He says the list of subscribers thoroughly bears out the sentiment of the Rev. —At a recent marriage in Paris of the Princess Jeanne Bonaparte, daughter of Prince Pierre, to the Marquis Chretien de Villeneuve, one of the bridesmaids who officiated after the English fashion was a daughter of Mr. Victor Duruy, the Emperor Napoleon's Minister of Public Instruction, and the other was Mlle de Ramolino, a grand-niece of Mme Mere, the mother of Napoleon I., whose family type was reproduced in the great Emperor and in all his brothers except Louis, King of Holland, who resembled his father, Charles Bonaparte, as did also his son, Napoleon III., the first Bonaparte physically and morally who sat on the throne of France.

CAPITAL NOTES.

From our Special Correspondent.

Sir Alexander Campbell has given notice in the Senate of a Bill to establish Vice-Admiralty Courts throughout the Dominion. It is stated that Mr. Costigan, having put the Irish sympathy resolution on the order paper as a notice of motion, cannot now move it as an amendment to go into Committee of Supply. Mr. Speaker, it is said, has informed the hon. member that his motion could not be in order. There remains a little hope of the subject being brought before the House this session.

In the Banking and Commerce Committee this morning Dr. Orton's Bill relating to interest on real estate secured by mortgage was further considered. A good deal of discussion took place on the iniquitous practices of loan and building societies, the general feeling being in favor of the Bill. Sir John Macdonald considered the Bill ultra vires. The Federal Parliament had a right to deal with the rate of interest but not with contracts which belonged exclusively to local legislatures. There was a good deal in the Bill of which he approved, but this Parliament had no power to deal with the matter of mortgages. The preamble was then declared lost and the Committee adjourned.

It is concluded that the Government cannot consistently grant aid to railway schemes connecting Toronto with the main Pacific line without also favourably considering the request of the New Brunswick people for aid to extend the New Brunswick Railway to the Intercolonial. It is said, however, that Sir L. Tilley prefers to the latter project at present, as he proposes using a promise of subsidy as an election card in the next campaign.

This morning Sir John Macdonald was met in one of the corridors of the House by an unknown man, who buttonholed him and conversed with him for sometime in a very earnest manner. Sir John escaped from him by taking refuge in an anteroom and closing the door. The crank was urging upon Sir John the necessity of obtaining a clairvoyant furnace for the purpose of making fire electricity. He said the Parliament buildings were covered with a thick sheet of electricity, which proceeded from the United States, and unless we could get some fire electricity to counteract it, it would work a considerable amount of injury to the Dominion. He complained that he had written several letters to the Government advising them to get an electric ball, but had received no reply. He also said that when he spoke to Sir John about the matter he had, instead of giving him any satisfaction, referred him to the Minister of Public Works.

It is publicly stated here that one of Ottawa's representatives in the House of Commons recently accepted $250 from a certain dry-goods firm for securing a contract for supplying the Parliament Building with carpets. Neither of the city members have, as yet, denied the charge, but for the credit of Canada's Parliament it is hoped that both will be able to prove their innocence.

When the House of Commons met today, Sir L. Tilley moved his resolution. He declared that $150,000 should be granted annually for the encouragement of fisheries. Mr. Eyles asked for particulars as to how the money was to be expended, but Sir Leonard and the Premier both insisted that no explanation should be given until the House was about to go into committee on resolution. Hon. Messrs. Blake and Anglin urged that the present was the time for explanations, as members could not be expected to vote for a policy which they knew nothing about. The Government, however, still refused to afford any information, and the resolution passed. The real reason for granting assistance to fishermen, though ministerialists are unwilling to admit it, is because increase taxes on breadstuffs, fuel and clothing bear oppressively upon them without affording the slightest compensating benefits. $150,000 is but a small portion of taxes unjustly wrung from the fishermen of the Dominion every year under present tariff, and it is scarcely reasonable to assume that they will be satisfied with an annual grant of $150,000, or a little over one half the amount wasted in the Port Moody Railway contract. Instead of going to fishermen the Government grant will probably go to the fishermen's creditors who are the only persons who will benefit by the appropriation.

Although Mr. Costigan had several opportunities to move his Irish sympathy resolutions as an amendment to going into Supply, he failed to avail himself of any of them, and to-day, after asking for notice on an understanding with Sir John Macdonald, he asked that a day be fixed for his motion. The Premier agreed that Thursday next should be set apart for the discussion of the resolutions, and Mr. Costigan appeared to be satisfied.

Messrs. Casgrain, Ives and Guillet urged that if Mr. Costigan was to be allowed to bring forward his resolutions on a Government day they should have a like privilege in regard to their measures. The question of the disallowance question this evening was one of the most important that has taken place in this House for some time.

Mr. Cameron, of Huron, in moving his resolution condemning the disallowance of the Streams Bill, made a pointed, practical and really able speech, discussing the disallowance question from a general point of view. He showed that in passing the Streams Bill the Ontario Legislature had acted clearly within its rights, and quoted many instances in which Sir John Macdonald, when appealed to, had refused to disallow or interfere with similar measures passed by the provincial legislatures. Though he complimented the Premier upon his good judgment in dealing with former cases, Mr. Cameron regretted that he had been forced, in order to please an influential supporter to abandon that his former convictions upon the subject. The action of the present Government in disallowing the measures which the Provincial Legislatures were quite competent to pass was certainly contrary to the spirit if not the letter of the constitution, and he warned the Ministry that the Opposition intended to carry this question before the high court of public opinion.

It was expected that Sir John Macdonald would reply to Mr. Cameron in defence of the Government policy, but Mr. McCarthy who was counsel for Mr. McLaren in the famous law suit took the floor and repeated the arguments which he had rehearsed several times in the Courts respecting the rights of Mr. McLaren and the manner in which the Ontario Government had infringed upon his rights.

After recess—the first hour was devoted to the consideration of private bills. As predicted the Bill to incorporate the International Construction Company was strongly opposed. The Hon. Mr. Blake pointed out the extraordinary powers asked for by the company, and amid frantic protests from Mr. Boulbee, requested that the consideration of the bill should be postponed.

Mr. White, of Cardwell, said the bill bore striking resemblance to one attempted to be passed through the Quebec Legislature last year, and it was extremely doubtful if the Government will permit it to be brought up again in the Commons.

Mr. Mills took occasion this evening to expose one of the slanders circulated against the members of the Opposition by the Government press. He read a statement from the Halifax Herald, the organ of the Minister of Railways, to the effect that he (Mr. Mills) had, while Minister of the Interior accepted a fee for preparing the case of Ontario in the boundary dispute. This statement Mr. Mills declared to be a malicious falsehood as he had never been in the employ of the Ontario Government while a Minister of the Crown. Government organs must certainly be hard pressed for something to say against the Opposition, when they resort to such deliberate misrepresentation.

Messrs. Kirkpatrick, McCarthy, and Boulbee denied that they had ever received remuneration for furthering private legislation, as had been charged. They deprecated such conduct, and their language was certainly uncomplimentary towards some other Conservative members, who acknowledge that they have been retained by companies who are now asking for special legislation.

Mr. Guthrie made a strong argument in favor of Provincial rights, pointing out that individual interest must yield to the general good, and the Ontario Act provided ample compensation for Mr. McLaren.

Mr. Haggart endeavored to show that McLaren would have been ruined had the Streams Bill not been disallowed, but his colleague (Mr. McDonnell, of Lunenburg) explained the whole circumstance of the case, proving that the fact was in the public interest and that the action of Mr. McLaren in taking possession of the stream in question and preventing the passage of lumber had inflicted serious injury upon the whole section of the country through which such stream passed. The Hon. Mr. Brecken complained that the late Administration had vetoed the Prince Edward Island Bill in 1874, though the same measure, with slight amendments, was sanctioned by the same Government in the following year.

Mr. Weldon contended that the Streams Bill was strictly within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature, and that Government in disallowing it had established a dangerous precedent from which every Province might suffer in the near future. The maintenance of the Confederation could not be insured if the rights of the Provinces were infringed by the Federal authorities.

After a protest from the Hon. W. McDougall, Mr. Laurier quoted from an Act of the Legislature of Quebec respecting mines (passed in 1880) to show the inconsistency of the Government's argument that the Streams Bill should have been disallowed because it infringed on the rights of property. The Quebec Act was a most gross invasion of private rights, and yet the Dominion Government vetoed the Streams Bill while refusing to consider the influential petitions asking for a disallowance of the Mining Bill.

Mr. Laurier's speech was clear and pointed and must have convinced all fair minded hearers that the Government have one policy for their friends and another for their opponents. He warned representatives of Quebec of the danger of allowing Federal interference with Provincial affairs as the people of Quebec were extremely jealous upon this point. It was the Ontario Legislature that was now affected, but it might be Quebec's turn tomorrow. Mr. Mousseau, who seems to consider it his duty to endeavor to bully Mr. Laurier every time that gentleman addresses the House, here made a speech. He seemed to think that the disallowance of the Streams Bill was fully excused, because Lieut-Governor Letellier justly dismissed the Quebec Ministry in 1878.

The Hon. Mr. Blake administered a severe rebuke to Mr. Mousseau for the tone which that gentleman assumed towards the Legislature of Ontario, which body it was insinuated had entered into a conspiracy to despoil a certain prominent supporter of the Government. The Ontario Government and Legislature, he declared, were quite as independent and respectable, if not more so, than the Dominion Government and Parliament, from a legal and constitutional point of view.

Mr. Blake's speech was one of the ablest ever delivered in a Canadian Parliament.

At 3.30 o'clock the House was still in session.

In Senate to-day the Bill legalizing marriage with deceased wife's sister passed the third reading by a vote of 38 to 11.

Mr. Ives has given notice that he will move to amend the Bill respecting the sale of Railway passenger tickets on the third reading, by striking out the paragraph fixing the proportion of price of the railway ticket, to be paid for the redemption of any unused portion thereof, and inserting a proviso, that holders of partly used tickets shall be entitled to receive from Government or railway proprietors such part of amount paid for such ticket, as the distance for which such ticket has not been used forms of the whole distance covered by such tickets.

GIVEN UP BY DOCTORS.

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters; and only ten days ago his doctor gave him up and said he must die!"

"Well-a-day! That is remarkable! I will go this day and get some for my poor George—I know hops are good."—Salem Post.

THE CORNER'S INQUEST AND THE VERDICT.
 Coroner Jones held an inquest yesterday morning, at No. 3 Police Station, corner of Beaudry and Ontario streets, on the body of Adelard Mallette, who, came to his death on Thursday night under very painful circumstances. It appears that about half past ten on Thursday evening some young men were found by a constable on Montcalm street, in the act of lifting up the deceased from the ground where he had fallen. The deceased was carried to his father's house, No. 47 Wolfe street, where he died almost immediately after his arrival. The police then arrested the whole party.

The first witness examined was Dr. Pelletier, who stated that he had examined the body and found a contusion on the right side of the forehead; also on the right cheek. There was no blood on his clothes, but there was foam on his lips. The wounds were not mortal, but witness could not swear to the actual examination.

Luc Mallette, the father of the deceased, said that his son was brought home about ten o'clock by five young men, of whom he knew one only. His son was quite dead at the time. He knew nothing further about the matter.

George Jobin, one of those who were arrested, said that he saw the deceased being lifted up from the ground. He saw five or six men standing at the foot of the deceased, and he saw one of them strike the deceased with a stick. He saw the deceased being carried to his father's house.

There were eight of them altogether, and they spent the afternoon walking about until 11 o'clock. Between ten and eleven they were walking down Mignonne street, when the deceased started off on a run down Montcalm street, saying that he was going home. On turning the corner of Mignonne toward Montcalm a man met them, who told them that he saw a young man run against a tree and fall to the ground. They hurried to the spot and found him lying about fifty yards from the corner. Five of them carried him home. At that time he was still breathing, but shortly after they reached his father's house he died. They had all been on the best of terms during the afternoon. They had purchased and drank during the afternoon about eight bottles of whiskey, and all were slightly intoxicated.

Joseph Lefrançois, a clerk in the employ of Francois Martineau, of St. Catherine street, stated that as he was going home at ten o'clock Thursday night he saw five or six men standing at the corner of Mignonne street. They were quarrelling about a dead language, and used a great deal of bad language. As he was passing the deceased stepped from the crowd and started off at a run. He ran round the corner of Mignonne street, and after going about fifty yards fell upon his back near a tree. It seemed as if he was dead. He ran up to him, and in company with Mr. Kaceto, a neighbor, they went up to the prostrate man and found that he was insensible. Closer examination showed that he had a severe wound on the forehead. The companions of the injured man then came up and one of them told Mallette to get up. Getting no response to this they got a light and found that Mallette was to all appearances dying. They then lifted him up and carried him to his father's house, where he died immediately after-ward. A constable arrived as they were leaving the spot and accompanied the body home. Witness had no blows struck among the crowd at the corner.

Oliver Brunet, another of the prisoners, testified to meeting the deceased near the Bonsecours market at three o'clock Thursday afternoon. There were five of them together in Mignonne street about nine o'clock. They had purchased eight bottles of liquor at different groceries. The deceased said he was going home and asked for a good drink before he went; he then took the bottle to his lips and took a long drink and started off at a rapid pace. The rest of the witness' evidence was corroborative of that of Jobin.

This closed the evidence, and the jury, after a short deliberation, returned a verdict "that the said Adelard Mallette came to his death from the excessive use of intoxicating liquor."

A SAD DEATH.
 THE CORNER'S INQUEST AND THE VERDICT.

Coroner Jones held an inquest yesterday morning, at No. 3 Police Station, corner of Beaudry and Ontario streets, on the body of Adelard Mallette, who, came to his death on Thursday night under very painful circumstances. It appears that about half past ten on Thursday evening some young men were found by a constable on Montcalm street, in the act of lifting up the deceased from the ground where he had fallen. The deceased was carried to his father's house, No. 47 Wolfe street, where he died almost immediately after his arrival. The police then arrested the whole party.

The first witness examined was Dr. Pelletier, who stated that he had examined the body and found a contusion on the right side of the forehead; also on the right cheek. There was no blood on his clothes, but there was foam on his lips. The wounds were not mortal, but witness could not swear to the actual examination.

Luc Mallette, the father of the deceased, said that his son was brought home about ten o'clock by five young men, of whom he knew one only. His son was quite dead at the time. He knew nothing further about the matter.

George Jobin, one of those who were arrested, said that he saw the deceased being lifted up from the ground. He saw five or six men standing at the foot of the deceased, and he saw one of them strike the deceased with a stick. He saw the deceased being carried to his father's house.

There were eight of them altogether, and they spent the afternoon walking about until 11 o'clock. Between ten and eleven they were walking down Mignonne street, when the deceased started off on a run down Montcalm street, saying that he was going home. On turning the corner of Mignonne toward Montcalm a man met them, who told them that he saw a young man run against a tree and fall to the ground. They hurried to the spot and found him lying about fifty yards from the corner. Five of them carried him home. At that time he was still breathing, but shortly after they reached his father's house he died. They had all been on the best of terms during the afternoon. They had purchased and drank during the afternoon about eight bottles of whiskey, and all were slightly intoxicated.

Joseph Lefrançois, a clerk in the employ of Francois Martineau, of St. Catherine street, stated that as he was going home at ten o'clock Thursday night he saw five or six men standing at the corner of Mignonne street. They were quarrelling about a dead language, and used a great deal of bad language. As he was passing the deceased stepped from the crowd and started off at a run. He ran round the corner of Mignonne street, and after going about fifty yards fell upon his back near a tree. It seemed as if he was dead. He ran up to him, and in company with Mr. Kaceto, a neighbor, they went up to the prostrate man and found that he was insensible. Closer examination showed that he had a severe wound on the forehead. The companions of the injured man then came up and one of them told Mallette to get up. Getting no response to this they got a light and found that Mallette was to all appearances dying. They then lifted him up and carried him to his father's house, where he died immediately after-ward. A constable arrived as they were leaving the spot and accompanied the body home. Witness had no blows struck among the crowd at the corner.

Oliver Brunet, another of the prisoners, testified to meeting the deceased near the Bonsecours market at three o'clock Thursday afternoon. There were five of them together in Mignonne street about nine o'clock. They had purchased eight bottles of liquor at different groceries. The deceased said he was going home and asked for a good drink before he went; he then took the bottle to his lips and took a long drink and started off at a rapid pace. The rest of the witness' evidence was corroborative of that of Jobin.

This closed the evidence, and the jury, after a short deliberation, returned a verdict "that the said Adelard Mallette came to his death from the excessive use of intoxicating liquor."
