A Canada Dairy.

I am a dairy farmer, keeping from thirty to forty cows and making butter and cheese—the latter about three and a half months of the hottest weather in the season. I will give you my way of making both as short as possible. First, cleanliness in all things, from the time you sit down to milk until the article is sold.

FOR BUTTER MAKING.

I set the milk in eight quart pans, but not quite full. Skim it from thirty-six to forty-eight hours. Churn next day. I use Blanchard's churn made in Concord, N. H. When the butter begins to coagulate, scrape down all the particles of cream which may adhere to the cover, and then churn until the butter is in a lump; draw off the milk; put in a pailful of cold water; churn and draw off; and repeat until the water is clear. By all means keep the human hand off the butter, and remove it with lade to tray, drain off the water, weigh it, spread upon the butter worker, add one ounce of salt to one pound of butter, work the salt in a little with the lever, and remove it to the tray again. After standing a few hours work again, but only enough to incorporate the salt—the buttermilk being all got out by washing. Then pack and cover from the air. I never have any white specks in my butter, and always get the highest price.

FOR CHEESE MAKING.

I have a wood box about eight feet long, two feet broad, and eighteen inches deep, with legs; also a vat, made of tin, somewhat smaller, leaving a space about two inches all around, and four narrow slats at the bottom of the box so that the water can pass under and around the tin vat, when placed within the wood box. The milk is all strained at night into the vat, and cold water immediately put in the box to cool the milk; stir the milk and draw off the water, adding more until the animal heat is out of the milk. In the morning, skim the milk, mix it with some warm milk coming from the cow yard and return it through the strainer to the vat from whence it came. In the meantime draw off the water and put it in the dairy kettle, at hand, over the stove. When the milk is all in, the water being hot, return it to the box. In a few minutes the milk will be ready for the rennet, which should be about eighty-four degrees. Put in so much rennet that the milk will curdle sufficient to out in forty or fifty minutes. Pass the finger through the curd; if it does not adhere to the finger it will do to out. Pass the knife carefully through the curd, let it stand a few minutes, and then the human hands can be used to advantage, if they are perfectly clean. Manipulate the curd carefully. The water should be drawn and heated again. By this time begin to scald or cook gradually by putting water in the box. Work in this manner about one hour and a half, or until the whey is heated to about 100 degrees, or, in a cool day, to 104. Let it stand, stirring occasionally, until the whey smells a little sour, then draw off the whey and make ready for salting. Put about one pound of salt to twenty pounds of cheese or curd; let it cool well after salting before it is put in press. After it has been in press one hour, turn and put on the bandage; turn again next day, and the day after carry it to the cheese room. Turn and rub a little every day, and in two months I have got a good cheese that will do to eat; but let it alone and in four months I have a better one.

Starbridge P. Q., Nov. 30, 1871.

REMARKS.—We regard this as a model, agricultural article. Farmers often say, when asked to write some thing of their operations, that they have nothing to write about. Some extra crop or some unusual animal, might do for a subject, but the details of any particular kind of work are thought to be too tame. In every department of life much is lost by waiting for a chance to "do some great thing." Little chances are lost, little opportunities slighted, while waiting for something to turn up. Probably every dairy man or woman that reads the above will take pleasure in comparing their practices with those of the writer, and be benefited thereby. Farmers, write for your paper, and tell each other your way of doing things, how you fail and how you succeed—with the writer of the foregoing article we had the pleasure of a short acquaintance on the Fair Ground at Lowell last fall, and are now very glad to introduce him to our readers, though not at liberty to announce his name in full.—J. F. Farmer.

SARDINES.—Where they come from and how preserved. There are few delicacies so well known and so highly esteemed as the sardine. The delicious flavor of the fish when the tin is first opened, and the sweetness of the oil (always supposing a good brand), print the charms upon the memory. It will be unavailing news, however, to many to be told that anything good in this way is exceedingly scarce this season. Unfortunately, it was the same last year. Then the destroying demon of war took away the fishermen from the villages, and added to this, the fish were scarce, so that more were contracted for than could be delivered. This year it is worse. Few fish of any size have been caught (except some very large), least of all those of the finest quality. The consequence is, that the French manufacturers are again unable to carry out their contracts.

It does not always seem to be remembered that the longer the tin is kept unopened the more mellow do the fish become; and, if properly prepared, age improves them as it does good wine. But if they are too salt at first, age does not benefit them—they always remain tough. The size of tin is known as half and quarter tins. There are two half tins, one weighing eighteen ounces and the other sixteen ounces gross.

Trifles.

Aunt Dorothy says that steam is well enough to heat a building with, if you only have gladiators enough. Our hearts should grow tender in proportion as the winter becomes tough. Cats are to be taxed in Paris—a serious catastrophe for the felines. What young lady is driven from New England by the cold weather? Miss Quilo.

One who wishes the world to know what he knows about farming says that the best way to raise strawberries is with a spoon.

When business is dull traders should be sharp. Day up the little bills which you owe before the commencement of a new year.

If you court a young woman and you are won and she is won, you will both be one.

Salt Lake city proposes running a street railway—probably to utilize the tracks that saints are making.

What is the difference between an auction and sea-sickness? One is the sale of effects, the other the effects of a gale. And why do physicians have a greater horror of the sea than anybody else? Because they are more liable to sea-sickness.

"I ain't going to live long, mother," said a wee boy looking younger than one day, to his maternal parent. "Why not, pray?" "Because my pantalons is all tore out behind," was the conclusion.

It is said that Boaz married because he feared that his labors would think him a Ruth-less master. The fear was groundless, the laborers must have known that girls generally married their Boaz.

"I say, milkman, you give your cows too much salt?" "Why, how do you know how much salt I give them?" "I judge from the appearance of the milk you have brought us lately. Salt makes the cows dry, and then they drink too much water—that makes their milk thin, you know."

The last jibe at the expense of H. G. reports that "in an agricultural essay on tobacco he asserts that the fine-cut will not ripen well unless the tin-foil is dripped from the growing bud early in the spring, and that plug tobacco ought to be knocked off the trees with clubs instead of being picked off with the hand."

The "Parepa sausage-cutter" is now abroad, intended to take off the sharp edge of ignominy which the poor dogs must have felt when traveling through the old kind.

A recent trial in London developed a new profession. A witness alleged that he was an "early caller," and that he supported himself by calling people in the morning. His business hours were from 1 to 5 a. m.

There is a young Duke named Alexis whose other name somewhat perplexes. Alexanderivich. Is the awful word which stamps many who hear of Alexis. In the mind of the Grand Duke Alexis there is a question that is very vexing. Which is how to get rid of the tides of tide? Who are boring this Grand Duke Alexis.

There is a young man named Alexis about whom the opposite sex is solicitous, very. Though outwardly merry. As to who shall be Mrs. Alexis.

A farm laborer attempting to drown himself, an Irish reaper, who saw him go into the water, leaped after him and brought him safe to shore. The fellow attempting it a second time, got him out; but the laborer, determined to destroy himself, watched an opportunity, and hanged himself, behind the barn-door. The Irishman observed him, but never offered to cut him down. When, several hours afterwards, the master of the farm-yard asked him upon what ground he had suffered the poor fellow to hang there, "Faith," replied Patrick, "I don't know what you mean by ground. I know I was so good to him that I fetched him out of the water two times; and I know, too, he was wet through every rag; and I thought he hung himself up to dry."

Does Isaac manifest any taste for poetry, Mrs. Partington? asked the schoolmaster's wife while conversing on the merits of the youthful Partington. The old lady was basting a chicken which her friends had sent her from the country. Oh, yes," said the old lady smiling; he is partially fond of poultry, and it always seems as if he can't get enough of it." The old spit turned by the fireplace in response to her answer, while the basting was going on. "I mean," said the lady, "does he show any of the divine afflatus?" The old lady thought a moment. As for the divine afflatus, I don't know about it. He's had all the complaints of children; and when he was a baby, he fell and broke the carriage of his nose; but I hardly think he's had this that you speak of." The roasting chicken hissed and sputtered, and Mrs. Partington basted it again.
