Young Man's Life Saved By Two Boys

William Allen, 24, Sinking For Third Time When Youths to Rescue

Two young boys, aged twelve and eleven years respectively, Dunsmore McClatchie, of Huntingdon, and Watson Rowat, who were nearby, noticed the plight of the young man and went to his rescue, though they doubted their ability to pull him out of the water. The boys went to the edge of the deep hole, one jumped into the water and the other held on to him. They succeeded in catching Allen by the bathing suit and with their combined strength, they pulled him out of the hole to the side of the river where they held his head above water and summoned help. The weight was too great, and by this time Allen was unconscious, so that it was impossible for the boys to pull him up on the bank. A heavy picker from across the river came to the boys and Allen was hauled onto the bank. Here, young McClatchie's Boy Scout knowledge came into play and they placed Allen across a stone allowing the water to run out of his lungs, and started to prepare a semblance of artificial respiration.

Memorial Unveiled to United Pastor

Last November, Rev. John Greig tragically and suddenly passed from the sight of men to leave his Valleyfield Unit Church congregation desolate, forlorn and with a sense of almost unbearable loss. For sixteen years he had been the beloved pastor and to quote an expressive sentence from the words of a contemporary writer—"The first emotion of pain that he ever caused was caused by his departure." His funeral marked the outpouring of the grief of the community and district; the mourners came not only from his own church but from every denomination and every walk of life.

Impressive Service Sunday In United Church At Valleyfield

Mr. J. P. Beauchemin, Vercheres, judged the Ayrshires to the general satisfaction of the exhibitors. The evenness of the quality amongst the old and young was more pronounced amongst the Ayrshires than can be said of the other dairy breeds. The principal Ayrshire exhibitors were R. R. Ness & Sons, P. D. McArthur, James West, Russell Logan and Montreal Cottons Limited. The classes throughout were commendable, few classes having fewer than 8 animals up to 11. The principal awards were as follows:

Cattle Classes Filled Mainly by Ayrshire And Holstein Breeds

Howick and Huntingdon Exhibitors Carry Off Major Awards with Respective Breed Class Entries

In talking to the judges of Dairy Cattle as well as the exhibitors all agreed on one point, and that is that with Valleyfield as a regional exhibition its entry of stock is on the whole a much superior showing over that of the days when the exhibition fell into the Provincial show classification. This is attributed to the fact that all exhibitors share in the major prizes, the competition being much more even.

Two Franklin Men Injured In Dynamite Blast Accident

A very serious accident occurred Monday afternoon at the home of William Dunn, when Mr. Dunn, and his two sons, Clarence and Ross, were engaged in blasting a well. A charge of dynamite was placed in the well which was about 12 feet deep. This exploded prematurely, painfully injuring, about the head and face, the three men who were standing at the top of the well. Dr. Stalker and Dr. Quintin were summoned and rendered first aid.

This is the third tournament Chateaugay has won this year. They won the tournament at Woodlands on the 26th of July when they defeated the Woodlands Juniors by the score of 15-4, and they brought the cup home at Bellevue on the 9th of August when they easily defeated the Ormstown team by the score of 16-11. The second game of the day was played between Huntingdon No. 2 and Valleyfield de Laval. ## Our New Provincial Treasurer

HUNTINGDON has the distinct honour and privilege of being represented in the Quebec Legislature by the Provincial Treasurer, Hon. Martin Beattie Fisher. The Huntingdon member, now a Cabinet Minister in the Union Nationale administration will be sworn into office by the Lieutenant-Governor today or tomorrow. Needless to state the pleasure of his constituents at the honour that has been accorded Hon. Mr. Fisher. Political friends and foes, in hastening to extend congratulations, forget party strife, and unite joyfully, in the good choice that Premier Duplessis has made, and the honour that is ours as well as that of Hon. Mr. Fisher.

Somewhat or other Huntingdon County seems to be a breeding place for financial administrators, and among its outstanding men that have been world leaders in their respective businesses we find that four have achieved a pinnacle of fame in the world of finance. We must be mindful though, that in the birth of Confederation, we were cradled in matters financial, and that the first Minister of Finance for the Dominion of Canada, in 1867, was Sir John Rose, member for Huntingdon. The County continued to play an important role in the financial domain, and another of its natives, Robert W. Breadner, former Commissioner of Customs, was very successful with this important department of the Federal Government which is chiefly concerned with money matters of one nature or another. Again, in 1922, Hon. James A. Robb, M.P. for Chateaugay-Huntingdon, was called upon to take over the portfolio of finance in succession to the late Hon. W. S. Fielding. Hon. Mr. Robb's budgets will go down in history as records for precision, clarity, and sound commonsense. This important position of Finance Minister was held by Hon. Mr. Robb until his death in 1929. Huntingdon County, in the Fall of 1930, had a flirtation with a Provincial Treasurer, Hon. Gordon W. Scott, of Montreal, but in the bye-election he was defeated by the present Provincial Treasurer, Hon. M. B. Fisher. R. Watson Sellar, private secretary to Hon. J. A. Robb, following the latter's death, became an official in the Finance Department, later a Deputy Minister, and, in 1931, was appointed Comptroller of the Dominion Treasury by the Bennett administration, a position which he still holds. After the Federal election last fall there was talk of D. E. Black, M.P., giving up his seat to the present Minister of Finance, Hon. C. A. Dunning, but nothing came of the proposal. Mr. Black personally deciding to keep confidence with his electors, an attitude which they strongly supported.

And now we come to 1936, and another son of the County occupies the premier financial position in the Province in the person of Hon. Martin B. Fisher. As a former school teacher, United States consul, Collector of Customs, merchant and insurance agent he has secured a good training in finance which no doubt led his leaders to request that he study financial matters provincially and act as financial critic in the Quebec House. That Hon. Mr. Fisher has been successful in his task goes without saying. It was largely through the information divulged by the Huntingdon member that the attacks were made on the Liberal administration, and that that Government was so forcefully routed. It must be remembered that much of the artillery which Premier Duplessis used in his vigorous campaign was supplied by the new Provincial Treasurer. We have been told on many occasions by Liberal members of Mr. Fisher spending most of his spare time looking up facts and figures about the province, and reading books on finance. His efforts have been rewarded in his having been called upon to take over the most important position in the Province next to the Prime Minister himself. That Hon. Mr. Duplessis has chosen the Huntingdon member for his right-hand man is a tribute to us and to Hon. Mr. Fisher.

The new Provincial Treasurer has a very likeable personality. While a strong partisan, once elections are over, he remembers only that he is representative of the whole county, and not merely of those who voted for him. He has been very popular at Quebec, and enjoyed the friendship and respect of his Liberal conferees more than any other member in the Opposition. In all his efforts Hon. Mr. Fisher is ably seconded by his charming wife, who, in local and Quebec circles is termed as a "perfect politician's wife." During the session at Quebec Mrs. Fisher has been popular with all groups in the Legislature and Legislative Council, and we feel that the honour which has been accorded her husband is none the less her own. She has been a real helpmate, and in extending congratulations and best wishes to the new Provincial Treasurer, we graciously extend them further to the new chateleine of the Provincial Treasury post.

Valleyfield Had a Good Show

HERE in the Province of Quebec we have a number of Regional Exhibitions, but it is questionable if any of these fall fairs have as fine a plant such as is to be found at Valleyfield. This plant was started with the forethought of making Valleyfield an outstanding Provincial Show. The change from Provincial to Regional category was at one time predicted to be a set back for Valleyfield Exhibitions, but such is not proving to be the case. The show manager, Mr. Jacques Malouin, N.P., President Dr. S. W. Laroche, Agronomist S. Gosselin, Director L. P. Godbout and many of the show board, set out to conquer a front position amongst the Regional shows of Quebec, and they have succeeded beyond a doubt. Through their united and untiring efforts they have acquired a plant that attracts exhibitors. The exhibitors show their entries to the best advantage and with the least amount of effort. True the location of the new arena is not the best for exhibiting livestock, but this is a matter that could not easily be overcome without paying out a great deal of money for expropriation purposes.

A mid-way is always popular at fall fairs, but in the case of Valleyfield it has always been overdone. These shows pick up a lot of loose money, take it away, and leave little or nothing behind. With the new arena and the feature programme presented at each performance, makes it that the people attending the show see something of a much higher calibre and without the spending of a lot of money on freak shows. Yes, the exhibition management is to be commended upon this improved feature for the annual fair.

If criticism were to be offered in regards to this exhibition, one would hesitate long before making any scathing remarks, and far be it from this publication deeming such timely nor merited. However, we would like to offer one suggestion for serious consideration, and that is to make the show a three-day event, and have the programme run according to standard time. Fall fairs are fundamentally operated for the benefit of the agriculturist and if the programme starts at 7 p.m. standard time in the evening, how can a farmer in the midst of the harvest season hope to be able to attend. Furthermore, the judging might be carried out with more rapidity in the daytime, so that if a farmer went to the show for the day, his time would be fully occupied viewing the classes one after another. As it is to-day, the classes are allowed to drag out so that the fourth day of exhibiting is necessary. With a three day show, we honestly believe the gate admissions would be handsomely increased over that received in the four, and the cost of operating the fair would be reduced to the extent of one day's expenses.

Serving the mid-day meal is often a serious problem to solve at such fairs as Valleyfield. It is a problem for Valleyfield and one we all hope will be taken care of in the not too distant future. We would not say in a dining hall erected, because that means a big capital expense, but what about asking some local hotel, restaurant or religious organization stepping into the picture and offering some mode of catering.

This paper joins with the thousands of people who attended the Valleyfield Exhibition in offering its directorate words of congratulation. It will long be our desire to co-operate and further the interests of the Exhibition as long as it is so ably managed in the way of bettering things for our farming community.

Spanish Revolution Continues

HASTY reports and counter reports are being issued daily by Government and Rebel armies, each claiming victories and advances while there is no doubt that heavy losses are sustained by both sides. The war is now in its second month and there is no end in sight. Neither the Spanish Government nor the Rebels appear to be able to bring it to a successful conclusion and the British Government is looking on with an anxious eye lest some of the European Powers intervene and drag the world into another conflict.

With both sides so evenly matched there is an incentive for them to seek outside aid. If Italy under Mussolini should give aid to the rebel leader, Adolf Hitler would of course join him because the rebel army is in reality a Fascist Army and many men claim that the rebellion is really a war between Fascism and Communism. Therefore it can readily be seen that should Italy and Germany interfere France, although not Communist, would have to take sides with the Government forces. It has been reported that Russia has been sending men to Spain trained in the "Art of Revolution" since February last. Russia would of course side in with the government.

Through it all Great Britain is maintaining a strict neutrality. She is siding with neither party and only wishes they would stop their quarrelling and the interference to trade in the Mediterranean. Britain will not fight unless she is forced, although she is carefully guarding Gibraltar.

One of the bright news spots of the week was the announcement by Italy that she would accept the French proposal forbidding the direct or indirect exporting of arms to Spain. This also applied to the contracts which the Italians have in hand at the present time. This plan is to come into effect just as soon as France, Germany, Britain, Portugal and Russia adhere to it.

The news of Italy's acceptance of the plan came as good news to the French Government. The French proposed it nearly a month ago and since that time the government of Leon Blum has been skating on very thin ice. There has been a movement in France to intervene in Spanish affairs. Italy's acceptance is said to have stopped this movement and for the present saved the government.

Secret Of Happiness

HAPPY you will be if you don't care for the things you can't obtain. On the surface it is not an inspiring message. Not to care for the things we can't obtain is to resign, give up, be supine, and when we quit in life's struggle we pay a dear price, indeed, for our meagre mite of happiness. Most of us, perhaps, would rather keep on fighting. There joy in the fight; joy at least to know there is fight in us.

Let us reverse the formula. "If you care enough for the things you have obtained, you will be supremely happy."

The farmer, on his farm—if he loves that farm—may be happy beyond compare. If he loves it well, he will till it well, intelligently, thoroughly, and it will yield him rich store. The widowed mother, in the little cottage, has her children, and if she loves them well they will be her life. The clerk at the desk, if he loves his work, will be happy in it.

To be truly happy in our lot we need not be contented. Indeed happiness and contentment, while we keep moving on life's highway, are not to be reconciled. If we love the work we do we shall be thrilled not alone to do it well, but to do it better.

Far away fields are always green. Only after many fruitless pilgrimages is the simple truth borne home that if the field at our door is not attractive and verdant it is because we do not water its shrubs and grasses. If we love our field we will tend it. And, more important, if we tend it we will come to love it.

He in whom ambition burns should remember that only the degree to which he proves himself true to the modest task of to-day can fit him, or inspire others to interest him with greater duties to-morrow.

MUSIC NOTES WHITE

The orchestra in the municipal theatre of Mannheim, Germany, is trying the experiment of playing from music in which the staff, notes and all characters are printed in white on a black background. The experiment so far has proved entirely successful, musicians declaring the white notes are much more restful to the eye and require only a minimum of light. The idea originated with the lighting engineer whose efforts at darkening the theatre always were nullified by lights required by the musicians.

He had mounted his barn on wheels to move it. Going down a grade, it caught up with him and ran him down.

Italian bachelors between the ages of 30 and 55 will in future have to pay a tax to the State of 155 lire (about $12.00) for the privilege of remaining single. The reason for the difference in the tax is that the Italian Government considers the ages between 30 and 55 the best time to marry.

MISSOURI KING TUT

When Joseph Marconnet died at Carondelet, Mo., in 1924, his will was found to have a provision setting aside $3,000 to be used in mummifying his body, which was then placed on exhibition in a St. Louis mausoleum on certain holidays. The will was complied with, but morticians induced the relatives to leave the coffin open continuously, as the light would preserve the body much better than if left in darkness so much of the time. Marconnet's body mummified perfectly, but relatives recently decided it had been on exhibition long enough. The body is so well preserved it may be opened to view at any time in the future, and it will look just as it does now.

LAX ON SAFETY

During a traffic safety drive in Des Moines, police stopped William Benjamin to check his car. Except for the fact Benjamin had no driver's license, no brakes, no headlights, horn, or taillight, windshield wiper, and that his wheels were out of alignment, everything was o.k. About the only feature about the car that was all right in every way was the rear vision mirror.

CAR COURTESY

A motorist who stopped at a Limestone, N.Y., garage for gas became interested in a toy steam engine in the shop. George Pape, owner of the garage, told the motorist he had made it for his son, and took the trouble to explain all its points, showing how it worked and how it was put together. The visitor expressed his appreciation to Pape and left. A few days later an automobile catalogue called on Pape, opened a catalogue and invited the garage owner to select any car described there and it would be shipped to him free of cost. The motorist who took such an interest in the little steam engine was Henry Ford, and he expressed his appreciation for the courtesy shown him by the gift of a brand new car.

hit until the fourth inning when Marr was given a base on balls and reached second on an error and came home on Taylor's grounder to centre field. The game ended with Huntingdon winning the game 1-0. The third contest was between Woodlands and Huntingdon No. 1, with the former winning 3-0. Burns, playing short-stop for Woodlands, and the first man to come to bat slammed out a triple in centre field and came home on Boyle's grounder to centre. Woodlands scored two more runs in the third inning on two doubles and one single. Their last run was scored in the fourth on a double by McIntosh. Huntingdon tried desperately to score but their efforts were futile. Maple Grove got the bye as Beauharnois did not show up and they had to meet Chateaugay in the first semi-final game of the day.

Chateaugay won this game in seven innings of play by the score of 3-1. The game was closely played throughout and only the early advantage taken by Chateaugay helped them to win this game. The three first men up crossed the plate on two doubles and one single. Maple Grove scored their only run in the fourth inning on two singles and an error.

The second semi-final game was played between Woodlands and Huntingdon No. 2. This game was one of the best of the day. Marr was again the big factor in winning this game, as he struck out six men and pitched two shutouts and obtained a base on balls, in four times at bat. The score at the end of the seventh inning was 3-3 and it had to go one more inning to decide a winner to meet Chateaugay in the final game. In the last half of the eighth with no one out Marr reached second on a single between second and first. Faillie came to bat and poled out a safe hit in the same place and had Marr advancing to third but the fielder attempted to catch the runner before he reached third and threw the ball over the third baseman's head and the winning run came in.

The final game between Chateaugay and Huntingdon No. 2 was won by Chateaugay. The score at the end of the seventh inning was 2-1. This game was scheduled to go the required nine innings but a heavy shower put a stop to it and the Umpire in Chief, Les Beattie, called the game. Chateaugay took a lead in the first inning on two singles and Huntingdon was unable to equalize the score until the fourth when Watson, who got a base on ball scored on Gavin's double deep centre. Chateaugay scored their last and winning run in the first half of the sixth on two singles by Noonan and Gravel. In the last half of the seventh Huntingdon had two men on bases and no man out when Marr was pitched to third but the runner set-up was undoubtedly Marr. He is one of the best pitchers ever to come to Huntingdon and the locals can attribute their day's success to his wonderful pitching and sensational fielding.

The games were umpired during the day by Les Beattie and Pat Ross at first and home and they deserve much credit for the way in which they handled the series. Their decisions left nothing to be desired and they were totally impartial.

Following is the line-up of the final game:

Chateaugay	Huntingdon
Caplin	White
Bennett	Taylor
Noonan	Monique

The annual picnic of the Athelstan and Rockburn School Societies was held Wednesday at the home of Miss A. Gault. The weather proved delightful and there was a good attendance. Following the lunch about a game of tennis was played by the boys in which Rockburn was victorious with a score of 5-14, but the boys' home team went down to defeat against Athelstan with a score of 0-6. Races were indulged in to the enjoyment of the spectators, but cream was served to all and a happy day spent by young and old.

It is with sorrow we report the death at her home in Carthage, N. Y. of Mrs. Stanley Frier, who leaves two sons and her husband to mourn her loss. Mrs. Frier was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Reeves of this place, and after teaching school a few years married Mr. Stanley Frier of Frankin, where they lived some years moving then to the Gore and later to Carthage, their present home. Though ill Mrs. Frier made her home here on Tuesday that her friends here learned that her condition was alarming. Mrs. Frier's sisters, Mrs. Myser and Mrs. McCuaig, went immediately to her, but word came of her death Saturday morning. Wherever Mrs. Frier made her home she had many friends and these will join in deepest sympathy for bereaved husband and sons. Interment was made in Hillside cemetery Monday by Rev. W. Ross, following funeral services at the home in Carthage.

classes seldom would there be tail enders. Looking over his private notes we noted the numbers he credited as A-1 stock. The percentages were indeed commendable and gratifying to the exhibitors. Mr. Charbonneau was loud in his praise of the quality of the stock exhibited by W. L. Carr and J. J. Murphy. He felt that the stock of some of the old exhibitors was not just what they had to offer a few years ago, but was certain their herds were on the up-turn and that in a very few years they will regain their old stride. Fred McGregor, Huntingdon, a new exhibitor of Holsteins, gave a surprise to the showmen. With his 8 head he won a great many prizes, and certainly sufficient to warrant his becoming a regular exhibitor at our fall fairs. He won 2nd place with his aged bull and 1st in the yearling class which numbered 16 entries. 2nd place in dry two-year-olds.

The champion Holstein sire prize went to Montreal Cottons, Limited, on Paul Hartog Tensen. This animal was sold by H. T. Cunningham, three years ago, to the Montreal Cottons.

The Junior championship was awarded J. J. Murphy on Southview Canary Fancy. Senior female champion, to W. L. Carr on Brackengale Patricia Kerk. The Jr. champion female award also went to W. L. Carr on Peerless Loretta Sylvia.

Five aged Holstein herds appeared in the ring here and W. L. Carr took first place; 2. H. T. Cunningham, 3rd. J. J. Murphy; 4th. Montreal Cottons, and 5th. Fred McGregor. J. J. Murphy captured the junior herd award.

J. J. Murphy has reason to be proud of his showing for in the class of two heifers, 2 years old or younger, owned and bred by exhibitor he won first place. These heifers were bred from the herd sire, Francy Ormsby of Crystal Spring. This same sire was used in the breeding of many other entries that won the laurels for Mr. Murphy.

County Herd Competition

In the County Herd competition, Huntingdon took first place. The herd sire used in this entry was that of H. T. Cunningham known as Butternut Sir Plus Countess Tensen. This bull is a son of the Montreal Cotton Co. Limited grand champion bull.

James Howden won the 1st place in the progeny of dam class with Buntly Scout Walker; the class had 11 entries.

Roy Dunn and Jas. Winter of Ormstown the joint owners of a young bull, King Bessie, won 3rd place in the senior calf class. This young bull has a wonderful background as to breeding. He is a grandson of King Bessie Ormsby Pieterje who made the highest score of any bull that ever lived, on fat alone, up to 1935.

Judge Crevier informed the press that some of the turkeys and geese of Taylor Bros. were amongst the best birds to be found on exhibition in Canada. He was loud in his praise of the showing of Rhode Island Reds and Chanteclers. The classes for the utility type birds were all large, many having ten entries to the class. Mr. Crevier stated that there was a marked increase in the showing of poultry, since poultry farming had gained much headway in this district. All farmers are giving closer attention to poultry to-day than was the case even only a few years ago, said Mr. Crevier.

The Sheep and Swine was again a commendable show and for further details pertaining to the showing of the livestock we would ask that our readers turn to the prize list.

Press Letters

Chateauguay, Que., August 21st, 1936

To the Editor, Huntingdon Gleaner.

Dear Sir—May I express on behalf of my two sons, Donald and Ross Gilmour, Jimmy Henderson, Jack Croncher and Brian Haggerty, their sincere thanks for the kindness shown them on a canoe trip which they took up the Chateauguay River. Five of these boys belong to the North Branch "Y" in Montreal, of which Mr. Clarence McGerrigle of Ormstown, is the secretary.

They started out on a Monday morning from Chateauguay in two red canoes, armed with a letter of introduction from the Mayor, Mr. Robert Craik. They reached Huntingdon on Thursday, where they received the kind permission of Miss Graham to camp on her lovely grounds. On the trip up and down the river the farmers could not have been kinder, giving them water, allowing them to camp on their land, and using the boys in the most friendly way. On the rainy Sunday night their tents blew down, and the farmer on whose land they were camping invited them to sleep in his house. While the boys did not accept, they appreciated his kindly act very much. The trip was very pleasant, and the scenery hard to beat; the many portages causing them to meet far more people than they would have otherwise, and the boys will always remember their canoe trip and the great kindness shown them.

There are probably fifty or sixty billion buttons on clothes in American wardrobes and on American people—men averaging around 450 buttons each, women less than that. A man's business clothes are held on by about thirty buttons. A woman may have none at all.

And yet a good button is not nearly as common as one might think. It should have certain definite characteristics. The back—just behind the holes—should be reinforced or built out a little; the holes should have rounded edges so as not to fray the thread, and the bridge between the holes should not be too thin. These points any woman can detect for herself when she buys buttons. Unfortunately, she cannot tell how the buttons will perform. Buttons today are made of many substances—wood, leather, bone, plackon in gay colors, "vegetable" ivory, metals and cloth.

Stores report that cotton crochet thread outdid itself in sales for summer fashions. There is a cotton thread for every purpose. For the gossamer blouses so important with your suit there is fine mercerized crochet cotton which comes in the important new colors. For soft outer sweaters there is knit-crochet, the mercerized knitting and crochet cotton with an added deep luster. All these threads are strong and practical; they do not stretch and will wash beautifully.

What Provisions Are Made For Teachers Retirement?

W. P. PERCIVAL, M.A., Ph.D. Director of Protestant Education for the Province of Quebec.

Every teacher who is fifty-six years of age and who has been employed as a teacher in a Government school in the Province of Quebec for a period of twenty-five years or upwards and who has paid his contributions regularly to the Teachers' Pension Fund is entitled to an annual pension. The yearly assessment is three per cent of the salary. Teachers with or without a diploma who are engaged in the public and normal schools, and school inspectors must contribute to the Fund. Payments are, however, optional for a few specialists, most of whom are only part time officers.

The pension paid is based upon the average salary received. However, if a teacher has taught for more years than the minimum required, the pension is calculated upon the twenty-five years in which his salary was highest. Years of teaching in Quebec only are allowed for pension purposes. Two per cent of the average annual salary is paid by the Province for every year of service in Quebec up to thirty-five, the maximum there being seventy per cent of the average salary received. In no case, however, must the pension exceed twelve hundred dollars, nor may it be lower than one hundred and fifty dollars. Teachers are further protected by the provision of the law which decrees that these pensions are neither assignable nor liable to seizure.

Serious accidents or enfeebled health entitle teachers to pensions, irrespective of their ages, if they have twenty-five years of service to their credit, provided that, the accident or ill health has not arisen through improper conduct. Moreover, teachers who have taught for twenty-five years may discontinue teaching when they are fifty years of age, but should then give immediate notice of their intention to claim their pensions at fifty-six. Failure to give this notice will necessitate their teaching for two additional years, as pensions are not paid to those who have failed to teach for at least two out of the five years preceding their retirement. This article of the law is made to prevent indiscriminate retirement of teachers and sudden drains upon the Pension Fund.

A widow of a teacher will receive half of the pension to which her husband would have been entitled provided that, from the time of the marriage and a minimum of six years prior to his death, the pensioner paid to the Fund an additional half of his pension payment, namely a total of four and one half per cent of his annual salary. A widow is not allowed to make payments that her husband should have paid during his lifetime but neglected to do. Otherwise it is likely that the Pension Fund would lose by reason of the neglect of financially harassed husbands to protect their families sufficiently.

These provisions of the law should be known by the wife of every male teacher. Without their pensions, many widows would be nearly destitute who, during many of their married years, have lived with their husbands and children on salaries insufficient to enable them to make suitable provision for old age. Recently the law was amended to allow teachers who have omitted to make the necessary payments on behalf of their wives to remedy the deficiency by July 30, 1937. This is a generous feature of the amendments to which due consideration should be given by those who are likely to be affected.

Pension payments are guaranteed by the Government of the Province of Quebec. The stoppages upon the teachers' salaries are paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and the Provincial Treasurer is authorized to draw upon it for the necessary payments to pensioners. All pensions and all legitimate obligations upon the fund must be claimed within three years of the date. Otherwise they are struck off the books.

The Pension Fund is administered by a Commission of which the Superintendent of Education is Chairman. The other members are representatives of teachers' associations, both Protestant and Roman Catholic.

Few teachers have built up a reserve that will enable them to live independently after their years of usefulness have ceased. While some School Boards engage teachers for the year and pay them monthly, most teaching contracts are signed for the school session of ten months or even for shorter terms. The months in which teachers do not receive salary must be provided for. Usually, not much of their salaries remains after the commencement of each new session. Consequently, the pension cheques that many teachers receive upon retirement constitute their sole means of support.

Teaching is an exacting occupation. Youth and maturity are both desirable in teachers. Those who are too immature are not altogether successful. Those whose physical youth is past will fail if they do not keep their spirits young. Since youth cannot be retained for ever, it is in the public interest that a teachers' pension fund be maintained and that, while not generous, it should nevertheless be adequate.

The Pension Law, like all other statutes, is subject to change at the discretion of the legislature. The Pension Act has been changed frequently. In fact, during the eighty years that a teachers' pension law has been in force in Quebec, three distinct Acts have been put on the statute books. Generally, each has been more generous than the other. In none, however, was the payment of pensions guaranteed by the Government until the change that was effected in 1935 when, for the first time, the stoppages upon teachers' salaries were paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Province and any possible deficits were to be drawn from that Fund.

Obituary

The late Miss Eva Dear

The friends of Miss Eva Dear, daughter of Mrs. Nancy Dear, were shocked to hear of her recent death in the Montreal General Hospital on Wednesday evening, August 12th. Miss Dear had been a patient sufferer from asthma for several years, and found it necessary to live in the city as the country air affected her breathing so much. Two weeks ago feeling worse than usual, she went to the hospital for treatment and when it was thought she was gaining she suddenly collapsed and passed away before any of her friends could be summoned.

Her brother, Lawrence was summoned and immediately left, and had arrangements made to bring the body to Huntingdon, where it was brought to her home in Elgin.

The funeral service was held at the home of her mother on Saturday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Cowdry, Malone, N.Y., officiating. The pallbearers were Emmet Carr, George McIntyre of Elgin, Allan and Cecil Arnold of Dundee. Interment took place in Herdman cemetery. Those left to mourn her loss are her mother, three sisters, Mrs. Lillian McMaster, New York City, Mrs. Wilbur Arthur (Florence) Huntingdon, Mrs. Joe Simpson (Bessie) Dundee and two brothers, Ralph, Winchester, N.H., and Lawrence of the home farm, to whom we extend our deep sympathy. Mrs. Dear has the sympathy of her friends particularly, as she had been called to the bedside of her only sister, in Manchester, N.H., just a few weeks ago, and was there when the news was sent to her to come home.

Those who attended from a distance were, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Dear and family, Winchester, N.H., Mrs. Jones, Montreal, Mrs. Nellie Stowe and son, Malone, N.Y., Mr. and Mrs. Tucker, Burke, N.Y.

The Late Mrs. Paul Galipeau

The death of Mrs. Paul Galipeau (nee Albina Lefebvre) at the age of 42, occurred at the Hotel Dieu of Valleyfield on the 13th of August.

The funeral was held in St. Joseph's Church, Huntingdon on the 15th. The body was received at the church by Father A. Pigeon, parish priest, and the service was sung by Father J. Leduc, curate. The deceased was a member of the Congregation des Dames de Ste-Anne. She leaves to mourn her loss her husband and three children: Jeanette, Edmour and Pauline, her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lefebvre; four sisters, Mrs. W. Conden (Vinilda), Mrs. A. Ricard (Aldora), the Misses Catherine and Lucienne Lefebvre, her brother-in-law and sisters-in-law, M. and Mrs. Adrien Galipeau, Mr. and Mrs. W. Ricard, Mrs. J. B. Francoeur, Hart, Mr. W. Galipeau, her nieces and nephews, Leo, Johnny, Albert, Armand, Remi, Ernest Galipeau, Mrs. G. Lusselle, Mlle Y. Picard, and Madeleine Galipeau.

The funeral was largely attended by cousins and friends of the family. Many beautiful floral offerings, spiritual bouquets and telegrams of sympathy were received by the family.

HABITS... hard to break. Man is a creature of habit. Most of our actions and most of our so-called thinking are what they are because we have acquired the habit of going through a fixed routine and don't have initiative enough to change our habits of work and thinking.

I think this inherent trait of human nature lies at the bottom of most of the failures to change the world overnight. Reformers of all types are prone to overlook the hold which habit has on the human animal. It would not be difficult to make the world a much better place to live in for everybody, if only enough people could be jarred out of their habits of living and made to see that there are better ways of doing things than those to which they are accustomed.

RUTS... get deep. Most of the world runs in ruts. We stay in our ruts because it is easier than to try to get out of them, or because our fathers before us traveled in the same ruts. The deeper the rut, the longer people have moved in it, the harder it is to get out of it.

The only really free individuals are those who succeed in getting out of the ruts in which their fellows are moving. Once in the rut, the individual is merely one of the crowd. He is not free to move in any direction except that in which the crowd is moving. He has to follow a pattern or a trail marked out for him by others.

rut and revile the more enterprising ones who have succeeded in climbing out of it. It is human nature never to shoulder the blame for one's own condition, but to try to find a scapegoat who is responsible for all of one's individual troubles.

STUPIDITY... an obstacle. Nobody can watch the world go by for as many years as I have been permitted to do so without coming to the conclusion that the chief obstacle in the way of human progress is not greed or tyranny but stupidity. Show me a man who prides himself on being conservative, and nine times out of ten, I will show you that his so-called conservatism is merely stupidity. He has been taught, or has taught himself, certain fixed rules which, to his stupid mind, chart the only perfect course of life. He refuses to listen to any suggestion that a new way or a different way of doing things might be better for everybody, including himself.

I do not mean to suggest that the habits which handicap it is always the better way. What I am trying to say is that the true conservative, if he is intelligent, will look at any new ideas with an open mind and an impartial eye, instead of dismissing them from all consideration merely because they do not conform to his preconceived ideas.

LEADERSHIP... scarce. The only way the mass of mankind gets out of the old ruts and the habits which handicap it is when some forceful character who has set himself free from the inhibitions which bind most of us to the old ways, points out a new way so persuasively that first a few and then the many are induced to try it. Such leaders are rare. Not very many of them are born in any generation. When they do arise they change the world.

I have in mind particularly one young man who has achieved the presidency of a great business enterprise because he was not afraid to try new ways of doing things, and has been successful in persuading huge numbers of people to accept new ideas, while his competitors in the same line of business have been content to stay in the ruts and follow the patterns which their predecessors laid down for them. While they were losing money, he started new ventures at the bottom of the depression and made them pay.

AIR... Germany. Col. Lindbergh, who has just been looking over Germany's aircraft development, was surprised at what he found there. Germany is far ahead of the rest of the world in lighter-than-air craft and is recovering the leadership that she held before the war in heavier-than-air navigation.

I was reminded of a remarkable prophecy written nearly 150 years ago by an almost forgotten German scholar and author, Jean Paul Richter, died in 1825, and years before that he wrote that the time would come when England would be master of the sea, France master of the land, but that Germany would be ruler of the air. I don't know on what Richter based that prediction, but it has come near to being a reality.

Huntingdon OFFICE-WORKER HELPED BY NATURAL LAXATIVE FOOD ALL-BRAN Corrected Her Constipation* Here is her voluntary letter: "For years I was a sufferer from constipation. It was necessary to take a laxative every night before retiring. I was an office-worker, and did not get much exercise. "Some one told me that ALL-BRAN was a good remedy for constipation. I bought a box, and found that it helped my condition. Since then I have not had to invest in laxatives."—Mrs. Margaret Jones (address upon request). Scientific tests have shown that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN corrects constipation safely and pleasantly. This delicious cereal supplies mild "bulk," as well as vitamin B and iron. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. If not relieved this way, see your doctor. Wouldn't you rather enjoy this natural food than abuse your system with harmful pills and drugs? Protect your family from the dangers of common constipation. Serve ALL-BRAN regularly for regularity. Either as a cereal with milk or cream, or cooked in tempting muffins, breads, etc. Recipes on every package. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario. *Constipation due to insufficient "bulk" in meals.

Sewing Machine Care

Three-fourths of sewing machine troubles are because the wrong kind of oil for a lubricant has been used. An oil with paraffin in it gums up the works. To keep your machine in good order, use the oil that is bought at store where sewing machine oils are sold.

If your machine runs heavily, it probably needs a cleaning. You can do this yourself if you have a little knowledge of the mechanism of the machine plus a crocheting needle, a brush and an oil machine can filled with kerosene. The kerosene is not a lubricant, but a cleaner for the gummed up parts.

Spread several layers of newspaper under the machine to catch the dirt. Remove the needle, presser, foot, shuttle, the needle plate under the pressure foot, and brush away all the dust and lint you have exposed.

Tip the machine top back and clean all parts underneath, reaching up into the head of the machine with the crocheting hook. Use the kerosene freely to loosen any hardened or gummed oil and to wash out the dirt. Turn the wheels so that you shall reach every part. Repeat the application of kerosene if necessary until all parts are clean.

Lower the top of the machine and clean the balance wheel and bobbin winder in the same way, then tackle the drive wheel and treadle parts. When the machine is thoroughly clean, oil it with the right kind of oil and run it hard for a few minutes to work the oil into all parts which need it.

Wipe off any excess oil with a soft cloth, and before you sew on a garment, run a scrap of muslin through to catch the oil which might spot your sewing. Keep the machine covered when not in use and it will not give you much trouble after this sort of cleaning. When the machine is not in use, release the belt, as it tends to stretch if left on the wheels.

SNOOPER'S COMMENTS

By Staff Reporter

Well, gossip fans, we survived the ordeal of writing this column for last week, but we sure will be pleased when the regular writer gets back to his task next week.

Yes, if you glance at the opposite column you will note our expression of surprise and pleasure at the result of the "know your gossip" contest! There wasn't one answer, but we figured there was a woman in town who really deserved the prize $5 we sent her the dollar.

We were walking along a particular street the other night when we were accosted by a gentleman who gave us his first copy story—he had been to a rendezvous for mercurialism and his scintillating mind was slightly befogged.

This and That

A newspaper reporter claims to have found a sure cure for sleeping sickness in the form of a German bed, but if you goose-step as much as we did every day you'd feel edgewood at night.

At Hershey, Pa., a female quail is making the male hatch the family eggs. She's some suffragist. In Edmonton, the quail is wearing rubber shoes, and after last Monday's elections, a few local political stalwarts were heard of very little.

Edwyn, the famous "Fire Chief" of radio and screen fame was in the Province a week ago Monday, possibly trying to squelch the election flames which certainly were well fanned in this year's campaign.

While we were worrying about words to fill this space, we came across an item about etymological experts being kept busy trying to define the newest college expressions. Among the new ones are "goon," "dilly" and "drip" and strange to say, they all mean the same thing—that the boy friend's "not so hot." If it's a girl friend then the expression is "flatto," or "floodie." And should a young man like our bashful swain mentioned last week be in love with such a lady he is in a "tizzy." Courtship is defined as "pitching woo" or "making schmoo," and the newest terms of endearment are "my little chickadee," "my little rocky-mountain canary," and "my little fair-feathered friend."

And now we're reminded of a contemporary's warning: College boys go social too soon. Girls and parties ought to take a back seat while a boy gets ready to do something important. You can't mix girls with a career; one of them is bound to suffer. All of which, translated into college language would be "A 'stout fellah' ought not to go in for 'pitching woo' when he ought to be really 'antsy' in order that later he may 'hit the big time.'"

And from our local telephone directory we get the following:

- Who's there? Daniel. Daniel who? Daniel to the girls to come over. Who's there? Davis. Davis who? Davis a blacksmith. Who's there? Linda. Linda who? Linda's a helping hand. Who's there? Sellar. Sellar who? Sellar now and put the money in the bank. Who's there? Achille. Achille who? Achille ran up my spine. Who's there? Boyd. Boyd who? Boyd by the yachtman's daughter. Who's there? Oliver. Oliver who? Oliver Twist to get going. Siam Hungary not Soviet but Ivor Russian business and Augusta Wheeling Hallway so Idaho Toledo Michigan.

Contraband Wool Seized By Mounties

Car Chased Across Frontier By Troopers, Nabbed On This Side

An American car loaded with raw contraband wool, allegedly abandoned by American racketeers was confiscated by members of the Huntingdon detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, border patrol, about 3 o'clock Friday morning on the Bunker Hill Road near the boundary line, Dundee.

The car, a large Cadillac, had the engine seats tipped and was loaded with approximately 1,500 pounds of raw wool, which police state, was being smuggled south over the border-line into the United States. It is thought the car was a part of a caravan that traffic in illicit alcohol, bringing the liquor into Canada and taking a pay-load of wool to the United States instead of returning empty.

The car was seen to cross the frontier chased by state troopers. The driver was however able to escape by cutting a narrow line, eluding the mounties under the cover of darkness in the nearby bush.

Swimming, boating and hand games were played and all partook of the lunch baskets, which were generously supplied by the mothers of the boys. Returning home in the early evening, they all expressed the wish that the picnic would be held more than once a year.

The Family DOCTOR
by JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

IN TREATMENT OF VARICOSE VEINS
Of course you know what I mean: Those large, crooked vessels just beneath the skin of your legs, below the knee. They deform, and do not look good through a thin stocking; besides, if very large, they may be painful after you have been on your feet a while. Varicose veins may occur in several different localities. Some forms of rectal disease are only varicose veins, but I shall confine this talk to such veins below the knee.

Huntingdon
The cause is usually inflammation of the vein itself—its wall. This weakens the vessel so that the blood-stream distends it more and more. Over-feeding on highly seasoned foods and eating too much are remote causes, and aggravate existing varicosities.
You know, also, of various measures for relief of this condition. The most common is the elastic bandage or the rubber stocking. These, indeed, relieve immediate distress, but only while they are worn; they never cure. Chinese hack the veins into short sections, drain, and heal the wounds. Rough but radical. Surgeons remove the veins that are troublesome, but it's a bit of cutting, and people hate cutting, you know.
The best method for a radical cure, one that does not involve inconvenience the patient much, is the injection method. It must be done by the physician, but results are very satisfying. A point is selected where the swelling begins, that is, nearer the ankle—not at the top of the vessel treated. A solution is thrown into the vein that obliterates the canal; of course, that vein is done for and deeper veins must do the work, and will. The diseased vein becomes as a fibrous cord—it is cured. Your physician will tell you all about it. Go get well.

Arctic Trade Route Now Possible

THE Soviet Union is making a determined attempt to develop a northern route between Europe and Siberia through the Arctic Ocean. Last year two freight vessels made the trip safely from east to west and two made the trip from west to east. It is expected that many more will navigate the northern route this year and there is an ever increasing number of vessels operating locally in these Arctic waters.

Specially constructed ships have been built for work in the ice fields. They have strong hulls and are so made that repairs can be made to the propeller without the use of divers. The rudder also has extra protection and water can be pumped from one side of the ship to the other, quickly, in case of emergency.

Along this northern route thirty-nine stations have been established and are composed of aeroplanes, ice-breakers and scientific equipment. In only four areas is there a serious ice problem and in these areas ice-breakers are operating constantly. Before this it was the accepted practice to have an ice-breaker proceed each vessel.

The first step in Arctic development really began in 1925 when the Arctic Institute used a small sailing vessel of 25-horsepower, for research work. This ship made an historic trip around the large island of Novaya Zemlya. In 1932 the ice-breaker Sibiryakov managed to reach Japan via the Arctic although damaged on route.

In 1933 a smaller and weaker ship called the Chelyuskin travelled the same route and almost got through. She had almost reached the Behring Strait when she was caught between ice floes and crushed. At Thomas Welling of Rockport, Peterborough County, who is 65 years old, was acclaimed world's champion buxawyer. Competing in the finals with a man 36 years his junior, Welling made his three cuts in a four foot long hard maple log in 54 seconds.

Captain P. C. Ginn has set up a new record of mail plane flying, by completing the 1693 miles between Akayab, Burma and Singapore in 19 hours. This 19 hour dash not only established a new record but enabled the air mail from England which had been 15 hours behind schedule to be delivered on time in Singapore the following morning.

A DOZEN aeroplanes have entered into the 6500 mile A. Derby from England to South Africa which will take place on September 29th in conjunction with Empire Exhibition to be held in Johannesburg. The total prize money is £10,000 or $50,000. This will be divided between the speed planes and those of the service type. It is expected that the speed planes will make the flight in 48 hours and the plane to arrive first will receive a prize of £4,000. The first in the efficiency division will receive £3,000. Although, in this part of the race the type of plane and its load will be taken into consideration. These planes will be allowed up five days to make the flight. The route to be followed will be via Belgrade, Yugoslavia and Cairo, Egypt. This route has been chosen because it is not only shorter but less hazardous than flying over the Alps, via Rome and the Mediterranean. The pilots will be allowed to refuel whenever and wherever they please. Most of the planes will have double crews for continuous flying.

SHORT NOTES

Hardy Bett who shined the shoes of the late King Edward VII when he visited Toronto as the Prince of Wales, died in Digby, Nova Scotia, last week. He was 80 years old and had been a bootblack for 60 of them.

Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General of Canada, was created Chief Okemot Ootawken (Teller of tales) by Cree Indians. At the same ceremony Prince Mackenzie King created an Honourary Chief Ootawken Weewosow (Wise Councilor).

In a steady downpour of rain with his rivals cheering him, Thomas Welling of Rockport, Peterborough County, who is 65 years old, was acclaimed world's champion buxawyer. Competing in the finals with a man 36 years his junior, Welling made his three cuts in a four foot long hard maple log in 54 seconds.

PART III Chapter 4

At last Jack spoke. "Let us go down to the village and see what is happening there." "Yes, let's go," said Betty, looking at Carver. "The sound of those drums makes me feel awfully queer and we might be able to hear something of Bimbi."

The proposal thus being put up to Carver, he hesitated for a moment, then answered, "All right, let's go. We'll see what all this rumpus is about. Jack, you bring your rifle, and Betty, you bring a flashlight if you have one. There is no telling what we might find when we get there."

The three made their way quickly and quietly towards the sound of the drums, while Carver warned them, in a low cautious voice. "We must be careful not to let the natives see us. When we get in sight of the village follow me carefully, and remember not a sound." He had just finished this warning when he stopped and pointed silently ahead.

There, through the thick cluster of trees they could see a brightly burning fire on the bank of the river in front of the village, and scattered around it in a wide circle the natives were sitting. Upon a silent signal from Carver, Jack and Betty made their way cautiously forward until they reached the edge of the protecting trees. Then, following Carver's example, they dropped quietly to their knees and slowly wriggled their way through the protecting undergrowth to a small mound of earth within fifty yards of the chanting natives. Looking carefully around this protecting mound they beheld a strange sight.

In the innermost circle, and slightly apart from the swaying natives behind them, sat a strangely painted group of native warriors. Beating their long wooden tom-toms they rocked from side to side, under the influence of the impelling music they produced. Close around the leaping fire there slowly danced a strange procession. Their black, naked bodies glistening in the flickering light, were decorated with grotesque designs. Their faces smeared with some greasy substance, shone hideously as they threw back their heads as if in mute defiance of some unseen power.

As our three adventurers watched this weird ceremony, hardly daring to breathe, they became conscious that the tempo of the tom-toms was increasing. Faster and faster the beating continued. The dancers working themselves into a frenzy of unbridled emotion, now leaped high into the air, their bodies casting weird shadows on the ground, while their pounding feet raised a fine dust that eddied and swirled until the very earth around them became a part of this mad ceremonial dance.

Suddenly, the tom-toms stopped, and as the warriors fell exhausted to the ground, there ensued a moment of unreal, oppressive silence, almost too much for the three unseeing watchers to bear. Then, into the circle of uncertain light stepped Kiwa, the witch doctor. His face and body streaked with white lines resembled a skeleton, and in his right hand, raised above his head, there gleamed a human skull. Behind him, slowly came a tall young native, his hands bound behind his back, his eyes fixed upon the ground, he seemed to be walking in a daze.

Betty gave a stifled cry. "That's Bimbi!" she choked. "Sh!" whispered Carver. "Not a sound. Our lives now will be worth a stick if they hear us now." Suddenly, she became aware of the natives. They seemed to be talking excitedly amongst themselves and pointing out to the raft. Yes, the flames were slowly dying down, and in their place rose thick clouds of smoke.

Her time had come. With trembling fingers she fumbled with the catch of her flashlight. A moment later, there came a click, and a long beam of light shone down upon the gesturing natives. "Well, well, well, find that out," retorted Carver grimly, as he seized a paddle and started the canoe towards the shore. Reaching the bank their hearts sank in bitter disappointment as they heard a sudden rustle in the undergrowth to their left. Was all their struggle to be brought to naught? Then to their unbounded relief, and amazement, there came to them through the black night, a low familiar voice.

REMINISCENCES — ANECDOTES

PARSLEY'S PARAGRAPHS

FORECASTS — CRITICISMS

Sportsmen all over the country will arise in indignation over the plight of Irving Pease, Toronto boxer barred from the Canadian Olympic squad and sent home because he was overweight.

When Pease was found cold, wet, and hungry, wandering through the Black Belt of Montreal, begging a hand-out of strangers, his Olympic blazer which he proudly donned a month ago a wet bedraggled garment, the crowning peak of blundering and inefficiency by officialdom was reached.

When he was sent home Pease was given steamship passage to Montreal and told here that railway officials would have his transportation ready to carry him to his Toronto home.

Arriving at the Quebec Metropolitan Pease was told regretfully by railway officials they knew nothing about his case. They had no ticket to offer him and a wire to the Ontario Boxing Association brought the reply that they couldn't help.

There is something desperately wrong with a system that kicks and buffets a growing boy of 19 years around in this fashion. When Pease a large section of the Canadian sports public have grown weary of the entire business. Next time we suggest—the boxers should be assembled at some central point ten days before the trials. Points should be scored for showing at each bout of the trials, not merely picking a winner in each class on a small points margin shown in the finals. A case in point is that of George Bird, the St. Catherine's boy awarded a narrow decision over Montreal's Tommy Osborne in the finals but taken off the team at Berlin when it was found he suffered a fractured jaw. It was Osborne who broke his jaw.

When the time comes for the journey to the country where Olympics are being held, then enter the best boxers Canada can offer as a team. Their strongest weight a couple of days before they fight should determine what class they should enter.

A boy leaving a Canadian port as a bantamweight (118 pounds) is likely to weigh 123 or 124 pounds after a long sea voyage. Then he should be entered in the higher class, the featherweights (126 pounds).

And in no case where there is insufficient funds should boys, or girls either for that matter, be taken on a long trip when the officials have to pinch pennies to send one or more home on a flimsy excuse and allow them to roam about the streets of a big city cold, wet, hungry and broke.

Al Parsley will be glad to answer all questions on sport. Dates, records, results, etc. of important events. Write to The Gleaner enclosing stamped self-addressed envelope.

Of course the obvious excuse will be that the boy forgot to bring a Canadian railway ticket. However it would have been more simple to allow Pease and Hennessy to remain with the official party at Berlin for a few extra days and then make the trip home under proper supervision.

Anyway you look at the question, it's a snide trick to send a boy ungrateful armfuls of the wet grass on to the flaming pile then, tying his handkerchief over his mouth, he leaped on to swaying raft.

Choked and blind blinded by dense smoke he fought his way manfully to the limp flame-tortured body of Bimbi. Seizing his knife from his belt he began to feverishly saw through the tough fibrous thongs that cruelly bound the luckless native. At last they gave and Bimbi, suddenly loosened from the charred stake, staggered forward a step, then stumbled with a loud splash into the cool waters of the river.

Jack, upon hearing the splash, dropped his knife and, although blinded and gasping painfully from the burning smoke, unhesitatingly dove in after Bimbi. As he struggled to the surface of the water, his hand struck something hard, and from above came the welcome voice of Carver.

"All right, Jack, hold on to the side of the canoe. I'll be with you as soon as I get Bimbi aboard." Gasping and spluttering, Jack, however, pulled himself up into the canoe, as Carver, with a grunt, heaved the still dazed Bimbi out of the water.

"If Bimbi is all right, let's go," exclaimed Jack, as he glanced towards the shore. "I do hope nothing has happened to Betty. I can't see her light and the natives seem to have disappeared. I wonder if they have seen us and are lying in wait to trap us when we land."

"Well, we will soon find that out," retorted Carver grimly, as he seized a paddle and started the canoe towards the shore. Reaching the bank their hearts sank in bitter disappointment as they heard a sudden rustle in the undergrowth to their left. Was all their struggle to be brought to naught? Then to their unbounded relief, and amazement, there came to them through the black night, a low familiar voice.

Charlie Chipmunk's ADVENTURES

By MARGARET DOUGLAS

Mr. Clopett, the Horse, lived in a very queer cosy house all by himself in the Magic Forest. Everybody loved him for he was always doing kind things and helping people. The floors in his house had no carpets but were covered with clean sweet-hay, and lovely pink carrots grew in the flower pots at the little windows and sugar lumps grew on the walls.

Early one morning as Mr. Clopett lay fast asleep on his bed, the open window, Sally Squirrel ran in and tickled his nose with her long bushy tail.

"Time to get up, Mr. Clopett!" she cried and Mr. Clopett just smiled sweetly and almost crying, in and poor Sally was almost crying, for if she woke Mr. Clopett quickly she got two big sugar lumps, but if he was a long time in waking she only got one teeny weeny lump.

So she started to sing very loud in her high squeaking voice that woke poor Mr. Clopett up and made his lovely mane stand up and end with fright.

"Wake up! Wake up! For this is to-morrow! And your House is Upside Down! The kitchen sink is full of ink and the Dishes have gone to town." "I'll have to get up," sighed poor Mr. Clopett keeping his eyes tight shut and feeling so very sorry for himself that great big tears ran down his long white nose. "Hand me my Thinking Cap, you can't get any wages this morning, Miss Squirrel, when I'm in such Terrible Troubles."

Naughty little Sally snatched two big sugar lumps off the wall and put them in her pocket, then she took down the big Red Thinking Cap that hung behind the Door, and tossed it high in the air and when it landed on Mr. Clopett's nose she laughed out loud and jumping out of the window, scurried home with her wages.

Putting the Thinking Cap on his Head, Mr. Clopett shut his eyes tight and thought and thought and thought and thought while his Tears made little pools all over the hay carpet and dear Mistress Mouse scribbles the cat starting with the letter A. For example.

The Minister's Cat is an alert cat. The next person gives a descriptive word starting with B, such as The Minister's cat is a beautiful cat.

The third is C. The word given might be The Minister's cat is a cute cat and so the game goes right around the table or room and from A to Z and if when you reach Z you have not used the alphabet the game is double the fun and brings many a laugh.

The alphabet game has many variations. It can be played with the sentence, "I love you with an A because she is artful. I love my love with a B because she is bright. I love my love with a C because she is cute and so on through the alphabet again."

A player should not be allowed more than ten seconds for his or her answer and if she has not got it by this time a zero is put down on her score paper.

Singing and Searching A variation of that old game hide the button is Singing and Searching. An object is hidden. It may be a thimble, button, anything. When the person who is "it" or who is to look for it comes into the room the party begins to sing "How silly you look, how silly you look" to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne". When the searcher is far away from the object, the party sings softly but when he or she is near the object the singing gets louder and louder. The music comes and goes like waves. It is lots of fun.

back. When done correctly not a limp comes out of the water. It is simply the breast stroke done on the back.

came up through a hole in the floor and did a little washing, while the Ten Twineys paddled in the pool and played prettily and Papa Mouse sailed about in a match box and fished over the side with a button hook.

The Mouse Family always had a lovely time when Mister Clopett put on his Thinking Cap, for he kept his eyes shut, and did not know they were there.

Suddenly a knock came to the door and Mister Clopett opened one eye and made such a very cross face that Papa Mouse and Mama Mouse and the Ten Twineys all ran away home again, just as a little Porridge stick came sailing in at the window and knocked Mister Clopett's Thinking Cap off.

Was Mister Clopett angry? Jumping up he ran to the window and put his head out, but he was so upset that he saw nobody. "What do you want?" he roared in an angry voice, looking up at Clara Cloudlet, who was chasing a Bumble Bee over the Tree Tops.

"I want Mr. Clopett!" cried a far away voice. "I'm not at home!" roared Mr. Clopett. "I'm away visiting my ankle!"

If he had looked down he would have seen Willie Wolf standing on the doorstep laughing, but as he kept looking up at the Clouds he saw nobody. "Come on down and open the Door!" shouted Willie getting quite cross.

"I can't!" screamed Mr. Clopett, starting to cry all over again. "My house has run away. The dishes are full of Ink and the Kitchen sink is upside down!"

Kind Willie was very sorry for the poor Horse and he ran away to Nibbleson Avenue for Charlie Chipmunk.

"Come quick!" he cried. "Mr. Clopett's House is full of Ink and his Kitchen sink has run away and all his dishes are upside down and his ankle is visiting him and he's crying over the window and says he's not at home."

The little Chipmunk raced away as fast as his legs could carry him, and Charlie saw Willie Wolf lumbering after him, panting for breath, his long tongue hanging out.

When they came to Mr. Clopett's House, Charlie climbed up to the window and went in, and there was Mr. Clopett standing on his head in the middle of the floor with his eyes shut.

"What's the matter?" asked Charlie, and this is what the Horse said. "I'm upside down And my House is too. What in the world am I to do? Staring at me will do no good. You're really being very rude!"

Charlie said he was sorry, just then Willie Wolf kicked at the Front Door in his Temper, for he wanted to get in and see what was going on. "I'll go and open the door," said Charlie, trying not to laugh. "Just wait a minute, Mr. Clopett."

Running downstairs he let Willie in, and the two rasals whistled and chuckled for a minute, then Willie dressed up in Mr. Clopett's best Tablecloth, with the black biscuit tin for a bonnet and the kitchen curtain for a veil and Charlie took him up stairs.

"Here is a good Witch I know," said Charlie, pushing Willie into the window where poor Mr. Clopett stood on his head. "Do your Magic, Witchy Dear!"

"Wumple, Wumple Pen! Everything's all right again!" Mr. Clopett opened his eyes and stood up on his four beautiful legs and laughed. "Magic!" he said sweetly, running into the kitchen to look at the sink and the dishes. "Now, Good Witch you and Charlie must have breakfast with me, and then I'll take you both for a gallop."

"Wait a minute!" laughed Charlie. "Give me the Porridge Stick, Witchy please! Now Mr. Clopett, watch me do a bit of Magic!"

To-Morrow's Child

By Julia Ann Moore

"All right," Kate said. "If you can wiggle out of it without her, go to it. But I'll not have it on my conscience that an innocent man had his life spoiled when I might have prevented it."

On the following Monday Val strolled downtown to acquire some of the "odds and ends" she had not purchased in New York. It was Armistice Day and presently she found her way blocked by a parade. In a limousine drawn up at the curb were seated a man and a small child, its yellow head framed in the panel of glass. The curly head moved to one side and Val recognized the angular profile of Bret Gallishaw.

Quickly she moved toward the car, but then took a step back and was suddenly hurrying off, not knowing what curious turn of mind had caused her to alter her decision to speak to him. It may have been an instinctive dislike of the man, or the thought of what he had done to Kate, or—if I spoke to him, he might feel that he had to call on me or have his wife invite me to their place and—well, I'd rather not.

She hurried on, telling herself that seeing Bret and the curly-haired child was an incident of no possible consequence—and was a little disturbed because the mental picture of the two in the limousine would not leave her. On Wednesday afternoon Robert's sister Lucy took Val to a recital by a violin prodigy. Lucy was two years older than Robert, conspicuously tall and flat-chested with a long, sharp nose like her mother's, and she was one of those people who must either talk continuously or not at all. She and Val had never been congenial, but out of a sense of duty she made it a point to "do something for Val" at irregular intervals.

She was in one of her talking moods as they walked homeward until something seemed suddenly to dam the flow of words. It was an odd thing, that silence. A warning Val felt it and wondered, and waited. Then she was talking again but slowly now, looking at Val at first, then deliberately avoiding Val's direct gaze.

"Robert told me about his talk with your aunt," she said. "He seems to be very fond of her, Val." Val said quietly, "Yes, he seems to be."

With extreme caution Lucy proceeded: "I suppose she is a very good all she has and it's no more than natural that she wants to keep you near her as long as she lives, but—"

A deliberate break there, an invitation for a question that did not come. They walked on. Then, abruptly, it came. "It does seem unfair denying you and Robert a place of your own—insisting that you stay with her as long as she lives."

"There was a silence then, Val. I can understand Aunt Mahala's wanting that, but Robert and I plan to take an apartment."

"Have you talked with Robert since Sunday?" "No." "Then he hasn't told you. He had paid a deposit on an apartment at the Dresden, but he notified them yesterday he wouldn't take it. . . . He really hadn't any alternative. Val. He tried to argue with your aunt, but she finally told him flatly that the day you moved out of her home, she would rewrite her will and cut you out with a dollar. . . . Val felt the blood rushing to her face, fought her anger down. She said, evenly, "I've never been interested in Aunt Mahala's money, Lucy."

"But, my dear, you can't simply shut your eyes to the residues of several comfortable fortunes. Your Aunt has inherited from both sides of the family. She is rich, Val. Robert says she is probably worth as much as anyone in Manchester. If she changed her will, you know where the money would go—to charity."

"They had come to the Elm street corner where Lucy turned off. She said quietly, "I know how you feel, Val, but—well, your aunt isn't a young woman. In a year, perhaps a few months, you and Robert will be free to live where you like. We have to be practical about these things, Val."

Val had barely stopped. Now she walked on again, said over her shoulder, "I enjoyed the recital, Lucy. . . . Good night."

Alone, she slackened her pace, tried to adjust her mind to this unexpected development. Obviously, Robert had commissioned Lucy to break the news. . . . Aunt Mahala had agreed that she would live with her—and he hadn't the decency to ask her about it. . . . And I'll stand for it because I haven't the courage to fight them," she told herself again and again.

voice said: "Ain't love sun'n!" And there was Chinny tapping Cran on the shoulder and holding out his arms to Val. "Leeze tells me it's romance, full bloom, but being a hard-bolled realist, I'm skeptical. Tell me about it—does your heart do things and do you turn weak all over every time you hear his name?"

"Can't laugh. 'Funny,' she said, 'but it's one of the things you can't reduce to mere words. But why should you ask me? I'll bet you're an authority on the subject, Chinny."

"Love!" said Chinny with great disgust. "I wouldn't recognize it if I found it in my soup. And I would not eat the soup if I did."

At 11 o'clock Val told Cran: "I'd like to stay on until you and Leeze and Chinny were ready to go, but you know how things are. Could you not take me home and come back?"

Cran understood. He went off to find Leeze and Chinny and presently came back with Val's things and his own hat and coat.

It was a dark, moonless night and a fog was creeping up from the sound. Val knew what Cran would say and do—what she must say and do. "They were, as far as the circumstances were concerned, back on the Pennsylvania highway now. A boy and a girl definitely conscious that they were a boy and a girl. . . . alone, and keenly aware of that, too. . . . Cran would put his arm about her shoulders and draw her to him, and after a little he would take his foot from the accelerator and the car would gradually lose speed until they were not moving."

Chapter II. Leeze had said, "Stop at a telephone booth and I'll give Chinny a buzz. Chinny's an awful kid, but he's a senior at Yale, and that ought to help." And so they had driven twenty-five miles and found the lumbering young giant called Chinny who had promptly pulled Leeze into his car and led the way to a rather ordinary roadside place that boasted a floor show. It was a sad little show, but the orchestra was fair and Chinny seemed to know every one including the waiters and musicians, and Leeze was having a grand time.

Long ago when they were leaving New Manchester Val's awkward apology for Aunt Mahala's outburst brought from Leeze, "But you're not the one to be sorry—this is the second time I've brought you grief. Val, and I feel pretty bad about it. Looking away, she said, "What a fool I was to think you were trying to make Guy. . . . and continued to think it until Cran broke down and gave me the inside about you two. I'm glad—"

And now as she danced with Cran and felt the warm little circle where his cheek touched her head and heard the low husky voice close to her ear and thought of the general of it, Val understood that a kiss given casually on a Pennsylvania highway after a wild night at Pete Gaborau's had left an indelible imprint on this sweet boy's heart.

He could not tell her quickly enough. "It's the best thing, Val. Wake up in the morning and you're all over the place, so around thinking about you and wanting to see you every minute of the day. I'm off to sleep every night remembering how your eyes say things that can't be put into words and the way you toss your head when you laugh, and. . . ."

"Hush. . . . Val said, "You must not talk like that, Cran. Her voice was casual enough, but her throat ached with the pain of knowing she must hurt him. . . . Haven't you ever kissed a girl just because you thought it might be fun to kiss her, Cran?"

"I mean—a kiss doesn't mean anything, does it? Like that night when we were driving back to New York. Remember? You—you wanted to kiss me and I wanted you to and you did and—"

But she couldn't go through with it—not now. The way he looked at her—the startled look of his eyes, and the tightened muscles of the arm holding her to him drained her courage.

"Go on," he said. "Maybe I'll begin to make some sense out of Leeze's saying after a little. . . . I wanted to kiss you and you wanted me to and I did and—why the pause?"

"What do you think?" Head dropped back, smiling, thinking: "I must make him understand before principally, she meant about Robert—Robert who would look upon this nice boy as a juvenile. But she simply could not tell him now. When he continued to look down at her in silence, she said again, "What do you think, Leeze?"

"I think you're too darned sweet to be real," he said. "And I think I'm the luckiest bird in the world." And as if that settled everything, he dropped his head again and his cheek lay against the cushion of her red-brown hair until a LUCKY SHOULD BE HUMBLE. My wise friend William Hard is liked by statesmen because he never betrays their confidence, and because his mind works so clearly. He stands up to the full measure of his five feet five inches, and tells them the truth.

In a queer, shy fashion Calvin Coolidge warmed toward him, and the two had many a long and humorous visit. One night Bill said: "Mr. President, I think I should like to be President of the United States myself one of these days. I wish you would tell me how to go about it to realize my ambition. You have been through the mill, and your counsel ought to save me quite a bit of time."

Coolidge looked down his long nose, and then drawled: "Well, I can give you the formula. You just have to keep plugging along as hard as you can, and then hope for a million lucky breaks."

That sentiment does not have any very heroic ring. It does not echo Nathan Hale's, "I regret that I have but one life to give for my country," nor does it remind one of Napoleon's, "There are no Alps but there is a certain attractive honesty in the Coolidge statement. Most big men, if given an opportunity to be correspondingly frank, would admit that luck has played a large part in their success. One such man, who amassed several million dollars in the manufacturing business, said: "People credit me with superior intelligence and enterprise because I have made millions. But I also have lost millions. What about the superior intelligence and enterprise then?"

TRAINS DO STOP. William James, the psychologist, remarked that the average man is an old fogey at twenty-five. He meant that even at that early age most of us have dug our little ruts of daily habit, accumulated the slender stock of prejudices which we fondly term "convictions," and thereafter like nothing so little as to be compelled to change. We will be very peevish at any one who shows up our errors. We are second cousins to the doughty old station agent with whom a friend of mine had an encounter a few days ago.

The friend's car suffered an accident while he and his chauffeur were on their way to Chicago. Rather than lose a day and miss an important engagement, he decided to push on by rail. The station agent informed him that a local would be along in about six hours. "But what about the next express?" the stranded gentleman inquired.

"Oh, no use talking about express trains. They never stopped here and they never will."

The man remarked that his name was not known to the officials of the road and that they might, if advised of the circumstances, by wire, have an express take him on. The station agent scoffed. "Nothing doing," he spluttered. "Ain't never stopped and never will." Under much duress he finally sent the telegram. When the train did stop his disgust knew no bounds. "It just ain't got no business to," he spluttered.

It was said of Socrates that he found no more satisfaction in convincing others of their mistakes than in having his own errors pointed out. A long time had to elapse before the world recognized that Socrates was great; most of his neighbors in Athens just thought that he was a little queer.

Success. A successful man is one who makes more than his wife can spend, and a successful woman is one who marries him.

Many pleasant surprises were found, gardens which were only considered very good had improved a great deal, showing that the children were really working. On the other hand lack of encouragement and co-operation on the part of some parents were plainly seen in the half-hearted attempts of some youthful gardeners. Another visit will be made to the different schools, when instructions as to quantity of vegetables to be brought to the Fair will be given the children. The date of Fair has been definitely set for Sept. 4th. Some very substantial aid has been given towards the fund for prize money by interested friends.
