TWO RINGS.

BY ESTHER TERLE KENNETH.

The one great trial of my life came when I was eighteen years old. Eighteen years old and pretty—that meant ready for love; and what then? I was a poor sewing girl, and lodged in an attic; and opposite to me was another poor girl, who had sewed until her cheek was as white as the coarse cotton shirts she made, and at last she fell sick, and so I found her.

It was in the evening that I heard her cough first. It was a low, fatal cough. I knew it—my mother died so. I had never spoken to the girl, but I went and knocked at the door. A voice, but it was not a woman's, said:

"Come in."

I entered a room poorer than my own—more wretched, because neglected. A glimmering light upon the table showed me a face in a corner of a great lounge or couch; a face, but the figure was a shapeless mass—a cripple, but not the girl. It was a young man. He did not speak, but looked at me with two, great surprised, luminous eyes; and, guided by the couch, I passed on to an adjoining bed-room, where a girl lay in a narrow bed, dying. I knew it as I looked at her clay-colored face and purple nails.

I had been used to scenes of distress and misery from my childhood. I was able to do all that this poor girl required, and to hold her in my arms while she made her dying requests.

"Break it gently to Alf. He does not suspect—he does not know that I am so low," she whispered. "He is my brother—a cripple; he cannot walk across the floor. He will have to go to the almshouse. God help him! Speak to him—know him; you will say then 'God help him.' I have nothing to leave you but my thanks, but Heaven will bless you."

So she died.

And the brother? He was walled in with books. His great forehead gleamed out of his dark hair, and his eyes, painfully bright, held mine like loadstones when I looked at him.

"Are you Clyte who turned to the sun?" said he. "No, for the sun would turn to you. How beautiful you are!"

"Will you let me be your friend?" I asked. "You have lost your sister."

His dark eyes dilated. I never saw such a look of horror and despair on any human face.

'Mary gone?' he said, after a moment; 'then all is gone, God help me! O my sister! my sister!'

I tried to make him speak again, but he would not, but lay in an apathy like that of death, his face hidden. But I made the place fresh and cheerful. I put his books upon a stand by the couch, and tore down the dusty curtain to replace it by a fresh one. I walked miles into the country at daylight in the morning, for a handful of clover blossoms to put in a cup upon the mantel. At last, on the third day he turned and said:

'Thank you, but it isn't of any use.'

I knelt down beside him.

'Why not, Alf?'

'I must go to the alms-house, now. Don't you see?'

'I see that you are helpless, but you shall never go there.'

'What else?'

'I will take care of you.'

'You?'

'I, who have not a friend in the world. Alf, care for me a little, as you cared for Mary-steach me; I am as ignorant as a child, and I will stay with you.'

'You are not my sister. It cannot be.'

I looked into the beautiful, desolate eyes. What was it that rore up in my heart?

'There is one other way.' I said. 'Will you let me be your wife?'

'God bless you, beautiful! I love you.'

But when I was alone I knew what I had done. I had put an end to hope.

But my life was saved. I was his wife. I sat by him and worked while he read to me, and that was the dawning of a new world; for until then I had known nothing of what was inside books. Our home was fresh and neat. Sometimes I earned an extra shilling to buy a bunch of pinks, and they made us happy for a week. He loved me so. Was I happy? Yes, with a shadow of that happiness which Jesus Christ gained when he died for the world. Sometimes my heart ached in a dumb way, but I said, 'It is right. This is as it should be. I am glad that I am beautiful, and tall, and shapely—he delights in me so. No man, sound and strong, could need me as much as he does—poor Alf."

But there came a change. As the months and seasons drifted by he grew worse—spent his days in physical agony. I would have torn my heart out to save him one pang, but I stood over him helpless. He met my eyes. "Darling, darling," he moaned in his pain.

A physician must come. He came—an active, skillful man, whose clear eyes questioned me when we were alone.

"I am his wife," I said. "Tell me his state."

"He will die," he said.

Had I a regret then for what I had done? I thanked God for every day that I had made him happy. I left him neither day or night; day by day his face grew wan and spiritual. One night he drew me down, and looked wistfully into my eyes. I smiled.

'Kiss me, Nelly. Good-bye,' he whispered, and was dead. His cold cheek rested on the hand which held my wedding-ring, and I blessed the circle of gold.

What came five years after? Love. When I loved Doctor Summers I knew that I never had loved before; but when he held my hand and showed me our wedding-ring, I looked at the other, and said, 'You will not take it off?'

'No,' he answered; and I wear them both.

A MONSTER OF THE SEA.

(From the San Diego Union, Oct. 22.)

Messrs. E. A. Veazie, J. M. Spencer, and Dr. Squills went out sailing on the yacht Cygnet, and returned about 1 p.m. From them our reporter has obtained the following particulars of a remarkable sea monster which was seen by Capt. Charlesworth in a cove on the peninsula, almost opposite this city. After sailing up to the end of the peninsula and back as far as this cove, the yacht was brought to an anchor, and the party, taking their three shot-guns, went off to the shore in the skiff. It was agreed upon that Messrs. Veazie and Spencer should remain concealed at that point until Capt. Charlesworth and Dr. Squills should go up and around the cove in search of curfews. These birds, which are considered very choice game, have been shot in considerable quantities at this place, and by keeping them flying back and forth across the cove the party expected to bag several messes.

At the upper end of the cove a fine flock of curlew was seen digging around in the mud on a point, and Capt. Charlesworth crept through the thicket to get beyond them so that when they rose and passed Dr. Squills he could get a shot, too. He had been gone but a few minutes when Dr. Squills heard him call loudly for him. He ran forward as rapidly as he could through cactus and Spanish-bayonet, and met the Captain coming back in a very excited state. In a few words Capt. Charlesworth told the Doctor that he had seen a frightful monster fully thirty feet in length, shaped like a snake, with three sets of fins, a tail like an eel's, and a head like an alligator's. The head was a little wider than the neck, but very thick at the base, and had small eyes. It appeared to be covered with a dark skin, which assumed a yellowish cast on the belly. The three pair of fins were shaped like those of the sea lion, were each between three and four feet in length, the forward pair being much the heaviest, and situated about two feet back of the neck.

Capt. Charlesworth thinks the monster was at least two feet in thickness from the head back to within twelve feet of the end of the tail, from which point it tapered some, and assumed the shape of an eel's tail. He said the terrible looking thing had drawn itself nearly out of the water, and was lying motionless on the sand when he first saw it. At his approach the serpent fish raised its head and swung it directly toward him, and as he was not more than a couple of rods off, his only thought was to increase that distance. The captain says that he obtained a full view of it, and that he could not believe his sight until the monster moved its head toward him. Together he and the doctor approached the spot cautiously with their guns in readiness to give the terrible creature the four shots.

They reached the bank just in time to see the sea-serpent swimming into deep water, with still a portion of his body in view. Both guns, which were charged with fine shot, were fired at him, and they think that several of the shot took effect. Messrs. Veazie and Spencer were signalled for, and when they came up they were shown the marks left in the mud by the monster. A careful watch was kept by the party for nearly an hour, but nothing more was seen of the remarkable sea-fish, and they think he is still in the cove, which is about half a mile long, by a little over a quarter of a mile in width.

THE CHRISTIAN ARMORY

"There Shall No Evil Befall Thee."

BY F. M. B.

Did you ever think of all that is contained in this line? Of course, standing as it does in the middle of one of the most beautiful psalms, you have read it many times; but did you ever pause to take in its deeper significance, to let its comfort sink down into your heart? Think what is implied in this promise. It does not say that we shall not have to fret under daily annoyance, things which seem trifling in themselves, but which become, when oft-repeated, real trials. Neither does it say that we may never have to bear greivous disappointments, never be called upon to suffer loss of health, or of wealth, or whatever else is dearest to us.

Nor does the promise that such evil shall befall us mean that we to whom the words are addressed shall be kept from all suffering; we may be called upon many times to bid a long farewell to dear ones; we may see the number of those whom we love gradually lessening till we feel all alone in the world. The Father may see fit to remove from us all earthly helpers, so that our lives seem dreary and desolate, and we waken each morning for the night, only, when the night falls to wish again that it was morning.

But, through all our trials and troubles, we have this blessed assurance, that if we really love the Lord, if we endeavor to make our walk and bearing more and more Christlike, if we strive earnestly to lead a life "that is hid with Christ in God," when we at last come into the heavenly city where sorrow and sighing shall have given place to the "fullness of joy," as we look back over the years that were so long in passing, and on the trials that seemed almost heavier than our strength could bear, we shall then understand how we have been gently led step by step, heavenward, and we shall see how everything, every sorrow as well as every joy was only part of the discipline which the Lord saw was needful to render us fit for an entrance into his heavenly kingdom.—Christian Weekly.

Thoughts by the Way.

THE ROARING LION.

"Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour." 1 Pet. 5:8. The French version expresses the idea thus: "The devil, your adversary, turns round about you," suggesting the idea that the great enemy, having chosen some special individual on whom his next attack should be made, now persistently paces round and round the intended victim, in order to perceive at what weak point the attempt to seize him would be attended with the greatest possibility of success. We see a distant forest. Darkness has settled in thick folds over the earth; in a little cleared space, but surrounded by the mighty surge of wind-stirred leaves, was kindled a bright fire, throwing gleams of cheering light over that small track of unverdured ground, showing in strong contrast the black shades of the wilderness of trees beyond. Near the fire reclined a weary hunter. Exhausted by the fatigues of the day he slept, unguarded, save by that sparkling fire. But at midnight came a lion, guided by keen scent, and urged on by hunger.

With eager eyes fixed on the dreaming man, he prepared to spring; but the soft rustle of his padded feet on the dried leaves, and the quick swing of his tail as it lashed the underwood, awoke the light slumbering traveller, on the watch for foes. The man started up and saw the fierce eyeballs glaring from the thicket; he had no powder left to charge his rifle, but he had the fire. He drew closer to this his sole protection; closer still, till even in the chill night air, the heat drops were beaded on his brow, and his whole form stood lighted up by the bright blaze. The lion drew back among the branches; but all night long the watcher heard the cushioned step and hollow roar, now on this side, now on that, and knew his enemy but waited for him to step out of the circle of light, to make him his prey. So with the Christian. We are in the lonely wilderness; all is darkness save Christ, and his single light shows how black is that darkness.

We rest close to him, beholding the shades and shrinking away from them; for we know untold dangers are lurking there. And when we recognize the enemy's approach, our only safety is in pressing closer to our guard, the only guard the devil fears. All through the long night of earthly life, the lion will be there, trying to fright us by his terrible voice, tempting us to listen in torture for his softer footfalls, or sometimes altogether silent, that we may be induced to carnal security, and so venturing away from our protection, may fall under the murderous clutches of our lurking foe. Therefore are we bidden to "Watch," lest sleeping, we somnambulize our souls away from Christ, our only hope. But when morning breaks and immortality chases earth's darkness and twilight, then shall our Father come, and take us to the everlasting fireside of our home, where the light which was our protection in the wilderness shall be our glory in that land whose amaranthine bowers no foe can hide; for there is no night there, but the full radiancy of the Lamb is the light thereof.—Christian World.

An entertaining paper, which its author, the Rev. Dr. Thomas Hill, formerly President of Harvard College, described as a contribution toward the psychology of the American toad, was read at the Portland meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Dr. Hill says he has never seen our toad use his hands to crowd his food into his mouth as the European toad is said to do; but he will use his hands to wipe out of his mouth any substance which he cannot eat or does not like. He will not unfrequently push his food down his throat by thrusting it against a clod or stone. This habit does not appear to be confined to toads, however; for the author says that a garter snake was seen to devour a toad in the same manner, by pushing him down, at North Conway, last summer. The toad is a rather voracious creature. Dr. Hill mentions one which ate twenty-three squash bugs and ninety-four caterpillars at one meal.

HISTORICAL ITEMS.

The Empress Josephine was very fond of perfume, and, above all, of musk. Her dressing-room was filled with it, in spite of Napoleon's frequent remonstrances. Forty years after her death, the owner of Malmasion had the walls of that dressing-room repeatedly washed and painted, but neither scrubbing, aquafortis, nor paint, was able to remove the smell of the good Empress's musk, which continued as strong as if the bottle which contained it had been but yesterday removed.

The first stone of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, was laid on the 21st of June, 1675 (25 Charles II.), the choir being opened for the first time for Divine service on the day of Thanksgiving for the Peace of Ryswick, December 2, 1687, (3 William III), and the last stone of the structure was laid at the top of the lantern, A. D. 1716. The whole building was completed in thirty-five years, by one architect (Sir Christopher Wren), and one master mason (Mr. Thomas Strang), and while one prelate (Dr. H. Compton), filled the metropolitan see of London.

PAY OF ARCHITECTS IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.—Long before Brindley's time, Inigo Jones was paid only eight shillings and four pence a day as architect and surveyor of the Whitehall banqueting-house, and forty-six pounds a-year for house-rents, clerks, and incidental expenses; whilst Nicholas Stowe, the master mason, was allowed but four and tenpence a day. When the Duchess of Marlborough was afterwards engaged in resisting the claims of one of her Blenheim surveyors, she told him indignantly "that Sir Christopher Wren, while employed upon St. Paul's, was content to be dragged up to the top of the building three times a week in a basket, at the great hazard of his life, for only £200 a year,"—the actual amount of his salary as architect of that magnificent cathedral. Brindley, however, fared worse still, and for a long time does not seem to have risen above mere mechanic's pay, even whilst engaged in constructing the celebrated canal for the Duke of Bridgwater, which laid the foundation of so many gigantic fortunes. —Smiles' Engineers.

GASCON COURAGE.—Two Gascons having a quarrel, a challenge passed between them. When they were come to the ground, one of them said to the other, who was in a posture to commence the combat, "Ah, my friend, how you charm me! I shall regret excessively to kill so fine a fellow as you. Ask your life, and I will grant it to you." The other said he was not come to that pass yet, but was prepared to defend himself. The first speaker repeated his kind offer: "Ah, good fellow, do ask your life; I will willingly give it you." But the other, who saw through his fanfaronade, called upon him instantly to stand on his defence, that the fight might be commenced. "Ah," said the first, "I do admire the fine appearance you make in your posture; you are a perfect Cæsar. Why should such a fine fellow be caused to bite the dust—will you really not ask your life?" "No, no," thundered out the other; "defend yourself, or I will kill you." "You ravish me!" cried the man of mercy. "But if you are determined not to ask your life of me, why, I ask mine of you!"

EARLY RISING.—It is related that King George III., who made the cause of longevity a subject of investigation, procured two persons, each over a hundred years of age, to dance in his presence. He then requested them to relate to him their modes of living, that he might draw, if possible, some clue to the causes of their vigorous old age. The one had been a shepherd, remarkably temperate and circumspect in his diet and regimen; the other, a hedger, had been noted for his irregularity, exposure, and intemperance. The monarch could draw no inference to guide his inquiries from such different modes of life terminating in the same result; but on further inquiry he learned that both men were alike distinguished by a tranquil easiness of temper, active habits, and early rising.

A LORD MAYOR'S WIFE.—In 1559 Sir William Hewet (clothworker) was Mayor of London, whose income is estimated at £6,000 per annum. Hewet lived on London bridge, and one day a nurse playing with his little daughter Anne, at one of the broad lattice windows overlooking the [illegible], by accident let the child fall. A young apprentice, named Osborne, seeing the accident, leaped from a window into the fierce current below the arches and saved the infant. Years after, many great courtiers, including the Earl of Shrewsbury, came courting fair Mistress Anne, the rich citizen's heiress. Sir William, her father, said to one and all, "No; Osborne saved her and Osborne shall have her." And so Osborne did, and became a rich citizen and lord mayor in 1583. He is the direct ancestor of the first Duke of Leeds. There is a portrait of the brave apprentice at Kiveton House in Yorkshire. He dwelt in Philpot lane, in his father-in-law's house and was buried at St. Dionis Backchurch, Fenchurch st.—[Walter Thornbury.]

WIT AND HUMOR.

The cheese is mitier than the pen.

A nice little boy said he liked a "good rainy day, too rainy to go to school, and just rainy enough to go fishing."

Epitaph on a locomotive—Collisions four or five she bore; the signals were in vain; grown old and rusted, her boiler busted, and smashed the excursion train.

An ox that had been eating fermented grain, which was in preparation for making ale, became intoxicated, and was offered for sale by his owner as "corned" beef.

A CANNY WIFE.—Said a Scotchwoman to a physician who was weighing two grains of calomel for a child: "Dinna be so mean wi' it; it's for a poor fatherless bairn."

A Parisian dentist, who lives in the suburbs, has a summer house built entirely of human teeth. He probably has more achers in his ground than any man in France.

"Pa, are cannibals people who live on other folks?" "Yes, my dear." "Then, pa, Uncle George must be a cannibal, for ma says he's always living on somebody."

Ven some man slaps me on der shoulder und says, "I vas glad to hear you vas so vell," und den sticks behind my back his fingers to his nose, I hef my opinion of dat feller.

It is reported that the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals recently had a servant girl arrested for beating an egg that happened to have an unhatched chicken in it.

Probably a bad fellow—

A cautious look around he stole,
His bags of chink he chunk,
Many a wicked smile he smole,
And many a wink he wunk.

It is now announced on the authority of that "eminent physician" that it is not healthy to rise before eight o'clock in the morning. This applies only to men. Wives can rise at seven and light the fire as heretofore.

"Thomas," said a father to his son, "don't let that girl make a fool of you. Look sharp. Remember the adage that love is blind." "Oh, that adage won't wash," said Tom; "talk about love being blind: why, I see ten times as much in that girl as you do."

A clerk in a city book-store, thinking to annoy a quaker customer who looked as though he was fresh from the country, handed him a volume, saying: "Here is an excellent essay on the rearing of calves." "Thee had better present that to thy mother, young man," was the spontaneous retort of the Quaker.

A wife of nearly ten years, giving her servant a holiday, was attending to culinary matters herself, and, hearing her husband coming into the kitchen, thought she would surprise him as soon as he opened the door by throwing her hands over his eyes and imprinting a kiss on his brow, as in the honeymoon. The husband returned the salute with interest. "Mary, darling, where is your mistress?" The wife discharged "Mary, darling" the next day, and has adopted a new plan for "surprising" her husband.

SCIENCE.

Kerosene is the best article ever discovered to cleanse rust from grates and fire irons.

The discovery is said to have been made that it is not necessary to groove a rifle barrel the whole of its length, but that a few inches of grooving near the muzzle will give the bullet all the needful amount of spin.

A new industry, that took its origin in the war, is now attracting a great deal of attention in the South. The cotton-seed, which formerly was waste and worthless to the producer, now brings from nine to ten dollars per ton. It is extensively used in the manufacture of oil and for many other purposes.

The most perfect and powerful spectroscope yet constructed has just been completed for the University of Oxford. A ray of sunlight passing through it comes out a wonderful sight. It would require more than fifty feet of paper to mark down all the lines with the finest pointed pencil. By widening the opening of the slit, the solar prominences also can be well observed.

The diamond proves to be combustible at a much lower temperature than was supposed. A gem from South Africa, about as large as a pea, was placed in a a crucible and kept there exposed to a temperature not above a cherryseed, for three days and three nights. When the crucible was opened, the diamond had disappeared, and, therefore, must have been wholly consumed. Mr. Spencer, of Manchester made the experiment.

We have come to know, as a scientific fact beyond all dispute, says Professor Corfield, M D, that the drying of the soil of a town—by drainage—reduces the number of deaths from consumption in a most extraordinary manner. In some towns the number of deaths from this disease has been reduced by one-third, or even one-half in this way. These facts afford a new illustration of the familiar truth that a damp house must be an unhealthy house.

It is generally assumed at the present time that the moisture and fertility of a country will inevitably be destroyed by the removal of its forests; but Mr W T Blanford, who is so well known in connection with the geology and geography of Abyssinia and India, asserts that it is still a moot question whether or no the destruction of forests diminishes the rainfall of a country, although there can be no doubt, he says, that the rain would run off much faster in a country where there were no forests.

The fossil pigmy elephants of Malta have long been a subject of investigation by Dr. A. Leith Adams, who has lately brought his researches to a conclusion. There are three forms of these elephants, all unknown elsewhere. These three species average, respectfully, seven feet, five feet, and three feet in height. The bones of a gigantic dormouse and a large extinct swan are found in the same deposit with the remains of the elephants. Dr. Adam says that traces of the African elephant have been discovered in the caves of Sicily, and adds: "It looks, indeed, as if the eastern basin of the Mediterranean had been at one time a common ground where all these extinct and living elephants met, and from whence, with other animals, they have disappeared, or been repelled to distant regions."

FRIGHTENED TO DEATH.

(Marmette and Peshtigo, Wis., Eagle.)

On the night of the 12th inst. Andrew Manfester, an employee of the Peshtigo Company, was up on the north branch of Beaver Creek, in company with three or four other men, and a little over a mile from camp, when it became dark and night closed in. They started for camp, and on the way bravely amused each other with wolf and bear stories until their imaginations were well wrought up, when suddenly, like a "clap of thunder from a clear sky," they heard the dismal sound of wolves close by them.

This frightened the whole party and put them to flight. Mr Manfester immediately went into fits. One or two others stayed with him till the rest went to camp and administered what they could to his necessities, but he died during the night. These are the facts of the case as they were told us. The body was brought to Peshtigo and decently buried on the 14th, many of his friends attending the funeral. We believe Mr Manfester was a native of Canada, and for all any one knew was a healthy man. He had worked here for about three years.

THE terrible chapter furnished yesterday to the short and simple annals of the poor by the widespread tragedy of Tabb's Yard is perhaps unprecedented. In accordance with his mode of existence, one of the denizens of this locality in prowling round the city "found," "stole" some translate it, a bottle from an express waggon, and on reaching his habitat found it to savor and have the appearance of wine. The basis of the preparation was wine, sherry, but the drugs mixed with it were deadly in anything but very minute doses. It is said the stuff was a rheumatic mixture and that a dose was eight drops. The finder and his associates drank it by the cup-full.

So far seven of those who drank of it have paid the penalty with their lives, and two more are not expected to survive. To-day there will be a Coroner's enquiry, verdicts will be returned, funerals will take place and then—what? Will the horror be a nine days' wonder and quickly pass out of mind or, will the terrible revelations induce an earnest, prayerful effort in behalf of such poor creatures as those now lying stark in the rags and filth and fetid atmosphere of Tabb's yard? The problem how to rescue such as these is, we know full well, a difficult one to solve, but none the less certain is it that in neglecting to try to solve it, those of us whom an inscrutable Providence has vouchsafed comfort, prosperity and wealth incur a grave responsibility.

No matter what may be the difficulties in the way of effecting the reform, it requires no lengthy arguments to make plain the fact that the miserable and degraded condition of such as the victims of yesterday is a standing reproach to the boasted civilization of our age and country.

If the lessons of yesterday's tragedy are to bear fruit the good work of reform will be carried on from two quarters—the constituted authorities and organized and individual philanthropy. The duty of the corporation, as has been repeatedly urged in these columns, is to supervise the dwellings of the poor, to compel landlords to make their houses fit for habitation, and to prevent overcrowding. The duty of the philanthropic is to build model dwellings and provide comfortable homes at moderate rents; to see that there are sufficient schools and that the children attend them, and to establish free institutions calculated to divert the mind from that which is low and degarded to that which makes men happy and contented; to labor always in the good cause by visitation, precept and example. But we can only briefly hint at what should be done; the task we have attempted is one devolving more especially upon the pulpit than the press. To that power we now for the present leave it, in the hope that in a short time we shall be able to chronicle that the lessons of the Tabbs' yard horror have not been lost.

OUR LATER HAMPDEN.

A Voice from the Jail on the Meat Monopoly.

The following letter was received too late for publication yesterday afternoon:

MONTREAL JAIL, Nov. 27.

To THE EDITOR OF THE STAR:

DEAR SIR,—At four o'clock yesterday afternoon, when it was too late to obtain any legal redress that evening, I was suddenly arrested and thrown into jail for the high crime and misdemeanor of selling fresh meat. Such an act savours very strongly of the days of the middle ages and the barbarity of the French Seigneurs who used to fine, imprison, and torture their peasants for having any flesh or fowl in their possession. As you have steadily, constantly and consistently advocated the cause of the keepers of the private butcher stalls, I take the liberty of presenting my case to you, and, through you, to the public.

On the 23rd of September, 1871, I opened a butcher stall at No. 908 St. Catherine street, and paid the grievous imposition of $500 for the high and mighty privilege of supplying the residents of Beaver Hall Hill and vicinity with a necessity of life somewhat more conveniently than by obliging them to travel a mile or more to one of the public markets; the following year I also paid this enormous fine.

This year I found the penalty too heavy to bear; it was impossible to pay this imposition and make a living; I, therefore, did not renew my license when it expired, as I knew there were then steps being taken in the Council to reduce this monstrous imposition, and put the butchers on something like an equality with other tradesmen. Shortly after the expiration of my license I was summoned before the Recorder and fined $20 and thirty days' imprisonment for selling meat without a license. I tendered the fine, through my lawyer but it was refused unless I also paid the $500 tax. Intimidation was then used against me, and I was threatened with imprisonment if the $500 was not paid; but I was told very plainly that the imprisonment would not be enforced if that sum was paid; in other words, the thirty days imprisonment was only intended to be held over me as a rod in terrorum to try and scare me into paying this unjust fine.

I still refused to take out a license at $500, as the Market Committee had recommended a reduction to $300, but offered to deposit that sum ($300) pending the action of Council. At this time you were kind enough to espouse the cause of myself and twelve other butchers similarly situated, and recommended his Worship the Mayor to interfere in the matter and order a suspension of action until after the meeting of Council in December. This suggestion was adopted, and I was informed that nothing more would be done in the matter until after the quarterly meeting. The next intimation I had was a policeman walking into my place of business, arresting me and taking me to jail.

I am told that the Finance Committee have concurred in the report of the Market Committee to reduce the tax, and that at the meeting of Council tomorrow night the report will be submitted.

I have also seen by your report of the last Council meeting, that Coun. McShane gave notice that he intended moving to reduce the tax to $50; I have noticed that the press has almost unanimously urged the abolition of this tax, and I am surprised that the City Treasurer—acting, I am informed, by order of the Chairman of the Finance Committee—should press the enforcement of an odious by-law in despite of the order of his Worship the Mayor, in despite of the press, in despite of Public Opinion, as shown by the large public meeting held and the numerously signed petition sent in to the Council; and in despite of the fact that the said by-law is seemingly on the eve of repeal. I shall not enter into the legality or illegality of my arrest; I leave that for the decision of the courts to which I have appealed. I would simply like the public to know through your columns that in this so-called enlightened age a citizen of Montreal has been committed to prison for the terrible offense of selling beefsteaks, mutton chops, and other equally dangerous articles.

In conclusion, I will ask two questions, and give them possible answers:

1st. What is the reason that licenses for private butcher stalls do not all expire on the 1st May, as other business licenses do?

Answer: Is it because by making the license for one year from the day it is taken out, the officers of the Corporation hope to get each butcher singly, and thus bully him into paying the tax more easily than they could did the licenses of forty-seven men who now have private stalls fall due at the one time, so that they could more easily combine to test the legality of the law?

2nd. What is the reason that the City Treasurer has suddenly become so zealous in the enforcement of this one by-law, when there are so many—notably the liquor law—daily and openly broken, without any sign or murmur from him?

Answer: Is it because the fine in this case is a heavy one, and that 500 times 47—or $23,500—would be a very comfortable sum to fill up the deficiencies of the Road Committee and other departments, and so make a tolerable show in the annual financial statement of the city, which must be submitted next spring.

Trusting I have not intruded too much on your space, I remain,

Respectfully yours,
CHAS. E. BROWN.

THE TABB'S YARD HORROR.

The position of affairs among the victims of the fatal mistake made by those who drank from the bottle, of which and its contents so much has been said and speculated, did not change until after seven o'clock in the evening, when

although by no means unexpectedly; it is believed that her husband, favored by a strong constitution, will recover. Mrs Dunn continued in a very precarious condition, and Drinnen [illegible]ngs, as he is variously called, was not expected to long survive. The officers of the police had been informed early in the afternoon that others had partaken of the mixture, and towards three o'clock Detective Murphy proceeded in search; he visited De Salaberry street, where he was told they resided, but found after much inquiry that those whom he sought lived in a tenement, No 55, on St Alphonse Lane, near Durham street; these were a brother of the one previously mentioned, his daughter, a girl of twelve or thirteen, and his son, a boy of four or five, all were severely ill, but the father and daughter most seriously, in fact, they were not expected to recover. On information here received the detective visited another victim of this most fatal blunder, a young man of respectable surroundings, living at No. 33 St. Hypolite, near Ontario street, whom he also found very ill. From what is stated, it appears that William Hawkey paid a visit on Wednesday evening to his brother, and being shown the bottle and its contents, concerning which the inmates were evidently suspicious, he pronounced the latter excellent port wine; upon this assurance they began drinking, notwithstanding the bitter taste it left in the mouth; however, the first sensation is said to have been sweet, which is not improbable; the bottle contained about one-half gallon. Drinnen admits having taken and it is supposed the others drank in proportion. W. Hawkey was favored with a flask full, and it seems that on his way home he met Long, whom he gave a drink, a custom which in this instance, particularly as concerns Long, would have been more honored by the breach than in the observance. This makes a total of eleven victims, of whom four are lying in their last sleep; the dead were removed to the morgue and placed in safe keeping until this morning, when the inquests will be held by Coroner Jones. Generosity, however mistaken, does not seem to have been wanting by the residents of Tabb's Yard, and to all who would partake the mixture was given freely; in this manner the

ANDREW LONG,

THREE CUPS-FULL,

was induced to join the company. The less said about the character of the deceased the better. Now is no time for such observations as must be made were the whole truth to be told. Drinnen, or Jennings, was an Englishman, and until late yesterday afternoon, when he was received into the Roman Catholic faith by Father Carroll, of St. Patrick's Church, by whom he was visited, a Protestant; the woman who lived with young Flaherty, Mary Jane Drinnen, so was she known, was also nominally until about the same time, when almost on the point of death she was also baptized; Mrs. Hawkey, with the former, a sister of the man Drinnen, was a Protestant until a few weeks since; Mrs. Dunn, an Englishwoman, remains attached to the same form of [illegible]gion, and was attended yesterday afternoon by a clergyman, an assistant at St. John's Church. It is believed that her husband is a Roman Catholic.

It is thought that the correct story of the manner in which the bottle came into the possession of these persons has been obtained. Hawkey's son, a youth of some thirteen years, states that were coming down Alexander street last Monday evening, when, as an express sleigh was passing, his companion snatched up the bottle in question and ran with it, apparently unperceived by the driver, to his lodgings; the contents were tasted, as the odor of the wine was unmistakeably attractive, but its taste prevented any free use until they received Hawkey's assurance to the effect that there was no danger.

This story is very probably correct, and it is said, that the bottle belonged to the firm of Messrs. Evans, Mercer and Co., wholesale druggists.

TABB'S YARD

forms a most wretched court, surrounded by tenements crowded with residents, who, to say nothing more, are not over scrupulous with regard to cleanliness. The foul odor was sickening, and the destitution of the inmates was pitiable. Hawkey and his wife lay upon a wretched bed, in a wretched room forming a portion of a wretched building, covered by a few rags of coverlets. Flaherty and Mary Jane Drinnen lay in an apology for a bed—upon rough boards, with scarcely a rag between, scantily clad and without any bedding whatever in the proper sense of the term. The woman died a few hours previous to the man, but, nevertheless, the latter was left lying in the greatest agony, a fact to which the attention of the Coroner was called; the young man Drinnen was attended in a small adjoining room, very poorly furnished, in common with the remainder of the tenement, consisting of three rooms, until the removal of the dead, when he took the place they had vacated. The condition of the houses of the court caused a citizen to exclaim, that it was extremely strange that a

were employed to inspect the yards of the city, when the houses, to the cleanliness of which far greater importance should be attached, were wholly neglected; non-removal of refuse, bad drainage, decaying matter and woodwork, and a thousand other nuisances must exercise the most deplorable effect upon the residents of these crowded

HOMES OF THE POOR,

duplicates of which, perhaps in a more wretched state, may be found in almost every quarter of the city. Complaint is also entered against Kelly's yard, which adjoins Tabb's, and those residing hope that something will be done in this relation by the authorities. It may be mentioned that several physicians, including Drs. Dugdale and Major, were in attendance upon all the sick. Bedding was obtained for the latter from the Roman Catholic clergy, and later in the afternoon several nuns kindly took ch[illegible]. Detective Murphy found the la[illegible]tle, which had been emptied, and, also, very fortunately, the flask, which still contained a portion of the mixture; the conjecture based upon, the statement of Flaherty, that it is is in all probability correct, from more recent accounts, but this question will be authoritatively set at rest upon medical testimony.

A druggist improving his opinion upon the matter, said he did not think this wine would act as a poison, but that it might do so when taken in such unusually large quantities; the symptoms were violent vomiting and great thirst. The last request of Flaherty was for a drink of water, made while sitting up, but before it could be brought by his attendant, he had fallen back this circumstance was exactly repeated in the case of Mrs. Hawkey, who even sharply reprimanded them for tardiness, but she had scarcely uttered the words when she sank down and expired. It appears that a few moments preceding death they felt intense thirst but with less bodily pain.

LATER.

William Hawkey died at six o'clock last evening, and William Drinnen at nine o'clock; Mrs. Dunn is also dead; their remains have been removed to the Morgue.

The death of Hawkey, of Hermine street, is in addition anticipated, but it is probable that Logan, who is possessed of a good constitution, will pull through, as, fortunately for himself, he did not take a large quantity.

The children of Hawkey, of St. Alphonse lane, are completely out of danger; the boy had happily spit the liquor out, in consequence of its very disagreeable taste, and the girl had partaken of an insufficient quantity to cause fatal effects. Hawkey, of Alphonse lane, had been to the funeral of one of his children on Wednesday afternoon, and it was on his return homewards that he stopped at the tenement occupied in part by his brother; having obtained his portion, he proceeded on his way, and meeting Logan, who is his neighbor, invited him to take a drink, saying that it would be good for him, and adding that he would also take some when he reached home.

The medicine in question had been sent to Bourque & Co., St. Antoine street, and had been returned, as the firm happened to have in stock a sufficient quantity of this article.

Hawkey's child, when questioned as to its taste, said it was "bitter, bitter."

The following is a correct list of the dead:—

Mrs Hawkey, Mrs Dunn, William Flaherty, William Drinnen, Benjamin Thayer, and Mary Ann Drinnen, Hermine street, and William Hawkey, St. Alphonse Lane, making seven deaths out of eleven person attacked with illness from this cause.

MELANCHOLY AFFAIR.

Mr. Thos. Armstrong, a wealthy New York merchant, disappeared mysteriously a few days ago, and up to the latest dates had not been heard of. The Herald of that city says:—"In the many vicissitudes, mysteries and misfortunes to which human lives are subject in great cities, cases are constantly occurring, the simple facts of which cast into the shade the most ingenious inventions of the romancer. We have one of these cases before us, and a very sad case it is, the case of Mr. Thomas Armstrong, a merchant of this city, whose mysterious disappearance on election day (Tuesday last) is the subject of an advertisement which we publish this morning, offering five hundred dollars reward for any information that will lead to his recovery. A prosperous man of business, a man highly esteemed by a large circle of friends, the brightest prospects of life lay before him.

He was to have been married to an estimable lady on Wednesday, the day after the election; he had invited a large number of friends and acquaintances to be present on the happy occasion, but for several days immediately preceding his disappearance he had betrayed some aberration of mind which caused his friends much uneasiness. He has not been seen or heard of by them since he left his home in Brooklyn at about ten in the morning of election day. Whether in a fit of insanity, like the unhappy Preston King, he plunged into the river, or from the evidences of wealth which he carried upon his person he was spirited away for the purpose of robbery; or whether, in his unsettled state of mind, he wandered off to some place where he is unknown, are the questions now to be settled. While there is doubt there is hope as to what may have befallen him.

(From Messrs. Gillespie & Co.'s Circular, Nov. 10.)

Ashes.—Pot, per 112 lbs, 34s 6d; Pearl, 46s to 47s.

Barley—Canadian, per 60 lbs, 4s 5d to 4s 6d.

Butter.—Canada fine and extra, per 112 lbs, 105s to 123s. Good, do, 70s to 90s.

Corn—Mixed American, per 480 lbs, 32s 3d to 32s 6d; Yellow European, 32s to 33s; White, 33s 6d to 34s.

Cheese.—Extra, per 112 lbs, 40s to 68s.

Flour—Canada Superfine, 29s 6d to 31s 6d; Extra, 33s to 33s 6d; Superior Extra, 34s to 35s 6d; sour and partial, 28s to 31s.

The continental grain markets are generally more or less in advance, while those of this kingdom show little variation during the past se'nnight. The tendency, however, of home grown wheat is against buyers, and the supply taken off readily. Foreign, on the contrary, has ruled rather inactive up to the close of the week. The persistent advance in the rate of discount having the usual depressing effect, has caused operations on the part of millers to be confined within the narrowest limits; and though holders are, at the same time tolerably firm, it would be necessary to concede somewhat in price in order to promote sales. Cargoes off the coast have also gone off slowly at rather less money, but, with several takers for the continent, the number on sale is reduced within a moderate compass.

We look to the Atlantic ports of America for our most steady supply, but the shipments thence have been less liberal for the last seven days, and the stoppage of interior navigation will shortly make a considerable difference in our receipts from that quarter of the world, while the south and east of Europe promise but a meagre supply during the winter and spring; from these directions efforts are being made to push forward shipments in anticipation of the canals and ports during the winter season.

Business here since Friday calls for no special remarks, transactions having been limited, without material change in the value of any article. Imports of the week are moderate of wheat, small of maize, and only trifling of all other grain produce. The wheat export is large—9,768 quarters.

We had a few millers in attendance at our market yesterday morning, and the transactions reported in wheat were of limited amount, at a general decline of 1d to 2d per cental from the quotations of yesterday week. Flour extremely dull of sale, and barely maintained previous rates. Beans and peas supported late prices. The reduction noted in Indian Corn on Friday were recovered yesterday, and upon a fair business we repeat the currencies of yesterday week.

Beef is dull at late rates. Week's arrivals 110 tierces.

Pork is very scarce and wanted. Arrivals 75 barrels.

Bacon—Old is easier, as holders, anxious to clear out, are pressing sales. New meets a good enquiry. Arrivals, 2,557 boxes.

Cheese is not so active, but prices remain unchanged. Arrivals, 303 boxes.

Lard, with much pressure to sell, has declined 1s to 1s 6d per cwt.

Butter is steady at our quotations.

Ashes are slow of sale at our quotations.

Glasgow Markets.

(From Messrs. Rintoul, Son & Co.'s Circular, Glasgow, Nov. 12.)

Since our last report of the 5th inst., the imports have been moderate. There has been less depression in the trade this week.—Wheat has sold to a fair extent, at last week's full prices. Flour has met a better sale and prices are firmer. Indian Corn, Beans, and Peas all steady, with rather a better inquiry.

At to-day's market there was a moderate attendance. Wheat and Flour firm with a moderate business doing. Indian Corn and Beans firm. Oats and Barley the turn dearer.

Wheat—Canada club, 29s 6d to 30s 6d.

Barley—Canadian, per 320 lbs., 23s 6d to 24s.

Corn—Mixed and yellow, per 280 lbs., old, 18s 9d; new, 18s 3d to 18s 9d. White—19s to 20s.

Flour—Canada super., per 196 lbs., 31s 6d to 32s 0d; do, extra, 35s 6d to 36s do, sour and heated, none.

Peas—Canada white, per 280 lbs., 22s. to 22s 6d.

Oats—Canadian, per 264 lbs., 19s 6d 22s. 6d.

Oatmeal—Canadian, per 280 lbs., 36s to 37s.

News of the West.

[Special to the STAR.]

TORONTO, Nov. 28.

A mass meeting of the Grits of West Toronto was held last night in Shaftesbury Hall for the purpose of electing a candidate to contest that riding in their interest, Ald. Thomson was called to the chair. Capt. McMaster moved, seconded by Nathaniel Dickey, (the defeated of South Grey):—"That Mr. Thos. Moss be the candidate of the party." The resolution was carried.

The Liberal-Conservatives held ward meetings in the division early in the evening, at which seventeen delegates were appointed from each ward to meet at the Montreal House at half-past nine to nominate a candidate. At this meeting Mr. E. O. Bickford received the unanimous vote of the meeting.

The Mail this morning, strange to say, has not a word about the doings of the Liberal Conservative party last night, while it gives a column to the Grit proceedings.

The man Johnson, stabbed in the head by a young man named Hope in an altercation at Merriton a few days ago, died at the Mansion House, Homer, on Tuesday afternoon. A post-mortem examination is to be made to-day. Hope, who was out on bail, has been arrested.

The library destroyed at Whitby was composed of 1,500 volumes, and was valued at $1,500.

The Mechanics' Institute was insured for $2,200; the piano factory for $750; and Mr. Barrett's house for $250. Through the exertions of the fire brigade, Mr. Ray's livery stables were saved. The total loss is about $10,000.

Yesterday morning a fire broke out in the pickers' room of the Lybster Cotton Mills at Merritton. The flames were subdued before much damage was done.

It has since transpired that the fire was the deliberate act of boys employed at the mill named Gunning, Kain, and another, the oldest not more than 16 years old and the yest 7 or 8. The youngest applied the match, at the instigation of the two elder, but frightened at the act, has confessed. All the boys are in custody. Their reason for the deed was that they were tired of working the long hours which have lately come in force here, their parents refusing to allow them to leave their employment.

James A. Herweg, who, it will be remembered gave himself up to the police a few days ago, having confessed himself guilty of manslaughter committed in the United States 16 years ago, was yesterday discharged on his own recognizance to appear when called.

An Irish Home Rule Association was organized last night. James McCormack was elected President; James Phelan, Secretary, and M. Mitchell, Treasurer. A Committee of Management consisting of seven members was appointed.

Weather fine; sleighing good.

ROUND TOWN.

— Customs receipts yesterday, $27,702.85.

— Several of the leading merchants of this city have decided to procure a first-class steamship with a tonnage of about 2,500, and to carry steerage, with a limited number of cabin passengers, with a view of ultimately establishing a fortnightly, and possibly a weekly line between Liverpool and Montreal. The vessel will be built under the supervision of Capt. Thomas Aiton.

— The adjourned meeting of the City Council will be held this evening, when it is very probable that Coun Stephen's proposed amendments will be taken up; it is regretted that they have been so late in the day, as it is desirable to complete the work in hand speedily, the Local Legislature meeting on the 4th prox, while there can be no doubt their nature will provoke warm discussion.

— The members of the St. Andrew's Society will meet at the St. Andrew's Home to-morrow evening to transact general business, receive the Treasurer's report, install officers, and admit new members. The annual sermon will be preached in Knox Church at three o'clock upon Sunday afternoon, by the pastor, Rev. R. Thornton, one of the chaplains of the society. The celebration of the day will close with a ball to be given in the Queen's Hall on Monday evening.

THE LAKE TRAGEDY.

The Bavarian Enquiry.

Mr. Commissioner Risley resumed his enquiry into the Bavarian disaster at Kingston on Tuesday:

Joseph Taylor, steamboat inspector, Kingston, was first examined. He said: I had charge of the engine as chief engineer for eight or nine years, when in the steamer Kingston; the engine is eighteen years old; I had charge of the engine between 1855 and 1875; the highest pressure of steam I carried on the engine during that time was 40 lbs.; was not in charge of the steamer Kingston when she was burned; did not inspect the engine of the Kingston since she was burned except when the wreck came down about a week ago and this morning; during the time I had charge of the engine there was no sign of weakness in the beam; I would have had no hesitation in carrying forty-five pounds pressure of steam; the beam would have been quite safe at that; I examined the beam this morning; I also examined it when the boat first came down, about a week ago; it seemed to me that it (the beam) had been cracked at the top and bottom prior to the late accident; it appeared as if there had been a flaw in the beam previous to the accident; could not say that it was so, but it presented that appearance from its discoloration as if made by the saturation of oil; as an old experienced engineer, I think such a flaw would escape the notice of the engineer in charge, or inspector, and that it would not have presented itself; I last inspected the boat, I think, in 1868 or 1870; from what I know of the engine I would have had no hesitation in carrying 45 or 50 lbs. pressure of steam upon it; I had no knowledge that the beam suffered injury from the fire that it was exposed to in Kingston last year, not having examined it since until the wreck first came here, about a week ago, and this morning.

By Mr Risley—From the appearance of the break, there is the appearance of an imperfect casting. There is a hole in it, probably arising from the shrinkage of the metal in casting. There was a hole in the heart of the casting, which was not perceptible to the eye until the beam was broken.

James Howden, of Montreal, sworn, said: I am foreman for Mr Gilbert, Montreal. I had charge of repairing the engine; first taking it out of the Kingston steamer and erecting it in the Bavarian. The engine had suffered in many parts from the fire which happened to that steamer, but none of the parts which had suffered by the fire were used in the Bavarian engine except such as were thoroughly repaired. I tested the engine with the highest pressure of steam that it was intended to carry, viz, 45 lbs. I don't know anything of the fire that occurred on the Kingston. The centres were not taken out of the beam, having all been examined and found true.

To Captain Howard—When we went to remove the engine from the Kingston the walking-beam retained its original position. From its height above the hull, as well as its position, I am of Bavarian, and was in charge of the engine on that occasion. The trip was from Montreal to Prescott and back; we carried 45 pounds pressure of steam on that trip; the engine worked well and to my entire satisfaction; from my long experience in the erection and running of engines, I think it would be quite safe to carry 90 pounds pressure of steam.

Captain Thomas Howard, sworn, said:—I am 46 years of age; reside at Montreal; have been connected with steamers as mate, master and general superintendent on the lake and river for twenty-six years. My duties as superintendent of the Canadian Navigation Company's steamers are to superintend the building and rebuilding, and the repairs of all the Company's steamers; I also engage engineers, stewards, pilots and mates; in selecting mates and pilots, the evidence I have of their fitness is my knowledge of them in such capacities for a number of years, and believing them to be competent and trustworthy men; there are no examinations made of these men either by myself or the board; Dufours had no duties on the lake, as the Bavarian carried a first and second mate, and he was river pilot; I consider him an officer of the steamer, subject to the orders of the captain and first mate on the lake. There are printed instructions to this effect. In the absence of the captain, the pilot should have obeyed the first mate. The duty of the captain on finding that the fire could not be extinguished would have been to have ordered the boats to be launched, take charge of one boat himself, placing the first and second mates in charge of the other two boats, and then seeing to the safety of his passengers and crew. He is supposed to know the duty from experience for a number of years in following the water for a livelihood, as purser, mate, or engineer. The duty of the first mate on this occasion, was to take charge in the absence of the captain. It was his duty to go to the captain for orders if practicable. The captain had full control over his officers and crew. I have always found this system of selecting captains to work well, and can quote the names of masters, the highest in the country, who have risen from pursers.

The captain and mate always use their own discretion as to the stowage of cargo. The captain and mate engage the wheelsman and deck hands of the steamers and sometimes I do at their request. They are limited only as to the highest wages going on the steamer. In my opinion the accident was caused by the beam breaking, and the forward portion of it being thrown some twenty-five feet forward of its centre, which brought it immediately on the deck where the spirits were stowed, which smashed the casks and caused the spirits to run down into the fire hold, immediately causing the flames, upon the spirits getting down to the fire. The wreck as it now lies at the wharf here is as I first found it, with the exception that I have taken down the smoke stacks and the after end of the beams.

OTTAWA, Nov. 28.

Coadjutor Bishop Fabre, of Montreal, arrived here last night, and was met at the depot by a large procession of the various Catholic, Irish and French Societies, and escorted to the Bishop's Palace in a sleigh drawn by four white horses. At the depot addresses were presented by Mayor Martineau on behalf of the various Societies. On Sunday Bishop Fabre dedicates the new St. Anne's Church.

The Postmaster-General returned yesterday.

Mr. Mackenzie arrived this morning after securing the nomination of Mr. T. Moss for West Toronto. Col. Gzowski is the probable Conservative candidate.

PUBLIC OPINION.

The Tabb Yard Horror.

[To the Editor of the STAR.]

DEAR SIR—The terrible fate of the unfortunate people in Hermine street who were poisoned by drinking Vinum Colchici, leads onr to inquire whether there is not a by-law in existence requiring druggists to have marked on all deadly drugs the word "Poison," and if so, whether the bottle containing the Vinum Colchici was so marked. It would appear that it was not, for had it been the unfortunate victims would scarcely have drunk it. Perhaps I may be told that the law only applies to retailers; that poisoning people one at a time is illegal, but doing it "wholesale" is not contrary to law; and still more probably I will be told that law is not enforced. I believe the latter statement without question; it seems to me that few, if any, of the by-laws are enforced; except the one requiring a man to be sent to prison for the worst of all crimes, selling a beef-stack or a mutton chop.

Yours, mournfully
POOR HUMANITY.

ROUND TOWN.

—The ship Medora has arrived at Glasgow.

— It is rumored that an endeavor will be made to secure Mr. C. E. Brown's election as a City Councillor; also that Ald. Alexander will be requested to resign.

— A young man named Ulric Desmarais took action at the Police Court this morning against Const Bastien for assault, Mr Monk appearing for the Corporation; the case was dismissed.

— Hawkey is still alive, but the several physicians who visited him to-day are strongly of opinion that he cannot long survive; in this event there would be eight victims to this most fatal blunder.

— Instructions were received to-day from the Department of Marine and Fisheries to disband the Water Police on the 30th inst; influential petitions had been presented for their continuation on duty throughout the winter.

— The contract for the construction of a Worthington engine has been awarded to Worthington, and the contract for the removal of 4,000 toises of stone from the quarry and reservoir respectively to Messrs. McEwen and Moore.

— The policy of the Local Government, as foreshadowed, will be the encouragement of railways and the opening up of unoccupied lands, with the view of preventing the immigration from this Province, which has been a constant but not inexplicable feature of the past.

— Mr. Ryan, M.P., President of the Corn Exchange, Messrs. W Ogilvie, R Oliver, H Labelle, R Spratt, and J Craig, have been appointed a Committee to wait upon Mr. Brydges and represent the incovenience to which merchants are exposed by the delay in the transhipment of their freight to Portland, prior attention being given to through freight.

— John Shannon, a youth of Wellington street, was convicted on his plea of guilty, at the Police Court this morning, of the theft of a sleigh robe from the premises of Mr. Brown, merchant, Chaboillez Square and sent down for three months; he will also be held to answer to a charge of felony, wounding Const. Claridge on the night of the 20th inst., with intent to do him greivous bodily harm.

— At the Recorder's Court this morning thirteen prisoners were fined for drunkenness. Jane Hart and Jeremiah Hayes, vagrancy, $10 or two months; George Beauchamp, barber, knocking at the door of a house of ill-fame, $2.50 or 15 days; Alfred Picard, carter, driving or 10 days; Hilaire Cote, drunk and assaulting his mother, $5 or one month.

Arsene Charlebois, assaulting Eulalie Charlebois, his sister, $1 and costs or twenty days.

— At a recent meeting of public vaccinators it was urged that the Health Department should be empowered to quarantine any house in which there was a case of small-pox; that the Corporation be requested to furnish them with vaccine; that they be again allowed $24 per annum for wear and tear of their rooms; that city clergymen recommend vaccination and re-vaccination to their parishoners; and that the digest of the act relating to vaccination be extensively circulated by hand bills.

ALLEGED WIFE MURDER.

Coroner Jones proceeded to St. Anne's this afternoon, per request by telegraph, to investigate the circumstances attending the death of a woman, who, it is alleged, has been the victim of brutal treatment at the hands of her husband.

LATER.

[Special to THE STAR.]

ST. ANNE'S, Nov. 28, 3:50, p.m.

John Chantelles' wife died suddenly last night; supposed foul play.

VINUM COLCHICUM.

The stuff in the bottle, which has dealt death in Tabb's Yard, was a mixture of sherry wine and Colchicum Autumnale, or Meadow Saffron. The dose is from 10 to 20 drops, cautiously repeated. Taken in large quantities it is an accumulative poison. It is said that Colchicum is not ranked with those drugs which the British law requires shall be labelled "Poison." The present cases are held to be unique. It is to be hoped that henceforth the interpretation of the word "Poison" will be more liberal. Labels are very cheap.

MR. BROWN'S CASE.

Application was made at two o'clock this afternoon in Chambers, before Mr. Justice Ramsay, by Mr Kerr, Q C, for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus in favor of Mr Charles Brown, imprisoned for opening a private butcher's stall without permission of the City Council. Mr Kerr urged that the commitment was defective, in that it did not contain essential portions of section 45 of the By-Law to be found on page 331 of Mr Glackmeyer's edition of the Municipal By-Laws, and in not alleging that he continued to keep open such a stall, instead of keeping open as therein mentioned.

He further maintained that the By-law in question was ultra vires, and that no person could on that account be fined and imprisoned unless, prior to any act of this nature, a demand had been made for the payment of the license fee, which did not appear in the commitment, to which he held this was fatal.

Mr. Devlin, on behalf of the Corporation, sustained the sufficiency of the commitment, and contended that no demand for payment could have been made in this instance, because the prisoner had not complied with the enactment in applying for permission to open a private butcher's stall.

Mr. Kerr, in reply, considered that if this interpretation was correct any man could open a stall in defiance of the City Council; and in answer Mr. Devlin said that if his Honor held application for permission to be essential previous to the commencement of legal proceedings, he would admit that the commitment was not worth a straw.

His Honor reserved his opinion until five o'clock.

THE TABB'S YARD HORROR.

THE INQUEST.

The inquest upon the seven deceased was held this morning in Mr. Tansey's residence, Craig street, Mr. Tansey acting as foreman of the jury, when the following evidence was received.

stated: Had been called to attend the child Thayer yesterday morning; had found him lying very ill; his pulse being quick and weak, and with a pain in the back; the mother had said that the boy had taken nothing, and for this reason he could not account for the symptoms; saw the boy was sinking rapidly, and had informed them that the case was hopeless; had known nothing of the poisoning until some time afterwards; symptoms were not well marked, and did not lead him to suppose that the child had been poisoned.

By the jury: The child had been vomiting, but not while he (witness) was present; had not returned to the house until the evening.

DR. MAJOR

testified that he had visited Mary J. Drinnen, her brother, Hawkey and his wife, Flaherty, Mrs. Dunn, and several children in Hermine street; had been told they were suffering from the effects of poison taken the preceding night, but had he not been so informed he would have been doubtful of the cause of the attack, which resembled the collapse of cholera; had administered a variety of remedies, conjointly with other physicians present, who endorsed the course of treatment he commenced and followed throughout; the bottle having been shewn him he thought he smelt rectified spirits; had questioned Flaherty, who he had been told had found the bottle, which he identified; had endeavored to ascertain the nature of the contents; they

dark colored, and leaving a bitter taste in the mouth; Flaherty told him he had found it the day previous on Alexander street, on the left hand side going up, in the second gateway after passing Vitre street; he had said that it was packed in brown and white paper, also that there was upon it a label, upon which were stated that a portion had been taken down to St. Alphonse street, and that he had distributed it among his friends, thinking it was excellent wine, and of course not poisonous; the deceased had all admitted having drunk of the mixture; Hawkey's son had told him that he and Flaherty was passing up Alexander street, he carrying a basket of chips, while his companion had a log of wood; they saw on their way an express van without a driver, from which in question; had also visited Hawkey of St. Alphonse street, and sent for Dr. Lussier, who prescribed, being informed by him of the cause of the sickness; had seen a mixture in a flask; did not attempt to taste the contents, but thought it was sherry wine, with some other ingredient, but what, he could not determine; from what he had heard he believed the contents to be Colchicum wine, Vinum Colchici, the symptoms corresponding with the effects this would produce.

By the foreman:—Wm. Hawkey had during the afternoon and evening and his brother about the same quantity; Mrs. Dunn drank upwards of three ounces, and had given a small portion to her children; the symptoms in all the cases were the same; violent vomiting began about two hours after partaking of the liquid, followed by purging; the pulse was weak and flickering, running up to 120; the heart's action was extremely weak, and death ultimately was due to syncope.

TAKEN ABOUT THREE-QUARTERS OF A PINT,

deposed;—Had visited Hawkey at St. Alphonse street about four o'clock yesterday afternoon; his wife had told him that her husband was poisoned; did not know at the time the nature of the poison; the deceased was vomiting and purging, with cold extremities and weak pulse; had prescribed the necessary treatment; death was consequent upon syncope; the symptoms betokened an irritant poison; he had been shown the flask but was not aware of the nature of its contents; the flask was found in the cupboard; Mrs. Hawkey had said she had also drank a small portion, as well as the children, but the effects in these instances were not as yet very serious, although at present he could not say that the mother would recover, as she had thrown up violently in the course of the night; Hawkey had reached the house by her statement late at night, leaving the bottle without the door; when he entered he had said he had brought some wine, but he believed it to be poison; she had asked him to bring it in the house, which he did, when they tasted it, herself and the children, both then and subsequently.

DRUNK AND SICK,

Richard Strong, an employee of Messrs. Evans, Mercer & Co., declared that a bottle similar to that shown had been delivered to one of the drivers of the Bancroft's express van, to be taken to the General Hospital on the 14th inst, but it had been conveyed to Messrs. Bourque & Co, by error; the latter had written a note informing them of the mistake; they gave the bottle to a carter, to be returned on the 24th inst., but it had never been received; the contents were Calchicum wine; the driver of the express was Archibald Cameron who delivered the note of Bourque & Co., on last Tuesday morning, but without the bottle; he explained that he was not certain of having received it, and having revisited Bourque & Co., stated that it must have been placed in the sleigh, but he had either lost it or delivered it at some other place; had they been dealing in retail would have been placed upon the bottle beside the name of the medicine. Charles Beaupre, a youth employed by Messrs. Bourque & Co., gave corroborative evidence concerning the receipt of the bottle in question.

William Hawkey, aged sixteen, a cripple, and very diminutive in size considering his years, stated that his mother was dead some 11 years, Mrs. Hawkey, who died yesterday being his stepmother; Flaherty had taken him last Monday night to seek some wood; they had passed Beaver Hall, and having proceeded up the lane, came to a building, from which they took two pieces of plank; on their way home, by Alexander street, they met a horse attached to an express van, passing up, without a driver; Flaherty stopped the horse, and, as he believed, took out a bottle; the former had left him on Jurors street crossing, and followed the sleigh; on his return, he informed him (witness) that he had taken a bottle out of the van, adding that there was

NOTHING ELSE TO BE GOT.

Flaherty had first placed the bottle in a gateway, then came down to where he stood, and returning to the spot, brought it down to the house; the inmates had tasted it, and put it by, saying that they would not touch it until they knew what it might be; had not touched it himself, and had not seen any of them taking it, having been absent at this time at his aunt's, on St. Hypolite street; admitted having told the Coroner that he had chips on his head while on Alexander street; had been induced by Flaherty to make this statement; the deceased urging him "not to let on about where he got the bottle;" had assisted in carrying home the wood they had procured; his father had told him that his uncle had taken away a portion of the wine in a flask on Tuesday or Wednesday.

Archibald Cameron, express driver for Messrs. Brancroft and Sharpe, sta te that when they were engaged delivering drugs, they placed nothing else in the sleigh; on the 14th inst., had received medicine to deliver at the General Hospital and Messrs. Bourque & Co.; was aware that a bottle similar to that shown had been taken by him to Messrs. Bourque & Co., several days since; believed that he had followed his instructions exactly; on Monday last, had received this bottte from Messrs. Bourque & Co., to return to Evans, Mercer & Co.; had no other goods at the time in his sleigh, this bottle being packed with straw in a basket which he had taken to the stables; after he entered the gate-way, had not examined his sleigh; having stabled his horse, he returned to remove the bottle, and also some books, but the former was missing; had driven direct from Messrs. Bourque & Co.'s premises to the stables, having remained in the sleigh during this time; while passing up Alexander street, the bottle could have been stolen without his knowledge; such thefts had been committed before; was perfectly sober at the time.

Detective Murphy explained that he had been notified by Mr. Thayer yesterday afternoon of the death of his son, and had at once visited the yard in company with Detective Lafon, who shortly afterwards brought Dr. Major to the spot; Flaherty told him that the bottle which he found in the cupboard had been found by him, concealed in the snow on Alexander street; this story was corroborated by Hawkey's son; learning that a portion had been taken to St. Alphonse street, they had visited Mr. Hawkey, in whose house they found the flask; Hawkey, of Hermine street, had told him that the contents were not drank until they had been assured by his brother that it was excellent wine.

Detective Lafon added that he had summoned Drs. Major, Leclaire, and the officers of the Health Department.

VERDICT.

The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the deceased came to their deaths by drinking a quantity of Colchicum wine, being totally unaware of its deadly poison.

The Philosophy of Dress.

Shakespeare, who knew all qualities with a learned spirit of human dealing, rarely omits an opportunity of indicating how thoroughly he understood the Philosophy of Clothing. "The apparel," he says, "oft proclaims the man." Though the famous Lord Chesterfield, the author of the well-known "Letters to his Son," was not a great genius or a profound philosopher, he was a singularly shrewd man of the world, and was well fitted to pronounce a judgment or to offer advice on this subject: "I confess," he says, "that I cannot help forming some opinion of a man's sense and character from his dress, and I believe most people do as well as myself." He gives excellent instructions to his son, "Take care always," he says, "that your clothes are well made and fit you, for otherwise they will give you an awkward air."

The foregoing remarks in the Philosophy of Dress are admirable, but they require to be supplemented with the advice to go to JAMES CALLEN'S, Union Clothing Hall, 525 and 527 Craig street, who supplies every description of Clothing, ready made and made to measure for adults and juveniles of all classes, and who offers to his customers the rare combination of excellence in materials and workmanship, the newest designs, and unparalled cheapness. 251

Rev. Man. J. Gonzalves writing from Portuguese Colony, says:—"Perry Davis' Pain Killer has done great good among the exiles of Madeira. It is now, and has been for five years, the great family medicine with us. We have found it excellent in fever and ague, in coughs, colds, dyspepsia, chronic and inflammatory rheumatism, croup, worms, piles, nervous headache, gravel, &c. The introduction of the Pain Killer has been a great blessing to the whole colony."

GREY'S CREEK DAIRY,
CORNWALL.—The proprietor of this Dairy aims at supplying the city of Montreal with one of the most important necessaries of life, PURE, FRESH MILK of the best quality. It is clear that this valuable article of domestic consumption cannot possess the quality it ought, unless it is obtained from cows free from all disease, breathing pure air, and receiving a sufficient supply of wholesome and nutritious food. For this purpose an extensive estate, three hours by rail from Montreal, has been converted into an exclusive dairy farm. Well ventilated stables, to accommodate 300 cows, and all the appliances necessary for a large dairy have been constructed on the latest and most improved principles. Experienced dairy-maids have been carefully selected, and the most minute cleanliness is insisted on. It is not the proprietor's intention to distribute in small quantities, but to supply hotels, public and private institutions, milk-men, and parties contemplating the establishment of milk depots, wholesale, in 12 gallon sealed cans. The milk will only be delivered in its natural state; cream, if required, must be separated by parties purchasing. Applications for quantities required, and other particulars, will be received and promptly attended to by addressing GREY'S CREEK DAIRY, No. 179 Bonaventure street.
P. S.—Referring to the above, families requiring milk will be furnished with tickets for its delivery, on applying at the Depot.

THE TOKEN OF FAITH;

"But," said Francis Tresham impatiently, "he made some grave, though indirect charges against you, respecting the fate of Master Aubrey Ashby, a new favorite of the Earl of Salisbury, and for that matter the Lady Florence Cecil's too."

Lord Monteagle turned upon him with the glare of a tiger

"What! do you pay heed to the ravings of a drunken ruffian?" he cried, angrily. "That rascal would say anything to extort money. Upon my honour as a nobleman and a gentleman, I know nothing whatever of the fate of the individual of whom you speak, and what is more," he added, speaking with emphasis, "it is to me a matter of supreme indifference."

As he uttered the last sentence, his eye caught that of Helena Tresham resting steadfastly upon his own. He perceived, instantly, that she was perusing his features with a close and scrutinising spirit of enquiry, and a change went over his features which he was unable to prevent, and which he saw gave to her unutterable pain.

He bit his lip until he felt the salt taste of blood in his mouth, and his equanimity was restored by overhearing Francis Tresham mutter—

"This is a strange affair, truly: I must make some enquiry into it."

His lordship turned abruptly to Master Walter Digby, and he said, in a cold and haughty tone—

"My time, Master Digby, has to-day other claims upon it in addition to that which you have established. You have required my presence here to consult with you on some grave affairs. With your good pleasure we will to those matters at once, or I must leave their discussion to a future period, and take my leave of you now."

Master Digby regarded him with a grave, stern look, and for a moment was silent: then he said, in a tone no less cold and haughty than Lord Monteagle's own—

"The matter we have in hand comprehends such vast consequences, embracing so many vital interests, aspires to so many grand results, that all minor affairs dwarf into insignificance before it. Whatever may be the other claims made upon your time, my lord, they cannot, when even combined, compare with that I now prefer. In accordance with your wish, we will proceed at once to the consideration of that subject upon which I wish to confer with you."

He rose up and requesting Lord Monteagle, Master Keyes, and Francis Tresham to follow him, quitted the apartment, leaving Mistress Keyes, Mildred, and Francis Tresham's two sisters together.

Dame Keyes, however, who was an invalid, within a few minutes afterwards, complaining of headache, also retired, and Mildred was therefore left solus to entertain her two young companions.

Mistress Keyes had no sooner disappeared than Barbara, who was most at her ease, because as yet her heart had not been taken prisoner, at least by any one of these whom they had been talking, or any other who was not likely to reciprocate her affection, instantly resumed a conversation, which, if painfully trying to Mildred's equanimity, was still deeply interesting to her.

"What a delightfully horrible mystery we have unexpectedly pounced upon," she exclaimed, drawing her chair closer to Mildred, wholly unconscious that the latter had any interest in Aubrey more than in any other stranger who had met with an untoward fate. "What a very singular direction the conversation respecting Master Aubrey Ashby has taken."

"I think, Barbara," interposed Helena hastily, though in a faint voice, "it will be better for all parties if we change the conversation."

"I confess I cannot see that," replied Barbara. "We are not all so foolish as you, Helena. You are letting your heart slowly murder you. I have only one hope of you, and that is central in the improvement of your health, and in the amount of common sense another year's age will give you. If you are well in health at this time next year, you may permit your heart to trouble and vex you a little, but you will not let it kill you. The best and brightest, the handsomest and the noblest man in the world, is not [illegible] say that I may fall desperately in love with some enchanting Sylvius one fine morning, and, of course, I shall not then care so much for my dinner, and shall become abstracted, shall think of him very often, and look at the moon with pale and wan countenance whenever it shines. I shall smile when Sylvius is near me, mope when he is away, scold him if he smiles on anyone but me, and I shall, as in duty bound, look at no one, think of no one, smile on no one—if I can possibly help it—when he is absent; but die for him—oh, no! There are prettier fish in the sea and more beautiful birds in the air than were ever caught. If I had a swain like the one a foolish little creature whom I know cherishes, and he had flown off as he has flown off, he should never, never, never, never return to me—never! But I would look abroad for another bird, or angle for another fish, and my life on't the second netted or hooked, I would tame him in such a fashion that he would never wish to quit my side."

Helena smiled faintly and to conceal the pain at the heart which her sister's words had occasioned her, said—

"To hear you talk, Barbara, one would think you had been taking a lesson from Lady Florence Cecil."

"I wish, Nella, you would take one," returned her sister, quickly. "You would not only have a practised tutor, but a very excellent subject to operate upon."

"I think I heard you say that Lady Florence Cecil is very, very beautiful," observed Mildred, in a low, timid voice, addressing Helena.

"She is very beautiful," responded Helena, with a sigh.

"And young?" questioned Mildred, thoughtfully.

Barbara laughed,

"A mere child in appearance, and even in age," she replied, "but very old in experience—that is in affairs of the heart."

"Lady Florence has been differently circumstanced to most girls of her age," observed Helena. "Extremely beautiful as a child, she has always been petted by the earl, her father, and has been the favorite child of the countess. She has mixed in society from childhood, has been courted, followed, flattered—"

"Wooed, worshipped, adored, wholly, utterly, and completely spoiled," interposed Barbara, "until at last this poor, beautiful, young, petted creature is unhappy, unless she receives the homage of all who approach her—at least, all whose homage is worth having. Bent upon making conquests, she has succeeded. No game has been too high to fly at, none too low to swoop upon, providing it moved in her father's circle; but like a child with a toy, she no sooner obtains the heart she covets than she flings it from her as not worth keeping."

"Not worth keeping," echoed Helena, a little resentfully; "you err in that assertion, Barbara."

Barbara smiled, but not as if she interpreted her sister's meaning.

"Perhaps I am slightly in error," she replied. "No doubt Lady Florence would be glad to retain her conquests, but she has no sooner achieved one than she sets out in search of a new heart to conquer, indifferent as to what may be the impression her conduct may have made upon the last whom she captivated by her tender smiles. In proof, Helena, did her wilful ladyship rest until she had securely menacled one, who, until she exerted her wiles upon him, was willing to wear another's fetters? Well, just as she knew she had won him, handsome Aubrey Ashby appeared on the scene, a prize that even as great a beauty as Lady Florence might be proud to win. Has she not, quite regardless of the pain, the humiliation, she may inflict—the rage, the evil passions, she may rouse in the breast of him she has just conquered—directed the whole battery of her charms upon Aubrey Ashby? She saw that his handsome face and noble figure made many bright eyes dance, and many young disengaged hearts flutter, and, therefore, she cast her net upon him."

AGRICULTURAL.

Dr. Anderson, of Scotland, who has given much attention to subjects connected with milk, claims to have proved by actual analysis that the last gill of milk drawn from the udder of a cow contains sixteen times the amount of cream incident to the first one—the separation of the cream from the milk taking place in part in the udder, particularly in instances where the animal is suffered to stand at rest for some time before milking. Moral—milk clean.

Protection of Iron from Rust.

The following mixture is stated to be an excellent brown coating for protecting iron and steel from rust. Dissolve two parts chrystalized chloride of iron, two parts chloride of antimony, and one part tannin, in four parts of water, and apply with a sponge or rag, and let dry. Then another coat of the paint is applied, and again another, if necessary, until the color becomes as dark as desired. When dry, it is washed with water, allowed to dry again, and the surface polished with boiled linseed oil. The chloride of antimony must be as nearly neutral as possible—Engineer.

Washing Butter.

A very large majority of butter makers wash the butter; a minority do not and claim washing is not only unnecessary but injurious. Good butter is made by some of each way of thinking—and poor also when washed and unwashed. At a recent meeting of Chautauqua Co., N. Y., butter makers the President decided the sentiment of the meeting to be in favor of careful washing with the best water to be had. Several speakers thought but little water should be used. One man is reported to have made the extraordinary statement that applying salt freely would answer the purpose of washing, and that butter would dissolve no more salt than it needs.—Western Farmer.

Water as a Preserver of Butter.

The Utica Herald's dairy editor says: "After being duly packed water tight, the packages may be placed in good, cold water, such as is found in good wells and springs anywhere. Any such good well of water may be used for the purpose, only be sure the package is completely under water always; and if under water several feet deep it is no detriment, but probably no advantage. It is not necessary but probably best, that the packages should rest on the clear ground at the bottom of the well—not that any harm would happen to the butter, but the outside of packages might get oiled and muddy. A deep tank, kept full of water from a continually flowing spring, may be the most desirable reservoir for keeping the butter in, if the tank is well covered and kept from freezing. No one need be surprised if butter stored in this way may be kept for years as good as when packed."

Saving Trees from Mice.

We would call the special attention of farmers again to the importance of protecting their young trees against the winter ravages of mice. The work required to do this is but trifling and pays largely. There are numerous ways for accomplishing the desired end, but the most effectual and convenient we have ever used, is to bank with earth the trunks up a few inches from the surface spreading the same over the roots of the trees in spring.

An exchange strongly urges a plan which we do not think as good as the above, yet we give it for what it is worth. It says to bandage up the stems of the old tree with any cotton or woollen cloths, or of old muslin with two or three wrappings, letting the bandage go into the ground an inch or two, and six or eight inches above ground, and tie up.

This should certainly be renewed every autumn if necessary, until the trees are large enough not to be injured. Those who are in earnest for a remedy will try this and save their trees; but it will be too much trouble for others to devote a couple of hours to this labour annually, and they will rather run the risk with the mice.

Buckwheat for Fattening Stock

We often hear persons who consider themselves posted in the nature of crops and their relative importance in the domestic economy of the farm, speak disparagingly of buckwheat, and many farmers from the old country who cling to the old world notions of things, prefer turnips or potatoes for fattening stock in preference to buckwheat. An extraordinary prejudice prevails among farmers who, one would suppose, ought to know better, that if fed uncooked to sheep it will make them dizzy, and kill all the poultry. An experience in the use of this grain would serve to dispel all such fanciful notions, for it is admirably adapted to our climate, and one that answers the place to use, that corn does to the famers of the United States. The meal of both grains can only be eaten hot as pot, pan or griddle cakes, and who would not prefer a breakfast of smoking buckwheat cakes to one of Johnny cakes We hear sometimes of 60 bushels of buckwheat to the acre, while 30 is an average crop. Mr. John Johnston, an extensive cattle feeder of New York State, says of it:—"I have fattened many cattle, and far more sheep, on all or part buckwheat, for the last 20 years, and it will fatten stock as well for the amount of pounds as any other grain, oats, perhaps, excepted; and I would much rather have half buckwheat meal than all corn meal to feed to three year old steers that have not been fed grain.—Col. Farmer.

Shelter for Stock.

It is an old saying that shelter is feed. While it is true that good shelter will save a large amount of food that stock would be compelled otherwise to consume to save life, yet it will not do to furnish only shelter, they must have food besides. But if we wish to save one-half or one-third of the food that would be required to keep them in a certain condition, we can do so by providing shelter. That is to say, an animal exposed to the cold, storms, wind and weather, and compelled to sleep on the cold, frozen or wet ground, will require at least one-third more food to keep it in good condition than it would require to keep it in the same condition if in a warm, dry shed or stable, where no such exposure was experienced. As our crops have been cut short by the drought this year, and it is necessary to save all we can, the advisability of making shelter of some kind must be apparent to all.

Every farmer has the material at hand to make cheap shelter. If he has not the boards or planks, he can go to the woods and cut posts and poles, and make a covering of straw or cheap hay. He can put up wind breaks about his yard or sheds, and make comfortable quarters for his stock. He can thus save food and save the gnawings of conscience, for conscience must reprove the owner when his stock stands shivering in the fence corners exposed to the pitiless storms. The cows refuse to give milk, the cattle and horses lose their flesh and spirit, their bones daily become more visible, and if the graveyard is not made a recipient of their carcases it is a wonder. From such farming as this deliver us. It is unchristian, inhuman. No one has a moral right to keep more stock than he can keep comfortably. But on the point of economy it will pay to make shelter. The food that will be thus saved will more than pay for making the shelter, letting alone the humanitarian question entirely. Cornstalks can be used for a covering.

It is not profitable to keep stock unless it is kept thriving. It is the worst economy that a man can use to let the stock lose in winter all they have gained in summer. They not only bring no return for the feed in winter, if allowed to get poor, but lose that and all they have gained in summer besides. If stock are always kept thriving, in winter or summer, they are daily becoming more valuable, and what is fed to them value is received for. There is a gain instead of a loss. Every day they lose in flesh the farmer loses. Every day they gain the farmer's pocket gains.—N. B. Agriculturist

TO THE AFFLICTED.—I wish to state that I have removed my consulting rooms to the Mechanics' Bank Chambers, No. 194 St. James street; and that I will, as usual, pay special attention to chronic diseases of all kinds, particularly those of a character that need not be mentioned, resulting in more misery than all the other sins in this world put together: Nervous Irritability, Morbid Sensitiveness, Loss of Memory, Lack of Confidence, Indecision of Character, Depression of Spirits, Incapacity to apply the mind to any Occupation, Imbecility, Impotency, and sometimes almost total depravity. All of which can be corrected by restoring the vital forces, which can be done without the usual drug and nostrum treatment, by which thousands have been injured or murdered. I have practised my peculiar mode of treatment for eight years, and during that time have treated an immense number in all parts of the world, in the best walks of life, and not one can say that I have ever done them an injury, and nearly all can say that I have cured them. Patients can be treated without my seeing them, no matter at how great a distance, but those in the city must call and see me at my office. Office hours from 9 to 11 a.m., 2 to 4, and 7 to 10 p.m. Private and confidential.

This Forge is, without exception, the best in the Dominion, being far superior to Bellows in every respect. It is strong, compact, durable and cheap.

The Fan gives a steady blast, equal to a 32-inch Bellows, and is not liable to get out of order. The Forge for out-door work is ready for immediate use. All that is required for in-door use being the attaching of an ordinary stovepipe. By means of the sliding doors, the Forge may be completely closed, preventing the escape of sparks or smoke.

The insurance rates are not affected by its use, as there is no more danger than from a stove. The Forge can be run by power if desired, though it is geared to run by hand with the greatest ease. Is warranted to give satisfaction. Send for circular.
