News in brief

Dutch fire

AMSTERDAM (Reuters) — Amsterdam's biggest fire since the Second World War today reduced a big department store to ashes and threatened the nearby Netherlands royal palace.

The blaze spread to adjacent stores and a bank. People fled from nearby homes in their nightclothes.

Civil defence men were on the alert to guard the royal palace from flying sparks.

Damage may exceed 5,000,000 guilders (about $1,400,000).

Adjourned

OTTAWA (CP)—The federal investigation of Great Lakes labor strife, one of the hottest reviews of Maritime trade unionism in history, heads next month into its final round of hearings.

Mr. Justice T. G. Norris, 69, of Vancouver, adjourned his one-man inquiry Friday for two weeks.

He will resume it here March 4 to hear witnesses from Reoch Steamships and Canada Steamships Line, then move straight into final arguments from all major parties that have appeared before him in the last six months.

Disenchanted

VIENNA (AP) — Hundreds of Negro students from Africa today were reported waiting for funds for transportation to join an exodus from Bulgaria. Twenty Ghanaian students quit the Communist country Friday charging racial discrimination.

Radio Ghana quoted the Ghanaian ambassador to Sofia as saying he believed all African students in Bulgaria, about 400, would leave. The ambassador, J. L. Appah Sampson, said in Amsterdam, where he accompanied the Ghanaian group, that all would have left already if they had the money.

"We have been called black monkeys and jungle people and we were treated like dirt," one of the Ghanaians, Robert Kotey, 25, said.

Welcome Queen

CHRISTCHURCH (AP)—The biggest crowd ever seen in Christchurch lined the eight-mile route to the city today to welcome the Queen and Prince Philip on the last leg of their tour of New Zealand.

A children's choir of 2,800 voices and 20,000 other children massed in Lancaster Park in hot, sunny weather to welcome the Queen.

She was wearing an aqua blue frock, coat and matching accessories.

Land safely

MONTREAL (CP)—A Trans-Canada Air Lines DC-8 jet, carrying 126 passengers from the Montreal area and a crew of 10, landed safely at Montreal International Airport early today when instrument trouble forced it to turn back on its charter flight to Zurich, Switzerland.

The passengers, skiers from the Laurentian area surrounding Montreal, continued their flight on another DC-8.

TCA spokesmen said instruments in the first aircraft, began to give faulty air speed and altitude readings over Maine. The trouble cleared up as the plane made its final approach for the landing here and "there was no panic or trouble."

Hunger line

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP) — G. Mennen Williams, U.S. assistant secretary of state for African affairs, Friday witnessed the effects of a month-long food blockade of Leopoldville.

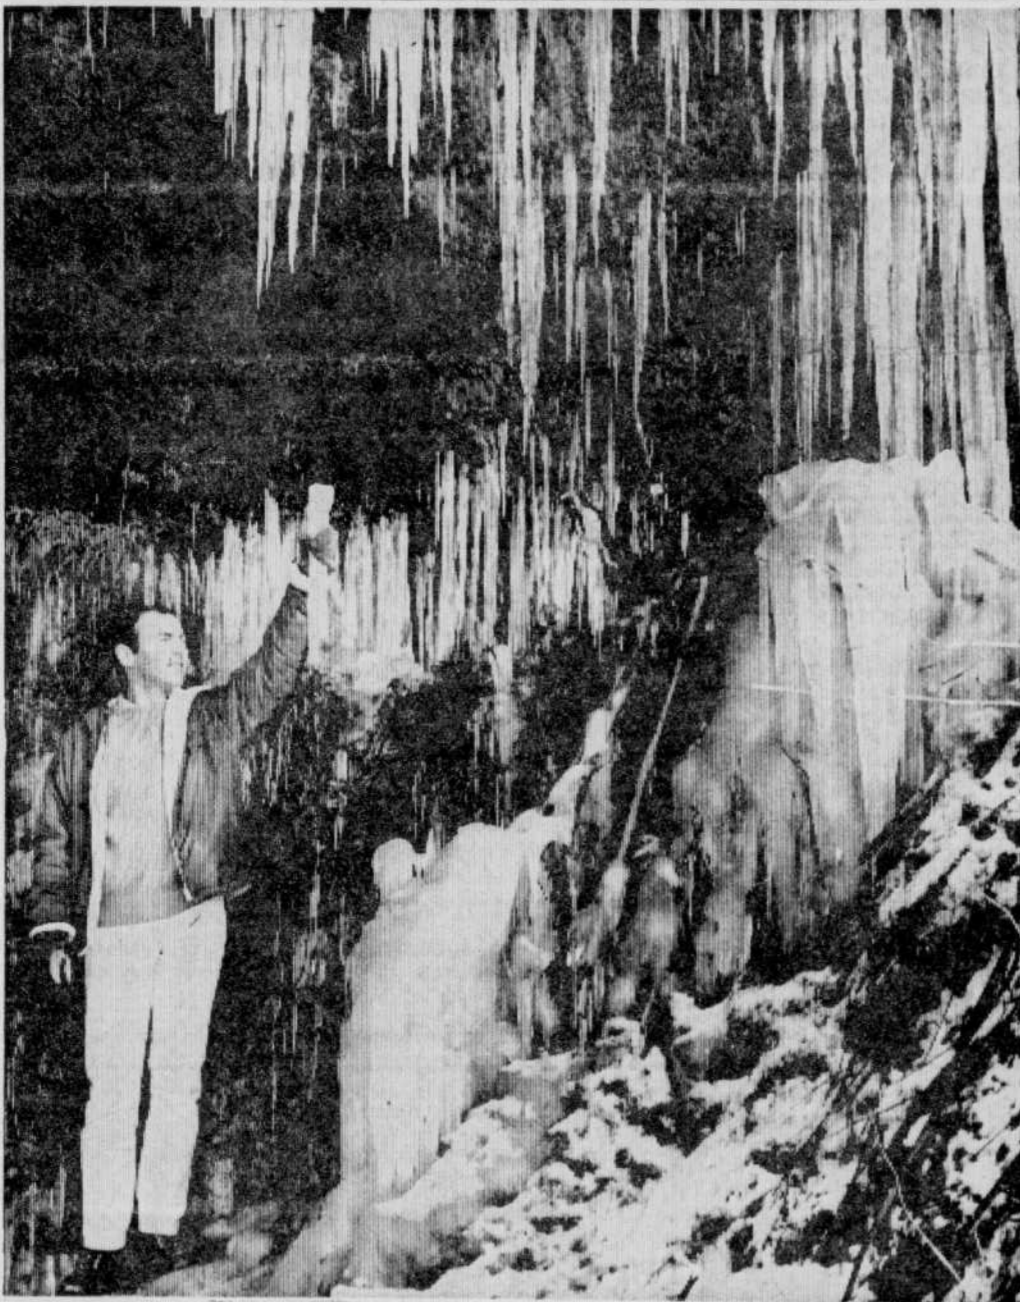

As Williams looked on, thousands of hungry Congolese lined up for a ration of dried beans—one pint a person to last two weeks.

Many Leopoldville residents have little else because staple foods from neighboring Central Congo province have been cut off by the blockade.

Quebec road deaths soar

QUEBEC (CP) — "I'm free as the breeze, 'Who's to stop me and why? 'I can do as I please, 'Open road, open sky."

Each line in this buoyant verse contains a fallacy when applied on a modern highway crowded and busy, patrolled by police, the conduct of its travellers closely legislated. Yet, more aptly than a safety jingle, it seems to sum up the spirit in which many Quebecers drive.

"They take chances," says Jacques Verreault, deputy minister of transport and communications, summing up the drivers' attitude.

Things got so bad on the Trans-Canada Highway between Montreal and Quebec City last spring that Roads Minister Bernard Pinard threatened to close it. The 200-mile stretch accounted for 16 deaths in three weekends.

RECORD DEATH TOLL

"If such a death rate were attributed to some contagious disease, people would scramble to get vaccinated," said Prudentia, a safety organization. "Immunization against human error is within reach of everyone, but no one cares to take advantage."

"The only protection against potential killers is defensive driving and strict observance of the highway code."

If Prudentia's message got across, the result wasn't evident in 1962 statistics. They show that in Quebec province 1,119 persons were killed in 107,458 accidents, both record figures, though statistically 1953 with half as many drivers and 900 deaths is still the worst year.

During Christmas, weekend, with weather bad, highways icy and constant warnings going out from police, there were 23 deaths.

Insurance adjusters currently are working overtime on what some call the worst winter for accidents. Bad weather, urban congestion and other physical factors are blamed, but the carefree attitude always ranks high when the accident toll is discussed.

BLAME CARELESSNESS

Traffic Chief Gerard Givard of Quebec City and Lucien Descent, Eastern Quebec chief of the Quebec Provincial Police, both list carelessness as a major factor.

The Chronicle-Telegraph, in an editorial, suggested that city council ditch a plan to widen a major artery because Quebecers had not learned to drive on a road with more than two lanes.

But there are hopeful signs that the 1962 toll is just a hang-over from the post-war era when enforcement didn't keep up with increase in traffic.

In those years, the provincial police didn't patrol most highways at night. Under-staffed municipal police forces also found it difficult to keep a close eye on motorists, and some still do.

No one lost more

Has Hees killed career?

George Hees, Tory heir-apparent, may have buried all hope of being leader of his party and Prime Minister of Canada by his sudden resignation.

The past week has produced a shocking trail of broken careers on Parliament Hill.

Before last week, the big complaint among idealists in Ottawa was that Cabinet ministers never resigned on great matters of principle. Well, now they do.

But the cost can be political obliteration. Hees, Harkness and Sevigny are out. But what about the others, who rebelled, then stayed? Their careers are certainly on the slide, too.

However, no one staked more or lost more than Hees, who rose higher and had further to fall. But right of succession, he was deemed Dief's Dauphin.

What is he, politically, today?

Hees, said Northern Affairs Minister Walter Dinsdale last night, has "abandoned all prospects of party leadership in leaving the ship at this time."

Agriculture Minister Alvin Hamilton said Hees did a "shocking thing" in resigning from the cabinet.

Significantly, both critics are westerners.

Hees, in his bid to topple Dief as leader of the party, ran into the same old solid western roadblock that has snagged so many eastern predecessors.

Hees was booed. And he is rumored to be among those who wept. The experience was certainly traumatic for him.

Stories of the palace revolt have belabored its sinister aspect. But little has been said about why these ministers, with so much to lose, acted to dethrone Diefenbaker.

In all cases, there could be criticism of their actions, but not of their honesty in acting the way they did.

Hees and the others acted because they genuinely believed that what the Prime Minister is planning as an election campaign — anti-Americanism and a policy of no nuclear weapons in Canada — is wrong for Canada.

Maybe time will focus more attention on this.

It would have been so much easier for Hees and the others to have sat through an ugly campaign — as they saw it — and sat pretty.

And Hees' chances of succession would have been intact. He threw a lot away — and who at the start of an election campaign, has stopped to ask why?

Hees is not simon pure in the events of the past week.

Hees — and the others — backed away from their first threat to resign if Dief did not quit. Then, convinced that the caucus would not oust Dief, he pitched for party unity and mocked the press for its stories of a palace revolt.

Then he salvaged his reputation and resigned on Saturday.

The rumor here is that Hees, until Friday's Cabinet meeting, believed Diefenbaker would ease up on anti-Americanism and no-nuclear-arms for Canada in the election.

On Friday, he and Pierre Sevigny, associate Defense Minister were convinced that nothing would stop Diefenbaker. Unannounced, they marched into Diefenbaker's office and handed in their resignations.

Where does all this leave Diefenbaker?

Incredibly, Diefenbaker if rallying and moving into the election fight with a resilience that has stunned everyone.

After his near defeat in June, the Prime Minister sank into a depression. The fight with his own ministers has snapped him out of it, according to reliable sources here. He fights best with his back to the wall.

Canada, in this campaign, may see a bristling, burning, battling Diefenbaker — if he sees it through.

Canadian politicians campaigning for election (or reelection) will, at some stage in the campaign, drag in the inevitable plank: Canada's image abroad.

Some will think it is a good image, others will think it is terrible; all will express concern over how our allies, the neutral, and potential enemies view us.

Well, just what is the Canadian image overseas? During the past few years I've done considerable travelling in Europe, Africa, the Middle East and Asia. And I've had a fair chance to assess "Canada's image" first hand.

I think the Canadian image is virtually non-existent. People in other lands have no strong opinions about us. Few cars.

We like to regard ourselves as potential leaders in a non-nuclear world. This is nonsense; few countries are aware that we DON'T already have U.S. nuclear weapons on our soil, few care either way.

With the exception of South Africa, Canada is regarded largely as a huge, rich, empty area north of United States and the Canadian personality is viewed as pleasant, blank and docile.

We have few enemies in the world; but we have few real admirers. We aren't suspect of anything; nor do we lead any world opinion.

We are simply there; others are mildly sympathetic and would, I think, react positively if your own leaders were more prone to make positive gestures.

At it is, Canada is an international lightweight. During the past year there's been a sudden interest in Canadian politics — especially from Canadians serving overseas with external affairs, with the U.N., with the army or simply in private business.

Since the federal elections last June I've been in 40 odd countries. And our representatives that I've met have asked two main questions.

"Tell me," they say, hunching forward and lowering voices to an intimate whisper, "what gives with the Social Credit, and what the hell are they anyway...?"

Frankly, I've found it awkward trying to give a sensible opinion about this political phenomenon that I don't really understand anyway.

The second question is more loaded — and just as inevitable.

After a shifty look around to see if any wrong ears are listening, Canadian diplomats ask: "and tell me, what do you think of Diefenbaker... is he popular at home?"

Both the above questions puzzle and disturb Canadians abroad.

There is little question that the Prime Minister is NOT popular among Canadians overseas.

This does not mean our foreign service personnel aren't loyal; they are and have a highly deserved reputation for competence, knowledge and understanding.

Canada's stand against Britain's gallant try to get into the Common Market surprised and annoyed most Europeans.

How is Canada's image doing these days? Travelling scribe finds it non-existent

NEW YORK (NEA) — After two months of the New York newspaper strike the Broadway stage has had a chance to assess the damage caused by the printers' strike.

The tabulation: One play "buried" and several more seriously hurt.

The play believed to have been sent to a premature closing because of the strike is "Tiger, Tiger Burning Bright." It opened a month after the strike began.

"We had one week to put our ads in the papers," says Sam Lurie, the show's press agent.

"Then came the strike. But we still had a week of rehearsals and two weeks of previews. By that time, the effect of the ads had worn off."

Laurie says the show would not have been "a runaway hit," but he is certain it would have had "a healthy run into April or May if there had been New York newspapers."

"We had rave reviews from the critics in the Times and News," Lurie says. "If we could have put in ads with excerpts from those reviews, we'd still be running. The strike definitely buried our show."

Of the other shows which have opened during the strike, several closed quickly, but the consensus is they would have anyway. Several others are still running. Most of these, the press agents claim, are struggling and would have been doing much better with a New York press.

Here is a rundown on the major new shows:

"The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Any More" — "We're being hurt," says a press agent Harvey Sabinson. "There's no other reason except the strike to explain the lack of response at the box office. It's a Tennessee Williams play and it got good notices. Ordinarily, people would be buying tickets. We're not doing badly, but not good, either. If it goes on, like this, it's bound to curtail our run. And it must be the strike; I still get calls from people, asking when it will open."

Clinical approach to politics

New ruler of Iraq is man of fiery temper

The new ruler of Iraq is a stocky, swarthy man with a fiery temper, flamboyant gestures and frigid emotions.

In a revolt as sudden and startling as that which overthrew the regime of King Faisal, Abdul-Ilah and Premier Nuri Said in July, 1958, Col Abdul Salam Aref has finally gained control of this country which is the size of the legendary Garden of Eden.

Ever since Brig. Abdul Karim Kassem toppled the pro-Western monarchy of Iraq, the country has been a huge question mark — for the East as well as the West.

The course it will take in the future will depend largely on its new ruler — Col. Aref, the first president of the "new" republic.

What sort of a man is he? From a Western standpoint, is he friendly? Can he be trusted? Is he "good" for Iraq?

Col. Aref is in his early forties and has a cold, clinical approach to politics that his former co-revolutionary never had. He is completely ruthless, where Kassem was torn with generosity and mercy.

Aref was thought by many to have been the "brains" behind Kassem's coup in 1958.

Kassem appointed him deputy premier and deputy commander of the armed forces — but quickly became disturbed at Aref's obsession to draw Iraq closer to Nasser's Egypt.

Kassem, to the day of his death, was an Iraqi nationalist who harbored suspicions against Nasser, Communists, the West and virtually all foreigners. He was a brooding, neurotic personality.

Two months after the revolution, Aref was packed off to Bonn as Ambassador to West Germany. Kassem soon recalled him and tossed him in jail for plotting to overthrow his revolutionary government.

I was in the Baghdad court when Aref was sentenced to death. The proceedings were televised and the population went on a mad binge of joyful revenge against Aref, the traitor.

Nasser and Aref were hanged in effigy; dead dogs were strung up on lamp posts with Aref's and Nasser's photos on them. A laborer in the port city of Basra was lynched by fellow-workers because he praised Nasser.

But Kassem showed mercy on his former friend and commuted the death sentence to life imprisonment. Then in September 1961 Aref was released from prison and placed in house arrest — and the fate of Kassem was suddenly sealed.

Aref began organizing and plotting with his surgeon's mind. And now he has killed Kassem and taken over the country. Reports indicate that bloody joy once again reigns in Baghdad — which shouldn't surprise anyone who knows the vagaries of Arab politics.

Some "experts" are optimistic because Aref is purging the country of Communists. This, ironically, is exactly what Kassem was trying to do too, after accepting too much of their support in the early days.

Aref will profit from Kassem's paranoid-like mistakes. Oil industries and foreign investors will get more co-operation and, presumably the country will move towards closer ties with Egypt.

Speculation that Nasser will try to absorb Iraq in some sort of alliance seem premature. Aref sees himself as a leader, not as a vassal or puppet of anyone, regardless of his personal admiration.

About Television

By CYNTHIA LOWRY

NEW YORK (AP)—The short, stocky man with a shock of black hair and the tall, handsome young fellow walked into the sleek, chic, expensive restaurant.

"Hello dere," exclaimed the maitre d'hotel, his facing breaking into a broad grin.

The captain said "Hello dere," grinning, while escorting them to a table.

"Hello dere" came from the busboy as he filled the glasses; the waiter as he presented the menus, from men and women patrons as they passed by the table. Marty Allen, the one with the hair, and Steve Rossi, the tall one, took turns answering pleasantly, but as the rain of greetings tended to interrupt the conversation, a little perfunctorily.

"Doesn't this sort of thing get to be a bit of a bore?" asked the reporter.

"Not really," replied Allen. "We'll start worrying when they stop saying it."

ON THE WAY UP

Allen and Rossi—the former a clown given to crazy clothes, kooky gestures and unexpectedly penetrating remarks on topical subjects and the latter a young singer with a fine voice and an adroit way of feeding a straight line — are a comedy team on the way up. They struck the public's fancy as semi-regulars on CBS' Garry Moore Show.

Allen's salutation, "Hello dere," has become as popular as Joe Penner's old "Wanta buy a duck?" That swept the country in the golden days of radio.

Back in 1938 and '40 when I was running around doing radio shows, I was asked if it were worth it," he recalled. "I said that even if I were a millionaire, I'd still want to be doing what I was doing."

"Now I have to change that. Even if I had $100,000,000, I'd still want to do my shows," he smiled happily. "Maybe some day I'll have to revise that figure."

Linkletter has been doing his television show on radio and television five times weekly since 1944, and that would seem enough activity for any performer.

"But I hadn't been on prime time network television since People Are Funny went off three years ago," he said. "That was a challenge. I didn't want to come back on just any show. I had turned down several that I didn't believe in. But this one seemed like a winner. The Art Linkletter Show will put some new twists on the tried-and-true audience participation formulas. The idea is this: A movie star or expert in some field will be shown a dramatization or real-life film of some human situation. At the crucial moment, the action will stop, and the guest will try to guess the outcome.

I.O.D.E. chapter holds 49th annual Knowlton meeting

KNOWLTON — The 49th annual meeting of the Sir John Fisher Chapter, I.O.D.E., took place in St. Paul's Guild Hall on Feb. 7.

The Regent, Mrs. LeRoy Shaw, was in the chair for the regular meeting, held preceding the annual session.

In the absence of Mrs. E. C. Mandigo, treasurer, the financial report was given by Mrs. F. M. Bowen.

A short discussion took place in which the regent pointed out that 1964 would be the 50th anniversary of the chapter and in view of this, a motion was passed that we invite the provincial chapter for the semi-annual meeting in November of that year.

It was decided to adopt a Forgotten Mental Patient in the Verdun Protestant Hospital and put some new twists on the tried-and-true audience participation formulas. The idea is this: A movie star or expert in some field will be shown a dramatization or real-life film of some human situation. At the crucial moment, the action will stop, and the guest will try to guess the outcome.

JACOBY ON BRIDGE

SOUTH THOUGHT LITTLE AND LATE

If you want to help your play by thinking, the time to do it is before you make mistakes, not afterwards when it is too late.

Dummy's ten of clubs held the first trick. Then South led the queen of diamonds from dummy, and after East played dummy's ten of clubs held the first trick. Then South led the queen of diamonds from dummy, and after East played dummy's ten of clubs held the first trick.

South continued with the jack of diamonds, went into the other huddle and let the jack ride. West took his king and led a diamond back.

South played on slowly, but unsuccessfully. He cashed his ace and king of spades and West dropped his jack. Then he cashed the ace and king of hearts and West dropped that jack also. Eventually, South wound up with only eight top tricks.

Had South only bothered to think at trick one he would have overtaken dummy's ten of clubs with the ace. Then he would have led the ace of diamonds and continued the suit until West took his king. West could have led anything but South would have a sure club entry to dummy and would have wound up with four diamonds plus two tricks in each other suit for a total of 10 instead of the eight he actually made.

Dear Mr. McVetty,
We are very pleased that your company chose the town of Bury in which to locate your Cedar Fence Plant. We are sure that you will like our town and the area around it. There is a great deal of Cedar in and about Bury and for many years there has been very small demand for it.

We have studied the schedule of Cedar that you plan to purchase as well as the prices you plan to pay for it. They are fair and should yield a good return to timber owners and woods operators. Therefore, we know that you will have a great many people wanting to furnish you with Cedar according to your requirements.

You can depend on us as well as the people of this area to cooperate and work with you. The fact that your company is located here should be a great deal for the local economy.

Very truly yours,
INDUSTRIAL COMMITTEE OF BURY
Chairman, Raoul Turcotte.

Neil Sorbie of the Cowansville Pack was presented with his Second Star showing he has overcome the many obstacles along the Jungle trails.

Death of child Arnolds get three months

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Arnold of Stanstead

A 32-year-old Stanstead farmer and his 23-year-old wife who pleaded guilty to a criminal negligence charge in the death of their five-year-old son were each sentenced to three months in jail by Mr. Justice William Mitchell in the Court of Queen's Bench Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Arnold, of R.R. 1, Stanstead, both pleaded guilty in the Court of Queen's Bench last Tuesday of negligence in the death of their son, Edgar, who died in a Coaticook hospital May 13, 1962.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold were found criminally responsible for the death of their son by a five man jury at a coroner's inquest at the Coaticook town hall May 18.

Dr. Andre Samson who examined the boy at the Arnold home one day before he died, said at the inquest the boy weighed less than 25 pounds, his mouth was covered with sores and his stomach was empty.

Dr. Samson was called to the Arnold home the day before the boy died by Father Romeo Laurencelle who was summoned by the boy's older brother who found Edgar unconscious on the front room floor of the house.

Dr. Jean Paul Valcourt of the Quebec Provincial Police who performed an autopsy, reported the boy died partly from head hemorrhage, as a result of being struck on the head, arms, stomach and legs, several times, and partly because of starvation.

At the inquest Mr. Arnold testified that Edgar was in the Coaticook tavern when he heard of his son's illness.

He told the jury he went to see his son in the hospital after he heard of his condition. "But there was nothing I could do, so I left after 20 minutes."

Neighbors of the Arnold's testified that Edgar on several occasions would go to their homes begging for food.

At a preliminary hearing last June 7th, the Arnold's were allowed out on $4,000 bail.

Essential cultural factor

Photography arrived in Sweden in 1839

From time to time we have been discussing photography in other parts of the world. Today we are going to talk about Sweden and what they are doing in photography and how.

It makes interesting food for thought on this popular profession and hobby.

All year we go about taking pictures for business and pleasure and at the same time this is going on all over the world.

Perhaps the films and paper in use in other places have tongue-twisters for names but the outcome is the same — good and bad pictures.

Although in Europe there appears to be more effort for quality in prints and a keen interest in computing exposures. Sweden, unlike most countries, has just begun to make its mark although there has always been great interest, it was only after World War II that photography was acknowledged as an essential cultural factor.

Photography arrived in Sweden in the fall of 1839, which was soon after its discovery. The invention was published in a Swedish translation.

The first portrait studio was opened in August 1841 by J. A. Seven, Sweden was visited by many foreign photographers, one of whom was the French photographer Derville, a photographer to King Oscar I, who came to the throne in 1844. In fact, it was one of Derville's portraits of the king that was used on the coins of the day.

Present day photographic activities in Sweden are accepted means of artistic expression and views supported by the big daily newspapers where mention is made of exhibitions and newly-published books for foreign as well as Swedish photographers.

Since 1945 a leading newspaper Svenska Dagbladet Swedens Times has presented a gold medal and a large money prize for the year's best photography.

The authorities have also taken notice, for in 1954 photographers were included among those entitled to the cultural scholarships where as before only artists, composers, actors, and authors received such scholarships.

This is proof of the recognition shown photography in Sweden by Stockholm's municipal gentlemen.

Professional photographers are also treated well. In 1954, scholarships worth $1,500 were given two photographers and the Sweden - America foundation also awarded $1,500 to a photographer to study in America.

Other institutions and associations, along with the Swedish Photographer's Association give scholarships to professional photographers.

Sweden imports about six million dollars yearly on photographic material and equipment. The country's only factory for the manufacture of photographic material makes chiefly X-ray film and some photographic paper.

There are 173 clubs for photographers which come under the National Association of Swedish photographers

A piecemeal approach to a test ban

The average interested person finds it difficult to understand why at least a beginning has not yet been made on a test ban agreement between the Western powers and Russia.

Geneva talks have been going on for a long time, and at various stages, it has seemed from all reports, that both sides were on the verge of some sort of concrete progress. Optimism, however, has always been rudely dashed to the ground as one thing or another caused talks to be broken off.

Now, once again, there appears to be room for some measure of agreement between the main parties. The area concerns on-site inspections of Russian territory. It will be remembered that it wasn't too long ago that Russia refused to consider this kind of police action. Now, according to Geneva reports, she is willing to grant two or three on-site inspections in Russian territory a year.

The Western powers have come down considerably in their demands, too. Originally, 12 to 20 inspections a year were requested. This has now been scaled down to eight to ten a year.

But there progress stops. The two are apparently separated on this issue by no more than by six to seven on-site inspections on Russian soil. The Russians, now that they have compromised a bit, have accused the Western powers of deliberately stalling.

The Western allies deny this.

The main difficulty seems to be that the Western allies are willing to permit virtually unlimited on-site inspection of their own territory once a test ban treaty is concluded. They obviously feel Russia, if she is negotiating in good faith, should be willing to do as much. The fear is that if the Russians are not prepared to reciprocate, it must be because they have something to hide.

This may be true, but at the same time, would it not be better to have a base upon which to build further progress? Two or three on-site inspections in Russia are better than none, even if they are not as satisfactory as eight or ten. Once the principle has been established and accepted in practice, it should be possible to go on from there. Searching for what our side considers perfection in one giant step seems to be leading nowhere. A piecemeal approach would seem worth attempting.

The average person's troubles are chiefly imaginary. Don't believe all you think.

Should curb non-confidence votes

One important parliamentary reform which may emerge as a result of the sorry showing made by the twenty-fifth Parliament of Canada is a curbing of non-confidence motions. Under present procedure, the defeat of the Government on almost any bill or motion it sponsors can force its resignation and precipitate a general election.

But its value has been seriously undermined by abuse which has unduly prolonged the life of sessions in recent years. During the last Parliament more than a dozen non-confidence motions were debated before the minority government was finally defeated.

No one would propose that the Opposition be deprived of its right to seek the overthrow of the administration on issues of national importance, but too often present parliamentary practise has prevented the expression of independent opinion by individual members. Realizing that any sign of disagreement with the Cabinet may bring about an election, MPs have shown a tendency to remain silent if they support the party in power on general principles. Similarly Opposition members feel compelled to criticize suggestions they basically favor.

One suggestion which deserves study is that the resignation of the Government be required when it is defeated in certain specific votes, such as the Speech from the Throne, the budget and on such measures as it makes a matter of principle, or when the Opposition calls for a showdown on a matter of national emergency, such as defence policy.

To declare that a Government must resign because a majority of the House members do not like a particular item in the estimates seems rather far-fetched.

The way some people drive it's wise to look both ways when crossing a oneway street.

Haydn S. Pearson's COUNTRY FLAVOR

Wood chopping rooted in democracy

Some day a perceptive historian-philosopher may explain to us the profound meaning of chopping wood in terms of the Canadian tradition. For unknown to most, wood chopping is rooted deep in the heart of democracy.

In old England, the forests belonged to the nobles. The ordinary man risked whipping before his children if caught cutting wood. He could, after a storm, go into a woodland and pick up fallen branches; hence the word "windfall" that means an unexpected harvest.

It was a wonderful world to the pioneers who left seacoast towns and trekked into the forests. They were men who were masters of their fate. The trees waited and a man could fell them for cabin and barn. For generations, it was an axiom that a man with axe, rifle and hoe could control his destiny.

It is good to go into a woodlot and swing an axe. The countryman looks over his maples and oaks, birches and beeches. He chooses the trees that should be harvested; he treats his woodlot as a continuing crop.

The colored chips fly through the air and paint a modernistic pattern on the granular snow. A rabbit dashes from a brush heap and Shep takes off in fruitless pursuit. Hour by hour the pile of fuel grows and a man thinks of the heat it will give and the flames that will paint pictures in his fireplace.

Chopping wood is an annual task, but no longer is it a major one with modern fuel. But a man wants wood for his hearth, and it adds meaning and deepens the pleasure when he knows he has chopped it himself. Perhaps in his heart, it gives expression to the freedom that is ours in this land. For in Canada, chopping wood is an exemplification of the philosophy that every man is his brother's equal.

Other papers say:

Local authorities losing autonomy

Control of the affairs of individual communities is gradually passing to the provinces. Control of provincial affairs may well be similarly moving towards Ottawa. The instrument of change is the dollar.

Whether the trend is good is wide open to argument, but it is well established and should be given careful public examination. Only in Quebec, where "provincial rights" have been among the leading political issues for many years, has any phase of the matter received the kind of public attention it merits.

Two old copybook maxims hold the essentials of the situation: "He who pays the piper calls the tune" and "You cannot have your cake and eat it, too."

When the province takes over the cost of providing a service for a community, completely or in large measure, it necessarily assumes, too, a large or final voice in deciding how that service will be run. Recent examples in New Brunswick include such large affairs as the hospitals and such relatively small ones as the registry offices.

The second maxim applies in the matter of assistance grants, where the senior government assumes only a portion of the burden. In programs such as the winter works scheme, some kinds of school and hospital construction help and social welfare, the community may receive large amounts, but only by paying its share and meeting the standards and conditions imposed. This sometimes results in local authorities spending more than is at all necessary on a project simply to qualify for larger assistance grants in the mistaken belief that they thus bet something for nothing.

This kind of keeping up with the wealthier Joneses can eventually lead to cries of "Stop! We can't afford your generosity!"

Albert County has pinpointed these problems in its brief prepared for the Byrne Royal Commission on Municipal Finance and discussed at its recent County Council meeting. The brief points out specifically that in the fields of education, social welfare, law enforcement, health, forest fire protection, workmen's compensation, registry office and assessing, the cost of operation is determined com-

Adventures with God

Making right decision difficult but it often means better life

Which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost. Luke 14:28.

There is a price to pay for everything, even for spiritual fulfillment, and wise is the youth who early in life faces this fact. This is the story of a practical teenager who counted the cost of discipleship and, on the basis of her findings, made her choice and left all to seek the pearl of great price.

We tell her story because in recent months a number of young people have asked us the question once posed by a rich young ruler: What must I do to inherit eternal life? And Jesus answered: "Go and sell all that thou hast... and come and follow me." Matt. 19:21. "But the young man went away sorrowful for he had great possessions."

He counted the cost and it was more than he was willing to pay.

More than a decade ago I found in the mail a letter nicely written in youthful script. It was postmarked from a country place.

"I am nearly 17," the writer said, "and finishing high school. I don't know where to go from here. I have made a scrapbook of your articles and hope you can help me."

"I have been disturbed about religion. But when I discussed my feelings with some older people, they advised me to forget religion and have a good time. Religion is for old people, they said."

For a year we exchanged

letters while she halted between two opinions. Then she came to the city to take a summer course for teachers. I invited her to dinner.

She was an attractive, intelligent, carefree member of a group of young people who roamed through the countryside in an old car having fun and, I suspect, doing some spending more money than ever, local councils have less and less voice in how that money will be spent or even in how much will be spent. A similar pattern is apparently developing in the relationship of the provincial and federal governments.

Does it matter, since the voters elect them all? The voters also pay the taxes. The answer must lie in another question: How far from home do you want the decisions made on what services your community will have and how your tax money will be spent.

While busier than ever and things that the girl could not quite approve.

As she spoke she hesitated momentarily, then went on: "I am afraid that if I follow the inner urge I may have to give up my friends. Perhaps I had better put off the decision until I am older."

"How do you know that you will live to be older?" I questioned. "You may be out with your friends sometime and life could be cut short for you. What then? But you must make your own decision."

Like the rich young man she went away sorrowful for she really had great possessions. Youth, beauty, talent and many friends.

Not long after her visit she wrote me telling a tragic but familiar story. Her friends had gone joy riding. There was an accident and one of them was killed.

An unexpected interruption had kept her at home. Why, she wondered, had she been spared. Later she joined the church of her choice but the inner conflict continued.

A speaking engagement took me to the town where she lived and I visited the desperately unhappy girl. She had just enough religion to make her miserable.

I suggested that she sit down with pen and paper and count the cost of all-out devotion to the Saviour whom she now professed to love and trust. A few days later I received a businesslike copy of her debits and credits.

She drew a line down the centre of the paper. Across the top of the first column she wrote: Things I give up. On the right Things I gain if I yield my all to God and His plan for me.

She listed 10 things she thought it necessary to give up: expensive clothes, friends, social position, entertainment, family ties, independence, certain luxuries, some books, my will, youth and security. She added a PS: pride, temper, impatience

Davis; Echoes secretary, Miss G. Stevens; Standard Bearer, Mrs. Arthur Preston.

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO

TEN YEARS AGO

(From the Record of Monday, February 16, 1953)

Dr. Fidel Castro became premier of Cuba four years ago today—in 1959—following the resignation and flight to exile of President Batista. Under Castro revolutionists had carried out intensive guerrilla warfare against the Batista regime about three years. Castro, a lawyer, had been a former leader of student opposition to Batista.

Gerald Waring REPORTING

OTTAWA — We just heard about the $150,000 trust fund that was being put together for the prime minister, and we were happy for him. All this while we had been thinking that after years of scraping by a $35,000 a year, he would sooner or later be reduced to living on the $3,000 a year pittance of an MP's pension.

The income from $150,000 should be about $10,000 a year. Along with the pension payoff for all the years the hon. member for Lake Centre pointed his accusatory forefinger at the Grit government, that makes $13,000. It's better than being a senator.

We got digging into this because, when we first heard of the $150,000, it was in the context of paying off the PM so he'd quit.

Not so, we learn from a Tory insider who misses little that goes on here. The fund was being put together by Senator W. R. Brunt from the contributions of public spirited citizens who wanted to compensate the PM for his personal financial sacrifices in working for $35,000 a year. Many of the doors on which the senator knocked were along Toronto's Bay St., where executives in the $100,000-plus bracket can afford to give the kind of sympathy Senator Brunt wanted for his worthy cause.

For Mr. Diefenbaker's sake we can only hope that Senator Brunt completed his altruistic task before his untimely death in an auto accident last year. Today the PM might go along Bay St. and not collect enough for a cup of coffee.

It may or may not be premature to write about this particular prime minister's need for a pension. That's something the voters will decide April 8. But in the larger context, it's at least undesirable that prime ministers should have to depend on the generosity of business tycoons.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King benefitted substantially from the generosity of friends in the business world, so that he left an estate valued at nearly a million.

Nobody was so solicitous about Louis St. Laurent — perhaps because it never occurred to anyone until after Mr. St. Laurent's shattering loss of the 1957 election. And for some reason hard to understand, tycoons are much more sympathetic to a prime minister's need for a pension when he's in office and doesn't need it, than when he's out of office and does need it.

So Mr. St. Laurent went back to practising law and directing companies to make a living. He also had his pension for service as an MP, or what was left of it after they had deducted his old age pension.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker has said he'll never go back to practising law. When you've been at the top, where the rarified air can give rise to delusions of grandeur, you may find it hard to revert to being an ordinary citizen with an ordinary job.

We've heard, and reliably, we think, that Mr. Diefenbaker does have one ambition after he ends his career as prime minister. That is to move into Rideau Hall for a term as governor-general. The job is hugely prestigious, the work's not hard, and the tax-free $48,000 salary plus virtually unlimited expenses is better even than Donald Gordon's taxable $75,000 as president of the CNR.

Thus, if the people re-elect John Diefenbaker with a majority on April 8, they also will likely be electing a governor-general to take office soon after July 1, 1967. If they don't — well, he can bless Senator Brunt.

TAKE IT FROM KATHY

Dear Kathy: Could you give some advice to a shy teen-ager? Would you recommend that someone with this problem go to college?—S. L.

Dear S. L.: Shyness can be just as painful as real physical distress or fear, and just as hard to conquer. I know, I spent years fighting the same problem!

If you had never tried swimming, the first few attempts might scare you a bit and wouldn't be very successful. The same thing is true of trying to get along comfortably with the rest of the world. The more often you try, the easier it will become. One person accepts you as a friend, another likes you and soon you become more confident, and others will accept you as you are.

Some people don't struggle quite long enough. They crawl into their shells, wishing they were popular and blame the rest of the world for their failings. Keep trying!

Figure out the things that make you self-conscious. Shy people are often so preoccupied with their own imagined failings that they don't have time to look outward and understand others.

E. T. Webster guest of Snow Shoe Club

An about face was made at the Sherbrooke Snow Shoe Club Wednesday evening when President Doug Jones and his executive handled the kitchen duties and waited on table while Honorary Purveyor Bill Lyon and his house committee took over the head table.

A short business meeting was held. The minutes were read by Don Cathcart. An application from Mahlon Sutton for membership in the club was voted on and unanimously accepted. A report from the finance committee read by Ed Smith indicated the club's routine operating expenses will exceed income.

PAUL HOULE

A funeral service was held for Paul Houle, a long-time resident of Sherbrooke, at the St. Jean Baptist Church in Sherbrooke at 10 a.m. today. He was 43.

Mr. Houle died February 21 at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston after a brief illness.

Born in Cookshire, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edouard Houle, he received his education at the Cookshire High School, the O'Sullivan College in Sherbrooke and the Sherbrooke Seminary.

In 1951 he married the former Therese Proulx of the Notre Dame de Perpetuel Secours Church in Sherbrooke and his wife and nine-year-old daughter, Christin, survive him.

A sister, Mrs. Herve Lessard, of Sherbrooke and a brother Raymond now living in Denver, Colorado also survive him.

Well-known in Sherbrooke, Mr. Houle spent many years in the hotel business. He was at one time associated with the New Sherbrooke Hotel and later was the manager of the Club Social in Sherbrooke.

Mr. Houle belonged to the Knights of Columbus and the Elks Club.

Interment will be at the Cookshire Cemetery today following the service.

Jehovah's Witnesses to hold a convention

Sherbrooke will be host to Jehovah's Witness delegates from Lennoxville, Granby, Cowansville and Richmond and other Eastern Townships area for their three-day semi-annual convention, this will take place Friday through Sunday, March 1-3, in the Mitchell School auditorium, Sherbrooke. This part of the assembly will be for the English-speaking congregations throughout the area.

This weekend local ministers and others from throughout the Eastern Townships will gather at the Kingdom Hall, 1068 Federal Street, to finalize plans for the forthcoming three-day gathering. Much preparation is required which calls for the service of some 21 departments. The cafeteria manager Earle Westcott, from Lennoxville must be prepared to feed over 100 delegates each day. Walter Graham has charge of the sign painting and platform decorations. Others in the assembly have similar assignments.

J. L. Calhoun, presiding minister for the local congregation, said, "The work of Jehovah's Witnesses is essentially an educational work." The theme of the assembly, "The Right Kind of Ministers' emphasizes that fact," he continued, "The program is designed specifically to aid Jehovah's Witnesses in their ministerial work. All sessions will be for Bible educational purposes. Also, the assembly is designed to encourage people of all ages to study their Bible more."

The three-day gathering is sponsored by the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, whose branch office for Canada is in Toronto. Representing the Watch Tower Society at this assembly will be Laurier Saumur, district supervisor for Quebec and part of eastern Ontario. Mr. Saumur will supervise the assembly and on Sunday March 3 will deliver the public Bible lecture "Who Will Win the Struggle for World Supremacy?"

The assembly will open Friday evening with a model ministry school supervised by Mr. Saumur, with local students taking part. The youngest student will be Scott Maclean. Other students will include Earle Westcott of Lennoxville, and Rose Maclean, Shirley Graham, Andy Fleming and others.

The service meeting program will follow the ministry school, and this will be directed by circuit supervisor, Carlos Prosser. He will speak on the theme of the service meeting, Continue Teaching and Declaring the Good News. Speakers on this portion of the program will include J. Calhoun, E. Haslett, H. Michel and G. Fuller.

Highlight of the Saturday sessions will be the Dedication and Baptism conducted by Laurier Saumur at 1.30 in the afternoon, and the special activity meeting in the evening.

Sunday's public talk and closing remarks by Carlos Prosser and L. Saumur will conclude the assembly, meetings are free, and the public is invited to attend all sessions.

still asked to get constituents off the hook for a little drunk driving, but they no longer do. And Quebec judges are getting tougher and tougher under pressure from public opinion.

J. A. Cantin, deputy attorney-general, says more and better-equipped police cars now are on the highways around the clock.

PATROL IN AMBULANCES
Provincial police patrol remote areas in ambulances and Quebec City may get a police ambulance system like Montreal's this year. Though costly, it is credited with saving many lives.

"We're asking the courts to be tougher," says Mr. Cantin. "Many judges are willing to comply because they understand this is one of the best methods to cut down the accident toll."

In 1961, only 5,000 Quebec drivers were suspended while in Ontario, the figure was 34,000. In Alberta, with a population one-fifth of Quebec's, there were about 15,000 suspensions.

After the grim Christmas weekend, Mr. Verreault and others urged coroner's juries to take a closer look at cases that might involve criminal negligence.

"They should be stricter," says Roland Baribeau, who compiles provincial accident statistics and who won't drive his own car outside the city. "I'm frankly afraid to," he explains, "I always take a plane or train."

STRIKE HURTS

sale and has not been affected.

"The Beauty Part" — Bob Ullman, press agent for this S. J. Perelman comedy starring Bert Lahr, says the strike has "killed the life blood of the theater—mail orders." Nevertheless, the show is doing well, but Ullman says, "If it weren't for the strike, we'd be the hottest ticket in New York."

To counteract the strike, he has gone in heavily for promotions — use of radio and television, stunts, tie-ins, streamers on trucks.

"Natural Affection" — William Inge's new drama, starring Kim Stanley is controversial and the critics either like it or hate it. Because of this, he thinks press agent Frank Goodman, it will survive. But he says, "We have to sell each performance as it comes. All I need is one big, solid ad in the papers quoting critics and playing up the controversy and we'll have a whopping success."

The general opinion is that it is in the mail order area—the people who read about plays in the papers and send in their checks — that the strike has had its greatest effect. Purchases at the box office are down, but not as drastically as mail orders.

Because of this, the press agents of plays which are about to open are taking steps to build a response in other ways.

Goodman, who represents Peter Ustinov's upcoming "Photo Finish," says they have an advance sale "now of $130,000 where they should have $225,000," considering the author and the cast of experienced Broadway stars. To build this figure, Goodman is going in heavily for radio and television time and has taken a page ad in a news magazine.

The value of the press is best exemplified by "Never Too Late," the comedy starring Paul Ford, Maureen O'Sullivan and Orson Bean which opened 10 days before the strike. It had little advance sale, but got rave reviews in all the papers.

"We now have a $250,000 advance," says press agent Mary Bryant, "and we've had to build another ticket window. We're taking orders through Labor Day. I think we could have had 10 times the advance if we'd had papers, but who knows? If we'd opened during the strike, we wouldn't be doing this well, I'm sure, I think we'd still be running, because word of mouth is fantastic, but we wouldn't have the big advance. And the only time a show feels safe is with a nice, solid advance sale."

Fashion Tips
Blue Magic
 Surprise fashion color of this winter season is pale blue. It's turning up everywhere in suits and dresses. So if you own a pale blue suit, get it out and wear it!

With Abandon
 If you are conservative about daytime shoes, let yourself go when you buy evening shoes. Pick vivid colors and beautiful fabrics. You'll enjoy them and so will others.

Comfy Tip
 One way to pep up a plain fabric coat for winter is to have the collar removed. Then tuck a little fur ascot in at the neckline.

 "Soul" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon this Sunday at the Christian Science churches in Montreal, Westmount, Pointe Claire and Sherbrooke. Emphasis will be placed on the Christian Science teaching that there is one infinite Soul, or God, rather than a multitude of different souls all residing separately in so many material bodies. This theme will be developed entirely by means of passages from the King James Bible, together with corroborative readings taken from the denominational text book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy.

Don't skip meals
 By GAYNOR MADDOX
 —I'm trying to lose weight. Should I skip at least one meal every day?
 A—Meal skipping is a poor way to lose weight. It actually may increase appetite for the next meal or for between-meal snacks which results in increased food intake. Skipping of meals is likely to lead to the choice of unbalanced diets. Actually, several small and regular meals each day may provide greater satisfaction to the person on a reducing diet than the normal three-meal pattern.
 Q—Can fruits and vegetables supply all the protein I need?
 A—The American Dietetic Association's booklet, "Food Facts Talk Back," answers your question as follows: Because people usually consume a limited variety and quantity of fruits and vegetables, it is difficult to obtain adequate protein from these sources. Vegetarians, in addition to eating fruits and vegetables, usually eat a variety of grains, legumes, and nuts which contribute toward adequate protein in the diet.
 Other people who exclude meat from their diet derive proteins from milk, cheese, and eggs. Dried beans are one of the best plant sources of protein; but even when two portions (2 cups of cooked beans) are used in a day, one would still need to eat 12 to 15 servings of other fruits and vegetables such as potatoes, oranges, peas and squash in order to get enough protein. Therefore, most persons prefer to use meat, eggs, cheese and milk to obtain the proteins they need every day.

Polly's pointers
 DEAR POLLY — In the glove compartment of the car, I have an "in case" box in which I keep a pair of clean white gloves and a fresh hankie. We busy housewives sometimes rush out of the house, forgetting these two important items until we have driven away. It is a timesaver "in case" you forget.

POLLY
 DEAR POLLY — I find that a pair of slip-joint pliers is better for cracking nuts than a nutcracker. By setting the pliers at its widest opening, you will not crush the nut meat if you squeeze too hard.

STEPHEN
 DEAR POLLY — By accident I discovered a use for an "about-to-be-shelved" bath-inette. I put it next to my sewing machine and use its many pockets for scissors, tapes, etc. The bottom shelf is close enough to hold pattern pieces as I finish with them. The top shelf keeps my iron handy for pressing or cutting small pieces. When I am through for the day, everything is hidden in the tub part until I see again.

POLLY
 If actual pressing is done on the top, you probably would need a piece of plywood or other sturdy material to lay over the top.

According to the poet, in spring a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of love. But traditionally he starts thinking about it somewhat earlier in the year—say, around St. Valentine's Day.

Actually there's no set season for cupid, but the use of hearts and flowers on coinage is brought into the news by sale of the largest private collection of marriage medals and commemorative coins on the continent.

The owner of the 407-piece collection was forced to dispose of it to a United States dealer because of a severe and chronic illness. It is expected some of the pieces will be on the market soon.

Nearly 200 of them have never before been offered for sale in North America except through the medium of European mail auctions. Their previous owner acquired most of them abroad.

Silver medals of British monarchs are included in the collection, some of which are scarce in silver but fairly common in white metal or bronze.

There are two silver medals commemorating the marriage of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, each different, which were described to me by the previous owner. I have seen only one of them in silver, and that was in the Chateau de Ramezay in Montreal.

While there are many medals in the Public Archives in Ottawa commemorating other events in the long reign of Queen Victoria, I understand there are none of her marriage.

The earliest piece in the collection is the famous Marriage Thaler of 1479, which was issued by Maximilian I of the Holy Roman Empire to commemorate his marriage to Mary of Burgundy. The collection is rich in Holy Roman Empire material and it includes "taler klippes," which are square silver pieces, usually quite ornate, which were popular during the 17th and early 18th centuries.

There are also several medals commemorating the marriage of Napoleon Bonaparte to Marie Louise of Austria (after he had divorced Josephine) in gold, silver and bronze, as well as medals of his brother Joseph and of his sisters.

Many distinguished medallists are represented in the collection, among them Leopold Wiener, a Belgian sculptor and medallist, who received royal honors for specific marriage medal designs. For his design of a coin commemorating the marriage of the Duke of Brabant, the heir to the Belgian throne, 1853, he was honored with the Cross of the Order of Leopold.

For a medal for the marriage of Dom Pedro V, King of Portugal, 1858, he received the Cross of the Order of Villa-Viciosa and for a medal on the occasion of the marriage of the Count of Flanders, 1864, the King of Prussia conferred on him the title of officer of the Crown.

MUSIC ON RECORDS

By HUGH DOHERTY

RENAISSANCE FESTIVAL MUSIC, Flemish dances and Venetian music, played by the New York Pro Musica instrumental ensembles, Noah Greenberg cond. (DECCA stereo DL 79419) — The impressive musical scholarship for which the New York Pro Musica group is justly celebrated was never more in evidence than in this recording. Published music of the period (second half of the sixteenth century) seldom mentioned what instruments were to be used. Authenticity of performance, therefore, demanded research into such unlikely documents as paymasters records, which noted the names of musicians paid and the instruments they played, and the memoirs of private travellers on the continent. The dances performed on this recording are of two general kinds — either bright and sprightly or melodious and stately. Of the two groups represented — Flemish and Venetian — the Venetian have the richer, more sophisticated appeal.

BEETHOVEN: PASTORAL SYMPHONY; The Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, George Szell cond. (EPIC stereo BC 1249) — This wonderfully evocative work can conjure up musical pictures of pleasant country life in any season one wishes to imagine. Mr. Szell's setting is a mellow, warm autumnal one — languorous, misty and full with satisfaction.

Rich though the performance is, it lacks the piquancy of more spring-like interpretations. But for those who like the contented approach, this recording will be a winner.

GRANADA: Andres Segovia plays guitar selections by Argudo, Sor, Ponce, Tansman, Albeniz and Granados. (DECCA Record, stereo, DL 710063) — Segovia is among the handful of musicians who, today, are maintaining interest in the capabilities of the guitar as a classical instrument. It is a task which could only be undertaken by a consummate artist, which Segovia is. This recording features the solo guitar in a series of pieces which begins with the deceptively simple Eight Lessons for Guitar by Aguado and ends with a pleasant Mazurka by Tansman. Segovia, masterful and sensitive, shows that the guitar is something more than an instrument to be thumped, plucked and strummed.

Mackenzie King in the wilderness

The trials of a high-minded egotist

Jottings
By GLADYS TAYLOR

THE FALL AND RISE OF MACKENZIE KING, 1911-1919, by F. A. McGregor, Macmillan of Canada, 358 pp., $6.00.

This is the story of what may truly be called a "formative" sector of Mackenzie King's life. Formative, because during these eight years, 1911-1919, King experienced a series of ordeals, each calculated to try severely the egotism, ambition, conscience and fortitude of a man in whom all of these were highly developed.

In 1911 the Laurier government (and Mackenzie King) were soundly beaten at the polls. The newly created minister of labor—and ex-deputy minister of labor—thus found himself in the wilderness, and for years he was unable to find his way out and back to parliament.

In this search he was disappointed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, his old leader and friend, and baffled by the obstacles that mysteriously stood in his way. For a man who thought so highly of himself it was incomprehensible that he should not be included back into the fold quicker than he was.

By way of making a living and giving scope to his undeniable talents as a student of labor relations and as a master of reconciliation, he embarked on his life-long friendship with John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and the shorter but highly profitable association with him as a specialist in labor economics. Financially and otherwise this phase gave King great satisfaction.

But it was a phase of temptation in the wilderness, too. He was tempted by the wide opportunities the work gave him to improve labor relations and labor legislation, and to influence the social thinking of the great tycoons of American business. He was tempted by the lure of great wealth, powerful associates, and the flesh pots in general.

In the end King turned his back on this glittering prospect. Buoyed up by his own self-confidence, his insatiable appetite for politics, his patriotism, and his conviction that some day he would be Prime Minister, he finally pushed his way back into parliament, and while he never again really deserted the political path.

In 1919 he "rose" as Mr. McGregor would put it, after nearly a decade of tribulation, political obscurity, and sojourn in the alien corn. He won the leadership of the Liberal Party and kept it until his voluntary retirement nearly a quarter of a century later.

Mr. McGregor writes this curious chapter in the life of a curious man from an unusually intimate knowledge of the subject. He obviously admires King and gave him the attachment that the years in his service engendered. Those who are still looking for the secret of King the politician, the leader, the social reformer, and the party strategist will find many clues here.

One is the intimate record of King's diary, which for its frankness at least admits him to the distinguished company of Austine and Rousseau. Another is in the personal touches applied by Mr. McGregor as his political portrait emerges. And a third in something that many are apt to forget about King. He was a man of prayer and of reflection. I have no doubt that the hours spent on his knees and alone in his study did much to give King the foresight and spiritual imperturbability which so often confounded his opponents.

The pertinacity with which King searched for a wife, aided by his friends and impelled by his loneliness and belief that a "consort" was necessary for a political leader—all throws much light on King's emotional make-up. But emphatic as King was himself on the subject and energetic as were his friends, one never feels that King really wanted to be married. This, of course may be misinterpretation, but such is the effect left by this careful record. Miss A. Miss B. Miss C, and the rest, fit past in fragile anonymity, all seemingly charming, happy in disposition, possessed of "real spiritual beauty" and the rest. But King was always too late or Miss X too lukewarm.

His attitude towards marriage is not unlike his attitude towards conscription in 1917. He thought it (conscription) a right principle, but he disliked it. It was the only fair method in defensive necessity. But as we know he never embraced conscription with his heart, however the generals—years after—may have caused him to introduce it. And he never married.

This, then, is a slice of biography and a source of raw or semi-processed material for a psychological study of King. He comes out as high-minded, pious, and scholarly, but conceited, self-centered, shy and assertive—a mixture like others of the pleasant and the unpleasant.

The difference with King was that because of his nature and family heritage he never ceased to make all these characteristics serve his ends.

We know what those ends were and how completely he realized them. They were of great significance to Canada, as even his detractors would admit. Those that would study further will be grateful to Mr. McGregor for his very special contribution to the King saga.

Samson retold

Biblical muscleman cut down to size and humanized too

HUSBAND OF DELILAH by Eric Linklater, Macmillan, 318 pp., $3.95.

The story of Samson, strong man extraordinary, whose strength lay in his magnificent hair, is one that appeals to all Sunday School children, to whom there is nothing unbelievable in his exploits, since their world is peopled with the fabulous. It is the elders who sometimes find the story difficult to swallow whole, though the moral is significant and obvious.

Eric Linklater in his novel Husband of Delilah sees Samson as "one of the great folk-heroes of the world... a God-haunted Robin Hood, whose legendary feats of strength, ribald humour and fanatic nationalism saved the threatened independence of the Hebrew tribes."

And it is thus he presents him. Almost the first thing one wants to do after reading the novel is to read the story of Samson as found in the Old Testament, in the Book of Judges, to discover for himself how closely the author has kept to the original story or how much he has deviated from it and to what effect. Linklater is a masterly storyteller, and under his pen the skeleton Samson as presented in Judges becomes very much flesh and blood, a man of great laughter, dark moods, of tremendous strength, strength, and of passion that sometimes darkens his capacity to remember that he must limit the exercise of his strength.

Of necessity some incidents have been enlarged and, to make the account more believable, some exploits have been whittled to reasonable size, but in essence, in Sam-son's devotion to his God and to God's chosen people, in the moral truths as presented in the Bible story, Husband of Delilah adds to and does not detract from the original drama and its meaning.

Because Samson's is a tale that belongs to all ages, the use of modern language and modern-seeming "police" fits in very naturally with the ancient hills of Palestine; as one reads Husband of Delilah, one feels the story to be as modern as today or next year, as well as being as old as the days when Israel was not yet an undivided nation.

Dickens was inconsistent on crime

LONDON (CP) — Charles brooding genius of Dostoevsky. Dickens was a master chef of recent studies of Dickens novelists. His narrative skill have concentrated on his near-cooked brew, hot Christmas pathological interest in prisons, punch and congealed prison and punishment in an attempt to understand his complex and contradictory personality.

His bitter and lonely upbringing. The latest Dickens and his imagination. He became the modern view that fascinated with crime and criticism. Dickens was neither a benevolent reformer nor a consistent humane insight into cruelty, humanitarian in his attitude to guilt and suffering rivals the social evils of his time.

Collecting in the Townships

The comments from collectors regarding the new Canadian definitive stamps are not complimentary for the most part. The symbols are difficult to associate with the resources they represent. The colors and overall design would seem to be acceptable in some quarters. The stamps are certainly not crowded with too many words.

The absence of the word "cents" or sign for it seems strange to everyone, and of course there have been rumors that the stamps would be recalled because of this. It would seem that these rumors are the result of continued sale of the replaced five cent regular issue, and the sending of the old stamp to post offices for current requisitions.

The colors, as previously mentioned, are good. They are bright and add to the dull design.

The appearance of the bald eagle on a United States stamp draws attention to this magnificent bird.

There are four major breeding areas for this eagle, Alaska, Florida, the western Great Lakes area and the Chesapeake Bay area. Estimates place the number of birds in the continental United States at only 4,000. The population in Alaska is in the thousands.

The National Audubon Society has named co-ordinators for the bald eagle survey in the four breeding areas. Jackson Abbott, of Alexandria, Virginia, co-ordinator for the Chesapeake Bay area, blamed the encroachment of civilization for the decline of the bird. He said that pollution of rivers destroyed fish, which are a major source of food for the eagles.

The U.S. national bird once was in distepute in Alaska, where for 25 years a bounty of $1 per bird was paid to hunters who shot the eagles. A hundred thousand eagles were destroyed.

Today U.S. federal law provides a maximum penalty of $500, or six months imprisonment, for killing or molesting bald eagles.

Activity in the stamp clubs of the Townships is at its height now. The winter season always brings collectors to meetings and the collections out of the cupboards and safes. It is encouraging to older collectors to see the new clubs being formed in town after town, and this would seem to indicate that the hobby of stamp collecting is on the move here.

A collector asks whether the regular issues are called definite or definitive stamps. The word definitive is correct. This means a conclusive set or final development.

Another collector has Canadian commemoratives by the hundreds and wonders how to store them. I would suggest number three glassine envelopes and old cigar or chocolate boxes. Send along your questions and we will try to answer them.

Aubrey Menen

The tone is light — and so are contents

SHELA by Aubrey Menen, Random House, 172 pp.

A truce in a violent Indian-Chinese border war doesn't seem the right moment for gentle jokes about Himalayan religion and cold-war politics.

The satirical novelette Mr. Menen has given us does contain touches which apply astonishingly well to a more recent and smaller international crisis (too recent, in fact, for him to have had it in mind).

At a time when an American secretary of state is apologizing to a Canadian prime minister for the tone but not the intent of one of his department's communications, Mr. Menen has this account of the evolution of a U.S. state department note:

"The Department drew up a statement of its own, toned it down to meet Weekly's point, sharpened it up to get the propaganda value of the abduction, worked it over to please the neutrals, cut it down to avoid offending the U.N. and then cancelled it entirely, until the whole situation had undergone careful review."

A little later in his yarn of how an obscure adviser with his eye on an ambassadorship turns the rivalry of a pair of Tibetan lamas into a world crisis by urging the president to back the exiled lama on the grounds that "Buddhism is a branch of Hinduism, and one-fifth of the human race follows that religion; mostly uncommitted," comes this familiar-sounding passage: "The Secretary of State acted swiftly. At a press conference, he admitted that a technical violation of the immunity of the diplomatic bag had been committed, but he resolutely stood by the State Department's rejection of the Soviet note of protest. He maintained that the rejection concerned the tone, not the contents of the note. At a cocktail party in Moscow, the Soviet Premier remarked to the assembled diplomats, 'They admit to stealing our horse but don't like us shouting "Stop thief!"' In reply, the Government of the United States ordered a second barbed-wire fence to be built thirty yards from the one built by the Russians. All visitors to the house were compelled to pass through a check point."

As satire, though, SheLa never cuts much deeper than this. There is some metaphysically witty talk between Buddha and Satan in the cloudy regions, and some politically witty talk between a Russian named Tschempko and his restless ally Wang in Peking.

There is a bit of conventional romance between SheLa, our side's candidate for Dalai Lama (chosen among refugee Tibetans encamped in Switzerland), and HeLa, theirs. SheLa has been adopted by a mystical California millionaire and turned out to be a girl.

When each side ships its Lama to New York to press claims before the United Nations, and they are housed in neighboring mansions on a Long Island beach, love and crisis promptly result.

HeLa switches his robes for blue jeans, and SheLa prefers calling him "Joe" to the "74 holy syllables" of his Tibetan name (it is distracted cable editors who have dubbed them HeLa and SheLa). The author, himself half Indian, revealingly says they are typical of Asian young people in despising everything Oriental.

But he is as capable as any westerner of falling into caricature when he moves to Africa. He has an African prime minister counsel his departing UN ambassador, "If you do come across an American who won't dine next to a Negro, remember we dine off 'em."

Mr. Menen need make no apology for his tone, which is sparkling throughout. His content, however, is slight.

MALCOLM REID

YOU'RE IN SALINGER'S WORLD OR YOU'RE NOT

RAISE HIGH THE ROOF BEAM, CARPENTERS AND SEYMOUR: AN INTRODUCTION by J. D. Salinger, Little, Brown, 248 pp., $4.95.

A reader must belong to and agree with the world of J. D. Salinger to enjoy this one. Although the book heads the best seller list, it is not everyone's cup of tea. There is no denying Salinger's talent. He has the most brilliant faculty of making his characters live. He seems to virtually pick out a segment of daily living and transfer it, intact and breathing, to the printed page.

There are two stories in the book. The first, Raise High The Roof Beam, Carpenters, is a detailed account of Seymour Glass's wedding day, narrated by his younger brother, Buddy. The whole event takes on a fascination for the reader due to the fact that the chronicler tells, at the beginning of his account that, at the time of this writing, his brother is dead, having committed suicide four years after his marriage. Seymour, indeed, needs nothing less than suicide to give him any meaning at all. Without this morbid attraction, I think Buddy would go down here as fatally as he does in the second part of the book.

We learn of Seymour through infuriated relatives of the bride, whom he has jilted at the altar. Buddy, unrecognized as a brother of the groom, is exposed to the full force of these attacks. He presents these along with his own ideal of his beloved brother, and strives, through a diary of Seymour's, to show him as a poet and a saint, and not, as the prospective mother-in-law proclaims, "a schizoid and latent homosexual."

Personally, after witnessing the wedding fiasco, reading sections of the diary and always aware of the approaching suicide, I throw in my lot with the shill young matron of honor, who shouts wildly at Buddy. "Does he sound like someone normal or like someone that should be stuck in the booby hatch?" In Seymour: An Introduction, Buddy, a professor at the age of 40, continues to write. His love and admiration for his brother, Seymour, are obvious. He believes him to be an aesthetic, a non-expensive poet, a saint and a sensitive martyr. To force this image on the reader he employs a devious method. He devotes pages to Seymour's physical appearance which seems to fall just short of the repulsive. Saints topple easily, and blatantly displayed facts like his ill-fitting suits and his dislike of having his hair cut because he feared that his neck would be dirty hardly endear him to us.

The supreme fault is that Seymour himself never emerges into reality. He is always a shadowy figure, cloaked and muffled in Buddy's garrulous and loving descriptions. Was he ever there at all or was there only Buddy with a compulsion to be someone else? One feels, indeed, that Mr. Salinger, to remain at the top, may have to abandon his Glass menagerie. In conclusion, there is one outstanding quotation from Seymour's diary. He has been reading Oriental religions and he writes down this about the rearing of children: "A child is a guest in the house, to be loved and respected — never possessed, since he belongs to God."

That one is for Buddy's side, and now one for the matron of honor, again from the diary: "If ever peace comes again, I would like to be a dead cat. In Zen Buddhism a master was once asked what was the most valuable thing in the world, and the master answered that a dead cat was, because no one could put a price on it." As I said, you are either in Salinger's world or you are not.

In 1958 he repeated this feat by capturing the world championships at Bad Gastein, Austria.

Skiing at Stowe Vermont in 1957, Sailer won the North American Championships.

Presently Mr. Sailer is engaged in the production of German movies. He owns a hotel in Austria, where he also has a manufacturing firm producing skis bearing his name.

Richardson looking for win tonight

NEW YORK (AP) — Blair Richardson, a Baptist biblical student outside the ring and a two-fisted belter inside the ropes, hopes to crack the middleweight rankings tonight with an upset over favored Joe Archer at Madison Square Garden.

The 22-year-old kava specialist from South Bar, N.S., is a two to one underdog in the 10-rounder.

Richardson, a freshman education major at Eastern Nazarene College in Quincy, Mass., has done most of his fighting in his native Nova Scotia. He comes here with a 36-3-1 record, including 31 knockouts.

Archer, sixth-ranked contender from New York, has a 33-1 record, including seven knockouts.

The handsome, 25-year-old New Yorker is a former longshoreman but he doesn't fight like a dock worker.

ARCHER A SMOOTHIE

He is a smoothie in the ring. The lean 160-pounder comes in behind a stinging jab and counters with fast combination punches.

Richardson is unawed by his rival's ranking and ability. "I've seen him box," he said. "He's good, no question about it. But I think I can knock him out."

Nobody has stopped Archer yet. If Richardson can accomplish this he'll certainly get the ranking he's seeking.

Scoring will be by the rounds system.

Wendy Griner leads in figure championships

VANCOUVER (CP) — Wendy Griner of Toronto took her expected lead in the compulsory figures Friday and drew aim on her first women's singles title at the North American figure skating championships.

The official count gave her 746.2 points, and first place in five of the six intricate figures she skated against two other Canadian entrants and three from the United States.

Miss Griner, an 18-year-old blonde who last week won her fourth Canadian singles title in a row, compiled 17 points more than her nearest rival in a clear victory in the compulsory figures.

Shirra Kenworthy of Vancouver came on strongly with careful execution of her last two figures, edged Miss Griner in one of them, and finished second with 729.9 points. Lorraine Hanlon of Boston had been second through the early figures, but fell back and finished third with 712.2.

ET Bonspiel opens Monday at 6.00

A total of 64 rinks will be competing in the 15th annual Eastern Townships Curling Bonspiel which opens Monday evening at 6:00 p.m., stated Bruce Millar, Bonspiel chairman.

President Gerry Burt of the Sherbrooke Curling Club is the general chairman and the final plans have been completed.

The curling classic of the Townships has drawn some of the top rinks of the Province as well as several from the States. Play commences Monday evening at 6:00 p.m. and will continue all week with the finals for the five trophies slated Saturday evening in Lennoxville and Sherbrooke. The games will be played at Lennoxville, Magog, Windsor, North Hatley and Sherbrooke on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. On Thursday it will be restricted to Sherbrooke and Lennoxville when the outside rinks will commence their march for one of the trophies.

On Thursday play will commence at 1:30 p.m. with another shift at 3:30 p.m. In the evening the Bonspiel dinner will take place at the New Sherbrooke Hotel while in the evening special attractions are booked in Lennoxville and Sherbrooke.

Saturday K will be another all day event starting at 9:00 with the finals in the evening.

Toe Blake and his Canadiens are having troubles while Bruins stage battle for playoff berth

While things keep getting worse for Toe Blake and his Montreal Canadiens, they continue to improve for Montreal's Boston Bruins.

After Thursday night's game in Montreal, which saw the Bruins deflate the Habs, 2-1, and run Boston's unbeaten streak to six games, 10th teams face an important weekend.

The Bruins, perennial cellar-dwellers who have been solidly entrenched in sixth place since the season began, have rushed to within two points of fifth place New York Rangers.

Nobody has any ready explanation for the Bruins surge, but the recent acquisition of winger centre Dean Prentice hasn't hurt.

Prentice has scored three goals in four games with Boston, including the winner late in the Montreal game.

GOALING GOOD

Solid goaltending by Ed Johnston, who stopped 40 shots in Thursday's game and was only beaten on a penalty shot, didn't hurt either.

The Bruins aren't having trouble scoring goals—they're only five behind league-leading Toronto—but they've allowed 100 more than Chicago Black Hawks, the league leader in that department.

Which proves that when the Bruins can hold their opponents score down, they will make trouble for anybody in the league.

This weekend they take to the road, planning to make trouble for the Red Wings in Detroit to night and the Black Hawks in Chicago Sunday.

Canadiens, meanwhile, will attempt to get back on the win-

Patterson gets $165,827 from US Government

NEW YORK (AP) — Floyd Patterson will collect another $165,827 to console him for the loss of his heavyweight crown to Sonny Liston last Sept. 25.

Federal Judge Richard H. Levett ordered the government Friday to pay that sum to Patterson from money seized by the internal revenue service from the closed-circuit television receipts of the Chicago fight.

The government had tied up $1,379,517 to insure payment of taxes. Patterson earned more than $1,000,000 for his first-round knockout by Liston.

Judge Levett also ordered the government to pay $35,000 from the seized money to Championship Sports, promoters of the fight.

Last month the government released $210,000 to Patterson. It has yet to be determined by the court what amount will be paid to Liston, who claims that $207,000 is due him.

Important tilt for both clubs as they commence stretch-drive for favored positions in loop finals

Sherbrooke Beavers face a tough task tomorrow afternoon when they clash with Granby Vics at the local Arena. The Vics and Beavers are tied in second spot in the semi-finals while Drummondville Rockets are out in front by two points.

Both teams will be seeking a win to get back in the race for a spot in the finals. On their last trip to Sherbrooke the Vics went down to a 7-5 setback at the hands of the Beavers. It was the opening game in the current series.

The Vics in turn took the measure of the Beavers last Sunday in Granby 4-1. Sherbrooke's other victory was a 4-2 decision over Drummondville but following their two straight victories the Beavers dropped verdicts to Granby and Drummondville.

The Rockets got off to a bad start dropping their first two games but since then have posted three straight wins over Sherbrooke, 5-3, Granby, 5-4, and last Thursday's 4-1 victory over the Beavers. The Rockets' next game is Thursday in Granby.

Following tomorrow's game the Beavers will have only one home game left against Drummondville, Feb. 26, therefore they must come up with a win to stay in the race. The Beavers meet Granby twice and the Rockets once to complete their list.

The Vics will be after the win tomorrow and will give a good account of themselves. Both teams should be at full strength for Sunday's important clash, barring recent injuries, and the fans should witness a hard-fought battle before the final siren sounds to end the fixture.

St. Francis Hockey League opens playoffs Sunday, Magog at Jets and Windsor clash with Richmond

The St. Francis Valley Intermediate hockey play-offs begin tomorrow with games in Rock Island and Richmond. The league champion Rock Island team hosts the Magog Aces while the Braves clash with the Windsor Paper Makers. Both series are to be decided on a best of seven basis.

Magog-Rock Island

The Jets are favored in semi-final series "A" but only because of their first place finish. Their success with the Aces has been only fair this year. Of the eight games between the two Jets has won four and the Aces two with the others ending in ties. In their last meeting, only a week ago, the Aces trounced the Jets 9-1.

Rock Island, however, has play-off experience and they are probably the hungriest team in the league. They have been league champions two years running but both times have been defeated in the finals.

The Paper Makers did it two years ago and Richmond turned the trick last season. Both times the series went the full seven games. Now, not only the fans but the players themselves want the championship bad. After Sunday's opener the teams go back to Magog for Tuesday's second game then back to the Border on Friday.

Windsor-Richmond

In series "B", the Paper Makers hope to do the same thing to the Braves that the Braves did to them last year. After finishing two points out of first place last season Windsor met Richmond in the finals and were eliminated in five games.

The Paper Makers have won only two of the eight games between the teams and one finished in a tie but all the Windsor players are anxious for that first game. Both of their victories and the tie came near the end of the schedule which means that Windsor has not been beaten by the Braves for nearly two months.

Playing Coach Maurice Bach and admits the Braves will be tough but says his Paper Makers will take it, if not in six games then in seven. From here it looks like offense against defence. Richmond has a team of scorers but their defensive brigade leaves something to be desired. Windsor, on the other hand has relied mainly on its defence this year.

Jacques St. Laurent, probably the best goaler in the league, has three first-class defencemen to back him up.

The Paper Makers however, are extremely weak at putting the puck in the net. Raymond St. Cyr is the only consistent scorer they have. The veteran right-winger carries a 10-game scoring streak into the semi-finals. The streak has given him the team scoring leadership. He has 12 goals and 18 assists for 30 points.

CFL comes up with rule changes, Ticats' controversial play out, deflected pass off goal post out HAMILTON (CP) — It's too bad Perry Moss is no longer connected with the Canadian Football League.

He would have appreciated a rule change made Friday at the opening session of the CFL's two-day annual meeting.

Moss, former coach of Montreal Alouettes, complained bitterly late last season about a Hamilton Tiger-Cat offence used against Alouettes.

The rule changes now makes it impossible for any team to use fewer than five correctly numbered linemen on its offensive line.

The Ticats devised a method of using only four linemen and inserting end Dave Viti into the open tackle slot with the option of using him as an eligible receiver.

The new rule says a team must have five men—any combination of centres, guards and tackles—on its line plus two correctly-numbered ends.

By forcing use of five linemen. The league is not allowing room for more than two ends. Therefore Hamilton's controversial play would be impossible.

Another rule change prompted by a controversy last season now makes any deflected pass hitting the crossbar or goalposts incomplete.

the ball was put in play, making himself an eligible receiver in place of either Viti or Dekker, depending on which side he was playing.

This left the defensive team trying to determine the eligible receivers with only seconds to react if Patterson pulled the switch.

Tucson Open script looks like medical show

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP)—Talk at the $25,000 Tucson Open golf tournament sounds almost like a script from a medical show.

Stan Leonard of Vancouver, 1958 tournament of champions winner, has been given permission to withdraw from the Open because of allergy troubles that have caused him to break out in a heavy rash.

Jack Nicklaus probably is answering more questions about the condition of his bursitis-wracked hip than his golf game.

One-time Golfer-of-the-Year Art Wall is plagued by back trouble and a pinched nerve in his thigh. In the last three years Wall has suffered a kidney ailment, ear infection and rib injury.

Bob Rosburg also has been allowed to quit after injuring a hand while shooting an 80 in the first round.

World Figure Skating championship may be jeopardized by political wrangling, Italy refuses visas

DAVOS, Switzerland (AP)—The world figure skating championships, scheduled to begin Feb. 28 at Cortina, Italy, are the latest international sports event to be jeopardized by political wrangling.

George Haesler, secretary-general of the International Skating Union, said Friday the Italian government has refused visas to competitors from Communist East Germany.

Haesler said the seven-man council of the ISU has been polled on whether to approve the championships under these conditions, cancel them or move them to another site.

In similar cases last year, the official status was removed from the world ice hockey tournament at Colorado Springs, Colo., and the world alpine skiing championships at Chamonix, France.

BARRED BY NATO

East Germans were barred from both events because of failure to get visas from the NATO travel bureau in Berlin, which handles such details for NATO countries.

Fix-up now means investment in future

FROM A TYPICAL DRAB BASEMENT TO THIS! After remodeling was completed, closets with folding doors, desks for study and play, cupboards and bunk beds were all provided for growing boys' needs. The rustic effect is achieved by the special vertically-grooved plywood paneling on the walls. Desks and storage units are also plywood.

Remodel to solve space problems

A family that is content with its neighborhood — has children in school and except for its space shortage, is satisfied with the house, is not likely to want to change dwellings. What, then, does the family do to find that needed extra space right at home?

Look for Space

It's obvious that you "make space" if it doesn't exist. Generally, any home can be expandable when skillfully remodeled. For instance, unused attics and basements can be converted into useful living space. Kitchens, bathrooms and other areas can be re-arranged to be more efficient within existing space. Where the lot size and shape permit it, adding on a room may solve the space problem.

One of the best ways to figure out what you can do to look at what some others have done in similar situations. Here are some examples of families who solved their space problems through remodeling.

Attic Finished

One family, with a post-war two-bedroom home, discovered that the attic helped solve their problem. Its 325 square feet was being used as a catch-all for unwanted "junk": the kind that most families collect.

The family consulted with an architect to determine how the space should be divided. The architect resisted the impulse to "honeycomb" the space with a series of cubicles. Instead, he made one basic division of the attic space: One end for the parents, the other for the two girls.

A large plywood wardrobe-storage unit separated the spaces. In addition to acting as a divider with storage space, the unit also contained a folding bed — making the adult space a guest room too.

In the girls' end — all furnishings were built in. The wasted space, next to the wall under the steeply-pitched ceiling, was fully utilized by plywood bunk-beds for the girls, mounted on casters. Thus they could be pushed back under the built-ins to provide a large clear area in the center of the room. Rolling toy storage bins also provided a greater play area for daytime activities.

The adult end of the attic became a center for sewing, typing and general utility when not used as a guest room.

For simplicity, economy and appearance, the architect specified fir plywood paneling over the exposed rafters and for construction of the built-ins. The 4 x 8 foot plywood panels go into place quickly, cutting labor and providing a smooth surface for painting or other finishing.

KITCHEN OFFENDER

Kitchens in older homes originally were designed for now-outmoded living habits. Spaces aren't suited to modern appliances; they lack storage space and generally are located so they get all the traffic in the house.

Two families who liked the spaciousness of their pre-war homes, but found their kitchens wholly inadequate for such reasons, decided to bring them up-to-date by remodeling.

THE WASTED SPACE AND CLUTTER OF AN OLD ATTIC was converted into this bedroom-playroom with an imaginative, well-planned remodeling program. Plywood panel ceiling set inside rafters and painted different shades of grey makes the room look larger. Plywood storage area is built in over the roll-under beds; shelves, closets and plenty of space are all provided with close attention to making "every inch count."

One kitchen was located in the center of the house, with five doors opening into it. Unfortunately, none of these doors gave direct access to the dining room. Only one, through a bathroom, reached the dining area even indirectly. To correct the kitchen's many faults and get exactly what they wanted, the family commissioned a reputable remodeling firm.

A whole new room was created within the confines of the old kitchen. Not a single surface of the old kitchen is visible in the new. The ceiling was lowered, three of the doors eliminated and one door was punched through to the dining room. A U-shaped plywood work area evolved from which the home maker could keep track of — but not bothered by — the traffic of her large family.

The other old kitchen was at the back of the house instead of the center, but the same problems existed.

In this case, the architect decided to knock out the outside wall and install large glass panels to brighten up the space. A large deck was added on the outside to connect to the kitchen. A space-saving U-shaped plywood work area was also used in this remodeling plan.

angedment was provided for the purpose of preparing cocktails and snacks away from the preparation of the main meal.

To provide added artificial light inside, a suspended ceiling system was installed to provide a bright but gentle over-all lighting effect.

Basement Development
Space problem for a growing family were solved in an unfinished basement area by converting it into a handsome and functional bedroom-playroom for the family's two boys. The more than 150 square feet of space converted for the boys' use included wardrobes and plenty of built-in storage space.

A double storage unit divided the boys' wardrobe while providing additional space for books, toys and other necessary items. The beds also were designed to allow for storage space.

On a any home remodeling project, it's best to consider some important points:

*Plan the project carefully with the help of professionals. A remodeling job is as important as building a new home.

*Consider materials, to be used in the remodeling, for maintenance as well as eye-appeal.

*Keep in mind the future value of the residence. The remodeling may cost more than the amount its value may increase.
