Is three a crowd? Liberals in Compton- Stanstead are about to find out

By Record Staff

The Liberal Party nomination race in the federal riding of Compton-Stanstead has turned into a three-way tussle with the entry of Marie-Claude Bibeau, the director of the Sherbrooke Museum of Science and Nature. Bibeau is also the wife of Sherbrooke Mayor Bernard Sévigny.

Bibeau lives in the Sherbrooke borough of Rock Forest-St-Élie-Deauville but as the co-owner of Camping Compton for the last 15 years has extensive experience in the Coaticook region and has done consulting work for the Coaticook regional county municipality, and been involved with numerous local schools and other community organizations.

"I have dedicated the last 15 years of my professional life to the development of the tourist industry and the cultural sector of the Eastern Townships," she said.

Bibeau also worked as director of accreditation for the 2013 Canada Summer Games.

Bibeau, a native of Sherbrooke, studied economics and environmental management at the University of Sherbrooke and has a 16-year old son.

The nomination race in Compton-Stanstead has two other declared candidates, with both Colin Standish and Maximilien Roy previously having thrown their hats into the ring.

A date for the nomination meeting has yet to be announced.

The riding is currently held by the NDP's Jean Rousseau, who was renominated by his party last week.

In 2011, Liberal candidate William Hogg finished third, with 6,132 votes. The riding was last in Liberal hands from 2000-04.

The next federal election is scheduled for Oct. 19.

Centraide campaign deemed a success despite coming up short

SHERBROOKE

Centraide Estrie wrapped up its 2014 fundraising campaign last week, announcing a result of $1,602,650 raised for their philanthropic mission of helping those living in poverty in the region. Despite being $57,850 under their established goal, the organizers of the campaign said they were extremely pleased with what they consider to be an excellent result in difficult economic times.

"I come from a university background," said Yves Jodoin, President of Centraide Estrie's volunteer board of directors. "At university we go right up to A+; this is an A, which means it was excellent."

Jodoin explained that the regional campaign, having reached 97 per cent of its objective, was more successful than many of the other regional campaigns in the province. Times, he said, were hard across Quebec this holiday season, and every ounce of support received was appreciated.

Among the groups listed as having made significant contributions to the campaign, organizers thanked the Eastern Townships School Board, Bishop's University, financial institutions like the National Bank and RBC, union groups, clergy groups, the Sherbrooke regional school board and the University of Sherbrooke.

"Centraide is a cause that has been close to our hearts for many years," said Marie Croteau, vice-president of development with Wolters Kluwer, whose Sherbrooke office raised $44,000

"Even if we didn't reach our objective, we are touched by the generosity of the solicitors, donors and volunteers of the region," said campaign co-president Martin Ratthe, acknowledging that more than 1000 volunteers engaged in the campaign from groups all over the region.

What the F?

By Brian MacIver
Special to The Record
EVANSTON, ILL.

One thing is for sure: it's been a very rough couple of weeks.

I've been writing for over seven years now and while I am nowhere near being an expert on journalism, I think that I am an above-average reporter. Or rather, I thought I was an above-average reporter.

I had an assignment to do in my news reporting class that consisted of pulling information out of a police report and interviewing my professor, who was acting as the press correspondent for the Chicago police department. Sounds easy, right?

Well, I got my first F since high school math (there are three things I'm not good at in this world: snowboarding and math).

Needless to say, my ego took a beat down. Here I am, this kid from Canada who is coming over to the U.S. to take it by storm, getting an F on one of my very first assignments.

To be fair, it was what is called a "Medill F", which is anything under a 70. But it is still a fail to both the school and to me. The worse thing about it is that I knew I deserved it.

But that's the great thing about this school: they don't want you to bog down. In an email to my prof I had told him that the F, even though it was a Medill F, hurt. But his reply was perfect. "Don't worry about the F. It's a badge of honor for a lot of world-class journalists working today."

Coming from the Emmy-winning creator of the A&E show Cold Case Files and novelist Michael Harvey, it helped take the sting off of it.

With a bit of distance from the incident, I see that there is a lesson here: don't be overconfident.

I came in here thinking that this first quarter, which consists of giving everyone the same base off of which to build, was going to be the easiest part of my year here. I mean, come on, I've been doing this for over seven years!

Lesson learned.

Serendipity

"The occurrence and development of events by chance in a happy or beneficial way."

On my second day here, after I had done my first grocery trip, I was grabbing what was left of my bags from my roommate's car in the garage when I saw an older lady doing the same. I offered to help her carry her bags to her apartment, which was directly above mine.

She was very gracious, and I left.

Fast-forward two weeks, and I'm in my room struggling to find a breaking news story for a class assignment when my upstairs neighbor knocks on my door.

She wanted to know if maintenance had been to her place to fix the rattle that her furnace was causing in my vent. A bit annoyed that I was being bothered in my research for this, I put on a smile and said yes, they had and that the rattle is gone.

That's when serendipity struck.

She replied "I'm so happy they came. I was out most of the day at this restaurant opening to help my friend, who is the chef. She's blind."

My eyes got wide. "A blind chef? Opening a restaurant? In Chicago?"

I told her about my predicament and how I've been looking for a story for the past three hours, and she burst out laughing. "Well wouldn't you know! That's fantastic! I'm actually going there for lunch on Sunday, and you're more than welcome to come with me! I'll call her up to let her know that a reporter is going to be coming with me!"

And that, ladies and gentlemen, is how I got to meet Laura Martinez and break the story of the first blind chef to ever open a restaurant in the U.S.

It was amazing to see her cook. She has her entire kitchen memorized, from the contents of the drawers to the location of every counter-top utensil. Plus the food was delicious.

And to think that that great story actually started two weeks ago with me offering to help my elderly neighbor carry her bags to her apartment.

I guess that's the second lesson: the smallest of things can lead to the greatest of stories. For me, this happened in a literal sense in that I got a great story to report on, but it can, and should, be taken in a much broader sense.

In parting, all I have to say is: David, don't touch my stuff.

ETRC to host first scholar-in-residence lecture Kirkey to ask, "Where is Stephen Harper taking Canada?"

Record Staff
LENNOXVILLE

The Eastern Townships Resource Centre is holding its first scholar-in-residence lecture on Wednesday, Feb. 4 at Bishop's University. The talk is scheduled for noon in the Cleghorn Room in McCreer Hall.

As part of its scholar-in-residence program, Bishop's welcomes a visiting scholar from the State University of New York College at Plattsburgh. This program is due to be launched during the first week of February.

Christopher Kirkey, who is director of the Center for the Study of Canada and a full professor of political science at SUNY Plattsburgh, will be at Bishop's offering several lectures on Canadian foreign policy, American foreign policy and Quebec politics.

On Feb. 4, under the title "Where is Stephen Harper taking Canada?" Dr. Kirkey will explore how Canadian foreign policy has evolved under the leadership of Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

In 2011, Harper secured the majority that he had been seeking since the Conservative's minority election victory of January 2006. Among other things, the victory resulted a series of policies and practices that have re-oriented and could fundamentally change the direction of Canadian foreign policy.

The shift in priorities away from Canada's traditional post-Second World War focus on liberal internationalism, Europe and the U.S., has positioned Ottawa with a clear focus on the use of force in international politics, and emerging markets. The core elements of this strategy appear to be a demonstrated consistent willingness to pursue, in partnership with longstanding allies, a combat-oriented mission for Canada in world affairs, and a clear interest in enhanced relations with China, India, Brazil and other emerging economies.

This conversation will explore these significant shifts in Canadian foreign policy under Harper.

The event is free to the public.

"As far as I am concerned, this event is a part of the major leagues," said Philippe Lapeyrie

Sherbrooke food fest back for seconds

By Gordon Lambie
SHERBROOKE

The Découvertes Savoureuses food fair is coming back to Sherbrooke for a second edition at the end of this month.

This year's event, once again organized by the Sherbrooke-based strategic growth agency for the agricultural sector, Groupe Agrostratégies, the fair will bring together nearly 80 exhibitors from across the province to present a wide variety of 100 per cent Quebec-made products.

"The primary mission of Découvertes Savoureuses is the promotion of Quebec products and networking consumers and all of the workers in the field," explained Yves Chagnon, president of the food fair's organizing committee.

As with the inaugural event, the fair will take place at the Sherbrooke conference centre and will adhere to the same format of food producers at booths in an open exhibition hall that is common to most events of this kind.

Unlike last year, however, the Découvertes Savoureuses team has decided to do away with the tasting tickets that are fairly standard in the world of food fairs, in favour of a one-time, slightly higher entry fee.

"As far as I am concerned, this event is a part of the major leagues," said Philippe Lapeyrie, the Sherbrooke-born sommelier who is serving as the fair's spokesperson for the second year in a row.

"There were 6000-7000 visitors last year. If we compare that to the Salon des Vins de Quebec in Montreal, they draw 10,000-15,000 over four days in a city of 3.2 million people. I think that 7,000 over three days in the city of Sherbrooke is extraordinary."

Other than the change to the ticketing system, the two biggest changes to this year's event have to do with the Saturday and Sunday evening events.

For its first edition last year, Découvertes Savoureuses hosted a Saturday night "blind supper."

In that event, 395 diners were served a seven-course meal while blindfolded, on the idea that the sensory deprivation would accentuate the dining experience. This year, the meal will be served again, but this time to 500.

"During the meal last year, our spokesperson Philippe Lapeyrie turned to me and asked if I thought 400 people would be a world record," Chagnon said. "This year I looked it up, and it's never been done."

As a result of that discovery, all diners at this year's supper, which will be presided over by St. Francois MNA Guy Hardy, will be registered for verification and entry in the Guinness Book of World Records while also enjoying the delights of the dishes in front of them.

"It will be a truly unique event," the organizing committee president said.

Last year the food fair had no Sunday night special event, but Chagnon said that this year the timing worked out to do something quite special.

GORDON LAMBIE

"There was a hole Sunday night, and Feb. 1 is the Super Bowl," Chagnon said, explaining that Sherbrooke MNA Luc Fortin agreed right away to be the honorary president of a special gourmet Super Bowl party for 600.

Découvertes Savoureuses opens at 1 p.m. on Friday, and lasts until 5 p.m. on Sunday, not including the Super Bowl party.

Entry to the exhibition floor is $20, although Saturday and Sunday night's special events have a separate cost of $90 and $10 respectively.

More information about the event is available by calling 819 575-7025 or by email at info@decouvertes-savoureuses.com.

Assault sentence delayed until February

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

A Sherbrooke correctional officer convicted of sexual assault will have to wait until the end of February before learning his sentence.

Pre-sentence and sexological reports on Benjamin Trépanier-Beaulieu are ready, but sentencing submissions in the case have been held over to Feb. 27.

Trépanier-Beaulieu was convicted last November by Court of Quebec Judge Erick Vanchestein of sexual assault and unlawful confinement in an affair that had no connection to his employment.

The criminal events occurred on April 17, 2013 at Trépanier-Beaulieu's home and involved a young woman he had met on social media.

According to the evidence, the accused and victim had been drinking at a party when the acts in question occurred. The events took place first in the spa, then in the bedroom of the accused. Pictures of the bruises suffered by the victim to her breast and thigh during the evening were filed in court.

The judge did not accept Trépanier-Beaulieu's claim that the sexual activity had been consensual.

Sherbrooke murder plot foiled?

A call from a member of the public may have allowed Sherbrooke Police to prevent a murder and led to the arrest of two individuals on suspicion of attempted murder over the weekend.

Police arrested the two, a man and a woman in their 40s, in Fleurimont late Saturday afternoon. The two, from Sherbrooke, are scheduled to appear in court today.

Anne Hill: Keeping it interesting at 86

By Matthew McCully
Special to The Record
NORTH HATLEY

Is it true that 10,000 hours of practice does a master make, as Malcolm Gladwell suggests in his book Outliers: The Story of Success? How about the adage, a Jack of all trades, a master of none: is that a good or a bad thing?

Well, according to 86-year-old Anne Hill of North Hatley, a jack of all trades is a master of living.

"I don't think I've hit the 10,000 hour mark on anything," Hill said, "except maybe raising four little kids," she laughed. She now has 11 grandchildren, and recently welcomed a great-grandchild into the world.

"I'm never bored."

Hill is a soft-spoken, shy woman. If you were to pass her on the street, you would likely get a nod and a smile.

What you would not get is the sum of experiences that led to that trip down the street. Hill's appreciation for everything she sees and does makes for a full and rich life.

Hill has seen quite a bit of the country. She was born in Vancouver, B.C. She has also lived in the Fraser Valley, and Shawinigan during her youth. She travelled to Sackville, N.B., where she earned a Bachelor of Arts before returning to the University of British Columbia for her teaching license.

And then, over to teach in Scarborough, Ont., before settling in St. Lambert with her husband 45 years ago.

She is now happily settled in North Hatley, to be near her youngest daughter.

"It's often the youngest that gets stuck with the parents," she joked.

Hill's present interests include drawing, writing, hiking and bird-watching.

"I feel very fortunate to be healthy," she said. "I don't know how much longer I'll be able to walk, but I will as much as I can," Hill insisted.

When you are 86 years old, you can say you attend a nude drawing class without blushing.

"It's the favourite activity in my life right now," she said.

Hill said she would have liked to study art, but was encouraged to pursue teaching instead.

"Now I take whatever classes are available. That's the kind of artist I am."

Hill was recently involved in a writing group that met at the North Hatley Library.

"Someone just said oh come along, so I did. It was really fun," she said.

Quite modest in her endeavours, Hill mentioned in passing that while in St. Lambert, she used to write plays for puppets at her church, so writing was not entirely new to her.

"We were given a prompt, and we would write for five minutes, and then we would share what we wrote."

MATTHEW MCCULLY

Anne Hill, 86, at her home in North Hatley.

Hill admits at first she was afraid of having to read her stories aloud in the beginning, but got used to it.

"It's amazing how a prompt can dig things up; memories you didn't know you had; out they come!"

While reflecting, Hill discussed her love of nature, developed as a child. While in Shawinigan, at that time known as Shawinigan Falls, she used to enjoy skiing.

"They weren't divided between cross-country and downhill at the time. There were no lifts or anything, we just skied," she said, describing the wide wooden skis with leather straps.

Hill said she and her family used to ski between the pines in the area. "They were only a little taller than we were," she said.

Years later she returned to the area and attended an art exhibition including landscapes from the area she had known as a child. "Where are all the pine trees?" she remarked, before realizing that in the fifty years she had been away, they had grown tall and spindly.

War had an impact on Hill's childhood. Her father, who had fought in the First World War returned overseas during the Second World War.

"I was 11 or 12 years old. My father went overseas for four years. They didn't bring soldiers back and forth back then."

Too old for combat, Hill's father spent the war planting trees in Scotland.

"We all became teenagers while he was gone. It was an adjustment for him," she said, adding that she was one of five children.

Hill has vivid recollections of being on the West Coast around the time of the attack on Pearl Harbour.

She was in Horseshoe Bay, north of Vancouver, at the time, and it was rumoured that Japanese submarines lined the coast under water. Families were told to stay in their homes with the windows covered.

"We all ran down to the beach, we didn't want to miss anything," she said. "We didn't know anything about war."

These days, Hill's time is spent enjoying the trees outside her window, her drawing classes, and the occasional splurge on high tea at Uplands in Lennoxville.

Not a person who enjoys being in the spotlight, a conversation with Hill demonstrated that when given the opportunity, she had a story to tell and valuable life lessons to share.

"My daughter subscribes to the paper, so I can't hide it," she laughed.

With 2014 confirmed as the hottest year on record, and 13 of the hottest 15 years having occurred since 2000, we can't afford to ignore the consequences.

SCIENCE MATTERS

Oil prices drop as global warming rises

By David Suzuki

With oil prices plunging from more than $100 a barrel last summer to below $50 now, the consequences of a petro-fuelled economy are hitting home — especially in Alberta, where experts forecast a recession. The province's projected budget surplus has turned into a $500-million deficit on top of a $12-billion debt, with predicted revenue losses of $11 billion or more over the next three or four years if prices stay low or continue to drop as expected. Alberta's government is talking about service reductions, public-sector wage and job cuts and even increased or new taxes on individuals. TD Bank says Canada as a whole can expect deficits over the next few years unless Ottawa takes money from its contingency fund.

It's absurd that a lower price on a single commodity could have such a profound economic impact, but that's what happens when you put all your eggs in one basket and fail to plan for such contingencies. With a population and oil-and-gas production profile similar to Alberta, Europe's largest petroleum producer, Norway, is also feeling the impacts. But much higher taxes on industry, majority state ownership of the country's largest oil-and-gas company and an approximately $900-billion sovereign wealth fund built from oil revenues are cushioning the fall.

Some see low fuel prices as good news, but there are many downsides. With driving becoming less costly, more cars and trucks could be on the road, which is good for the auto industry but bad in terms of pollution, climate change and traffic accidents. And because the price of oil is now lower than the cost to extract oilsands bitumen, the industry is starting to put the brakes on rapid expansion plans — bad news for workers and businesses in Fort McMurray and those heavily invested in the industry but good news for the planet.

Recent research shows most of Canada's oilsands bitumen — as well as all Arctic oil and gas, most of Canada's coal and some conventional oil and gas — must be left in the ground if the world is to avoid a global temperature increase of more than 2 C above pre-industrial levels, the internationally agreed-upon threshold for limiting catastrophic impacts of global warming. The report, by researchers at University College London's Institute for Sustainable Resources and published in the journal Nature, concludes a third of the world's oil reserves, half of gas reserves and more than 80 per cent of coal reserves must not be burned before 2050.

The study also found that carbon capture and storage, touted as one way to continue exploiting and burning fossil fuels, is too new, expensive and limited to make enough of a difference by 2050.

Study co-author Paul Ekins told National Geographic that putting hundreds of billions of dollars into fossil fuel exploration and development is "deeply irrational" economic behaviour. "What would be ideal," he said, would be to "use the opportunity of this fall in the oil price to start instituting a global carbon tax, which would take some of the volatility out of the prices." Removing fossil fuel subsidies would also help.

John Stone, a Canadian scientist and lead author on the most recent Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change report, told CBC the UCL study "is another wake-up call to snap us out of our denial of climate change."

With 2014 confirmed as the hottest year on record, and 13 of the hottest 15 years having occurred since 2000, we can't afford to ignore the consequences. According to researchers, the odds that natural variability is causing today's climate change are less than one in 27 million! It's astounding that, in the face of such overwhelming evidence from scientists worldwide, people continue to deny the problem exists or that humans are responsible and can or should do anything about it.

It's especially irresponsible when energy conservation and cleaner fuel alternatives offer so many economic benefits, including job creation, greater stability and reduced health-care costs. As world leaders prepare for the UN climate summit later this year, we must look at the recent market meltdown as an opportunity to shift away from fossil fuels. It'll be much easier and less costly to get on with it now than to wait until we're left with few choices.

DEAR EDITOR:

On Sunday, Jan. 4, my husband and I had a car accident at 4 p.m. I completely lost control in a bend. The road not only slants toward the ditch but, due to the fact that the entire road was a sheet of ice, I had no chance at all of correcting the direction of my car. I am very baffled as to why the trucks had not sanded/salted the road at all by 4:00. At least then I might have had some chance of staying on the road.

The impact of the crash threw me against my window and my left shoulder broke it. It was wearing my seat belt and was going well below the posted speed.

The police officer that arrived at the scene suggested calling the ambulance. She did and I was transported to BMP with the possibility of either a cracked shoulder or elbow or pulled ligaments. I arrived at BMP and was processed by the triage nurse. She didn't really ask me anything. She told the ambulance technicians to put me in a wheelchair and sit me in the waiting room by myself to wait my turn. I was suffering from dizziness and a large amount of pain from my upper back, shoulder, outer thigh, ankle, forearm and wrist. I tried to stand up to get in a wheelchair and became very dizzy. The ambulance technicians asked the nurse if I could lie down. They both helped me onto the bed before they left.

I laid there for quite a while and had to use the washroom. My husband and son arrived and brought a wheelchair in to help me. The nurse started grouching at me because they were taking me to the washroom. I asked if she or an aide would take me and she said no. My husband helped me into the chair and the nurse snapped at us saying that if he was going to take me to the washroom then he could not bring me back to lie down after, even though I was still dizzy and going through a lot of pain. I had to go out into the waiting room to wait.

I have noticed that there are multiple signs throughout the hospital stating that if a patient is disrespectful to a hospital employee they will be asked to leave. Why was it OK for this triage nurse to have a nasty attitude and an uncaring manner toward me or anyone else? Isn't a caring mannerism part of the medical profession? I did not go to the hospital because of some trivial thing or to waste her time. I had been in a car accident. I do not expect preferential treatment, but I would certainly appreciate being treated with a little common decency, especially since she is the first person that you see when you go to the hospital.

On a lighter note, the police officer and both ambulance technicians were very kind.

I would also like to express my complete gratitude to the Perry family on Wells Road for inviting us into their home and doing everything possible to make us comfortable while waiting for the ambulance, police and towing.

Also, all of my love to my husband, Larry, for keeping a level head during our ordeal together.

The Gaiters held a double-digit lead with five minutes to play but their inability to put the ball in the net down the stretch allowed the visitors to rally

Gaiter men split, women drop two

By Mike Hickey
Special to the Record

The Bishop's Gaiters managed to control the tempo this past weekend but could only manage a split in its back-to-back series with the Laval Rouge et Or.

Surprisingly, neither team was able to capitalize on home court advantage as the Gaiters downed Laval Friday night 72-57 in Quebec City while the Rouge et Or pulled out a 57-55 victory Saturday evening in Lennoxville.

The split left the teams tied for second place with identical 5-5 records, a game behind the first-place McGill Redmen while the Concordia Stingers improved their record to 4-4 after a sweep over the UQAM Citadins.

The Gaiters used a balanced attack to full advantage in Friday's win as four Gaiters scored in double figures. Matt McLean led the way with 15 points while guards Kyle Desmarais and Kareem Sy-Morrisette added 13 points apiece. Jonathan Bermillo came off the bench to score 12.

A lack of offence in the final quarter hurt Bishop's on Saturday night as they were held to their lowest point total in league play this season.

The Gaiters held a double-digit lead with five minutes to play but their inability to put the ball in the net down the stretch allowed the visitors to rally for a two-point victory.

"We held them scoreless for the first five minutes for the fourth quarter but we couldn't out them away," head coach Rod Gilpin said Sunday. "We didn't execute at either end of the court and Laval hit some shots when the game was on the line."

To make matters more difficult, Kyle Desmarais and Mike Andrews both fouled out with three minutes to play.

Majid Naji was the only Gaiter in double figures with 12 points.

The women continued to show improvement but are still winless in conference play after two close defeats to Laval.

On Friday a spirited fourth quarter rally led by veteran Eloisa Katz enabled the Gaiters to close a double-digit deficit to just four points at 65-61, with just over two minutes remaining in the game. However Laval responded with a 10-4 run to quash the Gaiters' upset hopes and win 75-65.

Katz finished with a team high 15 points while Edith Noblecilla and Noemie Hamel-Petit chipped in with 13 points apiece.

In Saturday's contest, both teams struggled to find any offensive rhythm as Laval managed to register a 48-36 win.

The Gaiters, who shot just 23.3 percent from the floor, were led by Hamel-Petit who tallied nine points and grabbed 11 rebounds.

SHERBROOKE

The Sherbrooke Phoenix was back into action this weekend, less than a week after a spectacular shootout win against Saint John. For the occasion, the Val-d'Or Foreurs and the Halifax Mooseheads, the last two league champions, were in town. Sherbrooke fell 4-2 to Val d'Or, but rebounded to defeat Halifax 7-4.

On Friday evening, against the Foreurs, a slow start from the Phoenix helped the visitors to gain a quick lead in the first period.

With Sherbrooke's Gabriel Fontaine in the penalty box for hooking, Julien Gauthier scored his 29th goal of the season. Shortly after that, his teammate Simon Tremblay would increase Val d'Or's lead to 2-0, with his 10th goal of the year.

The Phoenix played with more conviction in the second frame, and it paid off. On a power play, David Storto scored with a shot from the blue line that went past Val d'Or's goaltender Etienne Montpetit, to reduce the gap to 2-1. Five minutes later, Storto would hit the net again to make it 2-2.

After being hooked by Anthony Beauregard on a breakaway, Sherbrooke's defenceman Alexis Vanier was awarded a penalty shot; however, his shot was blocked by Montpetit.

Nevertheless, the Phoenix lost one of its key players during this span, when Jeremy Roy left the game after being checked from behind by Jeremie Fraser, who was ejected from the game for the hit. Roy would be diagnosed with a concussion.

The visitors added insult to injury with two goals in a minute, from Gauthier and Nicolas Aube-Kubel, putting the game out of reach for the home team.

The second and third periods were marked with many penalties on both sides, with the teams combining for 59 penalty minutes overall.

Val d'Or went 3-for-9 on the power play, while Sherbrooke was 2-for-7.

After Friday's game, Sherbrooke's head coach Judes Vallee admitted that it has not been an easy game for his team. "It was a frustrating game", he said. "Even if we were able to come from behind and had chances to score, we have not been able to take advantage of it."

On Fraser's hit on Roy, Vallee mentioned that his team will not shy away at sending the videotape to the league.

The following day, the Phoenix had a meeting with the Halifax Mooseheads and their star player Nikolaj Ehlers. Like the day before, Sherbrooke lacked rhythm in the opening frame, and the visitors scored twice. Shortly after the 10-minute mark, Philippe Gadoury scored his 19th goal of the year, on a power play. Thirty-one seconds later, Samuel Leblanc increased Halifax's lead to 2-0. In the last minute of the period, Cameron Darcy put Sherbrooke on board, with his 11th goal.

In the second stanza, Sherbrooke's Nicolas Poulin tied the game at 2-2, with a shot from the faceoff circle. Then, the Phoenix would take the lead with a goal from Storto. Halifax later re-took the lead, with goals from Connor Moynihan and Timo Meir, but Wieser replied with his 31st, tying the score at 4-4.

In the third period, Wieser, Storto and Darcy added an additional goal to their stats, giving the Phoenix their 25th victory of the season.

Sherbrooke was 1 for 2 on the power play, while Halifax was 2 for 8.

In his post-game comments, Judes Vallee was satisfied with most of what he saw. "We have showed character. We were losing 2-0 and we came back. The penalty kill did a good job. However, it seems like we have some difficulties in the first period. We will have to correct that facet of our play against Blainville-Boisbriand."

The Phoenix are back at home on Wednesday night, when they host the Drummondville Voltigeurs. Faceoff at the Sports Palace is set for 7 p.m.

Phoenix sink Armada in OT

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

The Phoenix closed out their weekend with a come-from-behind 4-3 (OT) road win over the Blainville-Boisbriand Armada.

Swiss forward Kai Schweri was the hero, as he scored a natural hat trick to lead the Phoenix back from a 3-1 third-period deficit. He scored at 7:48 and 18:44 of the third, and added the game-winner at 2:53 of the extra session. All three of this goals came on the power play.

The other Sherbrooke goal came from Carn Neill, while the Armada got a pair from Nikita Jevpalovs and a single from Marc-Antoine Bouillon.

Alex Bureau made 34 saves to pick up the win. Samuel Montambault took the loss for Blainville-Boisbriand, who out-shot Sherbrooke 37-29.

The Phoenix finished 4-for-6 on the power play, while the Armada were 1-for-7.

Canadian Eugenie Bouchard advances to quarters at Australian Open

By Bill Scott
The Canadian Press
MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA

Canadian Eugenie Bouchard had to work hard on Sunday after an easy opening set to become the first woman into the quarter-finals of the Australian Open with a 6-1, 5-7, 6-2 defeat of Irina-Camelia Begu.

Bouchard, the No. 7 seed, who raced through the opening set in 29 minutes, ended up spending just over two hours in what turned into a battle with her Romanian opponent.

Bouchard, from Westmount,

Que., and Begu spent more than an hour playing a second set littered with seven breaks of serve, with the Canadian losing a 3-1 lead and eventually the set on a double-fault.

Bouchard took a toilet break and said she gave herself a pep talk.

"I took a good long look in the mirror, and kicked myself in the butt a bit," she said.

"Back on the court I relaxed and tried to play my game. I always do better when I do that.

"I felt like I started really well, I wanted to keep it going," said Bouchard. "She had some good shots and my level totally dropped — that's not really good... It's disappointing for me because I want to play so well and I want to be perfect. That's not possible. I started being a bit less aggressive, a bit too passive, and that's not my game at all."

"She could string together a few good points here and there, hit some good shots and serves and got some confidence in the second set. But I learned a lot and I'll try to make sure it doesn't happen next time."

Bouchard corrected many of her errors in the final set, breaking in the first game on the way to the win.

She will now play second seed Maria Sharapova, who beat China's Peng Shuai 6-3, 6-0.

"I'm happy that I could regroup and play a bit better tennis in the third. I want to build on that for the next match."

Bouchard has lost all three of her matches against five-time Grand Slam champion Sharapova — including two at the French Open over the past two seasons.

"I think it's always great to play the best players in the world," said the Canadian.

"We've had a couple matches, and a good match last year, I think I was close.

"But I've progressed a lot since then, I really want to take it to her, go for my shots. It's more fun when I play that way, too. I had more fun in the third set today. So I want to try to do that."

Bouchard, the only Canadian to reach a Grand Slam singles final when she played Petra Kvitová at Wimbledon last summer, had never faced Begu. The 42nd-ranked Begu upset ninth seed Angelique Kerber in the opening round.

Newer hearing aids are often invisible

ASK DOCTOR K
By Anthony L. Komaroff, M.D.

DEAR DOCTOR K: After years of living with hearing loss, I am soon going to get my first hearing aid. Anything I should know ahead of time to be prepared?

DEAR READER: The first thing many new users of hearing aids notice is that sounds seem strange. Think of how different your own voice sounds when you listen to a tape recording of yourself.

You may also be more aware than ever before of your footsteps, your car's motor, the sounds you make as you chew your food, and just about any other environmental noise. Many hearing aids can be adjusted to lower the volume of unwanted noise. But more important, with time, your brain will get better at tuning it out.

You may also find that the hearing aid doesn't do one of the things you'd most hoped that it would: understand every word in a conversation. Remember that hearing every word isn't necessary. The goal is to follow conversations easily in different environments. Continue to rely on the visual cues that you've been using to understand words, like lip movements, facial expressions and hand gestures.

Getting used to a hearing aid takes time, usually at least a month to six weeks. But it may take as long as several months. If you don't notice a marked improvement by the end of the first month, however, your hearing aid may not be right for you.

While you're adjusting to your hearing aid, remember these tips:

— Start off with one-on-one conversations, which are the easiest ones to understand. Gradually work up to conversations with two or more people.

— Realize that understanding conversations in noisy places, such as restaurants and parties, will be difficult at first. With time and practice, your ability to hear in these settings will improve. Watch the person who is speaking so you can pick up gestures and other visual cues. Position yourself close to the person who is speaking.

— Install a telephone amplifier at home to help you hear telephone conversations.

— If using the phone is a problem, consider email or text messaging instead.

— Finally, wear your hearing aid. The more you use it, the faster you are likely to adjust to it, and the better your hearing will be.

I'm often surprised by how some of my patients resist my suggestion that they get a hearing aid. They remember what hearing aids used to look like: large, unattractive objects stuck inside the ear, visible to everyone. They're concerned that a hearing aid will make them look old.

They also have heard that hearing aids don't improve the most common problem they have: hearing conversations in noisy places. They've heard that hearing aids may make the voice of someone speaking to them louder, but that they also make the noise louder. So it's not easier to hear conversations.

Today's hearing aids are tiny and often invisible. They also are a lot better at amplifying a voice nearby without similarly increasing the noise.

At 13, she started taking drugs and running away from home

MONDAY, JANUARY 26, 2015

Annie's Mailbox

Dear Annie: I have three siblings. The youngest sister, "Jess," has always had problems. At 13, she started taking drugs and running away from home. She spent five years in prison, and when she got out, my older sister offered to let Jess live with her so she could get a job and go to school.

Jess was OK for about 18 months. Then she developed back problems and was unable to work. After several disagreements with my sister, she moved out to live with her boyfriend, whom she later married. It's been downhill from there.

A few nights before Thanksgiving, Jess knocked on my door with her husband and their dog. Apparently, they are homeless. Neither of them can stick to a job on a regular basis. I'm sure Jess suffers from some type of mental illness, and now I think her husband does, too. I told Jess she could stay for three months and then would have to leave.

I hope she can get some assistance to help her get back on her feet. Do you have any guidance for me? — Lost and Confused

Dear Lost: It is compassionate of you to take in your sister and her family, but she needs more help than you can give her. The best thing you can do for Jess is to look into local social services that will help her and her husband with mental health counseling, job training and housing. Please contact the National Alliance on Mental Illness (nami.org), the U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development homeless assistance (hud.gov/homeless) and the National Coalition for the Homeless (nationalhomeless.org).

Dear Annie: My 29-year-old stepson refuses to give gifts to family members at Christmas. A few years ago, I asked him why, and he said he doesn't believe in the crass commercialism at Christmas. Yet he and his wife accept gifts from all of us on the holiday.

He also doesn't send a card or phone on his Dad's birthday or mine. What do we do? Do we respect his views on commercialism and not give him gifts? Do we ignore it and hope he comes around? He and his wife earn plenty of money and can afford it. But that's beside the point. It is the effort and caring that is lacking.

— Wondering

Dear Wondering: It is perfectly logical to stop buying presents for him, saying, "We know you don't support the crass commercialism of the holiday, so we are respecting your beliefs and not purchasing any gifts for you." Of course, that won't help the relationship, which seems a little strained. This is your stepson, so Dad should handle it. Has Dad told him how much it would mean to get a call or card on his birthday? Some kids simply don't connect the dots or realize the importance of remembering a loved one's special day. It helps to remind them. Gently.

Dear Annie: This is in response to "PO'd in New York," who said you two "need a lobotomy" for telling readers that doggie paw prints don't belong on a sympathy card.

Annie, I have had pets, mostly cats, since I was 6 years old. I have a pet cemetery in my backyard where five of my beloved cats are buried. I have two pet rescue cats whom I love with all my heart. They are a part of my family. But I would never, ever sign their names or put their paw prints on a sympathy card. In fact, I would be terribly upset if someone sent me a sympathy card with their animal's names and paw prints on it.

I just had to let you know that not every animal lover agrees with "PO'd." — A Cat Lover in Connecticut

Dear Annie: My mother is 90 years old. She recently loaned one of my nephews a large sum of money to purchase a house. "Todd" and his wife borrowed enough for the house, a new washer and dryer, and then more for homeowners insurance and property taxes. They moved in last August and have not paid anything toward the principal or interest.

My mother took the money from her savings, paid for the property in full, and let the couple put the house in their names. When Mom got the loan agreement papers drawn up, Todd told her he "didn't feel comfortable signing" and he didn't. Today, neither Todd nor his wife acknowledge the loan or take responsibility for payments.

In no way was this supposed to be a gift. This was made clear to them when they asked Mom for the money, because they could not get the money from any bank. They agreed to everything until it came time to sign the papers.

Since then, they have refused to answer the door when Mom goes to the house, and will not answer or return phone calls from her. But he still had the nerve to call her when he needed money — and she gave it to him!

My mother has spent most of her savings on Todd, and the pension she receives every month is not enough to cover her expenses. Is this elder abuse? What can we do? — Love My Mom

Dear Love: Taking financial advantage of your mother is indeed a form of elder abuse. The National Center on Elder Abuse (ncea.aoa.gov) lists information about elder abuse, as well as where to report it in your mother's state. Please do so before any more damage is done.

Dear Annie: I read the letter from "Animal Lover," whose son and his wife are neglecting their cat. I was shocked and appalled by all of them. "Animal Lover" is worried about this coming between her and her son. I would like to think she would be more worried about the cat's condition.

Her son should not be allowed to have any type of animal for a pet. If she has any decency and backbone, she would stand up for what is right and take the cat to the vet, with or without her son's permission. And if he or his wife said a peep about it, she should call the authorities immediately and let the chips fall.

And why didn't the vet take action? Isn't that part of his or her job? Mom should stand up to her son and do what is right. Now. — J.W.

Dear J.W.: We were bombarded with letters similar to yours. Here's one that is less emotionally charged, but with good advice:

Dear Annie: This is for "Animal Lover," whose son's cat is neglected. Reporting this to the authorities may well result in the cat being seized and euthanized, and the owners billed for euthanasia.

Dental disease is a frequent issue in aging pets, and may go unnoticed until far advanced, especially in a skittish cat. While not condoning the owner's lack of concern, it must be said that there are pets that suffer from chronic conditions that never are cured, despite the best efforts of owners and veterinarians. Skin conditions and digestive problems are long-term health management challenges for many pet owners.

That said, "Animal Lover" should make a veterinary appointment, collect the cat and have its medical needs taken care of. There's already a rift with her son over this, and he obviously is not going to take care of the dental problems. Mom may as well handle it as fret over it. — Loving My Shelter Dogs

Dear Annie: I am a female resident physician. In medical school, I fell in love with "Jay," a classmate. We have been together for four years. Jay is currently a resident physician in another state.

Two years ago, I brought Jay home to meet my father and stepmother. Some of Jay's favorite topics of discussion are American history and politics. My father deemed him aggressive and argumentative. Dad also says Jay doesn't really love me because he didn't hug or kiss me during that visit. In actuality, I had asked Jay to tone down the PDA in front of my father. Later, my stepmother butted in and told me that my whole family hates Jay, which is a complete lie and wreaked havoc on my relationships with my mother and sister.

No matter how much I tell Dad that Jay is a good man, I cannot override his first impression. Jay has not been invited back, so that makes it doubly hard to let Dad see a different side of him. My mother says Dad secretly hopes Jay and I will break up due to the long-distance relationship. But we see each other every month and are very much in love.

Last April, Jay proposed. We're both buried in student loans, so there is no engagement ring at the moment, and we have no set plans for a wedding. We've shared the news only with Jay's family and our closest friends.

My father and stepmother do not know, and I am terrified to tell them. Dad has a history of cutting people out of his life over petty things. (He once stopped speaking to his own mother for five years.)

Dad abandoned our family when I was 13 in order to marry my stepmother. Since then I've bent over backward to be the perfect daughter. This stresses me out. I don't want my relationship with Dad to crumble. Any advice? — Dr. Confused

Dear Dr.: You cannot live your life to please your controlling father. Part of being an adult is making your own decisions and having the courage to stand by them. If your father stops speaking to you, so be it. Get counseling if you need help.
