

Landslides: Notre Dame Road gone

NOTRE-DAME-DE-PIERREVILLE (CP) — Specialists plan to examine the severity of cracks caused by landslides along the only road leading into this small village, Jacques Brochu, regional director of the Quebec civil protection agency, said Monday.

On Saturday and Sunday, three landslides hit the village of 800 set on a peninsula that narrows at its base. It is located about 100 kilometres north of Sherbrooke, where the flood-swollen St. Francis River meets the St. Lawrence River.

Brochu said car traffic between the village and the mainland is reduced to one lane and trucks are barred from the road, which at places is less than a dozen metres from the riverbank.

Specialists from Quebec's environment and transport departments intend to conduct tests to determine the subterranean state of the affected area, Brochu said.

He said the landslide may have resulted from an unusual warming-freezing-warming cycle this spring that prevented the ground from drying normally.

There have been three landslides since 5:30 p.m. Saturday.

The first cut a new 20-metre-high cliff — about the height of a three-storey house — and more than 55 metres long, out of the road embankment. A slide about midnight Saturday took another slice more than 20 metres long. The third slide, about 5 a.m. Sunday, bit off a 20-metre-wide chunk.

Senneterre: PCBs beat the deadline

SENNETERRE (CP) — The last 12 containers of toxic PCBs from a local dump are on their way to France — just weeks before a law comes into effect banning their export from Canada.

The containers left early Monday for the French town of St-Vulbas, near Lyon, said Alain Sauriol, a spokesman for Sanivan, the company which transported the PCBs via the Port of Montreal.

Sauriol also said that the company was in a hurry to get the PCBs out of the country because Environment Canada regulations will ban the export of all PCBs starting at the beginning of May.

Meanwhile, a committee to protect the environment in the Abitibi region of Quebec fears more toxic PCBs — polychlorinated biphenyls — might find their way into a Sanivan warehouse in Senneterre.

The PCBs are transported by truck from Montreal along Autoroute 117 which runs through the beautiful Laurentian mountains, La Verendrye provincial park and on up to the Abitibi town.

"It simply doesn't make sense to choose the Abitibi region to store toxic wastes from across Quebec and the United States," said Jaxe Roulo, head of the environmental group. "They represent such a danger for the ground water and the water system of the area (if they ever leak)."

Sauriol also said the company which owns Sanivan, Glengarry Transport, wants to sell the waste-disposal firm. The company has been up for sale since last October.

Inuit: Quebec villages plan their autonomy

By Michel Venne

QUEBEC (CP) — The Inuit of northern Quebec are in the process of setting up an autonomous regional government with the approval of the province.

A committee of six has been visiting the 14 Inuit villages in the Nunavik region since mid-December to gather views on a proposed constitution. The proposal is to be amended at the end of the consultation and voted on in a local referendum early next year.

The committee, headed by Simonie Nalukturnuk, proposes the creation of a territorial government which would negotiate with Quebec and Ottawa certain powers concerning the administration of education, social services, and natural resources among other areas.

It envisions the creation of local courts to handle civil matters and minor criminal offences such as robbery and assault.

The proposal specifies that the powers of the regional government would fit into the political and judicial framework of Quebec and Canada. The 6000 inhabitants of Nunavik — Inuit and whites — would continue to be subject to provincial and federal laws, including the charters of rights.

"We don't want to create a completely independent authority," Nalukturnuk said in an interview from Inukjuak, a town on Hudson Bay.

"Our aim is to set up structures which will remain compatible with Quebec's but which will allow us to control our own development."

OUTLINES RIGHTS

The constitution would include a charter of rights recognizing the Inuit as a distinct society and their right to use and promote their language, Inuktitut.

It would also recognize the Inuit's priority in the exploitation of wildlife and in the sharing of natural resources. Most of these rights are already included in the James Bay Agreement the Inuit and Cree Indians signed with Quebec in 1975.

The official languages of the territory would be Inuktitut, French and English.

John Ciaecia, the Quebec cabinet minister responsible for native affairs, has not yet seen the proposal, now under study by officials at the Secretariat of Native Affairs.

But the document has been welcomed as an interesting working paper which could form the basis for negotiations.

To be valid, the constitution will have to be approved by a law adopted in the provincial legislature.

The Inuit propose the creation of a parliament based on the British model. It would seat 20 representatives elected by universal suffrage. Between six and 10 of these members would be chosen to form an executive committee, or a kind of ministerial cabinet.

Quebec's chief returning officer would be asked to organize the first elections, as was done for the election of the members of the constitution committee in April 1989.

Existing Inuit organizations such as the school board, regional administration and cultural society would be integrated into the new government. Private corporations — such as the powerful Makivik Corp. — would retain their autonomy.

GST: Senate look to be a crucial step

By Larry Welsh

OTTAWA (CP) — The ringmaster for the next round in the goods and services tax fight hasn't made up his mind whether he'll end up being a conciliator, gladiator or repairman.

"My objective is to start out with an open mind on this and find out whether in fact we can learn from the Canadian public how to make this bill acceptable," said Liberal Senator Sidney Buckwold.

Buckwold is chairman of the Senate banking committee, which is expected to spend the next several months mulling over Finance Minister Michael Wilson's seven per cent tax.

"That doesn't say we'll be able to come up with something that makes it better and it's always possible that we would just say, 'This is not for Canada, let's reject the bill,'" Buckwold said in a recent interview.

The fireworks over the goods and services tax finished last week in the Commons and Liberal senators are digging in for a long fight on the controversial legislation, Bill C-62.

Buckwold, the 73-year-old former mayor of Saskatoon, refused to predict what will happen to the tax in the Liberal-dominated Senate, but he could end up being one of Wilson's biggest allies, or worst foes.

OPTIONS PONDERED

Buckwold said his committee may conclude after travelling across the country to listen to Canadians' concerns that the tax should be flatly rejected.

The banking committee will make recommendations to the unelected Senate, which can pass, reject or make changes to legislation.

But Buckwold doesn't want Senate committee hearings to become another soap box where forces opposed to the tax can spout off and get free publicity.

"I'm concerned that we ask people not to just come in and yell, but to pass on some of their wisdom ...

as to whether this can be salvaged," he said.

"For that reason, I think the government should applaud us — we may even help them, although they won't believe that."

Buckwold expects his committee will start work on the goods and services tax shortly after senators return from a break on May 1.

While senators wrangle over the GST, debate about the Meech Lake accord may also loom large in their minds.

The prime minister has agreed under the accord to appoint senators from a list of names provided by the provinces.

But if the accord is not ratified by the June 23 deadline, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney could fill existing vacancies with Tories, tilting the balance of power in the Senate towards the Conservatives.

TORIES COULD BENEFIT

There are 12 vacancies in the 104-member Senate and Mulroney could use a special constitutional provision to appoint eight more senators.

The Senate now has 53 Liberals, 34 Tories, four Independents, one Independent Liberal plus the 12 vacancies.

So far, some Conservative MPs have been skeptical and dubious about the Senate's plans for the goods and services tax.

Conservative House leader Harvie Andre had strong words once Bill C-62 finally cleared the Commons last week, warning it would be "very dangerous" in a democracy for unelected senators to block legislation.

Union leaders have urged the Senate to reject the tax and Buckwold said mail about the legislation is arriving in his office by the bag full.

Canadian Auto Workers president Bob White said recently: "The Tory GST steamroller must be stopped and the Senate has the power to stop it."

But Buckwold seems to be unimpressed by such pleas.

"I'm getting phone calls that say 'Good for you, let's make sure you scrap the tax.'"

"Well, that's not my attitude," Buckwold said.

Rent control: Quebec lowers family income ceiling

By Norman Delisle

QUEBEC (CP) — The Quebec government is going to make it much tougher for families to obtain low-rental housing.

A proposed order-in-council would lower the ceilings for eligibility by almost 50 per cent in some cases.

The decree, which has yet to be approved by cabinet, was published without fanfare in the official Gazette March 7.

Until now, in most cases, it was up to individual municipalities to set the ceilings for low-rental housing eligibility.

Under the current system, in Montreal, a retired couple with a joint income of under $26,844 qualifies for low-income housing.

But in order to remain eligible under the new rules, that same couple would have to have revenues of under $18,216.

Women who are single parents with two children now can earn up to $26,076 and still qualify for low-rental housing in Montreal.

That ceiling would be lowered to $15,996 under the decree proposed by the government of Premier Robert Bourassa.

A housing lobby group, le Front d'action populaire en réaménagement urbain, has accused the Liberal government of wanting to tighten the rules simply "to camouflage its inability to provide sufficient public housing."

The lobby group said the Bourassa government has built, on average, only 1,500 low-rental units annually.

The group is demanding a public debate and a coherent government policy on public housing, something they say Bourassa promised in the 1985 election campaign that brought him to power.

Housing Minister Yvon Picotte indicated the government wants to improve its record and plans to build 2,812 low-income housing units in 1990.

Meech: U.S. worries Canada is 'on the brink'

By John Valorzi

WASHINGTON (CP) — To hear some U.S. newspapers tell it, Canada's eventual breakup over the Meech Lake constitutional accord appears inevitable.

In the last week, editorials and columns in prominent U.S. dailies have calmly accepted the prospect Canada will split up over the latest constitutional crisis between Quebec and the rest of the country.

An editorial last week in the Washington Post said while such a breakup would be "unfortunate, it would finally end decades of 'corrosive sparring' between English- and French-speaking Canadians.

A Good Friday column in the Wall Street Journal, the bible of corporate America, asked: "What would happen if Quebec were to secede from Canada," and laid out some of the technical problems Quebec would face if it chose to leave Confederation.

In Monday's editions of the Washington Times, right-wing columnist Pat Buchanan mused if Quebec separates, the western provinces and the Maritimes would be welcome to join the United States.

Such newspaper commentaries don't represent the thinking of the U.S. administration — President George Bush said in Toronto last week: "A unified, strong Canada is a great partner — always has been and always will continue to be."

BROKERS ADVISE

But they suggest some U.S. opinion-makers are resigned to Canada's eventual breakup if the Meech Lake accord fails. In fact, some Wall Street brokers have advised their clients an independent Quebec would still do well economically and would still be a good place to invest their money.

The Meech Lake constitutional pact, which among other things recognizes Quebec as a distinct society, must be ratified by all the provinces by June 23 or it expires. Manitoba and New Brunswick haven't approved the deal, and Newfoundland has moved to withdraw its support.

The Post editorial said Canada "teeters perennially on the brink of a bitter breakup," and mused Canadians might be better off living in a smaller country.

The newspaper also suggested Canada might look to small, prosperous Scandinavian countries like Denmark, Sweden and Norway as a model for its future.

In the Wall Street Journal story, columnist Sol Sanders noted an increasing number of Quebec businessmen support independence, and he laid out some of the economic technicalities the province would face if it decided to split from Canada.

These include dividing up Quebec's share of federal government assets like the post office and liabilities such as Canada's $350-billion national debt as well as resolving a border dispute with Newfoundland and redrafting the Canada-U.S. free-trade agreement the province strongly supports.

'NEW HEADACHES'

"Whatever form Quebec independence takes, it conjures up enormously complex negotiations, at least a minimum period of instability and new headaches for U.S. policymakers and perhaps American businesspeople," wrote Sanders.

Buchanan meanwhile, wrote the breakup of Canada may only be a matter of time, and mused by the turn of the century, the United States could also include Canada's western and Maritime provinces as well as the Yukon and Northwest territories.

"A hard look at a map of Canada — as large as the United States, with but a tenth of our population — suggests that, should the country come apart, America could pick up the pieces," said Buchanan, a former White House aide to former president Ronald Reagan.

Jonathan Lemco, a Washington-based observer of Canada-U.S. relations, dismissed the recent newspaper articles, saying they're based on U.S. ignorance of Canadian affairs.

"Canada's constitutional debate is probably the most interesting new issue in North America right now, so it's attracting some attention in the United States," said Lemco, with the National Planning Association.

"But there's also an enormous amount of ignorance associated with this subject down here and this absence of knowledge allows these columnists to make all kinds of unwarranted judgments."

Lemco, a Montreal native, said Canadians shouldn't worry about what the United States is saying about Meech Lake.

"Not many people down here read this stuff," he said.

"The truth is that how Americans portray Canada or what they think about Canada is not going to be that important."

"The attention span in the U.S. media about this issue is very limited and they'll move on to the next Nicaragua or the next South Africa (story) very soon."

Bishop's: 400 participate in Rock for Recycling

By Jean Potvin

LENNOXVILLE — There was great fun and co-operation at the Little O park on Saturday, but the fundraiser by Bishop's students to purchase a recycling bin fell short by $800.

"Rock for Recycling" was the brainchild of Sam Straiton.

With help from her Bishop's friends and the Students Representative Council (SRC), she got nine local bands playing at Optimists' Park to "raise awareness toward recycling." Straiton said in a telephone interview afterward.

She said about 400 people showed up with contributions of refuse to be recycled. "Everybody brought a recyclable and dropped it in a bin."

"We filled about half of an 18-wheeler with recycled material," Straiton said.

Domino's Pizza and CKTS radio helped sponsor the concert day. "We had 500 hot dogs and we sold them all," she said.

The students turned green for the day without the use of drink. "It was a total alcohol-free day," Straiton added, although one non-student participant was seen drinking a suspiciously beer-like liquid from a milk carton — which he had presumably recycled.

While CKTS provided the hot dogs and Domino's brought hot pizzas, Painchaud Musique provided the sound equipment. A hay wagon served as a stage for the performers.

CASH FOR KIDS

Straiton also said some of the recycling profits went to the Ronald McDonald fund. "Empty 2-litre pop bottles were collected and brought to one of the McDonalds in Sherbrooke," she said.

The aim of the event was to raise bucks for recycling at Bishop's. "Our goal was to raise $1000," she said, but the final tally was only $200.

But even though mother nature did not show her best colors Saturday, the event still helped in raising consciousness.

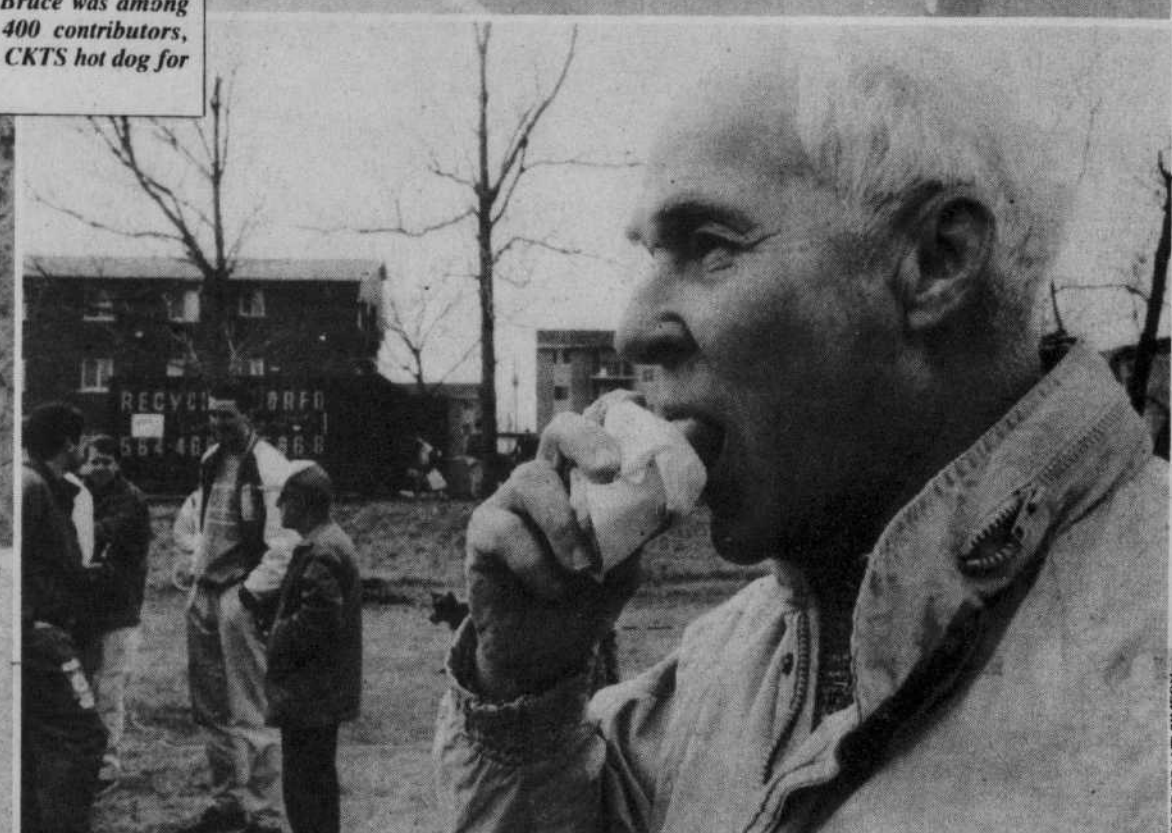

"Townpeople came out. It was a big success, even though the goal wasn't reached," Straiton said. "Just the amount of co-operation was great."

Straiton said the money collected will be safely tucked away until the Bishops' Recycling Club finds a use for it, she said, "toward a recycling program in the Bishop's and Lennoxville community."

Guitars twanged, voices rang, Wolf Cubs brought out their re-cycling bags, and everyone had to contribute to the bins at Saturday's Rock for Recycling concert at Optimists' Park in Lennoxville.

Mayor Duncan Bruce was among the more than 400 contributors, even recycling a CKTS hot dog for the cause.

Meech: Commons committee has tough row to hoe

By Jim Coyle

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — There's bad news for Meech Lake accord backers on a special Commons committee as it brings its 11th-hour constitutional rescue bid today to the shores of Great Slave Lake.

Clyde Wells is popular here. Aboriginal groups are all for the Newfoundland premier's demand that Meech Lake be improved now, not later, Tom Eagle said Monday.

The executive-director of the local Native Friendship Centre, who will be one witness before the committee today, figures the "best friend the North has in this is Clyde Wells" — the most rigid of three provincial leaders opposing the deal in its present form.

"He wants to see it in black and white," Eagle, an Ojibwa who came to the territories from Manitoba almost 20 years ago, said in an interview.

"He doesn't want to sign something he knows is wrong just because somebody says we'll fix it all tomorrow."

Like native leaders who testified last week when the 15-member panel began hearings in Ottawa on New Brunswick Premier Frank McKenna's proposed package of additional constitutional reforms, Eagle objects to Meech Lake and complains about the rescue package.

Meech Lake would make provincehood more difficult for the Northwest and Yukon territories by requiring unanimous provincial consent. It would deny those regions the voice in Senate and Supreme Court of Canada appointments enjoyed by provincial premiers who would nominate candidates.

Those shortcomings, which McKenna's proposal would address, gravely insulted territorial residents who saw their leaders "left in a hallway" when Meech Lake was hammered out by Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and the 10 provincial premiers in 1987, Eagle said.

Worse still, the accord recognizes Quebec as a distinct society but denies the same status to aboriginal people, whom Eagle says are more obviously distinct and in need of constitutional safeguards.

"We are a distinct society," he said. "We are the original peoples of this country."

Eagle added, more in sorrow than anger, "we are distinctly poor in Canada, we are distinctly unemployed, we are distinctly illiterate, we are distinctly the forgotten people of this country."

"I think the accord demonstrates that very clearly and so does McKenna's parallel accord."

Meech Lake, which would secure Quebec's agreement to the 1982 Constitution, must be ratified by all provinces by June 23. New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Manitoba oppose the package of constitutional reforms as it now stands.

The plan by New Brunswick would allow the territories to become provinces by federal legislation and grant them a say in Senate and Supreme Court appointments.

And it would give Ottawa a role in promoting linguistic duality in Canada in areas of federal jurisdiction, something Quebec fears could dilute its power to protect French language and culture.

Cherubic committee chairman Jean Charest, a mop of curls topping a babyface, takes on a large task as he leads the delegation on its second week of work to a region where the accord is decidedly unpopular.

Yukon government leader Tony Penikett, likely to testify Thursday when the committee travels to Whitehorse, wrote earlier during the debate that "out of a flawed process came a flawed result."

"It is too late to convince Northerners that once the accord is law its defects will be corrected. The North has already been burnt by the Meech Lake accord. Once burnt, twice shy."

Despite the mounting pressure to find a constitutional solution, Charest has been unflappable in the face of high emotions and so even-handed as to win the odd joking rebuke from his Tory colleagues.

But at times during the first week, proceedings seemed sadly comical.

The future of the country is at stake, witness after witness insisted.

Yet the committee dithered over whether Charest should sum up the salient points of each guest's testimony.

Closing: Decline too much for Nesbitt Home

By Sharon McCully

COWANSVILLE — Manager Frank Christman's voice breaks slightly as he describes how he felt breaking the news to staff and residents at the Nesbitt seniors' home in Cowansville that the residence will close its doors by the end of November.

"The staff and the 17 residents

Frank Christman... 'A pretty big shock to everyone.'

are taking it pretty hard," Christman said in an interview Monday. "It came as a pretty big shock to everyone."

"I guess I felt as bad as anyone, but I had to put up a good front," he said.

Christman, along with residents and their families, were officially informed last week by Anglican Archbishop of Montreal Reginald Hollis that the home, which first opened in November 1957, would close.

LOSING MONEY

In making the announcement, the archbishop said the residence has been operating at a deficit for four years. His letter says the 22-bed residence "is no longer needed" due to a decline in the acute need for housing for seniors which existed when the home was established 30 years ago.

"If our problem were primarily the deficit," the archbishop wrote to the home's management committee, "we could find ways of coping. I'm quite sure many of our members would be willing to offer support, just as they did when the home was opened."

"The decision must be made in relation to need and usefulness," he added, noting that new and improved facilities, coupled with a new emphasis on home-care services, provide seniors with alternatives.

SINCE 1957

The Cowansville residence — a gothic-style mansion constructed in 1891 and bequeathed to the Anglican church by the Nesbitt family — has become a final home for seniors of all denominations since it opened in 1957.

Financed exclusively through bequests, donations, and residents' fees, the rising costs and low occupancy rates have forced the executive council of the Diocese to close the home, Hollis wrote.

Residence manager Christman says that while the closing is a tough pill to swallow, it's understandable.

"We've been operating below capacity, with fewer bequests over the years, while our costs have continued to rise," he said.

"Right now we are trying to place our 17 residents with the least amount of trauma possible," Christman said.

HARD FOR ALL

"It's very hard for all of us," added home assistant Guyla Premont.

"It's like breaking up a family," Premont said, leafing through a photo album of birthdays celebrated and Christmases past. "This is Frank as Santa Claus," she points out.

It's uncertain what will become of the statuesque historic building in the town centre once its residents are relocated.

Meanwhile, life in the comfortable residence has taken on an air of apprehension. The office phone rings constantly as the archbishop's letter reaches the families of the senior residents.

"I guess we saw the handwriting on the wall last year, but it's hard when it really hits you," Christman said. "I don't mind for myself, but it's hard on older people when they have to leave. We're going to do everything we can to make it easier for them."

The Nesbitt Home: Closed by rising costs, declining demand.

West Bolton: Council angry over school-tax reform

By Gil Smith

WEST BOLTON — Mayor Fred Lahue and his municipal council have added their collective voice to the growing outcry against drastic proposed changes to Quebec's way of raising school taxes.

"The government has pulled the plug so school boards can tax at higher rates to make up for money the government won't give them," Lahue said at West Bolton council's April monthly meeting. "Ratepayers, including some old age pensioners who shouldn't be stuck with it, will be facing big tax increases."

Lahue is almost as outraged about the government's lack of contact with municipalities over the proposed reform as he is about school tax increases expected to follow.

The proposal would allow school boards to make up for reduced government subsidies by taking additional millions from property owners. It was tabled in the National Assembly last month, during routine presentation of government spending estimates for 1990 and catching virtually all municipalities off-guard.

FROM SALES TAX?

"The money for schools should come from the sales tax we all pay in this province," said councillor Stan Horne. "Not from property owners."

The proposal came when provincial grants for school expenses were cut by more than $300 million a year. School boards will be allowed to levy higher property taxes to make up the loss. The result could be at least a doubling of school taxes starting next year.

"In addition to people getting nailed for a sizeable school tax increase under the new proposals, an inequality could be brought about in education itself," councillor René Hébert told the meeting. "Each municipality pays taxes according to its resources. In poorer municipalities the resources aren't there. The quality of education in remote areas, for instance, could easily suffer."

TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Lahue said Quebec is trying to make up for cuts in federal transfer payments to the province. Ottawa chopped transfers to Quebec by more than $200 million for 1991.

The mayor told council that the Union des municipalités régionales de comté et des municipalités locales du Québec (UMRCQ) had asked municipalities to pass a resolution opposing the tax proposal. The group is a coalition of municipalities.

"The resolution should be backed," Lahue said. "The UMRCQ could have better clout than an individual municipality."

West Bolton council was unanimous: the resolution passed.

Mayors of various municipalities fear that they'll be forced to compete with school boards in taxing the same ratepayers. They're also worried that the proposed increases, estimated in the hundreds of millions for the next fiscal period, could rise to $1 billion or more in years ahead.

ROAD-WORK CUTS

As if the school tax worries aren't enough, council must also consider possible reductions in government road-work funding, which would raise taxes still more.

Lahue said subsidies to municipalities might be reduced, especially for secondary roads.

The Quebec Union of Municipalities has accused the government of intending to cut back on road building and repair funds. Daniel Johnson, the government's Treasury Board president, has denied it.

Lahue said some municipal roads might be reclassified under changed government priorities. Collector-type roads may be unaffected, he said, but if the road is gravel-surfaced, grants could be cut.

Lahue and other mayors are no more pleased with the proposed road budget than with the school tax plan. Lack of dialogue and consultation with the municipalities are among the main complaints.

But Lahue notes some distinctions.

"The road tax won't be like the school tax," he said. "It's kind of like a user-pay situation on the roads. What we're objecting to, among other things, is the way the government goes about these things. They don't talk to us at the municipal level. They just dump things on us."

Lahue said Quebec hasn't said it is changing road subsidies. But municipalities should have a chance to express their views, he said.

Bull: Israel in on death over Doomsday Gun?

LONDON (Reuters) — A company run by murdered Canadian arms-dealer Gerald Bull was involved in Iraq's order for steel tubes seized by British customs officials, the firm that made them said Monday.

Sheffield Forgemasters said Bull's Brussels-based Space Research Corp. acted for the Iraqi Ministry of Trade in sewing up the contract. The artillery expert was shot dead in the Belgian capital last month.

Bull was well-known in arms circles. In 1980 he was jailed for violating a U.S. embargo on arms sales to South Africa by selling it an advanced howitzer.

A British company said Friday that it has already delivered 44 of the steel cylinders that the government says Iraq could use to build the "Doomsday Gun".

The company said it delivered the cylinders with government permission.

Sheffield Forgemasters, a well-known manufacturer of gun barrels, said the cylinders were part of a larger consignment for Iraq's petrochemical industry and 44 similar pipes have already been delivered with government approval.

The company also said in a statement that the pipes, when assembled, would be 156 metres long, not 40 metres.

GUN PARTS?

Military experts said the eight cylinders found by British customs on Wednesday might be used to build a huge gun with a 40-metre barrel, enabling Iraq to fire nuclear or chemical shells into Israeli or Iranian cities.

Iraq has denied the allegations and said the cylinders were precision piping for its petroleum industry.

But customs officials and Defence Ministry experts said the pipes, which were put on public display at the northern English port of Middlesbrough, could be used to make a huge gun barrel and came under British export restrictions.

The officials say the cylinders could be components for a huge gun capable of firing chemical or biological shells at targets up to 1600 kilometres away.

'INQUIRIES WERE MADE'

"It has always been accepted by Forgemasters that Space Research Corporation had involvement in this contract," Stuart Benson, solicitor for Forgemasters, said in another statement Monday.

But he said the Brussels company was represented by a man called Cowley and not by Bull in negotiating the contract.

Benson repeated Forgemasters' contention that the company believed throughout the tubes were intended for Iraq's petrochemical industry.

"Proper inquiries were made regarding the bona fides of SRC; its involvement in the contract, a copy of which was sent to the Department of Trade and Industry, appears quite clearly from documents forming part of the contract," he added.

Although SRC is known for its arms expertise, it has also acted as an agent for suppliers to Middle East petrochemical installations.

Forgemasters deny the tubes could be assembled into a giant gun barrel.

"Nobody seems to have taken on board the fact that those eight pieces do not join up to form one piece," spokesman Tony Peck said Sunday.

ISRAEL TOO

On Friday in Jerusalem the Israeli army's former head of artillery said the murdered ballistics scientist also helped Israel improve its heavy weapons.

Interviewed in the Yedioth Ahrenoth daily newspaper, reserve Brig. Avraham Bar-David said Bull helped Israel greatly increase the range of its field artillery.

"He visited this country and proposed his innovations to the army and manufacturers," Bar-David said, describing Bull as the world's foremost authority on heavy artillery.

"Some of them were used in field artillery and permitted a very significant increase in their range," he said, without saying when Bull visited Israel.

Some newspapers speculated that Bull might have been killed by the Israeli secret service, Mossad, a theory supported by his son, Michel Bull of Montreal.

Others suggested he had been killed by Iran, another potential target of a huge gun it is alleged Iraq was developing.

LINKED TO MURDER?

British and Belgian press reports linked the seizure of the cylinders to Bull's murder.

"This huge gun, of a calibre never before seen in military history, could have been designed by Gerald Bull," said Belgium's Le Soir.

In the cage: SPA manager sets record

By Dan Hawaleshka

SHERBROOKE — A world record has been set for consecutive hours spent in a small cage, but the stunt raised less than half the money organizers had hoped for.

"It's sure we didn't raise the $27,000," said Alain St-Martin, general manager of Sherbrooke's Society for the Protection of Animals.

Despite his disappointment, St-Martin said Monday the ordeal was worth it.

"It went well; the record is set," he said.

The exact dollar figure is not yet known but St-Martin said the society raised between $10,000 and $12,000 during the fund raiser.

St-Martin set his Guinness Book world record over the weekend by spending 54 consecutive hours in a cramped dog cage. No such record previously existed.

St-Martin believes the event will result in "incalculable rewards" for the society.

He said publicity surrounding the event "has put us on the map." St-Martin also said media coverage increased the society's public profile to the point that corporations will be more likely to contribute to its fund-raising campaigns.

St-Martin crawled into his cage at noon Thursday at Sherbrooke's Carrefour de l'Estrie shopping centre. He stayed there until just after 4 p.m. on Saturday.

With his time up, St-Martin said he decided to stay in the cage an extra few minutes. About 150 people gathered to see the end of the stunt.

"In five minutes," said St-Martin, "we collected $200 to $250."

The stunt marked the start of the society's financial drive. The society hopes to raise $200,000 for renovations to its Queen Street north animal shelter. The work would provide more room for animals, as well as office space.

Future fund raisers include two benefit brunches at Sherbrooke's Elks Club on Montreal Street, April 22 and 29. The group will also host a seafood supper May 25 at l'Auberge Royale.

Throughout the campaign, the society will have operators waiting to take pledges over the telephone. The number to dial is (819) 823-1235.

Murder: Tarzan behind bars

SHERBROOKE — Video game addict Jocelyn Roy will appear in court again today to face a charge of murdering single-mother Louise Laflamme by cutting her throat last weekend in the bush near St-Denis de Brompton.

Roy, 26, of Sherbrooke, was arrested Friday evening by Dets. Tom McConnell and Yves Houle of the Quebec Police Force Eastern Townships major crimes squad in Sherbrooke.

Saturday morning Justice of the Peace Léopold Fournier ordered Roy, whose nickname is Tarzan, back to Winter Street jail where he had been held overnight.

was found a week ago Sunday in a brushy field belonging to the Hell's Angels motorcycle gang near St-Denis.

After the body was identified Tuesday the detectives began tracing her activities during the last days of her life. She was apparently last seen the Saturday before her death at a video arcade on Wellington Street south in Sherbrooke.

WELL KNOWN

Piecing together her comings and goings, McConnell and Houle began to suspect Roy, a "regular customer" of local police and a well-known violent figure in the city's petty drug underworld.

ance and followed him for several hours before hauling in their net on Wellington south at about 9:30 p.m. on Friday.

About 25 QPF and Sherbrooke police took part in Roy's arrest.

Although they feel certain Tarzan Roy is their villain, police still don't know why. They say victim Laflamme, 33, was not known to frequent the same circles as Roy, who spent most of his time hanging around downtown pool halls and game rooms.

Police say the Angels aren't involved despite owning the spot where Laflamme was killed. An old club sign marking the land has since been removed.

Old Orchard: Brome Lake man dies during motel burglary attempt OLD ORCHARD BEACH, Me. (AP) — An Eastern Townships man dropped dead in his motel room here after a burglar intruded Saturday night, and a 19-year-old man was later arrested on burglary and theft charges, Maine state police said Sunday.

Police may charge the man with homicide as well, a spokesman said.

A burglar entered a Concorde Motel first-floor window late in which Knowlton barber Tyler Crandall, 45, and his wife, Donna, were sleeping, said state police spokesman Stephen McCausland.

As the burglar entered, Crandall's wife "awakened, saw a man coming in and screamed," McCausland said. Her husband got out of bed, collapsed and died.

The burglar fled.

Crandall's body was taken to a Biddeford hospital for an autopsy.

called in along with the state attorney general's office, which investigates possible homicides.

Adrien Veilleux, 19, of Buxton, Me., was arrested early Sunday after two other burglaries were reported at a condominium only blocks from the motel.

Police called to the scene and using a tracking dog arrested Veilleux seven blocks away, McCausland said.

Now that I've learned to say "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle", I think I know what the first part means. In fact, I've become suspicious that mutants are inhabiting my house.

Suddenly I find myself living with a cross between David Suzuki and Farley Mowat.

Every time I take out the furniture polish, I have to prepare for a lecture on the fragility of the ozone layer.

I dare not lift a styrofoam cup to my lips or comment on the cute babies in the Pampers commercial for fear of recrimination.

No more Friday nights at McDonalds for this family. Ronald McDonald, that big friendly clown, has been black-listed for his continued use of non-biodegradable foam products. (Anyone who has ever eaten a Big Mac would have suspected that). The new lingo around the house includes such buzz words as biodegradable, recyclable, environmentally safe, and of course, natural.

My junior league Greenpeacer brought home a list of rules for an environmentally safe house prepared by our own federal government which I am to take with me on my weekly pilgrimage to the grocery store. I am to leave at the store all plastics and pollutants, all aerosol sprays, all fruits and vegetables known (by kids) to be chemically treated.

These strapping teenage mutants of mine have discovered an even better excuse to avoid putting out the garbage. I shouldn't be adding to the world's supply of garbage, I'm told. I should be writing (on recycled paper) to my town council and encouraging them to begin recycling programs. Besides, I'm told, I have too much "stuff".

Mothers know inherently they are responsible for everything from the smell of egg sandwiches emanating from the locker, to vinyl letters which melt on shirts in the dryer. But is it reasonable to lay responsibility on us for the state of the world's waterways and the rain forests too?

Probably yes. If I could sit on the patio without fear of being zapped by sun rays, or if bottled water weren't a fact of life, I'd most likely discount their concerns. But I can't help thinking that if my generation had been as environmentally conscious as today's young people, we might not be in the mess we're in today. The very least we can do is help them clean it up.

Now where does the ninja turtle part come in?

Easter: Pope praises move to democracy

VATICAN CITY (AP) — In his Easter message, Pope John Paul II paid tribute to the thirst for freedom that toppled dictatorships last year and said he hoped Lithuania can achieve independence through dialogue.

Celebrating the holiday elsewhere, East Germans and Romanians sang hymns of joy for the freedom won by their pro-democracy revolutions.

In Soviet Ukraine, Roman Catholics in Kiev were allowed to legally perform Easter services on Sunday for the first time in 44 years.

In Sunday's message, the Pope declared that man's "true dimensions of the spirit have been discovered anew" after two bloody world wars and "years of dictatorships which have deprived men and women of their basic freedoms."

After the noontime message from a balcony overlooking St. Peter's Square, the Roman Catholic leader spoke in Lithuanian, saying: "In the name of Jesus dead and risen for all men, we ask for peace for our children in the dear Lithuanian nation, while we hope that their aspirations find confirmation in a respectful and comprehensive dialogue."

Cheers went up from a crowd of 100,000 faithful and tourists in the square, where the Pope earlier celebrated Easter mass in front of St. Peter's Basilica. His message on Lithuania is the latest attempt by the Vatican to help ease tensions between Moscow and the Baltic republic, which declared itself independent on March 11.

ENVOY RECEIVED

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, reported that a Soviet envoy received by the Pope on Saturday delivered a message from President Mikhail Gorbachev about the crisis in Lithuania, where four out of five people are Catholic. The contents of the message were not disclosed.

The Vatican opened diplomatic relations with Moscow in March. Earlier this month, the Vatican's newly appointed envoy to the Soviet Union said the Holy See would be willing to mediate the Lithuanian dispute.

In his speech, John Paul gave holiday wishes in 55 languages. The longest greetings went to Lithuania and his homeland, Poland.

In Romania on Sunday, tens of thousands of worshippers sang ancient hymns in packed churches across the country in an emotional celebration of their freest Easter in more than four decades.

East and West Germans poured through their border in both directions and packed churches.

Thousands of Germans took to the streets for traditional Easter peace marches. For the first time ever, peace activists from both West and East Germany joined together for the anti-war rallies and demonstrations.

Numbers: Less marriage, more divorce

By Bob Cox

OTTAWA (CP) — Fewer marriages and more divorces. Fewer children and more working mothers.

It's all changed the traditional family in our society, right?

Not quite, says a Statistics Canada study.

Although their makeup is changing, most families still fall under the general description of mom, dad and the kids under one roof, says a study of trends in the family released Wednesday.

Mom may be divorced from her first husband and holding down a job. There may be just one child. Dad may not be the biological father, and mom and dad may not even be married.

But the base of so-called traditional families remains, and apparently recent developments straining our social fabric in unfamiliar ways aren't all that new, the report says.

For example, 87.3 per cent of Canadian families — 6.7 million — were headed by a man and a woman living together in 1986. That compares with 87.8 per cent — 2.5 million — in 1941.

That means the percentage of single-parent families has risen only slightly over the past 50 years, though the number of such families has jumped to 854,000 from 347,000 in 1961.

MORE STABLE

The report adds Canada has been slower than some industrialized countries to embrace new lifestyles — 44 per cent of Swedish women aged 20-24 live in common-law unions compared with 11 per cent of Canadian women the same age.

Compared with the Swedish, Canadians are more likely to marry, do so when they're younger and are less likely to divorce.

"Canadian family patterns appear to have been more stable when compared with other industrialized countries," the report says.

But it adds there are significant changes:

- Between 1961 and 1986 the number of children in one-parent families rose to 1.2 million from 500,000, increasing to 14.4 per cent of all Canadian children from 6.4 per cent. The number of children in husband-wife families was 6.7 million in 1986, compared with 7.3 million in 1961.

- The main reason for single-parent families has changed from death of a spouse to divorce. The percentage of single-parent families headed by divorced people jumped to 30 per cent from three per cent between 1951 and 1986.

- The number of marriages fell to 176,000 in 1986 from 182,000 in 1969. The number of divorces rose to 78,000 from 26,000.

- The number of unwed mothers has risen. In 1986, 160,000 children lived with mothers who had never married. Births to unwed women climbed to 42,000 per year by 1986 from 29,000 in 1975.

- One in 12 families consists of a couple that is not married.

- The average size of families has fallen to 3.1 from 3.9 people in 1961. The birthrate has dropped to 1.7 per woman from 3.8.

- In 1986 about 1.9 million people lived alone compared with 425,000 in 1961. The number of people 65 or older living alone has jumped to 680,000 from 173,000 and 77 per cent of them are women.

- The number of working women reached 5.6 million by 1986, double what it was in 1961.

- Women are delaying or not having children. In 1986, 26 per cent of women in their 30s who gave birth were first-time mothers, up from 12 per cent in 1970. About a quarter of women aged 15 to 44 haven't had children compared with 14 per cent of women in the same age group in 1961.

Canada desperately needs a statesman

Sir:

After too many years of force-feeding the Québécois a mixture of fear, hate and distortion of facts, it is all too clear that many of this province's self-serving politicians are coming dangerously close to taking La Belle Province out of Confederation.

An idiotic, vain adventure that could inflict a lethal blow to Canada and one that certainly will impose an unjust, giant step backward on their own people. Pawns who have not long rid themselves of one oppressive yoke, are herded into another.

Let us hope that the Mulroney circus, devised secretly in the middle of the night at a lake called Meech, in Quebec, has unleashed nothing more than traditional Québécois sabre rattling.

We would be less than vigilant if we overlooked the fact that the prime minister's labor negotiation tactics are not how a country is pulled together; it is how a country is destroyed.

For the good of Canada, we demand Mulroney and Bourassa come down off their high horses before the baby is thrown out with the bath water.

In the event that their pride and selfishness overshadows reason, it would be wise to keep in mind a well known motto, "Be prepared".

Should short-sighted individuals succeed in dismembering Quebec from a healthy body, hundreds of thousands on both sides of the linguistic fence would seek a viable alternative to living in a foreign environment. Separation will not come cheaply for the new country that many are pursuing.

Two choices could be considered.

1. Annexation to Ontario.
2. The creation of a new province.

Either proposition would start at the Ontario border west of Montreal, go east taking in that city, part of the Laurentian resort area and all of the Eastern Townships; with access to the maritime provinces and the Atlantic ocean by land and water.

Take all the words that have been voiced and written about Meech, separation, language, minorities, fair and unfair treatment that cry out for a solution, reduce them to a concentrate and the answer will be... Canada despertely needs a statesman to pull this great country together.

As sure as the sun rises in the East, he's there. It's up to us to find him.

A uniform is not a uniform unless it is uniform...

Editor,

Just another brief word to Ashley Sheltus about turbans in the RCMP. Since I consider a uniform is not a uniform unless it is uniform; and since Ashley seems to believe that sheiks should be allowed to wear turbans in the RCMP; the only way to make us both happy would be for the whole RCMP to adopt the turban as proper head-dress.

They, and Our Brianny; being Canadian to the core; would most likely agree. However, since the turban is a symbol of religion (or caste?) I doubt that that solution would be acceptable to our good immigrants.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

The Sheiks of Arabia do not wear turbans. The Sikhs of India do.

Quite an insult to women

Dear Sir:

I have heard one too many ads for products "for the working woman". We have shoes for the working woman, clothes for the working woman, even recipes for the working woman. This implies something very sinister — that there exists a non-working woman, who is therefore not in need of classy clothes or labor-saving devices.

This is quite an insult to women. We would not dare advertise some stores as for white women only or for anglophones only. So how can we advertise products for "working women" only? Who is excluded?

Obviously, the housewife. She is apparently viewed by such ads as beneath the advertisers' interest. And that just shows that women's lib still has one hurdle to leap. We have to object when any of our members are insulted, and until homemaking is seen as viable, valuable working role, we have not yet done what Nellie McClung set out to do — to give dignity to us all.

Yours truly,

Charter: Stronger rights or 'straightjacket'?

By John Ward

OTTAWA (CP) — Since it became the law of the land eight years ago today, the Charter of Rights has been praised as a repository of freedoms and vilified as a shield for criminals.

A thin spring drizzle was falling on Parliament Hill when the Queen signed the document that patriated the Constitution and gave life to the charter. The section of the charter dealing with equality rights only came into effect five years ago.

Before the charter was entrenched as the basic law of the land, rights and freedoms were based on precedent and common law, the collected wisdom of years of legal decisions. Now, basic rights are defined.

Between 1982 and 1985 the provinces introduced legislation to bring laws into conformity with the equality provisions of the charter, which ban discrimination on the basis of race, national or ethnic origin, color, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

However, the provision does allow for programs designed to ease the plight of those who have been the target of discrimination — affirmative action programs, for instance.

The courts, especially the Supreme Court of Canada, have used the charter to change law.

CHANGED LAWS

The so-called reverse onus clauses in some laws, which required the accused to prove their innocence of a charge, have been erased.

The Supreme Court threw out the abortion law.

The court struck down "constructive murder" statutes. Those laws held that people could be convicted of murder if they took part in a crime in which someone was killed, even if they themselves had nothing to do with the death.

The high court also erased the federal Lord's Day Act, saying it imposed a religious holiday in violation of freedom of religion.

Judges have kept a sharp eye on police procedures to ensure they follow the charter protections against unreasonable search and seizure. Courts have dismissed cases in which the Crown tarried too long in going to trial.

The charter has been a challenge for judges. Brian Dickson, who earlier this month announced his retirement as chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, was praised for his charter work.

"He was insistent that the court interpreted the charter and didn't write law," said John Jennings, president of the Canadian Bar Association. "I think he kept the court within bounds."

"It's a matter of construing what the law says," Dickson himself said. There are those who chafe at some charter decisions.

"No longer do the elected members of Parliament and the legislatures have the right to create offences as they see fit, with only public interest in mind," said a brief to the Ontario

Supreme Court in a constructive murder appeal.

Brian Smith, the former British Columbia attorney general, has complained the Supreme Court weakened criminal law: "We cannot afford to get into the procedural straitjacket in which the U.S. became trapped because of judicial decisions."

Some police, lawyers and judges say the charter protects the guilty and frees them over technical violations of their rights.

Serge Kujawa, the Saskatchewan Crown attorney who successfully prosecuted politician Colin Thatcher for murder, says police are disillusioned: "They think their hands are tied."

Even supporters of the charter say people must still be wary of their liberties.

"The charter should not be viewed as the last word on civil liberties, but only as a weapon in their promotion," says Alan Borovoy, general counsel of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association.

GM: Ste-Therese may get new order

By Allan Swift

MONTREAL (CP) — The General Motors assembly plant at nearby Ste-Therese, a major employer whose future has been in jeopardy, will be granted two new models to build, says an industry analyst, although a GM spokesman refused to confirm it.

"It's a bit premature to make such a statement," said GM official Marc Osborne Monday, commenting on a published report that GM will move production of the Camaro and Firebird to Ste-Therese from California.

A New-York based auto analyst also said Monday that GM plans the production move.

Osborne acknowledged that the possibility of Ste-Therese getting the contract and a new lease on life improved when the union agreed last week to certain concessions.

He said the union at Ste-Therese ratified by 88 per cent last Thursday changes to its labor agreement "to adapt the workforce to the 1990s technology, and give us the flexibility to be highly productive, and in the running with all the other competitors."

Osborne said GM plans to make a new generation of Camaro and Firebird, redesigned completely, "and they're looking for a new plant to produce the next generation."

General Motors asked the Ste-Therese plant to submit a business plan, which it did. "The bid just went through another obstacle last week (with the labor agreement), but it's not completed."

MEET DEMAND

Currently, the plant makes the Oldsmobile Ciera and the Chevrolet Celebrity station wagon, mid-sized vehicles considered to be near the end of their market life. They are scheduled to be phased out at the end of 1991 but Osborne added, "as long as there's a demand for the cars we'll produce them."

In July production at the sprawling assembly plant will move to one shift instead of two, because of declining demand, and 1,700 out of a workforce of 3,600 will be laid off indefinitely. The laid-off workers get nearly full salary for up to a year in case they are called back.

Osborne said the labor contract with the Canadian Auto Workers local is not of a fixed duration and can be opened for re-negotiation at the request of either side.

Norma Pace, president of Economic Consulting and Planning Inc., of New York, which monitors the North American auto industry, said Monday in a telephone interview that GM has decided to continue the F-body (Firebird, Camaro) program, and "will proceed with a major redesign for 1993."

"As part of this project, output will move to the smaller Ste-Therese facility, with Van Nuys (Calif.) closing in late 1992. Long-range forecast calls for production of 155,000 units a year (at Ste-Therese)."

GM Canada president George Peapples said in February it would cost at least $100 million to retool the Ste-Therese plant.

I think people will react badly to the GST next January — Séguin

Provincial taxman warns of a revolution

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec Revenue Minister Yves Séguin is worried the federal goods and services tax could lead to a tax revolt.

"I'm afraid people aren't going to wake up to the GST until next January," Séguin said in an interview with Le Journal de Montreal.

"For the time being, there are speeches, but next January, when they discover that the GST hits their electricity bill and is applied to almost all their bills, I think they're going to react badly."

Séguin says that middle-class taxpayers are being forced to carry too much of the tax burden, while corporations are paying less.

Séguin says the GST as "a monstrous challenge" to the Quebec government, partly because of the difficulties associated with administering the tax, and because it further shifts the tax burden from business to individuals.

Séguin said that in 1961 taxpayers provided 31 per cent of government revenues and corporations 20 per cent. Today the companies provide 11 per cent of the revenues and individuals 44 per cent.

"It bothers me to see big companies hold a news conference to announce a fabulous deal worth many hundreds of millions of dollars in profit, and two weeks later they're bragging that they don't pay income tax."

"It's fine for them to tell me it's legal: I say, let's change the law."

DOUBTS THEORY

Asked if business investments don't also contribute to society in other forms, such as creating jobs, Séguin furrows his bushy eyebrows.

"Can we really say that a large part of business profits are plowed back into the economy as investments creating jobs? I doubt it," he said.

The fiscal regime should be revised, he said, not necessarily to make companies pay more taxes, but at least to ensure that the advantages they gain by not paying taxes "go to the benefit of the population as a whole."

Séguin believes Canadian governments should shift the tax burden to corporations, as the United States did in its last fiscal reform.

"Taxpayers are right to ask some serious questions," Séguin says.

"How can you trust the state when before a budget they say the government is finally going to slash its expenses and impose fiscal discipline, and then a week later they announce a museum here, a grant for a company there, as though money grows on trees."

Pepsico to concentrate on fast-food

ATLANTA (Reuters) — PepsiCo Inc., the giant food and beverage conglomerate, plans to spend $1.1 billion US in 1990 to expand its worldwide business with the biggest chunk of cash going to its booming fast-food restaurant system.

In its annual report to stockholders, PepsiCo said Saturday the expenditure "reflects strategies to expand international snack food capacity, increase soft drink vending presence worldwide and expand domestic pizza delivery operations."

The company said 40 per cent of its capital spending this year will be devoted to expanding the Kentucky Fried Chicken, Pizza Hut and Taco Bell chains with the rest split evenly between the Pepsi-Cola soft drink business and its Frito-Lay and Europe-based Smiths and Walkers snack foods.

Chairman D. Wayne Calloway said his company's focus for the new decade includes becoming "an even stronger player on a global scale."

"Although we've nearly tripled our international operating profits in the past two years, they still represent only 16 per cent of our total," Calloway said.

By contrast, Atlanta-based arch-rival Coca-Cola Co. generates more than three-fourths of its operating income from the lucrative foreign soft drink business, where profit margins are almost three times greater than in the costlier and more competitive North American market.

Executives of the world's biggest beverage firm have also detailed aggressive growth plans for their foreign business and estimated it would cost any competitor $100 billion to match their network. Coca-Cola beverages accounts for about 45 per cent of the $100 billion world retail soft drink market, according to industry analysts.

Last Monday, Pepsi-Cola announced a complex barter deal with Moscow aimed at doubling its bottling network in the Soviet Union that is valued at $3 billion over the next 10 years.

Financial analysts said the deal is unlikely to have much impact on PepsiCo's corporate profits for the next few years. But they added it marks a significant step for the No. 2 soft drink company to expand its presence in a major and largely undeveloped national market which is also one of the few in which it outsells Coca-Cola products.

Pepsi-Cola Co. has also announced plans to begin sales in India, whose new government recently rejected an application from Coca-Cola to re-enter a market it left in the mid-1970s rather than disclose the top-secret formula for its famous cola.

Cleaner air means bigger bills

By Scott White

NEW MADRID, Mo. (CP) — Visitors to the giant Noranda Aluminum smelter in this corner of rural Missouri are asked to check their watches at the door.

Credit cards and cameras are left behind as well, along with anything else that could be damaged by the powerful magnetic field that runs through the production facilities at the Canadian-owned plant.

The magnetic current — so strong it can pull a heavy metal bar from the hands of anyone within a metre of the molten metal — is produced by the massive power used in the electro-chemical process to make aluminum.

Noranda Aluminum's monthly power bill comes to $7.5 million US and it's bound to grow much bigger after changes to the U.S. Clean Air Act become law.

For several months, Congress has been debating a bill of amendments to the act — the main U.S. air pollution law — including the country's first acid-rain cleanup program. The bill already has been approved in the Senate and will be debated in the House of Representatives this month.

Most of the opposition to the bill has been over its potential economic impact and how the acid-rain provisions will put thousands of Appalachian coal miners out of work as power plants switch to low-sulphur coal from the western states.

They don't mine coal in this southeastern part of Missouri, but the Clean Air Act could have devastating effects here as well.

TWO-STACK PLANT

The two-stack power plant beside Noranda Aluminum will have to spend $500 million US on anti-pollution equipment to comply with the act's acid-rain regulations.

"What the electric companies do is just pass the cost straight off to the consumer, which is us," says Ralph Ebersole, Noranda Aluminum's vice-president of operations.

"We can't do that in the aluminum business because aluminum is sold worldwide as a commodity, just like soybeans and wheat. So who eats the loss in revenue? Noranda Aluminum."

Ebersole says Noranda Aluminum, a subsidiary of the Toronto-based Noranda Inc., has projected its electricity costs will rise 16 per cent — $1.2 million US monthly — if the Clean Air Act amendments go through as planned.

Higher costs mean lower profits, and lower profits mean less take-home pay for the 1,200 men and women who work at Noranda Aluminum, the area's major employer.

"It will affect our employees because at this plant ... we are on a profit-sharing program," says Ebersole. "So if we've got to pay more money for electricity, that's more money out of my pocket."

Gary Riley, a union official, estimates profit sharing accounts for $9,000 of a worker's average salary of $35,000.

Workers will also be hit by the rise in household electrical bills expected as a result of the Clean Air provisions.

Noranda Aluminum, which can make 225,000 tonnes of aluminum annually, has lined up with U.S. producers to complain the new pollution controls will give Canadian smelters a further competitive edge.

Figures from the Aluminum Association, a Washington-based industry group, say it costs U.S. smelters about 60 cents to make a pound of aluminum, while Canadian costs are only 47 cents. The main reason for the difference is cheaper electricity, which accounts for nearly one-third of production costs.

A recent study by the U.S. Bureau of Mines said smelters in Canada and other countries benefit from electrical rates U.S. power companies cannot match.

"In Canada, for example, provincially owned Hydro-Quebec has offered long-term, low-cost power as an inducement both to new smelters locating in Quebec, as well as existing smelters who undertake expansion," the report said.

Relish recipe late for Easter, but great with hot and cold meats

Perhaps too late for the Easter holiday left-overs but here is a relish that is delicious with most hot or cold meats, but particularly with baked ham.

COLD TOMATO PINEAPPLE RELISH

2 cups tomatoes, fresh or canned
1 bottle Certo (apple pectin)
1 cup canned crushed pineapple
2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
2 tablespoons cider vinegar
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon allspice
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
6 cups sugar

If using fresh tomatoes, scald, peel and chop. If using canned tomatoes, drain and chop. In a large saucepan, bring tomatoes to a boil, then simmer for 15 minutes. Add the pineapple, spices and sugar and bring to a boil. Boil briskly for 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and stir in the Certo. Skim off any foam that gathers on the surface and continue stirring and skimming for about 5 minutes.

This relish will keep as is in the refrigerator for several weeks covered, or it can be put in sterilized glass containers, topped with melted wax and stored for at least a year. For a smaller quantity the recipe can be cut in half.

Further ideas for leftovers: Leftover cooked ham: it may be sliced in a salad, diced with equal parts of chopped, cooked potatoes and sautéed in butter or oil; chopped and blended with hard boiled eggs and served in cream sauce on toast, etc. Leftover ends of ham can be ground twice in a food grinder then packed in a glass jar. If the top is sealed by pouring on a little melted ham fat this ham will keep for one or two months in the refrigerator and can be used for sandwiches or canapés. When the last scrap of ham is gone — just use the bone for added flavour to pea soup.

SCONES

8 ounces flour (self-raising or all-purpose)
2 heaping teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar (optional)
1 egg
½ pint milk

Sift dry ingredients together in a bowl. Beat the eggs and milk together in a separate bowl, then pour the liquid into the dry ingredients. Mix until very creamy. Drop small spoonfuls into greased muffin tins and bake at 450°F 10 to 15 minutes, or until well risen and brown. When done a knife tip inserted in the middle of a scone will come out clean. Split the scones in two and spread with farm cream (or butter).

Here is a nice salad dressing from my files.

1 cup mayonnaise
½ teaspoon dry mustard
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
½ cup finely chopped onion
½ cup finely chopped green pepper
½ cup chopped sweet pickles
¼ cup chili sauce
½ cup catsup
1 teaspoon paprika

Mix and refrigerate. Yield — one quart.

Here is another tempting cupcake recipe.

HALF AND HALF CUPCAKES

This will make just over 2 dozen

(or 28) cupcakes. Preheat oven to 350°F.
2¼ cups cake flour
1¼ cups sugar
3½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup vegetable shortening
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon almond extract
4 egg whites (½ to ¾ cup)
2 squares unsweetened chocolate (melted)
Sugar glaze or rich butter cream frosting

Sift flour, sugar, baking powder and salt into large bowl of electric mixer. Add shortening and ¼ cup of the milk. Beat at low speed ½ minute to combine ingredients, then at high speed for 2 minutes. Add remaining milk, almond extract, and egg whites and beat an additional 2 minutes. Divide batter in half. Stir chocolate in one half. Fill one side of paper-lined muffin cups with chocolate batter and the other side with white batter, filling half full.

Bake at 350°F for 25 minutes or until tops spring back when pressed lightly with fingertips. Remove from pans, cool on wire racks. Drizzle with sugar glaze or frost with rich butter cream frosting.

Sugar Glaze

Makes ¾ cup (enough for the 28 cupcakes)

1½ cups icing sugar
4 teaspoons corn syrup
4 teaspoons water

Combine ingredients in bowl over simmering water. Heat until smooth.

Rich Butter Cream Frosting

Makes 2 cups.

½ cup butter or margarine
1 egg yolk
1 lb. package icing sugar
3 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Beat butter with egg yolk in medium size bowl with electric mixer until soft. Beat in icing sugar alternately with milk and vanilla until smooth and spreadable. (Apologies to readers who clipped this last recipe when given some months ago.)

Divorced man leaves girl-friend, she feels like a 'fool'

Dear Ann Landers: I have just ended a relationship after two years and am looking for some answers.

"Lennie" is 41 and divorced, with a 13-year-old daughter who lives with her mother. From the start, I asked him if he would ever marry again. He said, "Yes." After a year of exclusive dating, I mentioned marriage. Lennie said his daughter was too unsettled and that he could not consider a commitment until things calmed down. Shortly after, his daughter and her mother moved to another state. I brought up marriage again on my birthday, when the expected engagement ring was not presented.

Finally, after much prodding, he said I did not meet his requirements. I was not a good enough cook, and he needed a woman with a better-paying job to ensure a higher standard of living. I was stunned and asked him why he hadn't mentioned my inadequacies earlier. He said he was waiting for me to grow up. (I am 33, Ann, have been working for 15 years and have never lacked self-confidence.)

Several weeks later, Lennie decided that "we weren't right for each other." Ann, I've never felt so cheap and used in all my life. Instead of being heartbroken, I feel like a damned fool. I can't believe I was so stupid.

How do I avoid making this same mistake again? Sign me -- PRIZE DUMMY, U.S.A.

DEAR FRIEND: You aren't a dummy. You were a little too trusting, and as the relationship evolved, you failed to recognize his stalling technique.

The day he told you that you weren't a good enough cook, and he needed a woman who could make more money, you should have walked him to the door and told him not to slam it on his way out.

View this relationship as your tuition in the school of experience and be more alert to women-users in the future.

Dear Ann Landers: Poor "E.R. of Fort Lauderdale." Like a great many others who have made the same mistake, she needs someone to give her the correct interpretation of that famous quotation from Shakespeare's King Henry VI, "The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers."

That statement was made by a murderous commoner named Dick the Butcher, a follower of the rebel, Jack Cade, a clothier who thought he could become the king if he destroyed all governmental buildings and killed all who stood in the way. Shakespeare meant this passage as a compliment to lawyers and judges who protect the people from tyranny and anarchy.

Countless media people do not understand this quotation, and I have written dozens of letters attempting to set them straight. Thanks for another opportunity. -- R.W.D., RALEIGH, N.C.

DEAR R.W.D.: Be my guest. The American Bar Association should love you.

Dear Ann Landers: My problem is one that millions of others must have, too. I've often wondered why no one has written to you about it. It's those tags that clothing manufacturers put in garments at the back of the neck. They irritate the skin, and when you try to rip them out, you tear the fabric.

Please tell me what to do about this. -- M.W.R., AUGUSTA, GA.

DEAR M.W.R.: I have received hundreds of complaints about those pesky tags. Customers should complain to retailers, and retailers should complain to the manufacturers. There is strength in numbers. Rise and revolt, folks!

DEAR READERS: Over the years, I have received thousands of letters from abused women. They all sound as if they were written by the same person. Small wonder. The patterns of abuse are similar. The responses are similar. The lies these women tell themselves are similar. Abused women share a paralyzing fear that keeps them locked into these tragic, self-destructive relationships.

Recently I saw a splendid health-oriented brochure put out by FDR Publications. It contains some information that I'd like to share with the millions of women who are being knocked around by their husbands and lovers. Here it is:

HE TELLS YOU: "You're not so bad off. We have a good life."

"You are really asking for it when you make me crazy like this. I don't get this way with anyone else. It's your fault."

Ann Landers

"Give me another chance. I'll change."

"If you leave, I'll find someone else who is better than you."

"I was drunk. I didn't know what I was doing."

"If you leave, I'll take the children. I might even kill you."

"You're so fat (or dumb or uneducated), I'm the only one who would put up with you. You could never get another man."

YOU TELL YOURSELF: "I can handle this, because a lot of the time he's OK."

"He's nice to everyone else. It must be my fault. If I can learn to do things right, he won't get mad."

"He'll change. He means it this time. I'm going to give him another chance."

"It's the drink (or drugs) that makes him behave this way."

"I'm so ugly (or stupid), no one else could love me. He's the best I can do. Being alone would be worse."

THE TRUTH IS: The way he treats you is despicable. It is not normal to be abused. He's going to keep beating on you as long as you permit it.

He doesn't abuse others, because it isn't safe. Nobody else would put up with it. You are the only one he can knock around.

Abuse is slow death. You were probably abused when you were young, so his cruelty seems normal. It is not normal. It is a hideous way to live.

He will never change until you make it clear that you will no longer put up with his abuse. Separating from him may make him get professional help.

He hits you, because he is a coward and a bully. If he drinks or uses drugs, that's another problem. It is not the reason he beats up on you.

When an abuser is faced with losing his victim, he will try to hang on any way he can. Threats and promises are his best weapons. Don't fall for this.

A typical abuser tries to separate his victim from outside support -- family, friends, people at work. Keeping you isolated is an effective ploy.

An abuser tries to destroy the woman's self-esteem and make her believe she can't live without him. Counseling at a women's center can help you understand this.

The most loving thing you can do is make your abuser responsible for his behavior. Separation is the only way to demonstrate that you will no longer put up with it. As long as you stay with an abuser, he will continue to dish it out, and this will go on until you are a total wreck -- or dead.

There IS help, dear readers. Call the Domestic Violence Hotline at 1-800-333-SAFE (7233). The hearing impaired can call 1-800-873-6363. You will be put in touch with a shelter in your area.

DEAR READERS: Have you changed your physician in the past five years, or are you thinking of changing? If you have changed, or if you are considering it, what are the reasons?

These questions were asked in a survey of residents near the U.C.L.A. campus, an area considered "upscale" in terms of education, occupation and economic status.

Eighty-five percent of those who responded said they had either changed physicians in the last five years or were giving it serious consideration.

The questionnaire revealed that the doctor's lack of competence was not a factor. What troubled the respondents was a lack of sensitivity to their needs and an inability to communicate.

Here are some typical responses that surfaced in the survey:

"I left the doctor's office feeling worse than when I came in, and that's not what I went in there for."

"I waited about two hours for my turn, and no sooner did I get into the doctor's office than he became involved in a long personal telephone call."

"I don't think the doctor understood what I was saying. He ordered a long series of tests even before I finished telling him my symptoms."

"The doctor lit a cigarette when he started to talk to me. I decided that anyone who had so little regard for his own health should not be entrusted with mine."

"My doctor had gained a lot of weight since our last meeting and looked quite fat. I had trouble taking him seriously."

"When my doctor told me what my problem was, he was so cold and indifferent I had the feeling that he didn't care whether I got well or not."

"My doctor sent me the bad news by registered mail. Maybe he wanted to make it easier on himself, but he certainly lost me as a patient."

"The prescription he gave me had some terrible side effects, and I had been given no warning whatsoever."

What you have just read is excerpted from one of the best books I've run across in a long time. The underlying theme is that what goes on in your head can have tremendous impact on what happens to your body. I have been a strong believer in this concept for a long time, and it has worked for me. I am convinced of its validity, because I have seen so many examples that have proven it is so.

The title of the book is "Head First."

The author is Norman Cousins, a professor in the medical school at U.C.L.A. The publisher is Dutton, and the price is $19.95. This book could be the best investment you've ever made in terms of staying well. You owe it to yourself to get it.

Jolly Seniors group enjoy sugar party

BURY (DA) — On Friday, March 30, the Senior Citizens of Bury and a few of their friends enjoyed a delicious dinner and sugar party at the Chalet Des Erables C.R. Inc. in the sugar bush just a short distance from Birchton.

Seventeen of our Jolly Senior members and seven friends were able to go by cars to the chalet and arrived there about 11:45 a.m. Several groups of school children were also there enjoying sleigh rides and sugar on snow, but our reservation was for 12 noon and our meal was served as soon as we were ready. The menu consisted of hors d'oeuvres, cabbage salad, buns, omelette, baked beans (cooked the old fashioned way), smoked ham, pickles, grits, home-fries (potatoes), pancakes and syrup served with tea, coffee or milk.

The food was plentiful and the waitresses filled the dishes as quickly as they were emptied and were very friendly and courteous, although they did not speak very much English.

Following the dinner, we rested for about an hour while some enjoyed a walk through the sugar bush, then went to the sugar house where everyone enjoyed the delicious sugar on snow which was served to us as long as we were able to clean it up off the snow. Many said it was the best sugar on snow they had ever tasted.

Before leaving for home, all thanked the kind people who had served us and returned to Bury about 3:30 p.m. rather tired, but certainly not hungry!

Magog & Area Birthday Club

On the first Tuesday in April, four club members travelled to East Farnham to celebrate the birthday of Bernice Thomas at her home where they joined with two more members and three invited guests. The group enjoyed hearty homemade soup served by the hostess with tasty sandwiches provided by Nellie Carriere and prepared by Betty Telford, who also delivered the delicious birthday cake, baked and sent by Winnie Rodney, and the raffle gift, supplied by Yvonne Whittier and won by guest June Royea.

The celebrant opened beautiful cards, including a birthday poem composed by Betty. Harriet Comeau then involved everyone in a fun card game, complete with prizes for all.

The May celebration will be that of Kitty Lowde, which will be decided at a later date when and where to be held.

Dear Bernice: It must be great to celebrate your Birthday in the spring When snowing stops and blossom pop and birds begin to sing.

With April showers to start May flowers and clean the countryside New buds and leaves on shady trees, where in winter they do hide.

When grass so green again is seen and happy bubbly brooks And trees are tapped for dripping sap and maple syrup to cook.

So Happy Spring, we hope it brings good wishes by the score For a Very Happy Birthday and many, many more!

Gerrit Van der Mark feted at retirement party

On April 7, 1958, Mr. John Visser and M. Gerrit Van der Mark moved into the former Dixville Baptist parsonage. They began what was to be known as the "Dixville Home for Special Children."

In 1974, Mr. Visser moved on, and is at present in charge of a Mission for underprivileged children in Sinisip, the Philippines.

Now, 32 years later, Gerrit Van der Mark is taking early retirement, effective February 23rd from Dixville Home Inc.

The evening of February 16, 80 former and present staff members and friends met at The Pub Restaurant at the Gorge in Coaticook to honor Gerrit on his retirement.

Marthe Lessard welcomed everyone at the door and all signed the guest book. Gerrit was invited by Gaetan and Mary Lessard to go out for dinner and they happened to arrive at The Pub. It was a much surprised Gerrit who entered to be met by many friends. When he had sufficiently recovered from the shock, he went around the tables and greeted each one.

Mr. John Dykstra, acting as M.C. for the evening, called the names of those who joined Gerrit at the head table, most of whom had worked in the early years of the Dixville Home, namely, Gaetan and Mary Lessard, Errol and Wilma Cushing, Stanley and Florina Drew, Wallis and Alice Bailey, Ruth and Miriam Nelson, Beryl Cutler, Gabrielle Beaton, Velma Sullivan and Frances Mayhew. The table was centred with a beautiful floral arrangement.

John welcomed Gerrit to his retirement party and traced his life from his years in Holland, to Canada and the present time.

The management of The Pub had prepared a sumptuous hot and cold buffet, which everyone enjoyed. Following the buffet, John asked Mr. Blokzyl of Welland, Ont. to propose the toast. Mr. and Mrs. Blokzyl were former staff members and later he expressed the pleasure they had found while working with Gerrit. On behalf of himself and his wife he presented an interesting book about Canada.

There was a time of spontaneous, hilarious, short anecdotes by Dorothy Ouimette, Alice Branchaud, Stanley Drew, Marja Buzzell, Cecil Mayhew, Velma Sullivan and André Chicoine, each one recounting stories of the good times, causing much laughter.

However, there was also a sombre trend, many realizing the learning experiences and good which has come from the Dixville Home; and to Gerrit for his dedication to that cause.

John Dykstra made a presentation and when Gerrit opened the box it revealed a humorous plaque with picture of a "happy face" and the words "Another plaque!" Joan Baldwin came forward and said "Well, now the real thing", and she presented the gift from co-workers and friends. It was a gold watch, engraved on back: "Gerrit Van der Mark, co-founder Dixville Home 1958-1990".

Gerrit was very pleased and responded appropriately, thanking everyone for the gift and saying how happy and touched he was to have so many friends present and to renew acquaintances, especially the Blokzyls, who had made the effort to come so far.

John Dykstra thanked Joan Baldwin and Velma Sullivan, Marthe and Estelle Lessard, Mary Lessard and Barbara Bellows for the hard work involved in all the arrangements for the party and they were applauded. It proved to be a great evening.

On leaving, everyone wished Gerrit the best in his retirement years.

During the evening, many pictures were taken and the official photographer was Pierre-Luc Chicoine.

Senior Citizens group hold meet and enjoy their sugar party

COATICOOK — It was the wearing of the green in honor of St. Patrick on March 28 when 68 members of Coaticook Area Senior Citizens met at L'Epervier for their annual sugar party.

President called the meeting to order with the new gavel which has been donated by Beryl Cutler and was hand-crafted by her late husband Herman Cutler.

We stood in memory of the late Mildred Laming who passed away March 19 and was a beloved member of this group.

President welcomed a visitor, Roberta Clark of Sherbrooke who was the guest of her mother, Genevieve Shepherd.

We were pleased to have Ruie Bellows and Beatrice Menard back after a period of ill health. Jill and John Smith had returned from Florida. Clarence and Ethel Davis were greeted.

Barbara Sharpe is working on a project for the CLSC compiling lists of names and the needs of seniors in this area. She presented one of her own paintings to President and Mrs. Beerworth.

Secretary read the minutes and Marguerite Luce gave the financial report.

Lillian Matthews had visited Olive Parker in Sherbrooke Hospital and others at the local hospital. We regret the illness of Florence Waldron who sent thanks for get-well card. Dorothy Martin reported everyone well in Compton.

Geraldine Peters, while there was no birthday cake, asked that we salute with the birthday song Regina Ross, Rachael Green, Jeanne Gagnon, Muriel Mosher, Clinton Bice and John Rodney. In April the birthday cake will be for the two months. Frank Peters was applauded for purchasing the syrup and preparing the snow for the party.

President called on Stanley Drew who gave a report on Mission Quebec — the Billy Graham Crusade, which takes place in Montreal June 3-10, reported Beatrice Grady, Program Committee.

Next month we will be returning to Sisco Memorial Church hall for our meeting at 1:30, April 25. We will be entertained by Sherbrooke Snow Shoe Club Choir.

A proposed bus trip to Manoir Clarenceville on Lake Champlain and names were listed for this tour.

The door prize was a set of book ends, won by Ethel Davis.

Lloyd Martin again generously donated two wooden plant stands for a raffle. Tickets were sold, winners being Eunice Paige and Lillian Matthews.

The Coaticook Hospital is asking for volunteers to knit or crochet lap throws for the patients there.

The business adjourned and Mrs. Violet Dionne of L'Epervier had prepared the sugar for the party. Sugar on snow, pickles, donuts and coffee were served. Everyone enjoyed the time of socializing together. President expressed thanks to staff of L'Epervier for the good service we have had during the winter months.

Double baby shower

WINDSOR — On Saturday afternoon, March 31, the home of Mrs. Clifford McCourt was the scene of a double baby shower, honoring Karen (Roy McCourt) and Diane (Patrick Massé). Relatives, neighbours and friends, numbering about thirty, were present.

Each lady thought the shower was for the other one so they were surprised to find two decorated chairs awaiting them. Pink and blue balloons, suitably inscribed "It's a Boy", "It's a Girl", and a helium filled walk-around stork were used to decorate the living-room.

A variety of pretty and useful gifts were received by each mother-to-be. These were presented by the younger folk, among them Stephanie Oakley, Kim and Tommy McCourt, Jennifer Enright, Michael and Shawn Boersen. When all of the gifts had been opened and passed around to be admired the guests-of-honor in turn voiced their thanks to all.

Delicious refreshments, tea and coffee, were served by the hostess assisted by her daughters, Raymonde McCourt, Muriel Perkins, Sheila Oakley and Karen Boersen. The prettily decorated shower cake was the artistic work of Roxanne Blinn.

Among the relatives attending was Karen's grandmother, Mrs. Rita McGee of Richmond.

Golden Age Club meets

MANSONVILLE — Golden Agers met at the town hall on Tuesday, March 27 for their usual noon luncheon. Twenty-four people enjoyed the meal of baked beans, pâté chinois, tossed salad, Johnny cake, beet pickles and sweet ones. These were furnished by the club, Verlie Aiken, George Hamelin, Mary Schoolcraft, Irene Carrier brought homemade doughnuts and Bertha Nichols had given molasses cookies.

March birthdays were celebrated and the birthday song was sung to Verlie Aiken (27th) and Bruce Nichols (21st). A card was signed for Verlie with thanks from all present. Verlie sees that we get some excellent meals every Tuesday. She looks after the kitchen detail and many hands help prepare these goodies with thanks to all from Verlie. The birthday cake was served with ice cream cups. Rita Mossa made the carrot cake and Iris Milroy furnished the ice cream. Their guests at the table were Thelma Wilkins and Bertha Nichols.

Door prizes went to Thelma Wilkins and Silvia Côté.

500 winners: (1) Toni Lamothe, (2) Cecile Hamelin; (1) Jerry Carrier; (2) Dolores Champagne.

Game winners: Mildred Atyeo, Juliette Laliberte, Dot Woodard, Thelma Wilkins, Lina Tomuschat, Kate Newell, Mary Schoolcraft, Flora Drouin, Rita Mossa, Porter Knowlton, Iris Milroy and Julieanne McDuff.

One dinner was sent out and two more members joined the group after dinner, total attendance was 26.

Daisy A. Allison

Afternoon visitors at the home of Lionel and Daisy Allison recently were Aleck and Myrtle Lancaster of Bishopton. They enjoyed a few games of cards during the afternoon as well as a pleasant visit. Mrs. Alta Fowler of Lennoxville was also a supper and afternoon guest at the Allison home that day.

Mrs. Mabel Thompson accompanied her granddaughter Miss Patty Bilodeau to Sherbrooke where they were joined by Mrs. Fern Lapointe and all enjoyed a day of shopping.

Mr. and Mrs. Lionel Allison were among those United Church members from Sawyerville and Birchton who went to Magog on the evening of March 19 to meet our new Moderator, the Rev. Sang-Chul Lee and hear him speak. The church was filled and everyone enjoyed hearing the messages and humorous happenings which the Rev. Lee had to tell us. A very tasty lunch was served in the church hall following the service.

We are sorry to hear that Mrs. Violet Ross and Miss Melissa Lowe have not been feeling as well as usual lately and had to be hospitalized. All their friends and relatives hope they will be much better soon and able to return home.

We are hearing so much lately about saving articles to recycle and thanks to Mrs. Muriel Fitzsimmons I have been able to receive some addresses where the different items can be taken. We hope people will try to save all they can to be recycled and help to improve our environment for future generations.

The following are the addresses I have been given:

Paper — newspapers, cardboard, junk mail, telephone books, computer paper and books: Address — Eglise (Church) St. Raphael, Main St. here in Bury. Put your bags or boxes in the garage between the manse and the nuns' residence. (I think this is only for people in Bury and the surrounding areas).

Glass and Plastic — washed containers with no covers. Address — Recycle Orford, 100 Talbot St., Sherbrooke, Que., Tel. 564-4666.

Non-ferrous Metals — copper, brass, aluminum, lead, nickel, also steel accepted. Address — Recupération Centre Estrie Inc., 575 Des Forges St., Sherbrooke, Que., Tel. 569-2212.

Aluminum includes: foil food-wrap, TV trays, pie tins, ice cube trays, aluminum siding, storm doors, windows and gutters, lawn furniture and some cans.

Abbotsford

Four famous doctors are quoted as saying there is no reason for using animals in medical research

Like the animal-rights people who are so militant today I am bitterly critical of the way we subject untold thousands of laboratory animals to suffering and misery.

In particular, I deplore the liberties given to college students in the various psychology and biology courses to do almost anything they wish with an animal so long as it enables them to complete a thesis or an experiment.

I am even more revolted by the cosmetic firms who use animals to make sure that the products they offer to titillate human vanity are relatively safe for us to buy — concentrating the irritants in a shampoo for instance, and squirting ever increasing quantities of it into the eye of a dog or a guinea pig often until the animal is blinded.

But I am convinced that to place a total ban on the use of such animals for laboratory experimentation — and I see by the current issue of "Conscience" published by the Canadian Vegans for Animal Rights that there is an increasingly powerful agitation to do that very thing — would be a tragedy for the whole human race.

A few years ago, I inherited my father's Bible, one he had inherited from his mother. On the first few pages of this venerable volume had been inscribed the brief outline of the family history.

Since neither of my grandparents could read or write, the entries must have been made by a neighbor, and the first one reads "W.H. Green, born May 24, 1845". Immediately below this entry I see "Mary Ann Gilder, born August 30, 1854".

These were my grandparents on my father's side, and now follows the names and birthdates of their progeny. I see that 13 were born to them and that 11 survived to maturity. I also note that my grandmother was married when she was only 15.

What this old Bible does not record is that she ran away from a good Christian home to get married and that the first parson they located to perform the ceremony, refused to do so and told my grandmother that she was a bad girl who ought to go home and ask for her father's forgiveness.

But on another flyer of this old Bible, I am given evidence that had she obeyed that parson's stern advice, she probably would have had but a few more years to live, because here I read that back in Mary Ann's home her two sisters and her mother succumbed to diphtheria within a few days of one another.

The record reads: "Alis, die decembre 30, 1876. Sarah die dec 31, 1876. Mother die January 24, 1877".

The Bible was, of course, not the place to record the choking agony of those deaths, or the utter helplessness of the doctor, or the burials which had to be done immediately and without funerals.

Nor does it tell us how my grief-stricken great-grandfather set fire to his cabin and burned it to the ground after the last of those burials lest the dread disease claim still more victims.

Paul de Kruif, the great medical historian, tells us that when Emil Behring and Emile Roux finally gave the world the first diphtheria anti-toxin in 1891, their desperate search had cost the lives of several thousand guinea pigs.

And, much as I like these beautiful little creatures, I can feel no anger over the fact that so many of them had to die so that the children of the world would henceforth be spared the unspeakable cruelty of diphtheria.

And the struggle to vanquish diphtheria was by no means the only instance where man took advantage of the loveable guinea pig. Noguchi infected more thousands of them in his historic fight against yellow fever, the terrible plague which was to kill him too before the final battle was won.

Robert Koch and Louis Pasteur, Europe's most successful microbe hunters of a century ago freely added mice, rats, rabbits and cats to their laboratories. In their effort to conquer anthrax they even sacrificed dozens of sheep, while at the same time on this side of the water Alexander Graham Bell was using some of his Nova Scotian flock to test the machine he had invented to resuscitate drowning victims.

It was laboratory dogs which enabled Banting and Best to discover insulin; and in our own time it was our experiments on dogs which first convinced us that organ transplants were possible.

Then in 1909 came the dramatic news that in Vienna Karl Landsteiner had been able to infect monkeys with polio and that in such monkeys the sickness had the same effects that it had in children. And suddenly it was the monkey which was drafted to join in our fight against this hideous disease that struck down so many of our youth and condemned them for life to be crippled, deformed or bed-ridden.

An Asian monkey cost $8.00, a lot of money in those days, and so many were needed that research teams often had to give up for lack of funds. But in 1932 the Americans elected a president who had been a polio victim, and the war against the disease soon became a well funded national affair. According to Paul de Kruif's book "The Fight for Life" the monkeys now died for us like white mice. No one knows how many, he says, maybe a million or more.

But at long last in the '60's we were finally able to control the enemy with the Salk and Sabin vaccines.

Seems however that the animal rights people don't believe that any of this really happened because in the Winter Edition of "Conscience" I see that four allegedly famous doctors are quoted as declaring that there is no valid reason for using animals of any kind for medical research. One of them, Dr. Vernon Coleman, an M.D. who is hailed as the author of 30 medical books says "I cannot think of a single major breakthrough that was produced as a result of an animal experiment."

As I sat down to write this I read that quote to my own doctor who merely reminded me that we also have newsworthy people who still insist that the holocaust never really happened.

One round too many

By James Jacoby

How paradoxical that early bridge lessons teach us to draw trumps to prevent the defenders from making their trumps separately, and then a little later we learn there can be many good reasons not to take out trumps too quickly. North held cards that rubber bridge players dream about, but the deal happened in tournament competition. After West had opened one club and North doubled, there was no scientific method for North to show his strength when South bid one heart. So North cue-bid clubs and then jumped to six hearts. That was reasonable, unlike declarer's play.

South ruffed the club lead in dummy and then played A-K of hearts. He could still make the slam by ruffing a spade and taking a diamond finesse, but he elected to play A-K and ruff a diamond. When East showed out on the third diamond, declarer was a trick short. He could ruff two diamonds, setting up that suit, but was still left with a spade to lose in addition to the queen of trumps.

It is not hard to make 12 tricks. Declarer must play only one high heart. He can then play A-K and ruff a diamond, spade to the ace and another diamond ruff, and another spade to the king followed by a spade ruff. East cannot gain by ruffing early, since South will simply discard and can then draw the last trump before finishing his ruffing work. The reason declarer should not play two high rounds of trumps is that he may need to ruff three times in his hand.

James Jacoby's books "Jacoby on Bridge" and "Jacoby on Card Games" (written with his father, the late Oswald Jacoby) are now available at bookstores. Both are published by Pharos Books.

Portugal's Mota sets new Boston record

BOSTON (AP)—Olympic champions Gelindo Bordin and Rosa Mota both made history Monday by becoming Boston Marathon champions.

Bordin won the men's marathon, becoming the first Italian and first Olympic champion to accomplish the feat. Mota, of Portugal, ran away with the women's race for her record-setting third Boston Marathon victory.

Bordin did what nine other men's Olympic champions failed to do by overtaking Tanzania's Juma Ikangaa at Heartbreak Hill and winning in two hours, eight minutes and 19 seconds. It broke the Italian mark of 2:09:27 Bordin set in finishing fourth at Boston in 1988.

"It is not easy being an Olympic champion," Bordin said. "For three or four months, I couldn't move without people stopping me — at a restaurant, on the road, everywhere."

He's about to become even more well-known. The race was broadcast live in Italy, with the announcers screaming as Bordin covered the final yards.

It was the third straight time Ikangaa finished second at Boston. He finished 1:33 behind Bordin, in 2:09:52.

Rolando Vera of Ecuador was third in his marathon debut in 2:10:46, a South American record. Peter Maher of Thornhill, Ont., was the top Canadian in 2:15:25 for 13th.

Mota, who also won at Boston in 1987 and 1988, led the women's division the entire way, finishing in 2:25:24.

Mota, who finished 42nd overall, beat runner-up Uta Pippig of West Germany by nearly three minutes. Pippig finished in 2:28:03, while Maria Trujillo of Mexico was third in 2:28:53.

In the Masters division, John Campbell, 41, of New Zealand smashed the Masters world best, clocking 2:11:04 and finishing fourth overall. Campbell erased the mark of 2:11:10 set by New Zealand's Jack Fultz in 1974.

World bests also fell in the men's and women's wheelchair divisions.

Mousetapha Badid, 24, of France took more than six minutes off the previous men's mark, winning in 1:29:53. The first eight finishers also went under the mark of 1:36:04 set by Philippe Couprie of France last year at Boston.

In the women's wheelchair section, American Jean Gene Driscoll won in 1:43:17, also more than six minutes under the previous mark of 1:50:06, set by Connie Hansen last year at Boston.

But it was the stirring performance of the unconventional Bordin who most excited the crowd.

Running a smartly paced race, he let a group of African runners burn themselves out with a blistering early pace before making his move.

"They run crazy — 4:20 the first mile," Bordin said. "I understand it (is) impossible to win the race at that speed. I just run by myself, control my pace."

Bordin is one of 21 children and started running at 14 wearing oversized shoes. He ran his first marathon in 1984 and won the European championship. He also won the European title in 1986 and the Rome Marathon in 1987, was third in the 1987 world championships and third in the 1989 New York City Marathon.

This was his first victory since winning the Olympic gold at Seoul. He and Mota each collected $50,000 from the $350,000 purse.

Drug-taking athletes should have own category

TORONTO (CP)—The Olympic Games should be changed so drug-taking athletes and clean athletes compete in separate categories, a former world-class Canadian decathlete says.

"We're never going to get drugs out of sports, so why not deal with it this way?" says Bill Gairdner, who represented Canada in the decathlon at the 1964 Olympics in Tokyo.

"I know which of the events the athletes would like to compete in—the ones they can be proud of, the ones where the medals mean something."

"And I know the public doesn't like watching chemistry races."

The lanky, 49-year-old says the separate categories should not only be based on the use of performance-enhancing drugs, but also on whether the athlete receives a subsidy.

Gairdner says the clean category would be for drug-free athletes who aren't subsidized by the state and either go to school or have jobs. The other category would have no limitations.

"Athletes would give up drugs in a minute to compete in the first category," he says.

Once a national hurdling champion, the unassuming Gairdner is now a competitive cross-country skier, businessman, author and sometime sports administrator.

In his new book The Trouble With Canada, in which he discusses everything from health care to feminism, he outlines what he believes is wrong with amateur sports in Canada — too much bureaucracy, not enough achievement.

He also calls for a return to the days when drugs, politics and government money played only a minor role in international competition.

ON WELFARE

"Canada had champions before the government started funding sports and it will have champions if it stops," says Gairdner, who won a decathlon silver medal at the 1963 Pan American Games.

He finished 11th at the following year's Tokyo Olympics.

"We've created welfare athletes, wards of the state. I'd love to see us getting out of (funding sports) entirely."

Under the federal Sport Canada program, Canadian athletes with high world rankings are given monthly payments to cover living costs so they can devote themselves to training. Equipment, coaching and travelling costs are also paid.

But Gairdner says money doesn't necessarily produce medal-winning athletes.

Only 15 Canadian track and field athletes went to the 1964 Olympics, but the team won two medals — a silver in the men's 800 metres by Bill Crothers and a bronze in the men's 100 metres by Harry Jerome, he says.

Many of the others had respectable placings, although "not one of us was employed by the state."

About 70 heavily funded track and field competitors went to the 1988 Seoul Olympics. But they brought back only one bronze medal — for decathlete Dave Steen — plus the shame of sprinter Ben Johnson's disqualification for drug use.

Neither officials for Sport Canada nor the Canadian Olympic Association could be reached Monday for comment on Gairdner's proposals.

For his part, the former Olympian says it wouldn't bother him if Canada was to implement his ideas, only to have the country's drug-free athletes fall years behind the rest of the sports world.

"Sports is about personal achievement," he says. "Or at least it's supposed to be."

"Whatever happened to purity of purpose?"

Galarraga's walk scores Expos' winning run

By Terry Scott

MONTREAL (CP)—The Montreal Expos lead the National League in stolen bases, but it was their ability to walk around the bases that produced a 5-4 National League victory over the Philadelphia Phillies on Monday night.

The Expos, who have won three straight games, coaxed four walks from Philadelphia pitchers in the seventh inning, including a bases-loaded walk by Andres Galarraga that brought in the go-ahead run.

Montreal had entered the inning trailing 4-2 against Phillies starter Terry Mulholland. Spike Owen's first home run of the season sliced the margin to a single run and spelled the end for Mulholland.

Jeff Parrett, 0-2, the former Expo who had a 7.53 earned-run average against his ex-teammates last year, fared no better in his first 1990 appearance against them. He walked pinch hitter Mike Aldrete, allowed Delino DeShields to reach base on a bunt single and walked pinch hitter Larry Walker to load the bases.

Tim Raines's single tied the score 4-4, but the Expos failed to go ahead when DeShields was thrown out at the plate on the play by right fielder Von Hayes.

But Tim Wallach battled Todd Frohworth, the new reliever, for a walk, and Galarraga, at one time behind 1-2 in the count, was equally stubborn, finally watching a 3-2 pitch go wide of the plate, sending Walker home with the game-winning run.

Drew Hall, 1-1, earned his first victory as an Expo with 11-3 scoreless relief innings. After Hall yielded a one-out single to Charlie Hayes in the ninth, Tim Burke relieved but was greeted by pinch hitter Carmelo Martinez's single. Steve Frey was summoned and he induced Len Dykstra to rap into a double-play, notching his second save.

Dennis (Oil Can Boyd), the Expos starter, made his debut at Olympic Stadium. He worked five innings and allowed runs in each of the odd-numbered innings.

Tom Herr's double behind Dykstra's lead-off single got the Phillies a quick run in the first. Dykstra, with his sixth straight hit to start the season, led off the third inning with his first homer.

John Kruk's RBI single and a run-scoring double by Ricky Jordan gave the Phillies a 4-2 lead in the fifth, after sacrifice flies by Wallach and Galarraga had pulled Montreal into a tie in the fourth.

Expos notes: Otis Nixon got his first start of the season in centre field. Marquis Grissom was moved to right, replacing Larry Walker, who is hitting .150 and needed a rest because, Expos manager Buck Rodgers said, he is starting to fight the ball. . . Oil Can Boyd had entered the game undefeated in Canada, having a 1-0 record in three starts for Boston against the Toronto Blue Jays while pitching in the American League. . . Three umpires worked the game as Dutch Rennert was forced to return home because of a family illness.

Brewers 18 Red Sox 0

BOSTON (AP)—The Milwaukee Brewers recorded the largest shut-out in the club's history, pounding out 20 hits and beating the Boston Red Sox 18-0 Monday before a Patriots Day crowd of 35,478 in Fenway Park.

Dave Parker and Greg Brock had four hits each and Gary Sheffield, Edgar Diaz and Brock drove in three runs apiece. Milwaukee had nine doubles, one triple but no home runs.

Ted Higuera, 1-0, allowed two hits in 6 1-3 innings as he won in Fenway Park for the first time after five losses. Tom Filer and Dan Plesac finished the combined three-hitter.

Mike Boddicker, 1-1, gave up six runs and six hits in 2 1-3 innings and

B.C. Lions forced to wait for NFL draft

VANCOUVER (CP)—The B.C. Lions have made their pitch for Major Harris. Now it's the NFL's turn.

The star West Virginia quarterback flew home Sunday after a weekend workout for the CFL team. The Lions must wait until the National Football League draft next Sunday to see whether they have a realistic shot at signing him.

Head coach Lary Kuharich said he liked what he saw during the 45-minute workout Saturday.

"He's a prototypical professional quarterback whether it's in the CFL, NFL or any league," Kuharich said Monday. "He certainly has a strong, strong arm and a bonus of escapability. When he does run, he's like a big running back at 220 pounds plus."

Harris, 22, announced earlier this year he will forgo his senior year at college, making him eligible for the NFL draft. Some scouts predict he will be no higher than a middle-round pick because of his lack of height and the bumper crop of quarterbacks available.

The higher he goes, the less chance the Lions will have at matching the money offered by the NFL team that picks him.

STAR TREATMENT

The six-foot-one, 220-pound quarterback said he was impressed by Vancouver.

"I just came up here to feel things out, to meet the coaches and some players, to see what type of offence they run, to see where I would fit in and stuff like that," he said Sunday. "It felt good."

The Lions rolled out the red carpet for Harris, his fiancée and business representatives. They picked them up at the airport Friday in a white Rolls-Royce and took them sightseeing by boat Saturday. They also managed to squeeze in a tour of B.C. Place Stadium.

The Lions acquired the CFL rights to Harris last month from the Toronto Argos in exchange for veteran defensive James (Quick) Parker, a fifth-round draft pick in 1991 and future considerations.

Harris led West Virginia to a 25-10-1 record as starting quarterback. The Mountaineers played in bowl games each of his three years but lost each time.

He finished third in last year's Heisman Trophy balloting and fifth in 1988.

He is West Virginia's all-time career offensive leader with 7,334 yards including bowl games. He threw for 5,173 yards and rushed for 2,161 more.

Harris also holds the school records in total touchdowns with 59 and ranks second in touchdown passes with 41.

Baseball roundup

Dennis Lamp followed by allowing three runs and four hits in 1 1-3 innings. Rookie Dana Kiecker allowed four runs in 1 1-3 innings and Mike Rochford gave up four runs in 2 1-3 innings.

Every Milwaukee starter except Dale Sveum got a hit.

Baseball roundup

The Canadian Press

The 18 runs by the Brewers were one short of the team record, set against Boston on May 31, 1980. The 18-0 loss was one run short of the biggest shutout defeat for the Red Sox. Cleveland beat Boston 19-0 on May 18, 1955.

The major league record for the largest shutout was the Pittsburgh Pirates' 22-0 victory over the Chicago Cubs on Sept. 16, 1975. The American League record of 21-0 was set by the Detroit Tigers against Cleveland Indians on Sept. 15, 1901, and tied by the New York Yankees against the Philadelphia Athletics on Aug. 13, 1939.

Parker, who has hit safely in all five Milwaukee games, had three doubles and a single. Brock doubled twice and singled twice.

Higuera, bothered by injuries last year, allowed only a single by Ellis Burks leading off the fifth inning and a single by Tony Pena. He struck out three and walked four.

Greg Vaughn had two doubles and a single and two RBIs, while Diaz drove in three runs with three singles.

The nine doubles by Milwaukee were two short of the American League record set by Detroit against the Yankees on July 14, 1934.

Blue Jays 4 Orioles 2

TORONTO (CP)—In the first meeting of last season's down-to-the-wire foes in the American League East, the Blue Jays got better pitching, better defence and some timely hitting Monday to beat the Baltimore Orioles 4-2.

Toronto jumped to a 4-0 lead in three innings, as John Cerutti rebounded from the pelting he took from Texas last Wednesday — 2-3 of an inning, five runs, five hits. Against the Orioles, Cerutti permitted three hits, no runs and no walks.

Mookie Wilson had two singles and scored twice. George Bell and Kelly Gruber hit RBI singles and Greg Myers brought in another with a shallow sacrifice fly in the first three innings. The fourth scored when Bell bounced into a double play.

Cal Ripken reached the Sky-

Dome's second deck with a two-run homer off reliever Frank Wills in the sixth inning, halving the margin.

Last year, the story line had the Blue Jays winning despite themselves. The Jays had the superior talent, while Baltimore made the most of theirs, executing the fundamentals flawlessly and playing aggressive defence.

The Jays started the 1990 match-up by twice challenging the Baltimore outfielders and winning; in the field, Gruber, Fernandez and Fred McGriff pulled off the game's banner defensive plays.

In the field, Fernandez made backhand snatches of hard-hit grounders by Bob Melvin in the third and Cal Ripken in the fourth inning.

With Mickey Tettleton on third and one out in the second inning, Gruber picked up Stanley Jefferson's grounder, caught Tettleton leaning toward home and tagged him out. The third baseman nearly completed the double play but Jefferson beat the relay by a step.

In the eighth with Tom Henke on the mound, McGriff dove to his left to stab Mike Devereaux's scorcher and flipped to Henke for the out. Henke helped himself by catching Ripken's liner for the innings's final out.

Wilson singled, stole second and scored on Bell's single in the first. In the second, John Olerud walked, advanced to second and third on wild pitches by Jay Tibbs, and tagged from third on Myers' shallow fly. Left fielder Phil Bradley's throw came in 10 feet off line.

After Fernandez and Wilson singled to start the third, Gruber singled sharply to right. Jefferson's throw also came in off line and had to be cut off.

Jays Notes: Tom Henke recorded his first save, despite allowing the first two runners aboard in the ninth. . . After Fernandez singled with two out in the seventh, Baltimore called two consecutive pitchouts; Fernandez held and Mookie Wilson grounded out.

Mets 10 Cubs 1

CHICAGO (AP)—Frank Viola extended his scoreless streak to 13 innings and Howard Johnson doubled twice to drive in three runs as the New York Mets beat the Chicago Cubs 10-1 Monday.

Viola (2-0) struck out eight, walked none and allowed four hits before Alejandro Pena relieved and got his first save for New York. Viola had combined with John Franco on a five-hit shutout last week against Pittsburgh.

Mark Carreon drove in three runs with a two-run homer and an RBI single. Carreon and Mike Marshall had three hits apiece.

Monday's game was a makeup of a contest postponed by the owners lockout. The Cubs and the Mets begin a three-game series in New York today.

Local curlers deliver Easter egg to pal

By Bruce Macfarlane

LENNOXVILLE — All it took was a simple conversation back in late January to get things moving at the Lennoxville Curling Club.

Last New Year's Eve's unfortunate accident to longtime club member Al Edwards motivated four club members to do something for their pal, Al.

Edwards accidentally fell off his roof, leaving him paralyzed from his waist down.

The members sat around the club house one January evening sipping drinks and talking about raising some funds to revamp Edwards' van. They wanted to see the installation of a lift to raise and lower a wheelchair for Edwards.

That small talk turned into a $12,000 conversation.

A committee was formed to conjure the "Al's Pals Funspiel", an event which raised a total of $12,311.

For seven days starting on April 8th, people played for fun while they curled up a storm at the Lennoxville club.

Instead of the typical eight-end curling game, the "Al's Pal Funspiel" committee decided to decrease the number of ends by half, with one team throwing "yellow" stones and the other tossing "red" ones.

Only one winner emerging at the end — Al.

People walked in and out of the club's front door with smiles pasted from cheek to cheek. There wasn't a single form of competitiveness throughout the week's play.

MANY PARTICIPANTS

Over 200 people in 61 teams curled during the "funspiel". Nine area curling clubs participated in the event with 49 regular teams and 12 senior teams.

"Our intention is to help Al convert his van for suitable means of transportation," said longtime friend Gerry Cannon.

"This is coming from his friends," said Cannon Saturday afternoon. "This is not a charity, it's simply Al's pals."

"These are his friends," Cannon said while pointing around the Lennoxville club house. "We are his friends, this is what we all wanted to do for him."

Cannon started curling in the Townships in 1975. On his first team, Cannon ended up playing with Edwards.

"Al is an extremely competitive person," said Cannon. "But he is a very good loser, but he is highly competitive."

"Consequently, he has quite a bit of success because of that competitiveness," said Cannon. "He is always the first person to put out his hand after a game."

Cannon and Edwards continued their friendship off the ice. Both men at times could be found on the golf course, or doing other activities together.

GOOD FRIENDSHIP

Cannon remembered back in '75 when he was alone in his apartment for Christmas dinner and Al called him and invited him over.

"He's like a brother to me," said Cannon.

The committee expected the event to raise between seven and eight thousand dollars. Obviously, someone made a slight miscalculation.

"I'm absolutely over the moon," said Cannon after tallying up the final total of more than $12,000.

"We are elated as a committee," he said. "It's almost double what we expected."

In charge of publicity and the six committee members, Cannon delivered Al his biggest Easter egg ever on Sunday morning.

A huge card with the signatures of participants was presented to Al before a cardboard cheque with a total of $12,311 inscribed on it was handed over to him.

"He (Al) was surprised," Cannon said a day after his visit to Al's home.

"All we can do is thank the people that participated from curlers to donors," said Cannon.

Gerry Cannon launches a stone during the final game of the "Al's Pals Funspiel" Saturday afternoon.

Fred Richardson (left) and Bruce Macfarlane from The Record squad manage to smile after sweeping a stone into the house Saturday afternoon. Other Record team members were Grant Siméon and Thelma Wright.

Television officials deny Bowman's boycott

MONTREAL (CP) — A Hockey Night In Canada official denied reports Monday that hockey analyst Scotty Bowman boycotted a broadcast of a Montreal Canadiens play-off game in sympathy with ousted play-by-play announcer Dick Irvin.

Ron Harrison, executive producer for the show, said Bowman had asked for time off to attend to a personal family problem.

"He said he needed a week off," said Harrison.

Harrison said he would know next week if Bowman will return later in the playoffs. Bowman, who lives near Buffalo, could not be reached for comment.

Bowman did not show up for an Adams Division semifinal match Sunday night, when Montreal eliminated the Buffalo Sabres in Game Six of the best-of-seven series. John Garrett was flown in for the night from working the Edmonton-Winnipeg series.

Bowman, former Canadiens coach and former coach and general manager of Buffalo, had worked the Montreal-Buffalo series with Irvin. However, Irvin was replaced on play-by-play by Bob Cole, who had been working the Toronto-St. Louis series, after the Blues won in five games.

Cole took over for Game 5 on Friday in Buffalo.

Irvin, who had missed only one television broadcast of a Canadiens game since he started full time in 1967-68, refused a move to the No. 3 man in the booth in mid-series. He instead worked a local radio broadcast of the game.

Irvin, who moved from host to play-by-play when Danny Gallivan retired in 1984, is to return to the show with Cole and former coach

Harry Neale for Canadiens games in the second round, which starts Thursday.

Irvin said he last saw Bowman in Buffalo last Friday.

"He said he felt for me," said Irvin. "We've worked together for a long time."

However, Irvin was unaware of any gesture of solidarity from Bowman. He said Bowman has had family problems of late. Both of his parents have recently spent time in hospital in Montreal and his 18-year-old son David has been in a nursing home since birth.

Flyers dismiss Clarke after dismal season

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — General manager Bob Clarke was fired Monday by the Philadelphia Flyers following the NHL team's poorest season in 18 years.

"This afternoon I met with Bob Clarke and relieved him of his duties," Flyers president Jay Snider said at a hastily called press conference. "After much discussion over months, we had fundamental differences. We had the same goal — to win the Stanley Cup. We disagreed on how to do it."

"This is a very difficult and painful decision."

Clarke, the greatest scorer in Flyers' history, had been vice-president and GM since May 1984, following his 15-year playing career in Philadelphia. During his six years as general manager, the Flyers won three Patrick Division titles and two Wales Conference championships. They reached the Stanley Cup semifinals three times and the finals twice, losing to Edmonton both times.

But the team's regular-season performance has dropped each season since 1984-85, when the Flyers finished first overall before losing in the finals. This season, Philadelphia was last in the Patrick Division and ended up under .500 for the first time since 1971-72.

Clarke is the Flyers' all-time leading scorer with 358 goals and 852 assists for 1,210 points. He also recorded 42 goals and 77 assists in the playoffs, led the Flyers to their only two Stanley Cups, in 1974 and '75 and was inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame in 1987.

Snider said Clarke's contributions to the Flyers were immeasurable.

"His commitment and work ethic as a general manager were equal to that of Bob Clarke, the player... Bob will always be the ultimate Philadelphia Flyer."

He said no decision had been made about the status of coach Paul Holmgren, who was hired two years ago by Clarke when Mike Keenan was fired after getting the Flyers to the finals for the second time in three years.

Flyers' general manager Bobby Clarke received the axe Monday afternoon.

Canada's Yzerman dazzled West Germans

FRIBOURG, Switzerland (CP) — Rick Tocchet is ready to open his wallet for another chance to play on a forward line with Steve Yzerman.

"I'll buy him dinner, I'll buy him a Rolex, whatever he wants!" Tocchet offered as he towelled down after Canada's 5-1 victory over West Germany on Monday, the opening day of the world hockey championship.

Yzerman, the Detroit Red Wings' super centre, skated between the Philadelphia Flyers' Tocchet and Murray Craven and the line was an instant hit.

Yzerman opened the scoring and assisted on two Tocchet goals and one by Craven. Greg Adams also scored for Canada and his Vancouver Canucks teammate, goaltender Kirk McLean, made some huge saves in the early going to allow his team to grab a 4-1 lead in the first period.

"He's the ultimate hockey player," Tocchet said of Yzerman, who dippy-doodled his way around Germans as if coated in grease. "It's hard for me to believe he was cut from Canada's (1987) Canada Cup team."

"He's one of the best-kept secrets in Canada."

In other games, it was: Soviet Union 9, Norway 1; Sweden 4, Finland 2; and Czechoslovakia 7, United States 1.

Today, Canada plays the United States, the Soviets play the Germans, Sweden goes against Norway and Finland faces Czechoslovakia.

LEAVES OPENINGS

Canada used only 14 skaters against West Germany. Roster spots are being kept open for players being culled from teams eliminated in the first round of NHL playoffs.

Joe Nieuwendyk, Doug Gilmour, Theoren Fleury and either Al MacInnis or Jamie Macoun of the Calgary Flames and goaltender Sean Burke of the New Jersey Devils are on their way.

"It's great to get this first win," said head coach Dave King. "This one had all the makings of an upset given that the crowd was mostly German and the fact that the Germans are very much the underdogs in this tournament."

"But the guys had a great first period and didn't give the Germans a lot of opportunities after that."

Yzerman downplayed his outstanding performance.

"Both Rick and Murray are big guys who go for the net and we worked well together," he said. "I just hold onto the puck and wait for them to get open."

"It's a treat to play with them." Defenceman Paul Coffey, who wore the captain's C on his jersey, took the hardest hit of the night when he collided with Pittsburgh Penguins teammate John Cullen. Coffey sat in the dressing room for the last three minutes of the second period but was back on the ice for the third.

"I'm a little stiff," he said afterwards. Coffey had a great game. Despite a sore hamstring, his repeated rushes up the ice with the puck kept the Germans reeling.

"It was a good effort but it's got to be better, that's all," he said as he looked ahead to the rest of the schedule.

Veteran defenceman Rick Green, the former Montreal Canadian who played in Italy last winter, was another tower of strength on the blue line.

"We've adapted pretty well in a short time together," he said. "Dave King gave us a system to play and hopefully, we'll progress as the tournament goes along."

Notes: Defenceman Gord Murphy of the Flyers sat this one out... Harold Kreis of Winnipeg, who has dual citizenship, played for West Germany... Cullen, Adams and Mark Recchi of the Penguins formed a line, as did Philadelphia's Keith Acton and Ron Sutter and Detroit's Shawn Burr... Team USA asked centres Joe Mullen of the Flames and Ed Olczyk of the Toronto Maple Leafs to fly over but they declined... The Americans are hoping to pick up Joel Otto and Paul Ranheim of the Flames and Sabres Phil Housley.

Sher-Habs advance to AHL divisional final

HALIFAX (CP) — The Sherbrooke Canadiens advanced to the Northern Division final in the American Hockey League with a 6-2 victory over the Halifax Citadels Saturday night.

The Canadiens won the best-of-seven Northern quarterfinal 4-2 and now await the winner of the other quarter-final between the Springfield Indians and Cape Breton Oilers. Springfield now leads that series 3-2 and the next game is scheduled for Tuesday.

Tom Chorske, Norman Desjardins, Benoit Brunet, Mario Roberge, Serge Roberge and Dans Woodley scored for the Canadiens, who thoroughly outthrustled the home team from start to finish.

Brent Severyn and Ladislav Tressl scored for the Citadels, who were outshot 37-34 in front of 6,287 fans.

Sherbrooke goaltender Jean-Claude Bergeron picked up his fourth win of the series against no losses. Halifax goalie Scott Gordon, who played every game, could not be blamed for the loss.

Oilers 8 Indians 7 (OT)

SYDNEY, N.S. (CP) — A goal by defenceman Chris Joseph at 8:44 of the first overtime period gave the Cape Breton Oilers an 8-7 win over the Springfield Indians and kept their playoff hopes alive here Saturday night.

Joseph whistled a drive into the far corner after rushing the puck from his own zone to give the Oilers their second win in the scheduled best of seven AHL Northern Division semifinal. Springfield leads the series 3-2 with the sixth game to be played Tuesday in the Massachusetts city.

Joseph's goal ended a shootout that saw Springfield race back on two different occasions. They trailed Cape Breton 5-0 at the end of the first period and 6-4 at the end of the second.

Cape Breton built a 7-4 lead with the first goal in the third period but three goals by Springfield in a five minute span brought the score to 7-7 and forced the overtime.

Peter Eriksson and Dan Currie each had two goals for Cape Breton. David Haas, Bruce Bell and Tomas Kapusta had the others.

Greg Parks had a hat trick for Springfield, while Bill Berg scored twice. Singles went to Rod Dallman and Guy Rouleau.

From the Pens of E.T. WritersWORRY-FREE RETIREMENT

People have been telling me for years that I'd have no problems after I retired
I have now been retired thirteen years and it seems each year adds a little fuel to the fire.

There are many things we do not have to contend with in these 'golden' years of ours
But there are others to take their places as if we work among our flowers.

One frustration we don't have to face is never getting a promotion
Because in this scale of society no one ever has such a notion.

If you go many long days without a promotion for ever so
It will take still more long days to get yourself a raise.

If one can get enough to make ends comfortably meet
And he can be sure his bed won't be thrown out in the street
He can live relatively easy at least for now
Because he knows he'll be able to keep on living somehow.

One thing that bothers his 'golden' age sleep is politicians talking costs
Because if they reduce costs his pension may suffer a loss.

For you and I all know where a politician's money comes from
So if he reduces his costs it's not hard to imagine that the pension might not come.

It seems there should be some place or way for old folks to lay aside their cares
So whatever it may be that is bothering them, they may feel that freedom is theirs.
