MILK AND WATER.

Milk is food. Water is not food. Nurse the baby on water, and it will not live long. But many a mother who supposes she is buying real milk is getting half water, and she wonders why the baby frets and looks thin and pale.

What water is to milk so substitute medicines are to Dr. Pierce's. This is why there is nothing "just as good" as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, for the cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, or weak stomach, ach, impure blood, bronchitis, obstinate, lingering coughs, sore throat, weak lungs, bleeding lungs and kindred affections, which, if neglected or badly treated, lead up to consumption. If you ask for Dr. Pierce's remedies and the dealer won't supply you, go to another store. Your health is of greater importance than any extra profit he may make on the substitute. The imitation substitute can not imitate the cures. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is absolutely non-alcoholic and non-narcotic. It can be safely relied upon by temperance people. It is not only the safest, but also the surest remedy for the stomach, blood, throat and lungs.

"My wife had a severe attack of pleurisy and lung trouble," writes Abram Freer, Esq., of Rockbridge, Green Co., Ill. "The doctors gave her up to die. She commenced to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and improved from the first dose. By the time she had taken eight or ten bottles she was cured, and it was the cause of a large amount being sold here. I think the 'Golden Medical Discovery' is the best medicine in the world for lung trouble."

For 31 one-cent stamps to pay customs and postage, you can get a free copy of the Common Sense Medical Adviser, a work of 1008 pages. Cloth bound 50 stamps. Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

MAJOR GIROUARD HONOURED.

Montreal, Sept. 5.—Major Girouard the celebrated young Canadian officer who rendered such brilliant service to the Empire in the Sudan, was tendered a reception at the City hall this afternoon.

The reception was attended by a large number of prominent citizens. Ald. Stevenson, acting for the Mayor and Corporation, presented Major Girouard with an address, congratulating him upon his brilliant success in the work he had accomplished for the Empire in the Sudan.

Major Girouard replied briefly but effectively. When he left England, he said, he had never expected to receive any such welcome in his native city, and he was very much surprised at receiving such honours. He was very glad that he had been able to accomplish something for the Empire, and he might say that he never forgot that he was a French Canadian and a graduate of the Kingston College.

Major Girouard was banqueted to-night by the local militia, and speeches were made by Dr. Burden, Minister of Militia, and Major-General Hutton.

THE UNDOING OF A DOUBT

BY HUGO ST. FINISTERRE, MD.

AUTHOR OF "WHO'S WHO," ETC., ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1898 BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION

"You're just too late, Cy," I muttered.

"You ought to have awakened a minute sooner if you wished to see lively times."

But if Cy Walters had discovered the flight of his prisoner while his jailers slept he did not abandon the effort to recapture him. I saw the huge form crouch together and clamber heavily but quickly through the window. Then, being still between me and the light, the head and shoulders were seen swinging grotesquely about as he strode through the garden, and, as if impelled by perverse fate, came in as direct a line for the spot where I stood as if the sun were shining. It was a good time for me to make a change of base, but I stood my ground.

Doubtless the army experience of Cy Walters helped him in outwitting his foes at night, but it was an extraordinary act, which must have been purely accidental, that held him to a mathematically true line until he came directly opposite me with only the paling fence separating us.

I had the advantage, inasmuch as the dim light beyond gave me a partial glimpse of his gigantic figure, but his eyes were keen, and he saw me before attempting to leap the obstruction between us. That keen vision, too, showed my revolver leveled at his head.

"Hands up!" I commanded in a voice whose earnestness could not be mistaken.

Cy Walters was unquestionably a brave man, and it is such who know when to fight and when to surrender. Up went both huge hands, one grasping the Winchester, so that it was interposed like a rude cross against the faint background.

"Drop that gun!"

Down it went with a thump to his feet.

"My man, as you see, I have the drop on you. It would serve you right if I stretched you beside your rifle, but I have never committed murder and don't intend to begin now. You take me for Hank Beyer."

If I were he, there would be no sense in denying it when it would bring me no danger, but I repeat that I am another person. Everything that I said at the hotel tonight was true. I was never in this part of the country until yesterday. The real Hank Beyer was standing by the door of the dining room. He had made himself look different by shaving off his mustache, and he also disguised his voice. What do you think of my statement?"

"It's all a—d lie!"

Mr. Walters was evidently a man of convictions. I had not shaken his belief in my identity with the detested horse thief.

"Very well, believe as you choose, but it won't be long before you will learn that you and your friends are the biggest fools in Mississippi."

"Me and Archie Hunter have showed that already in allowing you to climb out of the window while we slept and after you had took Archie's pistol from his lap; that's a little the worst yet—naught!"

It was clear he had no suspicion of the part played by the young woman, and it was not my place to enlighten him.

"It was a piece of tomfoolery, Cy, and the boys will have the laugh on you both when you tell them how I gave you the slip and got out of the country."

"You haven't got out the kentry yet," was his significant comment.

"Not just yet, but I soon shall, thanks to you and your stepson. You see I have Archie's revolver, and now I shall take your Winchester. Since you persist in looking upon me as a horse-thief you may as well include the theft of weapons."

He emitted a blistering imprecation, but saw there was no help for it. He was still reaching for the stars when I commanded:

"Face about toward the hotel!"

He complied with surprising promptness.

"If you stoop or attempt to pick up your gun, I'll shoot. It won't be the first time I fired a revolver, and you are in good range."

Despite my watchfulness and readiness to use my weapon the fellow outwitted me.

"March," I added, "and don't pause or look around until you climb back through the window."

He began moving, but his feet seemed to become entangled in the vines that had partly retarded my steps. He advanced slowly, tripped, swore and struck his toe against some obstruction. Then he straightened up and stumbled onward with the same difficulty.

The cunning veteran was kicking his Winchester along in front of him, and I had no suspicion of it.

In this manner he advanced for fully a rod, when, like a flash, he stooped, snatched up his rifle, and, wheeling with the same amazing quickness, let fly at me. I felt the tail graze my temple and snip off a bit of hair. Dazed for the moment, I discharged two chambers of my revolver, but in the flurry missed, as he had just done with his Winchester. Before I could pull myself together for another shot he was beyond fair range, while he, knowing the uselessness of firing at me, refrained from the attempt.

I had safely emerged from my prison but my full escape remained to be made. It would not do to stay at Al dine, nor indeed anywhere in that se-

Lynchings have been and are still too common in some parts of our country for the most innocent person to be absolutely safe.

It did not take me long to reach this conclusion, and simultaneously with it came the alarming discovery that I was mistaken in believing I was alone.

CHAPTER IX.

It will be remembered that the night was clear and still. There would be no moon until near morning, and it was so new that the additional light was not likely to be appreciable. There was scarcely a cloud in the sky, so that it was easy to distinguish objects at a distance of 15 or 20 yards.

The gentle wind was crisp and pleasant, and I breathed deep drafts after my long confinement in the stuffy room of the inn. The come, with the raweaking of hope, filled me with delicious joy. I was strong and brave.

Such was my mood when I was startled by the unmistakable sound of a footfall behind me. My first thought was that Archie Hunter had joined his parent in the search and was trying to steal upon me from the rear. I wheeled, revolver in hand, and faced the new danger.

I was looking over an undulating meadow which sloped away in the gloom beyond sight. Neither on the right nor left could its boundary be detected. It was at the rear of the inn, and therefore led away from the main road, which I dared not travel, since the indignant citizens, determined not to be balked of their prey, would scour the whole country for me, and it would be impossible to throw them off my track.

Though I had heard the stealthy footfall, I could not see anything to explain it. So far as I was able to judge, no man was in sight and yet it was incredible that my ears should have deceived me.

Scanning my surroundings, I observed that the field upon whose margin I was standing was uncultivated, and a little to the left was what appeared to be a natural hummock. With no special object in mind, I walked toward it, when, to my astonishment, it rose to its feet with the question:

"Hello, dat yo', Mars Hank?"

It was a short, stocky negro who thus addressed me, and without stopping to explain his blunder as to my identity I demanded:

"Who are you?"

"Huh, don't yo' know Rastus Brown, Colonel Mansley's nigger?"

"What are you doing here?"

The question seemed to strike the African as excessively funny, for he humped his shoulders and chuckled.

"Who yo' s'pose sent me?"

"I haven't any idea."

"Hain't, eh? Yah, yah! Why, Miss Esther done sent me."

"What for?"

"Wid her compliments and de special obsequet dat yo'll run like de debil."

"Did she say that?"

"Doan't member de words exactly, but dat's what she meant. I say, Mars Hank, yo' gib 'em de clip mighty slick, didn't yo'?"

"How do you know I did?"

"Seed yo' do."

"You saw me? Where were you at the time I came out the window?"

"Standin' back and bossin de job."

"What brought you here at this late hour of the night?"

"I come wid Miss Esther. She warn't afraid, but I t'ought I'd better look after her 'cause she am younger dan me, yo' know."

"And what made Miss Esther leave her home at so late an hour?"

"Yo' see, de colonel come home late night wid de news dat de folks had yo'—" looked up fur' his stealin' and dat dey was gwine to hang yo' fur takin his pet animal. De colonel was awful rampageous and swore he hoped dey would hang yo' if it was yo' dat stole de chestnut horse, for de colonel don't seem to hab much love fur a horse thief."

"What did Miss Esther say?"

"She didn't say nuffin, but cried kind ob quietlike after de colonel had gone out ob de parlor. Den she tole me when he warn't round dat I was to search her dat night from her home to a sartin place dat she didn't name. So we come down, and when she found out whar dey was fattenin' yo' up so dat yo' would be fit to kill in de mornin she made me stand back out de way while she slipped up and rose da window and den slipped off ag'in jes' afore yo' fell out on de ground."

The meaning of all this was apparent. Miss Esther Mansley, if not engaged in marriage to the conscientious Henry Beyer, loved him despite his worthlessness and the fact that he had stolen a valuable horse belonging to her father. It was that feeling which caused her to make her way stealthily to the inn late at night under the escort of her faithful servant and to release me, believing I was her lover. The act was commendable, and who shall blame her therefor, even though she knew the unworthiness of the miscreant that had won her affection?

But after all I had nothing to do with this phase of the business. So far as I was concerned the young woman had built better than she knew. I was breathing the free air of heaven and should continue to do so or know the reason why.

"Rastus, you say Miss Esther wishes me to run and it is the best thing for me to do, but did she say in what direction?"

"I s'pose from her observations dat she meant fur yo' to run to de debil, which am de same as runnin like de debil."

"But, not being acquainted with the country—What the mischief are you laughing at?" I angrily demanded as the negro chuckled.

"Mars Hank, yo' jokin when yo' say yo' don't know much 'bout dis kentry."

It was a waste of the precious minutes to seek to convince Rastus Brown of the truth. I appealed to his good opinion of himself.

"What do you advise? What direction is best for me to take?"

"My advice am to head fur Noo Orleans and not stop runnin day or night till yo' got dere. It am only free, four thousand miles, and I s'pose yo'll get tired, when yo' arrive dere yo'll be safe and yo' kin take a good, long rest. Mercy heben," suddenly exclaimed the African, "did yo' hear dat?"

It was a dismal, mournful sound that rose on the night air, coming from some point apparently miles distant. I took it for the cry of a wolf in some swamp or woods and set it down as unworthy of attention at the time.

Although I had made my escape from the house, I was still near it. Cy Walters and Archie Hunter would not sit down and wait for daylight before making another move against me, and unless morning found me several miles from that spot it would find me in imminent peril of being recaptured or shot down.

Another fact was not to be forgotten. Although I had possession of an excellent revolver, only three chambers were loaded, and I was without an additional cartridge, for Jim Dungan when he relieved me of my weapon took good care, as I have related, to supply himself with the accompanying ammunition. It was necessary, therefore, that I should husband those three charges until the direst necessity compelled me to appeal to them.

"You know I have been away for some time, Erastus," I said desperately. "I shall depend upon you to guide me to a secure hiding place. Lead on."

No doubt the African deemed me eccentric that night, but probably he laid it to my flustered condition. He muttered something which I did not catch and turned straight about and started across the broad spreading meadow to which I have referred. I followed a few paces behind him.

As nearly as I remember, we walked an eighth of a mile without any perceptible change of direction. Then my guide turned to the left, and in a few minutes we were making our way through low, swampy ground, where the water wet my shoes. Dense stubby trees and bushes loomed up in front.

"Where are you leading me, Erastus?" I asked sharply.

"Gracious heben, don't yo' know, Mars Hank?"

It would not do to throw away time with this fellow. I spoke with sternness and laid my hand on the butt of the pistol at my hip.

"Erastus, after this when I ask you a question answer me if you don't want me to shoot you. What place is this to which you are leading me?"

"It am Black Man's swamp."

"What gave it that name?"

"Dat's whar de runaway slaves sometimes used to hide. De swamp am so brung em back. Dey would stear out in de nighttime and snake up to de nigger quarters, whar dey got somethin to eat. Yo've heard 'bout it?"

"Certainly, and you wish me to hide in there till the hue and cry is over?"

At that instant the colored man, Erastus Brown, emitted an exclamation of mortal fear and dashed off at the top of his speed, leaving me alone.

CHAPTER X.

Although the strange cry that sounded through the night and threw the African into a panic was unfamiliar to me, I could not mistake its meaning. It was the baying of a bloodhound.

When first heard, it was so distant that it could have borne no relation to me, but the infernal fate that seemed to cling to me had brought the owner to the inn, where Cy Walters was prompt to take advantage of the frightful means thus placed at his disposal for my undoing.

I know that dat scent of de swamp animals approaches as close to the marvelous as anything in this world. It was impossible for me to shake off the brute or brutes (for there was no saying whether there was one or more on my track) except by taking to the water, and I knew not whether there was a stream within miles of me, nor could I guess which way to turn to search for one.

These descendants of the man hunters of slavery days would trail a fugitive into the wildest recesses of a swamp and compel him to escape rending by climbing a tree, where his pursuers could capture him at their leisure. I drew my revolver and with something of the panic shown by Erastus turned toward the wood which loomed in front and plunged into Black Man's swamp, intent only upon getting away from my enemy, who was to be dreaded more than a jungle tiger.

The ground was soft and spongy, the best in the world for trailing, and none could have known better than I that the brute would soon be on my heels.

"If there is but one, or possibly two," I reflected, "I will settle him with my revolver."

The baying sounded at intervals, and I fancied it came from one animal, though there could well be several whose cries were similar. The men who accompanied the hound did so in silence. There was no call for them to waste their strength in shouting.

I thrashed ahead, sometimes catching my feet in the wirelike vines, with the branches switching my face and a larger limb occasionally compelling me to change my course, but all the time I was plunging deeper into the swamp, which had served more than one runaway slave in the past.

The terrifying danger, leaving out of account the dog, was from the men at his heels. It had been announced by Jim Dungan, leader of the mob, that I was to be shot down if I tried to escape from my captors, and I had not only made the attempt, but had well nigh succeeded. Consequently they would make short work of me, and Cy Walters would not hesitate to give me a variation of the "witch's parole," as he had done in the case of more than one miserable wretch in wartime.

I had run barely 200 yards when I heard the bloodhound thrashing behind me. He was on my trail and emitted a bay which I fancied contained a note of exultation in its horrible discord. Certainly it was warranted.

To my surprise, the ground suddenly sloped upward, and here I suspected anything of the kind I debouched into a small clearing less than half an acre in extent, in the middle of which was a pile of logs, evidently the ruins of some cabin that had tumbled to pieces through the lapse of time and the wear of weather.

With that instinctive longing to defer the final calamity I ran swiftly across the open space to the pile of logs, where I snatched a revolver in hand, and looked back. Since a meeting with the dog was inevitable there could be no better place than the logs in the middle of the clearing.

"The men must be some distance behind me—ah!"

Matters went with a rush. I had not stood more than three minutes, panting, at bay when the hound burst into sight on the edge of the clearing and charged straight for me like a meteor.

The true bloodhound is not of large size, but satan himself could not possess a more hideous front, while his strength is prodigious. A dusky Hercules cornered by one of those black demons has brained him with a club when he made his leap or he has slitted his throat with a knife at close quarters, but the chances are always the other way. None knew better than I that the hound had to struggle I would be as helpless as against the assault of a panther. But my revolver contained three charges.

In the clear starlight the dog caught sight of me at the same instant that I saw him. He emitted a peculiar cry and rushed across the open space as if shot from a catapult.

I stood as rigid as iron. My panic had vanished, and I never was cooler in my life. But the hound was half way to me I leveled my weapon and held my finger on the trigger until he was barely five yards distant. Then I let fly.

I made the statement at the opening of this story that I was an expert with the revolver, as my numerous friends of the Seventh regiment will testify, but I never made a prettier bulseye than that October night in a Mississippi swamp, when I sent a bullet into the brain of the bloodhound that was charging for my throat. It entered his skull between the eyes, and, ranging downward, must have plowed through his heart, my theory being based upon the consequences of the shot.

The dog uttered a rasping howl, and leaping straight up in the air for six or eight feet dropped on his side, rolled over, furiously clawing the ground and air, and then lay motionless, as dead as Julius Cæsar.

My fear was that he had companions of his own species. If so, there could be no better place than the present to have it out with them. If I could maintain

SHERBROOKE, QUE.ORCHARD COVER CROPS.

What They Include—Where They Are Grown—When to Sow.

At the New York station Mammoth clover formed a dense covering and remained alive over winter, comparing favorably with winter vetch and winter rye. A mixture of the latter formed a perfect mat of vegetation and remained green over winter. At the New York Cornell station the European vetch sown early in summer, though starting slowly, made a thick cover by the middle of September. It remained green and continued growing for some time after frost, the vines standing two feet high at the beginning of winter. On the approach of hard freezing weather it fell, forming an even, carpet-like cover, and by spring the plants were decayed so they could easily be plowed under. They must not be sown too early for best results with summer cultivation, but the plant is nevertheless considered one of the best for New York. It is recommended to sow the seed the last of June or first of July, or in very good soil, as late as the last of July.

Soy beans and cowpeas have been successfully grown in peach orchards in Connecticut. In Canada they are reported to have grown rapidly, but were killed by the first frost and did not make as good a cover as rye, buckwheat or fields peas.

Cowpeas, and perhaps velvet beans also, may prove valuable in the southern states, but are not so well suited to the north. Both the New York stations report cowpeas as making a good growth, but the seed must not be sown too early to allow of the best cultivation. The plants are killed by the frost, lose their leaves and afford little winter protection. Field beans, while better than no cover, are open to the same objections as cowpeas. Field peas are often grown as a cover crop.

At the New York Cornell station field peas sown in the middle of August produced vines from two to three feet long and remained green after frost, making a good mulch. When sown as late as the middle of September, they did not make a satisfactory cover. At the New York state station Canada peas and buckwheat and blue peas and buckwheat gave satisfactory results, both mixtures making a good growth and the peas remaining green until winter. The growth of the Canada peas and buckwheat was so great as to interfere with the gathering of winter apples.

Field peas are considered among the best crops for winter cover at the Nebraska station, though most crops make a rather small growth in the dry falls of that region.

Crimson clover is considered an ideal cover crop wherever it withstands the winter, though it does not thrive on hard, poorly tilled soil as well as many other crops. It is reported by the New Jersey station as being largely throughout the state and considered much more economical than city manure as a nitrogenous fertilizer. It may be sown there from the middle of July to the middle of September. According to the Delaware station, it is grown largely in the peach orchards of that state. It sends its roots to a depth of four feet even in hard soil, flourishes on poorer soil than red clover and makes its growth during the fall, winter and spring, growing when wheat and even rye seem dormant. In spring the soil is plowed in such a way as to leave many of the clover heads above the soil to ripen and seed the orchard. On poor soil cowpeas are sometimes grown during summer and are followed by crimson clover sown in the pen vine in August. This practice is also recommended by the Virginia station. Crimson clover has not proved entirely hardy at the Rhode Island, Michigan, New York state and New Hampshire stations and at the Canada experimental farms, and was not satisfactory at the Nebraska station on account of dry weather in the fall. In the locality of the New York Cornell station crimson clover winter kills if sown too late. About the middle of July or 1st of August is recommended as the best time to sow it. If sown earlier, it matures and dies before winter. Failures with crimson clover are frequent, but no more so than with red or mammoth clover sown at the same time. A recent report of experimental station work, which is authority for the statements here made, mentions still other crops suitable for cover.

How to Make Great Corn Land.
The southern cowpeas in the north are of value only as a green fallow crop to turn under. They grow, even in thin soil, with much vigor and make a large crop to turn under, growing in 60 days, rooting very deep. We have dug out roots that went down in heavy clay two feet, and then they were more to follow after. The land should be made good and the peas or rather beans, for beans they are—should be drilled fairly well into the ground. Some put in a few oats, but whether this pays we have doubts. These peas should not be put in before June 1, when the soil is both hot and fairly moist, but after this they will grow without much rain. They should not be allowed to get too ripe before turning under, where land is very much run down it would be a good plan to turn them under in early September and work in a sowing of Canadian peas on the same ground the last of September—about the 20th—let them grow and lie on the land through the winter as mulch, adding so many more roots, humus and fertility to the soil, and the following year it will make great corn land—if an experience of mine is any guide in the matter, says John Gould in the Ohio Farmer.C. THE FLAT PEA.

What Various Authorities Say About Its Value.

Farmers have fought rather shy of the flat pea, although it has received attention from the agricultural press both here and abroad. The experience of stations in different sections of the country has been thus summed up.

The California experiment station reports that the flat pea maintains a heavy growth with very little moisture, keeping green all summer without irrigation. Cattle and horses will eat the hay, but avoid the green vines. Sheep and pigs eat it readily green. Flat peas grow best on upland, sandy soils.

The North Carolina station reports that the flat pea requires three or more years to secure a stand, and then it is of no practical value for North Carolina. "The flat pea we place next to suchaline as the most loudly trumpeted swindle perpetrated upon the long suffering public in recent years." The Alabama station reports that flat peas grow eight to ten inches high the first year, with stand light frost, continuing to grow throughout the winter. Cows and horses crop the vines, especially before other plants have started. It is regarded as good a soil renovator as cowpeas. The Nebraska station reports that this fodder plant appears to be too tender to stand ordinary treatment and does not recommend it.

The Utah station reports that Lathyrus sylvestris dried up during the summer of 1898, although it remained green several weeks after the alfalfa plants growing with it were dead.

The Kansas station reports that young seedling plants of the flat pea withstood the drought satisfactorily.

At the Hatch station, Massachusetts, the flat pea was cultivated for two years at considerable expense without securing any fodder.

In the Michigan experiment station report for 1895 it is stated that the flat pea had grown with fair success for several years, but the feeding tests showed that sheep and cows had a decided distaste for the forage. Sheep confined on flat pea pasture lost weight, and cows fed in stable lost weight and diminished in production of milk and butter fat when either green or ensilaged flat pea fodder was fed as a part of the ration.

Dr. E. Lamson-Scribner, in the report which furnishes these facts, does not recommend the flat pea where the usual forage crops can be grown. He says the land should be prepared for receiving this crop the same as for wheat or corn, although it is claimed that the flat pea will grow in regions or in soils where these crops will not succeed. The young plants usually come to the surface within three weeks from planting and during the first season make a small growth, 10 or 12 inches high. The land during this season should be kept free from weeds and the vines cultivated. The second year the growth is more vigorous, and during the third year the plants attain their full size.

In the Gulf states the vegetation is perennial, but in the latitude of Washington the plants die down in the winter, although they are quite resistant to frost and are slow in starting in spring. Their heaviest growth appears to be during the months of July and August, and at this season the vines make a dense mat, completely covering the ground, often to the depth of three or four feet. This tangled mass of vines is cut with difficulty and must be mown with a scythe or cut with a sickle. The vines, when cut, dry out readily, and the making of the hay is a simple matter.

The Spraying of Muskmelons.
Experiments in spraying muskmelons at the Ohio station leave the matter about thus:

A limited crop of very early muskmelons upon early soil may be grown by transplanting, and harvested without spraying; the later melons on such vines are almost certain to be rendered worthless by attacks of disease upon the vines.

Late muskmelons or late yields from early vines cannot be secured without spraying for fungous diseases, and no one can hope for success in this line without great expenditures in spraying. The land during this season should be kept free from weeds and the vines cultivated. The second year the growth is more vigorous, and during the third year the plants attain their full size.

The Shape of the Haycock.
According to mention made in The New England Farmer of a Danish experiment, it was found that spreading the grass or stacking it in the usual cake shaped piles would not only reduce its quality, but retard the process of drying. "The making of tall, long, narrow cocks," says the report, "is the leading characteristic of modern haymaking. Some loss is, of course, unavoidable in bad weather and during long spells of rain, but this will never be so great as it might sometimes be were the hay made in the old-fashioned manner of hay that once abundant in the fields should not exist."Some Things Time Will Do.
Rabbits, where they abound, do much damage to young cabbage, cauliflower, etc. A little lime dusted on the leaves occasionally in the morning while the dew is on the plants saves them from destruction. This is also effective against chickens who are partial to this form of green food. It is a simple and harmless agent for keeping the sprouting period. After that time a little pure green mixed with it makes short work of them, says John Robinson in American Gardening.THE HOTTEST REGION.

The hottest region on earth is the southeastern part of Persia where it borders the Gulf. For forty consecutive days in July and August the temperature has been known not to fall lower than 100 degrees night or day.

DOMINION CONVENTION.MONTREAL, 1899.*BULLETIN No. 2.

The first Dominion Christian Endeavor Convention will be held in Montreal, beginning Thursday evening, Oct. 5th, and closing Monday night, Oct. 9th, 1899. The meetings will be held in the elegant and commodious St. James Methodist church, St. Catherine street.

A strong and enthusiastic local committee is making great preparations for this event and looking for a large number of delegates from all parts of the Dominion—especially Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. The Secretary of Montreal '99 Committee is Mr. Guy Tombs, care of G. T. R., Board of Trade Building, of whom enquiry should be made for any information not found in the news papers.

Single first-class fare for the round trip, from all stations in Canada, is the rate granted to delegates by all the railway companies. For further particulars, write to Mr. C. J. Atkinson, Secretary Canadian Council (C. E.), 26 Lundy Ave., Toronto.

Accommodation in the homes of citizens or in boarding houses, during the convention, can be secured at the uniform rate of fifty cents per night for lodging and twenty five cents each for meals, by applying at once to the chairman of the Hotel Committee, Mr. J. H. Cayford, 267 St. James St., Montreal. Hotel accommodation may be had by those who prefer it, in good, respectable places, at from $1.50 to $3.50 per day.

The programme, which is arranged by the Canadian Council of Christian Endeavor, is very inviting and promises to be full of interest and profit to all who attend and very practical and helpful to C. E. workers. Various topics, under the heads of Christian Citizenship, Missions, Bible Study, Junior Work, &c., will be discussed. Speakers are expected from each province and at least two from the United States, namely, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., of New York City, and Mr. J. Willis Baer, Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, of Boston. Both of these gentlemen are distinguished leaders in the C. E. movement, able and eloquent, and very much beloved by Endeavors. The former will conduct a "Quiet Hour" at the opening session on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Much prominence will be given to Junior Christian Endeavor. On Saturday there will be a Junior Workers' breakfast and a grand Junior rally; at the latter meeting there will be a display of young Canadian patriotism in connection with the children's exercises which are being prepared.

The Quebec and Ontario provincial unions will meet, separately, Saturday forenoon, for the transaction of their annual business.

WHAT HAPPENED.

A young Glasgow lady who was the proud possessor of a pair of dainty feet, was tormented by a corn upon the little toe of the right foot. Chiropractors had dug into it in vain. One day a friend arrived announcing the offending toe with phosphorus, which the lady in a weak moment did, but forgot to tell her husband before retiring at night. He had just struck twelve from the university tower when the husband awoke and was startled to see some thing sparkle at the foot of the bed. He had never heard of a firefly in the region of Kelvin Grove, nor did he ever remember seeing such a terrible looking object as the toe presented. Reaching carefully out of his bed till he found one of his slippers, he raised it high in the air and brought it down with terrible force upon the mysterious light. A shriek and an avalanche of bedclothes, and all was over. When at last he released himself from the bedclothes he discovered his wife groaning in the corner. He had struck the phosphorated toe.

Canada's Great Eastern Exhibition!

A GRAND SUCCESS.

EVERY DEPARTMENT FILLED TO OVERFLOW

Thousands Visit the Fair.

PREMIUMS AWARDED

Fair Grounds, Friday noon.

The weather this forenoon is much milder than on any day of the fair. The attendance to-day, it is expected, will be fully up to Friday of last year. A great many of city people are taking in the show to-day.

The most of the stock will leave the grounds to-night and to-morrow morning. A great many of the exhibitors of live stock go to Quebec and St. John, N. B.

Exhibition Grounds, Sept. 7.

The fourth day of the fair opened bright and clear. It was American visitors' day, and the attendance was large indeed. Several special trains were run into the city, from outlying points and in every case the excursions were well patronized. The management should indeed feel elated over the fact that year after year they not only hold the same crowd from the United States, but each succeeding year the numbers are increasing. This applies also to the other sections of the Province of Quebec.

The aim of the management is to provide for the wants of their patrons in the best possible way, and that they succeed in this it is only necessary to point to the ever increasing numbers.

Some fears were entertained that the cold snap of Tuesday would have the effect of reducing the attendance somewhat, but last night at 6 o'clock when the figures were totaled up it was found that the Association was ahead about five hundred over that of the same date last year. There must have been about sixteen thousand people that paid for admission up until six o'clock. This number of course does not include the attendance at the evening performance, which also showed a marked increase, there being about one thousand and more on the grand stand than at the first evening performance last year.

To-day the attendance was about the same as on Wednesday, there being but little difference. The attendance on the grand stand was within three or four of the previous day. There is perhaps a slight falling off on the grand stand to-night, as the evening performance, but there are more people on the grounds than last evening.

Judging in the unfinished sections was completed this forenoon. One feature, and it is a very pleasing one, is the fact that the decision of the Judges is taken without a grumble. We question if there is another exhibition that is more free from this than our own show. The directors make it a point to engage only the very best men in their several lines and the result is satisfaction. This fact is borne out by intercourse with the exhibitors, and a remark was made to the president this morning by Mr. Baker, of Mississippi, a large exhibitor, that he was perfectly satisfied with the treatment accorded him, and that the whole staff seemed to have but one object in view, and that to treat the exhibitors in the best possible manner. It is very gratifying to the directors to hear such remarks, as it shows that their work is appreciated.

Hon. John McIntosh, the president of the Association, takes interest in all matters affecting its welfare. As president he is not allotted to any particular section, but is to be found here, there, and everywhere, seeing that things are running smoothly. He is well known by all, and is highly respected for his genial and courteous manner. It would be difficult to find a more thorough manager than Mr. H. R. Fraser. He is a postmaster at organization, and every detail is so arranged that when the large crowd starts it runs on with a smoothness that cannot be equalled anywhere. He is ably assisted by an energetic directorate, who look after the various departments assigned them to the satisfaction of all. The office staff, Messrs. W. M. Tomlinson, E. G. Simpson, and F. Enright, and other assistants deserve a special word of thanks for the manner they attended to the many wants of exhibitors and others. The press are indebted to the above gentlemen for the assistance rendered them in getting at the prize list.

Up until to-night no cases of pocket picking were reported at police headquarters. Every precaution was taken by the police department in protecting the interests of the citizens. The absence of any rowdiness or drunkenness must have impressed the strangers, and altogether it was indeed surprising to see such quietness prevail in such large crowds as were present to-day and Wednesday.

Hon. Sydney Fisher, minister of agriculture, attended the fair, to-day, and was entertained the directors at luncheon. He occupied a seat in the grand stand during the afternoon performance.

The same special performance was gone through on the platform in front of the grand stand this afternoon, and which was highly appreciated by the large audience. The double balloon ascension about six o'clock was a splendid one, and was taken part of by Sherbrooke. This young man has now made fine ascensions under the direction of Professor Wolcott, and she appears to have the nerve of an old hand at the business.

The display of fireworks in the evening was a splendid one, and some fine figures were represented notably the grand spectacular representation of the British and Americans at Samoa.

The main building was filled from early morning until late at night by people taking in the various exhibits.

The ladies lunch counter did a large business yesterday and to-day, and when the proceeds are totaled up tonight it is expected that they will be larger than any previous year.

The Concord, N.H., Band was in attendance as was also the 53rd Battalion Band, and Harmonie Band and fine music was rendered.

WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

There was a large crowd at the evening performance Wednesday and the full programme of events was carried out, which included some very good mid-air performances by the Bickett family in which they displayed both nerve and muscle; also the Carl Dahmann troupe, whose tumbling was first rate. The monkeys and the dog with their managers helped to fill the programme. Miss Burbank rode "Dynamo" and Prof. Edwards showed his educated horse Bonner, all of which was very good. Music was furnished by the band of the 53rd Battalion.

The fireworks were a most attractive feature of the evening performance and very attractive indeed, the set pieces being particularly good, the whole concluding with a representation of the bombardment of Samoa by the war vessels of Great Britain and the United States.

The balloon ascension at night was a new and thrilling finale to the entertainment. As the great balloon shot up in the air fire works that were attached underneath were let off and made a pretty sight. The crowd then made for the main entrance to return home.

have as usual an interesting exhibit of Copper ore, matte and various kinds of acids made from the ores, such as sulphuric acid concentrated and nitric. The ores are put through a burning process which produces the acids. The sulphuric acid is used largely in the manufacture of fertilizers which is composed of Tennessee phosphates, dissolved with sulphuric acid to which is added muriatic of potash and sulphate of ammonia. The two latter are in the crystal form and consequently give actual food to the plants. This is a Canadian Company, having several American shareholders, the president being Mr. W. H. Nichols, of New York, where the head office is located. Mr. S. L. Spafford being general manager of the works at Capetown, Que. They have been engaged in the manufacture of complete fertilizers for the past ten years, and their trade is increasing rapidly throughout the Eastern Townships and is extending largely into Ontario. The Company have been the means of distributing a very large amount of money throughout the Townships in wages and supplies, and it is to be hoped that they may have an increasing record of prosperity before them.

GEO. GALE & SONS, WATERVILLE occupy a large space. Their exhibit consists of iron, brass & composite, enamelled white and blue. Some very rich designs are shown and one bedstead in particular calls for much comment. It is sold at $125 and is a very handsome piece of work. The firm is known all over the world as makers of spring beds, and they have a large factory in Birmingham, England, to supply the markets of the continent and the colonies. Samples of their famous woven wire mattresses are also shown. Mr. H. A. Somerville is in charge.

THE MCLAUGHLIN CARRIAGE CO. of Ottawa, Ont., represented by Mr. F. L. Bean, of this city, show a large line of the carriages, sleighs, etc., for which they are noted.

IN THE MACHINERY HALL.

The machinery hall is a resort of much interest to the farmer and the various makes of labouring saving machines shown come in for a good deal of inspection.

The firms represented are McCormick Co., represented by Messrs. Terrill & McNeill, Sherbrooke; Cowan & Wood, Galt, Ont.; W. A. Wood, Hoosick Falls, N. Y.; Moody & Son, Frost & Wood, and J. B. Dore & Co., La Prairie, Quebec; Mr. F. L. Bean has also a large number of farm implements and is agent for the ploughs manufactured by W. F. Vill, Cowansville, and the Deering Reaping Machine.

A. E. STEWART,
Lady Superintendent.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1899.

Mr. Stephen Hobson was entertained by a few of his friends at St. Georges Club Tuesday evening on the occasion of his approaching marriage.

A small blaze in the boiler room at Fletcher's bakery called out the brigade yesterday morning. It was extinguished without any damage.

A very pretty, quiet wedding took place Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mr. Thomas Long, Portland Square, when, in the presence of her nearest relatives Mr. Long's daughter, Miss Lizzie, was united in sacred bonds to Mr. F. W. Bowers, of Lawrence, Mass., by Rev. F. G. Lett. The numerous, costly presents showed the high appreciation in which the bride is held. The happy pair left by the Boston and Maine for Boston.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH.

The pastor, Rev. Frank J. Day has returned from his vacation and will occupy the pulpit both morning and evening next Sunday.

At the evening service in addition to the regular music, Mr. A. A. Ferte of Toronto, will sing "The Dream of Paradise." The Sunday School will reassemble in the Chapel at 12:15.

Odd and laughable complications arising from mistaken identity in "The Real Widow Brown," the reigning farce comedy success, will furnish amusement lovers a merry and thoroughly enjoyable evening, at the Opera House, on Saturday evening, Sept. 9th. This is a novelty in farcical plays, in that it tells a most amusing story and that it really has a plot. The company engaged to interpret the various roles in "The Real Widow Brown" is strong and comprises some of the best known fun makers in the theatrical world, of course there are specialties—good ones, too, embracing the latest in music, songs, dances and medleys.

SHORTHORN BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION FOR THE EASTERN TOWNSHIPS.

A meeting was held in the office at the exhibition grounds yesterday to consider the question of forming a Shorthorn Breeders' Association for the Eastern Townships. It has long been felt by leading farmers in the Eastern Townships that a better and closer society should exist between the breeders of Shorthorn cattle in this section so as to encourage their more general breeding and dissemination among the farmers of the country. This would promote the welfare of the Shorthorn industry, and inculcate sound and correct principles of breeding.

The following gentlemen were present: Senator Cochrane, J. A. Cochrane, Hon. John McIntosh, Mr. Elliott, Danville; Mr. C. C. Cleveland, Danville; Mr. Fuller Capelin; Mr. Burton, Waterville; Mr. Fitzgerald, Lennoxville; Mr. W. P. McClary, Compton; W. Johnston, Compton; Mr. S. F. Learned, Cookshire.

The meeting was a most enthusiastic one, and it was decided to take preliminary steps at once for the formation of an association for the Eastern Townships.

We are decidedly of the opinion that the formation of such an Association would be productive of much good, and will, in a later issue, set forth the aim and object of the Association at more length.

A DOUBLE WEDDING.

Mr. Wesley Brown, secretary-treasurer of the Municipality of Orford, was married on Wednesday evening to Miss Sarah Robinson, recently a teacher in the Central School of this city. At the same hour Mr. Brown's sister, Miss Martha, and Mr. Howard G. Wakefield, clerk of the Town of Hills, Me., were also united in the holy tie. The double ceremony was performed by Rev. F. G. Lett at the home of Mrs. Brown in Orford. After tea and a season of sunny cheer with numerous friends the two couples left for Portland and other southern points by the mid night express.

ONE LESSON ENOUGH.

THE STORY OF AN ENGINEER WHO SLEPT WHILE ON DUTY.

A Thrilling Ride the End of Which Seemed to Threaten a Fearful Wreck and Awful Loss of Life—
Narrow and Lucky Escape.

"There is something about railroading that conduces to sleep. It may be the rumble that causes drowsiness, it may be the long hours on duty, but in many cases, in my judgment, it is the failure of the employees to secure needed rest when they have the opportunity. During my 20 years' experience as a driver of the iron horse I knew of hundreds of conductors who went entirely to some one else's sleep on the post of duty. Even the responsibility imposed on the man
would not have the effect of causing him
to keep awake."

The speaker was one of the oldest railroad engineers in the country, who, after locomotive, voluntarily resigned to seek
other pursuits not so dangerous or exciting. A question or two about the old times put the ex-railroader in a talkative
mood, and he continued:

"But once upon a railroad career did I turn my engine over to my fireman and
go back to the caboose for a little rest,
and the narrow escape that I then had
from a severe wreck and the killing and wounding of hundreds of sleeping passengers taught me a lesson that was never forgotten. The incident occurred in Illinois in February, 1879. At that time I was running an engine pulling a fast
freight on the Illinois Central railroad.
My fireman was a young man named Tom
I had instructed in all that he knew about railroading. My health was not of the best at that time, as I had been an annual victim of theague that pervades southern Illinois, and my system was shattered from the 'shakes.' In addition there was some sickness among the members of my family, with the result that my nights at home would be broken up
in looking after the comfort of the loved ones. Business on the railroad was brisk, and there was a heavy passenger traffic
due to the annual Mardi Gras celebration in New Orleans.

"On the night in question my train was running south. I had a 545 foot Rogers engine and was hauling a load
that I could hardly keep my eyes open.
The road ahead of me was clear of trains for an hour or more. About the only thing of importance in view was to meet and pass the Chicago express at Makenda, which was 24 miles away. I then yielded to temptation. Placing my fireman in charge of the throttle, with the head brakeman to do the firing, I went back to the caboose to search a little rest.
I should have taken this step if I had not reposed every confidence in my fireman, and I believed that he was thoroughly competent to run the engine.

"How long I slept I do not know, but I awoke with the premonition that something was wrong. As I regained my senses I realized by the swaying of the train that it was running much faster than it would have been had I been in charge of the throttle. There was a strange down grade for five miles to the point where I was to meet the express,
and my first thought was that we had struck the grade and gained the impetus.
Springing to my feet, I hurried out
the front door of the caboose and climbed to the top of the freight car. The light that met my eyes nearly paralyzed
me. There in full view I saw the headlight of the heavily loaded express train waiting at Makanda for my train to take the siding and permit it to pass.
How I got over that train to my engine
I hardly know. But I did.

"Jumping down on the tender, I sprang into the cab, shut off the throttle
and took other means to reduce the speed. Along about that time my fireman was sound asleep on the seat. The head brakeman kept him company on the other side. I realized that it was utterly impossible to stop the speed of the train, and I had visions of the wreck that would follow. My engine was making 45 miles an hour, being propelled by the heavily laden cars in the rear, and certain destruction seemed to face the express and the hundreds of sleeping passengers.

"The rules required that I should stop and, after the head brakeman had opened the switch, should pull by the passenger train there seemed to be no way to avert the disaster. All the thoughts that flashed through my brain in a twinkling, and as I expected to meet death at my post I wondered who would care for my two boys who would become orphans.

"Fortunately the siding was a short
one, and that fact, coupled with my resolute and careful engineering, prevented the disaster at the critical moment and saved the lives of many. The engineer of the passenger train divined from the rumble made by my train that something unusual had happened. He told me afterward that he knew I would not have approached that meeting place at such a rate of speed if everything was all right.
"When my train was about 200 yards from the express, I saw a man run from
the engine of the express and toward the switch for me. At the same time I could see by the swinging of a lantern in the rear of the express that the switch at the other end of the siding had also been opened. The disaster had been averted.
My train dashed on to the siding track, past
the express and then out on the main track again at the rate of 35 miles an hour, and I could not bring it to a standstill until it was more than two miles past
the station.

"You can imagine the effect upon the express if the engineer had not acted as he did. It is needless for me to add that during the remainder of my career on the rail I never left my engine again in charge of that fireman or any other fireman. One such lesson was enough for me.

"Naturally my fireman was much chagrined over his act, but I never had confidence in him afterward. He had been tried in the balance and found wanting.
A few years later he was promoted to be an engineer, and had been running his engine but a short time when it exploded,
killing him, his fireman and a brakeman."

"I'm going west for a little vacation
with a few good fellows," he said.
"What book do you wish of the most service
to me in our ramblings about the country?"

"Hoyle," was the ready reply.—Chicago Post.

SLEEPING CAR SECRETS.

A Porter Tells How Some Employees
Make Money.

One would think that the check system of today afforded no chances for dishonesty, but the system used by the Pullman company, which seems almost perfectly infallible, is defrauded by at least $300,000 annually.
I will endeavor to explain how it is done. Say, for instance, that a party of four board for Quebec should board the Pullman sleeper which leaves this city nightly and wanted to pay cash fares. A dishonest conductor and porter would "size them up" and if they thought the party "all right" the conductor would probably issue a passenger's ticket, which would be filled in and punched correctly,
but would fill in and punch the porter's check to read, "One passenger, Springfield to Quebec," thereby pocketing three fares, or $7.50. This is divided equally between conductor and porter. No conductor can be dishonest without being checked by his superior, as the porter is supposed to turn in at his district office
after each trip a check for every passenger that has ridden on his car.

Then, again, a conductor who is a little doubtful will fill in a passenger's ticket
check, "Four passengers, Springfield to Newport, Vt.," as if they were not going through to Quebec, and the passengers
check, "Four passengers, Springfield to Quebec," thereby stealing $4. So much for the sleeping car.

Porters of the buffet cars are almost
"on the make." Soups, sandwiches, poaches, bread and butter, tea, coffee, lemonade
and many other dishes are generally expanded so that two for four and so on. Just from Boston to Mount Desert ferry I have known porters to reimburse their purses
as much as $20 in this way. Their tips would probably not amount to a fifth of this amount.

Of these forms of dishonesty do not go on forever, however, as sooner or later they have stolen from an unknown Pullman "spotter." There is a small army of men and women riding about the country in the interest of this company.
Their duty is not only to detect dishonesty, but incompetency and inattention;
consequently every porter and conductor
has his eye open and is constantly doing his best, regardless of pay, for fear that a "spotter" might be on.

The wages paid porters range from $15
to $40 a month. On a popular sleeping car line, such as the noted Bar Harbor express, a porter receives but $15 a month, but I would not care to be a porter on that line, as the wages are in preference to any $50 position that could be offered me. It is worth double the amount at times. The porters of such sleeping car lines as Springfield to Lewis and Montreal, Boston to Bangor and many other lines, pay $20 a month. The tips on these lines are also good at times.

Buffet car porters generally receive a salary of $25 a month, which in most cases should be enough to live on. These car porters are generally sufficient to pay a considerable man's expenses. The high est wages paid a Pullman porter is $40
a month. These positions are termed "porter" or "charge," as the porter performs
the duties of both conductor and porter.
These positions are seldom given.—A Pullman Porter in Springfield Republic.

A Long Sentence.
The tribunal of Medice, in the Sicilian province of Syracuse, recently pronounced a sentence which is declared to have no parallel in the judicial annals of Italy, as it has probably none in those of any other country.

A man named Lupo Salvatore of Comisio had passed himself off as an advocate and had with consummate skill committed 43 different acts of serious fraud,
which he succeeded in using the machinery of the law. He had forged the signatures of the president and judges of the high court, of the king's procurator and of the chancellor of the court. From this last mentioned official he had even received a splendid appointment, and at the time the seal of the chancery, which he needed to give effect to his fraudulent documents.

The sentence is even more remarkable than the crime. Salvatore was condemned to three years' imprisonment on each of the 43 cases, which brings the total of the sentence to 129 years, though the longest incarceration which the convict can be legally made to undergo is 30 years. The penalty inflicted is in each case the minimum for the offense. Had the court decided upon the maximum,
which is ten years, the aggregate term of imprisonment would have been 630 years.

An Important Postscript.
A French writer, engaged upon a profound scientific work, rang for his valet.
He then sat down and wrote this note:
"Kindly send some one to arrest the cook. She has stolen my purse." This he directed to the chief of police. The valet, I gathered, took the note and mustered to finish writing picked up something lying under the table. As he took the note he said: "Monsieur, here is your purse. I found it under the table."
"Ah, just in time. Give me the note, Jean."

He hurriedly added the postscript: "I have found my purse. It is unnecessary to send any one," and handed the missive to the valet, saying: "Deliver this at once. It is important."

He then went back to his writing.

Strange Inanity.
Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, in her "Memoirs of a Highland Lady," tells of an old Scottishman who once took the strange view that he was a turkey hen.

He made a nest of straw in his carriage and filled it with eggs and a large stone, and there he sat, hatching, leaving his station only twice a day, like other fowl, and having his food brought to him.

His friends had at last to watch a proper opportunity to throw out the eggs and put some young chickens in their place. Then the old man, satisfied that he had accomplished his task, went about clucking and strutting in the midst of his brood.

The Three of Them.
"Now, boys," said the Sunday school teacher, "can any of you name the three great feasts of the Jews?"
"Yes, I can," replied one little fellow.

"Very well, Johnny. What are they?"
"Breakfast, dinner and supper," was
the unconsciously logical reply.—Buffalo News.

A Dear Victory.
"In your little family arguments do
you ever succeed in convincing your wife
that she is wrong?"
"Yes, but afterward I always deeply regret having done so."

The Way of Peace.

WISE WOMEN.

SEPTEMBER

I am a thoughtful matron grave,
Not like the youthful May,
A soft and subtle shadow,
Stealth slowly o'er my brow,
And quiet is my footstep
And my voice is mild and low.

I am a mother fond and sad,
And gaze with tearful eye
Upon my fading children,
For I feel they soon must die;
Yet am I not unlovely child,
Though from my fading crown

The dying roses drop their heads
The yellow leaves fall down;
Come search my sunny orchard grooves,
Rich ripened fruit they yield,
And broad and bright my harvest moon
Shines like a burnished shield.

THE WAY OF PEACE.

The benefits of an International Court of Arbitration may be gathered from the fact that already nearly a hundred disputes between nations have been settled by arbitration, and that there is no instance of two nations who have referred their disputes to arbitration failing to obtain satisfaction or finally appealing to arms. If so much could be done with the aid of public opinion while the war sentiment was so strong, we may reasonably conclude that more might be done
when a court existed which was created by the Powers of the world, and which enjoyed therefore a unique status and influence.

The kingdom of Heaven cometh not with observation. A London editor sent word to the Hague to greatly abridge the reports of the Peace Conference. "No one in London," he said, "cares for anything but the news from the Transvaal
and the latest scores of the cricket match with the Australians." Yet the Peace Congress of the four and twenty nations is the most significant event of the close of the century. "If, twelve months ago,"
says Mr. Stead, "any one had predicted that the representatives of all the governments would be employed for two months in elaborating a court and code
for the universal establishment of a system of arbitration among nations, he would have been derided as the idlest of dreamers. But this strange thing has come to pass before our eyes.

WISE WOMEN.
A shadow darkened the doorway of the hot kitchen, and a woman who was bending over a sink something on the flaming stove looked up.

"Oh, Mrs. Wells, is that you? Why,
come in. You are out early—for a housekeeper. Come right into the sitting room; it's so much cooler there."

"But your work needs attention, perhaps."

"I can wait. I'll just set this kettle back. You don't come very often, so I'll gladly afford a little time to sit down with
you now."

"But I want you to go out with me as well. The sunshine is hot, but there is a breeze, and the air is as clear as crystal.
The view from Benson's hill must be fine."

"You don't mean to say you are going up there—in the forenoon—and your work—but perhaps you have got hired help."

"No; but all the same, I'm bent on an outing. When have you been up on that hill?"

"Sometimes in the spring; I know I found the first dandelions I'd seen; it was one Sunday afternoon. I was tired almost out, but the boys coaxed me so hard; but it's out of the question for me
to go now anyway!"

"Don't say that. I've adopted a new creed, and, like all earnest disciples, I am
out after converts, and I've just counted
on you."

"Dear me! Have you taken up Christian Science?"

"No; I've taken up Common Sense, or a measure of it. Less work and more play, less indoors and more outdoors,
from now on."

"That sounds nice; if only the work
wasn't on had to be done, day after day,
with no let-up. I'm sure I'd like to play-
if I haven't forgotten how—or rest would suit me better for a month or two. But somehow you're different—stronger, or happier, or livelier. What's come over you, Mrs. Wells?"

"Living up to my creed, as I said. Now, what have you absolutely got to do this morning?"

"Bake pies and cake and custard, get dinner, scrub the cellar stairs and swing shelf, mend Lenny's jacket; these windows need washing—"

"Don't mention another thing. What have you got already on hand to get a malickie?"

"Why, there's some cold meat, about half a pie, I guess; oh, I could possibly pick up a dinner."

"Then do. Shut the stove up, put some potatoes in on the lower grate to bake, look the kitchen door, and come on before you find something else to do."

"If John should happen to come to the house, and not find me here, he'd be well nigh frightened to death."

"Possibly. Who is he at work?"

"Hoing corn, I think. We might go past that field and tell him that I'm running away; he'll wonder who's to get the dinner."

Mrs. Barrett fairly flew around her hot kitchen, setting things aside, and closing the stove, which had cooled enough to keep ill room; and sooner than she could have believed possible, was out in the glorious July morning.

"I feel just as children must when they play truant—lawless and reckless, and yet delighted—only I'm afraid something will happen. If the house should get on fire, or company should come, or the children come home from school sick, I should feel lost, or my play."

"Now, my dear little woman! you have dropped your work, do drop your worries—at least, don't manufacture new ones! Did you ever see a more intense sky, or the moon stand out so clear?"

"Yes, everything is beautiful. I do love all outdoor things—only a busy farmer's wife cannot pay much attention to matters outside her kitchen. If I can get an hour in the afternoon or after supper to sit on the stoop with my mending, it's all I expect; only picking currants and string beans and peas is a change."

"Yes; but one always feels in a hurry
while doing that; it doesn't relax the tension of one's nerves like sauntering idly along. Shall we cross that bit of a foot bridge?"

"Yes, that's the nearest way. John and his man must be over the ridge at
work."

"Soon the field came into view where the hills of bright green blades were getting the last bit of work needed to insure their welfare. Mr. Barrett paused in amazement as he saw who was approaching.

"Don't be frightened, John, I'm only running away from my house and my
work."

"I want to know! I'd like to run with you, only this corn you say. May I ask how far you're going to run? It's up hill this way."

"Yes, we've set out for Benson's peak,
to get the view, and—to get rid of work.
We'll be back in two or three hours, and
you shall have some sort of a dinner;
don't you worry."

"Well, I'm surprised after all you say you must do to-day. I told you to go easy, for you'd laid out enough work for three women."

"I know; but you see Mrs. Wells
came along and enticed me out for a play spell."

"Well, I'm glad of it. You do stay in the house too much; only don't forget to come back."

Farther up the hill the breeze was still cooler and sweeter, having swept over many groves of chestnut trees and fields of red and white clover. The outlook was more extended, and down the long winding valley the beautiful river lay smiling
up to the sky and reflecting its azure tint.

"There! isn't that well worth the climb?"

"Yes, yes, indeed! This is wonderful!
I haven't been here in the morning in years. How did you happen to think of coming now

A great many of our people attended the Exhibition at Sherbrooke. On Wednesday morning the train leaving at 6.55
was so densely crowded that standing room was at a premium and when the train pulled out there were full fifty people left standing on the platform, who were obliged to wait for the local train for passage.

We hear with regret of the sudden death of Mr. Thos. Christie, of Hatley.
He passed away on Monday afternoon

day and was largely attended, the local corps of the Grand Army attending in a body. Mr. Christie was a man who was respected by a large circle of friends.

EAST HATLEY.

The Annual Harvest Festival of the Methodist Church will be held (DV) on Tuesday, Sept. 12th at the usual hour and place.

One feature is slightly changed. It is taken for granted by the Ladies' Aid, that all friends who are interested in the welfare of the Church, and the furthering of social neighborly feelings, will consider themselves one of the committee to help provide and prepare the dinner of chicken pie and other good things which is always expected.

Thus is the trouble of soliciting each family separately will be done away with,
and standing upon ones honor to do ones
share, accordingly to ones ability and desire, ought to be a guarantee of increased interest and good will, and thus, success,
at this 15th Harvest Home Good speeches.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Howe and L. E.
Parker and wife attended the funeral of their niece Miss Julia Howe, of Dixville on Wednesday. Miss Howe had many friends in this place who regret her untimely death.

The prospects of farm in Bombay are so ominous that arrangements for the opening of relief are under way.
