A Warning For Small Boys.—

During recent weeks it has occurred on several occasions that rubbish and worse, have been stuffed into the mail box at the Bank of Commerce corner. That this has been the work of mischievous little boys is not doubted, but perhaps they do not know that this is an offence that is punishable, and might mean their being sent to the reformatory. Parents or guardians might accept this timely hint and advise the youngsters accordingly.

Lacrosse Broadcasts.—

Many local people listen to the broadcasts of the lacrosse games in Montreal not that they are familiar with the game but that "Reg" Grant is announcer. Huntingdon, though, at one time, prided itself with an exceptionally good lacrosse team and one which on many occasions defeated the city stalwarts. Mr. Grant was on the Chateau staff last year and it good to hear his voice over the air. During Friday night's program he broadcast messages to a few friends in Huntingdon.

School Baseball Team to Lachute.—

The Academy baseball team journeyed to Lachute on Saturday where they played against the Lachute High School team. At the end of the eighth inning Lachute was leading 7 to 4 but the Huntingdon boys caught up in the ninth inning. In their final inning Lachute secured the winning run. Final score 8-7.

Huntingdon line-up:—Forbes McGill, c; Allister Watson, p; Ronald McPherson, 1b; George Taylor, 2b; Lyell Graham, 3b; Lindsey Chambers, ss; fielders, William Todd, Allan Helm, Clark Sloan, and Birnie Dawson. The boys were accompanied by Bret. Lunan, Leslie Beatty, Mike Ross and T. J. Graham.

Bowling Season Opened.—

Monday evening saw the Huntingdon Bowling Green come into active use again. A number of ladies and gentlemen occupied three greens. On Tuesday evening four rinks from Huntingdon are scheduled to play in Ormstown. This will be the first league game of the season for these two District Clubs. The local green is being cared for under the direction of D. Lloyd Kelly.

New Baseball Diamond.—

A number of our young men are anxious to promote baseball. For many years they have attempted to make suitable diamonds on the Fair Grounds but it has been ploughed up and changed so often that the fans have given up the idea of attempting to make a diamond there. A field has been rented from Wallace Warden alongside the highway at the east end of the town, where a diamond is being made. The young men deserve credit for the initiative and stand they have taken.

Mr. Henderson had been employed at the Renfrew branch of the Bank of Montreal for seven years and his transfer and promotion to the position at Bathurst is a well-merited one. Stop Streets Made Law.—

Monday evening at the meeting of the Town Council a by-law was passed declaring stop streets. All people, vehicles and autos must now come to a dead stop when entering Chateauguay street from Lake, Bouchette, Dalhousie, Cemetery, Hunter, Henderson, Prince and King. Persons, vehicles and autos must also come to a dead stop when crossing these same streets. To some people it may seem almost unnecessary in a small town, but such a measure if enacted and followed will have a tendency to avoid accidents.

Forest Fire Fighting.—

Editor Gleaner,

Dear Folks:

You have heard I was fire fighting. I had eight days of it and don't want any more for a long time to come for it is no picnic. I was called at 11 p.m. the 16th May and at 1 a.m. was at Kedwick, 50 miles west of here. At 4 a.m. we were called out and drove to where the fire was spreading, with two fire-pumps set up and hose run out with about 150 men with shovels and grub-hoes and handpumps working along the face of it. During the night the fire dies down and you are able to work along the face of it until the air warms up and it commences to blaze. At noon we thought we had it under control but about 2 p.m. a regular gale blew up and the fire got away. It travelled fast and by night it was a couple of miles away. I got into a bad bunch of fire and smoke trying to save the hose, it made me sick and my throat was sore for a few days but no one was burned. That night a foreman and I went scouting to see where we could fight it to advantage. We put in a call to Campbellton for more men and about 150 came in about 3.30 next morning.

I was a kind of general foreman and timekeeper and I had dozens of men by the same name until I could not tell one man from another, so I decided to number them. We happened to have number aluminum tags at the office; I had them sent up and soon I was checking by number which greatly simplified matters. Each morning we had breakfast at daylight and started off by 4.30 as that is the best time to fight. We managed to head off the fire each day but it broke out in a fresh place and got ahead of us again. Finally we had to go six miles to get ahead of it. A couple of small showers and plenty of hard work put it out in nine days but it must have cost thousands of dollars. It did not burn any green timber as this area had been burned over in 1923. The foremen and bosses got about three or four hours' sleep a night and had lots of work and worry, to keep 250 men fed and housed. My main job was to check each man out in the morning; keep the cook supplied and see that there were tents and blankets, two cooks and four cookers fed 250 men but they did not bake bread. I bought the bread by the 100 loaves and eggs by the case. For one supper we ate one case (720) of boiled eggs, beside beans, potatoes, bread and jam. Next day two quarters of beef, about 200 pounds, a bag of beans only lasted three days, 100 lbs. cheese 1½ days. I do not know what we would have done without eggs. They were cheap, 12c a dozen and we used cases and cases of them. A lot of men came who had no work all winter and had lived almost on rations, in fact a lot were hungry, and yet they wasted food something awful. We had mounted policemen, and finally I had to station one at the table to make them stop throwing food away. As long as a policeman stayed they were O.K. As usual in a big bunch of men there are some who will not work, and as soon as we found out who they were we sent them out home. They would not work and were not tired. As a result they would not go to bed early and kept the other men awake. At last I had to have a policeman see that all were quiet at 9 p.m.

Altogether it was an exciting though hard week. I'm glad it is over. I lost a lot of sleep and some weight too. Farmers burning brush was the cause of starting the fire.

RIDGE SUITED FOR ORCHARDS SAYS MR. PETCH

Mr. C. E. Petch Speaks to 75 People on Orcharding, at W. I. Meeting at W. L. Carr's

INCREASING DEMAND FOR APPLES

Entomologist Petch Has 90 Acres of Orchard at Hemmingford

The Huntingdon Women's Institute met on Friday evening, June 3rd at the home of Mrs. W. L. Carr. There were about 75 present, including a score or more of men who listened most attentively to an address on Orchards by Mr. C. E. Petch of Hemmingford. An enthusiast on orchards and sworn enemy of the pests that afflict them, Mr. Petch undoubtedly succeeded in conveying to the audience a new appreciation of the possibilities in this field of agriculture. It is true that he was speaking to the unenlightened heathen in this respect, but there is good reason to believe that the message has taken root; that it will live and in due time, literally bear fruit.

Earlier in the evening Mr. Carr took Mr. Petch to inspect some of his ridge land. To his surprise, Mr. Petch discovered this to be first-class orchard land and reproached the owner for so long neglecting to fulfil a destiny so plainly indicated by Providence. He felt it was a desecration to devote such potentially valuable acres to the grazing of mere cattle, be they ever so purebred. We give these intimate details because of the glimmer of hope they may convey to owners of similar ridge lands, who, of late, have become discouraged with dairying and its prospects.

In the course of his address Mr. Petch dealt with the various insect pests that attack apple trees and the modern spraying methods to control them. He exhibited the proper pruning tools and the correct and incorrect method of pruning.

The speaker believed that there would be in Quebec a continually expanding market for high class apples and that the County of Huntingdon is ideally situated to supply same.

We might mention that Mr. Petch, who is the Dominion Entomologist in charge of the Experimental Station at Hemmingford, also owns and operates successfully a 90 acres orchard at the same place. He is, therefore, in truth, practicing what he preaches, a capacity very often lacking in experts otherwise well equipped to give advice.

During the evening delightful musical selections were rendered by the Misses Macfarlane. A social hour and refreshments brought the evening to a close.

A vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Carr moved by Rev. J. H. Miller received general applause. Mrs. Carr thanked Mr. Petch for his excellent address, the Misses Macfarlane and others who contributed to the success of the meeting.

The president, Mrs. Wallace Merson, presided and the committee assisting the hostess were Mrs. W. G. Tannahill, Mrs. J. J. Tannahill, Mrs. J. J. Alexander, Mrs. E. Thornton, Mrs. B. J. O'Connor, Mrs. W. J. Goundrey, and Mrs. H. R. Graham.

It was decided at the Institute meeting that any person who wanted to send a parcel of old woollens with the blanket order, they should have them packed and at Mrs. Goundrey's by Friday, June 17th.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. MET IN CITY

Mrs. Henry Wilson of Athelstan, Presided at Banquet to Welcome Delegates

There was an attendance of over two hundred, mostly women but a few men included, at the banquet held Monday evening in the Adam Room at Jas. A. Ogilvy's Ltd., Montreal, to welcome delegates to the twenty-fifth biennial convention of the Canadian Women's Christian Temperance Union. Short speeches were made by some of the Montreal officers, visitors and representatives of other organizations. Mrs. Henry Wilson, of Athelstan, president of the Quebec Provincial W. C. T. U., was in the chair, and the acting president, Mrs. L. C. Ward, of Toronto, extended a general welcome to the convention.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, LL.D., of Georgia, in a rapid fire speech, declared: "You needn't think the wets are going to win in the United States. They have the money and would gladly spend millions to make billions, but the drys have got the good men, the good women, science, law, and God on their side, and they are going to have the votes, too." Dr. Armor said that she had been born and bred a Democrat, but "that was no reason she should die a Democrat," and she was willing to vote for the party that would carry out her principles. In the coming elections, "Our vote for the dry party will make a noise that will be heard round the world," she declared.

The ministers of Montreal are standing foursquare behind the temperance movement, Rev. S. J. Pike, president of the Montreal Protestant Ministerial Association told the convention. He cited the three-point platform adopted by the association: That the present qualified protection of schools, churches, hospitals, etc., be made mandatory; that no new licences or transfers be granted until the commission has advertised the application made for them; and that no licences to sell liquor in places where there is prohibition be granted until prohibition has been repealed by law.

Short speeches were also made by Mrs. H. P. Newcombe, president of the Nova Scotia Provincial W. C. T. U., Canon W. Sanders and Rev. I. W. Pierce, president and secretary, respectively, of the Quebec League Against Alcoholism, and Rev. David A. MacLennan.

EXHIBIT AT ORMSTOWN

Homespun and Culinary Art Division Were Magnetic to Visitors—An Outstanding Exhibition

The annual inspection of the Ste. Martine School of Household Science took place on Saturday. It was a gala event, for on display were the exhibits of the 125 pupils who have been attending the school during the past year. Each pupil specialized in some particular branch of the course. Care and teaching was exemplified in the magnificent showing of needlework, homespun, curtains and culinary art, captivated the attention of the 1,000 visitors who honored the institution with a call on this occasion.

Amongst those who attended the School on Saturday from a distance was noted Mr. George Bouchard, M. P., from Kamouraska. Mr. Bouchard is particularly interested in this Household Science school, and paid a glowing tribute to the Mother Superior and her efficient staff of 18 teachers upon the work accomplished. The Hon. Honoré Mercier, was also a guest of honor.

Perhaps the one item that commanded most attention and respect for the institution, were the samples of homespun made in Ste. Martine. The samples were made up into clothing. The home-made curtains were also greatly admired and can be seen at the exhibition booth of the School in the Industrial Building at Ormstown Exhibition this week.

After visiting throughout the school one was invited to see what was done in the culinary division. Seeing so many good things to eat, made it so tempting that everyone wanted to partake of the good things. The hundreds of visitors were served with afternoon tea. The School is serving an exceedingly useful purpose and the 125 pupils attending, graduate knowing how to have better homes, and still not be extravagant. The Mother Superior is to be congratulated upon having such an efficient teaching staff as well as having such apt pupils.

The success of this institution can be shared with Mgr. Allard who has always taken such a prominent part in doing things for the betterment of the population residing especially in the Valley of the Chateauguay. Mayor P. N. April of Ste. Another Milestone in Newspaperdom

Coinciding with the trend of the times, another newspaper ceases to publish, and this time it is a newspaper that has served Ormstown for the past 37 years. Only six weeks ago the Cornwall Standard was absorbed by the Cornwall Freeholder, and now that thriving young city is served with a better paper than ever before. Throughout the Dominion of Canada this discontinuance in publication of weekly papers has been going on for fifteen years at an almost astonishing rate of speed. In each instance it has been a case of where two papers were not making satisfactory progress for the newspaper owners, and when combined, or absorbed, the community was better served, and the publisher prospered.

During the past score of years the Ormstown Bulletin has not enjoyed a great measure of success but that was not due to the personnel of its management, but to the fact that the English speaking community which it served was not sufficiently large to support a paper that was obliged to carry such a heavy overhead expense. The Bulletin was obliged to keep up to its contemporary, the Gleaner, otherwise its subscription list must dwindle, and that is what happened. Without a big subscription list, advertising patronage cannot be obtained, and without advertising, failure confronts a publisher. Mr. E. G. Hastings, the last editor of the Ormstown Bulletin proved himself time and again, as being an able weekly newspaper publisher. His paper came out regularly well filled with news, but the newspaper foundation established before his coming to Ormstown made it that the Bulletin had an impossible hill to climb in order to become a profitable publication. Mr. Hastings' opportunity at his old home in Dunnville, Ont., beckons his return, and he will leave this week to take up his new duties. As publishers of the Gleaner we wish him every success in his field of endeavour with which he is so well acquainted.

The readers of the Bulletin will now become regular readers of the Gleaner due to the arrangement made by Mr. Hastings with the Gleaner. The Gleaner will therefore become more keenly interested in the welfare of Ormstown than it has been heretofore, and will work as ardently for its welfare as it has for Huntingdon. The Chateauguay Valley is recognized across the Dominion as one of the most progressive districts in Canada, and generally this community is referred to as Huntingdon. This fact we believe is largely due to the publicity this district has received at the hands of the Gleaner, henceforth the honors will be divided through our doube-headed publication, published last week for the first time as "The Ormstown Gleaner."

The programme to which the Gleaner will continue to adhere, will be to give the readers all the news of the District. No weekly newspaper in Canada gives a better District news service, and we will not relent our efforts in this respect even if there is no other English weekly newspaper within the Beauharnois District. The Gleaner's strength was not built upon having a monopoly, but through having been a "Free Trader" whereby "we live, and let live," but our recognition as successful publishers was founded upon service, fair and honest dealing.

The Gleaner proprietors past and present have always been big enough to have a mind of their own, and never been afraid to speak it. That is the principle this column will follow in future years. Religious, racial and political differences can cause great anxiety in a community, and with discord nothing can succeed, therefore these matters will be treated in a particularly careful manner at all times.

Advertising That Failed

One insuperable drawback to radio broadcasting is that the advertisers have no means of ensuring that the public is listening to their programs.

Sponsors seem to be dazzled by the salesmen's talk that there are so many million people within the radius of so many radio stations, and at huge cost, they buy time over a certain number of stations, fondly believing—or just fondly hoping—that a few million people are listening to the programs. But many of them have had very disappointing results.

There is the cast of a hosiery manufacturer who booked thirteen weeks over one of the big American chains. With a large part of the contract unexpired he has asked to have it cancelled because the advertising has cost a great deal more than it has brought in.

The advertiser's program was heard over 42 stations every week. By way of "keying" the result he offered prizes for a contest. Yet, out of all those millions who were supposed to be listening, only 4,500 answers were received, or an average of about one hundred people per station, each being in a large city.

The program was one of those irritating fifteen-minute affairs with a sales talk at the beginning, middle and end, from six to seven minutes being taken up with the ballyhoo. Obviously, the advertiser did not care a rap about the entertainment; it was publicity for his goods and nothing else he wanted.

This is just a sample of what the public has to put up with under a system of radio run for private profit. Soon, it will be impossible on Canadian chains.

A Royal Welcome to Ormstown Exhibition Patrons

Summer brings tourists to Canada in great numbers, but no event in the District of Beauharnois brings a greater number of people from other parts of Canada and the United States than does Ormstown Exhibition. The 23rd annual exhibition is now in full swing, and an opportunity is now before us to welcome the friends of the Exhibition who have come to Ormstown for this seasonable event.

Some of these visitors come to Ormstown Exhibition with a view to spending money for better stock. There is no use denying that our farmers are looking for buyers who are able to pay the price asked, and it is just to such prospective buyers that our farmers can hope to make satisfactory sales. Our farmers who are exhibiting at Ormstown are prepared to make sales to buyers from outside points, but in order to achieve such results the confidence of the buyer must be obtained. The best way to obtain this confidence is to be friendly and courteous. As the farmer prospers so does the entire community. Ormstown Exhibition is a community enterprise, therefore we are all part and parcel of it, and it is the duty of everyone to consider himself a member of the reception committee to welcome visitors to our exhibition, the premier Livestock Exhibition of Eastern Canada. To our readers, we repeat, you will do well to open your hearts and your homes to the visitors, and you will find it pays in the long run. All join in giving the visitors a "Royal Welcome," treat them right at Ormstown Exhibition and they are almost certain to return next year.

Quit Advertising Depression

If your product had front page space every day in the year in ninety per cent. of the papers in the world, would it sell? Certainly it would.

That is just one reason why the present depression has lasted as long as it has. Newspapers have given it about 50 billion dollars worth of advertising in the last two years for nothing.

Ministers, priests, clergymen, bishops and archbishops have advertised it. Prime ministers, members of the house, politicians have advertised it. Writers, artists, tradesmen have advertised it. Worst of all, travelling salesmen, who should know better, have advertised it.

Herbert N. Casson, editor of Efficiency magazine, London, England, issues this warning, "Everyone who talks depression and predicts disaster, is advertising the depression. It keeps the fear of bad trade in men's minds; it prevents them from buying what they want to buy."

However, the depression is like merchandise that is highly advertised but lacks quality. It doesn't remain on the market long and people who have purchased it are skeptical about re-purchase.

Hearts of Policemen Beat

That the heart of the police beats strong for the unfortunate is illustrated by a story told by the Chronicle of New Glasgow, N.S., edited by a big-hearted Scot, Don Fraser. It is in connection with the unemployment situation in one of its neighboring towns, and runs this way: It appears that a man who had been out of work for some time decided that he could not longer see his wife and children go hungry. So he approached a local grocer with the request that he be trusted with a bag of flour until he was in a position to pay for it. For reasons of his own the grocer did not grant this request, whereupon the man seized a bag of flour and made off with it. The police authorities were notified of the case, and an officer was at once dispatched to investigate. On arriving at the home of the man in question, the officer discovered a mother dispensing hot biscuits to a number of hungry children whose hearts were gladdened by the sight of such a delicacy. It was learned later that no proceedings were taken. The policeman paid for the flour.

Greets Children After Eleven Years

Eleven years ago, Pincus Neiman and his wife, Sarah, left nine children in their war-town Rumanian village while they came to the new world to seek fortune. They established an East Side laundry in New York City and prospered, though Sarah died four years ago amid the drudgery of the washboards. Memory of her—and the happiness the coming of the "children" would have given her—was the only flaw in Pincus' happiness at dawn as he dressed in his new outfit and went to the shed where the Mauretania was to dock. He was hours ahead of time, but finally the big ship nosed in, and then—"I want my babies!" Pincus shouted as he catapulted into the first class lounge where immigration agents were checking in the Neiman tribe. Pincus stopped short, his mouth agape. There stood nine strapping persons, four boys and five girls, all fully grown, their faces beaming. "Hello, Papa!" they chorused, and Pincus gathered them to his arms, from Sarah, now 21, down to Mathilde, 15. Among them were two sets of twins.

After Lusitania Treasure

Captain Hilton H. Railey, of the Lake-Railey Lusitania Expedition, London, England, who hopes to salve valuable parts of the cargo of the Lusitania by descending to the decks of the vessel through a steel tube, is already on the job with a number of commissions from private individuals anxious to recover personal property. One woman lost a pearl necklace valued at $100,000 which has been lying in one of the safes of the Lusitania since 1915. Captain Turney, who was in command at the time of the sinking, has asked Captain Railey to try to recover his sextant from the chart-room. Captain Railey expects to find the vessel in an upright position and the hull intact.

Kittens Were Half Rabbit

Two kittens, offspring of the owner's household tabby cat, and by appearance at least half rabbit, are the latest freak of nature reported at Haileybury, Ont. The animals are the property of Charles Belec, Haileybury resident, and they have all the appearance of an ordinary feline, so far as their front quarters go, but the hind legs are built with the long feet and knuckle joints similar to those found on bunnies. They have, too, the short, stubby tail which is a feature of the rabbit. The little animals are thriving and there is every expectation they will reach maturity. Originally, there were three of them, but one died shortly after birth.

A Mighty Tuned Bell

The second largest tuned bell in the world recently boomed out its iron notes for the first time at a Croydon bell foundry, England. It will eventually hang in the new carillon at the University of Chicago. The biggest bell in the world—made at the same foundry four years ago—now echoes from the belfry of the Riverside Church in New York. Hundreds of bell ringers from churches in all parts of England, who were holding a convention at the foundry, marveled at the bell's deep tones.

He Knew His Chicks

Newt Carver of Douglas, Georgia, knows his chickens and Newt Carver's chickens know their roosts. When Newt saw three fowls in a shop, he did not say anything, just bought the chickens. He took them home and watched them at roosting time. One went to the henhouse, another flew into a chinaberry tree and the third sought her old place in another tree. On the basis of this proof of ownership a father and son were convicted of chicken stealing.

Drifting Barrels Come Ashore

Drifting barrels of pickled herring came ashore at Long Beach, Long Island, in large numbers. A total of more than 1,700 have been salvaged thus far. Nineteen barrels, each containing three cases of Scotch, were picked up in the surf by the coast guard at Arverne, Queens, three miles away. The Scotch containers all were linked together with rope. The mystery of their floating ashore is as great as that of the herring invasion.

Entire Family Jailed

An entire family of four went to jail at Winnipeg, Man., when Mr. and Mrs. Sam Austin were sentenced by Magistrate R. B. Graham for bootlegging. With her 18-month-old son clinging to her skirts, Mrs. Austin motioned her deaf husband out of the prisoners' dock and followed him into the cells. She is to spend six months and he three months in jail.

'Tattoo Man' Makes Gift

An Osaka, Ontario, farmer has made a present of his skin to Dr. Masaichi Fukushi of the Imperial University, Tokio. Of course the skin is not to be delivered until death ends the farmer's use for it. Dr. Fukushi's hobby is collecting tattooed skin. While visiting Ontario he was impressed by the farmer's amazing tattoo display which covers his entire body. Proving amenable to persuasion, the tattooed agrarian agreed to be listed with 17 other persons who have promised their skins to the collector.

Marked Cards But Game on Level

They play with marked cards, but the game is honest. The players are blind. They have a club, thirteen girls—one extra so they always will be sure of three tables—and they meet to play three times a week, the evenings of Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday on the fifth floor of the New York Association for the Blind. The cards are in Braille. Sure memory replaces sight. This is how they play contract: The cards are dealt, just as in an ordinary game, and so the bidding. The dummy lays down her hand, calling each card once, and the players memorize them. Then, the play east says "I am leading the ace of diamonds." North, "playing the three of diamonds from the dummy." West, "five of diamonds." North again, "the six of diamonds from my hand." And so on to make game, or a set. The cards are not held like a fan, between the fingers so that the Braille marks are felt and the player is conscious of what she is holding. So keen is her memory that she recalls afterwards the complete layout of the 52 cards. Score is kept in a Braille slate, but seldom is it referred to, additions being kept in the head also.

A Light Beam Conversation

A voice was carried over a light beam from the dirigible Los Angeles to the ground at Schenectady, N.Y., and the navy had demonstrated a "secret" method of communication from the air expected to be highly important in war time. Engineers said an enemy could not "listen in" on light beam communication as it could on wireless, and the mirror which picked up the light beam was invisible to observers, although they could see the light beam in the darkness. In the daytime, the engineers said, the beam even could not be seen. The transmission of voice over a beam of light was experimented with by officers of the airship and scientists of the General Electric company. A two foot mirror on the roof of a laboratory picked up the beam and a photo-electric cell transformed the light-borne frequencies into sound and voice which were broadcast over a national radio chain. The Los Angeles turned homeward toward Lakehurst immediately after the experiment.

Child Gives Nickel Reward

Little Betty Kramler, of Portland, Oregon, who lost an "expensive" bracelet in the Washington Park pit sent a nickel to the park superintendent for return postage and "reward" for the finder, has her treasured trinket back again as well as her nickel. "I am a little girl 11 years of age," Betty wrote C. P. Keyser, superintendent of parks. "I lost a bracelet. It was a bracelet with blue stones and it had a glass diamond on it. It was a Christmas present and it is expensive. I am sending you a nickel for postage. If any remainder from the nickel, keep it. I want my bracelet back pretty bad. If you find it please send it. I lost it in a bear pit where all the rocks are and a pool is there too. There are four bears in the pit." After such a complete description park employes had no difficulty finding the bracelet.

Pipe Better Than 3rd Degree

Everyone around the police station at Los Angeles knows Officer W. S. Hudson's pipe. It's the kind you could use for fumigation or smoking out bees and rats. Until recently, Hudson's brother officers held their noses when the pipe came around and wanted to know why he didn't bury it. Now the pipe is safe. For it has accomplished what three officers failed to do. It wrung from a young man the name of an asserted murderer and a confession of taking part in a robbery which resulted in the slaying of a North Carolina merchant. Three officers had questioned Alvin Eller for 24 hours. Then Hudson came along with his pipe. Eller kept looking at the pipe. Finally he threw up his hands. "Throw that pipe away and I'll tell you everything," he exclaimed. The asserted confession followed.

Baby Operated at Birth

Officials of the Prospect Heights and Brooklyn, N.Y., Maternity Hospital disclosed that an appendix operation had been successfully performed on an infant immediately after birth. The child, a boy, was born to Mrs. Florence Bryan on May 23. It weighed but three pounds and physicians who observed a serious hernia involving the appendix decided an immediate operation was imperative. Forty minutes after the child was born he was in his crib, the operation successfully completed. The boy has since gained more than a pound and in a few days will be able to leave the hospital with his mother.

A Little Too Grateful

Extravagantly grateful for the services of a Toulon doctor, a Russian patient wrote him saying it ever misfortune should strike him, he the patient, would give his physician 100,000 francs ($4,000), "not as a gift, but because you have well earned it." Recently the doctor had to undergo the amputation of both legs and, finding himself in need, suggested that his former patient make good his promise. The latter could not see it that way and the doctor went to court. The tribunal ordered payment, holding that the written promise was formal and binding.

Perversity of Human Nature

Not only can you walk on the grass in the Capitol grounds at Salem, Oregon, you are invited to do so. Secretary of State Hal Hoss declared that while there were no "Keep off the grass" signs on the Capitol lawns, visitors carefully kept to the walks. "The State of Oregon wants them to enjoy the lawns," he said. "So we are going to put up signs reading 'Please walk on the grass.'"

Mane of Horse Turns White

A horse was so frightened by the landing of an airplane in the same field that its black mane turned white, and there are streaks of grey in its tail. Miss McAlpine, daughter of Sir Alfred McAlpine, the race-horse owner, of Werchan, Denbighshire, England, said: "As the machine landed the horse suddenly took fright and galloped in front of it until it landed. Four days later we noticed that the horse's mane was changing color from jet black. It now is completely white."

Dundee

Women's Institute Meeting.—

The Dundee Women's Institute met in the Community Hall on Wednesday, June 1st, with a large attendance of members and visitors. Plans were made for an exhibit under the topic Education and Better Schools at Ormstown Exhibition. Plans for a delegate to the Provincial Convention to be held at Macdonald College the third week in June were also arranged.

Rev. Mr. Haughton was present and gave an address, in which he corroborated what the President, Mrs. Smallman, had previously brought up for discussion, that music should be included in the course of study in the Consolidated School. He also advised planting the school yards in shrubberies and plants as an added improvement.

It was decided to have Mr. Petch of Hemmingford lecture on Orchards as there are sections of Dundee that are ideal for the growing of orchards.

Reports were given by the delegates, Mrs. Platt and Mrs. Grant, of the County Convention held in Huntingdon, May 6th. The roll call was responded to by hints on First Aid Emergencies.

Dr. J. C. Moore, M.P., was present, and gave an instructive talk on the Prevention and Cure of Tuberculosis, after which refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mrs. N. McPhee and Mrs. D. Smellie.

Economics at Home

Father comes us from the furnace, where he has been invigorating the bituminous coal industry, and joins the children at the table.

They set to work to solve the problem of disposing of surplus food products by increasing the consumer demand.

Upon hearing them, the cook emerges from the kitchen, where up to that time she has been subject to technical unemployment.

The children ask for syrup on the cakes, and father says there should be a large stock in the warehouse; but the cook replies that there has been a brisk movement in the commodity since the last inventory was taken and there is no longer any on the shelves.

Father, however, points to an overproduction of sugar, and offers to exchange it for some of little Johnny's surplus butter.

Mother now comes down the stairs, and tells father not to forget to earmark some gold for her before he leaves the house, as she has numerous obligatins to be met at once.

Father reminds her of her previous indebtedness and explains to her that if she wishes to enjoy confidence she would make a serious effort to balance her budget.

She replies that her finances are in a critical situation and she is on the brink of bankruptcy, so father does not press her further, but advances her valuable credits and also grants her a moratorium.

Little Mark asks for another griddle cake, as she is facing starvation. Mother replies that this is strange, as there is an over-supply of griddle cakes, and that obviously the trouble lies with the distribution.

Father says that Little Mary is unduly alarmed, that the kitchen is fundamentally sound, and all will be wel when confidence is restored.

And with that father picks up his hat, mother places a number of orders for father to negotiate, thus stimulating seasonal buying, and he rushes off to assist in increasing the net operating income for the railways for the fourth quarter, as compared with the corresponding period of last year.—Baltimore Evening Sun.

Two men who are impudent and shallow in the face of the wonders of life:—The man who is confident there is no God and the man who knows exactly the mind of God.

Mission Band Hold Social Evening.—

The regular meeting day of the Senior Mission Band happening to fall on June 3rd the members decided to celebrate the holiday by having as guests the young people from the Presbyterian residence, Huntingdon. Following a short business meeting conducted by Hazel Macfarlane, a roll of all present was called by Jack Elder, each one rising and looking pleasant in response. This was by way of introduction, as most of the members of each group were strangers to the other. The next hour passed quickly in various games. A pleasant surprise was sprung on Clarence French, whose birthday is also June 3rd. As the party sat down to supper, Mrs. Wells, the leader of Senior Mission Band, placed a cake with eighteen lighted candles at his place on the table while the rest all sang "For He's A Jolly Good Fellow." The table was decorated in patriotic red, white and blue, and ice-cream, cake and coffee were served for refreshments.

The Women's Missionary Society has made arrangements with the Provincial Lantern Slide Secretary, for the use of the Budget Set on June 19th.

Miss Georgina Munro of Montreal, spent the week-end at the home of Mr. R. C. Baird.

The holiday brought the usual number of visitors for the week-end. At the Rowat home were Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Rowat and sons Willard and Eddie, Mr. Richard Rowat, Miss Grace Rowat and Morley, all from Montreal.

Mrs. Chalmers and daughter occupied their cottage over the week-end, where Miss Miriam King was also their guest.

Miss Gertrude Bulgin from Presbyterian residence, Huntingdon, was a week-end guest at the home of Mr. E. E. Wells.

A number of married men were recently dining together at their club. The question was asked, "What trait in your wife do you consider the most expensive one?" The answers were as numerous as the men in the party. With one it was vanity, another religion, or charity, or love of dress. The last man to whom the question was put answered oracularly, "Her tears!"

Paper Currency Today Mere Promises to Pay

Paper money may be looked upon as token money carried to its final extreme. A piece of it has no value at all in itself; the value depends wholly on a promise printed on it. But although the idea of paper money might be expected to have developed easily from token money, no one in the West seems to have considered the matter feasible until more than a thousand years after token coins appeared, says a bulletin of the National Geographic society.

Paradoxically, the first "paper" money was a brick, for the germ of the idea seems to have been born in Babylonia more than 2,000 years before the Christian era. Bonds for the repayment of loans were written on clay tablets and baked. These passed from hand to hand as representations of the amounts involved. Similarly deposits were made with individuals, and clay-brick drafts were written against them. Later brick bills of exchange transferred wealth from place to place.

DANGERS OF FATIGUE

Death from fatigue does not occur very often. The Marathon Race reminds us of one such death, for the runner who carried the report of the Greek victory from Marathon to Athens is said to have collapsed and died as soon as he had delivered his message.

Although, as we have said, fatigue is seldom the direct cause of death, it does result in injury to the body, since it decreases the ability to work and apparently increases the likelihood of the occurrence of certain diseases.

As the result of the activities of our body, energy is used up and certain waste or end products are produced. Providing these waste products are not produced too rapidly, the body is able to get rid of them quite readily, but if they are formed quicker than they can be eliminated then they accumulate, and when this occurs the body is burdened, or one might even say, poisoned with its own waste products and such a person experiences fatigue.

It has been shown that a person may repeat some action so many times a minute and keep on doing so without becoming tired. Just as soon as the number of repetitions is increased, then fatigue is felt. The reason for this being that with the limited number of repetitions the products of activity were removed b when the number was increased, they accumulated.

Another interesting point is that when work is carried to the point of fatigue it takes comparatively a much longer time to recover than if a stop had been made for rest before fatigue had set in. It is observed that rest periods in the middle of the morning and afternoon result in a greater production of work. It is also a matter of practical importance to remember that industrial accidents increase towards the end of the day when workers become tired.

There is what we might call normal fatigue, the result of the day's work from which we recover fully after the night's rest, and there is abnormal fatigue or overfatigue which harms the body and from which we do not recover except after a prolonged period of rest.

When we use our muscles and become fatigued it is not only the muscles which are affected, the whole body is involved in the condition. We do not digest food properly when we are tired, which indicates that the digestive system feels the fatigue although it has not itself been doing extra work.

Sufficient rest before overfatigue occurs, rids the body of the poisons before they accumulate and injure the body. A healthy body supplied with proper food, sufficient water and fresh air is best able to avoid fatigue and its ill results.

MODERNS PERFECT IDEAS OF ANCIENT MACHINISTS?

Speaking of steam-driven coaches, Prof. John S. Worley, of the University of Michigan, says there was a steam engine in Alexandria in 300 B.C., thousands of years before James Watt sat and watched his grandmother's tea kettel bubble. The steam engine invented by the scientist, Hero of Alexandria, was portrayed in a scientific book in 1600. The engine was merely a toy, but the outgoing steam whirled a large globe on the ornate apparatus and blazed the way for power by steam.

The water turbine is supposed to be a modern invention, but Professor Worley points out that one was created by the Roman, Vitruvius, in 300 B.C. and was, historians say, used to grind grain.

"Looking it all over," Professor Worley said, "modern man must find gratification in the invention of several key implements that have made the perfection of old discoveries possible. We take, for instance, the invention of the Bessemer converter, with the resulting steel tools, the construction of forges and the building of intricate gauges. These are things that our generation has contributed to bringing into use the discoveries of the ancient machinist, who labored alone and unrecognized in his laboratories to produce brain children that people centuries later were to claim as their own."

Blue-Eyed Beduins

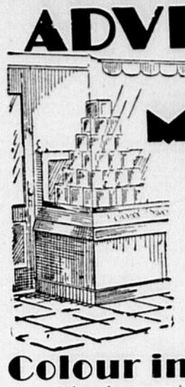

British engineers surveying the Transjordan, Syrian and Iraq deserts in connection with the Haifa-Bagdad railway, report important archeological and ethnographic finds. To the south of Amman they have discovered large caves containing potsherds, figurines and other relics of the Prehistoric and Bronze ages. The walls bear inscriptions and drawing resembling the Assyrian. A Beduin tribe, not large in numbers, but rich, was also found. They are all tall, fair and blue-eyed and have no Semitic features. Remarkable ruins, including well-preserved 20-feet high walls, were discovered on the site of the ancient Babylonian town of Almogrube.

Colour in Display Windows

Colour harmony in your window displays is a very important item, because it either adds a great deal to the attention value of your display or detracts from it. Colour harmony is not a difficult task, if you will give it a little thought and study. Strong contrasts in colour are being widely used today, but there are still certain colour combinations which should be avoided. This is equally true in all types of stores, whether it be grocery, drugs, hardware or dry goods.

Have a definite plan in mind in your window displays. Your window is a picture. That picturization must be vivid if it is to make the mind act. By that I don't mean that the colours must be glaring. Vividness or emphasis comes from stressing the main idea or product and making all else subordinate to that. A permanent background colour should be one that will blend with all the various types of display you expect to use. It should not be a colour which will in itself attract the attention of the eye, but rather one that will emphasize the colours in the products displayed.

Permanent flooring should also be of some neutral colour. It is occasionally well to use a bright colour as a base—say of crepe paper or as I have mentioned in a previous article a large block pattern in contrasting colours made from veneer or building board, and laid over the regular flooring.

In selecting the colours for your display, whether it be for a crepe paper background, a cloth background, a painted background or panel, or even to the accessories you put in your display, the following table as given in R. E. Ramsay's book on Constructive Merchandising is one of the best and at the same time the simplest schedule of colour combinations.

If the main colour in the display is

BLACK—the following can be used as contributory colours: Yellow, pale blue, apricot, emerald, raspberry, turquoise, heliotrope, orange, gray, gold, brown, red, chestnut, copper, and olive green.

BROWN DISPLAY—Cream, corn colour, light yellow, ivory, maize, dark yellow, burnt orange, straw, champagne, peach, muskmellon, apricot, salmon pink, lemon, apple green, coral, old rose, heliotrope, amber, amethyst, emerald, topaz, turquoise, and any shade from cream to burnt orange. If the display is CHESTNUT—Yellow, red and black can be used with it. If CHOCOLATE DISPLAY—Black, red and all shades of brown. RUSSET DISPLAY—White, yellow, violet, orange, red, and brown.

YELLOW DISPLAY—White, light blue, violet, pink, buff, copenhagen, dove, gray, copper, brown, dark purple, dark green, red, chestnut, and black. CITRON DISPLAY—White, buff, yellow and orange. COPPER DISPLAY—Yellow, red and black.

GRAY DISPLAY—Pale blue, laurel green, heliotrope, old rose, pale green, orange, pink, wisteria, apricot, raspberry and all shades of yellow. DRAB DISPLAY—White, yellow, red and black.

LIGHT BLUE DISPLAY—Light green, pink, gray, golden brown, dark orange and black. DOVE DISPLAY—White, yellow, vermillion, and blue.

MOSS GREEN DISPLAY—Pale green, sulphur, pale pink, pale blue, heliotrope, old rose, salmon, pink, black and white novelties, any of the jewel series (which are amber, amethyst, emerald, coral, turquoise, topaz) any shade from cream to burnt orange, and any shade from champagne to muskmellon. OLIVE DISPLAY—White, blue, orange, green, red, and black.

NAVY BLUE DISPLAY—Bright red, old rose, nile green, pale blue, white, cream, ivory, pale yellow, light yellow, orange, burnt orange, black and white novelties, and any shade from cream to burnt orange, and any shade from champagne to muskmellon.

ORANGE DISPLAY—White, gray, blue, olive, russet, purple, red, maroon, green, black.

PINK DISPLAY—White, yellow, light blue, tan, brown, nile green, lavender, citron, gray, purple, dark red.

PURPLE DISPLAY—Purple in combinations of two or three different shades, white, cream, gold, orange, dark red, dark green.

RED DISPLAY—Red in combinations of two or three different shades, white, cream, black, gold, silver, yellow, dark green, violet, chestnut, gray, pink, purple, copper, russet. MAROON—Orange and brown.

What Does Your Name Mean?

(By H. A. Deferrari, Ph.D.)

A reader wishes to know the meaning of the ending "-ez" which occurs in so many Spanish names. There has been much discussion among scholars concerning the origin and meaning of that ending, but at the present time it is generally agreed that it is derived from the Old Teutonic "-es" (Gothic "-is"), and that it means "of" or "the son of." Thus, Fernandez" means "the son of Ferdinand."

Endings with similar meanings in other languages are as follows: Roumanian— -escu, -esco; Hungarian -fi, ffy, -fy, (meaning "boy" and "son"); Slavonic— -vich, -evich, -ich, -vitch, -itch, -eff, -ev; Armenian— -ian; Greek— -ides, opoulos, -opoulo, -poulos, -poulo (the last four meaning "young man" and "son"). The Polish ending "-ski" does not mean "son," as is popularly believed. It is added to the name of a place, and its significance is "the man from" or "the man who comes from."

The family name "Butts" (also written "Butt") is found in early English records, but in no case is it of purely English origin. A frequent source is the Old Norse "buttr" which means "short" and "stumpy." When derived from this source "Butts" was obviously first given as a nickname. In some cases "Butts" has come into English through the French, and ultimately from the Teutonic personal name "Boto" meaning "the messenger" and "the herald." There is evidence that a third source of "Butts" is the Old French "butte" meaning "a mound," and in such cases the name points out the location of the dwellings of the persons who were first so called.

French names meaning "the cowherd" are: Vachier, Vachon, Vachat, Vachet, Vachette, Vachot, Vachoux, Vachaud, Levacher and Levachot. They indicate the occupation of the persons who were first so called.

There wouldn't be so many liars, if the people didn't want to be lied to. There wouldn't be any bootleggers, if the people didn't want liquor.

"Emancipation Day"

June 19 is observed as emancipation day by many negroes, because on that date in 1862 congress passed a law probiting forever slavery in the federal territories. The date is observed particularly in those states such as Oklahoma, which were later carved out of federal territory. By a coincidence the negroes were proclaimed free in Texas on June 19 by the Union commander, and in that state also June 19 is observed as a holiday.—Pathfinder Magazine.

STORM 10 MILES WIDE

Mrs. M. B. Fisher Entertains 35 Ladies of W. I. at Orr's Hotel—Mr. Fisher Principal Speaker at Meeting

One of the worest electric storms ever experienced in this locality happened on Sunday afternoon about four o'clock, a terrific gale from the northwest, accompanied by hail, as large as chestnuts played havoc with the fruit orchards, windows were broken and much damage done to roofs of buildings and to crops. R. T. Brownlee reports 88 lights of glass broken, and his crops submerged under a foot of water. The path of the storm was about ten miles wide and extended from Hemmingford Village to Sherrington.

150 School Children Figure in Gala Parade That Marked Opening of Ormstown Exhibition—Record Attendance For Tuesday Evening Show—Accident in Tandems

The Ormstown Exhibition was officially opened last evening. With the 150 school children parading into the arena, headed by the band, the grand show was opened. Under the direction of Mrs. M. Lindsay and Miss G. Getty the children of Ormstown Consolidated School were trained for this occasion.

The float that headed the parade represented "Miss Canada" who happened to be Miss Elizabeth Roy. With the white float colored with maple leaves circling about the arena, beneath the grand array of flags of the world, a very pleasing picture to the eye was presented. On another float was seen Miss Marjorie Todd. This float was representing Ormstown and their emblematic flower, "the Rose." Following this was a great load of young nurses representing the Health Unit of the County of Chateauguay, which is today doing such yeoman work for the benefit of the health of the public in that county. The Boy Scouts, 20 in number, under skipper Burry McGerrigle followed in the procession. The "calèche" gave many a good laugh, for besides it being an oddity, in it were seated the two prize winners of the Ormstown Chautauqua. The Misses McCuaig and Orr were dressed as an old couple.

In the parade was a number of little boys and girls. The little boys dressed as farmers were soldiers of the soil whilst the little misses were farmerettes. A still younger generation of girls was to be seen toting about their baby dolls in perambulators. "The Youth of Canada are not to be forgotten" was their slogan. The parade ended with the Ormstown G. C. I. T. The parade was magnificent and the people who missed seeing the event, missed much.

The exceptionally fine attendance for a Tuesday evening programme saw an excellent horse show. The first class was that of best road horse in the district, and again D. A. Cairns won the honors, whilst the close second was Chas. Collings of Hemmingford.

The saddle horse class 15.2 hands honors went to Miss Viau, who is again at Ormstown with a wonderful string of horses. The pony, high steppers, honors went to J. W. Shaw, Point aux Trembles.

The carriage tandem entry gave some excitement to the spectators. In the first place one of Miss Viau's horses that is usually driven in the tandem was sick, and had to be substituted. The new horse could not adapt himself to this mode of hitching and became unruly. Before entering the ring a buggy was broken, and when entering the ring the leading horse could not be quieted, and had to leave the arena. The Chestnut Stables entry also had a mishap. A rein flapped over the bridle and as a result the second horse got excited and broke a shaft when falling. The horse was noi hurt in the least The remaining tandem was that of J. W. Shaw.

In the general purpose team class, Donald E. Black was accorded 1st and 2nd place. In the hackney yeld mare class Miss Viau won 1st with D. A. Cairns taking second place. In the green hunters, over hurdles, the two entries of Mount Royal Riding Stables were accorded 1st and 2nd prizes.

The amusements provided by Wirth and Hamid proved to be very interesting and drew a great deal of applause from the large audience. Bandmaster Roy Brownlee was engaged to supply a 9-piece band, but has augmented it to the extent of 14 pieces. Today will see the attractions whipped into shape so that everything will run off smoothly and without delay or interruption.

The Big Pony Entry

With a large number of new pony exhibitors at Ormstown the show this year will appeal to a great many youngsters and ladies who like ponies. The pony classes will figure amongst the largest at the exhibition.

From the small ponies, one's attention might be directed to what is claimed the largest horse in the world. This horse measures 12 hands high, weighs 2960 pounds. He is a white Percheron, known as Silent B., and owned by Van Winkle of Waterloo, N. Y.

During the Exhibition the Ladies of St. Paul's Church are serving meals in the dining hall. The midday meal is 50c and supper at 35c.

A full report on the Ormstown Exhibition will appear in the next edition of the Gleaner.

Chasing Bottles and Churns

A company has been formed in England by the milk industry for the sole purpose of recovering lost, stolen, or strayed bottles and churns, and last year nearly 8,000,000 bottles and 16,000 churns were found and restored to their owners. It is estimated that the industry was thus saved $250,000.

Notice to . . . . Ormstown Bulletin Patrons

For nigh two years I have published the Ormstown Bulletin, and during that interval of time I have become quite well acquainted with the people of the Chateauguay Valley and enjoyed as fair a share of the trade in this district as one could hope to secure. The volume of trade available in this community is small, and I believe can best be served by the Gleaner publishers who have been established in this district for so many years. When coming to Ormstown from Dunnville, Ont., I left my aged father conducting the local printery of that town. Today, my father wishes to retire, and I am returning to Dunnville to conduct the Dunnville Gazette.

Feeling a responsibility to the subscribers of the Bulletin I have made an arrangement with the publishers of the Gleaner to supply the Bulletin subscribers with a copy of the Gleaner. People who happened to subscribe to both papers will have their subscriptions to the Gleaner accordingly extended.

I also wish to avail myself of this opportunity of informing the public that any accounts owing me can be paid to the publishers of the Gleaner during the next two weeks, who will give you a clear receipt. I would consider it a great favour if those indebted to me would settle these accounts with as little delay as possible.

In conclusion, let me again extend my thanks to the people of this community for their patronage during my stay in Ormstown, and I sincerely hope you will now extend the same good will and co-operation to the publishers of the Gleaner, in whom I have every confidence will do their level best for Ormstown and the district in general.

STAR OF THE NORTH

A Romance

OF THE BIG WOODS

CHAPTER XXX

Dan, with Ben's help had finished the addition to the camp before leaving.

Two weeks later, Dan and Ben delivered up their prisoner to the authorities in Montreal, and claimed the reward. Ben insisted on having the thousand dollars reward paid to Dan and Rand equally, which was done. Dan was to return to the assistance of the little party left in the camp, but was held in the city as a witness in the trial of Joe Perry, which was not to come on for about six weeks.

In the meantime, the little party in the wilderness was not suffering physically. Bill Preston—half Indian—was an expert hunter, and heartily devoted to Rand, and despite his crippled leg he would hobble out to the alder flats and sit until the deer, driven by vicious flies to the edge of the pond, gave him a good chance of potting one, and then, with Petol's help, the venison was brought in and jerked.

Autumn was close at hand. Already some of the soft maple leaves were brilliant in their fall colors, and Petol, like the red squirrels, searched the beech ridges for nuts. Huckleberries grew rank on the banks of the pond, and blackberries were plentiful in the open spaces on the side of the nearby hills. Petol was never happier than when bringing in these little delicacies for Rand, which she did daily. And twice a week she would pole the raft out to a good trout hole, and bring in a nice string of fish.

One afternoon Petol returned from her exploring trip with a basket full of delicious edible roots. In the bottom of the basket was over a quart of groundnuts. Next to them was a like amount of crinkle root, and on top a big bunch of leeks. When Rand saw the ground nuts and crinkle root, he could not keep back the tears, which chased silently down his cheeks.

"Petol, my little North Star, you are doing what my little Cristie and I did so many years ago, before we moved to the settlement. Shall I ever see her again?"

"Yes, yes, my dear Rand, she is waiting for you somewhere."

"But is she not in the mill settlement with her father?"

"Ah, I do not know. She told me they were going to the States to buy a farm, but would leave word with their neighbor, Mr. Hamlin, the preacher."

"Well, then, I shall be able to find her, shall I not?"

"Surely you will, Rand," said Petol, though her answer came hard. In her honest heart a terrible battle was in progress. She could not deny herself the truth that she almost worshiped the noble lad she had so faithfully nursed after delivering him from the clutches of the outlaws, but the Indian blood prohibited that she should take him from his promised bride. But the battle would be a hard one.

To Rand, her presence was one continuous joy. He reveled in her society, with no thought of love beyond a fast growing friendship, which, if continued, at lenght might develop dangerously close to love. This he did not realize.

The Abenakis did not believe in the age-old maxim, that "all is fair in love and war." For the next two weeks Petol avoided conversing with Rand, though she did not once neglect him. If anything, she was more watchful than ever, anticipating all his needs and wishes, but when Rand tried to draw her into conversation she had a ready excuse and pretended to be busy at making baskets, or some other work. This only acted as a stimulant to his desire to have her near him. As yet, he was only able to sit up an hour or two each day, and Mrs. Barntre declared it would be many moons before he would be able to stand the trip to Montreal.

Bill's leg was fast healing and, as cold weather would soon be upon them, he spent much time cutting firewood and piling it up around the camp. Their traps had all been recovered, and Bill resolved to set them for beaver and mink, and also marten.

Freezing nights now painted the foliage in beautiful colors, and the snow owls hooted on moonlight nights. Bill set his traps the following week, and had a very successful catch. Petol made several trips with Bill on his trap lines, and shot a few rabbits. Bill told her how the wolves had treed them on the top of their camp last winter.

"Oh, I hope they'll come this winter. With my six-shooter, I could kill them all."

"I doubt their coming this winter," said Bill.

"Why so, Bill? Have they all been killed?"

"No, but wolves seldom return to places where they have been defeated in their attacks."

"Oh, of course, how foolish of me not to remember. Uncle Dan has told me the same thing."

The winter dragged for the impatient Rand, also his slowly regaining strength, but, as all things eventually come to an end, so did that eventful second winter of Rand's enforced capitivity and convalescence of the dread "swamp" fever. Thankful was he, as well as the rest of the little party, when the first warm days of April came, and with them came Dan Emmet, with a heavy pack of nutritious foods for Rand. Dan had anticipated Rand's emaciated condition, and had brought food from the prescription of one of Montreal's most noted physicians. Dan was also agreeably surprised at the improvement he saw in Rand's whole appearance.

The winter snows had not melted enough to start the water running, as yet, and Mrs. Bartntre considered that by another week Rand would be able to make the trip to Montreal. The whole party was rejoicing over the arrival of Dan, and the prospects of soon getting out of the wilderness. Dan helped Bill pick up his and Rand's traps, and they both went fishing on the little pond for the last time and brought in a fine mess of trout. For the last two weeks, Petol and Rand had been taking daily snowshoe trips in an effort to rebuild Rand's physical condition, preparatory to making the homeward hike.

Mrs. Barntre was the first to inquire what disposition had been made of their prisoner. Dan was a witness throughout the trial. As three of the outlaw party had already been shot, it was practically impossible to prove whose shot had killed Pierre Barntre, so the court of justice sentenced Joe Perry to life imprisonment. Mrs. Barntre, though mourning the loss of her husband, considered that justice had been done, and was glad the reward had gone to Dan and Rand.

It was a valuable pack of furs Bill had caught during the last five months, and on the following week the party said goodbye to their winter home. At the landing in the little creek, where Dan had left his canoe, the party halted for the night. A temporary bough camp was erected, and next morning Dan and Bill went up the creek and found the two canoes left there over a year ago by Dan and Ben. The little creek was open, but the canoes were buried under two feet of snow. They soon had them dug out, and paddled down to the bough camp.

The three canoes carried all hands and their packs, but they were loaded to the limit. The little creek, being shallow and made up of smaller springs, was open clear down to the Matawin River, but there the open channel was very narrow. In many places, Dad had had to break ice when he had come up the week before, but now the April sun was daily widening the channel. In due time they arrived safely in the little town of Three Rivers, where they remained over night.

Early next morning found them paddling up the big river toward Montreal, Mrs. Bantre and her brother Dan in the lead, Petol and Rand next, and Bill with the heavy packs not far behind.

The physical strain of travel and paddling on their homeward trip had been of great value to Rand's muscles for Petol would not allow him to overtax his endurance abilities too much.

Although Rand was returning to his faithful little fiancee, the little Indian "Princess", ..ad such a magnetic charm that it drew him unresistingly, thouh against his will, toward a dangerous longing to embrace her, with a confession of untamed love. That the feeling was reciprocated by the lovely Petol, there was no question, but her heart still remained loyal to her little English friend, Cristie, who she knew would remain faithful to Rand, despite the assertion she had made to her mother that "Rand would never see her again."

"Noble girl! Product of the wilderness, but educated in the convent of Montreal. How many of our 1931 young ladies, reared in their luxurious modern homes, can boast of an untarnished—what shall we call it?—conscience, or freedom from jealousy, equal to that of the true-hearted little aborigine of the north. It was not surprising that Rand was infatuated by her many charms.

As they landed on the outskirts of the city, Mrs. Barntre insisted that they all go to her late husband's flat, which was still held by the police force for her return. However, Bill Preston excused himself, as he wished to dispose of his furs as soon as possible.

On the following day Dan, accompanied by his niece, went to the detective' hadquarters, where Seagraves had told Dan he could be found. Seagraves welcomed them enthusiastically, Petol met Seagraves' admiring eyes with unfeigned appreciation. She admired this loyal Englishman very much.

Seagraves had not been idle. He had interested the Mayor and the Chief of Police in behalf of Dan Emmet, with the result that Dan was decorated for bravery and competent skill in detective work, and he was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by Barntre's death. Needless to say, Dan glady accepted the appointment, but modestly ignored the praises showered upon him by Seagraves. Two years later Dan was promoted to the detective department.

As Dan and Petol turned to go, Petol handed the six-shooter to Seagraves, who grasped her outstretched hand. "Petol, may I come to see you, at your mother's house?"

Shyly, she answered:

"Yes, Mr. Seagraves, if you care to."

"Thank you, Petol, I care very much."

CHAPTER XXXI

Bill Preston dispsoed of his furs at a good price and, contrary to Rand's request, he deposited half the money in the bank in Rand's name. As Bill had to do all the work that last winter of trapping, Rand claimed no share of the money, but honest Bill would not have it so, but purposely neglected to inform Rand of what he did with the money.

While Mrs. Barntre was putting up a lunch for Rand to take on his trip to the sawmill settlement, he sought out Petol and asked her to accompany him to the river bank, where Bill was to meet him with his canoe. Soberly, with pale face, she answered. "Yes, Rand, it will be our last trip together," and, stoic though she was, the tears rolled silently down her tanned cheeks. This was more than Rand could bear. He grapsed her two little hands and drew her, unresisting, toward him. "Petol, my brilliant Noth Star, I love you."

For an instant she allowed him to fold her in his arms, but only for an instant. Drawing herself back, she exclaimed. "Oh, Rand, don't tell me that. You break my poor heart." Instantly he released her. "Can you not see your little Cristie waiting for you?"

"Oh, Petol, please do not censure me. You know my little Cristie is my heart's desire, but can not a man love the saver of his life? You were first my inspiration for a better life, then you braved the vast dangers of the wilderness, and Providence guided you to my would-be murderers, to save my life. Have you not earned the right for me to love you?"

Petol silently followed Rand to the landing. Bill was already there. She watched the canoe, and waved her hand in farewell. Rand answered with both hands.

It was dark when the boys landed at the sawmill settlement. Bill invited Rand to stay with him at his father's house that night. Rand could hardly wait for morning, so anxious was he to see Mr. Hamlin, the preacher, to find out the whereabouts of his mother and step-father. And how he would hug that sweet little Cristie when he should find her.

Early next morning he bade his friend Bill good-bye. He paused a moment as he passed the mill. A huge pile of logs covered the mill yard. It was too early in the morning yet for the men to start the mill, but his thoughts were far away. He imagined a thrifty-looking farm up in New York State with curly-headed Cristie bustling around, feeding chickens, and little sister Katie with her wild flowers.

He paused again as he came to the familiar school building, and the auditorium where he and Cristie had spent so many happy days. Soon he came to the house where they had lived. A strange woman was digging in the garden with a hoe. Rand went on to the preacher's house and, walking up to the door, rapped quite loudly. A little boy came and opened the door.

"Is your father in?"

"Yes, sir. Pa! Pa! Come 'ere. A man wants ter see ya."

Rand's hopes fell. Mr. Hamlin had no little boy. He must have moved away. Soon a clerical looking young man about thirty came to the door.

"And what can I do for you, my dear sir?"

"I thought Mr. Hamlin lived here," said Rand.

"And so he did, a year ago, but the conference assigned him to another church and called me here to take his place," said the man.

"Oh, I had not learned of the transfer. And where is Mr. Hamlin's home now?"

"It's a little town on or near the coast of New Brunswick; I don't recollect the name. Been gone about six months. Are you Rand Goodwyn?"

"Why, yes, have you a message for me?" Rand's heart thumped fast against his ribs, in anticipation of news of his folks.

"Well, Mr. Hamlin said you'd be looking for a Mr. Jim Smithwicks, and to tell ye that Jim had rented a farm somewhere in the States, but he didn't know where."

Rand's face fell, but not his courage. "And that was all the message he left?"

"Yes, only he said he guessed probably you would know where to look."

"Thank you, Mr.—er—"

"Caldwell is my name. Won't ye stay to dinner with us?"

"Thank you. No, I will see the mill boss. Perhaps he can give me more information as to Mr. Smithwicks' location."

"Well then, come back and stop the night with us, won't you?"

"Thank you again. I might, but I can't promise. Goodbye."

"Good-bye."

When Rand got back to the mill, the crew was busy rolling logs and carrying lumber. No one noticed him until Mr. Hoald came along and, seeing an idle man, stopped to ascertain the reason. He glanced sharply at Rand, then stepped up a little closer.

"Well, I'll be danged if it ain't Rand Goodwyn! Why, boy when did ye git back?"

"About two hours ago," said Rand.

"Say, come on in ter tha office. Mighty glad ter see ye, boy!"

As they entered, he closed the door and offered Rand a chair.

"Say, boy, tell me how ye done it, you an' Dan Emmet. Seagraves was down here once an' said as how you an' Dan Emmet ketched the vagabond, Je Perry, an' brought him out alive, but I want to git the facts straight from ye."

"All right, Mr. Hoald, but first please tell me if you know anything about my folks—where they went from here?"

"Oh, Jim! Ah, he was a good man. Said he wahted to buy a farm in the States, but hadn't located it when he left. Hain't heerd a word 'bout him sence. Think likely ye can find him all right."

To say that Rand was disappointed would state it very mildly. Rand then told how the little party had found the fugitives and very modestly refrained from any credit to himself.

"Wal, wal, that that Dan Emmet sure was clever, an' I'm mighty glad they took 'im on the police force. If we had 'im up here, thar'd be no more thievin' renegades round tha mill."

"You are right, Mr. Hoald. Well, I must be going."

"Wait a minute, Rand. Can't ye help us fer awhile? My sawyer's sick an' I had ter put a green hand in his place, an' he's cuttin' all kinds of cull lumber, some thick and some thin, an' we'll hev to shet down until we can find a good sawyer. I'll give ye forty dollars an' found, if ye'll take the saw fer one month."

Rand considered this offer. He had not thought of his own personal needs before, but now, as wages had been mentioned, he thought it would be a good plan to earn his daily expenses, instead of drawing from the bank. For the last two years his living had been obtained from the forest, but he could no longer depend on that. He would work his way through and find his folks,, keping his fur money intact.

"All right, Mr. Hoald, I will stay for one month."

Three weeks slipped by, and Rand was making his plans to enter the States in search of his folks. One afternoon, two days later, who should come to the mill but Seagraves and Dan Emmet. Rand was overjoyed to see them but thought it strange they could both leave Montreal at the same time. He was soon apprised of their errand.

"Rand," said Seagraves, "our vile prisoner has escaped. Been gone now five days. Dan and I are assigned to recapture him, dead or alive, and we thought he might be in hiding in his father's house , here in the settlement. We're going back to night, but will return in a few days to watch the old man's premises. Keep an eye out; he was heard to say he would 'get' you sometime."

Rand was shocked. "Why, surely he wouldn't be bold enough to look for me here," said Rand.

"He's bold but a coward when cornered. He'll no doubt get hold of a musket before looking for you. Be on your guard, boy. Of course he doesn't know where you are, but could easily find out, if he came here to the settlement."

"Well, anyhow, I'll be gone in another week," said Rand.

"Well, we must be going. By the way, our little princess of the forest (Petol) sent you her love, provided I was lucky enough to see you, but I told her I was going to keep it for myself. Goodbye, boy, but keep an eye out," he cautioned, as they started away.

It was Rand's duty to return to the mill after supper to see that everything was shipshape for the next morning's sawing. On Saturdays, the mill was shut down at 5 p.m., and all hands went fishing in the big river. Rand was packing his basket for an early start in the morning for the States, so it was just coming dark when he came to the mill for the last time. He had received his money that morning, as he had notified the boss that he was clearing out on Sunday morning.

He was oiling the bearings by the big saw, when, bang! A bullet cut a hole in the visor of his cap, and struck the big steel circular saw with such force that it bulged the steel on the opposite side. Out from behind a nearby lumber pile, a man started running toward him, with musket raised for striking. Rand picked up a canthook, which he had used for turning logs on the carriage, and waited.

"I've got ye now, ye devil!" hissed the man.

When he was within ten feet, the canthook left Rand's hands and collided square across the man's stomach.. With a hoarse grunt he collapsed, and Rand grabbed the musket, picked up the canthook, and threw them both into a pile of sawdust.

"Get up, you vile whelp, and throw up your hands," said Rand.

CHAPTER XXXII

Still gasping for breath, Joe Perry for it was no other, came slowly to his feet. He observed meanwhile, that Rand had no weapons for self-defense so, instead of throwing up his hands in surrender, he rushed madly at Rand, and then commenced a battle royal.

Joe was much heavier, and undoubtedly stronger than Rand. Rand stepped to one side as Joe, half blind with rage, went by, and as he passed Rand's knuckles cut deep into Joe's cheek. Turning, Joe tried to get a clinch, but Rand was too quick for him, and now Rand remembered his boxing lessons, taken in the auditorium two years before. Careful not to get winded, Rand watched his opponent, and kept him busy.

Brute strength, with no knowledge of scientific fencing, did but little damage. Rand got one hard slam, but managed to keep out of reach of Joe's big, awkward arms. Rand needed a few moments' breathing spell, but watched his chance, and as Joe continued his onslaught, caught him on the tip of the chin, and before Joe recovered his equilibrium gave him a hard punch in his stomach, which landed him on the ground, face down.

"Are you ready to surrender?" asked Rand in as steady a voice as he could command.

"No, I'll get ye yet'."

"Oh, you will, will you?" Rand picked up his canthook. "If you try to get up, Joe Perry, your brains will dirty the sawdust."

"Let me git up an' I'll leave ye alone," he begged. "Let me git away, an' I'll leave a thousan' dollars fer ye with the ole man."

"Don't dare to move."

JANE STEPS OUT ON MONDAY — by C.A.Voight

Try this safe, hard-water soap for whiter washes—brighter colours

IMAGINE clothes getting white and clean without scrubbing. Imagine washable coloured things soaking bright and fresh without danger of colours running.

No wonder thousands of women are turning every week to the modern "no-work" soap—Rinso.

Clothes soak so clean in Rinso, scrubbing is unnecessary. It's the suds that do it—thick, creamy, lasting.

Twice as much suds, cup for cup, as lightweight, puffed-up soaps. The makers of 40 famous washers recommend Rinso. Great for dishwashing, too. Get the BIG package.

Bank of Montreal Reports Condition of Marked Strength

Total Assets Are $748,612,481, to Meet Payment of Liabilities to the Public of $672,310,882, Leaving an Excess of Assets of $76,301,599—Holdings of Government and Other Bonds, $228,901,146

The semi-annual statement of the Bank of Montreal, as of April 30th, makes a very strong exhibit. The outstanding features are represented by an increase in the holdings of gilt-edged securties, a gain in liquid assets to an amount equal to 57.34 per cent of liabilities to the public—evidence that the bank is in a position to meet any increase in the requirements of its many customers.

The statement, in easily understandable form, appears elsewhere in this issue and affords an opportunity of obtaining a comprehensive view of the Bank's strong position.

Total assets are reported at $748,612,481, compared with $786,897,706 a year ago. Of this amount quickly available, or liquid, assets are $385,483,225. Included among these liquid assets is cash in vaults and in Central Gold Reserve amounting to $78,491,119, equal to 11.67% of public liabilities.

Increase in Bond Holdings

The most important change in liquid assets is represented by an increase in government and other bonds and debentures to a total of $228,901,146. These are recognized as gilt-edged securities, the greater portion of which mature at early dates. Included among them are Dominion and Provincial government securities of a value of $174,730,246, up from $149,229,626 a year ago. Call loans outside of Canada are $20,262,324 and are secured by bonds, stocks, and other negotiable securities of greater value than the loans and represent moneys quickly available without any disturbing effect on conditions in Canada.

Call loans in Canada secured by bonds and stocks of greater value at current quotations than the loans stand at $5,645,610, as compared with $11,347,487 at the same date last year.

The total of current loans made to manufacturers, farmers, merchants and others, is reported at $336,572,388.

Deposits have held up remarkably well under prevailing conditions. Total deposits are reported at $626,701,081.

Total assets of $748,612,481 are available to meet payment of liabilities to the public of $672,310,882, which leaves an excess of assets over these liabilities of $76,301,599.

Profit and Loss Account

The profits for the six months amounted to $2,589,292.70 as compared with $2,771,753.71 for the corresponding period last year. The profits were distributed as follows: dividends, $2,160,000.00; provision for taxes Dominion Government, $228,316.28, and reservation for bank premises, $100,000.00, leaving a balance of $100,976.42. This when added to the balance carried forward at the end of the fiscal year brought the total at the credit of profit and loss to $1,204,403.37.

Needle Long in Heart

That Edward Sell, forty-five, of Hayes, England, carried a needle in his heart for more than four weeks was revealed by X-rays. Sell was working on an airplane when a needle in the apron of an upholsterer was driven into his breast. It was considered too dangerous at the time to operate. Four weeks later an operation was tried, but had to be stopped before the needle was removed. Sell died soon afterward, and a needle two inches long was found in the left ventricle of his heart.

Practical Recipes

Meatless Soup

One carrot, half turnip, two stalks celery, two potatoes, half onion, cut in thin slices, one quart water, five tablespoons butter half tablespoon finely chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Wash and scrape or pare vegetables and cut in cubes of uniform size. Mix vegetables (except potatoes) and cook ten minutes in four tablespoons butter, stirring constantly. Add potatoes, cover and cook two minutes. Add water and boil one hour, or until vegetables are soft. If desired, beat with spoon or fork to break vegetables. Add remaining butter and parsley. Season with salt and pepper.

Plain Salad Dressing

Mix one good teaspoonful of mustard with a little milk. Add one egg and beat all together energetically. To this add two tablespoons of sugar and two and a half of vinegar. Again beat and add three tablespoons of milk and just a pinch of salt. Put all into a pan along with a lump of butter and bring nearly to the boil, stirring all the time. Do not boil. Pour into jars when ready. This keeps splendidly, if it gets a chance!

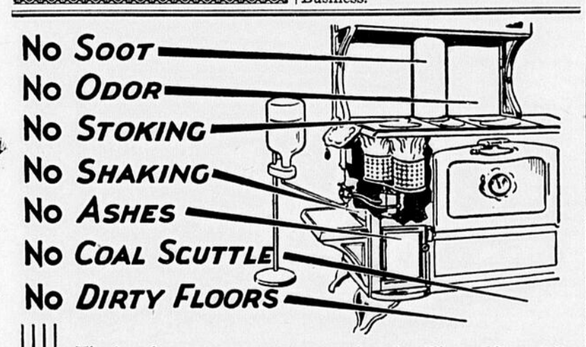

Onion Cream Soup

Soften in a large saucepan four tablespoons of butter, blend with it four tablespoons of flour mixed with one teaspoon of salt and one-fourth teaspoon of pepper. Add a quart of hot milk and stir until the whole boils. Then add a pint of onions previously steamed and chopped together with the water or juice of the onions collected with steaming. Serve very hot.

Jelly Whip

Jelly can be made to go twice as far for an emergency dessert if white of egg is added to it. Make a pint packet jelly in the usual way and when it is getting stiff and just beginning to set gradually add the jelly to the whites of two eggs which have previously been whisked to a stiff froth, continuing to whisk all the time. This looks attractive if piled high in a glass dish and surrounded with any tinned fruit.

Making the Best of Things

By Lola M. Haines

This year, in particular, many a housewife's thoughts are busy planning, how, with money so scarce she can refurnish and improve the appearance of her home, to the comfort and advantage of all the family. I wonder how many women, especially those on the farm, are finding it difficult during these hard times, to realize many of their cherished plans and hopes along this line? There are many of us who will have to forego that long coveted linoleum for the kitchen, or the new paper for the living room walls. However, we will not discuss the things that are beyond the reach of our pocketbook, but I believe there is much that all of us could do, if we could just see the possibilities there are in making the best of what we have got.

I have acquired different ideas from my experiences, that might benefit some one else in similar circumstances.

We had planned to build two new bedrooms on to our little bungalow last fall, but after the hail had destroyed our crops, our plans could not be realized; but this did not lessen the need for more room for sleeping quarters. Someone suggested that we could make a bed that would fold up to the wall during the day, so my husband, acting upon this suggestion proceeded to build a case around the space required for the bed, on the living room wall. We had a strong bed spring, with a wooden frame, so we bored holes through one end of this, and ran a long iron bar through th holes and fastened it in the casing. At the other end we attached two folding legs and after fastening the mattress securely to the spring, we had a bed that could be let down at night and folded up during the day. The casing was varnished to match the woodwork, and with a dark green velour curtain (which had once served in the doorway of our city home in past years) hung over it, the bed arrangement was made to harmonize with the rest of the furnishings, and furthermore, together with the sofa, we have solved the problem for sleeping accommodation for our four young sons. Of course it is additional work making up these beds each night, but I am consoling myself with the thought that it is only a temporary arrangement, and that sometime in the future, we will be able to build the other rooms on to our small house.

If any of you have a family of boys, you will know how they dearly love to have a little "stowaway" place, to keep their little treasures, such as sling-shots, guns, boats and strings, not to mention the countless other small things that make up a boy's "treasure chest." There was a space, about one and one-half feet wide between the chimney and wall, so I had my husband to nail four shelves in these, and to make an individual door for each one. I varnished these, and the boys keep their smaller "junk" in them. There is a little cupboard for each, so that they do not need to interfere with the other's things. Ronny, who is the youngest, has the lower cupboard, so he has no difficulty in reaching it, but the others are too high for his short stature, so he isn't tempted to meddle with his older brothers' belongings.

My living room curtains were just about too shabby to hang up again the last time I washed them, so I decided to cut up the other section of my green velour portieres to make drapes for the two windows. They looked very well indeed, with the fine lace panels I had.

I got a quart of orange colored enamel and repainted the pantry shelves, and also the kitchen table and chairs. You could not imagine what an improvement it made in brightening up the kitchen. I got a few yards of white dimity and cut it eighteen inches wide, so that five yards made side curtains and a short valance for two windows. I edged it with light blue, and it matched the white and blue patterned paper on the walls. Perhaps next year I will be able to get the linoleum for the floor, but just now I am content with what I have.

There are many other things we have been able to do to improve our home, with little or no expense, but time and space would not permit my telling about them all, but one idea brings another, so let's just get our minds and hands busy and see how much we can really do, instead of wishing for things we cannot have. There are no truer words than that "necessity is the mother of invention".

Fanatical Moslems in Frenzy of Self-Torture

Beating their breasts, scourging their backs with chains and cutting their scalps with sword blows, crowds of the Shiah sect of Moslems in Basra and other cities keep alive the memory of a great tragedy.

Fourteen hundred years ago, in a battle on the plains of the Euphrates at Kerbala, the forces of Hussian, grandson of the Prophet Mahomet, were exterminated.

Year after year the defeat is publicly mourned. Loud chanting is heard, punctuated by the rhythmic beating of their breasts by parties of 15 or 20 men, stripped to the waist, who surround their leaders.

The grief symbolized by the breast beaters is repeated by the chain beaters. These ascetics lash themselves with a kind of cat-o'-nine-tails made of chains.

In the holy cities, during the first nine days of the month of Moharram, the swordsmen parade the streets and work themselves up to the climax on the tenth day.

They form up in huge circles, chanting and shouting their formula of grief for the dead Hussian. Each circle moves round in quickening rhythm until with a delirious shout the leader brings his sword down on his own head. That is the signal for all to follow his example.

Orang-Utan Resembles Man

The orang-utan, the tallest of all apes, abides in Borneo and Sumatra and is extremely rare. Its usual habitation is trees, on the fruits of which it feeds, and where it makes a nest for itself by twining branches together. This remarkable quadrumanous mammal can pass from one tree to another with the facility of a squirrel; possesses astounding strength and in physical structure approaches very near to man.

A zealot is a small man gripped by a Big Thing he cannot contain.

I'm Glad There's a Church Near My Home

By Edgar A. Guest

The church stands as a symbol of the finest aims and aspirations of the human heart.

The church has outlived persecution from without and open disloyalty from within. It has withstood bitter and unrelenting attacks of atheists and the cynics of every age. It has outlived changing times of peace and war, prosperity and depression, and many a fad and fancy.

God Himself builds no churches. The oldest church in the world was built by men and women who believed in God and sacrificed their personal pleasures for that house of worship. Every church that has ever been erected since then has been reared by the same courage and devotion.

Churches do not appear miraculously. Now and then one man of great wealth has made a gift to his neighborhood of a church. I know one such case, but in the main almost every church is a group contribution. I think it is only fair to say that the ideas back of those contributions were lofty. Some of those men and women may themselves have later made a mess of life. Clergymen have been known to err. One of the most brilliant ministers I have ever known was obliged to leave his pulpit in disgrace. It was tragic and unfortunate.

But I'll say this for him, in none of his public utterances did he ever urge his weakness upon others. He did not try to lead the young astray. He had not been hired to deceive or delude, and when it became apparent to the group who paid him his salary that he was not squaring his life to his teachings, he was dismissed. These are the tragedies of church life. They are apt to occur in little churches and in big. They hurt the cause of the church, but they do not, in any way, affect its purpose.

A church to me is a symbol of faith in the life eternal. It typifies decency, kindliness and fair dealing. It offers comfort to the sorrowing. With the golden rule it would make neighbors of us all.

The poorest sermon I ever heard had no profanity in it. Dull though it seemed to me to be, it would not in the slightest have altered for the worse the youngest member of the congregation who listened to it. Brilliant parson and tedious have this in common—both earnestly are striving to persuade men to cleaner living.

For that reason I like to see the downtown churches holding their places. It seems good to me that here and there amid the rush of traffic there should remain a building that has no bargains to offer and no shop window display.

The church is a hospital for sick and weary souls. It is making a battle not for its own sake, but for the sake of others.

A church in any neghborhood is an asset. Any street is better for its presence.

A church-goer may sometimes cheat his neighbor; he may lie to serve his own advantage; he may be petty and narrow and bigoted; he may not represent his creed well nor be a worthy example of his faith, but whatever his sin may be he does not contribute to a church to glorify that sin. He sends his children to Sunday School for noble purposes. He wants his children to be clean and kindly and honest; he wants them to avoid his weakness and his mistakes.

Nor did he learn his viciousness in the church. He acquired that in spite of her teachings.

The church-goer who wrongs another has forgotten his church.

The worst elements of mankind build nothing. I have never known a crook who would recommend his way of living. Boys drift into crime. The hard-boiled gangster would keep them from it if he could. No embezzler wants his child to embezzle.

The church stands against all the errors and blunders of life. It is the united voice of a group of people who want their children to know what is best. It is a plea in brick and stone or board for all that is most worth while. It offers to give more than it asks. It would end murder and theft and jealousy and hatred; it would keep men out of prison, not send them there; it tries its best to comfort the bereaved and it works without cunning or connivance.

It is more often than not in debt, but strangely enough, more business houses than churches fail. With the pennies and the nickels and the dimes the churches continue to exist, struggling against all the odds to lift men up.

There never was a church erected to drag men down.

For that reason whatever the church may be, I like to see it. The street is better for its presence.

SHE LOST 18 lbs.

Here is a lady who writes:—"I am most thankful I saw your announcement 'Lose Ugly Fat.'" The recipe she read about was such a simple one—just that almost magical morning dose of Kruschen Salts.

"I started taking Kruschen Salts 16 weeks ago to reduce weight. I then weighed 140 lbs., and now 122 lbs. I am anxious to get down to 112 lbs., and suppose I will in time. Kruschen Salts have done me good all round. Am most thankful I saw your announcement 'Lose Ugly Fat.'"—Mrs. V. W. C.

Unlike most salts, Kruschen isn't simply a laxative. When you take Kruschen Salts you not only stimulate your liver and kidneys to function naturally and perfectly, but you supply every internal organ, gland, nerve and fibre in the body with Nature's own revitalizing and rejuvenating minerals.

Get a bottle of Kruschen Salts today, and take one-half a teaspoon in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast.

Before the bottle is empty you'll feel years younger—eyes will brighten—step grow sprightlier—nerves steadier—you'll sleep sound, enjoy your meals, and after a hard day's work you'll be ready for wholesome recreation—one million women already know all this.

COURTESY IN NIGHT DRIVING

(Ailsa Braig Banner)

Dazzling into the dazzling lights of an oncoming car is dangerous business—dangerous alike to the dazzler and the dazzled. And it is so unnecessary. To dim the lights of a car is so simple and easy a task that it seems that the danger involved by not doing so would compel motorist approaching another car at night to take this simple precaution against the possibility of accident to his own car as well as the cars of others. It should not take a law to bring about the dimming of headlights. Common decency demands that a motorist practice this simple rule of night driving etiquette, for it is etiquette, and good manners are just as essential on the roads as in the ballroom.

Easy Way of Inducing Bees to Change Abode

Bees often take up their abode where they are not wanted, as in a cavity in a wall. A good way to get them out is to put a bee "escape" over the entrance to the cavity, so the bees can get out but not in. A cone of wire cloth about 8 inches high with a hole at the apex just large enough for one bee to pass through will serve as an escape. A regular hive should be placed beside the entrance for the return of the escaped bees. The queen remains in the old cavity and goes on laying eggs, but as the colony is quickly reduced in size the quantity of the brood decreases. The younger bees leave the cavity and join the bees in the hive. A new queen should be given to the bees in the hive as soon as possible.

After about four weeks, remove the bee escape and make as large a hole as possible at the entrance of the cavity. The bees will go in for the honey and carry it to the hive. For this method to work successfully it is necessary that the bees have only one exit from the cavity.—United States Department of Agriculture.

Why Advertise the Depression?

Herbert N. Casson, Editor of The Efficiency Magazine, London, England, says the depression has lasted so long "because it is so well advertised." "Newspapers," he says, "have given it about $50,000,000 worth of space for nothing. Parsons, Bishops and Archbishops have advertised it. Politicians have advertised it. Writers and lecturers have advertised it. Worst of all," he continues, "even travelling salesmen, who ought to know better, have advertised it and carried the bad news from customer to customer." Then he issues this warning: "EVERYONE WHO TALKS DEPRESSION AND PREDICTS DISASTERS IS ADVERTISING THE DEPRESSION. The continuance of the depression . . . . proves the power of advertising. It keeps the fear of bad trade in men's minds. It prevents them from buying what they ought to buy."

GIVE AND TAKE PARLEY SPIRIT IS EMPHASIZED

Increased Trade Between This Dominion and England Main Conference Topic

From unofficial expressions of the British view, heard and read in this country during the past few weeks, it is evident that arrangements whereby trade between the United Kingdom and Canada will be increased will hold the centre of the stage at the coming Imperial Economic Conference, and from what was intimated last Wednesday night at London by Premier R. B. Bennett the Canadian people must be prepared for proposals from the United Kingdom that would involve sacrifices or losses by this country.

Premier Bennett stated at London that "there must be mutual gains and advantages," but mutual gains and advantages cannot be achieved without certain mutual losses and disadvantages, and it is certain that the British representatives will expect or ask certain sacrifices from this country. To begin with, unofficial exchanges of views have already made it manifest that the British are willing to take into the Conference cognizance of the considerable preferences previously granted by this Dominion. This Government, it is believed, has been advised that the United Kingdom will expect to enter Empire trade negotiations, at least so far as this Dominion is concerned, de novo, that is in disregard of what has been conceded by Canada in the past.

The wheat quota is likely to be made generous use of by the British delegates as a bargaining factor, but the wheat quota, even if its application to this country were to be stretched to the limit of British purchasing possibility, can never be of any great advantage to Canada. A relatively small percentage of Canada's wheat exports could be absorbed by Britain, at the best, so that the wheat quota to which Britain may attach considerable value in any trade exchange is not likely to arouse deep enthusiasm in Canada.

Other farm products of Canada, such as butter and cheese and eggs and meats, can be marketed in much larger quantities and it will remain for the United Kingdom to show, in a tangible manner, its preference for these Canadian products over those imported by the United Kingdom from Scandinavian and other continental countries. In this connection Canada is bound to assure the Mother Country of the continuance of a vigorous policy for standardization of her products of the farm and orchard, which policy is the only means by which this country can gain and preserve her market in the United Kingdom against the competition of such a country as Denmark.

Must Buy More Steel

In return for a wider market in the United Kingdom for her farm products Canada will be expected to increase her purchases of manufactures from the Mother Country. British steel products will be one of the principal items in this list, and it is held here that a larger percentage of the steel purchases now made by this country in the United States can be transferred to Britain. The Canadian textile industry is also being asked to carefully consider the extent to which it can withstand textile purchases by this country from Britain, and it is believed that already a fairly satisfactory arrangement has been reached, representatives of the British manufacturers having been in conference with Canadian interests.

From present prospects it is apparent that little of advantage can be expected by Canada in the way of extending trade with the other parts of the Empire to be represented at the conference beyond what has already been accomplished by means of direct negotiation with those Dominions. New trade treaties are in operation between Canada and Australia and New Zealand, and as a result of consultations with British South Wales Africa a gratifying growth of commerce between Canada and that Dominion has been developed. As for the Irish Free State, Newfoundland, India and Rhodesia, a readjustment of world economic conditions, rather than any negotiation between Canada and those communities at the conference, will produce some mutual advantages.

As has already been indicated in the unofficial agenda the Conference next month will not be confined to questions of trade and tariffs. The all-important subject of currency and exchange is certain to be given much prominence and it is known that British delegates are to be "loaded" with representations as to the need of a stabilization of Empire currency and the establishment of some fixity of relationship between the dollar and the pound sterling. Canada's reluctance to consider such a move, which in some foreign countries would be immediately regarded as abandonment of the gold standard, and the fact that Britain has been sounding the larger powers about an international currency conference to be called late this fall are both likely to militate against any definite conclusions being reached at the Imperial parley on this question.

It has been intimated more than once by British financiers that in the not far distant future Britain will return to a gold basis, but a basis obviously lower than that which was abandoned last fall and it is with such a step in contemplation that Canada has been sounded as to her readiness to establish a fixity of relationship between the dollar and the pound sterling. The view held here, however, is that so long as exchange relations between Canada and foreign countries continue on or near the present basis and so long as this country is obliged to discharge federal and provincial and municipal and even private corporation obligation in New York funds any step that would widen the disparity between the Canadian and the American dollar could hardly be entertained.

An interesting sidelight on the fiscal features of the coming Conference was presented in the House of Commons just before prorogation by the Prime Minister when, in reply to query from the Liberal leader, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, about the possibility of a fall session of Parliament, he stated that this would largely depend upon whether or not as a result of the Conference Britain would decide to impose after November 15 next the 20 per cent duty on imports upon those from the Dominions.

Citizens of the Empire, in some sections, may be fearful that the Conference will not achieve its goal, but it is now apparent that citizens of foreign countries are fearful that this Conference may be a success, so it is up to the delegates from the four corners of the earth who are to assemble here in July to come in a spirit of good will, with a desire to help each other, and with a determination to promote still further the economic and racial unity of the Empire. True, there will be a few obstacles such as the allegiance row in the Irish Free State which has aroused for the latter sympathy in other parts of the Empire, and there is the separationist policy of the Hertzog Ministry in British South Africa. These internecine difficulties have failed to mar previous conferences and they are likely to be overcome next month, too. A triumph of the spirit of Empire good will over these insurgences will serve to justify any apprehension in some foreign countries that the conference will succeed.—The Gazette.

Bloom of Rice Plant Varies in Localities

Temperature plays an important part in the flowering of the rice plant. Rice flowers are relatively inconspicuous, but an official of the United States Department of Agriculture, who works on the improvement of the rice crop, has studied the blooming habits of the plant in connection with the cross-breeding of varieties.

The rice plant blooms suddenly, and for only a short time. One observer noted a complete opening of the flower in thirty seconds. The blooming continued for only about two hours. Rice flowers are rarely open before the sun has warmed the earth and air, and they close before the sun is far down. In the United States and in Japan the rice blooms later than in warmer areas, such as Java, Indian and the Philippine islands. In India, observers say, rice will not bloom until the temperature has reached 77 degrees Fahrenheit. But there the temperature runs high as a rule and rice blooms most freely in the early morning hours soon after the dew evaporates, and the flowers close before the heat of noon. In California the maximum period of bloom is the two hours after noon.

Rice has a complete flower, and usually fertilizes itself. It "breeds true," and there is little cross-fertilization. The pollen from the stamens fertilizes the stigma in the same plant, usually before or at the time the flower opens.

CAR TAKEN FROM HOTEL

Five Young Men From Potsdam, N. Y., in Trouble Here Friday Night

Five students from Clarkson Tech., Potsdam, N.Y., came to Huntingdon on Friday night, after having written final exams at that college on Friday afternoon.

Three of the students remained at the Chateau dancing, while the two others took a Willys-Knight sedan, much like their own, belonging to R. F. Myers, of Ellenburg Depot, N.Y., and proceeded towards the U.S. boundary. Crossing the railway track south of Huntingdon they struck a fence near the river bank, damaging the car. Eugene Reid, of Canandagua, N.Y., came along and gave them a lift across the border. Their three friends in Huntingdon were held as accomplices until the return of the two young men, and the father of one of them Saturday evening when matters were settled to the satisfaction of local officials and the three young men were released.

No charge was brought against the young men by the owner of the stolen car.

Boxing Match Held at the Knights of Columbus Hall

Johnny Roy of Lachine, Que., vs. Sid Anderson of Valleyfield.

Sid Anderson earned a decision over Johnny Roy. It was a match of brains against brawn. Sid the powerful light heavy weight from the land of the heavy bears, outboxed Johnny Roy throughout three rounds and was awarded a popular judges decision at the close of the bout. Roy although a game fighter, was no match for Anderson in speed and science, the Lachine fighter resorted to snappy rights which failed to find their marks, as Anderson danced in and out and all about his opponent. The Valleyfield fighter proved to be one of the best men of this class seen here, yet he is a good ring performer and has a pleasant personality. The manner in which he hammered in rights and lefts and the way he was ducking was pretty nice to watch. The Lachine fighter showed gameness during the whole fight until the final gong sounded.

The first round of the fight found both fighters feelings each other out and then when the battlers came out for the second round they began throwing punches at each other at a terrific speed. It was in the early round that the Valleyfield fighter discovered that his opponent was a sucker for a left and he bruised him often with that identical punch, rocking his head from side to side.

In the second and third rounds both fighters were fighting at top pitch, Anderson worked his partner for an opening sound style while the Lachine fighter attempted to weave into his antagonist.

The judges awarded the decision at the close of the fight in the first preliminary.

Leo Kid Prieur of Valleyfield and Fern. Fortier of Cornwall, Ont. fought a draw in a three round bout, Fortier was the aggressor after the opening round in which the Valleyfield fighter shot his steam, but at the termination of the first round Leo Kid Prieur staged a whirlwind comeback that drew many cheers from the ring worms, the bout was a cracker jack all the way through and had not Prieur entered the ring well protected from cold with excess addispose tissue perhaps the decision would have been different.

Mr. Henry Prieur, barber, at the Chateau Salaberry Hotel at Valleyfield, is the father of Leo Kid Prieur the Valleyfield fighter. Leo will soon have his revenue in a match which will be six round bout with six ounce gloves.

The boxing cards held under the hospices of every boxer and the match makers were Johnny Robinson of Montreal and Henry Prieur of Valleyfield, Que., both grew up with the boxing game.

Nature of Electricity Not Fully Understood

Electricity is known to be a form of energy, just as we have chemical light, heat and other forms. According to one authority: "Innumerable attempts have been made to ascertain the true nature of electricity, but it cannot be said that as yet there is any true knowledge of what this subtle agent really is." According to the electronic theory of hypothesis, the atom of matter is made up of smaller bodies called electrons, electrical in their nature, and consequently all matter ultimately is electrical, the atoms of the different elements of matter consisting of a certain number of electrons, thus 700 in the hydrogen atom and 11,200 in the oxygen atom. While this, of course, is only a theory, it serves to explain a great deal of the properties and manifestations of electricity, just as other theories of science help us to understand the nature of light, heat, etc.

Electric Light Invention

It was a Northumbrian Englishman, Sir Joseph Wilson Swan, F.R.S., a native of Sunderland, who first invented electric light. More than 20 years before Thomas Alva Edison took out his patent, Swan had demonstrated in the presence of the great scientist, Michael Faraday, the possibility of illuminating the South Foreland lighthouse by electricity; and in 1862, lighting by carbon filaments was officially installed in the lighthouse at Dungeness. Swan left to his country and to the world three great bequests—electric lighting, artificial silk, and bromide printing.
