Searching premiers say economy in trouble

VICTORIA (CP) — The provincial premiers agreed the economy is in trouble but lacked consensus on solutions as the first day of a three-day annual conference concluded.

Premier Bill Bennett of British Columbia, host of the conference, admitted Wednesday's meeting of the 10 premiers did not accomplish as much as he had hoped.

But he said a communique would be released today outlining the common ground of the heads of the provincial governments.

"There is strong agreement on the task that lies ahead but no solutions have been finalized," Bennett said. He said the premiers agreed that inflation, the value of the dollar and what these are doing to the people of the country are major problems.

Despite concentrated efforts to promote unity among the diverse governments, including an amiable three-hour working lunch, the talks went slower than expected as differences of opinion on energy pricing, Canadianization of the oil industry and foreign investment cropped up.

And overshadowing the talks was the recognition that it is in many cases the federal government which has responsibility for economic policy-making.

TALKS PREPARATORY

Bennett and some government officials termed the premiers' session a preparatory one to a proposed conference on the economy that would include the federal government, perhaps in November.

"This conference doesn't have the power to act unilaterally," Bennett said. "We want to sit down at a first ministers' conference on the economy."

But the B.C. premier remained confident. "What has impressed me is the concern for the national interest, and that's not the federal interest, which effects us all."

On Wednesday and in recent comments the provincial premiers have repeatedly said the federal government has failed to provide leadership on the economy and said it is up to the provinces to fill that role.

Most of the premiers have said they do not expect specific proposals at the conference

Sometimes crime doesn't pay in Birchton

A Birchton man has been charged by police with causing a break-in at his own home and fraudulently claiming over $53,000 from his insurance company. Over $8,000 damage was done inside the house, but police got suspicious because he hadn't taken his camera on his Florida vacation.

Normal air schedule for today

Overnight flights to Europe went off close to schedule from New York after Canadian air controllers returned to work and officials on both sides of the Atlantic predicted a "normal schedule" today.

Meanwhile, members of the International Federation of Air Traffic Controllers Associations were meeting in Amsterdam to discuss whether action should be taken to support striking controllers in the United States.

There were some delays Wednesday on flights from Europe to the United States and hundreds of would-be travellers spent the night sleeping where they could at London's Heathrow Airport, but the problems were expected to clear up quickly.

"By tomorrow morning, assuming the lanes stay open, we should be down to a normal schedule" across the North Atlantic, U.S. Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said Wednesday. He said delays of only a half-hour are foreseen today.

The flight zone "has opened up again and it is our feeling that we will be getting things back to normal," said Gerald Fitzgerald, operations manager at Kennedy International Airport, busiest handler of international flights in the U.S. On a normal day, 120 jets depart over the North Atlantic from the airport.

Transatlantic travel was thrown into havoc Monday and thousands of passengers were stranded when Canadian controllers refused to handle flights to or from the United States, claiming that a strike by American controllers had made the U.S. air traffic system unsafe. Many flights were cancelled and there were lengthy delays on others.

END BOYCOTT

The Canadian controllers agreed on Wednesday to end the boycott, in return for an inquiry into the safety question. U.S. authorities deny that the system is unsafe.

Lewis said domestic air service remained at about three-fourths of normal as the strike by members of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization over wages and working conditions entered its 11th day today.

Although Lewis said the lengthy delays for international fliers had abated, he also said there was the possibility of some disruption of transatlantic flights this weekend if Portuguese controllers carry out a planned boycott of flights to and from the U.S. that go over the Azores.

Spanish controllers voted to refuse clearance to U.S.-bound flights, but their boycott is not in effect yet.

Unilingual man freed in bail case

MONTREAL (CP) — A man charged with violating bail conditions by carrying a knife was acquitted Wednesday because he does not understand French.

Defence lawyer Lise Cote said Ajariah Lindon Robertson, 20, was read half his bail conditions in English and the other half in French at a court appearance earlier this month.

Robertson did not know that the conditions forbade him from carrying a weapon while he is awaiting trial on another weapons possession charge.

Cote said accused who do not speak French often run into similar problems in arraignment court because cases are dealt with rapidly.

She added that all court forms are in French and, if an accused is English-speaking, proceedings are often conducted mainly in French.

No time to waste in peace fight, Trudeau tells Tanzanians

DAR ES SALAAM (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau says there is no time to waste in the fight for peace and for the world's poor.

He said at a state dinner Wednesday night that he was in this East African country to discuss with President Julius Nyerere the dialogue between the world's rich and poor countries aimed at changing international economic relations to allow "greater justice and stability."

Earlier Wednesday, the prime minister rode in an open Rolls-Royce through thousands of clapping Tanzanians lining the roads into Dar Es Salaam where he plegded to press the fight for peace and for the world's poor.

Trudeau told his dinner audience there is no time to lose in the effort for peace and improving the world's poor.

"In travelling the road to a new world, we must all run. Time is so short."

Trudeau also reaffirmed Canada's support for the push by black Africans for independence in Namibia, also known as South-West Africa, and an end to apartheid, or racial segregation policies, in South Africa.

Nyerere praised Canadian aid for agricultural development and for rebuilding Tanzanian railways. He also hailed Trudeau's efforts in pressing for the global negotiations to "reform the present unjust international economic order."

"This is a matter of life and death for countries like Tanzania," he said.

Since 1961, Tanzania, like many developing countries, is caught between rising costs of imported oil and falling prices for its agricultural commodities. Debts are mounting and payments are falling behind.

PAY FOR ENERGY

Tanzania will pay almost half its earnings this year for imported energy, Nyerere told The Canadian Press in an interview at the State House where Trudeau stayed.

He said he hopes 22 leaders of the world's rich and poor countries can make some "collective decisions" to take action rather than just talk when they meet in Cancun, Mexico, in October.

"It's not a question of understanding," Nyerere said. "By this time, I think the problems are well understood."

Canadian aid to Tanzania totals $29.2 million this year. The bulk of it goes toward modernization of the African country's railway, the heartline of Tanzania's economy because it is the only way to move coffee and cotton crops to port.

After a noisy airport welcome, complete with cannon fire and native dancers, the two leaders and three boys drove in the open limousine along a 13-kilometre road lined by thousands of Tanzanians. Many waved small Canadian flags.

French nationals arrive home from Tehran

PARIS (AP) — Fifty French nationals, led by the French ambassador to Iran, arrived home from Tehran on Wednesday after six days of strain over France's refusal to extradite former Iranian president Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

The group, the second planeload of French evacuees from Iran this week, emerged from the Iran Air jetliner looking relaxed.

"The delay in our departure gave us extra time to get our affairs in order," said a 35-year-old French university teacher who did not want his name used.

Tehran Radio said 74 French, including Ambassador Guy Georgy, had left Tehran on the noon flight but sources at the French foreign ministry here said some nationals had voluntarily stayed behind and others were held up because of visa problems or other difficulties.

The Iranian authorities prevented the French from leaving last Thursday, citing the need to investigate whether any of them had outstanding debts. On Monday, a group of 57 was allowed to fly out.

BUSINESSMAN HELD BACK

Foreign ministry sources said one businessman was kept in Tehran on Wednesday for further financial investigations. Nine Franco-Iranian families, in which one spouse is Iranian, apparently had not yet received exit visas, and six people who signed up to leave were reported to have decided to stay, the sources said.

In addition, four French, including embassy First Secretary Jean-Pierre Ginhut, remained behind to handle the downgraded French-Iranian relations.

French President Francois Mitterrand ordered most of the embassy staff to return home last week and advised the rest of the 144-member French community to do the same after Iran demanded the extradition of Bani-Sadr. France, which has granted Bani-Sadr political asylum, refused.

As with Monday's flight, French officials held a low-key welcome. On Monday, returnees were greeted by a presidential representative and other officials, then driven by bus to family reunions.

The officials maintained strict silence throughout the week, apparently not wanting to aggravate the situation

Fox inspiration, Greg Scott dies of cancer at 11

WELLAND, Ont. (CP) — Greg Scott, the one-legged cancer victim from Welland who inspired Terry Fox, is dead.

The 11-year-old died peacefully at his parents's home early Tuesday morning — unafraid, his father Rod says, and confident "he'd be seeing Terry again."

Greg Scott, whose courageous, reserved struggle was a mirror of Fox's, spent the last six weeks at home with his mother, Sharon, and his father.

"There was no more chemotherapy, no more needles, no more pain," his father said. "We were able to have some peaceful time together, just the three of us. Greg had all his senses about him, and we're grateful for that."

Scott says Greg, who fought a year-long battle against the same kind of bone cancer that took Fox's right leg and his own left leg, knew he was dying.

"He asked us about it. He kept saying he was afraid; he talked about dying. God, how does a parent handle that? It was so hard, but I finally came to grips with it because I didn't want him lying there and being frightened.

"I told him if he got well, we'd be there with him, and if he didn't, he'd be going to heaven and he'd see Terry and his grandfather again . . . He was never afraid again."

Scott said when Fox died June 28 Greg cried and was upset. "But after, he got over it, and he said of Fox, 'At least he'll be whole again, he'll be able to run again in heaven."

MET FOX LAST SUMMER

Greg met Fox last summer when he was running through southern Ontario on his cross-country run to raise money for cancer research. The next day Greg, hairless from the chemotherapy that had just begun, tried to run for the first time.

Fox was captivated by the pale little boy, and a second meeting was arranged near Terrace Bay, about 170 kilometres east of Thunder Bay.

The Scott family flew north, and for several days Greg and Terry enjoyed the sunshine and beauty of summer in Northern Ontario.

On Aug. 27, Fox wrote in his diary: "Greg rode his bike behind me for about six miles and it has to be the most inspirational moment I have had . . . At night we had a beautiful reception in Terrace Bay. I spoke about Greg and couldn't hold back the emotion."

Fox knew then, though Greg didn't, that spots had already appeared in Greg's lungs — the sign that cancer had spread. Neither knew that just a week later Fox's run would end when doctors found the same spots on his lungs.

They fought their disease separately — Fox in hospitals and at home in British Columbia, Greg in Welland.

Fox died in June and all of Canada mourned his passing.

Scott will be buried Thursday in Welland.

Two found responsible for St. Hyacinthe fire

ST. HYACINTHE, Que. (CP) — Two young men were found criminally responsible Wednesday for setting a fire Aug. 1 that caused $5 million in damages to the business section of this city about 50 kilometres east of Montreal.

Crown prosecutor Constant Cordeau said arson charges will be brought against Marco Berard, 20, and Yvon Favreau, 21.

Witnesses told an inquiry chaired by fire commissioner Cyrille Delage the fire was started after police were called because of the noise from a party the two were having with friends in a downtown apartment.

One witness said "We went to see the owner with the policeman and he told us that we were (to get) out."

Berard replied, "We won't move out alone — we'll set fire to the building," the witness said.

Favreau, in his statement to police which was introduced as evidence, admitted getting some old sacks to light the fire.

"Everybody thought it was funny. It looked like fireworks," the statement said.

Favreau repeatedly told the inquiry: "I don't remember anything, I was drunk."

Police probe crash of overcrowded van

MONTREAL (CP) — A light van packed with 24 young people from Montreal went out of control on a secondary highway Wednesday and overturned several times in a ditch.

Provincial police reported that all 24 were taken to hospitals in Sorel and Greenfield Park in 10 ambulances. Only two remained in hospital Wednesday night "in satisfactory condition." They were expected to be released today.

The young people, all of Haitian descent and aged between 10 and 18, were on their way to sell chocolate bars in Sorel, a city about 40 kilometres east of here on the south shore of the St. Lawrence River.

Police said they are investigating possible Highway Code infractions because of the number of passengers in the Econoline van, as well as possible exploitation of cheap labor.

"The children told us they were en route to Sorel to sell chocolate bars door-to-door in aid of a black community centre in Montreal," a provincial police officer said.

The bars sold for $2 and they were to earn 45 cents for each bar.

The address given police for the community centre tured out to be a vacant lot.

Police said the van had just passed another vehicle when it met another coming head-on.

Woman gets Armed Forces ride for treatment

OTTAWA (CP) — Linda Pasula of Edmonton can fly to Germany aboard a defence department aircraft for treatment of a rare, painful skin disease if her doctor gives medical approval, says Defence Minister Gilles Lamontagne.

Lamontagne said in an interview Wednesday he has changed an earlier decision against the mercy flight after preparing new guides on use of defence department planes.

The minister was strongly criticized for turning down Pasula, 23, while allowing another victim of the same incurable disease, epidermolysis bullosa, to use military aircraft to fly to West Germany for treatment.

Tony Degabriele, 32, of Toronto took a defence department flight to Germany last weekend.

Pasula, who has had the disease since birth, was originally turned down on grounds the mercy flight would set a precedent. But the Degabriele trip had already been approved by Lamontagne in a chat with Toronto Conservative MP Otto Jelinek (Halton).

The minister said he was concerned there might be a flood of requests for similar privileges by others and that people might think the department is endorsing a new skin treatment by Romanian biochemist Pavel Kozak. Kozak operates a clinic near Frankfurt.

KILGOUR PROTESTS

Conservative MP David Kilgour, who represents Edmonton-Strathcona, publicly protested Lamontagne's ruling.

After Kilgour's protests, Lamontagne said he decided to set up guides on use of military planes for such mercy flights.

Now such cases are referred to the surgeon-general who discusses them with the doctors of those asking for military flights. If the flight seems essential and there is no other way for the patient to get there, the minister will approve it, Lamontagne said.

He sent Kilgour a letter last week saying seats would be reserved for Pasula and possibly her doctor if the Edmonton physician decides the Kozak treatment would be useful.

Kozak, who is not a medical doctor, says he has successfully treated the skin disease with a combination of diet, herbal teas and medicine.

A defence department official said such problems are referred to the minister for decision. These were individual humanitarian cases which did not involve defence department personnel.

Postal contract cost $150 million

OTTAWA (CP) — The six-week postal strike was unnecessary, opposition critics said Wednesday, as government officials put a $150-million price tag on the contract that ended the dispute.

John Fraser, Progressive Conservative MP and former postmaster-general, and Sid Parker, New Democratic Party MP and labor critic, both said the government's tough-guy strategy collapsed in the end and made the strike unnecessary.

After taking a hard line against 23,000-member Canadian Union of Postal Workers, the government wound up agreeing to virtually everything the union demanded during mediation, they said.

Meantime, treasury board figures said the cost of the deal is more than $51.3 million in increased wages and benefits in 1981. In 1982, the cost will be another $51.3 million plus almost $47.5 million or $98.8 million altogether.

"What is unforgivable is that if they really believed their rhetoric of some weeks ago to hang tough, it was morally reprehensible that they hung tough for all those weeks on the backs of the people who couldn't afford it and then gave way," Fraser said.

Parker said treasury board officials acted irresponsibly by taking a hard line. He said the same settlement could have been reached with negotiations before the strike began.

Sinclair Stevens, Progressive Conservative treasury board critic, said the 42-day disruption of business across the country was a result of "a gutless, leaderless approach" by the government.

Feds demand report on Leger death

OTTAWA — The federal government is demanding a full report from the Guatemalan governmment on the killing of Canadian missionary Raoul Leger, an external affairs official said Wednesday.

He said the government feels Guatemala should have informed Canada more quickly than it did about Leger's death July 25 near Guatemala City.

Leger, a missionary for the Montreal-based Foreign Missionary Society, was shot and killed by government soldiers in what Guatemalan officials described as a raid on a terrorist hideout. His friends and family deny he was a leftist.

Ottawa has repeatedly asked Guatemala to produce a detailed report on the incident, the external spokesman said in Ottawa.

Bruno Picard, vice-consul at the Canadian Embassy in Guatemala City, was quoted Wednesday as saying Canada cannot get involved in the case because it is a police matter.

Grass burned before Indian band returns

CALGARY (CP) — About 30 armed forces explosives experts were to begin using flamethrowers and heavy equipment today to prepare land for its return to the Sarcee Indian band in southern Alberta.

Working in five-man teams, the soldiers from Chilliwack, B.C., are burning off grass and thick underbrush to allow Canadian Armed Forces troops to scour the land for hidden explosives before it is returned to the Indians in October.

National Defence spokesman Maj. Vic Keating said the teams will work around the clock to clear the entire 2,000 hectares (4,500 acres) of land, which has been leased to the military for the last 20 years. The Indians have refused to renew the 20-year lease when it expires in September.

The area has been used for training soldiers to use small arms, anti-tank weapons, mortars, grenades and air weapons.

News in brief

Seafarers Union reaches agreement

MONTREAL (CP) — A tentative three-year contract agreement was reached Wednesday between the 2,500-member Seafarers International Union of Canada and the Canadian Lake Carriers Association.

The agreement, reached with the help of a federal conciliator, appeared to have averted a strike threatened for as early as Labor Day on shipping on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River.

SIU members will be asked to vote on the pact within the next four weeks, said union president Roman Gralewicz.

MUC police report tabled

MONTREAL (CP) — A stinging report questioning Montreal police competency was tabled Monday by the political body which oversees the force's operations.

Montreal's security council — comprised of three suburban mayors, three officials from the City of Montreal and a provincial government representative — held policemen and their superiors partly responsible for this city's 31 per cent rise in crime over the last two years.

It also blamed governments, judges, the National Parole Board, the movie industry, television, financial institutions and citizens in general for contributing to higher crime in the city.

Oil execs hate "Dallas"

OTTAWA (CP) — The television series Dallas may be boosting network ratings, but it's further tarnishing the image of the oil industry, an oil company executive said Wednesday.

"We've got a major problem as an industry — credibility is lacking," said Bud McDonald, president of the oil industry lobby group, The Petroleum Resources Communication Foundation.

Asked at a meeting with reporters if the popular TV series was hurting the industry's credibility, McDonald replied: "I guess it is."

But he said the image portrayed by the series applies more to the United States than Canada.

McDonald said the oil industry is an industry like any other, but hasn't done a very good job over the years in getting its message across to the public.

Principal stages hunger strike

OTTAWA (CP) — A former principal of a French language school here is on a hunger strike in front of the French Embassy because he says he was fired for trying to introduce Canadian studies into the curriculum.

Jean-Marc Prost-Tournier, who has not eaten since noon Tuesday, wants the French government to show him an inspector's report that Prost-Tournier says is favorable.

He also wants a chance to appear before a "commission of honest and competent men."

But Jean Pradeau, the embassy's cultural services director, said Prost-Tournier was not fired, but had been recalled by the French external affairs department.

Bell split would cause problems

OTTAWA (CP) — A government move to divide Bell Canada from its subsidiary Northern Telecom would cause the Canadian telecommunications market to be "overrun by foreign competitors," Northern says.

The vertically-integrated firms have been fighting a four-year battle to preserve their relationship.

The director of investigation and research under the federal Combines Investigation Act has argued that Bell should be forced to sell its majority share in Northern.

Northern, in a brief to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission released Wednesday, says that "no other county has deprived its major telephone utility of the right to work with a chosen supplier."

"Foreign competitors are ready, able and anxious to move into and dominate Canadian markets."

Government calls for two-way TV bids

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government has called for applications from organizations wanting to start Telidon two-way television service with government help.

In a statement Wednesday, Communications Minister Francis Fox said the government will make 6,000 terminals available to private companies, crown corporations, non-profit groups and educational institutions.

To qualify for the free terminals, applicants must agree to provide at least an equal number of terminals and demonstrate the advantages of their proposals.

Telidon, developed by the communications department, allows consumers to use their TV sets as computer terminals.

Work ban lifted

OTTAWA (CP) — The permanent work ban against foreigners who violate employment visa rules in Canada has been lifted by the federal immigration department.

Effective Monday, persons who violate the rules will be barred from working in Canada for one year only.

At the present time, persons who violate the terms of their visas by working are ordered out of the country and are permanently barred from working here in the future.

The new rule will allow these persons who are successful in getting permission to return to Canada to work after one year.

Fox to meet provinces

OTTAWA (CP) — Communications Minister Francis Fox meets his provincial counterparts in Winnipeg Sept. 9 and 10 for the first federal-provincial meeting of its kind in nearly two years.

The conference still has no agenda, but the provinces are ready for battle as they seek jurisdiction in areas such as pay television, cable TV, satellite signals and even long-distance telephone calls.

Joe Thornley, a spokesman for Fox, said Wednesday that the minister and Manitoba's Donald Orchard, provincial co-chairman of the conference, would probably have an agenda of some 12 items ready within 10 days.

Volunteer group gets contract

OTTAWA (CP) — A group of volunteers who help police responding to family crisis calls in Restigouche, N.B., has been awarded a $70,000 research contract from the federal government.

The solicitor-general's department said Wednesday the contract will allow organizers of the Restigouche Family Crisis Interveners Program to hire a researcher who will evaluate the program's effect.

The crisis centre was established last year with a $97,000 contribution from the department to be spent over two years.

Import car sales climb

TORONTO (CP) — Sales of imported cars are accelerating, but quota restrictions threaten to force them off the road.

The imports grabbed 31.7 per cent of the Canadian car market in July, brushing off high interest rates to register a 35.5-per-cent increase in sales over the corresponding month last year, figures compiled by the Automobile Importers Group show.

Canadian industry can't compete

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — Canadian industries cannot compete around the world as long as governments refuse to set goals, says the president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Stanley Roberts told an Agricultural Institute of Canada conference that agriculture is typical of industries that don't know what to do because Canadian governments refuse to follow consistent marketing strategies.

He said U.S. President Ronald Reagan shows more leadership than most Canadian politicians, who refuse to offer any strategy to bolster a weak economy.

Fraser Valley farmers hurt

VANCOUVER (CP) — Fraser Valley vegetable and berry growers who failed to take out crop insurance will suffer financial losses in the coming months, says the administrative officer of the provincial crop insurance program.

"As I see it, a lot of them gambled and they lost," Reg Ralph said from his Kelowna office.

"We had normal growing conditions for 10 years and the growers were feeling pretty cocky about everthing. There were also a lot of new growers since the last bad spell of weather."

Police strike begins

SACKVILLE, N.B. (CP) — Police walked off the job at midnight Wednesday night after a hitch developed in plans to sign a contract between the town council and its 10-man force.

The police, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said they would set up picket lines in front of civic buildings and facilities to keep outside workers from their jobs unless the dispute was settled. The outside workers are in the same local.

Grain production up 22%

WINNIPEG (CP) — United Grain Growers is sticking to a forecast made in June that prairie farmers will produce 41.8 million tonnes of grain this year, 22.6 per cent more than in 1980.

Production of all major crops except rapeseed will be up over 1980 levels, the farmer-owned co-operative said in its second report of the year.

The co-operative reports favorable growing conditions this summer in all prairie regions, although crops in some areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta suffered heat damage.

Asbestos mine announces lay-offs

BAIE VERTE, Nfld. (CP) — Advocate Mining Co. plans to lay off 150 employees at its asbestos mining operation because of short term cash flow difficulties, says labor relations director Ken Bradbury.

Bradbury said the workers are expected to be off for three months, but he could not give an exact date when they would be let go.

He said the decision was forced on Advocate by increased loan payments and rising operating costs and was agreed to by union officials.

Advocate Mines employs 650 people at its Baie Verte operation.

Palimony award overturned

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An appeals court reversed a $104,000 award given Michelle Triola Marvin in her palimony suit against actor Lee Marvin, but her lawyer said today the fight isn't over.

The state Court of Appeal ruled 2 to 1 Tuesday that the "rehabilitative" award was not proper under California law, although the court did not overrule the principle under which Ms. Marvin sued the actor in 1972 for $1.8 million, or half the assets he earned during the six years they lived together out of wedlock.

Energy talks hit new snag

CALGARY (CP) — The Herald says new problems have arisen in energy-pricing talks between Alberta Energy Minister Merv Leitch and his federal counterpart, Marc Lalonde, on the subject of royalties.

The newspaper says government sources indicated chances of an over-all pricing agreement appear more remote now than before last week's meeting between the two ministers in Montreal.

At a meeting in Banff last June, Alberta offered to freeze its royalties. The idea seemed to be acceptable to Ottawa, which has considered provincial royalties as being excessive.

Boy wins case against father

NEW YORK (AP) — A 16-year-old boy who lost his left arm in a car accident has won a $2-million lawsuit against the drivers of the two automobiles involved, one of them from Rutherford, N.J., was awarded the damages Tuesday after a jury found that the boy's father contributed to the accident by taking his eyes off the road to glance at a road map.

Heiress freed for child's sake

PARIS (AP) — West German automobile heiress Christina von Opel, serving a reduced prison sentence for drug smuggling, was one of 21 imprisoned mothers freed Wednesday by French President Francois Mitterrand.

A communique from the presidential Elysee palace said Mitterrand was concerned about social and psychological problems that might be suffered by children of imprisoned mothers. Most of the women had served two-thirds of their terms, the communique stated.

Publicity stunt ends in jail

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A stunt man publicizing a furniture store used homemade brackets early Wednesday to scale Knoxpille's tallest building — the 27-storey, glass-covered United American Bank tower — before being taken to jail.

More than 100 spectators, police and firefighters watched as Ron Broyles, 27, spent two hours inching up the front of the building while traffic was blocked on the busy street below.

Bronfman extortionist paroled

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Mel Patrick Lynch, convicted nearly five years ago for his role in a $2.3-million kidnap-extortion scheme against Seagram chairman Edgar Bronfman of Montreal, has been paroled from New York state's Clinton correctional facility in Dannemora.

Bronfman's son, Samuel, then 23, was abducted on Aug. 8, 1975, from his mother's Westchester County estate in Purchase, N.Y. The young man was found unharmed nine days later.

Lynch was charged along with Dominic Byrne with kidnapping and extortion. The kidnap charges were dropped but Lynch and Byrne were convicted on extortion charges.

One ate cake and mushrooms

LONDON (AP) — John Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono, says that for three months after the former Beatle's death last December, she stayed in bed and ate only chocolate cake and mushrooms. In an interview by The Daily Mirror, Lennon's widow said she has no hatred for Lennon's confessed murderer, Mark Chapman, who awaits sentencing for the killing in New York last Dec. 8.

Soviet scientist defects to France

PARIS (AP) — Vladimir Sankowich, Soviet chief of a scientific project on the French-controlled Kerguelen Islands in the Indian Ocean, has requested asylum in France, the French foreign ministry announced Wednesday. Sankowich, who had been part of a nine-member Soviet team sent to conduct weather experiments, is the second Soviet official to seek asylum in France since the beginning of July.

Pirates killed 400

GENEVA, Switzerland (Reuter) — Pirates killed more than 400 Indochinese refugees on the South China Sea facing Thailand during the first half of this year, refugee reports cited Wednesday by the United Nations show. Most of the deaths occurred from drowning after pirates rammed the boats of Vietnamese refugees fleeing illegally towards Thailand.

Motorcycle sniper shoots at group

BELFAST (AP) — A motorcycle gunman, said by police sources to be a Protestant extremist, opened fire on a group of Roman Catholics in the Northern Ireland capital Wednesday.

No one was hit in the gunfire on the edge of the Roman Catholic Falls Road district. The sources blamed the incident on the Ulster Freedom Fighters, a Protestant extremist group.

Witnesses said the gunman, armed with an automatic pistol, was a passenger on a motorcycle that stopped beside six Roman Catholics waiting for a taxi and started shooting..

Nerve gas airlift begins

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah (AP) — Two U.S. Air Force C-141 Starlifters shuttled 128 Weteye nerve gas bombs over the Rocky Mountains on Wednesday in the first phase of the transfer of 888 lethal bombs from a Denver arsenal to the western Utah desert.

Described by a Rocky Mountain Arsenal spokesman as "the largest airlift of chemical weapons in the history of the army," the controversial transfer is scheduled to be completed in three weeks.

The bombs will be stored permanently in hundreds of igloo-like bunkers at Tooele Army Depot, 56 kilometres southwest of Salt Lake City. The depot already houses 55 million kilograms of debilitating or lethal chemicals, one of the free world's largest caches.

Iran seizes Danish ship

BEIRUT (AP) — A Danish vessel "carrying military hardware and explosives material" to Iraq was seized by the Iranian navy as it passed through the Straits of Hormuz, the official Iranian new agency Pars reported Wednesday. The agency said the vessel, seized Monday, will be allowed to leave the Iranian port of Bandar Abbas after it unloads its consignment.

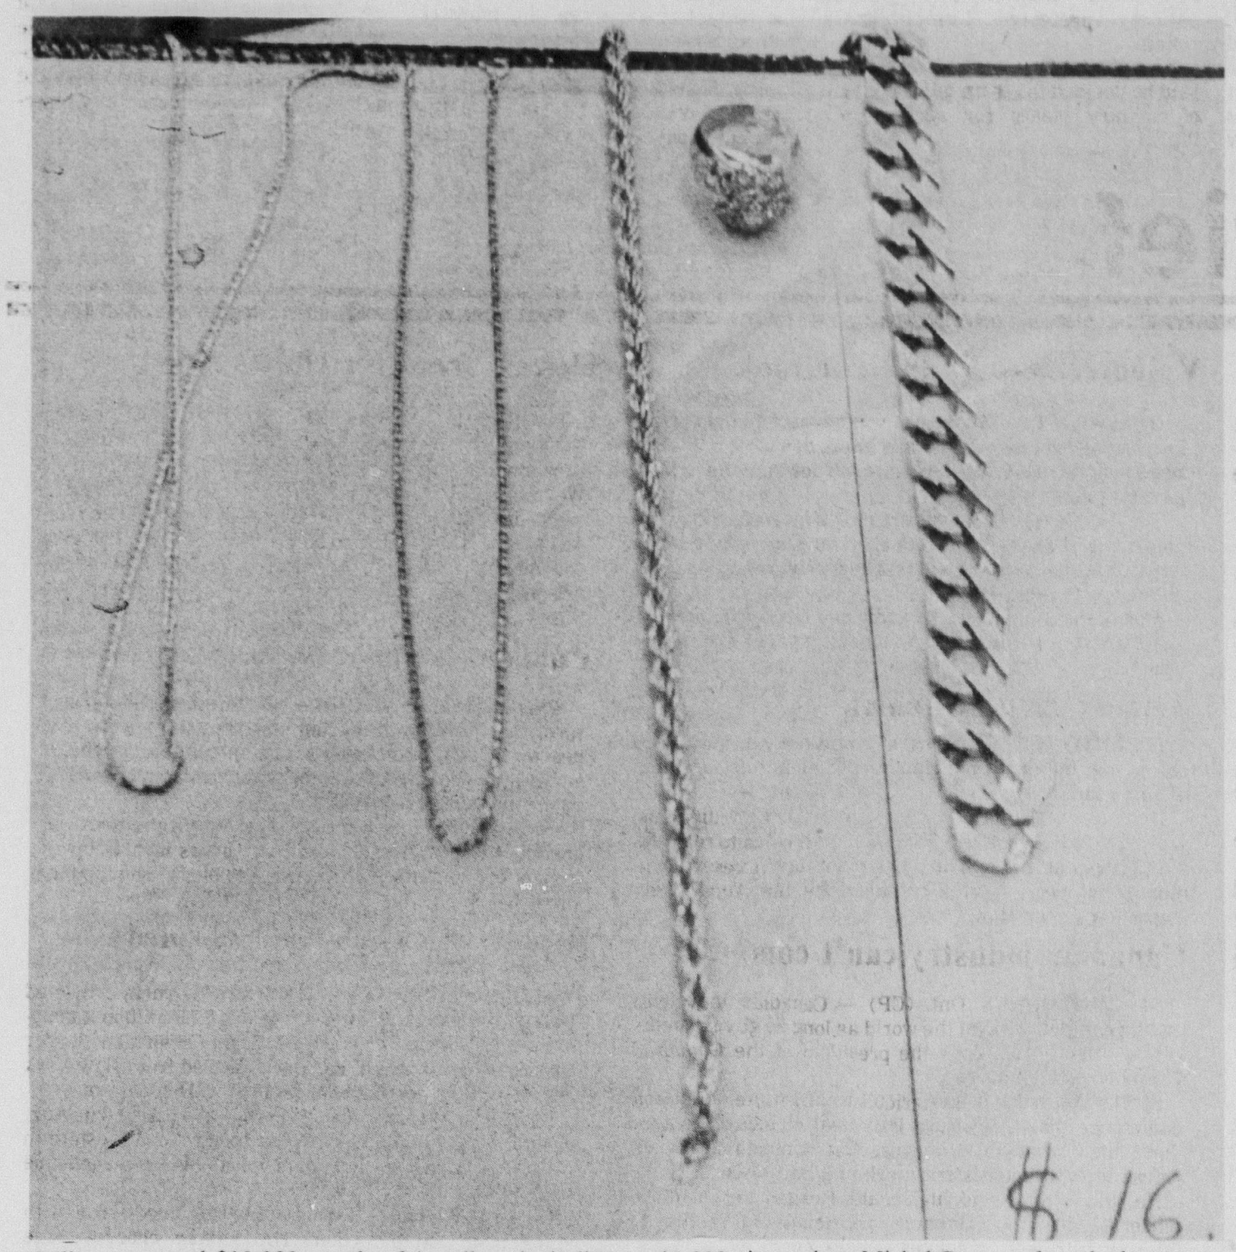
Solidarity urges end to strikes

WARSAW (AP) — Leaders of Poland's Solidarity labor union urged their countrymen Wednesday to stop strikes and food protests and help rebuild the economy by giving up some of their hard-won Saturdays off.

In their bid to ease tensions over the food crisis, union leaders meeting in the Baltic port city of Gdansk also called for a halt to planned marches aimed at winning freedom for "political prisoners." But they pledged to pursue the issue of prisoners' rights later.

Communist party leader Stanislaw Kania, addressing an emergency session of the party's central committee Tuesday, demanded an end to the strikes and protests saying they could cause "national tragedy."

Man charged with stealing own $53,000 in jewels



Police recovered $15,000 worth of jewellery including an $8,000 ring, when Michel Roy confessed, they say. Another $14,000 is either still missing or never existed.

By Charles Bury

BIRCHTON — A local man committed public mischief and fraud by having his own house ransacked and filing a false insurance claim for over $53,000 of jewellery and camera equipment, police say.

But the Cookshire Quebec Police Force detachment, which has the highest solution rate of any QPF squad in the province, bugged his phone when detective Michel Belzile became suspicious, and Michel Roy, 31, will appear in court September 14 to answer charges which could net him up to 15 years in prison.

Roy returned from a Florida vacation in March this year and told police his house had been broken into and badly damaged by thieves who took his solid-gold jewellery, a Nikon camera and other items.

But detective Belzile became suspicious when Roy called back twice to add thousands of dollars to his claim, which finally totalled $53,482, and decided to look deeper into the matter. "The amount went up by over $10,000 twice, and it didn't seem to add up," Belzile said at a press conference, held to explain the bizarre crime, yesterday at QPF Eastern-Townships headquarters, "so we went looking."

Police bugged Roy's telephone, apparently overheard him talking to accomplices, and squeezed a confession out of him which led to the recovery of jewellery, including an $8,000 solid-gold ring and a $4,000 bracelet, all of which had been included in an insurance claim Roy had made.

He has been charged with public mischief — because, police say, he led them on a wild goose chase — and fraud in connection with the insurance claim.

Police say Roy or an accomplice caused damages totalling $8,000 to his house, but his insurance company says it won't pay him a cent. "A false claim invalidates the whole policy," said insurance adjustor Jacques Fortier, and the person can be prosecuted as in the present case."

Fortier says adjustors believe the number of people who falsify their claims is rising. "Close to 20 per cent of the claims we get are proved to be boosted for profit," he said, "and many others are suspected."

Police aren't sure, but they presume Roy made arrangements for the "break-in" before leaving on his vacation. A family member contacted police, while he was away, but they couldn't determine if anything had been "stolen" until he returned.

QPF Sgt. Rene Poirier, head of the Cookshire squad, said there were reasons to be suspicious right from the beginning. "Cupboards had been broken into but nothing was gone from them," he said. "He didn't take his camera and lenses on his holidays, and of the $25,000 in jewellery he said was in the house, the $21,000 he said were stolen weren't in his safe, they were in a bureau drawer. Naturally, we got suspicious. On May 27 he confessed and showed us the hidden items in his basement."

Police say $14,000 in merchandise claimed stolen is still missing. "It must have been sold in the meantime, or he never had it in the first place," said Poirier.

Poirier says the Cookshire detachment, with detective Belzile as its only investigator, has a crime solution rate of over 60 per cent, which he thinks is the province's highest. The squad patrols over 1,100 miles of road and a population of 23,000.

Poirier also deplores crimes of this type. "People don't think there are victims, so it's alright. But in a case like this, everybody pays."

Roy operates a service station in Sherbrooke.

Insurance man Fortier says the insurance companies issue policies that depend on the good faith of the customer. "But in this case," he said, "there wasn't any good faith."

Beebe break in nets $12,000 in truck, tires

Record Staff

BEEBE — Thieves broke into the R.H. Rediker Transport company early Monday morning and stole a truck and 20 new tires together valued at $12,000 and so far the QPF have no leads in the case.

According to a QPF spokesman, the bandits leaned a ladder against the front of the garage and climbed to an open area above the doors and climbed down inside. Then they opened the main door from the inside.

Della Goodsell, secretary treasurer of the company, said the robbery occurred sometime between 12 and 3 a.m. Monday morning. Goodsell also said the 1973 GMC flatbed truck was loaded with granite supplies but the thieves unloaded everything except a heavy pallet onto the floor without causing any damage. The pallet which was stolen also contained granite supplies and Goodsell presumed it was taken because it was too heavy and cumbersome to remove by hand.

R.H. Rediker had been broken into one week previously, but at that time all that was taken was a small amount of money from vending machines and a cash box. Until Monday's robbery the company has never had a major break-in and Goodsell said they have never lost customers' goods.

The tires, which were brand new, are worth $9,000 and the truck which has low mileage is estimated to be worth about $3,000. R.H. Rediker is offering a substantial reward for any information leading to the arrest of the bandits. Anyone with information may call the QPF at 849-4813 between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. All calls will be taken in strict confidence.

The truck is marine blue and yellow and its licence number is L-46ZZ.

ETRSB program geared to individual

Every family with a handicapped member knows the problem of obtaining appropriate health and education services. If the handicapped person is English-speaking, the problem is doubled. Many people may not realize that expert help is available in our own area.

The Eastern Townships Regional School Board has for five years operated a programme for mentally handicapped children and young adults. The programme offers courses aimed at a variety of levels. For the younger child, (5 to 13 13 years) the Community Children's Program at Sherbrooke Elementary offers academic progress geared to each child's pace, plus physical education, language development, social and self-care skills, arts and crafts and field trips. For the older child or young adult, courses are offered on three levels, ranging from speech training to independent-living skills for the handicapped person who is part of the work force. Transportation is usually provided by the regular Eastern Townships Regional School Board buses. The courses are given by teachers trained in special education, and both programmes are financed as a joint project of the Quebec Ministries of Education and Social Affairs.

For budgetary purposes, Director Josee Rourke would like to hear as soon as possible from those interested in autumn enrolment. She can then visit the potential student in his home to evaluate his needs individually.

If you have a mentally handicapped young person who would benefit from expert guidance, you can get in touch with Mrs. Rourke at the following address:

For the physically or mentally handicapped person of any age, the Cerebral Palsy Association had found the funds to hire Colette Jean-Marie to take on the dossiers of its anglophone clientele. Ms. Jean-Marie will visit the home, evaluate each case individually and advise on the best course of action. This service is not just for cerebral palsy patients, but for anyone of any age with a mental or physical handicap. Ms. Jean-Marie may be contacted at 819-566-5166.

Among those dropping off mail in person during the postal strike was Sally Nutbrown of the March of Dimes, who brought us information on the TOSC-2 Environmental-Control System for the handicapped. This machine, priced at $2,000.00, aids the severely handicapped person to operate doors, lights, radio and television sets, and telephones, as well as to summon help. It may be used in hospital or home and offers a much greater degree of independence to the handicapped person. A TOSC-2 will be exhibited at the Sherbrooke Fair this month. If you would like more information, or are interested in contributing to the March of Dimes, call 819-563-3287.

Teenager finds heavy hand in first trial as an adult

By John McCaghey

SWEETSBURG WARD — An 18-year-old Montreal resident felt the heavy hand of rural justice when he was sentenced to four years imprisonment in sessions court Tuesday.

"I should have robbed a bank," Michel Jauvin told the court.

"If you want six years, just ask for it," Judge Claude Leveille retorted.

Jauvin had pleaded guilty at his arraignment on charges of robbery with violence and utilization of a firearm in the commission of a crime of violence in Notre Dame de Stanbridge on August 3. The Crown then dropped the charge of forceful detention of the 36-year-old female victim of the armed robbery.

Jauvin, who earlier denied his participation in five burglaries and theft of approximately $6,000 in cash and jewels in Farnham between July 28 and August 4, as well as the charge of car theft in Montreal, changed his option and pleaded guilty.

Crown attorney Claude Noiseux referred to the accused's record as a juvenile. "No sooner was he released than he went back to crime again. He managed to dispose of the stolen jewellery immediately, which means he has definite ties with the Montreal underworld."

"There is absolutely no point in talking of rehabilitation in his case, thus I have no option but insisting on an exemplary penitentiary term and I am not suggesting the minimum sentence. The defence will talk of the interests of the accused, but I am concerned with the protection of society and Jauvin appears to have no concern about threatening other people's lives."

Daniel Giard said the fact his client readily admitted his guilt and was aware of the gravity of his acts was proof he was on the road to rehabilitation. He pointed out there was no physical violence on the victim of the robbery, although she had been tied to a chair. He suggested a penitentiary term would turn the young man into a hardened criminal and asked for the maximum provincial jail term of two years, less a day.

"Provincial prisons are completely out of the question," Judge Leveille said, "They are infested with drugs." You have had a bad start and you are responsible for your fate. I have to think of society and if you are a danger to the public I'm going to send you to penitentiary so you can learn a trade and become a productive member of society when you are released.

"While you are inside think of your future. If you insist on being a bandit, you will probably end up the way most of them do — with a bullet through the back of your skull. The sentence of this court is three years, concurrent, on the burglary and robbery charges and one year, consecutive, on the utilization of a firearm in a crime of violence. Furthermore you will be prohibited from owning any firearms, ammunition, or any explosive devices, or having them in your possession for five years following your release. Good luck."

Jauvin was muttering he expected a maximum of 18 months as he was led off to cells.

Ad nauseum

Prime Minister Trudeau has promised $40 million for the development of energy self-sufficiency for Third World nations. Undoubtedly there will be some comment on the availability of Candu reactors, which could also help the eventual proliferation of nuclear weapons. Canada has a moral obligation to assist less-prosperous nations, yet Mr. Trudeau hasn't got all his priorities straight.

The PM's out of the country, the finance minister is in seclusion, our dollar is at its lowest since the dirty thirties on international money markets, all due to Ottawa's inability to come to an agreement on an energy-pricing policy with Alberta. Development of the northern tar sands, a great source of fossil-fuel self-sufficiency has been put on the back burner ad nauseum.

By-town bureaucrats have told consumers to cut back on spending in an effort to restrict rapidly-escalating interest rates — funny as they are automatically tied to our declining dollar.

Via Rail — the Grits' great promise for rapid and inexpensive travel across the country — is being cut back by the whim of the wimp of a transport minister. He makes sure precious central Quebec — i.e., the provincial capital and Montreal — are protected, then leaves other parts of the nation in limbo. The government assured the Maritimes better service through implementation of Via and now indicates that they will cut the most popular train, The Atlantic Limited. That's maintaining a mandate?

It took over two weeks of solid negotiation under mediator Judge Alan B. Gold to settle a 42-day postal strike; the ultimate results were almost precisely what a conciliator suggested to the treasury board in the first place.

Trudeau, Marchand and Lalonde faced up to the late Premier Maurice Duplessis during the asbestos strikes in the mid-1950's when their feelings apparently leaned towards the low man on the totem pole. Now that they have obtained the power and glory of office they appear to be shunning the electorate, save when they want a continuance of the power trip through re-election.

The ultimate in Grit cynicism became manifest when they decided to pump $5.5 million into the Scott paper mill in Crabtree, the home of Tory Candidate Roch LaSalle who is fighting for his life in a by-election to be held in Joliette Monday. Trying to buy their way in — a damned shame.

"Ad Mare Usque ad mare", as long as it's governed by the Grits!

Cabinet approves sharing changes

TORONTO (CP) — The federal cabinet has approved changes to federal-provincial cost-sharing that are as important as the decision 25 years ago to establish equalization payments to help poor provinces, says Pierre de Bane, minister of regional economic expansion.

In a Winnipeg report in the Globe and Mail, de Bane said Ottawa will no longer confine itself to developing national policies and leaving provincial governments to look after their specific needs.

Instead, the federal government will develop specific programs designed for individual provinces and it will be up to the provinces to reconcile their programs with the federal ones, de Bane told the newspaper.

"I told the cabinet that insensitive, homogeneous policies applied uniformly across this nation are unacceptable.

"The federal government, too, must look after the specific needs of the people in each province."

SIGNALS NEW PHILOSOPHY

The new approach is a result of a policy decision taken months ago by the cabinet, he said. It signals a "new philosophy," as important as the decision to set up equalization payments.

"Up till now, the federal government discharged its responsibility by giving money to the provinces. That will no longer suffice.

"National programs applied across the country from Newfoundland to British Columbia — leaving the provinces to develop tailor-made programs for their own people — have been disastrous.

Postal scoreboard: Past, present and...

OTTAWA (CP) — Box score of modern-day postal strikes and key developments:

Aug. 4, 1965: Postal Workers' Brotherhood, representing today's inside workers and letter carriers, end strike for higher wages (Montreal workers were out two weeks, others one) on appointment of Justice J.C. Anderson as a special commission of inquiry. He raises minimum annual wage increase to $550 from $300 and recommends higher pay for shift differentials, weekend work and long service.

October, 1966: Royal commission on postal working conditions, conducted by Justice Andre Montpetit, makes 282 recommendations including thorough study of converting the post office to a Crown corporation.

1967: Federal public servants get the right to collective bargaining and strike action.

January, 1968: Council of Postal Unions is certified as bargaining agent for two postal unions — Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) and the Letter Carriers Union of Canada.

Aug. 9, 1968: 24-day national strike ends after settlement estimated at $33 million consisting of 39-cent hourly increase over 26 months or 15.1-per-cent raise atop average hourly wage of $2.57.

December, 1969: Postmaster-General Eric Kierans tables report calling for two-year conversion of the post office to a Crown corporation and more rapid introduction of automated sorting equipment to avoid "steadily deteriorating service to the public and a mounting annual deficit by 1980 of about $600 million."

Sept. 4, 1970: New contract ends summer of rotating strikes begun in May, adding 55 cents an hour to average hourly wage of $3.06 over 2½ years. Formal letters to employees guarantee no layoffs due to technological change. Four weeks of vacation after 18 years rather than 20. Strikes began after eight months of negotiation.

December, 1971: Post office discloses billion-dollar automation plan for 15 centres.

Jan. 24, 1973: Five-day wildcat strike ends on agreement to majority report of conciliation board, providing another 65 cents an hour to Dec. 31, 1974. Sporadic walkouts continue to oppose technological change.

January, 1975: Council of Postal Unions splits into inside workers (CUPW) and letter carriers, representing 20,000 and 16,000 respectively.

March 27, 1975: Five-week disruption of mail, air and other services ends with settlement by members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Letter carriers and sorters had been laid off for refusing to cross picket lines during rotating strikes and countered with their own walkouts.

April 24, 1975: Letter carriers sign new 30-month contract with 38-per-cent wage rise, pushing hourly rate to $6.14 for three-year postmen or $12,771 annually. Contract contains first cost-of-living provision in the public service.

Oct. 15, 1975: Price and wage controls implemented.

Dec. 2, 1975: 42-day strike by inside workers ends in agreement adding $1.70 to the average hourly wage of $4.59, matching the letter carriers. Anti-inflation Board ruled the rise violated its limits but the federal cabinet makes it stick on ground the carriers had the same. More important to the growth of abrasive relations with management, the inside workers claim a clause ensures that technological change will be controlled so as not to affect adversely any employee.

October, 1976: Four days of nationai rotating and illegal strikes by the inside workers to protest lack of agreement on technological change interpretations ending with appointment of a federal mediator on the issue.

Oct. 10, 1978: Letter carriers sign a new contract after a three-day strike in September.

Oct. 26, 1978: All inside workers return to work after four-day rotating strike terminated by special parliamentary action and penalties leading to jail term of CUPW president Jean Claude Parrot for defying the law.

April 2, 1979: CUPW workers, as a result of the back-to-work law, are given binding arbitration that Parrot terms retrograde in protection of worker rights. The binding decree by Lucien Tremblay, former chief justice of the Quebec Court of Appeal, leaves untouched the federal machinery choked with thousands of grievances about technological change. After 18 months of negotiation and the short-lived strike, inside workers get wage increases retroactive to June 30, 1977, that push hourly salaries to a range of $7.11 to $7.51 by July 1, 1979. But the cost-of-living allowance is trimmed.

May 20, 1980: Agreement in principle reached with CUPW on one-year contract providing wage increase of eight per cent, work week of 37½ hours rater than 40 and a paid half-hour lunch break — achieved in the first strike-free negotiations since 1965.

Aug. 10, 1981: Another 42-day strike by CUPW ends after sustained mediation produces a two-year contract. Breakthrough is claimed for provision of almost no loss of pay for 17 of 26 weeks of maternity leave, a first in the federal public service. Other items before the post office becomes — at long last — a Crown corporation next month:

In each year, 70 cents an hour in wages and about 50 cents an hour in cost-of-living catch up added to base rates ranging now from $9.04 an hour to $9.43; four weeks of vacation after eight years rather than the current 10 and five weeks after 20 years; right to refuse work considered dangerous and a freeze on expanding the existing anti-theft monitoring system.

Shock and dismay

Editor:

It is with shock and dismay that we have learned of the atrocities being perpetrated on animals in Magog. This letter is our response.

The Society for the Protection of Animals of the Eastern Townships finds itself once again rallying to the cause of helpless and exploited animals, in this case, guard dogs, thanks to a conscientious and observant citizen who took the time to publicly denounce Magog's shame. Without the eyes and ears of our public supporters, our society would become effete.

However, more than eyes and ears are needed. How many among us have known of barns housing animals in filth and in starvation? Of kennels where the meaning of a concentration camp becomes real? Of people who leave their summer cat or dog at their cottage or at the way-side? Of pet owners who let their animal reproduce yearly and then dump that off-spring in the river, or in our shelter where inevitably they are destroyed? And how many among us take the initiative to publicly denounce, expose, and condemn the perpetrators?

Let it be known that the Criminal Code of Canada is clear on cruelty as a crime, and clear on its punishment. Articles 400 to 403 of the Criminal Code define cruelty as useless suffering of any animal (domestic, including pets and farm animals, as well as wild) due to the acts of its owner; negligence is one such act, and these are punishable with a $500.00 fine, six months in prison or both.

To bring these criminals to prosecution, someone must be willing to report what has been seen. The SPA has an inspector to investigate, but in order that he can do so, it is important that all information that the witness gives is accurate:

1. name and address of person making the complaint — this is never disclosed to anyone except the inspector who needs to know who to contact if he needs more details.
2. name (if possible) and address of the suspect.
3. details of what has been seen.

It should be remembered that speed is of the essence in reporting a crime. To see cruelty and not report it is to be accomplice to the crime, and to be a passive participant in the suffering endured by the victim, an animal which cannot speak for itself. Only man is capable of hideous abuse, and yet it is only man who can do anything to stop it.

On behalf of those that cannot speak for themselves,

PAULINA L. GRANT,
Vice-President,
S.P.A. de l'Estrie,

It may be excellent trivia but it isn't trivial

Fonda Fortnightly

BY NICK FONDA

As a child, and well into adolescence, I was in the habit of judging a newspaper by its comics section. Li'l Abner, Our Boarding House (with the irrepressible braggart, Major Hoople) and Ripley's Believe It Or Not were, in my juvenile opinion, the essential core of any good newspaper.

To what extent Li'l Abner or Major Hoople may have influenced my young mind, I cannot say; but the facts and figures unearthed by Ripley gave me and my generation, a lasting taste for trivia. It was Ripley who taught me that a giraffe has but seven vertebra in its neck while the swan has 29 and told me of a land crab in Cuba that can run at the speed of a horse. Many of Ripley's entries were about sport and it was Ripley I first thought of when I encountered the following athletic anomalies.

Hurling is the national game of Ireland and, to the best of my knowledge, is played nowhere else. Hurling almost defies description. One moment a player is charging down the field delicately balancing a ball on the blade of his stick, the next he is felled by a resounding body check; one is reminded of lacrosse and hockey. There are quick, intricate passes, then the ball is suddenly tossed upwards and as it descends is swung at, like a baseball, and knocked through uprights at the end of the field. The game moves quickly and violently up and down the pitch without heed for life or limb.

If hurling is organized chaos, purring is formalized insanity. Purring is played? performed? practiced? in Wales. It is perhaps in some ways a reflection of the harsh and bleak lives of the miners whose livelihood is earned in the dark, damp coal mines. Welsh tradition seems to favor violent sport. Wales is the country where rugby reigns supreme, where virtually every lad grows up trained in the brutal art of boxing.

But even against this background purring stands out as something of a masochistic sport. Like boxing it pits two individuals against each other, but it is their feet and not their hands that are the weapons. The two men face each other with their hands on each other's shoulders. Then, with the reinforced toes of heavy shoes, they proceed to kick each other in the shins. The first man to let go of his opponent's shoulders is the loser. One can't help wondering if there ever emerges a real winner. Perhaps the pharmacist who sells band-aids and ointments?

Compared to hurling and purring the sport of dyke-jumping, practiced in the fenlands of East Anglia, becomes little more than harmless fun. Dyke-jumping is a newly revived sport which, like jousting in medieval times, reflected a practical day-to-day skill. The fens are criss-crossed by hundreds of dykes, shallow irrigation canals some 20 feet wide. For hundreds of years, until the last century, fenland people would vault the dykes to save the need for long detours. Dyke-jumping contests were an integral part of any feast or celebration.

The ancient sport was revived just a few years ago, but proved to be unexpectedly popular. Last year a sponsor put forward some money and over 5,000 people turned up to watch the competition. This year, unlike previous years, many of the competitors are actively training for the event. Next year the organizers hope to make it an international match by inviting a Dutch team to compete (like East Anglia, Holland is rich in ditches and canals). While pole vaulters strive to clear 20 vertical feet, the English dyke-vaulting champion has already jumped over 25 feet — horizontally.

I doubt that I myself will ever engage in dyke-jumping and I will certainly never play hurling or challenge a Welshman to a purring contest. Nevertheless, I can't repress a certain feeling of satisfaction at knowing of these sports because the next time I'm down at my local watering hole and the conversation turns to trivia...

UK at junction choices ahead

LONDON (Reuter) — Britain, plagued by recession and growing unemployment, is at a crossroads waiting to see in which direction its politicians wish to lead it.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher faces difficult decisions on whether to change her tough economic policies or reshuffle her cabinet, if she is to retain power at the next general election due by 1984.

The governing Conservative party is openly split over what course she should take and whether the recession has reached its bottom and better days lie ahead.

The opposition Labor party is even more divided.

Labor's annual conference next month is being asked to confirm commitment to left-wing policies of the sort which, in the past, have always been rejected by British electors.

As one commentator put it: "When governments are unpopular and unsuccessful and oppositions have lost their way, the public eagerly cries: 'A plague on both your houses.'"

HOPES TO BENEFIT

The new Social Democratic party, in an electoral alliance with the small middle-of-the-road Liberal party, hopes to benefit from this situation.

But the Social Democratic-Liberal alliance faces what most commentators see as an almost insurmountable hurdle. Britain's political arithmetic is loaded against newcomers.

American tourists are flocking to Canada because of exchange rates

CANADIAN PRESS

The Empress Hotel in Victoria, B.C., is fully booked, as it always is this time of year, and the last person who has to worry about attracting tourists is hotel general-manager Ted Balderson.

But the local merchants have been telling Balderson how brisk a business they are doing this summer thanks to the falling Canadian dollar and the bargain it offers U.S. tourists.

"Americans are spending a little more freely than they were earlier in the season," Balderson says. "Earlier on they had been hesitant about spending that extra dollar."

In Quebec, meanwhile, Reginald Groome, general manager of Montreal's Queen Elizabeth Hotel and president of Hilton Canada, says the province is having a poor tourist season. But without the falling dollar it would probably be worse.

"I would have expected the fall in the dollar would have brought more tourists," Groome says. "But with the over-all economy in the U.S., the air controllers strike there and the auto slowdown, people are probably staying closer to home."

What effect is the fall in the Canadian dollar having on tourism?

CREDITS FALL

A spokesman for the Canadian government office of tourism says tourism is up this year over last and the falling dollar is probably playing a major role.

Figures to the end of May show a 4.2-per-cent increase over the first five months of 1980 in the number of U.S. visitors and a 5.2-per-cent jump in the number of tourists from other countries. Meanwhile, the number of Canadians visiting the U.S. dropped 0.2 per cent and the number travelling outside North America plunged 8.3 per cent.

No statistics are available for the busy summer tourist period, although industry officials say tourism is generally up in Western Canada and Ontario and down in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

The Canadian dollar should attract U.S. tourists who would receive about $1.20 Canadian for each of their dollars, but there is a problem getting the word out. The federal government, after all, can't brag about a weak currency when it is trying desparately to shore it up.

Courtney Mason, sales director for Wandlyn Inns — a chain of 21 motor hotels in the Maritimes, Quebec and Ontario — complains that tourism is off between five and 10 per cent this year in the Maritimes.

WON'T CROSS BORDER

"They will not cross the border from Maine," Mason says of U.S. tourists.

Many Americans are assuming that because the U.S. dollar is high against European currencies that Canadian money is in the same boat as their own, says Rod Cunningham, research manager for the New Brunswick department of tourism.

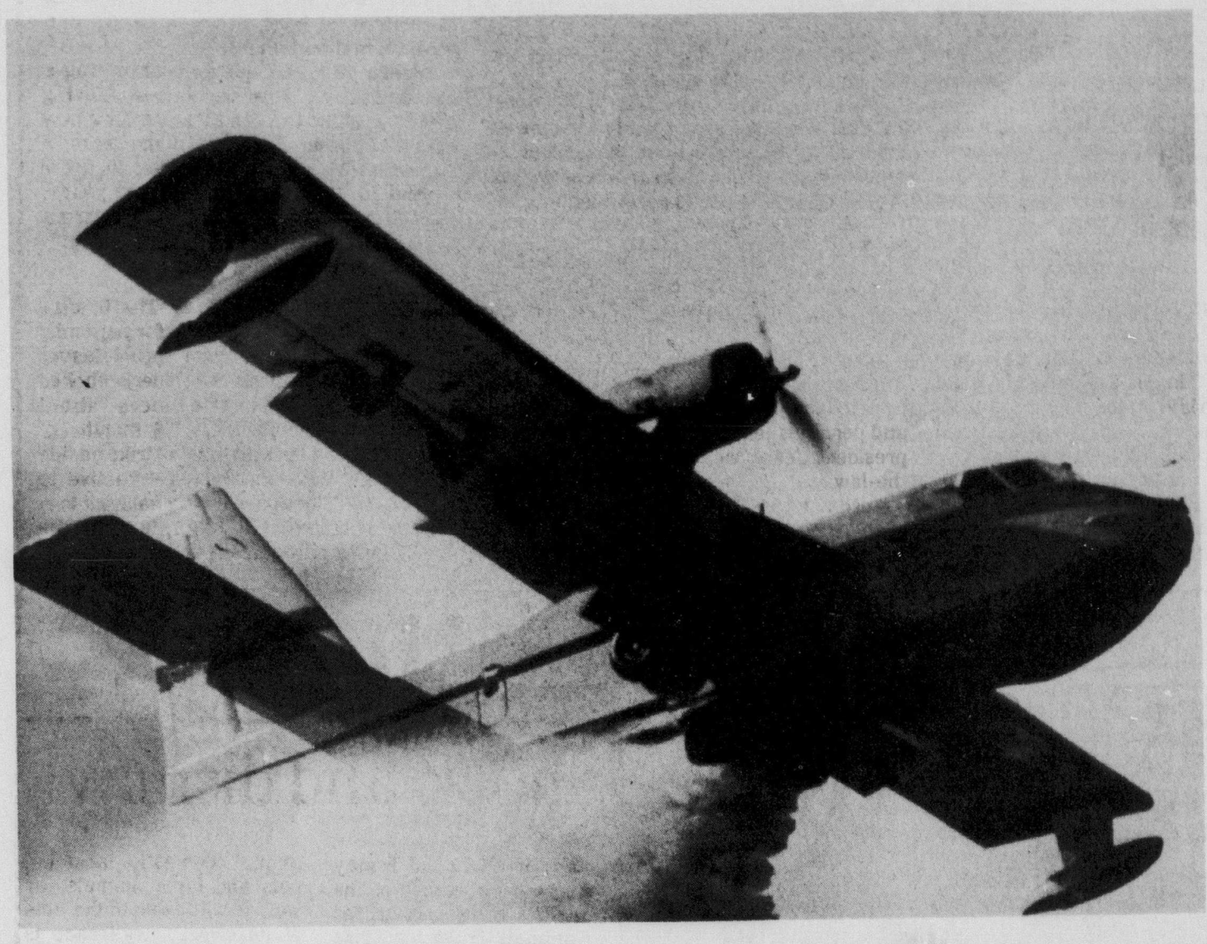
"I would guess that if other people benefit from devaluation of the dollar, they are in provinces close to a sizable U.S. population where word (of the lower-valued Canadian dollar) would get around quicker."

That seems to be the case in B.C. where Rick Antonson, managing director of the Southwestern British Columbia Tourist Association, says "everytime you pick up a newspaper the headlines are shouting about how much further the dollar has fallen."

The Ontario government says the weakened Canadian dollar is helping the province to one of its best tourist seasons ever. The number of visitors to Ontario from foreign countries climbed 27.7 per cent from January through May, compared with the same period last year.

"The favorable exchange rate for the U.S. dollar and the success of our 'Ontario — yours to discover' marketing campaign is mainly responsible for the boom," says Larry Grossman, Ontario's industry and tourism minister.

Grossman says the biggest increase in tourist traffic has come from the U.S., with total visits by Americans 28.5-per-cent higher than the same period last year.



This crop duster is a product of the De Havilland company and because of high interest rates many customers for this and other aircrafts are cancelling their orders.

High interest rates force De Havilland to lay off workers

TORONTO (CP) — High interest rates are hurting de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. of Toronto, manufacturer of the Twin Otter.

The company's customers are balking at the rates charged for financing aircraft sales, compared with the lower government-subsidized rates offered by competitors in other countries.

The Toronto-based firm has announced it will cut production of its 19-passenger Twin Otter to three from six a month, and lay off 214 of its 5,400 workers, effective Aug. 21.

It only has enough orders on hand to continue production at the three-a-month rate for the rest of the year.

John Sandford, de Havilland's president, said the company has lost 23 Twin Otter sales — worth $43 million — the last six months because of what the company terms predatory financing by competing aircraft manufacturers in Brazil, Spain and Australia. Since production of the Twin Otter started in 1965, de Havilland has sold more than 760 aircraft.

High interest rates are also affecting the company's other aircraft lines.

WITHDRAWS ORDER

Sandford said one customer has withdrawn its order for two of the company's Dash 7 aircraft and another has dropped its options for four 36-passenger, Dash 8 aircraft, which the company is preparing to produce.

Last month, Dash Air of Toronto dropped its plan to fly a scheduled service to Ottawa and Montreal from Toronto Island airport, using at least eight Dash 7 aircraft, because of the high cost of financing the operation.

De Havilland said the Brazilian aircraft-maker, Embraer, has been offering 9.5-per-cent financing over eight years. Financing for the Twin Otter is about 12.5 per cent over five or six years and has ranged as high as 15 per cent.

Sandford said de Havilland is scheduled to meet with officials of the federal department of industry, trade and commerce and Export Development Corp. in an attempt to come up with a competitive plan. Future sales success depends on a competitive financing package, the company said.

Canada's grain shipments are growing by leaps and bounds

VANCOUVER (CP) — An increase in trade with Pacific Rim countries will give Canada one of the world's highest growth rates in container exports, says an analyst for Sea-Land Service Inc.

Sea-Land Service, North America's largest container carrier, predicts Canadian container exports will grow by more than seven per cent next year, compared with the one-per-cent slide since 1980, and should sustain an average growth rate of about five per cent through 1986.

But the company isn't predicting what Vancouver could gain. Sea-Land doesn't ship containers through the port, but moves Canadian cargo through Seattle.

Exports to the Pacific Rim — 85 per cent of which go to Japan — will grow about two per cent this year, compared with the 17 per cent recorded for 1979.

"Canada's competitiveness in world trade really eroded in the 1970s but the situation has been improving lately," economist Maureen Allyn said in a telephone interview from Sea-Land's Menlo Park, N.J., headquarters.

LINKED TO DOLLAR

She linked it partly to the drop in the value of the Canadian dollar, but stressed that Canada has the resources the world needs.

"It takes about a year for changes in the Canadian dollar to be reflected in imports and exports," she said. "But if it stays at this level for long we will see exports go up and imports drop."

Allyn predicted trade could again slow in 1984 and 1985, when the growth of the gross national product is expected to bottom out.

Allyn also expects most Canadian exports will continue to be non-manufactured products or low-technology items such as paper.

She expects container exports to the Pacific Rim will get a push from softwood lumber shipments, which make up about two-thirds of the total market, but doesn't expect a shift to a greater percentage of lumber shipped by container.

Container exports to the Pacific could be diversified by more agricultural products, she said, with increased chemical shipments one of the few new exports that would require much technology.

Allyn predicted the Japanese economy will improve through 1986, so Japan will increase imports from Canada by about five per cent annually, taking mainly lumber, paper and resins.

In the same period Korea, Hong Kong and Singapore will increase imports by up to nine per cent a year, Taiwan eight per cent and the Philippines five.

Those countries each take from 1.5 per cent to 3.5 per cent of Canada's container exports to the Pacific, compared with 85 per cent by Japan, which also is the source of 48 per cent of container imports from that region.

Huge food chains eliminate competition

EDMONTON (CP) — Analysts, competitors and government officials say the growth of Canada Safeway Ltd., Alberta's largest supermarket chain, may not necessarily benefit consumers.

Independent grocers estimate 75 cents of each dollar spent on groceries in Edmonton goes into cash registers owned by Canada Safeway. They warn that unless independents get some special privileges, chains such as Safeway will eventually gobble up the retail food business in Alberta — a $1.7-billion industry in 1980.

J. Donald Tigert, a senior analyst at the investment firm of Burns Fry Ltd., feels "prices are higher by about two per cent than they could be" because of Safeway's dominant position in Alberta.

"If you had more competition you probably would have lower prices," said Tigert, a Toronto-based expert who has studied the food industry for 12 years. He bases the opinion on Safeway's pre-tax profit margin of $118.9 million in 1980, 4.4 per cent of its $2.7 billion in sales. Tigert said Eastern-based chains generally earn a two-per-cent return.

However, a Safeway official denies there is reduced competition in Alberta and insists consumers are getting low prices because of his company's size.

"We have not eliminated competition," Jim Waters, public affairs manager for Safeway's Prairie region, said in an interview. "Look at the Co-ops around the city. Woodward's is just around the corner."

BECOME MONOPOLY

But Murray Hawkins, a rural economy professor at the University of Alberta, said Safeway's position has become a monopoly so powerful few can compete in areas such as obtaining space in shopping centres.

He said 30 per cent of profits earned by Safeway's Maryland-based parent company, Safeway Stores Inc., come from its Canadian subsidiary although just 15 per cent of the parent's sales come from Canada.

Walter Protsack, chairman of Save Independent Grocers Now, an Alberta group with 300 member companies, said chain operations took in 58 per cent of retail sales in 1970. Ten years later the chains were munching up 65 per cent of sales.

"About 1,600 stores run by independents are picking up the crumbs," said Protsack, the owner of Independent Grocers Alliance stores in Rocky Mountain House and Drayton Valley.

Waters said Safeway owns 92 stores in the province and has a commitment to growth.

Provincial officials have become anxious enough about Safeway dominance to recommend government action.

"We are concerned the degree of concentration represented by Canada Safeway, particularly in northern Alberta, may have significant detrimental effects on the Alberta market place," said a report from a provincially-appointed hog marketing review committee.

In its report made public in January, the committee recommended a provincial investigation into Alberta's food trade that has so far not been implemented.

Waters said the amount of competition isn't important in keeping prices low but the federal government hasn't always agreed.

In 1973, federal combines investigators wrung an agreement from the corporation in which Safeway halted expansion for five years after allegations the company controlled too much of the grocery trade in Edmonton and Calgary.

Social service agencies power seizes with cutbacks

MONTREAL (CP) — Ella Allen is 77 years old, widowed and broke. She lives in a private home for the elderly that costs $500 a month, $50 more than the total of her pension and income supplement cheques.

The roof over her head, daily meals, weekly visits by a nursing student, and her monthly cheque were all arranged by her counsellor, David August of the Jewish Family Services.

August's ability to manipulate a social service system that is slowly seizing up with bureaucratic paralysis is all that stands between Ellen Allen — not her real name because she wants to avoid embarrassment — and penury.

Not only are there more people for the system to take care of, but there's more paper work to do and less money to go around.

"We're supposed to be giving community services and instead we're spending most of our time intervening in times of crisis," August says. "That leaves little time to do the work we should be doing to avert the crises."

The city's three social service agencies — Jewish Family, Ville Marie and Montreal Metropolitan — face the same problem: not enough resources to deal with their caseloads, particularly with the elderly.

Their 1980 budget was $150 million. Although they will need $15 million more this year to maintain last year's service, the Quebec government has indicated they can expect no increase in funds.

Guy Versailles, an aide to Social Affairs Minister Pierre-Marc Johnson, says the department is preparing deep financial cuts.

"The old method of dealing with problems was to flood them with money. We can't afford to do that any more.

"We've got to get it across to people just how expensive the system has become. There's going to be a lot of tension throughout the whole social affairs system for a while because the minister is going to make some big changes."

Even now, administrators at the three agencies predict staff layoffs and curtailment of all but essential services.

The way Irv Perlman of Jewish Family Services sees it: "We're soon going to be in the position of saying to people if they come to us trying to head off a problem, 'Go away and let things fester. Come back when there's a crisis because we only deal with crises here.'

"The social cost," he adds, "could be enormous."

D'Arcy Coulson, director of the Ville Marie Social Service Centre, agrees and points out that cutting programs designed to defuse social crises won't save taxpayers any money.

About half of the 2,000 elderly Montrealers on the lists waiting for beds in chronic care institutions could die before there is room for them. Their average age is 83, but the average waiting time for a bed is three years.

Child seeks early inheritance from father

Dear Ann:

Why do people just sit on their money until they die?

My father, a retired widower, has a generous pension, more than he needs to live on (he saves some of it). He has about $150,000 which he plans to leave me when he dies. My husband and I are struggling, unable to afford decent furniture, a safe car or new clothes.

I love Dad, but if he lives another 20 years (he's 66) the $150,000 will have expanded to approximately $700,000 whichout doing anyone a damned bit of good. Our children will have grown up with a poorer education, less travel, and in general a more grim life than they could have had if Dad had only shared his money before our lives went by.

I don't say he should turn it over all at once, but the interest alone comes to more than $15,000 a year. And it just gets tucked away. "That's traditional," he says.

I hope this letter will encourage more thoughtful older folks to at least re-examine a custom that suspends young parents in years of uncertainty and tight budgets — for no reason.

—Bev in New York

Dear Bev:

An inheritance is a gift and people should not ask for gifts, from anyone — not even parents, no matter how affluent.

Surely your father must be aware of your financial struggles. If he doesn't choose to help, asking would show a lack of pride and self-respect.

I wonder if he knows that he can give each relative $3,000 a year, tax-free. If not, and he sees it in this column, it just might get something going along those lines and and that wouldn't be too shabby.

Social notes

Soloman-Quillinan

A very pretty summer wedding took place at St. Anthony's Catholic Church in Edmonton, Alta., on July 11 when Judy Lynn Soloman and Michael James Quillinan were united in marriage at a double ring ceremony, Father Rahab officiating.

The groom was attended by his best man Mark Farrow, formerly of Rock Island and his groomsmen were Danny Taylor and Bob White of Edmonton. The ushers were Doug Soloman, brother of the bride, and Don Koble, a friend.

The bride was preceded down the aisle by her maid of honor Shelley Moore, her sister. The bridesmaids were Peggy Quillinan, sister of the groom, and Kim Koble, friend of the bride, and Tracey Ziebarth, the little flower girl.

The bride looked lovely in a gown of white embroidered silk and waist-length veil. She carried a bouquet of pink roses and baby's breath. She was escorted down the aisle and given in marriage by her father. Maretta Fitzgerald sang during the ceremony and was accompanied by Mrs. Volbert at the organ. Shelley and Charlie Moore gave the readings.

The maid of honor and bridesmaids all wore identical floor-length dresses with jackets in blue, pink and green, the little flower girl wore yellow and carried a basket of daisies and baby's breath.

The bride's mother wore a floor-length dress in off-white silk trimmed with lace. All the dresses worn in the wedding party were made by the bride's mother Mrs. June Lavoie. Mrs. Quillinan, the groom's mother, chose a street-length dress of blue floral print. The best man and the groomsmen all wore navy blue suits.

The reception was held at the Kingsway Legion Home in Edmonton at 6 p.m. where approximately 125 guests were served a delicious turkey dinner with all the trimmings and open bar.

Darry Taylor was the master of ceremonies. Music was provided for dancing by a local band. The guests attending were from Germany, Toronto, Ont., Rock Island and Stanstead, Que., Cut Knife, Saskatoon, Sask., Edmonton, Red Deer and Lougheed, Alt.

Approaching marriage

Mr. and Mrs. Hartley Doyle are pleased to announce the approaching marriage of their daughter, Sandra Lee, to Gerald Patrick Mitchell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Mitchell of Montreal. The marriage will take place Saturday, September 5 at 5 p.m. at St. George's Anglican Church, Lennoxville.

40th anniversary

The children of Elsie and Allan Morrison of Brome Lake, Foster, held a surprise party for their parents at their residence on Monday, August 3, to celebrate their 40th wedding anniversary. The actual anniversary date was April 25, but due to the inability of all the children to be present at that time, it was celebrated in August.

Allan of Montreal and the former Elsie Cavanagh of Sutton, Que., were married in Trinity Church, N.D.G., Montreal on April 25, 1941 and resided in Montreal, except for a few years at Farnham, until 1977 when Allan retired on pension from CP Rail after 39 years service. They winterized the Morrison cottage at Brome Lake where they now reside.

After getting their parents out of the way, the family prepared a lovely BBQ steak supper with salads, wine and a beautiful anniversary cake. The supper was supposed to be served outside but with the inclement weather, the games room in the basement was used. Elsie and Allan were overjoyed on their return to find the banquet and all the family present including their six grandchildren.

The following are the family — eldest son John from Smiths Falls, Ont., and his wife Judie and two children Deborah and Kevin; eldest daughter Prudie from Montreal and husband Jack Molloy and daughters Tracey, Shannon and Jodi; son Kenneth from Brossard and wife Debbie and his daughter Cindy; son Robert from Montreal; daughter Penelope from Saskatoon, Sask., who is home on vacation for the first time in over two years; the youngest son Barry who lives at home and works at the Brome Lake Country Inn.

After the supper, pictures were taken and an evening of reminiscing and dancing followed. The favorite topics were CP Rail and Legion, as all three sons away from home are employed in the mechanical department — two of them officers and the youngest a diesel electrician. They are the fourth generation of the family to work for Canadian Pacific. Elsie came from a railroad family as her father and brother were both trainmen on CP.

The family are also Canadian Legion workers — Allan, a past president from Flanders 63 at Montreal and Past District Commander of West District Montreal, is presently president of Waterloo Branch 77; Elsie served as president of the Ladies' Auxiliary Flanders 63 for three years and is still a member there; son John is an Associate Member of Branch 95 at Smiths Falls and served as sports officer; son Robert is an associate member of Branch 85/90 at Lachine; daughter Penny is an associate member of Saskatoon and son-in-law Jack Molloy is an active member of Branch 98 at Ville St. Laurent.

Elsie concluded the evening by saying that she had been fortunate in having six wonderful children who never gave the family any serious trouble and were now well thought of in their work and their community.

Congratulations

Congratulations and best wishes are being extended to Miss Pearl Morey of Greenlay on the occasion of her 90th birthday, Thursday, August 13.

30th anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Jones of Vale Perkins were guests of honor at a surprise party at Owl's Nest Inn on June 27, 1981. The party was arranged for them by their family in honor of their 30th wedding anniversary on June 20, 1981.

Lawrence and Esther arrived at the inn accompanied by Danny and Kaye Jones and were met by their two daughters Betty and Linda who pinned a red rose on their mother and a boutonniere on their father.

Dancing to the music of Ricky Elston and his band was enjoyed until midnight when a cold buffet lunch was served. The anniversary cake was made and decorated by Betty Gardner and Linda Jones. Following the cutting and serving of the cake Lawrence and Esther expressed their appreciation to their children for putting on the party and to everyone who came to make the party such a special occasion and also for the cards and money they received from the wishing well.

Christening

The christening of Amanda Lynne, daughter of David and Linda (McCutcheon) Allen of Fordyce Road, Cowansville, took place on Sunday afternoon, August 2, at St. James Anglican Church, Foster. The Reverend Wilmer Davidson, rector of Waterloo and Foster officiated. The godparents were Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Goodman of Toronto. Mrs. Stewart Gibbs, sister of Linda, stood proxy for Mrs. Eleara Rothman of Herts, England. Following the service, a buffet lunch was served at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Allen to members of the Allen and McCutcheon families.

60th anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Page will be celebrating their 60th wedding anniversary on August 16, 1981, and for this occasion will be at home to their friends and relatives, at their home on Lakeside Road, Knowlton, Que., from 1:30-4:30 p.m. on Sunday, Aug. 16, 1981.

Best wishes only.

Latest chair brings user to eye-level

OTTAWA (CP) — Biomedical engineer O. Z. Roy is trying out the latest in wheelchairs, steering it simply by moving his body as if he were using a hula hoop.

"It's a real innovation," Roy says, driving up and down the laboratory at the National Research Council of Canada, controlling the speed by pressing on a hoop before him with his hands.

He describes the wheelchair, developed by the group he heads, as a five-wheel unicycle. It was designed for those paralysed from the waist down for home and business use, particularly in a work shop.

And, perhaps best of all, the seat is high enough so the user is at eye-level with persons standing around him.

The prototype, which represents three months' work and cost about $250, has yet to be tested by paraplegics but "we think anyone can use it," he said in a recent interview.

When manufactured, the new wheelchair should cost about $150.

HAVE MANY CHAIRS

"What's going to happen in the future is there'll be different wheelchairs for travelling, going outside, the home and the office," he said.

The wheelchair is one of a host of aids for the disabled the council is developing.

"The work is no older than 10 years," he said. "Health and welfare had a rehabilitation unit and we inherited that in 1978."

The market is there. Of an estimated 70,000 people in wheelchairs in Canada, some 40,000 are paraplegics, 20,000 are quadriplegics (paralysed from the neck down) and 10,000 suffer from multiple sclerosis.

"And when you consider the number of accidents, it's not a population that is decreasing," Roy said. "I gather that with seat belts, there are fewer deaths but more disabilities."

BORN PARALYSED

Further, 1,500 children born annually have spinabifida or cerebral palsy, conditions which can paralyse.

Aids range from the simplest to the most sophisticated that microelectronics can provide. For instance, the council has developed a switch for the most severely disabled that can be turned on and off by sipping it as if it were a straw.

"A lot of it does depend on microcomputers and microelectronics," he said. "(These technologies) are becoming the equalizers," by making aids portable and easy to use.

At the same time that new technologies have been developed, the disabled have become organized.

"The handicapped are just becoming more militant," says Bob Lucyk, policy analyst at the communications department's broadcasting and social policy branch.

"Relatively recently, the handicapped got organized so now there are groups of the handicapped rather than groups for the handicapped," Lucyk said.

BEEN A SUCCESS

Roy said the International Year of Disabled Persons will be more successful than International Women's Year and the International Year Of The Child.

"The awareness component is, I think, very high now and the international year has done its bit in terms of making the public aware of the disabled," he said.

Lucyk has been heading the communications department's five-year effort to help the disabled communicate.

"The goal is access," he said. "You could probably reduce the department's philosophy to (providing the disabled with) equal access to the same sort of information and entertainment others have at a reasonable cost."

In 1976, he started research to identify the telecommunications needs of the disabled, mainly for the blind, and the hearing-and speech-impaired.

Until then, his section worked on extending communications services to all Canadians in the physical, geographic sense.

LOOKED AT NEEDS

"When we first started getting involved with the handicapped, he thought extension should be for the physically disabled — what needs aren't being met and how to fill them," Lucyk said.

A 1979 study showed that, of a population of 23.7 million, 2.3 million, or 9.8 per cent, were disabled. The hearing-impaired numbered 1.5 million, of whom 200,000 were totally deaf.

The department is setting up a closed-captioning centre to prepare Canadian television programs captioned for the hearing-impaired by Jan. 1, "and, if possible, to have some this fall when the new season begins."

Closed-captioning means the captions are invisible unless the viewer has a decoder, a unit costing $42.

CBC and CTV now are providing three U.S. closed-captioned shows.

Since closed-captioning became available in the U.S. in March, 1980, broadcasters there have received "all kinds of effusive letters from these people," he said.

Making life simpler for disabled: Problems financial not technical

OTTAWA (CP) — The biggest obstacle to providing aids to the disabled is cost, say two government officials working on the problem.

"In many cases, aids and devices exist but it's a matter of getting these reduced in cost so that handicapped people can use them because, by and large, they are poor," says Bob Lucyk, senior policy analyst at the communications department's broadcasting and social policy branch.

O. Z. Roy, manager of the biomedical engineering program at the National Research Council of Canada, is always looking for companies willing to manufacture and sell at a reasonable price the aids his team develops.

Roy has found a Toronto manufacturer, Comutron, to make an electronic system permitting a paralysed person living independently to operate the telephone, television, radio and lights and to open doors.

"About 40 a year are placed in the homes of the severely disabled," he said. "It's just almost impossible to produce 40 so we have a jobber type of operation where we specify what we want — in this case, it's a company on a contract basis."

DEVELOPED EAR

Lucyk said the communications, supply and services and health and welfare departments shelled out $729,000 to fund research and development of a visual ear by Bell-Northern Research Ltd., the Ottawa-based research arm of Bell Canada and its subsidiary Northern Telecom Ltd.

The visual ear is for hearing-and speech-impaired people and permits them to use the telephone. It's a portable teletypewriter which can be attached to any regular telephone, including pay phones.

Manufactured by Northern Telecom, the visual ear has been on the market since August, 1980.

Vicky Tonello, Bell's manager of special customer needs in Toronto, said more than 500 visual ears have been sold in Ontario and Quebec at a cost of $350 for the certified hearing-and speech-impaired and $375 for anyone else.

The ear is available from all Bell's telephone stores and its special need centres in Toronto and Montreal. In the other provinces, it's available from the various telephone companies, Tonello said.

The customer buys the ear outright and there's no extra charge for its use, she said.

WORK WITH AGENCIES

Lucyk and Roy both said they work closely with the various associations and agencies of and for the disabled.

Roy has a blind engineer on permanent staff. Last year, he had an employee suffering from cerebral palsy working on computer programs and is bringing in a consultant who is in a wheelchair because of an accident.

Spinabifida children between the ages of three and seven can use a cart developed by Roy's team which allows the child to push himself around with his hands. It also has a handle so he can be pulled.

Plowmen's Association plans match

AYER'S CLIFF (IH) — A meeting of the Stanstead County Plowmen's Association was held in Ayer's Cliff on Wednesday evening, August 5, with president Douglas MacKinnon presiding.

The match this year will be held on October 10 at the MacKinnon farm in Barnston and plans for this was the main items on the agenda.

A motion was made that the trailer plow class be removed and the two furrow plow and the trailerplow be together in the one class. This was approved.

Arrangements will be made for Kentucky Fried chicken dinner the day of the match for the plowing people and any viewers.

Dale Miller agreed to ask the Hatley church people to serve the annual dinner the Saturday evening following the match. Ivy Hatch to again be in charge of entertainment at the dinner program.

Directors will again be soliciting for prizes as in past years, Willie Antink to be chairman of the poster printing.

Judges will be Donald Goodfellow and John Rose. A new rule will be added this year for the match, that scores of plowing people must be kept confidential until the banquet when they will be announced and the prizes awarded.

WI Meeting

GRANBY HILL — The August meeting of the GHWI was held at the home of Mrs. Norman Coupland on Aug. 5, when nine members and a guest, Mrs. Anita Sweet of Vancouver Island, enjoyed a delicious salad luncheon at 12:30 p.m.

At 2 p.m. Mrs. Rutherford, another member, joined us and Mrs. N. Coupland, President, opened the meeting by welcoming all and repeating the Creed. She also read a Test Prayer.

Motto: Do not regret growing old, Many are denied the privilege; Roll Call: Wear a corsage made from something you have grown. The winner was Helen Shanks.

The secretary read the minutes of the June meeting, as there was no meeting held in July.

Bills included one for candy for W.I. family and neighborhood picnic and money was given to Mrs. Shanks to get books or something suitable for Barbara who is a patient in a Montreal hospital for cardiology.

Convenors — Agric. — Margaret Stevenson read an article from the Gazette on "keeping top soil down" — "zero tillage".

Education — Doris and Muriel Coupland had gone to Parkview Elementary to present $25.00 in prizes. The prize for best spelling in level 6 was given to Amber Smith; the most improved went to Linda Waid and Joanne Lasnier.

In secondary, the best student in French prize was awarded to Gina Fuoco and the most improvement were given to Barbara Ouelette and Michael Digaletos.

Welfare and Health — Freda Neil read an article on "gastric gas" which was quite humorous and mentioned that more people go on diets "tomorrow" than "today".

Home Ec. — Rita Savage stated that left-over baked potatoes can be rebaked by placing them in water and then rebake in a 350 degree oven for 20 minutes. Raw peeled potatoes can be kept fresh by putting them in water with a little vinegar added and keep them in the fridge.

There will be a flea market at the Anglican Church on Sept. 26 and we have reserved two tables.

On Aug. 11 Abbotsford W.I. and our branch would be entertaining Fordyce W.I. in Abbotsford and plans were made regarding this.

The program was the showing of beautiful or unusual plates with a prize going to Muriel Coupland — several lovely plates were on display.

The September meeting will be held on Sept. 2nd at Mrs. A. Coupland's at 12:30.

Guild meets

FOSTER — The July meeting of the St. James Evening Guild was held at the church hall on Thursday evening, July 9.

The president, Mrs. Whitehead, opened the meeting with prayer and welcomed the members. Twelve members answered the roll call and one visitor was welcomed.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. The treasurer gave her report. The sum of $188.65 was realized from the June rummage sale and $57.30 from the Canada Day table.

The corresponding secretary reported that she had sent a letter of thanks to Ross Gibbs for transporting the handicraft and other items to the Canada Day celebration.

A sympathy card had been sent to Mrs. Gerald Wright. Thank-you notes had been received from Susan Allen and Kay Forshaw. It was decided that we would not have a table at the Canada Day celebrations in future. Mrs. Whitehead had made inquiries about the church plates and had found out that they were on the way.

The July rummage sale would be on the 25th, and Audrey Allen and Irene Tibbitts offered to supply cookies for the sale.

It was decided to hold a tea for Mrs. Bissell who has now moved to Knowlton. Details would be available at a later date.

Loys Heatherington offered to be hostess for the August meeting on the 13th.

The winner of the lucky draw was Ethel Marsh.

The President moved that the meeting be adjourned, this was seconded by Loys Heatherington.

Following the benediction, refreshments wer5e served by the hostess, Mrs. Dot de Solla.

Obituary

MRS. CURTIS JOYCE
of East Angus
(Formerly of Brookbury)

On Thursday, July 30, 1981, one of the Townships' oldest and highly respected citizens, Mrs. Curtis Joyce, passed peacefully away in her sleep, at the age of 96 years and ten months.

Effie May Cook was born at Brookbury, Que., on October 2nd, 1884, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cook. She spent her girlhood on her parents' farm, attending the local schools of that time. An avid reader from an early age, she was proud of being able to read over one hundred books in a school year, and this interest and enjoyment continued until shortly before her death.

On September 19, 1906, Effie Cook was married to Curtis Allan Joyce and they spent the next 36 years on the Joyce family farm, a short distance from the Cook homestead. Effie was active in community affairs, particularly in the Methodist (United) Church which stood at the edge of their farm property. She was a life member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and was a member of the Rebekah Lodge for over 65 years; she was presented with a Veteran's Jewel in 1976 by Protector Lodge of East Angus. On Friday evening, July 31, a service was held at the funeral home by Rebekahs from East Angus and district.

In 1942, owing to ill health, the Joyces sold their farm and lived for a short time in Bishopton before purchasing a home in East Angus where they lived until Mr. Joyce's death in 1963. Mrs. Joyce then entered the Wales Home where she lived for eleven years. For the past five years she was a resident at the Humphries Home in Sherbrooke where she was tenderly cared for by Mrs. Gladys Humphries.

The remains rested at the Bishopton Funeral Home where prayers were held on Saturday, August 1st, followed by the funeral service in Bishopton United Church, Mrs. Vera Simons officiating, assisted by Mrs. Joyce's eldest son, Lester. With Mrs. Norma Jenkerson presiding at the organ, two of the deceased's favorite hymns, All The Way My Saviour Leads Me, and Abide With Me, were sung by the congregation.

Burial took place in the family lot of Grace United Church Cemetery in Brookbury, situated at the edge of the farm where she had spent so many years.

The bearers were Roy Harrison, Oral Downes, Malcolm Bennett, Lloyd Harrison, Cedric Jenkerson and Austin Bailey.

In accordance with Mrs. Joyce's wishes, in lieu of flowers, contributions were made to the Grace United Church Cemetery Endowment Fund.

Old photos inspire 3,300 km sled trek

CALGARY (CP) — In 1933, Tom Wolfe's grandfather took pictures of Slim Williams, who stopped over in Columbus, Mont., while mushing a dog team from Alaska to Washington state.

Those old photos inspired Wolfe to hitch up 10 dogs for a 3,300-kilometre trek by sled from Tok, Alaska, to Columbus.

Wolfe, making his way through the Rocky Mountains forest reserve in southwestern Alberta this week, left Tok Jan. 10. He doesn't know when he will arrive in Columbus, where he grew up, nor does he care, since he's not after any records.

But Wolfe is confident he can complete the journey — he has covered two-thirds of it already.

"I grew up looking at those pictures," Wolfe said in an interview before heading into the forest reserve. A few years ago, while living in Alaska, he looked at the pictures again and told himself: "I can do that."

How does he travel without snow? In the 1930s, Williams put Model-T wheels on his sled when the snow ran out, Wolfe said. Today, it's motorcycle wheels that do the trick.

Wolfe is not living off the land like Williams did, but his well-worn sled, with little more than a sleeping bag, bear skin, rifles and tarpaulin, is hardly the height of luxury. Wolfe bags a few grouse or rabbits when he can.

But Wolfe does travel with the help of people. Strangers offer a meal or a place to sleep or just take his picture and give him some money.

Wolfe's main problems have been with the dogs. The trip revolves around their needs and their health. If they aren't in good shape, he doesn't go anywhere.

These days the dogs are often footsore. Between fights among themselves and the long distance behind them — even Williams changed teams in 1933 — the animals are getting pretty tired.

Wolfe said everyone in Tok runs dogs. In the last few years he has lived there, he has learned a great deal about dogs.

"In Tok there are about 600 dogs and only about 50 people."

Stiff and sore as every member of the team may be, Wolfe doesn't see any problem making the last 1,100 kilometres.

No matter what happens now, Wolfe said, "doggone it's been good."

Female RCMP constables get attention

VANCOUVER (CP) — When Constables Joan Merk and Chris Mackie volunteered for the RCMP Musical Ride a year ago, they didn't realize their presence would attract so much attention.

As the first women to ride with the force in its 78-year history, Merk and Mackie are finding themselves the centre of attraction wherever the world-famous group performs.

"We didn't really think about it much," Merk said. "Being first wasn't the important part. We were both concerned with doing a good job.

"But between the reaction from the people who come to see us and the media, it's beginning to sink in. I suppose it would be something to tell your grandchildren about."

There has been a mixed reaction to the women riders, said Insp. Jim Walker, the officer in charge of the ride.

"A lot of people are curious to see how it's working out," he said.

"Some of the male members aren't happy with it, but then some still aren't happy about having women in the force. They've only been accepted since 1974, so there's a lot of all-male tradition here.

"I look at it this way: The musical ride is the contemporary link to the force. As women's position in society has changed, it was inevitable that women would join the ride."

EQUIPMENT HEAVY

Some of the concern about women joining the ride had to do with the physical activity involved.

Riders look after their horses, including cleaning the stall, feeding, watering and grooming the animal and loading and loading the equipment and tack boxes.

Each tack box weighs about 40 kilograms and the equipment boxes are even heavier.

"It's true Chris and I had some trouble lugging those things around at first," said Merk. "Weight training might have helped but it wasn't particularly appealing after working hard all day. The equipment boxes are still pretty awkward, but they are for everybody, not just us.

"I guess there are still some fellows who don't like our being here, but most of them have been just great. The others, well, we believe they will change and see us as just people."

Unlike most members of the ride, Merk and Mackie had done a fair amount of riding before taking the basic equestrian course.

It takes about nine months to train a rider and 2½ years to train a horse. The musical ride travels and performs for six months each year and half the riders are replaced each season.

After 15 years and eight Cups Savard calls it quits

By Terry Scott

MONTREAL (CP) — Serge Savard officially announced his retirement from Montreal Canadiens on Wednesday but he knew his 15-year National Hockey League career was over last April.

The rangy defenceman was the last player to leave the ice after the Canadiens were eliminated in three straight games by Edmonton Oilers in a preliminary Stanley Cup playoff round.

There were reports that after his nostalgic skate around the rink of the Northlands Coliseum Savard shed tears in the Montreal dressing room.

"Maybe I did cry a little bit," Savard said Wednesday when asked by a reporter. "I knew after that game it was my last."

He sat down with Canadiens managing director Irving Grundman shortly after the club's humiliating finish and the pair came to a mutual agreement.

"When I first met with Serge after the season to discuss what the future holds for him, it was agreeable to both Serge and myself that for the good of his career, himself and his family the 1981-82 season would start without Serge Savard," said Grundman.

The Montreal native, who was named captain of the Canadiens at the start of the 1979-80 season, collected 100 goals and 312 assists in a career that was almost ended in 1970 when he broke his leg in two places in a game against New York Rangers. He fractured the same leg during the next season.

LADEN WITH SUCCESS

It was a career that was laden with success. The 35-year-old Savard helped the Canadiens to eight Stanley Cup titles. He was a key member of Team Canada in the 1972 showdown series against the Soviet Union, and he played in the 1976 Canada Cup and 1979 Challenge Cup international hockey series.

In 1969, Savard was awarded the Conn Smythe Trophy as the outstanding Stanley Cup playoff performer and in 1979 he captured both the Bill Masterton Memorial Trophy and an all-star team berth, the only time he ever received all-star honors despite his consistent play.

But Savard's skills began to deteriorate in the 1979-80 season. He appeared in only 46 games and managed 13 points and followed that with a 17-point performance for the 1980-81 campaign.

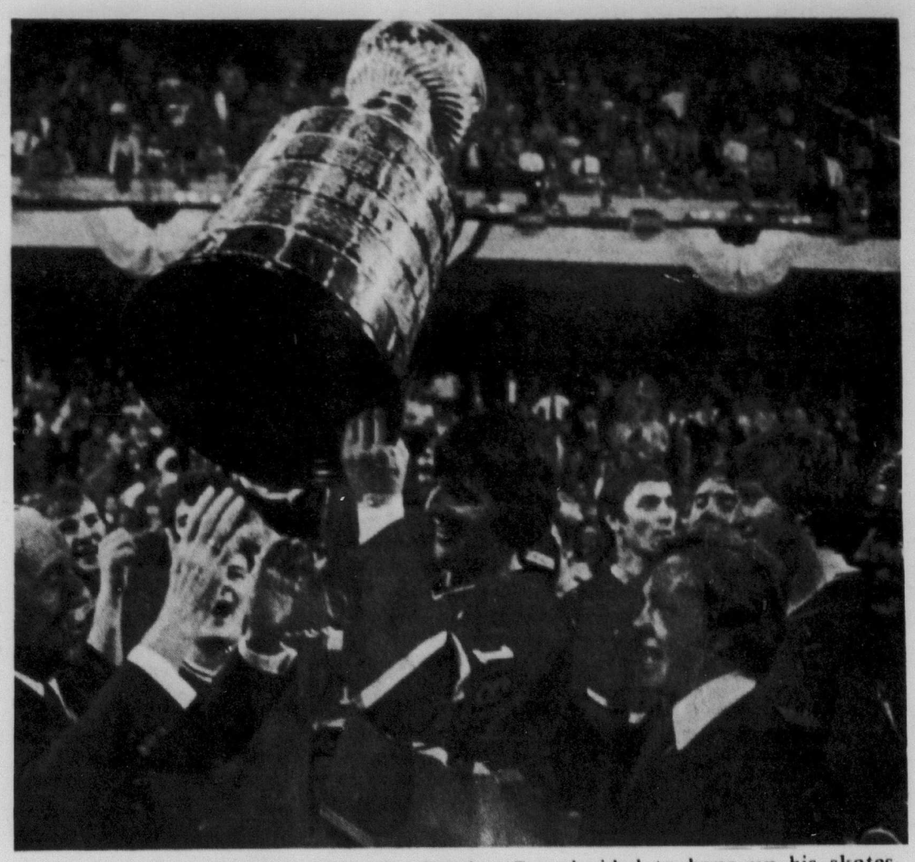
"The last two years have been sad for me," Savard said referring as much to the catcalls he frequently received from fans as his diminished output. "I didn't like the way things went in the last two years."

But there were fond memories that outshone the moments of darkness.

"The series gainst the Russians in 1972 was the greatest thrill," Savard said. "But the 1976 Canada Cup team was the best one I ever saw formed."

The Canadian team won both events, defeating the Soviets in the final minute of the 1972 series and beating Czechoslovakia on an overtime goal by Darryl Sittler in 1976.

Savard almost didn't get a chance to play in either event. In fact, his NHL career was seriously threatened when he broke his left leg in two places near the end of the 1970 season and fractured it again the next year.



Serge Savard seen here holding the Stanley Cup decided to hang up his skates yesterday after 15 years in the NHL.

Sittler thinks TC excellent

MONTREAL (CP) — Darryl Sittler is alive and well at the training camp of Team Canada.

There is nothing earth-shattering about the news but it bears some significance considering Sittler wasn't originally invited to camp.

His name was among the missing when 35 players were invited last month to attend the camp in preparation for the Canada Cup, the six-country international hockey tournament that begins in Edmonton on Sept. 1.

But less than a week later, Team Canada officials rectified the oversight and Sittler arrived with the rest of the National Hockey League invitees last Monday.

Not only did he arrive but his score was among the highest in physical fitness tests conducted that day.

The hero of the 1976 Canada Cup with an overtime goal that defeated Czechoslovakia in the final, Sittler has been working out on a line with centre Gilbert Perreault and right winger Danny Gare. And he's looking forward to making the club so he can have a chance of duplicating the exploit.

"It's going to be one great hockey tournament," said Sittler. "It's sort of like the Olympic Games.

"It's a one-shot deal every four or five years. And we have time to prepare for it. It's not like the Challenge Cup was in 1979 when players were thrown together in two or three days."

Junior hockey officials conflict

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — Canada will send a second-rate all-star team to the world junior hockey championships in Bloomington, Minn., Dec. 26-Jan. 4, unless two warring hockey factions reach a compromise.

The Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and Canadian Major Junior Hockey League are embroiled in a battle over control of the all-star team that will compete against the premier European junior national teams and the host, United States.

Some of Canada's best young players aren't likely to be in the Team Canada lineup that is supposed to herald the start of a new era in Canadian hockey. The CAHA is working on a three-year program aimed at making the national juniors competitive in international hockey by 1984.

The three-year plan, which also includes the grooming of a competitive Olympic team, receives $225,000 a year from the federal government.

The CMJHL, which represents the Western, Ontario and Quebec junior leagues, refuses to endorse the tournament and claims that as long as the majority of all-stars are CMJHL players, it should have a big say in the operation of the team.

Because the CAHA rejects that proposal, the CMJHL said, an unofficial boycott of the tournament is under way.

Many of Canada's 36 junior teams are either ordering or suggesting their players not attend the all-star training camp at Queen's University in Kingston, Aug. 23-31.

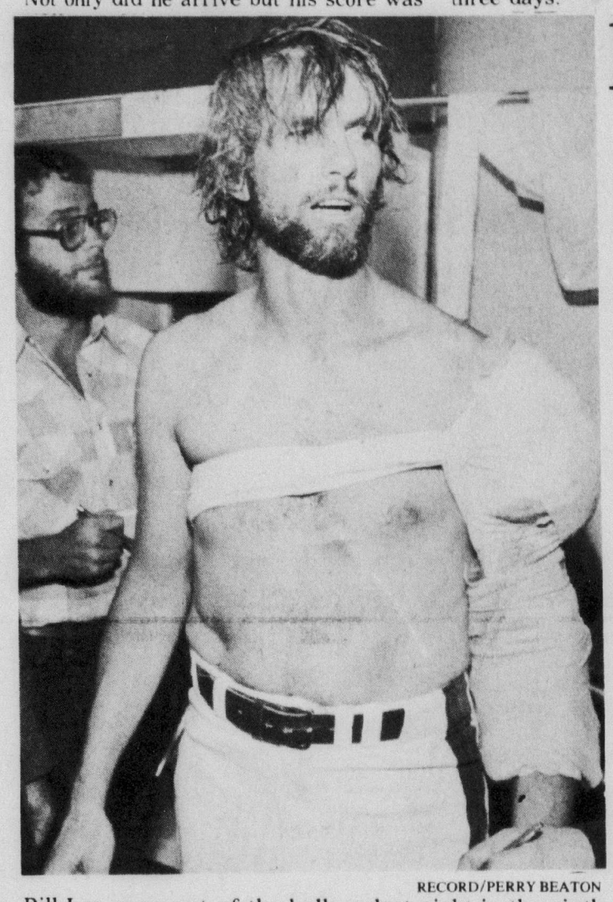
A TEAM DECISION

"Each individual team makes the decision on whether it lets the players go or not," said CMJHL executive director Dave Branch, who has been critical of the old system of sending club teams, traditionally the defending Memorial Cup champion, to represent Canada.

"It isn't that we don't believe in the all-star concept. We do. It's just that the CAHA went ahead and organized everything — the coaching staff and players selection — without consulting us.

"The CAHA never even contacted our teams to seek permission for the services of a player who is under contract. Since the majority of the players eligible for the team are from the CMJHL, it only makes sense for us to have input. But the CAHA doesn't see it that way."

CMJHL officials were rankled when the CAHA arbitrarily appointed a coaching staff, none of whom are currently involved with junior hockey. University of Saskatchewan's Dave King, who won coach-of-the-year honors in 1979 with Billings Bighorns, a CMJHL team, was appointed head coach. Former Montreal Canadiens' star Jacques Lemaire and Mike Keenan, coach of Hershey Bears and former coach of Peterborough Petes of the CMJHL, were designated as assistants.



RECORD/PERRY BEATON

Bill Lee came out of the bullpen last night in the ninth inning to put out the fire and preserve Montreal's win over the Pirates.

Dawson's homer gives Expos win

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Andre Dawson's 15th homer was the margin of victory and relief pitcher Bill Lee struck out Dave Parker to end the game.

But also credit rookie leftfielder Tim Raines with two key defensive plays that helped Montreal Expos beat Pittsburgh 3-2 Wednesday night and spoil the Pirates' National League home reopener before a crowd of 12,069.

And Raines made those contributions on a night when he went 0-for-4 at the plate and had no opportunities to display his sensational base-stealing talents.

"Raines plays his rear end off," said Montreal manager Dick Williams.

With Montreal leading 3-1 in the Pirate eighth, Bill Madlock singled and Mike Easler followed with a slicing drive to left. But the speedy Raines, who leads the majors with 50 stolen bases, ran the ball down and made a chest-high catch.

"I didn't know if he could even come near it, but he just motored over and made it look easy," said Williams.

"I don't think any other left fielder could have run it down," said Easler. "That was a very big play.

"It would have been a run scored with me on second base."

In the third inning, Raines threw Omar Moreno out at the plate when he tried to score from second on a single by Dave Parker.

"It was a big play," said Pirates manager Chuck Tanner. "Raines was charging in and he made a heckuva play."

The Expos, who split two games with the Pirates earlier this week in Montreal, took a 2-0 lead in the second inning off starter Eddie Solomon.

Catcher Gary Carter, most valuable player in the all-star game Sunday, tripled and scored on a single by Warren Cromartie. Then Mike Phillips doubled Cromartie home with two outs.

Solomon yielded Dawson's homer to lead off the sixth inning. Oddly, all 15 of Dawson's home runs this season have come with nobody on base.

But Williams has no complaints about that after Dawson went 4-for-4 with the homer, a triple and two singles.

"Andre can do it all," said Williams. "He's come on each year.

"I believe he's the best. He's picked up right where he left off before the strike."

Starting pitcher Ray Burris of the Expos, 4-5 with the win, yielded five hits in five innings, including Easler's leadoff homer in the fourth.

Lee came out of the Montreal bullpen to quash a ninth-inning Pirate rally that began when Phil Garner walked and took third with none out on Tony Pena's double off Stan Bahnsen.

With Jeff Reardon pitching, pinch-hitter Bill Robinson rapped a sharp grounder to shortstop Mike Phillips, who tagged out Pena between second and third.

Then Lee took the mound and yielded a walk to Omar Moreno that loaded the bases. When Tim forced Moreno at second, Garner scored and pinch-runner Lee Lacey moved to third with the tying run.

Lee then squared off against Parker. The first pitch to the massive Pirate right fielder was a high, fat slider that Lee had wanted to keep low. But Parker let the pitch go by for a called strike.

Then Lee got Parker swinging on the next two pitches, including a final slider that was low and away, right where Lee wanted it.

"I have a Guardian Angel," Lee told reporters. "I was lucky.

"If he would have swung at the first pitch, you'd be over in the other dressing room talking to him. It would have been a home run."

The Pirates will try again tonight against the Expos, and veteran Luis Tiant, recued from the minor leagues by the Pirates, will pitch for Pittsburgh.

"It's a short season, but it's still got a long way to go," said Tanner.

Quebec athletes have big day at Summer Games

THUNDER BAY, Ont. (CP) — The guests began to enjoy themselves Wednesday at the Canada Summer Games, but the host province was still picking up an inordinate share of the medals.

After taking seven of the 13 golds available in the first two days of competition, Ontario settled for a relatively modest five, broke only two Games records in track and field and qualified a mere four of its five entries for the semifinal round of the tennis tournament.

But the visitors were growing restless. Quebec athletes won four events and added a whopping eight second-place silver medals and a bronze. Kathy Kelemen of Richmond, B.C., took her second diving title in as many days on the three-metre board, Winnipeg sprinter Tanya Brothers put Manitoba on the board for the first time in the women's 100 metres and Kreg Llewellyn of Innisfail brought Alberta its second gold in the water-skiing tricks competition.

With 25 events completed, Ontario had won 12 to five apiece for Quebec and B.C.

Milan Popadich, a 21-year-old student from Orono, Ont., who had led most of the way, won the decathlon by a 68-point margin over Rene Lapierre of Nitro, Que., while Kevin Dillon of Oshawa, Ont., beat off another Quebec challenge in the 3,000-metre steeplechase, winning in the Games record time of eight minutes 59.79 seconds over Roger Desjardins of Montreal.

HURDLE MARKS FALL

Two more Games marks fell in the 400-metre hurdles as Jim Wooley of Kitchener, Ont., led team-mate Jeff Glass of London to the tape in 51.52 seconds and Isabelle Boutet of Laval, Que., finished ahead of Gwen Wall of Saskatoon to win the women's event in 59.79.

Monique Lapres and Celine Chartrand of Laval gave Quebec a one-two sweep in the women's javelin as Lapres shattered another Games mark with her winning heave of 52.22 metres.

It was an all-Ontario battle in the men's long jump as George Wright of Toronto outdistanced Craig Taylor of Orleans by a centimetre with his winning leap of 7.17 metres.

Carol Ann Leslie of Montreal won the women's high jump over Jean Cockcroft of Delta, B.C. Both cleared 1.77 metres but Leslie had fewer misses.

RICHMOND (AR) — The Belleview Golf Club will be holding field days August 15 and 16 in five handicap classes. The classes are 1-10, 11-15, 16-20, 21-25 and 26 and over. The entry fee is $10 and may be paid on the day of competition. For more information call 826-3411.

SHERBROOKE (AR) — The swimming pool at the University of Sherbrooke will be closed from August 14 until September 13 for repairs. The main pavillion at the University will also be closed from August 24 to August 30.

CHICAGO (AP) — Tony Esposito, veteran Chicago Black Hawks goaltender, is officially a United States citizen and plans to play for Team USA in the Canada Cup hockey tournament next month.

After a five-year residency requirement, a statutory waiting period and a background check by the FBI, Esposito was sworn in Tuesday in a private ceremony before U.S. district judge James Parsons.

CHICAGO (AP) — A circuit court judge reinstated on Wednesday the bond of Francisco Barrios, a pitcher for the American League baseball Chicago White Sox, on a drug charge after Barrios appeared and explained why he missed an earlier court date.

On Wednesday, Barrios's lawyer, Alan Nagel, explained in court the pitcher had missed the earlier date due to an agreement with prosecutors.

OTTAWA (CP) — Two riflemen from British Columbia and another from Ontario are leading the pack at the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association's 99th annual national small-arms matches.

Donald Butler of Agincourt, Ont., and Sandy Peden of Brentwood, B.C., ended Wednesday with aggregate scores of 632 points each of a possible 655.

Gerulaitis berates poor officiating

MONTREAL (CP) — Six of 16 seeded players have been eliminated from further play at the $200,000 Canadian Open men's tennis championships, but none are as bitter about their early exit as Vitas Gerulaitis.

The 26-year-old Brooklyn, N.Y., native, seeded eighth in the tournament, loomed as an excellent candidate to make the finals after third-seeded Jimmy Connors of St. Louis was eliminated and second-seeded Bjorn Borg of Sweden withdrew, but it was not to be.

Steve Denton, a superb doubles player but ranked 230th in the world in singles, ousted Gerulaitis with a stunning 1-6, 7-6, 6-4 second-round victory Wednesday amidst an uproar involving a young service linesman.

"It was the worst officiating by just one guy that I've ever seen," said Gerulaitis, who made reporters wait almost 90 minutes after his match before granting interviews.

"The linesman just couldn't adjust to the speed of my serve," said Denton, 24, of Driscoll, Tex. "But it didn't bother me since I was to busy concentrating on the match."

Umpire Jean-Pierre Boivin overruled the linesman 14 times before granting Gerulaitis's request to have him removed in the eighth game of the final set.

BROKE CONCENTRATION

Gerulaitis said the inconsistent calls broke his concentration, but added that he should have acted in a more professional manner.

"I didn't want to embarrass the kid," Gerulaitis said. "I just wanted to be beaten fairly."

Top-seeded John McEnroe of Douglaston, N.Y., who has had his share of arguments with linesmen, said the officiating at the tournament left much to be desired.

"I wouldn't say it's of the highest quality," said McEnroe, who defeated his doubles partner, Peter Fleming of Seabrook Island, S.C., 6-3, 6-2 in another second-round match Wednesday.

Boivin, in his first year as an umpire after 10 years as a linesman, said he should have changed the linesman sooner.

"I told Gerulaitis at one point that I would replace the kid with a woman, but Gerulaitis told me he didn't want a woman at the service line," Boivin said.

Three other seeds were eliminated Wednesday, including ninth-ranked John Sadri of Charlotte, N.C., who was beaten 6-4, 4-6, 7-5 by Anand Amritraj of India.

MITTON ADVANCES

Sammy Giammalva of Houston, seeded 13th, dropped a 7-6, 6-3 decision to South African Bernie Mitton, while 16th-seeded Kevin Curren of South Africa suffered a 3-6, 6-3, 6-2 setback at the hands of Switzerland's Heinz Gunthardt.

Fourth-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia kept pace with McEnroe with an easy 6-1, 6-2 stomping over Tim Gullikson of Boca Raton, Fla.

Tenth-seeded Vijay Amritraj of India kept his hopes alive with a 6-1, 4-6, 6-2 victory over Sweden's Hans Simonsson, while sixth-seeded Eliot Teltscher of Sebring, Fla., eliminated Toronto's Harry Fritz, the last Canadian in the competition, 6-3, 6-1.

Fifth-seeded Peter McNamara of Australia dropped Tony Giammalva of Houston 6-3, 6-3, and followed that with a 6-2, 6-4 victory over fellow Australian John Fitzgerald.

The tournament, which concludes Sunday, offers a top prize of $32,000.

The defense started off rapidly. West opened the king of clubs and continued with the queen and deuce. East was in with his ace.

Then came the pause that fails to refresh. East had a problem and even the simplest problem caused this East to take plenty of time.

East had something to think about. Normally it is really silly to give declarer a ruff and discard. Thus if East led the last club, declarer could ruff in his own hand and discard a loser from dummy.

Then East started to figure if there was any possible loser outside the trump suit. East started to count points. West had shown five. Dummy held 11 and East held eight for a total of 24 that declarer could not hold. North and South played normal 16-18 no trumps. East now counted jacks and found that he had seen all four. Hence, South could not have shaded his no trump to 15 points and surely would not shade it all the way to 14 when vulnerable.

Finally, East led his last club. South discarded a diamond and West ruffed with his nine.

Dummy had to overruff with an honor and now East was sure of a trump trick.
