Newfoundland and Canada.

Prospects Are Bright For Confederation.

Judge Emerson, of Newfoundland, who was in Montreal on a visit, says that the feeling in favor of confederation is now very keen, but he hesitates to give an opinion as to whether the colonial conferences in progress in London are likely to bring about the consummation desired by many. His Honor says the Premier of Newfoundland is very much in earnest in the matter, but whether the terms that are possible will be such as will be satisfactory to the colony is a matter upon which it is difficult to venture an opinion. In the event of his failing to secure the conditions he desires while in England, it is most improbable that Premier Bond will endeavor to open negotiations at Washington with a view to the renewal of the Bond-Blaine treaty. Judge Emerson declares his firm belief that it is impossible for Newfoundland to obtain a commercial treaty from the United States. The United States will give no commercial advantages by treaty to any country, certainly not to either Newfoundland or Canada.

Fatal Gasoline Explosion At Beauharnois.

Two men, horribly burned by a gasoline explosion at Beauharnois, Wednesday afternoon, were brought to Montreal and sent to the General and Notre Dame Hospitals, where they died the same night.

The victims were Eural Girouard, aged 29 years, who leaves a wife and one child, and David Petrie, who is also mourned by a widow. They were employees of the furniture factory of Messrs. Kilgour Bros., at Beauharnois. Their duties were around a gasoline lamp, used for embossing designs on furniture. Shortly after work was commenced after the noon hour the lamp exploded just after it was lighted. Petrie and Girouard, who were in close proximity, had their clothes consumed, and were terribly burned about their bodies, as well as on their faces and hands.

Outlaw Tracy's End.

Driven to Bay He Killed Himself.

Spokane, Wash., August 6.—Harry Tracy, the notorious outlaw, who escaped with David Merrill, from the Oregon penitentiary at Salem, on June 9, after killing three prison guards, killed himself early this morning after being wounded by the fire of one of a posse in pursuit. Tracy was surrounded in a wheat field, near Fellows, a station on the Washington Central Railroad, about fifty miles west of Spokane, last night. Word was sent back to Davenport, the nearest town, and a large number of armed men hurried to the scene.

Mission of Waterville.

Record Order For Canada's Apple Crop.

Belleville, Ont., Aug. 7.—An order for a million barrels of apples has been received by a Belleville dealer from an English house, and the dealer has started buyers out to get the goods. This order is far and away in excess of any other of the kind ever before received by a Canadian dealer.

Municipal Ownership.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER.

Dear Sir:—On the 4th inst. I gave a page of not very ancient history, showing a fair sample of the arguments used in 1897 by the opponents of Municipal Ownership. The opponents today of electric ownership may be less aggressive and forcible in their announcements, but I hardly think that their pretensions are any more logical or convincing to the ordinary ratepayer.

The question of municipal ownership in this city can be no longer opposed from an experimental point of view, nor can it be called a leap in the dark. The people have had satisfactory results from the ownership of the water since 1897, which more than justifies all the promises said to have been made by the City Council before the water was taken over. I have no doubt that when the question of the ownership of the electric light comes before the ratepayers for their endorsement, it will get their unanimous support.

For the information of those who may not have seen a printed copy of the city's annual report, issued in December, 1901, I will give a few extracts from the said report bearing on the water works:

(Page 20) "Our water rent for the current year amounts to the sum of $20,088.23, being an increase of $1,805.70 over last year. This, we are sure, will be gratifying to the citizens, as it shows that the city has a growing asset in the Water Works."

(Page 22-23) "A comparative statement, showing the quantity and sizes of cast iron pipe, valves, etc., in use at the time of the acquisition of the Water Works by the city, and the additions thereto made since the city, may prove interesting, briefly as follows:

Sizes, lengths and weights of cast iron pipe laid before Oct. 23rd, 1897, and still in use.

500 ft.	12" x 85 lbs.	42,500 lbs
502 ft.	8" x 45 "	232,945 "
745 ft.	6" x 30 "	223,620 "
2567 ft.	4" x 20 "	513,540 "
1200 ft.	3" x 13 "	15,600 "

40452 1,048,205 lbs
SIZES, LENGTHS AND WEIGHTS OF CAST IRON PIPE Laid since Oct. 23rd, 1897, to Dec. 15th, 1901.

1,043 ft.	14" x 110 lbs.	114,730 lbs
5,045 ft.	12" x 85 "	428,825 "
3,808 ft.	10" x 65 "	247,520 "
7,116 ft.	8" x 45 "	329,400 "
7,790 ft.	6" x 30 "	233,701 "
15,985 ft.	4" x 20 "	313,900 "

40,497 1,658,895 lbs
It will be seen from the above that in 1897 the Company had in use 40,452 feet of water pipe, 20,877 of 4 inch and less, equal to 67 per cent., which were too small to give fire protection, and only 35 per cent. of the total pipes in use at that time capable to give a moderate, but not ample fire protection.

VALVES.

Valves in use before Oct. 23, 1897.—75; value, $648.50.

New valves added since Oct. 23, 1897.—79, cost $847.70.

HYDRANTS.

Hydrants in use, Oct. 23, 1897—68.

Hydrants added since Oct. 23, 1897, to Dec., 1901—14.

SERVICES.

Services in use Oct. 23, 1897—83.

Services added since Oct., 1897 to Dec. 15, 1901—423.

(Page 24) "Besides laying this large amount of pipe, valves and hydrants, we have put in a new pump of a capacity of one and a half million gallons, a new water wheel, new flume, new shafting and gearing for operating the pump, and a new house to accommodate the new pump and water wheel, built a new store house, the water tower has been erected at the reservoir, a cement bottom added to the reservoir, 41 new hydrants and 423 new services and connections put in, at a cost of a little over $600,000.00. By comparing the statements of pipes, valves, etc., above, it can readily be seen that the city has made very large additions, more than doubling the former capacity, and giving a sure and efficient and better supply of water for fire protection and domestic purposes."

I am of the opinion that the foregoing extracts will convince the most sceptical, and conclusively show that the City Council has redeemed the promises said to have been made in 1897 of giving under municipal management:

"A more perfect service; a more widely extended service; and more fire protection."

I will, in my next, take up the financial part of this question.

Resist Expulsion of Nuns.

Paris, August 7.—There is intense excitement in Britain over the enforcement of the religious associations law. Commence there is at a standstill, and the peasants openly avow their determination to resist the expulsion of the nuns.

Abbe Gayrant, in a passionate speech at Ploudemel, declared that the Government, in touching the sisters, attacked the Christian faith. In defending their religion the peasants were defending France. The Government nevertheless shows that it is determined to take action against all who interfere with the course of the law.

KING EDWARD'S PROCLAMATION.

HIS MAJESTY EXPRESSES APPRECIATION FOR DEEP SYMPATHY.

Gratitude to Providence For Preservation of Life.

PLANS FOR CORONATION.

KING AND QUEEN WILL BE CROWNED AT NOON.

London, August 7.—The King issued the following from Buckingham Palace this evening:—

"To my People:—

On the eve of my coronation, an event which I look upon as one of the most solemn and most important in my life, I am anxious to express to my people, at home and in the colonies and India, my heartfelt appreciation of the deep sympathy they have manifested towards me during the time my life was in such imminent danger.

"The postponement of the ceremony owing to my illness caused, I fear, much inconvenience and trouble to all those who intended to celebrate it; but their disappointment was borne by them with admirable patience and temper. The prayers of my people for my recovery were heard, and I now offer up my deepest gratitude to Divine Providence for having preserved my life and given me strength to fulfil the important duties which devolve upon me as sovereign of the great Empire."

EDWARD, R. AND I."

King Edward's proclamation is a personal and spontaneous expression of His Majesty's feelings. It was conceived and written by himself in an autograph letter to the home secretary, C. T. Ritchie.

THE CORONATION.

London, August 7.—The St. James's Gazette states that the crown will be placed on the King's head at 12.05 p.m. Saturday. Queen Alexandra will be crowned at 12.15 p.m. Their Majesties will leave Westminster Abbey at 12.55, and will arrive at Buckingham Palace at 1.40.

Will Object to Increase In Rates.

The Cookshire Chronicle says:—

"Bell Telephone Co. subscribers in this town (Cookshire) have received notice of the termination of their leases, and that a representative of the company will call upon them to make new arrangements. At present no one knows what the new proposals or leases of the company will be. A reported change is the placing of Bury and Sawyerville in this exchange, and the raising of rates to fifteen dollars per year. A rise in the rental will not go down and we feel certain that this will not be accepted by the present box holders. Moreover, the company will require a large number of subscribers in Sawyerville and Bury to justify a rise in rate, and the keeping of their present subscribers."

THE CRIME OF THE BOULEVARD

BY JULES CLARETIE

COPYRIGHT, 1897 BY R. F. PENNO & CO., LTD.

A sort of struggle began in Dantini's mind. One saw his face grow haggard, his eyes change their expression. He looked at the papers upon which M. Gigny laid his fat and hairy hands—those police notes which gossiped, as peasants say, in speaking of papers or writing which they cannot read and which denote more would be disclosed by those notes of the police agents of the scandals of the club, of the neighbors, of the porters. He passed his hands over his forehead as if to wipe off the perspiration or to ease away a headache.

"Come, now, it is not very difficult, and I have the right to know," said M. Gigny. After a moment Jacques Dantini said in a strong voice, "I swear to you, monsieur, that nothing Rovers

"It is possible," said Dantini. "It seems to me when I saw him the last time could assist justice in any way whatsoever, and I beg of you not to question me further about it."

"Will you answer?"

"I cannot, monsieur."

"The more you hesitate the more reason you give me to think that the communication would be grave."

"Very grave; but it has nothing to do with your investigation."

"It's not for you to outline the duties of my limits or my rights. Once more I order you to reply."

"I cannot."

"You will not."

"I cannot," brusquely said the man run to earth, with an accent of violence. The duel was finished.

M. Gigny began to laugh, or rather there was a nervous contraction of his mouth and his sanguine face wore a scoffing look, while a mechanical movement of his massive jaws made him resemble a bulldog about to bite.

"Then," said he, "the situation is a very simple one, and you face it as I do."

"Perfectly," said Jacques Dantini, with the impulsive answer of a man who stumbles over an article which he has left there himself.

"You still refuse to reply?"

"I refuse. I came here as a witness. I have nothing to reproach myself with, especially as I have nothing to fear. You must do whatever you choose to do."

"I can," said the magistrate, "change a citation for appearance to a citation for retention. I will ask you once more."

"It is useless," interrupted Dantini. "An assassin, I what folly! Rovers's murder!" It seems as if I were dreaming. It is absurd, absurd, absurd!"

"Prove to me that it is absurd in truth. Do you not wish to reply?"

"I have told you all I know."

"But you have said nothing of what I have demanded of you."

"It is not my secret."

"Yes; there is your system. It is frequent, it is common. It is that of all the accused."

"Am I already accused?" asked Dantini ironically.

M. Gigny was silent a moment; then, slowly taking from the drawer of his desk some papers upon which Dantini could discern no writing this time, but some figures, engraved in black—he knew not what they were—the magistrate held them between his fingers so as to show them. He swung them to and fro, and the papers rustled like dry leaves. He seemed to attach great value to these papers, which the registrar looked at from a corner of his eye, guessing that they were the photographic proofs which had been taken.

"I beg of you to examine these proofs," said the magistrate to Dantini. He held them out to him, and Dantini spread them on the table (there were four of them). Then he put on his eyeglasses in order to see better. "What is that?" he asked.

"Look carefully," replied the magistrate. Dantini bent over the proofs, examined them one by one, divined rather than saw in the picture, which was a little hazy, the portrait of a man, and upon close examination began to see in the specter a vague resemblance.

"Do you not see that this picture bears a resemblance to you?"

"This time Dantini seemed the prey of some nightmare, and his eyes searched M. Gigny's face with a sort of agony. The expression struck Gigny. One would have said that a ghost had suddenly appeared to Dantini.

"You say that it resembles me?"

"Yes. Look carefully. At first the portrait is vague. On closer examination it comes out from the halo which surrounds it, and the person who appears there bears your air, your features, your characteristics."

"It is possible," said Dantini. "It seems to resemble me. It seems as if I were looking at myself in a pocket mirror. But what does that signify?"

"That signifies," Oh, I am going to astonish you. That signifies," M. Gigny turned toward his registrar. "You saw the other evening, Favard, the experiment in which Dr. Oudin showed us the heart and lungs performing their functions in the thorax of a living man, made visible by the Roentgen ray's Well. This is not any more miraculous. These photographs" (he turned now toward Dantini) "were taken of the replica of the dead man's eye. They are the reflection, the reproduction of the image implanted there, the picture of the last living being contemplated in the agony, the last visual sensation which the unfortunate man experienced. The retina has given to us—as a witness—the image of the living person seen by the dead man for the last time."

A deep silence fell upon the three men in that little room, where one of them alone lost his foothold as in this strange revelation. For the magistrate it was a decisive moment, when all had been said, when the man, having been questioned closely, jumps at the foregone conclusion. As for the registrar, however, he may have become by these daily experiences, it was the decisive moment, the moment when the line drawn from the water the fish is landed, writhing on the hook.

Jacques Dantini, with an instinctive movement, had rejected, pushed back on the table those photographs which burned his fingers, like the cards in which some fortune teller has deciphered the signs of death.

"Well?" asked M. Gigny.

"Well," repeated Dantini in a strangled tone, either not comprehending or comprehending too much, struggling as if under the oppression of a nightmare.

"How do you explain how your face, your shadow if you prefer, was found reflected in Rovers's eyes, and that in his agony this was probably what he saw—yes, saw bending over him?"

Dantini cast a frightened glance around the room and asked himself if he was not shut up in a maniac's cell, if the question was real, if the voice he heard was not the voice of a dream.

"How can I explain? But I cannot explain, I do not understand, I do not know—it is madness, it is frightful, it is foolish!"

"But yet," insisted M. Gigny, "this folly, as you call it, must have some explanation."

"What do you wish to have me say? I do not understand; I repeat, I do not understand."

"What if you do not? You cannot deny your presence in the house at the moment of Rovers's death?"

"Why cannot I deny it?" Dantini interrupted.

"Because the vision is there, hidden, hazy, in the retina; because this photograph, in which you recognize yourself, denounces, points out, your presence at the moment of the last agony."

"I was not there! I swear that I was not there!" Dantini fervently declared.

"Then explain," said the magistrate. Dantini remained silent a moment, as if frightened. Then he stammered: "I am dreaming! I am dreaming!" And M. Gigny replied in a calm tone:

"Notice that I attribute no exaggerated importance to these proofs. It is not on them alone that I base the accusation. But they constitute a strange witness, very disquieting in its mute eloquence. They add to the doubt which your desire for silence has awakened. You tell me that you were not near Rovers when he died. These proofs, irrefutable as a fact, seem to prove at once the truth of your statement. Then the day Rovers was assassinated, where were you?"

"I do not know. At home, without doubt. I will have to think it over. At what hour was Rovers killed?"

M. Gigny made a gesture of ignorance and in a tone of raillery said: "That! There are others who know it better than I." And Dantini, irritated, looked at him.

"Yes," went on the magistrate with mocking politeness, "the surgeons who can tell the hour in which he was killed." He turned over his papers.

"The assassination was about an hour before midday. In Paris, in broad daylight, at that hour, a murder was committed!"

"At that hour," said Jacques Dantini, "I was just leaving home."

"To go where?"

"For a walk. I had a headache. I was going to walk in the Champs Elysees to cure it."

"And did you in your walk meet any one whom you knew?"

"No one."

"Did you go into some shop?"

"I did not."

"In short, you have no alibi?"

The word made Dantini again tremble. He felt the meshes of the net closing around him.

"An alibi! Ah, that! Decidedly. Monsieur, you accuse me of assassinating my friend," he violently said.

"I do not accuse. I ask a question."

And M. Gigny in a dry tone which gradually became cutting and menacing said: "I question you, but I warn you that the interview has taken a turn. You do not answer; you pretend to keep secret I know not what information which concerns us. You are not yet exactly accused. But—but—but—you are going to be!"

The magistrate waited a moment as if to give the man time to reflect, and he held his pen suspended, after dipping it in the ink, as an auctioneer holds his ivory hammer before bringing it down to close a sale. "I am going to drop the pen," it seemed to say. Dantini, very angry, remained silent. His look of bravado seemed to say: "Do you dare? If you dare, do it!"

"You refuse to speak?" asked Gigny for the last time.

A Word To The Great Army of Summer Toilers.

If You Are Not as Robust, Vigorous and Happy as Others in August, a Bottle or Two of

Paine's Celery Compound
Will Give You Health, Full Energy and Happiness.

Many men toiling in offices, stores and workshops during the hot summer weather, and women weighted with the works and cares of home, are critically near the breaking down point. The symptoms of coming sickness and disease are manifested in sleeplessness, nervousness, tired feelings, languidness, irritability, failing appetite and poor blood circulation.

Paine's Celery Compound is a precious boon to the ailing, sick and rundown in this August weather. A bottle or two used at once will quickly bestow the needed strength to battle against the weakening and enervating effects of the oppressive heat, and will enable men and women to go through the necessary routine of daily toil with heart, soul and energy.

Paine's Celery Compound is specially distinguished for its ability to build up rundown systems in hot weather. Mr. Mossop, of Mimico, Ont., says:

"I have much pleasure in giving my testimony in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. I was entirely broken down by hard work, anxiety and sleeplessness, and had pains all through my body. Doctors' remedies had no effect, and nothing met my case until I used Paine's Celery Compound. This medicine has done wonders for me, and I would strongly urge all sufferers to use it, as it is the best in the world."

"I refuse."

"You have willed it. Do you persist in giving no explanation? Do you in-trench yourself behind I know not what scruple of duty to honor? Do you keep to your systematic silence? For the last time, do you still persist in this?"

"I have nothing—nothing—nothing to tell you," Dantini cried in a sort of rage.

"Oh, well, Jacques Dantini"—and the magistrate's voice was grave and suddenly solemn—"you are from this moment arrested." The pen, uplifted till this instant, fell upon the paper. It was an order for arrest. The registrar looked at the man, Jacques Dantini did not move. His expression seemed vague, the fixed expression of a person who dreams with wide open eyes. M. Gigny touched one of the electric buttons above his table and pointed Dantini out to the guards, whose shakos suddenly darkened the doorway. "Take away the prisoner," he said shortly and mechanically, and over-came, without revolt, Jacques Dantini allowed himself to be led through the corridors of the palace, saying nothing, comprehending nothing, stumbling occasionally like an intoxicated man or a somnambulist.

CHAPTER XI.

M. Bernadet was triumphant. He went home to dinner in a jubilant mood. His three little girls, dressed alike, clasped him round the neck, all at the same time, while M. Bernadet, always fresh, smiling and gay, held up her face with its soft, round, rosy cheeks to him.

"My little ones," said the officer, "I believe that I have done well, and that my chief will advance me or give me some acknowledgment. I will buy you some bracelets, my dears, if that happens. But it is not the idea of filthy lucre which has urged me on, and I believe that I have certainly made a great stride in judicial instruction, all owing to my kodak. It would be too long an explanation and perhaps a perfectly useless one. Let us go to dinner. I am as hungry as a wolf."

He ate, truly, with a good appetite, scarcely stopped to tell how the assassin was under lock and key. The man had been measured and had become a number in the collection, always increasing, of accused persons in the catalogue continued each day for the museum of crime.

"Ah! He is not happy," said Bernadet between two spoonfuls of soup. "Not happy, not happy at all. Not happy, and astonished—protesting, moreover, his innocence, as they all do. It is customary."

"But," sweetly asked good little M. Bernadet, "what if he is innocent?" And the three little girls, raising their heads, looked at their father as if to repeat their mother's question. The eldest murmured, "Yes, what if mamma is right?"

Bernadet shrugged his shoulders.

"To hear them, if one listened to them, one would believe them all innocent and the crimes would have to commit themselves. If this child, cent, I shall be astonished as if I should see him fall in Paris in June. He will have to prove that he is innocent. These things prove themselves. Give me some more soup, Melanie."

As M. Bernadet turned a ladleful of hot soup into her husband's plate she softly said: "Are there no innocent ones condemned? Do you never deceive yourself?" Bernadet did not stop eating. "I cannot say. No one is infallible, no one. The shrewdest deceive themselves; they are sometimes duped, but it is rare, very rare. As well to say that it does not happen—Laurique, yes (and the three little girls opened wide their large blue eyes as at a play), the Lesurques of the Cour de Lyon, who has made you weep so many times at the theater at Montmartre. One would like to revise his trial to reinstate him, but no one has been able to do it. I have studied his trial. By my faith, I swear, I would condemn him still—Ah, what good soup!"

"But this one today?" asked M. Bernadet. "Art thou certain? What is his name?"

"Dantini—Jacques Dantini. Oh, he is a gentleman—a very fine man, elegant indeed—some Bohemian of the upper class, who evidently needed money and who—Rovers had some valuables in his safe. The occasion made the thief, and there it is."

"Papa," interrupted the eldest of the three little girls, "canst thou take us to see the trial when he shall be sworn?"

"That depends. It is not easy. I will try. I will ask. If thou wilt work hard, Oh, dame," said Bernadet, "that will be a drama!"

"I will work hard."

At dessert, after he had taken his coffee, he allowed his three little girls to dip lumps of sugar into his saucer. He threw himself into his easy chair;

he gave a sigh of satisfaction, like a man whose daily, wearisome tasks are behind him, and who is catching a moment's repose.

"Ah," he said, opening a paper which his wife had placed on a table near him, together with a little glass of cordial sent to them by some consul in Hungary. "I am going to see what has happened and what those good journalists have invented about the affair in the Boulevard de Clichy. It is true, it is a steep chase between the reporters and us. Sometimes they win the race in the mornings. At other times, when they know nothing—ah! Then they invent, they embroider their histories."

A petroleum lamp lighted the paper which Bernadet unfolded and began to read.

Let us see what Lutece says."

He suddenly remembered what Paul Rodier had said to him, "Read my journal." This woman in black, found in the province, did she really exist? Had the novelist written a romance in order to follow the example of his friend? He looked over the paper to see if Paul Rodier had collaborated, as his friend had. Bernadet skipped over the headlines and glanced at the theatrical news. "Politics—they are all the same to me—ministerial crisis—nothing new about that. That could as well be published in yesterday's paper as in today's. 'The Crime of the Boulevard de Clichy.' Ah, good! Very good. We shall see."

And he began to read. Had Paul Rodier invented all the information to which he had treated the public? What was certain was that the police officer frowned and now gave strict attention to what he was reading, as if weighing the reporter's words.

Rodier had republished the biography of the ex-consul. M. Rovers had been mixed in South America in violent dramas. He was a romantic person, about whom more than the adventure in Buenos Ayres was known. The reporter had gained his information from an Argentine journal, the Prensa, established in Paris, and whose editor, in South America, had visited intimately the French consul.

The appearance of a woman in black, those visits made on fixed dates, as on anniversaries, revealed an intimacy, a relationship perhaps of the murdered man with that unknown woman. The woman was young, elegant and did not live in Paris. Rodier had set himself to discover her retreat, her name, and perhaps, thanks to her, to unravel the mystery which still enveloped the murder.

"Heu! That is not very precise information," thought the police officer. But it at least awoke Bernadet's curiosity and intelligence. It solved no problem, but it put one. M. de Sartines' famous search for the woman came naturally to Paul Rodier's pen, and he finished the article with some details about Jacques Dantini, the inmate, the only friend of Louis Pierre Rovers, and the reporter, when he had written this, was still ignorant that Dantini was under arrest.

"Tomorrow," said Bernadet to himself, "he will give us Dantini's biography. He tells me nothing new in his report. And yet"—He folded up the paper and laid it on the table, and while sipping his cordial he thought of that mysterious visitor—the woman in black—and told himself that truly the trial must be there. He would see Moniche and his wife again; he would question them; he would make a thorough search.

"But what for? We have the guilty man. It is too late for the assassin to be behind bars. The woman might be an accomplice."

Then Bernadet, filled with passion for his profession, rather than vanity—this artist in a police sense, this lover of art for art's sake—rubbed his hands and silently applauded himself, because he had insisted, and as it were, compelled M. Gigny and the doctors to adopt his idea. He, the humble, unknown sub-officer, standing back and simply striving to do his duty, had influenced distinguished persons as powerful as magistrates and members of the academy. They had obeyed his suggestion. The little Bernadet felt that he had done a glorious deed. He had experienced a strong conviction, which would not be denied. He had proved that what had been considered only a chimera was a reality. He had accomplished a seeming impossibility. He had evoked the dead man's secret even from the tomb.

"And M. Gigny thinks that it will not help his candidature at the academy! He will wear the green robe, and he will owe it to me. There are others who owe me something too."

With his faculty for believing in his dreams, of seeing his visions appear, realized and living—a faculty which in such a man seemed like the strange hallucination of a poet—Bernadet did not doubt for a moment the reality of this phantom which had appeared in the retina of the eye. It was nothing more, that eye removed by the surgeon's scalpel, than an avenging mirror. It accused; it overwhelmed. Jacques Dantini was found there in all the atrocity of his crime.

"When I think, when I think that they did not wish to try the experiment! It is made now," thought Bernadet.

M. Gigny had strongly recommended that all that part of the examination should not be made public. Absolute silence was necessary. If the press could have obtained the slightest information, every detail of the experiment would have become public property, and the account would have been embellished and made as fantastic as possible. This would have been a deep mine for Edgar A. Poe, who would have worked that lode well and made the Parisians shudder. How the ink would have been mixed with Rovers's blood! It was well understood that if the suspected man would in the end confess his guilt the result of the singular scientifically incredible experiment should be made known, but until then absolute silence. Everything which had been said and done around the dissecting table at the morgue or in the examining magistrate's room would remain a secret.

But would Dantini confess?

The next day after M. Gigny had put him under arrest Bernadet had gone to the Palais for news. He wished to consult his chief about the "woman in black," to ask him what he thought of the article which had been published in the paper by Paul Rodier. M. Leriche attached no great importance to it.

"A reporter's information. Very vague. There is always a woman, parlen, in the life of every man. But did this one know Dantini? She seems to me simply an old, abandoned friend, and who came occasionally to ask aid of the old boy?"

"The woman noticed by Moniche is young," said Bernadet.

"Abandoned friends are often young," M. Leriche replied, visibly enchanted with his observation.

As for Dantini, he still maintained his obstinate silence. He persisted in finding iniquitous an arrest for which there was no motive, and he kept the haughty, almost provoking attitude of those whom the chief called the greatest culprits.

In the Heart of a Thunder-Storm.

The Thrilling Experience of an Aeronaut.

BY REV. J. M. BACON, F.R.S.E.

In the summer of the year before last a thunderstorm of exceptional severity developed rapidly over London.
About noon the sky darkened, and gathering clouds burst upon the city, over which for three and a half hours they kept up an aerial cannonade with little intermission and with the utmost fury. The lightning was incessant, the thunder deafening, and in less than four hours a month's average of rain had fallen. Then the storm ceased, passing nowhere. Apparently, too, it had come from nowhere. Springing into existence above the area of London proper, it spent its life over the city, and there expired.

This was a phenomenal but perfectly typical summer thunderstorm. What are technically known as secondary cyclones, or small areas of low pressure, may form at any time or place on the outskirts of larger depressions, and whenever among the endless eddying of currents overhead such springing into existence, then, if it be in summer months, with its short consequence that electric disturbance will ensue.

Unfortunately, as may be inferred,
we are at present unable to predict with any certainty where a "secondary" may develop, or over what portion of its area the thunder will be heard; and it may certainly be added that we cannot predict where it will die out. Nevertheless thunderstorms have their special haunts; and it is possible to know something of their mode of action.

It will facilitate the descriptions which follow if we point out some of the essential conditions of a summer storm. In the outset these unquestion-ably entail great changes in temperature—a fact which it will be easy enough to credit. Everyone can recall how, when the storm is brewing, the air about us is warm and close. Then a loose cloud curtain commonly gathers on the ground, while above it towers the heavy black cumulus cloud, appearing almost solid, with its compact masses and clean-cut outline.
This is the true thunder cloud, invariably associated with the lightning, and in configuration with broad out-spread base and white masses heaped above, bespeaks the presence of a cold upper air stratum which has condensed it, and on which it rests.

But perhaps its most remarkable characteristic is its motion, which is almost constantly opposed to the set of the weather-vane on the ground. Thus the cloud appears as coming up against the wind; and this is not all, for higher yet, much higher, there is generally to be seen a broad stretch of upper cloud, and somewhere in those upper regions the halloons form and fall. A little later, as we need not be reminded,
the down-rush of the storm brings to earth some of the chills of those upper levels.

I will now only ask that two or three very well-known facts relating to electricity be borne in mind. If a moist substance be electrified and then made warm its electric charge rapidly passes away with steam. And again, if water that has been electrified is allowed to escape drop by drop, then the charge leaves away with each drop. Further, any body which has a charge of electricity contains that charge only on the surface.

Now, it being conceded that the earth is the great storehouse of electricity, it is easy to conceive how in moist summer weather, when steam is invisibly rising off the ground, electricity may be passing copiously into the atmosphere. It will be remembered that while reside on the surfaces of the minute drops of water that now begin to take the form of clouds. If, however, those clouds continue condensing towards rain the minute drops soon coagulate into larger and in consequence the electricity, still confined to the surface, becomes more cramped for room.
Presently, then, this process continuing, the electricity in the clouds can no longer be contained within it, and breaks away as lightning. The flash of the thunder follows, causing violent commotion of the air, and augmenting the discharge of raindrops which thus are soon falling in a deluge.

So far, then, we have traced in outline the circumstances attending the bursting of the thunderstorm, which in a general way happily we regard only from the standpoint of lower earth, far enough removed from the terrors of the storm center itself. Naturally, however, our curiosity is drawn into the actual path of the thunder-pack, and, escaping with his life, has been able to record his experiences.

In the Andes of the great Equator
Mr. Whymper once found himself suddenly in the midst of a tropical thunderstorm that gathered and broke around him on a lofty peak. He and his guides were sixteen thousand feet up, with a clear sky above them, when as a puff of smoke from the clouds came from a hailstorm sent up flying for protection to the cliffs. There they were assailed with grape and shrapnel, in the form of half-inch stones, that wounded their faces and broke off fragments from the rocks around, while they left their refuge, and twice were beaten back.

Then followed a lull, and when the storm recommenced the hail had given place to lightning, which, beginning with occasional flashes, soon became a continuous fire. The lightning was without intermission, several flashes often occurring in a single instant, the ice axes of the party hissing ominously the while. So much for the lightning, but of thunder Mr.
Whymper states that it was followed simply by a single bang, which, he adds, "is all one hears when close to the point of discharge."

Compare with the above an account (taken from the "Times") of a mountain storm in temperate latitudes. This time the observer was not Mr. Whymper himself, but the scene is that particular ground which will always be associated with his name—the Matterhorn. A lady and gentleman and two guides were in the summit, and again again the heaven above was perfectly clear.

All in five minutes, however, the sky darkened, and as in the last account, the storm is heralded by hail and snow falling so densely that "you could grasp a handful from the atmosphere."
Then the first thunder peal is heard, apparently from a distance, but a moment later a report as of a rifle shot out close about them (a single bang).

bad nearly always outlive their usefulness.

again, and a shock is felt in the head.
A repetition of the same unpleasant phenomena pursued the party until they had climbed down beyond the limits of the storm.

Many sensational paragraphs are to be found telling how the blood has been caught in the storm, the majority of these being too manifestly overdrawn or untrue. But a genuine instance is to be found in the case of the younger Green, who once had the rare fortune to mount completely through a thunderstorm in progress and emerge in the clear overhead. His experience was instructive, and clearly proved the fact, often insisted on,
that such storms travel over the country much slower than the rate of the wind that bears them.

It was an August afternoon, with a violent wind from the south-west, when Mr. Green went up from Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and at a height of 4,000 feet found himself in the midst of a storm clouds, which were discharging rain like a waterfall, though without the accompaniment of much thunder and lightning. Plunging through this,
however, he reached clear sky above,
where a breeze from the north-west carried him clear of the storm which he thus left, still brooding over the scene behind him.

In view of this record it would seem possible for an aeronaut to rise in front of an approaching storm, and vaulting over it, to descend clear again on the other side.

A proceed now to tell of an occasion when, failing to accomplish this ma-noeuve, I managed to land myself in the very heart of one of the very heaviest storms already described. Indeed, that I can recall, being, moreover, compelled by circumstances to remain in this predicament long enough to take somewhat careful stock of these unusual surroundings. As with the mountain storms already described, in my own case it began with a clear sky, yet a sky in which heavy cloud had lately dispersed. It had, indeed, since noon been a day of storms, which,
however, at past five o'clock in the afternoon, appeared to be clearing away.

The month was July, and at that period of the summer it is common for severe storms to cease suddenly towards evening, even though they may return again at night. Thus I, with a couple of kindred spirits, felt justified in venturing into the storm. Indeed,
it was hard to conceive that there was
any risk in so doing, inasmuch as the
sky was clear, and since we must travel
with the wind it seemed natural to suppose that would a cloud arise anywhere on the horizon it would be driven away from us. We were, however, to learn, to our cost, that this was not so.

We started from Newbury, England, with a course at first over the high ground in the direction of Swindon, but soon, rising higher, we came within a rapid air stream which sucked us back over the Kennet valley, along the trench of which we thenceforward were carried at high speed; and it was over this valley that our disaster occurred.
It is commonly said that a thunderstorm is attracted by a river bed, but in reality the truth being that air streams up to a considerable height, and often bearing clouds, will follow the windings of any valley or channel through which the lower air is forcibly sweeping.

At any rate, at the end of the first ten miles, which we traveled in the brief interval of twenty minutes, we noticed the rich pastures below us growing indistinct with a blue-gray mist that deepened and broadened, and seemingly crept on ahead of us. The real fact, however, was that it was not being carried, but rather formed by condensation by a colder air that was settling down on the valley. And the access of this cold air was soon brought home to us, for, looking upwards, we saw ahead the sky already blotted out by a dense black pall, from which a few stray halloons were descending, chilling the air.

The sky immediately above us was ill seen on account of our huge silk globe. For our craft was a large one, and the cordage, having shrunk with recent showers, the car was drawn up somewhat close under the balloon.
Thus our view of the thunder-pack—
coming like the London storm, apparently from nowhere, and now already upon us—was a good one; and redictated, but as watched by many onlookers from our starting-ground, ten miles away, the storm was seen to advance towards the balloon, swallowing it up and towering high above it, a black threatening mass swelling into unusual proportions.

It proved, as I have said, one of the worst storms on record in our neighborhood. It brooded for five hours over Devizes, a few miles ahead of us, providing what has been already insisted on,
that the true storm travel far more slowly than the wind which bears it.
And right and left of us the havoc wrought was widespread and severe.
Close on one side a house was struck and blown to the ground, while on the opposite side, a cottage and the nearby ridge of hills, two soldiers were killed on Salisbury Plain.

It may have been partly owing to our circumscribed view of the sky overhead, or partly, perhaps, owing to our rapid forward motion, joined to the fact of the storm meeting us with equal velocity, that we failed to note
the menace of the advancing cloud, as did those at a distance. But I believe that in reality the fringe of the cloud formed about our balloon before we were aware of it, and thus hid the depths of the vast masses piling around.

It is the same with those who run into fog at sea. They become enveloped in a general mist, and cannot determine at close quarters, though to onlookers at a distance the shroud that covers them may appear as a fog bank of clearly defined limits.
I shall now recall how, looking sheer down, the gulf below us was though perfectly empty and transparent, for I was for some time intently watching the green fields, sharp and clear, sliding under us, while preparing to fire a dramatic fog-signal, of which more anon. A little way on, however, but around and below us, the air grew thicker and thicker with the blue-gray mist I have spoken of—that loose cloud curtain, doubtless, which accurate observers so generally describe as gathering from the earth as the storm sweeps up.

But ere we were reluctantly compelled to admit that we were caught in bad weather there was a wild shriek in the air all around, and in less than a minute's space we were swallowed up in a pitiless onslaught of hail, which cut and bruised us, rattling with a furious pattering on the silk above, and on the sides of our wicker-car, bringing down, too, from the upper regions —from what height, who shall say?— an ice-cold down-draught, for which we were ill-prepared.

And then the thunder broke out. Up to this moment we had had little or no premonitory warnings, in the usual growing of an approaching storm. Indeed, the thunder, though appalling enough, proved not the most striking feature of the grand phenomena we were now about to experience—a fact, in accordance with the experience of the mountaineers, already quoted.
Moreover, the reverberations of the bomb which I now exploded a hundred feet below did away with unwonted quickness. This was remarked by all our party, and deserves further consideration. Certainly to our senses the rolling of the thunder was not prolonged. But again this may have been merely that its frequency and its nearness drowned the after-sound.

For crash now followed crash with the briefest intermission. It was like guns opening at short range, fast and furious, as in that same brief flash one may watch at sea. The flashes which came from all sides were invariably somewhat above us, as though from batteries on commanding heights; and each was followed smartly with a burst closely resembling the solemn boom of heavy ordnance. They were single shots from masked em-braasures.

On one flank would come a fork of lightning for even in the home of the heaviest storms of the kind, it is not other shape—which for a brief interval lingered painfully in the eye. Then the crash followed, and the black cloud closed up; a shot, as it were, with smokeless powder answered promptly by like discharges from opposite heights. It was all a wild, terrific war, to which the novelty of our situation lent a real terror. For it was borne in upon us that this was not a sham fight after all, but that all the sky around was a real battle-ground, and we were in its focus.

Probably the physical distress which all in some measure feel when there is electrical tension in the air was accentuated, and, moreover, there was a couple of kindred spirits, felt justified
in venturing into the storm. Indeed,
it was hard to conceive that there was
any risk in so doing, inasmuch as the
sky was clear, and since we must travel
with the wind it seemed natural to
suppose that would a cloud arise any-
where on the horizon it would be driven
away from us. We were, however, to learn, to our cost, that this was not so.

But a glance below showed that as yet there was no haven on which to alight, for the whole length of Savernake Forest stretched beneath, offering a peril of its own to sky voyagers in a high wind. And so for several minutes we carried a most anxious and truly-watched and wondered, and chafed cheerily, though our hearts misgave us.
But presently our chance came—a chance for the exercise of judgment, and, better, for prompt action. There was a clearing in the margin of woodland, for which we were heading, a field of roots, bounded at its far end by a bank and double hedge, and with this in view the whole aspect of affairs was changed. The storm abated not one whit, but the thunder might crash
on. We scorned its din, and the wicked streaks of blinding flame; for we could act now.

Ten minutes later we had negotiated the turning point, and the forest and balloon lay prone along the edge of the far side. Around us was gathered a group of countrymen. They had been stolidly watching our balloon in the sky, waiting for it to be struck, and convinced, from their point of view, that it could not escape the lightning flashes that fairly enveloped it.

Ping-Pong Banned.

Ping-pong has at last fallen under the ban of the law makers of Scotland. In the city of Dundee the police magistrates have decided that this at least fashionable game is detrimental to the morals of a sober city. It seems that all public houses of that town, or nearly all, have provided ping-pong tables for their patrons, and the custom of playing for drinks has grown so rapidly that the falls are not large enough to accommodate all the victims of the game. Consequently, greatly aroused by this sudden increase of intemperance, the magistrates have decided that henceforth ping-pong may not be played in places where liquor is sold.

People are beginning to tire of frills
and frivolity in their drawing-rooms, and many ladies are redecorating their houses in a somewhat severe and medieval style. The reaction in favor of simplicity in house decoration, of good and substantial things versus fashions and imitations, is making itself strongly felt just now. It is a step in the right direction.—Lady Violet Greville in the "Graphic."

Mainly About People.

"There was a witty fellow out in a Michigan hospital," says Representative William Alden Smith, "who had to be fed on a daily diet of eggs and cherry. His physician asked him how he liked it. 'It would be all right, doctor,' he said, 'if the eggs was as now as the cherry and the cherry as old as the eggs.'"

It is related that once, when the Earl of Lauderdale was at dinner with King Charles, he remarked to the King:
"There is a good saying, that fools make feasts and wise men eat them."
The monarch, who was a member of the Earl of Shaftesbury, "letts make jests and fools repeat them," and the King advised Lauderdale to make sure of his man in future.

During the recent street car strike in St. Louis, Professor Hyatt, the weather observer, was about to get on a car, when a member of the strike committee stepped up to him and asked if he intended riding on the car. The professor replied that such was his intention. The striker sought to persuade him not to ride, but he started to get on the car.
"Well, if you ride on that car we will withdraw our patronage from you,"
said the striker. "I don't care whether you patronize me or not. I'm in the weather business," replied Professor Hyatt, and he entered the car.

In a Georgia Justice court a colored witness was asked to name the time a difficulty occurred. "Hit wuz in fodder pullin' time, suh," he replied. "You don't understand me," said the judge.
"I mean, wuz it any clock?" "It wuzn't," said the witness. "Well, by the sun, then?" "Now," exclaimed the witness, triumphantly, "sence you hez come right down ter business I'll tell you plain: Ez de sun had been a-shin-
in 'hit would er been 'bout two hours on a half by sun; but ez de sun didn't show his face 'tall dat day I couldn't say fer sartins des what time hit wuz!"

At the funeral of a lawyer of state reputation, who lived and practised in town not far from Philadelphia, and who was known among his friends as an unbeliever, an eminent gentleman from Philadelphia reached the house after the minister had begun the sermon. Not knowing how far the service had progressed, he ascended a well-known Quaker of the town, though he was a friend of the deceased, and who was noted for his great sense of humor, and leaning over his shoulder, asked in a whisper: "What part of the service have you reached?" To which the Quaker, without a smile, replied:
"Just opened for the defence."

A story of poor Aurelien Scholl, who lately joined the majority, gives a good idea of the caustic humor which may find an oddity among French writers. At a hotel, and called not, I think, the Maison Dorée, though he was at one time a great supporter of
M. Verrier's, a most moribund establishment, he was offered a Burgundy, which was praised by the host as "true velvet," but had, in fact, become a little sharp with age. "Yes," said Scholl, after tasting it, "velvet, but with pins in it!" Soon after came a Bordeaux, said on the same authority to be "a fine, genuine wine in his cellar." "It is," said this time the verdict, "for it has given away all its good qualities!"

Magistrate Devoy, in the Myrtle Avenue Court, Brooklyn, recently had four dummies who were caught in a ransacking raid before him. The first of the lot to be brought to the bar was an under-sized man, with a comical face, as black as night. The dialogue between the magistrate and the prisoner created some merriment in the court.
"What is your name?" inquired the magistrate, sternly. "Mah name's Smiff," replied the dandy. "What is your profession?" "I'm a locksmith by trade, suh." "What were you doing when the police broke into the room
last night?" "Judge, I was pursuing mah profession. I was makin' a bit for the door." "Officer," said the magistrate, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "lock Smith up!"

The late Sol Smith Russell had three dozen lives living in the West, of whom he was very fond. On one occasion, so the story goes, he took the youngest of them for a walk and bought her some candy on the agreement that it was not to be eaten until they reached her home. They started, but before they had gone far the little girl proposed, "Let's wunt!" Her uncle declined, and there was long pleading, all to no purpose. Finally, the little girl stopped, knelt down on the pavement and offered up the petition:
"Dad, please make Uncle Sol wunt."
It was simply a question of my losing my dignity, or her losing her faith in God," said Mr. Russell, in relating the incident, "so we ran as fast as we could for home."

Patronage.

The Impressionist had finally sold one of his creations. A brother artist who had arrived, or, as we say, "got there," not only persuaded one of his own customers to buy a painting by the less successful man, at a good figure, but got him an invitation to visit the patron's home to see the picture as it hung on the wall.

It was a painting of a sky, a bridge and a stream, and as they stood before it the purchaser fairly exhausted his vocabulary of art in extolling the beauty of the water and the poetic beauty of the sky. The man who had done the painting smiled and smiled, but at the same time mopped beads of perspiration from his brow.
Finally he got his friend into the hallway and there expired.

"Good, gracious!" he groaned.
"They've hung my picture upside down!"

Modern English.

A Washington lady who is so fond of her home that she stays in it sometimes all the year round was assailed, says "Lippincott's Magazine," by a conventional friend in conventional language.
"I know that you usually wintered here," she said, "but I was astonished to hear that you had summered here!"
"I have not only wintered here and summered here," replied the unfashionable one, "but I will astonish you still further when I tell you that I have here and have sometimes sprung here."

He who respects his work so highly and does it so reverently that he cares little what the world thinks of it is the man about whom the world comes at last to think a great deal.

"Oh! Mr. Porter, doesn't that train stop here?" said an old lady, as the express dashed through the station. "No, ma'am," said the porter blandly; "it don't even hesitate."

"Heirs Presumptive" and "Mor-ganatic Wives."

Most people have got the technique of the dynastic at their fingers' ends this year. Nevertheless our old friend the heir presumptive has again made his incorrect appearance, this time in the current number of the leading illustrated paper. The eldest son of the Prince of Wales is thus called in the underline of a first page illustration. The Prince in question is nobody's heir presumptive; if his heredity is to be mentioned at all he must be called the heir apparent of the heir apparent. An heir presumptive is his pending the possible birth of an heir in the direct line. There is only one person more generally misunderstood than the heir presumptive, and that is the morganatic wife. This irreproachable lady is generally alluded to by English journalists as though her title were a euphemism for some name of much more common kind,
and as though an alliance with her
were not exclusive.—London

Townships Notes.

Knowlton's summer boarder accommodation is strained to the limit.

The annual exhibition of Missisquoi Agricultural Society will be held at Bedford the 27th and 28th August.

Mr. C. H. Parmelee, M.P., Waterloo, left last Saturday for a trip to British Columbia with a small party of members of Parliament.

Seventy-four English farm laborers came out from England last week and have found places among the farmers of the Eastern Townships.

Mr. Joseph Deragon has fitted up a theatrical hall at Magog capable of seating 450 people. The new theatre was inaugurated last week by an amateur performance.

R. W. Wallace, for several years C.P.R. station agent at Waterloo, has been transferred to Magog, succeeding A. C. Brady, who in turn has been transferred to Newport.

Mr. Henry Lowell, M.P., for Stanstead, is spending a portion of the summer at Gaspé, where he has mills and timber limits. He is charmed with the place and the business prospects.

George W. Sisco has sold the Ottawa Hotel at Cowansville to Robert Curley of Sutton for $18,000. Mr. Sisco recently underwent a serious surgical operation in Montreal and is going to California as soon as he is strong enough.

Alvin H. Moore, of Magog, has ceased to do business as general merchant. John D. Moore, of the town of Magog, and George H. Burnham, of Rutland, Vt., will continue the old firm name of "A. H. Moore & Co.," as general merchants of Magog.

There are several applicants for the position of high constable for the District of Bedford, rendered vacant by the sudden death the other day of Mr. G. N. Galer. Financially the job is hardly worth fighting over, but that will render the scramble for it any less lively and interesting.

We regret to report that Dr. Bandfill, who is being treated at the Sherbrooke Hospital for typhoid fever, has had a setback. He was thought to be doing well until Tuesday, when Mrs. Bandfill was hurriedly telephoned for. At later reports he is somewhat easier.—Magog Enterprise.

On the evening of the day of King Edward's Coronation, Saturday, August 8th, at 8.30 p.m., a large "beacon fire" will be lighted upon Judge Foster's Mountain in Bolton. This is one of the Professor Colby chain of Mountains which are to be crowned with beacon fires, and will be a sight worth seeing. At the same time the Judge will send up fireworks from the same place and among them will be a balloon to which will be attached a tag upon which will be written, "Good to the bearer for five dollars on presentation to me" (signed) Samuel Willard Foster. Judge Foster will retain half of the tag to facilitate identification. Upon a former occasion the tag was found near Lake Memphremagog by a farmer who brought the tag for identification and received his money. From this locality Judge Foster's Mountain appears beyond the first range of Mountains mid-way between Owl's Head and Orford.

Their Secret Is Out.

All Sadierville, Ky., was curious to learn the cause of the vast improvement in the health of Mrs. S. P. Whitake, who had for a long time, endured untold suffering from a chronic bronchial trouble. "It's all due to Dr. King's New Discovery," writes her husband. It completely cured her and also cured our little grand daughter of a most annoying attack of Whooping Cough. It positively cures Coughs, Colds, La Grippe, Bronchitis, All Throat and Lung troubles. Guaranteed bottles 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at all druggists.

Pithy News Notes.

The strike at the Crow's Nest Coal Mines have been amicably settled.

The King has invited Mayors of cities in the United Kingdom with over 20,000 inhabitants to attend the coronation.

King Edward arrived in London on Wednesday, and was enthusiastically cheered by vast crowds. His Majesty appeared to be in extremely good health.

Mr. Wooste, a large land proprietor in Orange River Colony, his wife and two others, are being sent by the British Government under Captain Godson of the South African Constabulary to study agriculture in Canada.

President Roosevelt has approved an Immigration Bureau circular declaring that natives of Porto Rico and the Philippines going into the United States must submit to the examination enforced against alien immigrants.

John Croll, about 24 years of age, while at work Wednesday afternoon in The Gazette job printing office, Montreal, had the lower portion of his left arm cut completely off and the upper part of the arm terribly lacerated by being caught in a colored printing press.

What a Tale It Tells.

If that mirror of yours shows a wretched, sallow complexion, a jaundiced look, moth patches and blotches on the skin, it's liver trouble; but Dr. King's New Life Pills regulate the liver, purify the blood, give clear skin, rosy cheeks, rich complexion. Only 25c at all druggists.

A SMART SENTENCE.

Two Years for Indecent Assault.

In the District Magistrate's Court yesterday afternoon, before Judge Mulvena, Emile de Chevery was charged with attempting to commit an indecent assault upon a Mrs. McClure, wife of a farmer of that name, of Kingsbury. It appeared from the evidence that last Saturday evening while Mr. McClure and another servant, named Ralph Abercrombie, went to the barn to milk the cows, the accused seriously assaulted the complainant.

When the hired man returned to the house Mrs. McClure was lying in a pool of blood and unconscious. The accused had run away, but an alarm was raised, and he was arrested the same evening. On being brought before the Court yesterday, having previously chosen a speedy trial, he pleaded not guilty. The complainant, Mr. Edward McClure, Ralph Abercrombie and Dr. Moffatt, Richmond, gave evidence, at the conclusion of which the accused was found guilty and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary.

The prisoner was taken to the penitentiary this morning by High Constable Moe and Turnkey John Chesney.

Mr. Clark Gordon, Agent Massey Harris Co., Sherbrooke, Que.

Dear Sir:—I have much pleasure in recommending The Massey Harris mowers No. 10. The machine I got from you a short time ago is most satisfactory, and I find the horses go along with it as easy, if not easier, than any other machine I have ever used. The six feet cut certainly makes a great difference in a few hours cutting.

I find the foot lift for cutter bar a great advantage.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN M. LEMOYNE,
Director.

Salvation Has Been Unionized.

Even Salvation has been unionized. Nearly 200 members of the United Mineworkers left St. Patrick's Church at Oliphant, Pa., during mass Sunday morning because the priest would not ask a non-union man to leave the church. It is apparent, of course, that it would never do for the trades unions to permit the saving of "scab" souls. Heaven is supposed to be a state of perfect bliss, and there can be no perfect bliss where all the souls do not have union cards and an eight hour day for the glorification of their Maker.—Detroit Free Press.

A Methodist Standing.

At a meeting of the Methodist Church of the Ottawa district on Wednesday a memorial presented by Rev. Ernest Thomas of Westboro, was passed unanimously asking the General Conference to make it an explicit law that non-attendance at church should forfeit membership. The motion stipulated that the offending member should be given a month's notice. The memorial is aimed at what the pastors say is a constantly increasing evil, namely irregular attendance at service on the part of people whose names are on the membership roll.

Canadian Ministers Busy.

Discuss Many Questions of Interest to Canada.

London, August 7.—The Canadian Ministers have been fully occupied with the conference work and with consultations with the shipping people respecting the fast Atlantic line. Yet they have found time for other questions, such as trade relations with South Africa and Australia, steamship service with those countries and insurance rates on the Canadian routes. Hon. Mr. Fielding and Sir Wm. Mulock have explained to the committee of Lloyds the liberal disposition of the Dominion Government respecting the safety of navigation, and have urged more favourable insurance rates. Considerable progress has been made regarding steamship connections with South Africa, and the Ministers are confident that arrangements will be made for establishing a regular line from Canada to the Cape.

"A Little Cold, You Know" will become a great danger if it be allowed to reach down to the throat to the lungs. Nip the peril in the bud with Allen's Lung Balsam, a sure remedy containing no opium.

C. P. R. Land Sales.

The Winnipeg Free Press says that the C.P.R. land sales for July were larger by about three times than they were during the same month a year ago. The sales for July, 1902, amounted to 155,344 acres for $294,822.50. For July, 1901, the sales were 49,080 acres for $151,046.84. This land has been well distributed over all sections of the country, and the sales are in nearly every case for actual settlement. The sales of the Canada Northwest Land Company for July were 29,354 acres for $165,231.69.

Decadence in Writing.

The question of handwriting is now becoming a subject of controversy and it is contended that it is not being properly taught in the public schools. An examination of commercial books not many years old reveals the fact that the calligraphy of those now in middle years was much superior to that of the present day. There is also a dispute as to the respective merits of ordinary and "vertical" writing. But the real cause of the decadence in writing is in the now general use of the typewriter. Few people in offices do not use them, and it has been asserted by an anatomical authority that those who use typewriters cannot write well. The same has been said of pianists and there may be something in the theory. The routine of writing lessons still continues as usual in the schools.—Ottawa Free Press.

LOST THEIR LIVES AT OLD ORCHARD.

Two Montrealeers Drowned While Bathing At Ocean Park.

Old Orchard, Me., August 7.—A strong undertow claimed the lives of three bathers at Ocean Park, here today.

George Ford, aged 63 years, of Ottawa, Ontario, former member of the City Council of that city, Walter Basham, aged 55, of Montreal, train despatcher on the Grand Trunk Railway, and Miss Florence J. Thomas, aged 20 years, of Montreal.

The three persons were the only bathers in that section of the beach at the time.

Constable Fined for Assault.

In the District Magistrate's Court on Tuesday, before Judge Mulvena, Constable Reed was charged with having committed an assault on a young man named Burton on a recent Sunday. Some eight witnesses were examined, and the evidence went to show that Burton was standing on the sidewalk when Constable Reed and his wife passed along. The former when passing Burton shoved him off the sidewalk with the result that he tripped in the cover of a catch drain and fell to the ground. The Judge, in passing a sentence of $1 and costs on Reed, said that from the evidence there was no doubt but that an assault had been committed by pushing the complainant off the sidewalk, although the complainant himself was not wholly blameless as he was obstructing the sidewalk at the time.

WHY YOUR HELP.

Reasons Urged for Helping the Free Hospital for Consumptives.

In the letters being received by Sir Wm. R. Meredith, Mr. W. J. Gage and other trustees of the National Sanatorium Association, containing contributions for the furnishing of the new Free Hospital for Consumptives in Muskoka, some very forceful reasons are given why this work should be completed with the least possible delay.

The fact that so many are waiting for admittance to the free hospital—those whom death may overtake if too great delay is experienced—is perhaps the most urgent of all reasons for opening the doors of the Free Consumption Hospital quickly.

The splendid record of the work done in the Muskoka Cottage Sanatorium—the many cures effected and the many helped to new life—is evidence that the Association is working along right lines.

But of the letters: Mr. H. P. Dwight, in sending a contribution of $100, says:—"I have had special opportunities of knowing of the good that has been done by means of the Muskoka Sanatorium, and I feel that it is only right to state that it is hardly possible to conceive of any enterprise in the Dominion more worthy of support and encouragement."

A prominent Toronto manufacturer, who stipulated that his name should not be used, and enclosing $50, says:—"I wish you great success, and on behalf of the whole community, for whom you are so strenuously and practically working, I offer you sincere thanks."

A citizen of one of our northern towns, who has opportunity from time to time to study conditions in Gravenhurst, sends $50, and writes:—"We often speak of the good work in which you are engaged, and often while at Gravenhurst we had an opportunity of seeing some of the benefits of the same. May God prosper you in your noble work, and may your well-known evangelists, in sending their cheque for $50 from their home in St. Thomas on New Year's Day, say:—"We feel confident that if people could visit the Sanatorium that has been in existence for years, and become impressed, as we were by our visit, as to the excellence and necessity of the institution and the good work that is being done, they would feel it a most desirable opportunity and a rare joy to have a share in furnishing the new Free Hospital."

These letters might be largely multiplied. They all tell the one story of the practical and helpful character of the methods adopted to assist the consumptive to health. The new hospital draws very nearly to completion. Within a few weeks it will be safe to suppose that workmen are entirely out of the building, so generously given by two Toronto citizens. Furnishing and equipping is the immediate work. Whilst the trustees feel grateful for the hearty responses in many ways to their appeal, yet a much larger sum must be secured in order to furnish and equip so that patients can be at once admitted. Contributions, large or small, will help to this end, and the hope is that the response will be prompt. The sum of $55,000 has been secured. Contributions may be sent to Sir Wm. R. Meredith, Chief Justice, 4 Lampart Avenue, Toronto; Mr. W. J. Gage, 54 Front Street West, Toronto; or to the National Trust Co. Limited, Treasurer, 22 King Street East, Toronto.

The Toreador's Rose.

Whenever I hear the "Toreador's March" from "Carmen"—that gay, devil-may-care melody, with its undertone of tragic sorrow, recalling pictures of a once gay of a rose in a skull—I think of Jose Silverio.

It was in old Madrid, the romantic city of guitars, dark eyes, love, and bull-fights; where the statue of the Virgin stands in the public square with the late King Alfonso's fatal moustache burning blue on her carven finger. To the light lit of merry music Jose Silverio, the handsome, dark-eyed, and full of life, was seen, and beloved by half the fair women of Madrid, rode into the ring. A murmur of admiration greeted him—he was splendid in spangles and mounted on a magnificent white horse. After him came his scarlet-cloaked matadors on foot, armed with light lances flitting with streamers of many-colored ribbons. The bull's horns below struck into the music like the deep, mellow note of a bass viol. He was already in the ring pawing up the sawdust defiantly, a superb animal of the best breed of Andalusia, with delicate hoofs, curving horns, and a skin like black satin, under which the fierce muscles constantly rippled.

The toreador lifted his dark, passionate eyes to a box above, where eyes equally dark, equally passionate, answered his mute, adoring message. The senorita was in black, the usual dress affected in public by Spanish women of high degree. A diamond star sparkled on her full bosom, and a crimson rose caressed like the lips of a lover the black, silken masses of her hair, over the top of the lace mantilla was coquettishly thrown.

An hour before he had passed the flower between her window bars, and he thrilled with exultant joy to see it glowing in her dusky braids. The perfume of the rose, already withering in the amphitheatre was wafted to his nostrils with the woody smell of fresh sawdust and musky odors from hundreds of constantly moving fans. Its fragrance led him back in sweet retrospection to a black and silver in the moonlight, the pressure of a soft breast, braided arms, and red lips yielding kiss for kiss, while his blue-ribboned guitar lay silent in the dew at his feet. Then the bull, goaded to splendid ferocity by the torturing banderillas, made his mad charge. The ring became an inferno of horns and hoofs, out of which flashed the keen lightning of the toreador's sword in a cloud of dust. No one could tell after every eye was riveted on the arena, but the white horse rolled over in his death agony, dismembered by one swift stroke from those terrible twin sabres fixed in the bull's powerful forehead. By the fraction of a second Jose failed to stir his feet from the stirrups in time to escape the second charge. His body described a glittering arc in the air, and fell lifeless in the sawdust. The sword, sent spinning from his hand, was caught by a matador, who delivered the coup de grace to the bull by a feat of nimble cunning that elicited a thunder of applause. Even the senorita clapped her little jeweled hands. She leaned over the edge of her box to look down at the limp, inert figure so full of proud courage and virile grace a moment ago.

"Don't poor fellow," she said. Then, turning to a young man leaning over her chair, "Don Felipe, you may have the rose, though it is wilted now."—Minna Irving, in "Leslie's."

Mainly About People.

At the finish of a discussion with Tolstol on the ethics of finance, his opponent sought to excuse certain methods of commerce and trade with the familiar argument: "That's business." "Business?" mused the philosopher. "Oh, yes; I know what business means—somebody else's money."

The Kaiser has a habit of pulling his ear when he is in a study. One of the royal nephews asked him why he did it. "Because I am annoyed," replied the Kaiser. "And when you are very, very much annoyed, what do you do?" persisted the nephew. "Then I pull somebody else's," said His Majesty.

Mark Twain, in his latest story, tells of a group of miners who were discussing Sherlock Holmes and his majestic methods. After each in turn had paid his tribute of respect, Ferguson, with a deep awe in his voice, ventured: "Work 'if God made him." There was no response for a moment, then Ham Sandwich said reverently: "Not all at one time, I reckon."

Mr. Carnegie once listened to a colored preacher's sermon in a little village church in Georgia, and the New York Times, in its editorial, said: "He has been blessed by his own people. We have heard of dollars and cents; and if (he looked suspiciously at the door of libraries), 'an' if de fifty dollar bill put in by de white gemman with de gray whiskers t'ins out to be a good one, we is blessed a whole lot moah."

One of the humorous incidents of the political campaign now drawing to a close is the joke perpetrated by a Western Ontario candidate who is opposing the sitting member. He has distributed thousands of copies of a pamphlet bearing the title, "Speeches by Mr. — in the Legislature of 1898-1902." As a rule, budding statesmen's speeches are used against them by their opponents, but in the present case the member for North—never once opened his mouth, unless it was in committee, during the whole Legislature. His parliamentary eloquence is therefore represented by half a dozen pages of blank white paper.

A political orator addressed a club of Italian voters in English, and to his surprise and satisfaction, his listeners paid strict attention and applauded at the proper places, shouting: "Viva!" and "Bravo!" repeatedly. At the conclusion of his speech (said the New York Times) the orator took his seat beside the chairman. He whispered that he was delighted with his reception, and had never spoken to a more intelligent audience. "Ha-ha!" replied the chairman; "me flax all a dat. You one fine man, you one fine man." "Hurrah!" Me ho! up two-a finger, ever-a man say-a "Viva!" Me ho! up three-a finger, ever-a man say-a "Bravo!" Me ho! up whole-a hand, ever-a man say-a "Hi-yo!" like one great yell. Me flax all a dat.

His Majesty Edward VII. is credited with the saying that it is vastly easier to live up to the obligations of a play than to those of a real one; and the same thought, with a slightly different turn, was once expressed by President Lincoln. In 1862, says a writer in the Kansas City "Journal," Colonel Alexander of Topeka, who was an intimate friend of the President, visited him at Washington, and found him in a greatly depressed state of mind. "This being said, I don't like it cracked up to be, is it, Mr. Lincoln?" enquired Colonel Alexander. "No," said Lincoln, his eyes twinkling merrily. "I feel sometimes like the Irishman, who, after being ridden out by a doctor, said: 'If it wasn't for the honor or av' th' thing, I'd rather walk!'"

Sermons are commonly supposed to be medicinal to the mind of both compounder and congregant, but the New York "Tribune" tells the story of one which, if the minister's servant was right, was a wrong tonic. One Sunday morning the late Rev. Dr. Ducahet of Connecticut arose feeling decidedly ill. After a futile attempt to eat breakfast, he called an old and favorite colored servant and said: "Sam, go around and tell the sexton that I want to post a notice on the church door that I am too ill to preach to-day." "Now, massa," said Samuel, "don't you gib ut dat way. Just gib him a trial; you get dat all right." The argument resulted in the minister's determination to try it. He preached as usual, and after service returned to the house, looking much brighter. "How you feel, massa?" said Samuel, as he opened the door. "Better; much better, Sam. I'm glad I took your advice." "I knew it," said Samuel, grinning from ear to ear. "I know you feel better when you gib dat sermon out o' your system!"

Dress Reform.

Once upon a time a certain woman, who had been much pestered by a dress reformer, was shot at by a frenzied suitor, and was saved from an untimely death by her corset, which deflected the bullet.

"Ah!" she exclaimed, turning triumphantly upon the dress reformer. "If I had quit wearing corsets, as you advised me, I should be dead now!" "Oh, no!" replied the dress reformer, with perfect serenity. "Women who don't wear corsets don't have frenzied suitors, you know!"—Town Topics.

The No Breakfast League.

Certain good people of Chicago have started a "No Breakfast League," the idea being that breakfast is a frivolous and unnecessary institution, and ought to be suppressed. People, they say, can work better and enjoy greater health by starting for the city in the morning without breakfast. In your way to the station you drink in the free air of heaven; and as you sit in the train you buckle up your waistcoat band another inch or two and feel a new man.

There has been for many years a "No Breakfast League" in your way to the station you drink in the free air of heaven; and as you sit in the train you buckle up your waistcoat band another inch or two and feel a new man.

More than likely, however, that the Chicago No Breakfasters are just the ordinary run of food cranks. If there is one thing in this world that you cannot prudently do, it is to advise your neighbor as to his dietary. And, as a natural consequence, we all think we know what is good and what is bad in the way of meals for the people. One must try to make a breakfast big enough to make a dinner for three people, and if he hears that his neighbor's breakfast is limited to a slice of toast and a cup of tea, he at once predicts a lowered vitality and an early death. The tea and toast man, on the other hand, will not doubt hold that his neighbor is killing himself by inches with those heavy breakfasts; whereas, in these matters, it seems to be the true fact that every man is the best judge of what is good for himself. It is very likely that a breakfast limited to a run round the garden and a bit of dumb-bell exercise may suit the Chicago people, but it is equally likely that it would suit everybody alike.

The average enthusiast is apt to overlook the swing of the pendulum when taking up the newest craze in a whole-hearted manner. He will go without his accustomed breakfast for the first morning, and arrive at his office in a peevish and irritable mood. Somewhere about eleven o'clock he feels like throwing up the sponge, and sending the messenger out for a dry biscuit or two; but in most cases he will last out for the first experiment. At lunch time, though, the swing of the pendulum will come in. He has got to take a lunch that will average up to two meals; and in the first glorious rush at the good food he will overdo the lovely business. The usual lunch hour will drag itself out into two hours and a half, or thereabouts; though it would be idle to fix a limit to it; the going to be new rules. The novice will eat and drink—and the reaction after the unaccustomed fast will turn the meal into a considerable sort of orgy. "This is the first drop of 'ad-to-day,' old man!" Ave anuzzer we me Woop!"

Where is this No Everything going to leave off? They will carry these self-denying ordinances along till something occurs that will show the public that the wrong way is being taken. The papers the other day said that a Russian scientist had discovered that all the ill the flesh is heir to are due to our wearing—clothes. Let somebody start a No Clothes Society in this happy land of ours and see how it works. There would be a busy time on the first bright summer morning on which the League's set out to justify their principles; and the authorities would be running round town buying up hundreds of weights of trousers at contract price for the morning's batch of prisoners roped into the official strait-jackets. A league of this sort would impress the public with its stupidity, whereas you can tell the merely looking man whether he has had his breakfast or not. And, as we know, what we can't see we don't trouble about to any extent.

Some people profess to be very wise till you come to time that the average man eats too much. If the average man who hears the good news gets influenced by it, the chances are that he will thin his diet down a little, and thus save his health. The doctor, however, who has a rule, eats what he thinks he wants. To some extent, he has probably learned by experience that a certain quantity of food is necessary for his well-being, and as soon as that quantity has become a habit he runs a considerable risk in changing it, for use is second nature. The scientist sits down and calculates that so many ounces of food are sufficient for an ordinary man, and calmly assumes that the last word on the subject has been said. Whereas, in the case of two men of equal size, one will often be satisfied with a dinner of oatmeal porridge and milk, and glass of water, while the other will want soup, fish, joint, and cheese, and as likely as not will want to order some biscuits with his wine just to fill up the still aching void.

You can't lay down a hard-and-fast rule in these matters, and if the No Breakfasters are going to have a free run in the country, I for one shall advocate an increase of accommodation in our lunatic asylums. It has long been a favorite rule of the medical profession that people ought not to eat supper; and if we are now to be advised to do without breakfast as well, we might as well go the whole hog and live the higher life on two dry biscuits and a saltish powder per diem—"Pick-Me-Up."

"It's an Al display," said Mr. Pitt, at the dog show. "It's a first-class exhibition," replied Mr. Penn, "but you've got the wrong number." "How so?" "Instead of Al it is K9."—"Dog Fanciers' Gazette."

"If any one asks for me, James, I shall be back in ten years," said Mr. Pondick. "Yes, sorry," replied the Irish office boy; "and how soon will you be back if no one asks for you?"

Mr. Smith—"I declare this leg of mutton has shrunk away almost to nothing." Willie Smith—"Perhaps, mamma, it came off the same sheep as my flannel did."

Father (who has helped his son with his home work)—"What did the teacher say when you showed him the sum?" Johnny—"He said I was getting more stupid every day."

Every time a man runs across a lot of old clothes around the house he searches them although he never finds anything.

Individualities.

Visitors to the last Passion Play at Oberammergau will be interested to learn that Anton Lang, who represented Christus, is shortly to be married to Mattide Rutz, whose rendering of the "mystical song" was universally admired. Fraulein Rutz is a daughter of Herr Rutz, the village blacksmith, and leader of the chorus.

In the Tenth Kentucky district, Mary Burkhardt is a candidate for Congress on the Prohibition ticket. Miss Burkhardt is a resident of Wolfe County, which is in the mountain district of Eastern Kentucky, and she is making her canvass on horseback. The temperance vote of Wolfe County, it may be added, was only six at the election of two years ago.

The wife of Jefferson Davis has protested against the decision of the Daughters of the Confederacy to make the memorial to Mr. Davis a "triumphal arch." As she points out emphatically, both the arch and the place where it is proposed to erect it in Richmond are unfit, as the cause did not triumph, and the "intersection of two noisy streets lined with shops" is most incongruous.

Colonel Marchand of Fashoda fame, who has returned to France from Pekin, by way of Manchuria and Siberia, was greeted all along the route with great public and official enthusiasm. The Governor-General at Khabarovsk gave a reception in his honor. After staying a couple of days at Vladivostok, he left for Russia on the Manchurian railway. At all the chief stations the officers of the various garrisons were waiting on the platform for the arrival of his train. Bands playing the French national anthem, officers in full dress, and even the governors of the various districts were present to do him honor.

The conviction of John Most for publishing an anarchistic article entitled "Murder vs. Murder," in the "Freiheit," just previous to President McKinley's death, has been affirmed by the appellate division of the United States Supreme Court, all the Justices concurring. Most was sentenced to a year in prison. In its decision, the court said: "It is urged that the defendant is not criminally liable for the publication of this article because he was not the author of it—that it was first published nearly fifty years ago, and that all the defendant did was to republish it. A complete answer to this suggestion is that the defendant published and adopted it as his own."

Hugues Le Roux, the French author and explorer, says that he, and not Alphonse Daudet, is the author of "La Belle Nivernaise." To the University of Chicago students last week, he said that Daudet, when asked by the management of one of the American magazines to write a certain kind of story, enquired of him whether he had such a story written, but not published. M. Le Roux said that he had not, but that he had material for such a story in his mind. He then wrote, he says, the story which is known as "La Belle Nivernaise," and turned it over to the publisher, who read it, signed his name to it, and then sent it to the American publishers, by whom it was first printed. "I was amazed on landing in this country to find the book a classic," said M. Le Roux, "and I thought I had never myself thought it. The story of a good young man a classic—the idea is ridiculous to us."

Finding the Ghost.

Materials for thrilling ghost stories may be drawn from life with the advantage that a rational explanation comes with them. Some years ago there was a lone house standing near a Southern plantation. This house nobody would ever enter, because it was haunted, and strange noises were heard in it every night after dark. Several tenants tried it, but were frightened away by the noises. At last one individual, more courageous than the rest, resolved to solve the mystery. He accordingly armed himself, and, having put out the light, remained sentry in one of the rooms. Shortly he heard on the stairs, pit, pat; a full stop; then pit, pat; a full stop again. The noise was repeated several times, as though some creature, ghost or no ghost, were coming upstairs. At last the thing, whatever it was, came close to the door of the room where the sentry was placed, and he flung it open in a hurry, and, bang! something went downstairs with a tremendous jump, and all over the bottom of the house the greatest confusion, as of thousands of demons rushing in all directions, was heard. This was the end of the ghost. The next night the crafty sentry established himself on the first landing, with a heap of straw and a box of matches. Soon all was quiet. Up the stairs again came the pit, pat, pit, pat. When the noise was close to the ambush, he sprang a match and set fire to his straw, which blazed up like a bonfire, revealing a rabbit, which instantly scuttled downstairs again to rejoin scores of its comrades, who had got into the house from a neighboring plantation. The courageous sentry was rewarded for his vigil, for he held his tongue as to the cause of the ghost. He got the house at a reduced rent, and several capital traps made of the ghost's bodies into the bargain.

Petty Economy.

President E. J. Dillington of the Illinois Steel Company declares that the man who advertises for an office-boy, he says, "His choice finally rests between two bright youngsters, and as the supreme test he asks that they open some packages lying on a table. This is easy for Charlie. Charlie takes up a package, unties four hard knots, unwinds the string, rolls it up around his fingers, ties it into a loop, and lays the string in a safe place. Then, unwrapping the package, he folds the paper up neatly and tucks it on a shelf. By that time Willie, with his pocket-knife, has slashed the strings on seven packages, ripped the paper off, and piled the whole mass of rubbish in the wastebasket. Petty economy, of course, the little fellow would not do the job; however, Willie is business manager for the house. Small economies must be scientific economies. The days of saving wrapping twine are gone."

The Fable of Matsukata.

Count Matsukata, former Prime Minister of Japan, who is known in America as "the father of the gold standard," was asked during his recent visit to New York whether "Captains of Industry" in the Mikado's Empire were getting control of the country's trade and resources.

"Not to the same extent as in more advanced lands," answered Count Matsukata with a smile. "Perhaps we are influenced by the old 'Myth of the Gold Man' handed down from the ancient days of Shin Mu."

The count was requested to tell the legend, and he said:

"In the dim historic dawn a merchant eager for great wealth heard of a strange grove of wild lemon trees whose fabulous fruit, when eaten, would convert the hand that plucked it into gold."

"So the merchant journeyed to the grove, where the God of Riches, with a great sack on his shoulders, bade him help himself. He did so, and his arm was converted into gleaming gold. This he had amputated, and, though bereft of an arm, became a man of wealth."

"A banker, hearing of the strange case, determined to secure the total produce of the miraculous lemon trees. To that end he bought out the right of the guardian deity; but that shrewd being exacted so great a price that the covetous banker found his fortune depleted. To secure ready money he determined to eat of the fruit and sacrifice an arm."

"Raw lemon, however, was too stringent for his pampered palate, and so he sweetened the juice of several lemons with sugar. He ate, and his arm was converted into gleaming gold. This he had amputated, and, though bereft of an arm, became a man of wealth."

"There is no record," replied Count Matsukata, smiling, "of its having been destroyed, but happily our fortune-bunters have not been able to locate it."

ALMOST IN DESPAIR.

The Condition of Mrs. John Shott, of Orangeville.

Suffered From a Burning Sensation in the Stomach—Food Became Distasteful and She Grew Weak and Despondent.

From the Sun, Orangeville, Ont.

The Sun is enabled this week through the courtesy of Mrs. John Shott, a lady well known and much esteemed by many of the residents of Orangeville, to give the particulars of another of those cures that have made Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a household remedy throughout the civilized world. Mrs. Shott, in conversation with our reporter said:

"About three years ago, while living in Ingersoll, I was a great sufferer from dyspepsia. The trouble first began with severe headaches, dizziness and sometimes vomiting. Next I suffered continually from a burning sensation in my stomach; food distressed me; I did not sleep at night; lost flesh and became very weak. I was continually doctoring but it did me no good. In fact I was gradually growing worse and despondent of ever being well again. One day a friend, who called to see me, strongly advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She spoke so highly of them that I decided to take her advice, and I soon discovered that they were not like the other medicines I had been taking and that I had at last found something to help me. I continued using the pills for perhaps a couple of months, when I found myself fully restored to health. I have always since enjoyed my meals with relish and have had no return of the trouble. With my experience I feel certain that if other sufferers will give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial they will find a certain cure."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills enrich and nourish the blood and strengthen the nerves. It is thus that they cure such troubles as dyspepsia, kidney ailments, rheumatism, partial paralysis, heart troubles, St. Vitus' dance and the ailments that make the lives of so many women a source of misery. These pills never fail to drive away pain, bring a glow of health to the whole body and make despondent men and women bright, active and strong. Do not take any pills without the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around the box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Made in Germany.

News of Britain as "made in Germany," is always entertaining. This delightful paragraph about the coronation postponement appeared in a local paper of a small German town:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has decided that the procession which was arranged for Friday shall take place as arranged, and that the Queen and the Princess shall be present. This is to avoid a financial crisis in London, where the postponement of all festivities is giving rise to such discontent that serious uprisings are feared.

Rustic Wedding In Prussia.

The wedding feasts which are given in some agricultural districts of Prussia are on an enormous scale.

A banquet shared by 200 or 300 guests is an every day affair, and the number sometimes rises to 800 or 900, all of whom are not only fed, but lodged, for the festivities continue for three days. The bride's father erects a number of large tents and engages bands of music, and the rustic beauties appear in costumes which only wealthy city women would think they could afford.

But the main thing, in accordance with good old German custom, is the eating and drinking. An idea of the liberality and of the labors of the bride's parents may be gathered from the statement that at a recent wedding two oxen, nine calves, nine sheep, three of four fat hogs, 150 chickens and 500 pounds of fish were provided. Nine hundred pounds of flour were used in making bread and cake. The beverages included 1,300 bottles of wine, twenty casks of beer and twenty-two bottles of brandy. A feast like this must cost a small fortune, and it would be a rich man who could marry off many daughters in this way.

Despite all this prodigality there is one thing which at first appears parsimonious—each guest is expected to bring his own knife and fork.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

In the South of France there is a doctor who does not waste time. When he makes the round of his patients he carries in his carriage a basket of homing pigeons. Before he leaves the house he writes out a prescription and fixes it under the wing of a bird, which flies straight to the dispensary. An assistant makes up the medicine, a cyclist delivers it, and the patient receives it, all within a few minutes of the doctor's departure.

A Dramatic Moment.

At the close of the Crimean War the Duke of Cambridge, who had taken command in the absence of Lord Raglan, went in person to the front to review the English troops. It had not occurred to His Highness that the date fixed for the review was June 18, the anniversary of Waterloo. Nor indeed at the moment did Marshal Canrobert pay any heed to the date.

At the time agreed upon Canrobert was on the ground in full parade uniform, accompanied by his staff. The English army was drawn up in long file; to the right, the Guards, with their long, hairy head-gears; then the Highlanders, with their feather-trimmed caps, their strange costumes and their bagpipes; and with sounds stranger still; and last the infantry, with their tufted shakos and their red tunics with white gimp. The sun was beaming brightly, causing the arms to glisten, and the flags waving in the wind were all covered over with names embroidered in gold. It was a superb spectacle.

The Duke of Cambridge asked the marshal to take the right of the line of battle—it was the Guards who occupied it—and reviewing officers began to move along in front of their ranks. Being got level with the first battalion, Canrobert saluted it. At the same moment the flag was lowered to return his salute, and on the unfolded tissue he read, in large letters:

"Ramilles, Malplaquet, Les Arapiles, Vittoria . . . Waterloo."

Those were precisely the most disastrous days of the history of France that Canrobert, a French general, was thus compelled to salute on the anniversary of Waterloo, in the midst of English generals who had fought there. He was unable, do what he could, to repress the emotion that was choking him during that second. Cold shivers ran through his body; the hand with which he held his hat while saluting trembled like a dead leaf.

Still, anxious to do nothing of all that appeared, he went on saluting; and after the other, down to the very last of them, the colors on which he could always read:

"Les Arapiles, Vittoria . . . Waterloo."

As may be imagined, Canrobert's emotion was all the more powerful that he was constrained to keep it down.

When it was all over he was obliged to pull himself together in order to shake hands with the Duke of Cambridge, to tender him thanks, to offer him congratulations.

His Highness was far too quick-sighted not to have noticed what he had gone through, and far too tactful to make the faintest allusion to it. But from that day onward, whenever French officers were invited to review the English army, the colors remained under cover, and neither Saint-Arnaud, Faidherbe nor Canrobert had in the future a similar ordeal to go through.

Railroad Search-Lights.

One of the recent safety equipments of the fast mail-trains, which run at a high rate of speed through the night, is the electric search-light. A number of engines on the leading roads have been supplied with such powerful search-lights that objects on the track can be seen trains to come to the station at night. A small dynamo in the engine supplies the light, and the lamp itself is so arranged that the fireman can operate it from his position in the cab to suit the needs of the moment.

It was found that a permanent light attached to the smoke-stack, as the old-time reflectors were, would cast its path of light off the track instead of on it when rounding curves. The fireman can now touch a lever and throw the light straight ahead, sideways, or up in the air. The largest of these locomotive search-lights are 6,000 candle-power, which, compared to the old-time reflectors, are remarkably productive of light.

The fast mail-trains travel over the ground so rapidly that an ordinary head-light casting a reflection four or five hundred feet is practically of little use. It might reveal to the engineer trouble ahead, but it could not help to avert the accident. The engineer might be able to shut off steam and apply the brakes, but by that time the engine would be upon the object.

It is almost impossible for one of the fast trains to stop in a dead stop much inside of 1,200 to 1,500 feet, and the greater length of time must elapse before a stop can be effected. Consequently, the old head-light, which of little real value to trains running fast, and sixty miles an hour. With the new powerful electric search-light, however, danger ahead can be seen in ample time for the engineer to bring his heavy train to a dead halt. As safety equipment of the record-breaking trains, the search-light has thus become a necessity of the day.

Hospital Corps In the Field.

Lieut. Col. Worthington Was the Whole Thing.

On Thursday evening the members of No. 3 Hearer Co., and No. 3 Field Hospital, Montreal, were in their quarters at 244 St. Catherine Street, to welcome home their comrades who went to Africa with No. 10 Field Hospital, and also their sergeant-major, who went on the more peaceful trip to the Coronation.

The welcome took the form of a smoker, and was attended by nearly all the members of both corps, with all the officers.

During the evening the men told some very amusing stories of their trip and of some of the hard work they had. On one subject all were a unit, and that was: That Lieut. Col. Worthington, their commander, was the whole thing. They could not speak too highly of him. One of the boys told that one day he was asked by an Imperial officer as to the whereabouts of the colonel. The orderly pointed to a man in his shirt sleeves assisting in the building of a stone wall, and replied, "There he is." The Imperial was horribly shocked at such a breach of dignity. This was only one little example of how easily the colonials accommodated themselves to all kinds of circumstances.

Another of the men, who was in the Hart's River mix up, said that it would have been far worse if the Boers had not been afraid to close in, fearing that the British had a very large reserve behind them. General Walter Kitchener was the bane of their lives.

The Origin of Free Masonry.

Freemasonry has been traced back by tradition or imagination to the building the Tower of Babel, but the Masonic craft really originated about the same time and from the same causes as other incorporated crafts did in the middle ages.

In an eminently church building age men skilled in hewing and setting stones were prized, their vocation involved travelling in search of work to wherever a church or cathedral was being built, and there they lived in a camp of huts near the work.

To enable a mason travelling to work to be recognized and obtain hospitality from brother masons on the way, there were given him certain signs and words he was bound to keep secret.

"Freemason" means "freeman mason" those who had obtained the freedom of their guild. Modern speculative freemasonry is an innocent mystification unconnected with the building craft. It is of English origin, and dates from the 18th century. It is founded in the practice of moral and social virtues, and brotherly love, relief and truth are inculcated by its precepts. There are three grades—apprentice, fellow-craft and master-mason, and at the making of each there are peculiar ceremonies.

Lodges in Scotland profess to trace their origin to the foreign masons who came to Scotland in the 12th century to build the abbeys of Holyrood, Kiwinning and Melrose. Those in England go back to an assemblage of masons held at York in 926.

In Scotland the masons, when a real company of artificers, were, like other handicrafts, governed by wardens. In 1508 the lodges were reorganized by William Schaw, principal warden and chief master of masons.

There were for a time disputes as to precedence after the operative element became absorbed in speculative masonry. Kiwinning Lodge having been placed second withdrew from the Grand Lodge, but was, in 1807, readmitted as Mother Kilwinning, with precedence over the others. There are over six hundred Lodges under the Grand Lodge of Scotland. Modern Freemasonry spread from Britain to the Continent, America and Asia.

Roman Catholics treat Freemasonry as a pantheistic system, opposed to belief in the personality of God, and subversive of authority. Five Popes have expressly condemned it.

The deep symbolical meaning supposed to be couched under the jargon of the Masonic fraternity is an apocryphal as the dangers of Masonry to government and order. A set of passwords and a peculiar grip of the hand enable the initiated to recognise each other, and give a zest to their convivial meetings; and, if the institution possesses any practical utility, it is in enabling a Mason, in a place where he is a stranger, to make himself known to his brother Masons and claim their protection and assistance.—Abridged from Chambers' Encyclopedia.

Mr. A. O. Norton, a prominent manufacturer of Boston, Mass., but well known throughout the Eastern Townships, writes as follows regarding Yassi Zutoo Tablets.

(Japanese Headache Cure)

Replying to favor of the 1st inst., regarding Headache Tablets, best to say: I have been a sufferer from headaches since childhood, and have used nearly all the so-called "cures" on the market, till warned by my physicians to discontinue their use on account of their bad effect on the heart. Some months since my attention was called to your Japanese Headache Tablets, and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed, with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache, and they never failed to afford quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach, as well as headache. I always carry them in my "grip" on the road, and would not be without them at any cost.

Yours truly,

A. O. NORTON.

286 Congress Street, Boston, Mass.

CONGRESSMAN FITZPATRICK

Says Pe-ru-na is a Splendid Catarrhal Tonic.

Hon. T. Y. Fitzpatrick, Congressman from Kentucky, writes from the National Hotel, Washington, D. C., as follows:

"At the solicitation of a friend I used your Peruna and can cheerfully recommend your remedy to anyone suffering with catarrh or who needs a good tonic."—T. Y. FITZPATRICK.

A Good Tonic.

Pe-ru-na is a natural and efficient nerve tonic. It strengthens and restores the activity of every nerve in the body.

Through the use of Pe-ru-na the weakened or overworked nerves resume their natural strength and the blood vessels begin at once to regulate the flow of blood according to nature's laws. Congestions immediately disappear.

Catarrh Cured.

All phases of catarrh, acute or chronic, are promptly and permanently cured. It is through its operation upon the nervous system that Pe-ru-na has attained such a world-wide reputation as a sure and reliable remedy for all phases of catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice free.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

CHEESE.

Montreal, Wednesday evening.—The cheese market was less active in its tone today and there was considerable difference of opinion between buyers and sellers' views. The latter cabled yesterday offering based on the recent decline, and got responses today demanding a further cut of a fraction. For strictly finest western, for instance, it was possible to squeeze out the equivalent of 9c over the cable in some instances, but the quality desired was difficult to obtain at this figure. The same obstacle existed in the case of other descriptions of stock.

BUTTER.

The butter market was inactive, what little current dealings there were being chiefly around 19c, but most buyers want finest fine creamery at an 1c to 1c per pound less. In saltless Townships the entire make of several factories for August is understood to be contracted at 20c at the factory. Yesterday we gave some figures of stocks and today learn that these have been amended, the revised figures being 108,215 boxes creamery and 10,510 pkgs. creamery on the 1st August, against 52,677 creamery and 15,461 dairy on the 1st.
