My offspring was full of weariness when he arrived in Florida. "Sleep," I encouraged him, thinking of my own quiet beginnings. "Stay in bed in the mornings — as late as you like."

And he did — for one morning. From then on, he would appear showered, dressed, full of energy and at the table before I reached the coffee-maker.

"Hey, Mom, you know what they think the interior of Jupiter may be? Pure carbon." No response from me. "You know what that would mean, don't you?"

Even I knew about a girl's best friend and that rather disappointed him. He tried for something harder and just to be sure, said, "I read an article last night on how they break down the acetylcholine molecule..."

I took a long, long sip of coffee.

"They use the enzyme acetylcholinesterase to generate..."

Here his father, with characteristic compassion, broke in with a gentle question framed around the word "computer". What a clever man he is! In enormous contentment we could both relax and enjoy breakfast. I was able to have cereal, toast, and two cups of coffee; cook bacon and eggs for them and was stacking up dishes while he was still going on about how spaces and new lines in the input are used by EQN or something like that.

Fortunately he had brought down work to finish during the holidays. That and the swimming pool, with its vacationing attractions, took up most of his time.

However, one of his Christmas gifts to us had been the game of Trivial Pursuit. As he was the only one to have ever played it, he was not about to leave without testing us. He was fairly sure of his father's skills but gave me a dubious glance as we sat down to play on his final evening.

For one solid hour I did nothing but mutter, "I have never heard of that" or "I really don't know." During the second hour, amid their delight at their mutual cleverness, the mutters turned to snarls. My insecurities began to show. Where had I been when some actor had had 'Scotland Forever' tattooed on his right wrist? Should I have been able to figure out what type hybrid would result from the sexual antics of a horse and an ass?

Just as my frustration was reaching a point of no return, a phenomenal thing happened. They had magnanimously given me the privilege of asking the questions. At my son's turn, he had chosen the category 'Science and Nature'. Listlessly, I pulled out a card, then sat bolt upright. I had unearthed the first question that I could have answered: "How many pints in a quart?"

It was so elementary that I was about to shove it back in the box when I became aware of a strange silence. I glanced up not understanding his hesitation and then, oh miracles of miracles, it dawned on me, the incredible fact that he was not sure of the answer! His metric mind teetered between two and four, while his mother smiled for the first time in the evening.

Even my frustration died — after all, one out of three thousand isn't all that bad.

Puppies at the Anibec pet shop in Cowansville's Place Domaine shopping mall no longer stand in the same position for hours on end. They have a new runway on which they can exercise their young legs.

RECORD/MERRITT CLIFTON

Dogs running free... well, more than before

By Merritt Clifton

COWANSVILLE — Those doggies who used to be in the window are now happily chasing one another up and down a couple of 10-foot runways. Songbirds once caged alone with scarcely room to hop now stretch their wings amid company. And pet shop owner George Butler is hearing compliments these days on his management.

That's a big turn-around from when Butler bought his business last November. Formerly part of the St. Hyacinthe-based Anibec chain, the pet store on the second floor of Cowansville's Place Domaine shopping mall had become a local cause celebre over alleged mistreatment of animals sold there. A citizens' committee led by Carole Moreau of East Farnham made repeated complaints to the management, the former absentee owner, the Place Domaine management, and ultimately to the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Moreau also brought a Record photographer to verify that a Lhasa Apso puppy was often left all day without water, and had suffered complete loss of muscle tone from lack of exercise. Taken from her cage, the Lhasa Apso floundered on her belly like a stranded seal-pup, unable to walk or stand on all fours. Elsewhere in the store, hamsters huddled in a cage so full of wood chips and excrement that they couldn't stand or stretch.

CHANGED REP

The Record learned that the Anibec operation hadn't had a manager in two months.

A former newspaperman himself, new owner Butler realized immediately that he had to change a lot more than management to restore the pet shop's reputation. He posted his home telephone number beside the animal cages in the window, asking anyone who saw any problems with the animals to call him immediately. He solicited suggestions from store critics.

Then he figured out how to remodel the store facilities so as to accommodate just as many animals while improving living conditions for all of them.

Butler reports that sales are improving. His animals don't really care about that. But the birds do sing more these days. And the doggies, transferred from the window to their runways, seem a whole lot happier.

Mother may warm up if motel trips stop

Dear Ann Landers: My boyfriend is almost 19. I am 17. Several days ago we went on a weekend trip and spent two nights together in a motel.

I know it sounds like a fib, but all we did was kiss. We do not plan to go all the way until we get married.

Dick's mother has been very cool to me. Actually she never was what I would call friendly, but ever since she found the receipt for the motel in Dick's coat pocket, she has been like ice.

I need some advice on how to get along with her, Ann. Please give me some suggestions right away, I am—DESPERATE IN DURHAM
DEAR DES: One way you might get Dick's mother to thaw out is to stop going to motels with her 18-year-old son.

Since you and Dick do not plan to go any further than a kiss until you are married, you will not be needing overnight lodging. No more weeding, Toots.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a transvestite who would like to offer some suggestions to the parents of the 13-year-old transvestite.

Don't encourage your son's crossdressing, but don't prohibit it either. Trying to make him stop will force him to do it secretly. This could produce anxiety and resentment. If it bothers you, suggest that he dress up when you aren't at home.

Please be aware that there are millions of transvestites in America and the majority of them are heterosexual. The reasons for cross-dressing are many. Although one may stop occasionally, he will usually start again whether he has had counseling or not.

Experts says this is an OK way to release tension. It certainly has been for me. I harm no one and am a good husband, father and practicing attorney.—ANONYMOUS IN CHICAGO

DEAR ANON: Thanks for a letter that should calm some fears. My consultants say you are right on.

Astronauts grow taller in space

One of the finds from the 84-day Skylab mission was that the astronauts grew taller — as much as an inch and three quarters.

Physicians concluded that without the pull of gravity to push down on his skeleton, the spaceman's body simply loosens up with the distance between each disc in the spinal column expanding slightly.

Gravity is a magnetic force that holds man and all his worldly possessions on the earth. Its effect is felt and seen in the shapes, forms, and abilities of all living things on earth. It is friend and foe alike, for gravity helps us with some jobs and hinders us in others.

Think how gravity affects the human body in its various stages. As an infant, man must learn to overcome this force in order to stand upright and move about freely. As the body grows into adolescence and finally into adulthood, the amount of success developed in adapting to the force of gravity governs his functional ability. This is why some individuals are particularly agile, others somewhat clumsy or accident-prone.

Gravity's affect can even be seen in the human profile — the toddler with his prominent abdomen and swayback, the young adult with his well-proportioned chest and flat abdomen, the middle-aged person with his flat chest and prominent lower abdomen, and the senior citizen with his swayback and pendulous lower abdomen. The cycle goes the full round.

The force of gravity is acting upon your body at all times. The placement of structural components due to the force of gravity governs your functional ability and health. That is why doctors of chiropractic recommend periodic spinal examinations to make certain that your body structure does not deviate from the normal.

If you suffer from back pain, it would be wise to consult a doctor of chiropractic. He has made a special study of conditions related to the spine and nervous system. He seeks to not only locate the problem and give relief from symptoms, but also to correct the fundamental cause as well as offer preventive, rehabilitation, and maintenance counsel.

Health views is submitted by Dr. Richard Argall, a chiropractor practicing in Sherbrooke.

Information sessions planned for veterans

KNOWLTON (JM) — All veterans and veteran's widows, whether or not they are Legion members, are invited to attend an information meeting at Branch 23, Royal Canadian Legion, here April 13, from 10 a.m. to noon.

Branch president Ralph Seaton explained officials from the Sherbrooke DVA will hold simultaneous sessions in French and English and will attempt to answer as many questions as they can within the restricted time frame.

"There are an estimated 20,000 in the Townships who are eligible for the various benefits and the DVA agreed to the meeting although we originally requested an all-day session," Seaton commented. "We have been told if the cases get too complex the DVA will arrange appointments in Sherbrooke for further consultation and advice. Hopefully we'll have a huge turnout and coffee and doughnuts will be available for all the participants."

Seaton said the benefits are constantly being modified and in some cases expanded, therefore it is in the interest of all veterans and widows to attend the seminar.

Ursel makes spectacular shot to clinch world junior curling title

Skip Bob Ursel dug himself out of a hole Sunday with a spectacular raise-takeout in the 10th end, sparking Canada to the Uniroyal world junior men's curling championship.

Ursel and his Winnipeg team went on to defeat Christian Saager of Switzerland 6-5 in an extra end, giving Canada its second world junior title in the last three years.

When Saager drew to the button around a guard with his first shot in the 10th end, the Canadian skip needed a perfect shot to keep the match alive. Ursel's first shot wrecked on a guard, however, and Saager threw up another perfect guard.

"I got myself in a little bit of a mess, with my first shot," Ursel said. "I dumped it way inside."

"Saager put up a beautiful guard and I think (the raise-takeout) was all I had. It worked out pretty good. I can't complain. If we didn't make it, it was lights out."

The victory by Ursel's rink — which included third Brent Mendella, second Gerald Chick and lead Mike Ursel, Bob's brother — won Canada its fifth world crown in the 11-year history of the tournament.

Other Canadian champions were

Paul Gowsell, 1976 and 1978; Bill Jenkins, 1977; and John Base, 1983.

ALSO WINS TITLE

In other Canadian curling action, Kimberley Armbruster of Saskatchewan defeated Georgina Hawkes of British Columbia to win the Canadian junior women's championship Saturday in Fredericton.

Armbruster of Lemberg picked up one in the 10th and stole one in the extra end to win.

Meanwhile in Jonkoping, Sweden, Linda Moore of North Vancouver thrashed the U.S. champions 13-3 in the first round of the women's world curling championships.

In the Canadian senior curling championships Sunday in Yorkton, Sask., defending champion Lloyd Gunnlaugson of Manitoba edged Gordon Peterson of Northern Ontario 6-5 in first-round action. Evelyn Krahn's Regina rink, meanwhile, opened Saskatchewan's defence of its senior women's title with a 9-2 triumph over Violet Pike of Grand Falls, Nfld.

But, the day belonged to Ursel, who came through with pressure shots when it counted.

After blanking the 10th end, Ur-sel calmly took out a Swiss rock lying in the eight-foot circle in the 11th end and stayed for the victory.

"We knew Bob had to come up with the big shot and he's come up with big shots before," said Mike Ursel. "We just stuck with it and hoped for the best."

"We were pretty confident right then, that nothing was going to stop us today," Mendella said of the raise-takeout. "It was our day and that was that."

Canada had finished tied with Scotland with 8-1 records after the round-robin portion of the tournament. Switzerland had finished third with a mark of 7-2.

The Canadians defeated Norway 11-2 and Switzerland downed Scotland 7-3 in semifinal play Saturday.

In the final, Canada led 3-1 after three ends but the Swiss rallied for two in the fourth and one in the fifth for a 4-3 lead. Canada tied the score in the seventh and took the lead by stealing one in the eighth. But the Swiss skip counted one in the ninth to deadlock the score 5-5.

Late in the game, the Canadians switched briefly to corn brooms, forcing the Swiss to sweep the ice before each shot to remove loose straws.

Sabres blow chance for tie in first

Irish eyes were smiling as coach Pat Quinn savored Los Angeles Kings' 5-4 victory Sunday night over Edmonton Oilers in the National Hockey League.

"I think St. Patty might have been smiling on us," said Quinn, referring to St. Patrick's Day.

Kings netminder Bob Janecyk kicked out 20 shots in the third period to save the victory when Brian MacLellan banged in his own rebound to put the Kings ahead 5-3.

In other games Sunday, it was Winnipeg Jets 5 Buffalo Sabres 3, Philadelphia Flyers 5 N.Y. Islanders 3, Hartford Whalers 4 Pittsburgh Penguins 3, N.Y. Rangers 7 New Jersey Devils 3, and Chicago Black Hawks 6 Vancouver Canucks 4.

On Saturday it was Calgary Flames 5 Boston Bruins 3, Pittsburgh 5 N.Y. Rangers 0, Minnesota North Stars 4 Montreal Canadiens 2, N.Y. Islanders 6 Washington Capitals 4, Philadelphia 6 Toronto Maple Leafs 1, Hartford 5 St. Louis Blues 0, Los Angeles 8 Detroit Red Wings 3.

In Inglewood, Calif., the Kings jumped into an early lead when Marcel Dionne scored a pair of goals within a 23-second span. Paul Coffey and Dave Lumley tied the score before Steve Shutt made it 3-2 for the Kings early in the second.

Mike Krushelsky deadlocked the score at 3-3 but Mark Hardy restored Los Angeles' one-goal margin, setting the scene for MacLellan's game-winning score one minute into the third period. Mark Messier closed the gap to 5-4 just 46 seconds later but then Janecyk closed the door on the Oilers.

Jets 5 Sabres 3

In Winnipeg, the Jets scored four unanswered goals in the third period to rally from a 3-1 deficit and defeat Buffalo. Scott Arniel, Jim Nill, Dale Hawerchuk, Thomas Steen and Paul MacLean scored for the Jets. Lindy Ruff, Gilbert Perreault, and Sean McKenna replied for Buffalo.

Flyers 5 Islanders 3

In Philadelphia, Murray Craven and Doug Crossman scored short-handed goals to help the Flyers pad their lead to six points atop the Patrick Division over idle Washington Capitals. Brad McCrimmon, Dave Poulin, and Lindsay Carson were the other Philadelphia scorers. Bryan Trottier, Paul Boutilier, and Duane Sutter replied for New York.

Whalers 4 Penguins 3

In Hartford, Conn., linemates Greg Malone, Kevin Dineen and Torrie Robertson combined for three goals and five assists to help Hartford snap a 13-game home winless streak. Goaltender Mike Liut, who stopped 24 shots, earned his first victory in seven appearances since being traded to the Whalers from St. Louis. Robertson, Malone, Dineen and Ray Neufeld scored for Hartford. Mario Lemieux, Mike Bullard and Warren Young connected for Pittsburgh.

Rangers 7 Devils 3

In New York, the Rangers snapped a five-game winless streak and padded their lead over Pittsburgh to five points in the race for the final playoff berth in the Patrick Division. Peter Sundstrom and Don Maloney scored second-period goals 19 seconds apart to break open a 4-3 game, which marked the fourth straight loss for the Devils. The loss dropped New Jersey seven points behind New York. The Rangers and Devils have 10 games remaining. Pittsburgh has 11. Mark Osborne, James Patrick, Jan Erixon, Bob Brooke and Grant Ledyard also scored for the Rangers. Gary MacAdam, Aaron Broten and Pat Verbeek replied for the Devils.

Black Hawks 6 Canucks 4

In Vancouver, Denis Savard scored on the power play early in the third period to snap a 3-3 tie and help the Black Hawks to victory. Chicago moved to within four points of St. Louis atop the Norris Division although the Blues have three games in hand on the Hawks. Troy Murray scored twice and Doug Wilson, Steve Larmer and Ed Olczyk added singles for Chicago. Tony Tanti, Stan Smyl, Peter McNab and Patrick Sundstrom scored for the Canucks.

AHL Northern Division race stays tight as ever

Baltimore Skipjacks skated into the record books on the weekend, recording their 12th and 13th wins in a row to smash an American Hockey League record first set 41 years ago.

The Skipjacks downed Hershey Bears 5-2 Saturday to break the old league mark of 11 consecutive wins and extended the record Sunday with a 6-4 defeat of Springfield Indians in a penalty-filled game.

The previous AHL record of 11 consecutive wins was first set by Cleveland Barons in 1944 and tied earlier this season by Rochester Americans.

OTHER ACTION

In other AHL games Sunday night, it was: Binghamton Whalers 7, Hershey 3; Fredericton Express 5, St. Catharines Saints 4; Maine Mariners 4, Adirondack Red Wings 1; and Nova Scotia Oilers 4, New Haven Nighthawks 2.

In Saturday action it was: Binghamton 2, Adirondack 0; Fredericton 7, New Haven 6; and Rochester 3, Springfield 2.

In Baltimore, Greg Otham scored a goal and added two assists Sunday to spark the Skipjacks, who improved their record to 38-24-8 while moving within two points of second-place Rochester Americans in the Southern Division.

Baltimore spotted the Indians a 2-0 lead in the first period before storming back with six unanswered goals.

Two of the Baltimore goals came during a match misconduct to Springfield netminder Mike Sands, who was penalized for deliberately trying to injure Ted Bulley. The Baltimore player needed 10 stitches in his left ear after being cut by Sands's glove.

Whalers 7 Bears 3

In Binghamton, N.Y., league-leading scorer Paul Gardner moved closer to the AHL's all-time point record with a six-point performance to lead Binghamton Whalers past Hershey Bears.

Gardner, who scored two goals and added four assists against Hershey, has 45 goals and 67 assists in 57 games. He needs 13 points in his remaining eight games to tie the existing AHL record.

Gardner's performance Sunday tied a team record for points in a game, while the Whalers established a team record of 99 points in a season.

Oilers 4 Nighthawks 2

In Halifax, Ken Berry scored twice, including the game-winner when Nova Scotia was shorthanded, to pace the Oilers past New Haven Nighthawks.

Berry was on his back on the ice when he swept his own rebound under New Haven goalie Ron Scott for his 26th of the year at 11:13 of the third period.

Bart Yachimec and Marc Habscheid also scored for the Oilers, who improved their record to 29-32-7 while moving within three points of fourth-place Sherbrooke in the North. Daryl Evans and Randy Heath replied for New Haven.

Mariners 4 Red Wings 1

In Portland, Me., Maine Mariners extended their lead atop the Northern Division to 11 points over Adirondack with a triumph over the Red Wings.

Ken Daneyko scored in the second period to put the Mariners ahead for good in the game, which upped their home record to 26-9-2.

Glenn Merkosky, Daneyko and Rich Chernomaz gave Maine a 3-0 lead in the second period before Jody Gage scored a short-handed goal for the Wings in the third period. Glenn Sommer added an insurance goal for the Mariners.

Express 5 Saints 4

In Fredericton, Alan Bester stopped 47 shots for St. Catharines Saints but to no avail as the home town Express rolled to a one-goal victory.

Mark Crawford, Dave Morrison, Mike Hough, Jimmy Mann and Grant Martin paced the Express. Ken Strong scored twice for the Saints while Steve Driscoll and Basil McRae added singles.

Habs put together impressive weekend

SHERBROOKE — Just when they were about to be counted out the Canadiens have turned things around and are alive and well in the American Hockey League's Northern Division standings.

The Canadiens picked up six out of a possible six points on the weekend capping victories Friday over Adirondack Red Wings (6-2) and Saturday over Maine Mariners (6-4) with a dramatic comeback behind 7-5 triumph over Rochester Americans Sunday night.

Murray Eaves' third goal of the game, at 17:16 of the third period, triggered a three-goal outburst in a 49-second span as the Canadiens stayed in the Northern Division's fourth and final playoff spot with 68 points — four points behind second-place Adirondack and one behind third-place Fredericton Express.

The line of Eaves, Serge Boisvert and Claude Larose combined for 11 points against Rochester. Eaves had an assist to go along with the three goals while Boisvert scored twice and set up three others and Larose collected a pair of assists.

And while the trio accounted for all but two of the Canadiens goals — Jordy Douglas and Gaston Gingras scored the others — it was the play of goaltender Paul Pageau that allowed Sherbrooke to stay close until the game's final minutes.

The Americans outshot Sherbrooke 24-9 over two periods and at one point in the middle 20 minutes led 24-6. In all Pageau faced 33 shots while his opposite, Vincent Tremblay, handled 18. Mike Craig started the game in net for Rochester but was forced to leave with an injury after Eaves scored his first goal of the game at 1:34 of the opening period.

Saturday night the Canadiens once again came from behind with four third-period goals in Portland, Maine to beat the Mariners 6-4. Sherbrooke got two goals from Douglas and singles from Larose, Boisvert, Perry Pooley and Jeff Teal.

On Friday night the regular season's largest crowd turned out to honor former National Hockey League great Guy Lafleur and the Canadiens sent everyone away in a festive mood by handing the Red Wings a 6-2 loss. Douglas, Ric Natress, John Newberry, Kent Carlson, Gingras and Perry Pooley scored for Sherbrooke.

Ballesteros stumbles but doesn't fall

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Despite a bogey on the 18th hole because of a missing club, Seve Ballesteros hung on to win USFG golf tournament.

"When I bogeyed 18, I was really expecting a playoff," he said Sunday after winning $72,000 without the need for extra holes.

What he didn't foresee was John Mahaffey's first shot on the last hole getting caught between tree roots.

Ballesteros was 12-under par going to the final hole of the tournament, shortened to 54 holes because of a rainout Saturday, while Mahaffey was 11-under and two holes behind him.

Golfers are allowed to carry 14 clubs, and Ballesteros wound up with a shot on the 18th that required a 2-iron.

"I have a 1-iron and a 3-iron, and it was a 2-iron shot," he said. "I tried to hit a low, hard 3-iron, and I blocked it right."

"I didn't chip well, and then I missed the putt."

Ballesteros' bogey gave him a 68 in the final round and a 205 for the tournament, 11 under par.

He waited with folded arms and watched Mahaffey come in with pars on 16 and 17.

Then Mahaffey got snared by a thicket of tight tree roots. With his left foot braced against one of the roots, he swung and knocked the ball across the fairway — straight into trees at the other side.

"I was just trying to knock it into the fairway, and I got more of the ball than I thought I could," he said.

He chipped back to the fairway, chipped again to about eight feet from the cup, then two-putted for a double bogey on the par-4 hole.

Bosox free agent hurler Kison shelled for second time in as many outings

After serving lengthy stretches on the disabled list in four of the last five years, Bruce Kison isn't about to let a little thing like a six-run inning bother him.

The veteran right-hander, who signed with Boston as a free agent two months ago after spending five injury-plagued years with California Angels, was ineffective in his second exhibition start Sunday. He was tagged for six hits and a walk in the second inning, including Ron Hassey's two-run double, as New York Yankees scored six times en route to a 9-6 triumph over the Red Sox.

"I just couldn't get on my feet," said Kison, who pitched three scoreless innings against Atlanta in his spring debut. "It was a case of ground-ball base hits mixed with bad pitches — an unpleasant situation."

Undefeated Toronto Blue Jays scored six runs in the 10th inning on four hits — including Rick Leach's solo homer — and three Philadelphia errors to defeat the Phillies 8-2 for their ninth consecutive victory. Willie Aikens and Ernie Whitt also homered.

Toronto pitchers have compiled a 2.17 earned run average this spring and opposing hitters are batting a meager .220 against the Blue Jays.

Rick Sutcliffe, the National League's 1984 Cy Young Award winner, pitched five scoreless innings and Leon Durham socked his first homer of the spring to lead Chicago Cubs over Milwaukee Brewers 3-2. Sutcliffe also singled a run home.

Veteran Vern Ruhle allowed one run in five innings and Dave Von Ohlen continued his steady relief pitching as Cleveland Indians defeated San Francisco Giants 6-3. Ruhle, who is trying to pitch his way onto the team, has an 0.75 ERA in 12 innings this spring.

Fred Lynn drove in three runs with a single and double, Fritzie Connolly hit a two-run homer and Dennis Martinez allowed one hit in five innings as Baltimore Orioles trounced Atlanta Braves 11-2.

TIGERS TOUGH

Nelson Simmons had three hits, including a three-run homer, and Dan Petry pitched five shutouts in four games as Detroit Tigers beat Minnesota Twins 7-1. Simmons connected in the first inning on an 0-2 pitch from Frank Viola, an 18-game winner last year.

Jerry Narron's two-run single keyed a four-run rally in the seventh inning that lifted California Angels over San Diego Padres 4-3. With the Padres leading 2-0, Gene Walter loaded the bases on walks. Narron singled off Rich Gossage to tie the score.

Bill Russell's two-run single highlighted a five-run second inning and Los Angeles Dodgers held on for a 6-5 victory over Houston Astros. Loser Joe Niekro was battered for five runs and eight hits in two innings.

Dwight Gooden pitched four shutout innings and George Foster hit a three-run homer to lead New York Mets to a 5-2 victory over St. Louis Cardinals.

Daryl Boston hit a three-run homer and Joel Skinner added a two-run shot, powering Chicago White Sox over Kansas City Royals 7-2. Tom Seaver pitched five scoreless innings for the White Sox, allowing two singles.

Former NHL great Orr interested in his old team

BOSTON (AP) — The Sunday Boston Herald says Bobby Orr and Wayne Cashman and retired U.S. Senator Paul Tsongas are part of a group bidding to buy Boston Bruins and their arena.

The newspaper says the group of investors has been working on a deal for about a month to purchase the National Hockey League club from the Jacobs brothers of Buffalo, N.Y., whose company, Delaware North, owns both the Bruins and Boston Garden.

Sam Gifford, spokesman for Delaware North, told the newspaper he has not heard about any discussions to buy the team.

"The Bruins are an investment," Gifford said.

"They are supposed to be a profit-making thing. But, like all investments, they probably are for sale at some point."

The Herald says no purchase price has been discussed.

Another member of the group is real estate developer Rosalind Gorin, who wants to build a $2-million sports facility on the site now occupied by Boston Garden, the newspaper says.

Gorin and Tsongas refused to comment on the reported purchase plan, and Orr and Cashman were unavailable, the newspaper says. Team president Paul Mooney, who also could not be reached for comment, has said publicly his club is not for sale.

Max, Jeremy and Lawrence Jacobs bought the Bruins 10 years ago for $10 million. Boston Garden's value has been estimated to be in the $12-million range.

The newspaper says Tsongas, a Boston lawyer, is a close friend of James Stanton, a former Ohio congressman and now president of Delaware North.

Boston Celtics of the National Basketball Association also play their home games at Boston Garden.

Cougars trail series 2-1

VALLEYFIELD — Champlain Cougars fell into a 7-0 hole that they could never climb out of in a 7-1 Quebec AA CEGEP Hockey League semi-final loss to Valleyfield Noir et Or Sunday night.

Valleyfield leads the three-out-of-five series 2-1 after losing the first game.

Patrice Montpetit paced the Valleyfield attack with a pair of goals while singles went to Mario Gagnon, Michel Bissonette, Pierre Vezina, Jean Lepine and Luc Lefebvre. Scott Patrick scored Champlain's lone goal.

Despite the seven-goal offensive outburst Valleyfield goaltender Denis Roy was named his team's outstanding player. Roy turned aside 25 Champlain shots. His counterpart, Tom Wharry, faced 32 shots on goal. It was the second time that Roy has been selected his team's best player.

NOT READY
Champlain coach Rod McKell didn't bemoan Roy's goaltending, however. Instead, he said his team wasn't ready to play.

"We only had three kids up front who wanted to skate tonight," McKell said, singling out Patrick, Peter Thorne and Pat Shanahan. "We just weren't ready to play them at all."

Valleyfield led 2-0 and 4-0 at the end of the first and second periods and upped the mark to 7-0 just after the half-way point of the third period. Patrick finally got the Cougars on the scoresheet at 12:46 on assists by Thorne and Shanahan.

"We were so bad that we watched them in the warmup," McKell said, "and you're in trouble when you watch the other team in warmup."

The Cougars get a chance to even the series Friday at the W.B. Scott Arena in Lennoxville in Game 4. The series winner goes on to meet John Abbott Islanders in the championship final.

"We're going to have to regroup and see how much we want to play this game," McKell said. "We have to see if we're willing to pay the price because in Valleyfield we might as well have been on the moon."

Friday's game begins at 8:30 p.m.

Hockey's legendary defenceman Eddie Shore dead

AGAWAM, Mass. (AP)—Legendary Boston defenceman Eddie Shore, who remained in professional hockey as a team owner for 36 years after he retired as a player, died Saturday. He was 82.

The Hall of Fame player, who died at 11 p.m. Saturday at Mercy Hospital in Springfield, had been in failing health for some time. He had entered the hospital Feb. 28.

Shore is idolized by veteran Boston Bruins fans who have recollections of his end-to-end rushes, devastating body checks and everything else he did to plant the seeds of hockey interest in the National Hockey League city.

Considered by many as the greatest defenceman of all time, Shore was born in Port Quappe, Sask., Nov. 25, 1902, and moved up through amateur ranks to Melville Millionaires (Senior) in the 1923-24 season.

From there, he graduated to professional ranks with the Regina Caps of the Western Hockey League, making his start as a forward. He moved back to defence with Edmonton in 1926, when the Eskimos won the championship of the WHL. Shore was the prize that then-Boston coach Art Ross drew for Boston when the NHL folded.

Shore broke into the NHL in 1926-27 with the Bruins. He infused them with a spirit and color which promptly lifted them from last place to second place in the NHL's American Division.

Previously ignored by Bostonians, the Bruins developed a loyal following because of Shore.

SOLD TEAM

Shortly before retiring from hockey as a player, Shore bought the American Hockey League's Springfield Indians. He sold the team to lawyer George Leary in 1976.

Hammy Moore, who was the Boston trainer during Shore's heyday, once said of Shore's style of attack that "he was the only player I ever saw who had the whole arena standing every time he rushed down the ice."

"You see, when Shore carried the puck you were always sure so-omething would happen. He would either end up bashing somebody, get into a fight or score a goal."

During his 13-year stay with the Bruins, Shore scored 108 goals and added 179 assists, and in that time was on three championship teams and two Stanley Cup winners (1928-29 and 1938-39).

Shore is the only defenceman to win the Hart Trophy as the most valuable player four times — 1932-33, 1934-35, 1935-36 and 1937-38.

But there are even more impressive statistics. He accumulated a total of 978 stitches on his body. He had his nose broken 14 times, his jaw shattered five times and a mouth minus every tooth.

Shore's most celebrated fight occurred on Dec. 12, 1933, in Toronto. It was one he always regretted.

Red Horner of the Maple Leafs started it by slamming Shore into the boards. Shore went after Horner. He flew down the ice and, mistaking Ace Bailey for Horner, flattened Bailey with a vicious check.

Bailey's head struck the ice and he was taken to a hospital with a fractured skull. His life was saved by delicate brain surgery, but he was never able to play hockey again.

Shore was suspended for 16 games of a 44-game schedule, but spent most of them in the hospital recovering from his own injuries. The Leafs' Horner received a six-game suspension for injuring Shore.

Shore was elected to Hockey's Hall of Fame in 1947.

BOUGHT TEAM

In 1939, his body battered and his big league career almost over, Shore put his bankroll back into the game he loved, bought the Springfield team in the AHL, and promptly became the most unusual owner the sport has known.

From time to time, Shore had feuded with Boston Bruin manager Art Ross. So when Shore purchased the Springfield franchise, Ross immediately sold him to New York Americans where he retired in 1942.

Shore played three seasons for Springfield before the Second World War erupted and the Army Quartermaster Corps took over the Springfield Coliseum. He temporarily coached Buffalo Bisons (1943-44 and 1944-45) and won two AHL Calder Cups.

Springfield was reactivated in 1946-47 and he ran it for five more years until the league insisted he go to Syracuse, where he operated the Syracuse Warriors because that city had a new building.

The team remained in Syracuse for three years, then returned to Springfield in 1954-55.

Shore's drive built what was a feeble Springfield franchise into a hockey power. His great Indians teams won three consecutive AHL Calder Cups starting in 1959-60, a feat never before or since equalled.

Because of his harsh methods of managing, Springfield Indians staged one of the game's few player strikes in December 1966.

Shore leaves a son, Edward W. Shore Jr. and four grandchildren.

Funeral services will be at 11 a.m. Wednesday in Christ Church Cathedral in Springfield.

York surprises Alberta in hockey final

TORONTO (CP)—It's been quite a winter for Don McLaren, one he's unlikely to forget for some time.

"This is like the capping on a Cinderella story," the 22-year-old freshman business student said Sunday after scoring all three of York's goals in a 3-2 triumph over Alberta Golden Bears at the Yeomen won their first ever Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union hockey championship.

"This is one I'm going to have to sit back and think about," added the tournament's most valuable player. "It's going to take a while for it to sink in."

Last December, McLaren scored twice in the Spengler Cup championship game in Davos, Switzerland, which Canada won with a 4-3 triumph over Chimik Woskresensk of the Soviet Union.

Now, with a University Cup championship behind him, McLaren wants to become part of the Canadian Olympic program.

"I've had a couple of offers from the National Hockey League but my personal commitment is to the Olympics," said the Kitchener, Ont., native.

McLaren finished the three-day University Cup with six goals and two assists in three games. He was named the tournament's most valuable player, receiving an Eskimo carving from sponsor Continental Bank of Canada.

York's appearance in the national tournament had been unexpected. The Yeomen finished fifth in the Ontario conference but got solid performances in the playoffs, winning five of six games.

Winning the title surprised even coach Dave Chambers.

"It was never a question we didn't have winners, it was just a matter of putting it all together," said Chambers. "But we didn't expect to win it all."

He said a Christmas-break trip to Switzerland may have been the key to bringing his players together as a team.

"They seemed to get to know each other better — to gel as a team," Chambers said.

McLaren, who played junior hockey for Ottawa 67s — 53 goals, 60 assists last season — gave York a 1-0 lead at 3:34 of the first period, flipping the puck into the Alberta goal over sprawling Bears netminder Ken Hodge, his roommate at the Spengler Cup.

Vikings best CIAU hoop team for 6th straight year

HALIFAX (CP)—Cord Clemens should be snubbed more often.

Miffed about being passed up as an all-Canadian on the eve of Saturday's national university basketball final, the seven-foot centre for Victoria Vikings went into the championship game more determined than ever.

He scored 32 points to lead the Vikings to a 93-79 win over Waterloo Warriors and their sixth consecutive basketball championship.

"I had something to prove," Clemens said Saturday. "I remember sitting in my bed saying, 'Well, that's fine. If they want to give out all-Canadians, I'll show them. The next day I'll show them.'"

And Clemens was a tower of power for the Vikings. He dominated Waterloo's seven-footer, Randy Norris, who was named to the second team all-Canadian all-stars.

Norris finished with 22 points, most coming when Clemens was on the bench in the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union final.

Victoria's win capped an up-and-down season for the team, which coach Ken Shields said was plagued by inconsistency all year. Victoria finished behind Alberta in their conference standings but advanced to the final four by winning a regional qualifying tournament in Victoria.

"We had a lot of new people on the team who didn't have the Viking work ethic that we have," Shields said. "Often they figure just because they put on a Victoria uniform, automatically things look after themselves."

"Well that doesn't happen."

Annual Meeting of Bedford's Unit of Canadian Cancer Society

The Annual Meeting of the Bedford Unit of the Canadian Cancer Society was held on Monday, March 11th in the United Church hall.

The President, Mrs. Doris Ewing, presided and welcomed the gathering which included Mr. Raymond Rouleau, Provincial Field Secretary. It was very encouraging to see several new faces among the old regulars.

Miss Leona Beauvais read the 1984 minutes which were accepted. Mrs. Melba Watson gave the 1984 financial report and thanked all the canvassers for their efforts in collecting some $10,000.00. Over $900.00 was added to that total by Memorial gifts during theyear. (Anyone wishing to make a Memorial gift may contact Leona Beauvais 249-3957 or Marion Oakes 248-3938).

Mrs. Watson requested that this year's financial campaign be conducted as soon as possible and brought to a close by mid-May.

The "Gift Cupboard"

report showed that 205 articles had been made. They include 26 pairs of slippers, 11 bed pockets, seven lap afthans, nine cushion rings, and over 100 small articles such as gift bags and scarves.

Mrs. Olive Gould has been in charge of "knitting and sewing" and has made a great many of these articles herself over the years.

It was with regret her resignation, due to health reasons, was accepted. Mrs. Ewing expressed thanks to Olive for her years of continued interest and assistance.

Mrs. Ewing also expressed thanks to D'Amour Varieties, and the A.C.W. for providing wool for some of the knitting, to the United Church for the use of the hall, and to the Misses Perault for looking after the tea. Special thanks to Martha Jones and Melba Watson for organizing and conducting the financial campaign with such satisfactory results.

Mrs. Ewing then turned the chair over to Marion Oakes for the election of officers. The slate prepared for 1985 is as follows:

President, Mrs. Doris Ewing; 1st Vice-President, Mrs. Isabelle Laflamme; 2nd Vice-President, Mrs. Sylvia Myers; Secretary, Miss Leona Beauvais; Treasurers & Campaign Managers, Mrs. Martha Jones and Mrs. Melba Watson; Service to Patients, Mrs. Violet Cook, Mrs. Martha Palmer and Mrs. Hilda Soles; Publicity, Mrs. Marion Oakes; Education, Mrs. Madelyn Bedard.

By James Jacoby

Using attitude leads against no-trump is a modern development. Leading a low card suggests that your suit will be a source of tricks for your side. Leading a high spot-card suggests that your honors are in another suit.

In today's deal, world champion Kathy Wei was East. Playing attitude leads against no-trump helped her make a fine defensive play. West led a heart, a normal long-suit lead, but chose the eight to show weakness in the suit. Kathy won the king of hearts and considered the defense. Since the heart eight was a fairly high spot-card, it was likely that any high cards in West's hand would be in spades, the other unbid suit. But how should that suit be attacked to take best advantage of declarer's possible weakness? After a little thought, Kathy selected the killing defense, the one specific card in her hand that could set the contract. She thrust the spade queen onto the table.

Note the result. Declarer could not develop the ninth trick without giving up the lead to East, who would then lead another spade through South's J-9 to net five tricks for the defense. Note also that declarer could not win by allowing the queen to hold the trick, because another spade would be led and ducked by West, maintaining the defenders' communication to beat the contract.

Although a low spade lead from East might be effective, declarer would have a chance to break up communication by putting up his jack, forcing West to win the ace prematurely.
