New England tourism suffering

TEARS OF HELLO AND GOODBYE — Twenty-one Young Voyagers, returning from an 18-day trip to British Columbia, can't decide if they're happy to see their families or sad to leave each other. See story, page 3. (Record photo: F. Westley)

BOSTON (AP) — Chilly, wet weather has dampened profits as well as beach blankets for New England's tourist industry so far this summer. And unless August is hot, losses could be sharp.

Even though good weather has brought booming tourist business during the last couple of weeks, the steady rain of May, June and early July made tourists—and their money—disappear.

Many state commerce officials say it will take outstanding weather this month for motels, restaurants and others who depend on summer travellers to recoup their losses.

Perhaps hardest hit is Vermont, where the tourist trade is off an estimated 35 to 40 per cent.

State park attendance there dropped 35 to 40 per cent during May and June from what it was last year, said Roland A. Loveless, state secretary of development and community affairs.

Loveless said recreation-oriented businesses have reported a drop in business of nearly 40 per cent.

In Massachusetts, the bureau of vacation travel reports businesses won't be able to make up their losses even if motels are full every night.

In New Hampshire, tourism is "at least five to 15 per cent off last year's figures," said W. John Brennan of the division of resources and economic development.

Tourism grossed more than $340 million in New Hampshire last year. State officials had anticipated a 10-per cent increase this year.

New Hampshire state park revenues are reported down by 11.8 per cent.

Connecticut tourist facilities surveyed in mid July by the Connecticut development commission said business was off as much as 15 per cent because of the bad weather.

Restaurant and hotel owners in Maine reported that business was off more than 15 per cent in June.

Despite the season's bad start, however, a state economist predicted that vacation business will increase 9.2 to 9.5 per cent over last year.

One area that's been hurt is Old Orchard beach, an ocean resort that attracts many Canadians.

"We've begun to get business a little late this year," said a spokesman for the town's Chamber of Commerce. "But it looks like the season will be good from here on in."

Any slack in Maine's tourist business is serious, however, because it is one of the state's biggest money makers, grossing an estimated $620 million last year, officials said.

Going against the season's trend is Rhode Island, which reports improved tourist business.

"I'll admit we had some pretty wet weekends, and there were some bad situations in June," said Edward W. Pacek, executive vice-president of the Rhode Island Tourist Travel Association.

"But the rain wasn't the great deterrent to tourism that it was in some of the other New England states."

Council plans zoning changes

SHERBROOKE (LH) — The shopping centre question once again dominated proceedings at a special city council meeting at Sherbrooke city hall last night.

The issue, which involves the possible construction of a $23-million shopping centre in Sherbrooke's east ward, caused disagreement among several Sherbrooke city councillors.

Ultimately, council decided to give notice to a zoning bylaw which would change three zones near Jardin Fleury Street and 13th Avenue North from residential to commercial status. The request was tabled by Toulon Construction Co. The company expressed interest in building a small shopping centre on a site which would straddle the city of Sherbrooke and the municipality of Fleurimont.

A report tabled by city of Sherbrooke civil engineers recommends a site exclusively in Sherbrooke as the best of three possible sites studied in the report. The degree of land slope on the two other sites which were studied, one exclusively in Fleurimont and one straddling the two municipalities makes these two sites less advantageous, the report says.

FAVORS SITE ANYWAY

A representative of Toulon Construction on hand at last night's meeting said Toulon Construction is interested in the site straddling the two municipalities despite the fact that this site was given an unfavorable rating in the city's report.

Councillor Romeo Bergeron favored setting up an inquiry commission similar to one that was used by council several months ago. At that time council used the commission to investigate the various possibilities open to the city when offers to build a regional shopping centre in Sherbrooke were received.

The setting up of a commission was opposed to councillor Gerard Deziel. "This doesn't belong to the public," councillor Deziel said. "We are the elected representatives of the people. We'd be shirking our responsibility if we asked the public to make this decision for us," he added.

After lengthy discussion, approval was finally made to give notice of the possible change of the bylaw. But the question will again be discussed when the bylaw is due for ratification in two weeks. One of the executives of Toulon Construction is expected to be at the next council meeting to present his company's plans to council. No immediate relief is in sight for Sherbrooke residents as the shopping centre question continues to simmer on the Sherbrooke municipal scene.

QUESTION LEGALITY

Before the shopping centre question came up for discussion on the agenda, several councillors again questioned the legality of reconsidering a regulation which is similar to a regulation which was defeated by Sherbrooke city council June 29. But an opinion from the city's legal representative upheld the legality of studying the regulation a second time.

Council last night voted to form a committee to oversee the eventual construction of a police-fire headquarters for the city. The committee will be made up of councillors Romeo Bergeron, Raymond Bergeron, Romeo Quintal, the police and fire chiefs of Sherbrooke and "other interested parties."

According to an agreement reached between the city and its police and firemen, a new headquarters for these two groups of city employees should be ready by September, 1973. The committee formed last night will see if that agreement is respected, council voted. One of the city's police experts, however, councillor Carl Camirand, refused last night to be a part of the committee, however.

Referring to a situation some months ago wherein the city first agreed to use the St. Patrick School in Sherbrooke as the new police headquarters and then sold the lease on the school following a last minute change of policy, Mr. Camirand said, "Things were done behind my back then. I don't want to be part of this committee now."

Council delayed approving a request from a group of athletes that they be allowed to use the basement of the Armand Nadeau Pavilion to store soccer equipment. The athletes also wanted to use showers in the basement of the pavilion.

"Athletes sometimes get a bit careless and the showers are near the bathrooms," councillor Romeo Bergeron noted. "Some of our tourists might be in for a rather extraordinary welcome to Sherbrooke if they wander down to the basement at the wrong time. I think we ought to study the request before we act on it," Mr. Bergeron said. Council agreed with Mr. Bergeron's suggestion and the matter will be brought to council again in about two weeks.

Beef price rise seen

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The vice-president of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association says that the cost of beef to the consumer will increase by at least 10 cents a pound if the Canadian government bans the use of DES, the controversial livestock growth hormone.

George Morris of Merlin, Ont., was commenting Thursday in an interview on the decision Tuesday by the United States Food and Drug Administration to ban the use of the hormone in animal feeds because it suspects the hormone can cause cancer.

Mr. Morris said beef producers won't be able to pick up the extra cost of raising their cattle if they are deprived of the hormone.

"It'll have to come out of the consumer," he said.

He described opponents of DES as "a bunch of half-baked people who think they are environmentally conscious."

Churches unite to survive

GEORGEVILLE (FW) — Georgeville, like most towns in the Eastern Townships, has changed in the last 50 years. Many farms and houses in the village have been bought by city dwellers who are looking for a summer home or a place in the country to retire.

In outward appearance, however, much remains the same. The streets are quiet and tree-lined; the colonial houses are cleanly white and well kept. In summer, Georgeville retains the friendly atmosphere of any small town. But in winter, when vacationers go back to their jobs and even the city-dwellers who have retired to Georgeville go south to avoid the cold, the village is strangely deserted.

Despite the feeling of community which persists in Georgeville, throughout all shifts in the population, this winter exodus presents some problems for the local residents who remain behind. Not least of these is the difficulty of maintaining the town's two churches, Anglican and United, when the congregations have dwindled to a fraction of their former size.

In this problem, Georgeville is hardly unique. Shifts in population, disinterest in religion and a scarcity of clergy have caused churches all across the Eastern Townships to close down or at least severely cut down the number of services held each year. Residents in many towns, wrestling with these problems, have discovered that in order to survive, their church must change. Georgeville residents came to a similar conclusion some three years ago.

CLOSE ONE CHURCH

At that time, unable to keep both churches going, the members of the two congregations decided to close the United Church for the winter and hold all services in the Anglican church, holding Anglican and United Church services on alternate Sundays. The result was that members of both congregations began attending both services. No attempt was made to mix the two, and the arrangement has been so agreeable to both that it was continued. In subsequent winters both churches were put back into use, but the congregation remained largely joined, attending an Anglican service one week and a United Church service the next.

Coincidentally, the Anglican minister in Georgeville is a man who has long studied ventures in interdenominational and even cross-cultural worship. Although he claims to have had nothing to do with originating the present system in Georgeville, Rev. Robert L. Slater did establish the Centre for the Study of World Religions at Harvard University, where disciples of all religions come to study and a small number to live.

He has long been interested in the move to bring Christians of different denominations together. He has lived and visited all over the world and has written numerous widely-praised books on the Christian faith and on its relation to other faiths. Some of these books have become reference texts for students of religion and have been translated into other languages. The French translation of one of his more recent books — "Can Christians Learn from Other Religions?" — received enthusiastic reviews from the French newspaper Le Monde earlier this year.

While at McGill University as a professor of theology, Rev. Slater and his wife decided to buy a house in Georgeville, as a retreat for theology students during the winter and a summer retreat for themselves when on holiday. Since he retired from Harvard several years ago, the Slaters have made Georgeville their home. Rev. Slater continues his writing as well as conducting services in the Georgeville churches.

Shriver approval expected today

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The Democratic National Committee is expected to formally approve R. Sargent Shriver as George McGovern's vice-presidential running mate tonight, hopefully with only token resistance and all its other disputes behind it.

Delegates to the "mini-convention" wrestled Monday over the credentials of who was representing which state, and they probably will do so again today.

But presidential nominee McGovern seemed assured of total support when they get to a final vote.

As at the Miami Beach convention last month—which selected McGovern and his ill-fated first choice, Senator Thomas Eagleton—the nomination will need 1,509 delegate votes.

In picking the vice-presidential candidate, state delegations on the 303-member Democratic national committee will cast the same number of votes as their state had in the national convention.

Eagleton withdrew from the ticket last Monday, one week after it was disclosed that he had undergone psychiatric treatment in hospital for "nervous exhaustion and depression." Saturday, McGovern chose Shriver to replace him.

Shriver, 56, former peace corps director, diplomat and a Kennedy family in-law, has the support of a large, moderate element of the Democratic party organization that recalls his energetic campaign work for the late President John Kennedy and the 1970 congressional elections.

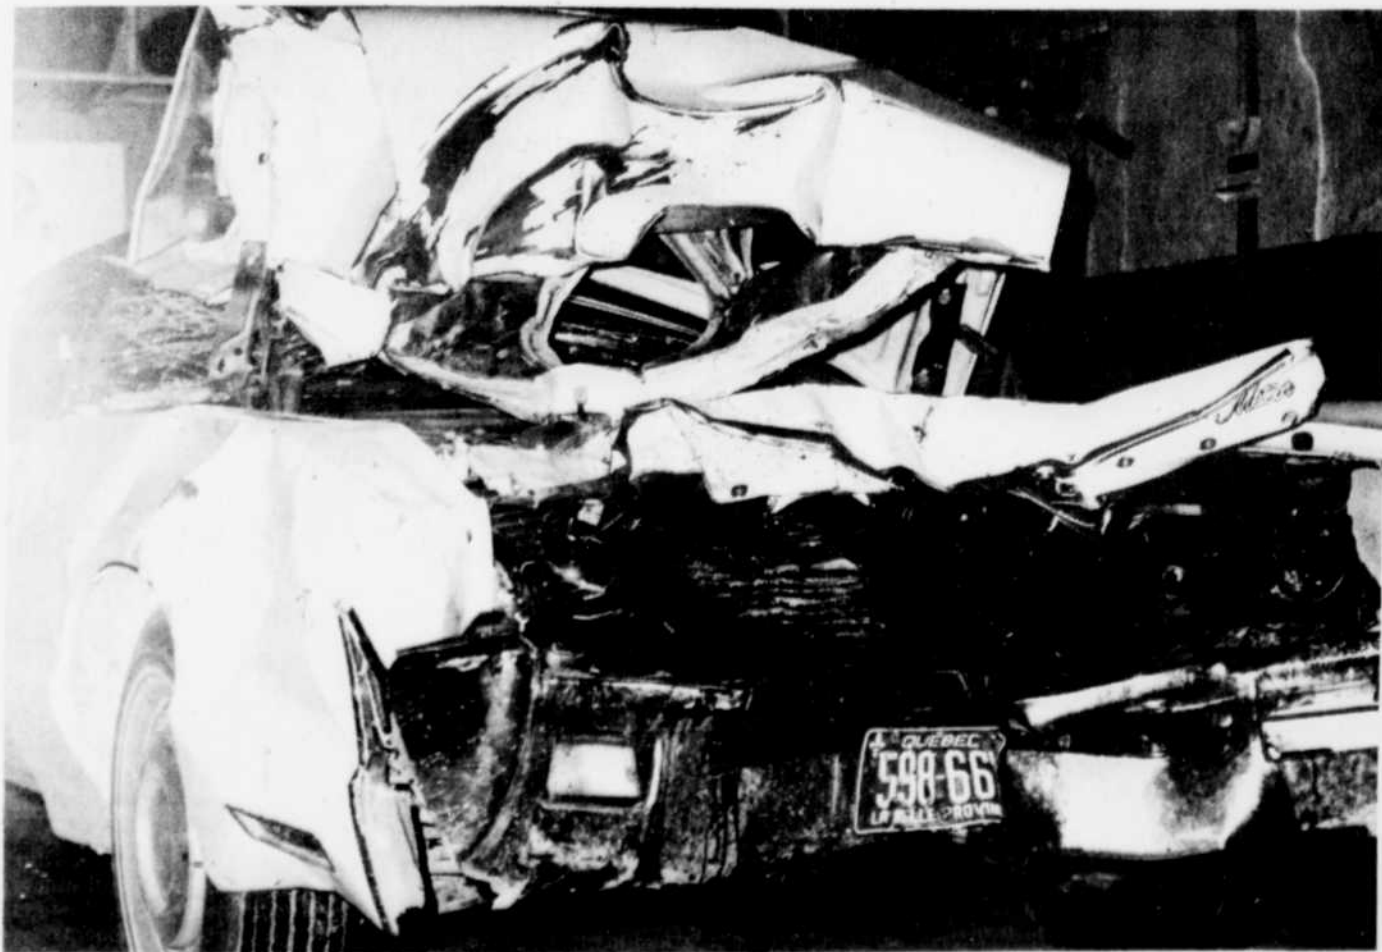

Party officials believe the token support for Eagleton, among a handful of delegates who would like to renominate him, will wither before the final vote is taken.

In a rare show of unanimity, Democratic members of the House of Representatives Monday endorsed Shriver as vice-presidential candidate.

McGovern, who lost six precious campaign days while he searched for a new vice-president, has returned to the election trail soliciting support from the trade union movement.

The AFL-CIO refused to endorse him as its presidential candidate and McGovern has turned his attention to wooing blue collar workers suspicious of his social and economic policies.

However, unofficial surveys show him with the support of unions with a combined membership of up to six million workers, compared with about 2,500,000 men whose unions have pledged support to President Nixon.

COW KILLER — Neither Guy Dunnigan of Bedford, the driver, nor passenger Roland Coupal, also of Bedford, was injured when Mr. Dunnigan's car hit a cow belonging to the Lamoureux farm at St. Sebastien, but the cow got off less lightly. She was killed.

Ads for children target

MONTREAL (CP) — Television advertising aimed at children will be regulated "before Christmas," William Tetley, Quebec minister of financial institutions said Monday.

"There's going to be a code on advertising aimed at children," he said.

"We will make it illegal for a company to have a television contract advertising anything against our code, and it will include things such as how many minutes of television advertising in an hour can be directed at children," he said in an interview.

St. James Evening Guild

FOSTER — The St. James Evening Guild met in the Parish Hall for their July meeting with eight members and one visitor present.

The president opened the meeting with prayers, and welcomed everyone. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary Mrs. R.T. Price, and approved.

The treasurer's report was given by the assistant treasurer

Mrs. Adrian Whitehead and the corresponding secretary Mrs. Ethel Bissell read the several "thank you" notes for cards received. Mrs. Elvia Johnson on the "forgotten patient" Virginia.

The final plans were made for the July Lawn Social, which proved to be very successful even though it was a very bad evening and had to be held inside. The sum of $258.79 cleared after expenses.

The members of the Guild wish to thank everyone who helped in any way to make this evening so successful.

The meeting closed with the benediction and the lucky package was won by Mrs. Adrian Whitehead.

The next meeting will be held in the Parish Hall on August 10.

Mrs. Elvia Johnson served delicious refreshments at the close of the meeting.

ASTRO-GUIDE

By Ceean

Wednesday, August 9

The Day Under Your Sign

ARIES (Born March 21 to April 19): Although you did not have the thought in mind, you appreciate recognition for your community efforts.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Good relationships with the opposite sex are accentuated in Taurus charts. Settle differences.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Be generous, but don't be a sucker. Be sure the need is genuine before you make any sacrifices.

CANCER (June 22 to July 21): You are amused when someone questions you as you have the proof if you really need to show it.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Similar to Cancer, especially for those born early in sign. Watch out for back-biting neighbors.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 21): Concentrate on today rather than the future in this particular situation. Be decisive.

LIBRA (Sept. 22 to Oct. 22): You resent having to help a friend out of a difficulty as it happens too often. You could say "no," you know.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Someone who intrigues you on sight may turn out just to have superficial attraction after all.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You may feel gloomy as the result of a minor ache or pain. Get some rest in a quiet nook somewhere.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Dealings with influential people accentuated. You gain prestige by striking an unusually good bargain.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A stimulating day. You'll be rarin' to go long before it's time to be on the job. A productive day.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20): Be a little aggressive without being obnoxious about it. You can strike a happy medium if you try.

Sound advice

By ROBERT HAMILTON

We are receipt of a very interesting pamphlet published by the Ontario community programs branch of the department of education of that province which we think is timely and appropriate in the light of recent conversations we have had with several acquaintances. Of the folks we refer to, too, many of course, are pensioners like ourselves, but a considerable number are those nearing retirement, and it is to those people the good council in the publication is directed.

Don't put all the learning into childhood and all the work into middle age and all the regrets into Old Age.

Put your finances in order, batten down the financial hatches and switch speculative stocks to help secure income. Your bank manager will advise you on this.

Overhaul your life insurance to meet changed status. Discuss your changed needs with your insurance agent.

Expose yourself to new avenues of learning, extension courses, study groups, farm forums, citizens' forums, and the like. Follow up old skills, develop new skills or hobbies, get interested in local recreational centres, make new friends, don't brood, don't haunt your old associates, keep your mind active, stay alert, keep contacts with old friends and share your new interests with them. You'll probably make some new converts to your new outlook on life.

Readjust your living arrangements, adjust financial outgo to meet reduced income, live sanely, carefully and comfortably, reduce your worries to a minimum and join community activities. Study committee needs and interest yourself in community projects. All communities benefit from having people with time on their hands and ideas in their minds.

Enjoy a new, less-hurried period of life, as active and self-satisfying as the earlier one. The senior citizen today who is now within a few years of his or her retirement could do no better than to give some considerable thought to the advice given by the Ontario department of education. We think it's a must for all those soon to retire to give it a deep study.

A retiree must not allow himself to stagnate, or get himself into a rut where lethargy and apathy take over. Retirement does not mean that life is over — a new life is just beginning and where that new life leads can only be the responsibility of the newly retired person.

The new pensioner, of course, would naturally be expected to turn toward an organized senior citizens' group for all advice or guidance. The senior group should in its turn be ready to offer that guidance. If such a group is not prepared to accept that responsibility then there is simply no point in calling itself a senior citizens' organization, for they are supposed to be organized to be of service to their members or prospective members. Likewise, any senior citizen who makes contact with an established group should go in with one thought in mind, that he will honestly try to be of some help to the group by using some or all of his creative talents.

No matter what main purposes a club or group may have, it will remain a lively organization just as long as each member gains some personal satisfaction through belonging to the group. That means each member understands and identifies himself with what the group or club is trying to do and finds something in the program to meet his own interests and abilities.

Here we must take the opportunity to thank the directors and members of the Magog Tennis Club for their gesture in making available for the use of pensioners the bowling green on the Tennis Club property. Jointly with the members and directors of the Magog Curling Club, these two public spirited groups have made it possible for pensioners to reactivate the bowling greens, which have not been in use for many years. The kind action of both Clubs is sincerely appreciated.

The bowling green, by the way, is being brought back to playing condition by one of our members, George Hall, who has given unstintingly of his time to get the job done. Thanks a lot George, and thanks also to Harry Smith and Bob Cooney for the many favors in this cause. Thank you very much indeed.

While we are on the track, we must not forget Mrs. Marion Alain and Arthur Ruck, who have also given much of their time handling the typing and correspondence for our group. Without their generous help we would be lost indeed.

In closing, a note of interest: Air Canada, our airline, has apparently bowed under pressure and decided to do something about reducing air fares within our country's boundaries. While figures have not yet been published, they probably will be soon. The reductions are said to be substantial.

Among the resolutions taken before the cabinet ministers in Ottawa this spring by the National Pensioners' and Senior Citizens' Federation was a demand that the domestic fares on our national airline come under review for the purpose of making it easier for Canadians to see their own country. Apparently the presentation has had some effect! So much for the power of the people.

Two operas debut soon

NORTH HATLEY (WM) — The Piggery in North Hatley will present two short operas next week. La Serva Padrona by Pergolesi and Le Telephone by Gian Carlo Menotti.

La Serva Padrona is an 18th century comic opera woven around the story of a woman servant who uses feminine wiles and complicity with the valet in order to entice her former master into marrying her.

Uberto, the master, will be sung by Robert Savoie, a Montreal-born Canadian baritone. Mr. Savoie has taken leading roles in various opera companies throughout the world including the Royal Opera Company in London, England.

Anna Chornodolska, who has sung with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra and the Canadian Radio Orchestra, will take part of Serpina, the servant. Wally Martin plays the valet.

The Telephone, a short modern opera written by 1946, will be sung in French.

Performances begin Wednesday, Aug. 9, at 8:30 p.m. and will continue until Saturday, Aug. 19.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Bell and son Martin of Danville were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. Dunn.

Mrs. Vera Lowen, Miss Pamela Lowen, Mrs. U.C. Massey, Scott Coote and Mrs. R. Baker have returned home after a vacation in Ontario.

Mrs. Frank Riff and Mrs. Jessie Graham accompanied Mr. Ross Bogie of South Durham to Otterburn Park where they attended the funeral of their cousin Mrs. Arthur Baker, the former Eunice Davidson.

On Friday afternoon several senior citizens of the Wales Home enjoyed a drive in the country. Afternoon tea was served in the Ulverton Church Hall by members of the U.C.W. The Rev. Londa Beaudon welcomed the guests at the door.

Local girl finds niche in fashion world

By FRANCES WESTLEY
MONTREAL — "I decided not to go to college," Sylvia Rand said, "because after you go through five years of college you often aren't anywhere. Lots of girls just get married. There's a good possibility that you won't get a job at all."

The pretty 19-year-old native of Huntingville decided instead to pursue what she had always liked best, a career in fashion. Last fall she left the Eastern Townships to attend Lasalle College in Montreal and follow a fashion merchandizing course. According to her mother, Mrs. Lyle Rand of Huntingville, the decision came as a surprise to no one.

"Sylvia always had a flair for clothes," Mrs. Rand told The Record. "She made her own ever since she was big enough to sew. I sew too, and in the beginning I helped her. Later on she took home economics at Alexander Galt Regional High School. Sylvia always had a sense about clothes. She could always see what went together. I guess she was born into it."

Miss Rand found an advertisement for the school while looking through a woman's magazine one day.

ACCEPTED TO COURSE
"I had been attending Bishop's University," she said, "taking a course in home economics. I knew there were schools of fashion merchandizing in the States but I didn't even know there was one in Montreal. Then I heard of several girls who had taken the course, and they had really liked it, so I thought I may as well try. I filled out the application and I was accepted."

The course at Lasalle College lasted one year. During the course students were given a combination of classroom lessons and work experience. Courses covered textiles, principles of selling, fashion buying, charm courses, sales promotion, color and design, display, fashion coordination and even mathematics.

"I was really scared about taking mathematics," reminisced Miss Rand, "but I did all right in the end. The teachers were really interesting. They were probably the best teachers I ever had. They all had had so much experience in the area they taught. They knew a lot about the subject and they were interested.

"In addition to working in Montreal stores, during Christmas and during the second term we went out to a lot of places as a class. When we were studying textiles they took us to Bruck Mills in Cowansville to show us how the fabric was made. When we were studying color and design we went to the Fine Arts Museum. Another time they took us to a buyer's show in Place Bonaventure. It was like a fair. There were little booths everywhere with wares displayed."

CLASSES INFORMAL
Some 35 girls from all parts of Canada attended the course the year Sylvia was enrolled. The classes were held informally, the students sitting in chairs in a circle instead of at desks.

"We had to work really hard," Miss Rand said. "There were four sets of exams and we had a lot of projects to do as well, but I didn't mind. When you're interested in what you're doing you just take it in — like you're watching a movie, you know. So exams are easy. Besides, I wanted to do well. I always found school hard and I hated studying, but this was a little different. Besides, after you put in so much money you might as well come out with something."

Sylvia came out with an 86 per cent average at the end of the year. In addition, the course landed her a job with Eaton's, working in the Albatross Shop, a fashion boutique in the Montreal downtown store. All the girls in the course got jobs, many in the Montreal area, some in other parts of Canada. The school took responsibility for finding jobs.

"The school is a lifetime placement service," explained Miss Rand. "When we graduated they set up interviews for us with the stores. If you don't like your job they'll help you find another. I started working for Eaton's as a seller. Some girls got jobs at Le Chateau or as buyers at Zeller's."

TEACHERS BILINGUAL
In addition the school gave French and typing lessons to those who needed or wanted them. The teachers were all bilingual and, as some of the students were French, the classes were often carried on in two languages.

"I took French after school, and I used to stay and talk to the teachers in the afternoon," Miss Rand said. "When I first started selling I was really nervous about speaking French. But now I'm not nervous at all. I understand everything."

The world of fashion offers many possible careers. Besides selling, graduates of the course in fashion merchandizing may choose to become buyers or displayers, among other things. Sylvia has recently moved from her position as seller to a clerk in the buying department. She sees a considerable future in her present job.

"At the moment the manager is giving me training at various things," Sylvia said, "so maybe in a year I'll be something. You have to be clear and try hard. As a buyer you get to go out and shop the markets. If you're good you can travel all over."

Area youths impress, impressed

SHERBROOKE (FW) — The Young Voyageurs from Sherbrooke and the surrounding area returned home last night from their 18-day whirlwind tour of Canada, having thoroughly impressed the nation.

"Your kids are a credit to this area," John Greer, chaperone for the group, told the parents assembled on the platform of the Sherbrooke Voyageur bus terminus. "When we passed through Montreal, Mr. Masse, provincial coordinator for the Young Voyageur program came down and congratulated me. He said he had just received a phone call from Mr. J.B. Camire, head of the young people program for the entire country, who told him that our group was the best they'd seen in Ottawa all summer," Mr. Greer said.

The Young Voyageurs are a group of high school students between the ages of 15-18 from Alexander Galt Regional High School and Richmond Regional High School. They were chosen to take part in the federally sponsored exchange and travel program which involves young people across Canada this summer. Participants in the program serve as hosts for Voyageurs from other provinces when they visit Quebec. In return the hosts have the opportunity of travelling across the country.

The 21 Young Voyageurs, 10 boys and 11 girls, from the Sherbrooke region travelled by bus from Sherbrooke to Montreal, by airplane to Edmonton and by train to Kamloops, B.C., where they stayed for a week as guests of local Voyageurs. They then continued their travels by plane to Vancouver, by ferry to Victoria and then back home to Sherbrooke via Montreal and Ottawa.

BID GOODBYE
Many of the girls were weeping openly as they bid farewell to the friends they have made over the past three weeks. "We didn't know each other when we left," Kathy Fidler of Waterville said. "But we certainly do now. It couldn't have been better. It was fabulous — it was just perfect. Everyone was beautiful. We learned that Canadians are all alike, all living for Canada, that they're all proud to be Canadians and proud to see what Canada can be."

Mr. Greer was equally enthusiastic. "This is a fantastic program," he said. "It opens eyes and minds. The kids have really matured. We watched them fall together as a unit. The whole thing was well arranged. The kids travelled by every possible means of activity and free time. Everywhere the kids went, they were perfectly mannered. They were never late. They were properly dressed. They were really tremendous. I'm very proud of them."

The group chosen from applicants last March included Joanne Bowker, Sawyerville; Linda Cotterell, Magog; Kathy Fidler, Waterville; Susan French, Sawyerville; Laurence LeSautier, Sherbrooke; Sylvie Mangin, Sherbrooke; Isabel Nutbrown, Compton; Nicole Paquette, Coaticook; Mary Pat Quinn, Richmond; Lorraine Rucker, North Magog; Devin Bailey, Sawyerville; Scott Elgir, Lennoxville; Robert Halsall, Cookshire; Peter Heath, Stanstead; Mark Lepitre, Dixville; Michael McBurney, Sawyerville; David McLaughlin, Ayer's Cliff; Rene Presse, Richmond; David Smith, Sawyerville; and Brent Tyler, Drummondville.

Farm loans up

QUEBEC — The Farm Credit Corporation recently published its 13th annual report for the fiscal year 1971-72. During this period, the FCC approved to Canadian farmers 4,035 loans for a total of $114,715,840.

In Quebec, the number of approved loans was 533 for a total of $14,834,000, an increase of $1,700,000 over the previous year. The average loan in Quebec was $27,800 compared to $25,300 last year.

There was a significant shift in the purposes for which funds were borrowed in the past year compared with the previous year. In 1971-72, only 10.6 per cent of the funds were borrowed to finance other debts not secured by land, compared with 14.5 per cent a year earlier. Permanent improvements accounted for about 13 per cent in 1971-72, compared with 21 per cent in 1970-71.

There was a substantial increase in the percentage of funds used for purchases of additional land — 43.7 per cent in 1971-72 compared with 31.6 per cent the previous year. The changes in purposes of loan reflect somewhat improved economic conditions and more optimism on the part of farmers than a year earlier, a spokesman for the Corporation said.

Although the distribution of borrowers by age shows the same general pattern as in previous years, the trend towards an increasing proportion of younger farmers was re-established. Some 9.1 per cent of borrowers were under 25 years of age compared to 7.3 per cent in the preceding year. Only 8.3 per cent of borrowers were over 54 years of age compared to 10 per cent in the preceding year. Over 71 per cent of the 1971-72 borrowers were under 45 years of age, which contrasts sharply with the 39.1 per cent of all farm operators in this age class shown in the 1966 census.

Waiting game

Prime Minister Trudeau has decided to keep the nation guessing for a while yet. But his refusal to disclose even the approximate date of the election can only mean that he is guessing, himself — guessing the people's mood, the government's chances and the autumn climate of politics. It is his privilege, of course, and the unique power of any prime minister, to dissolve Parliament whenever he chooses, whether his cabinet and party agree or not, but the current bantering cat-and-mouse game does the nation no good. Probably it is no help to the government, either.

So long as it lasts, advance business planning will be discouraged by uncertainty about future national policy and the government's political fortunes will be damaged if it seems unable to make up its mind about its own future. The summer is, except for British Columbia, election-free, as Mr. Trudeau says, but by no means free of suspense and frustrating confusion.

During his present holiday he will have time and quiet to consider the very tight timetable now facing him. He said, as he left Ottawa, that no election need be called until next year. If this is quite true, under the constitution, it is quite impractical under the rules of politics. For a government which remained in office to the bitter end of its five-year term would show such weakness and fear of the voters that its prospects would be dim indeed if not hopeless.

Besides, the increased income and the new capital gains taxes to be paid by the broad middle class of Canadians, starting next Jan. 1, and the complex, irritating new forms to be filled out by the puzzled taxpayers would help no one except the opposition parties. Thus the schedule calls for an election some time in autumn if the government really expects to win it. And since two months must elapse between parliamentary dissolution and polling day, Mr. Trudeau must make his decision by the end of the summer if the election is to be held before winter sets in.

There is another good reason why he can hardly afford to delay the decision much longer. If Parliament reassembles on Sept. 28, as now arranged, it is unlikely to do any constructive business, its mind being concentrated, instead, on grass-root politics at home.

In retrospect Mr. Trudeau may conclude, as some of his colleagues have concluded already, that it was a serious political mistake to postpone the election, scheduled for midsummer and then cancelled because the government's public opinion polls looked so grim. Since then its electoral prospects may have improved but the nation's problems have not eased. Unemployment — even if it is exaggerated by the official statistics, as the government believes — still remains high. So do prices, with the full impact of recent wage increases yet to come. And while the Canadian economy continues to grow at a fairly rapid pace it is at the mercy of events in a world economy always on the edge of another exchange crisis.

However, Mr. Trudeau gambled that the government's position would improve through the election-free summer and he may be right, but it certainly would worsen if the nation's voters saw that he was afraid to meet them in the fall at latest. Meanwhile, in terms of policy anyhow, the Conservative position has not improved because it offers no understandable alternative to the known policies of the government.

All these purely partisan calculations on both sides look dubious at best and most of the electorate will take little interest in them. But if the finer subtleties of politics escape the average voter his mind is becoming clear on essentials. He knows that the mandate given to Mr. Trudeau in 1968 is fast running out, that it should be renewed, or withdrawn, well before the end of this year and that only a government and Parliament refreshed by a new mandate can hope to grapple successfully with the nation's pressing business.

The plot to pull out of NATO

By Lubor J. Zink

When I last saw the remnant of Canada's contribution to NATO's forward defence in Europe, the garrison of the tank unit at the edge of the Black forest near the French border looked like a huge repair shop.

"Our tanks," I was told, "are falling apart. It's getting more and more difficult to keep them operational. They'll have to be replaced soon if what remains of our usefulness here is to be maintained."

At the headquarters in Lahr guesses about the eventual replacement for the vintage British Centurion tanks were the main topic of conversation. "Unless we get a modern heavy tank," a ranking officer told me, "we can just as well pack up and go home."

The reason for this opinion was the "the Canadian battle group had while it was attached to the British Army on the Rhine. Cut to half its size by the Trudeau regime and moved south, the unit retained its heavy equipment for what was deemed to be a similar role in a reserve position.

"We are supposed to plug holes in the front line in an emergency," the briefing officer told me. "That requires greater mobility, but we still need heavy armor for any foreseeable field operation."

I jotted down these remarks when I was in Lahr and am reproducing them now in support of my old contention that the Trudeau regime intends to liquidate what remains of Canada's contribution to NATO's forward defence.

Defence Minister Edgar Benson's recent announcement that the Centurion will be replaced by the British "tank" Scorpion has made it quite obvious. The nine-ton Scorpion simply cannot replace the more than 50-ton Centurion. Powered by a six-cylinder Jaguar engine and plated with aluminum "armor," the Scorpion is a fast tracked reconnaissance vehicle — a sort of glorified scout car. For that purpose, as well as for riot control, it's probably the best available piece of equipment, but as infantry support against heavy armor it's a useless tinbox.

Since the Canadian troops in Europe, even in their nebulous reserve role, would be pitted against heavy tanks in any frontline engagement, the choice of the replacement for the obsolete and disintegrating Centurions means that the remainder of Canada's contribution to NATO's forward defence is being phased out.

The government won't admit it, but its intention to pull the rest of Canadian troops from Europe soon after the election is unmistakable.

The only puzzling question is why the decision to spend some $40 million on the new "tanks" was announced before the election.

I interpret it as Trudeau's defence policy insurance against defeat at the polls. Uncertain of the outcome of the election, the Trudeauocrats want to saddle the next government, regardless of who forms it, with a "fait accompli" in the use of Canada's decimated armed forces. For once it becomes obvious to the general public that the remaining contribution to NATO in Europe is totally useless, pressure for liquidation of that contribution will be irresistible.

Even if he were to lose the coming election, Trudeau thus hopes to complete the process of Canada's withdrawal from active participation in collective Western defence he started soon after he took office in 1968. His initial intention to do it in one quick move ran into such a strong opposition within his own party after the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia four years ago that he had to settle for a compromise.

The first part of this compromise has now been completed and Trudeau is making sure that the second part will follow automatically as a result of the inappropriate equipment his Defence Minister is buying for the remainder of Canadian troops in Europe. The Scorpion the government is spending scarce defence dollars on thus has a clearly discernible political sting, although most voters can be counted on to overlook it before the election. The replacement of one piece of military equipment by another of seemingly the same kind is regarded as a technicality of little interest.

In this particular case the presumed technicality is in fact predicated an important aspect of defence policy after the election. For this reason the opposition parties should demand suspension of the tank re-equipment program until a new Parliament is in session.

On

with William F. Buckley Jr.

I have never understood how it came to be that it is to dignify the black people of America to suggest that they should all vote the Democratic ticket. From way back, the enemy of the blacks has been the stereotype — the notion of the undifferentiated black, the cotton picker or houseman, Tom, or Joe, no last name given because no last name is thought necessary, there being nothing in particular to distinguish between Tom and Joe.

Along comes Mr. Julian Bond, the young black legislator from Georgia, working himself into quite a pitch of excitement last week at the suggestion that there are Negroes who plan to vote for Richard Nixon in the fall. Black Republicans, he says, are "political prostitutes." And those black Republican leaders who lately urged blacks to vote either for Nixon or to stay at home "are the willing accomplices of the Fascist forces in America who believe the only good black voter is one who does not vote."

Now, Mr. Bond is not renowned for precision of speech or charity of sentiment. But there is no alternative than to examine closely the statement in question.

Obviously anyone who is for Nixon desires that other people will, next November, vote for Nixon. There is nothing inherently wrong with that, surely. What is it they hope people who can't bring themselves to vote for Nixon will do? Why, obviously, that they will stay at home.

Now if one is addressing people in the context of a particular affinity, farmer to farmer, say, or banker to banker, or Irish to Irish, Californian to Californian, black to black, it is characteristic that one's rhetoric should slide into what us-folks should do or not do concerning the problems of farmers, or bankers, or Irish, or Californians, or blacks. There is nothing in the least unusual, therefore, about a black leader who is Republican advertising the benefits to black people who are not Republicans of staying home rather than voting for McGovern. What I want to know is: what's Fascist about that?

Julian Bond has been living by the sword for quite a while now. He pronounced American virtue quite dead upon the assassination of Martin Luther King, for which we were all to blame, remember? By the way, how come nobody has said that we were all to blame for the attempted assassination of George Wallace?

Presumably there was just enough virtue left in America to re-elect Julian Bond to the Georgian Assembly a couple of times since his dismissal of America. In the apex of madness in 1968, Eldridge Cleaver was denouncing Julian Bond as a "pig," a pig being defined, in Cleaver usage, as anyone who cooperates with the System. Cleaver's use of language at the expense of Bond is no looser than Bond's use of language at the expense of Negro Republicans.

But the larger question, for black Republicans or black Democrats, is whether it is altogether dignified to call on them to vote for or against Nixon in their capacity as black men and Black women. By doing so they surely encourage the survival of the stereotype. As black men, they have something in common.

But it is neither true that the black people of America today are a people persecuted in the sense we speak of. Nor is it by any means obvious that if one contends that they are persecuted, using the word metaphorically, that the Democratic Party is the obvious instrument of their deliverance. My own feeling is that no Negro Republican has in recent weeks said anything quite so inimical to the interests of Negro Americans as Mr. Bond has done.

If I were a Negro I would ask him please to stop addressing me in tones quite so hortatory. Indeed, come to think of it, as a fellow American, I tender to him the same request, in behalf of other fellow Americans.

Against farm union

Dear Sir,

A small item in a Montreal newspaper of July 5 states that about 50,000 farmers will be eligible to vote in a referendum next October on which union they wish to have represent them.

The right of farmers to establish a professional association was contained in legislation passed in May by the national assembly, the article continues.

Now I can see some hard working and hard pressed farmer saying: "Fine, we'll get our own union, then we'll have bargaining power." But please pause a moment — is it worth it?

True, the picture of the "independent farmer" is something from the far distant past. Today's farmers filling out forms of one sort and another complying with various regulations may feel that they have very little independence. The union, however, will only complicate the farmer's already difficult situation and result in his being directed by even more people, who neither know or care about the difficulties of farming.

Unionized farming will mean that the farmer will have to take time out to attend the union meetings, probably on a busy hay day or when he has a sick animal to attend or other inconvenient time. If he fails to show up and vote on various issues, decisions may be made which the farmer will not approve of.

Unionized farming will mean setting a minimum price for his produce and milk out on the ground dumping apples or potatoes or burning hay rather than selling below the union prices.

Unionized farming will mean that every farmer will be obligated to go along with whatever the majority votes on. We were rather inclined to be critical of the hospital employees who went on strike leaving the old and helpless uncared for, but those who did go back to work against the wishes of the union are now, in some cases at least, facing heavy fines for strike breaking.

I am quite aware of the difficulties which the farmer faces today but there are many good farm organizations. I believe farmers working in cooperation can do much to improve their lot. I hope they will make their views heard loud and clear against being sold into these trade unions, which though starting out with the farmer's best interests at heart could eventually become more and more dictatorial.

If farmers don't make their views heard against joining the union it would go into effect, and once farming becomes a unionized occupation all farmers will have to join, just as plumbers and electricians have to be unionized. There are many jobs which remain undone in these fields because people can't afford the union labor prices.

There is enough land laying around vacant in Quebec without forcing more farmers out of business because they can't meet the union's demands, or more food being imported because ours is too high priced for the public to buy.

Yours truly,
Miss D.M. Clouston,
Lennoxville.

Journalistic malpractice

By Tom Braden

WASHINGTON — In the wake of the Eagleton affair, something needs to be said about the reporter's trade, even if it means violating the ancient rule that one reporter — like one lawyer, or one doctor — doesn't criticize another.

Lawyers and doctors are professional men with high standards of ethics and so are reporters. At least, so I learned, as a boy, when I wanted very much to be a reporter. I remember memorizing some of the great standards of journalism as they appeared — and still do — on the mastheads of America's great dailies. "All the news that's fit to print," wrote Ochs of the New York Times. "Never tolerate injustice," wrote Pulitzer of the St. Louis Post Dispatch; to this day the Scripps-Howard newspapers carry a beacon on the masthead, a symbol of the search for truth.

I believed all those things and I still do. I think journalism is an honorable as well as an essential profession. Which is why I think somebody from the profession ought to say something about the conduct of one of our own.

I refer, of course, to syndicated columnist Jack Anderson's treatment of Sen. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri. Mr. Anderson is the winner of a Pulitzer Prize for journalism, a fact which might cause the late Joseph Pulitzer to tremble slightly in his grave, for the prize was won for publishing secret minutes of the National Security Council. But that is a separate subject and I do not argue the point. What I do argue is that Mr. Anderson has disgraced the profession to which I belong by his conduct toward Sen. Eagleton.

You remember the sequence. First, Mr. Anderson went on the radio with the charge that Sen. Eagleton had been arrested many times for drunk and reckless driving. The senator denied it.

Next, the columnist admitted that he didn't have any evidence. He had to go ahead and make the charge without the evidence, he said, because somebody else might beat him to it.

Who? What honest reporter charges a man with drunk driving and reckless driving when he cannot prove it?

But let us go to Act III. Mr. Anderson appeared on a news program as a questioner of Sen. Eagleton, and said he wanted to make an apology. He had published a charge he couldn't prove. But, just as we were all thinking, "It's about time," Mr. Anderson took it back. He was apologizing, he explained, only for not being able to prove the story. He wouldn't retract the charge. "I can't do that," he said. "My conscience won't allow it."

His conscience, mind you. It's as though your neighbor called you a thief, and when you remonstrated, said he was sorry, but only because he couldn't prove it.

Is it any wonder the American people say they don't believe all that they read in the newspapers or hear over the air? Is it any wonder that Spiro Agnew can win friends by castigating the press?

True, Mr. Anderson finally found the conscience to make a full apology to the senator from Missouri. But it was more than a week late and far too late to influence Sen. George McGovern's decision to take Eagleton off the ticket.

Journalists make mistakes as every managing editor knows. They can get dates wrong and places wrong and they can emphasize one aspect of a story to the neglect of another. But that is because journalists are human. It is equally human to try to be right.

Anderson, apparently, excepted. He insulted a man, kicked him when he was down, hurt his family and helped to destroy his career.

I don't know what you call this, but it isn't journalism. I'm glad Anderson finally apologized to Eagleton. He should also apologize to the American people and to the profession he has harmed.

There's Sex After Menopause

THE MENOPAUSAL ROULETTE

Dear Dr. Lamb—I have heard that it is possible to become pregnant as long as two years after the menopause. Is that possible or does the ability to have children end when menstruation stops?

er—You have heard right. Your question is one of the most frequent ones I receive from women. This fact alone says very clearly that middle-aged women are definitely not through with sex when they reach that age. Most women in this age of life want to be able to enjoy sex without worrying about pregnancy.

It should be emphasized that menstruation and ovulation are not at all the same thing. Menstruation is the shedding of the overgrown cells that line the uterus. Here is how it works:

At the end of one menstrual period, the cell that is destined to be the next ovum begins to enlarge into a blisterlike structure. This is called the ovarian follicle. While the follicle is ripening, the ovary starts putting out a lot more estrogen, one of the two important female hormones manufactured by the ovaries. The estrogen is responsible for feminization and it stimulates the cells lining the uterus to grow in preparation for the possibility of a fertilized ovum implanting in the uterus. This process continues until about midway in the menstrual cycle. At this point, the amount of estrogen produced drops sharply and the ripened follicle ruptures, releasing the ovum.

With the fall in estrogen level, some women will have midcycle bleeding. Whenever the amount of female hormone is sharply reduced, overgrown cells in the uterus can be sloughed off. This is why estrogen is sometimes used to help start menstruation in young girls.

The ovum migrates to one of the tubes and the ruptured follicle rapidly turns into a yellowishlike body that produces the second hormone from the ovaries, progesterone. The ovary starts putting out more estrogen again and, under the influence of these two hormones, the lining of the uterus becomes more spongy and completes its final preparation for the anticipated pregnancy.

If pregnancy does not occur, the small, yellowish body from the ruptured follicle, called the corpus luteum, simply degenerates in about 10 days. When this happens, the amount of both ovarian hormones is sharply curtailed. Without these hormones to stimulate the lining of the uterus, the cells stop getting their usual amount of blood to nourish them, they die and must be shed. That is when menstruation occurs.

Incidentally, large doses of estrogen and normal amounts of progesterone inhibit the ripening and release of other ova while the process is going on. If pregnancy ensues, the continued production of these hormones prevents formation of additional ova also. This prevents multiple pregnancies at monthly intervals. It is also the principle used for birth-control pills. The hormones in the birth-control pills have the same effects as the hormones from the ovaries and prevent ovulation and, therefore, pregnancy.

The amount of bleeding at menstruation is highly variable. Even if ovulation has occurred and the uterus doesn't have very much overgrowth of cells or for other reasons little if any bleeding occurs, the menstruation will not be apparent. Thus, menstruation is a sign of normal hormone function and ovulation, but its absence doesn't mean that the ovulation doesn't still occur. The uterus may simply fail to bleed sufficiently to be noticed.

The ovaries don't simply stop functioning one day and there you are in the menopause. They sputter to a stop, producing less and less female hormones. A woman may not menstruate for several months or ovulate either, then the next month she does. No wonder the woman with this problem who had been depending upon her regular menstrual cycle for birth control has trouble. No doubt the mistaken idea that an absence of periods means you can't get pregnant has been responsible for a lot of babies born to surprised couples in their middle years.

Dear Dr. Lamb—Maybe you can help me. When I was quite young, there was a chance that I was pregnant. I did not have intercourse, but I knew very little of sex. When I was late menstruating once, I took some quinine and wine because I had heard that this would make you menstruate. The quinine made my head feel funny and I stopped. A day or two later, I had my period. That was 39 years ago and I have worried quite a bit about it ever since. My biggest hope is that maybe I wasn't pregnant. I am married and have two grown children and one grandchild and a wonderful husband, but when I read some things it makes me think how wrong I was. I don't believe in abortion but, at that time, I will be honest, maybe I would have. Do you think I really had one?

Dear Reader—Your letter points up beautifully one of the complications that can occur from an abortion.

Namely, the guilt feeling that the individual has. In your case, your guilt feeling is probably totally unjustified in view of your remarks.

Since you say you did not have intercourse, I doubt very much that you were pregnant to begin with. Certainly it takes more than a glass of wine and a little quinine to cause a miscarriage.

Young girls tend to have some irregularity of their periods. It takes quite awhile for many girls to develop a stable, fairly consistent pattern of ovulation and menstruation. Being late or missing one or more menstrual periods is not unusual.

I think you can feel quite confident that you weren't pregnant and did not induce a miscarriage and I hope that you will stop worrying about it.

Today it is fairly simple to find out if you are pregnant or not. There are numerous tests available and even better ones on the way, including some you may be able to do at home. The ancient Egyptians didn't have it quite that easy but even they had a system for pregnancy detection. The woman would pour a little of her urine regularly over a jar of barley. If the barley sprouted, she was pregnant.

There is a scientific basis for this practice. The estrogen hormone and related female hormones that are present in increased amounts in the urine of a pregnant woman will stimulate seeds to sprout. Hence, sprouting barley meant a pregnant woman.

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I am the Stanford scientist who was quoted as saying, "Laughter can be hazardous to the health, especially if one is susceptible to heart and respiratory troubles." The writer said, "The doctors are at it again. Every week they come up with something that is harmful to Mr. and Mrs. J.Q. Public. If it isn't cholesterol, it's smog. Now they tell us to stop laughing."

It's not the doctors who are "at it again" but the news services. The original story was badly garbled and left the reading public with some gross misconceptions. The news services said they wanted to correct the erroneous impressions but so far they haven't sent their science writers around to interview me.

The truth is that I believe laughter and humor are extremely valuable and we are richer for them. My Stanford medical editor explains it this way: "Maybe some people just can't believe that anything as wonderful as laughter can be harmless." The Puritan Ethic rides again. — William F. Fry, Jr., M.D.

Dear Dr. Fry: Thank you for setting the record straight. More people will see this column than saw that garbled news story.

My readers should know that you are a psychiatrist who has devoted 18 years to scientific research and you work on laughter is no joke. The essence of the research is embodied in your statement: "Laughter helps us handle our frustrations and fears. It is a major coping mechanism." So laugh it up, folks, it's good for you.

Dear Ann Landers: I just read the letter from the woman with the foul-mouthed brother-in-law.

She said he talks so rotten she hates to have him in her home with other guests.

Please tell her that in certain areas it is against the law to use filthy language.

A Palo Alto meter maid was hanging a ticket on a man's car. When he came out of the store and saw her he opened up with some very dirty language. The woman swore out a criminal complaint against him and the case is going to court. I was pleased to see this item in the newspaper and I hope the fellow gets a stiff fine. I think it would be dandy if that foul-mouthed brother-in-law was fined, too. Do you agree? Calliofer

Dear Cal: There's a difference between a social foul-mouth and obscene and abusive language directed at a meter maid. Both are bad, but if a person could be fined for talking rotten in company, the courts would be jammed 24 hours a day.

Dear Ann Landers: I am going crazy trying to figure out the relationship between Jim and Tad.

Sam and Fay marry and have a son named Jim. They get divorced.

Pete and Winnie marry and have a son named Tad. They get divorced.

Pete and Fay marry and have a son named Allen. They split.

Jim and Tad are step-brothers while Jim's mother (Fay) is married to Tad's father (Pete).

What is Jim to Tad after Fay and Pete divorce? Remember that they have a step-brother in common. Can you figure this out? — Stumped

Dear S: I'm not about to try. What you describe sounds more like Hollywood Roulette than a family. By the time you read my answer Sam and Fay could be remarried.

Every time we write about luck in team-of-four matches we remember a hand played in the finals of the 1935 or 1936 Spingold. It was a long match and coming into the last set of boards the Four Aces held a 2500-point lead. This was before the days of IMPs and the matches were played at total points.

Oswald Jacoby who sat South picked up one of the biggest hands he had ever held. He opened with a forcing two-spade bid. West stuck in a non-vulnerable nuisance call of five hearts and Dave Bruce, sitting North, raised to five spades.

Needless to say, Jacoby went right to seven. He expected to spread the hand and claim as soon as dummy hit the table, but the wrong dummy came down.

By this time you can see Jacoby's problem. He could discard three of dummy's diamonds on the top clubs but there was still a problem about the queen of diamonds. Jacoby wasn't worried about West holding three to the queen. Seven was surely going to be bid at the other table and all Jacoby wanted to do was to get the same result as his opposite number.

He won the heart opening; drew four rounds of trumps; cashed the clubs and the ace of diamonds; entered dummy with a fifth trump; led a second diamond and relaxed happily when East produced the queen.

Jacoby has never said what he would have done if East had played a low diamond.

Morris Ellis of New York, who played the hand at the other table, has committed himself. He said, "I was going to toss a coin and see if you could outguess it."

The Dangers of Drugs

All parents are surely concerned about the possibility that their child may have abused drugs. But how have they shown their concern to their child? How have they approached the subject?

Don't listen to second-hand information or pass old wives' tales along to your youngsters. Get hold of a good reference book on drugs and their effects. Read this information so when your children ask questions you have correct information to offer.

Often there are telltale signs that a person is taking mind-affecting drugs. Experts warn repeatedly, however, that when adults become oversuspicious snoopers they can do far more harm than good. One reason for this is that many of the "telltale signs" of drug abuse may be signs of other problems, such as disease or fatigue. Untrained observers, as anxious parents usually are, are overly prepared to accuse their children. But if the child is really not guilty, serious family problems may arise.

Generally, it is difficult to tell what kind of drugs are being taken simply by observing symptoms. There are some general clues, though, and these include the finding of equipment such as teaspoons, eyedroppers, hypodermic needles, paper packs or vials. The observation of capsules or pills, or needle marks on the save your child's life!

body, especially the arms, are other significant warning signals. All of these signals are pretty solid indications of a problem and should be investigated further.

Behavioral or physical symptoms, however, may prove more misleading to the person observing them. Sudden changes or shifts in a person's mood, for example, may be signs of the use of mind-affecting drugs. On the other hand, they may also be purely emotional reactions to a bit of news or an exhilarating or depressing experience.

Marijuana can cause bloodshot eyes, but so can a number of medical problems and so can fatigue.

LSD may cause a dilation of the pupils, as well as hallucinations. Pep pills (amphetamines) can cause several side effects, including restlessness, nervousness, delusions, drying of the mouth and nose, bad breath and constant licking of the lips.

Goofballs, or barbiturates, may make a person appear to be drunk. Large doses can also cause slurred speech, clumsiness, slowness, tiredness and poor judgment.

Narcotics such as heroin and morphine can cause nervousness, dilated pupils and an intense craving for the drug. Narcotics are the most commonly injected abuse drugs and there are a number of problems associated with this. Infection can, and frequently does, result from the use of unsterile needles, as does hepatitis and even the black plague.

Malnutrition and rotting teeth are also common among narcotic abusers, because they are so concerned with obtaining their drugs that they neglect common dietary and hygienic practices.

Parents must be careful to set good examples for their children in regard to drug abuse. It is no wonder that some young people think they can get satisfaction from drugs when they see how their parents pop pills — pills for aches and pains, pills to pep them up, pills to calm them down, pills to help them sleep, pills to keep them awake. And don't forget that both alcohol and cigarettes are addictive drugs which people use to alter their mental state.

In addition, the saturation advertising for various over-the-counter medications has been criticized as leading toward greater drug abuse among young people.

The solution, however, is not to lock children away from all of the possible bad influences. (Although children should be continually reminded to keep away from strangers, who may be drug peddlers.) No matter how hard a parent tries to keep a child away from every bad influence, he will never be totally successful, but he may succeed in making a rebel out of his child or causing other, more serious, emotional disturbances.

Reluctant Belanger paces Birds

By BRUCE LOWITT
Associated Press Sports Writer
Mike Cuellar had nothing said Earl Weaver. But Weaver did have Mark Belanger—although by listening to the Baltimore shortstop, he may not have him for long.

What Belanger had Monday night was a hot bat at the right time. His tie-breaking, two-run double in the sixth inning provided Baltimore Orioles with the impetus they needed to turn back Milwaukee Brewers 5-2.

Elsewhere in the American League Monday, Minnesota Twins shut out Texas Rangers 5-0, Cleveland Indians beat Boston Red Sox 6-2 and Kansas City

Royals defeated Oakland Athletics 4-2.

The Orioles bombed Boston 11-2 Sunday to stay within range of the East Division-leading Detroit Tigers who split with Cleveland, losing 2-1 and winning 6-5. In other Sunday games, New York Yankees swept two from Milwaukee, 3-0 and 6-4; Chicago White Sox took two from Texas, 10-1 and 7-1; Oakland Athletics and Minnesota split, Oakland taking the first 6-3 and the Twins the nightcap 5-1; California took two from the Royals, 4-3 and 3-2.

In Saturday's games, it was Minnesota 4 Oakland 0, Boston 6 Baltimore 3, Milwaukee 4 New York 0, Detroit 4 Cleveland 3, Kansas City 2 California 1 and Texas 11 Chicago 5.

"Don't misquote me because I'm not asking to be traded," Belanger said after helping the staggering Orioles to only their third victory in the last 10 games, "but those thoughts have run through my mind and a trade is still a possibility."

PART-TIME PLAYER
The nine-year veteran alte-nates at shortstop with Bobby Grich.

"I don't feel I can do a good job playing one week and sitting down another," Mark continued. "If that happens, I would just as soon go to another club."

Ollie Brown's run-scoring single in the first inning for Milwaukee and Brooks Robinson's homer in the second for Baltimore sent the teams into their sixth-inning tie before Jim Lonborg issued two walks and served up the pitch that Belanger drilled into the left-field corner. Doyle Alexander came to Cuellar's rescue in the sixth after the Brewers had cut the margin to one run.

"Cuellar had nothing tonight," Weaver, the Orioles' manager said. "He had no fast ball to start with and they were jumping on his slow curve."

The Orioles edged within two games of Detroit.
PERRY AIDS EFFORT
Jim Perry gave up just two hits—a pair of harmless fifth-inning singles, drove in a run and helped himself with a strange unassisted double play to lead the Twins past the Rangers. Bob Darwin chipped in with a three-run homer.

Hits by Dick Billings and Ted Ford set up the weird double play. Bill Fahey followed with a loop back to the mound, with plate umpire Bill Haller calling the infield fly rule.

Mathews gets managing baptism under Red fire

CINCINNATI (AP) — Eddie Mathews is convinced "we have a better ball club than we've shown, and these guys can do it."

The new Atlanta Braves manager admitted he was nervous in his debut as a major league manager Monday night as Cincinnati Reds bombed him 9-1.

"I guess it's as good a way to break in as any," said the former Braves third baseman appointed to replace Lumen Harris, who was fired Monday.

It was two former Atlanta team-mates who did him in, Denis Menke and Joe Morgan who batted in eight of the Reds' nine runs between them.

Morgan hit a three-run homer, his 14th of the season, and Menke got two more with a single in the six-run second inning for the Reds.

TOUGH START

"It was a tough way for Eddie to break in," said Cincinnati second baseman Joe Morgan. "But I got more satisfaction in simply winning the game and moving closer to the Western Division title."

In the only other National League game Monday night, St. Louis Cardinals defeated New York Mets 3-2 in 13 innings. Pittsburgh Pirates' afternoon game at Montreal was rained out with the Expos.

In Sunday's action, the Pirates swept a double header from Montreal 8-0 and 7-2; Houston Astros split with San Francisco winning 7-3 while the Giants took the second 6-2; the Mets crushed Chicago Cubs 12-2; Atlanta nipped Cincinnati 4-3; St. Louis Cardinals blanked Philadelphia Phillies 6-0 and Los Angeles Dodgers clipped San Diego Padres by the same score.

Pittsburgh downed Montreal 7-4 in Saturday play while Chicago took New York 3-2. Houston downed San Francisco 4-3, Cincinnati beat Atlanta 4-2, Philadelphia breezed past St. Louis 5-0 and Los Angeles edged San Diego 1-0.
