VERDUN

The City of Verdun is ideally located at the south-western limits of Montreal on the banks of the St. Lawrence River, which is about 8 miles wide at this point. The municipality was incorporated as a village under the name of Riviere St. Pierre in 1876, changed to the Village of Verdun in 1876, erected into a Town in 1907 and a City in 1912. Since 1901 its population has increased from 1888 to 78,302. Possessing few large industries it is mostly composed of homes and stores. Its famous boardwalk is now being replaced by a modern asphalt promenade, brilliantly lighted, along the entire three-mile river front, and banked with attractive lawns and a rubbery. Municipal tennis courts, a bowling green, a yacht club, a motor boat club and a sailing club are also situated here. In addition a very modern Municipal Auditorium and Hockey Arena, seating 5,500, and a municipal natatorium consisting of two magnificent open air swimming pools are located on the river front.

Great success has been achieved in the building of homes under the National Housing Act, the City offering suitable lots for sale at very low prices. On this plan a small model village has been constructed in the Crawford Park district.

Educational facilities are excellent with thirteen Catholic and seven Protestant schools and three commercial colleges. There are two hospitals and nineteen churches. Public services such as health, police, fire, water and electricity are of the best. The City Council gives special attention to providing and supervising playgrounds for children, and the Municipal Playground Commission operates all sports on the numerous playing fields.

A comprehensive juvenile library is also operated by the City.
