This week, THE EXAMINER is being distributed free to Westmount homes—in addition to its regular list of paid weekly subscribers.

The object is to introduce Westmount's own newspaper, published for the interests of this city exclusively, to residents who do not read and enjoy and use it regularly each week.

Since THE EXAMINER serves no other community beyond Westmount, its content is confined to the immediate "parish-pump" concerns of Westmount and Westmounters. And this content complements, does not duplicate your daily newspaper reading.

If only to keep informed of the crucial developments in local government as they directly affect Westmount, you and your pocketbook—and for detailed coverage of news and comment of your home community—now is the time to order THE EXAMINER for carrier delivery every Friday morning to your own letterbox. Only $4.50 per year. Use the coupon below or simpler still, phone 932-3157. Please do it now.

P.S.: Our occasional free sample issues attract an abnormally high volume of advertisements. Our normal weekly issues, containing approximately the same amount of news and editorial content, average a handy 20 pages through the year.

OUTCOME OF MAYORS' MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER AWAITED

The councils of the various suburbs which comprise the Montreal Urban Community are awaiting the outcome of the meeting which the Conference of Suburban Mayors had with Prime Minister Bourassa on April 9. It is hoped that the meeting will lead to a solution of the problems which beset the MUC. In the meantime, residents of Westmount are urged to communicate their views to the Prime Minister, the Hon. Victor Goldbloom, Minister of Municipal Affairs, and their elected representative, the Hon. Kevin Drummond. This is the time, too, for community groups to follow up the various petitions on police integration which have been forwarded to Quebec.

COUNCIL MEETINGS --- Council meetings are held on the first Monday of every month and on the Tuesday following the third Monday. Time: 8 P.M. Some 30 interested citizens attended the meeting on April 2.

RECREATION NOTES --- The hard-surfaced junior tennis courts opened for the season on March 27. Clay courts will open May 1, weather permitting. This year the courts will be ready for play at 10 A.M. on Sundays instead of 1 P.M. as in the past. For schedule information call the Recreation Department at 935-8531, local 229. Softball and soccer registration for boys and girls is now underway at the recreation office in the artificial ice rink. The department is working toward opening the outdoor swimming pool not later than June 1.

ACTIVITIES SUPPORTED --- Council has voted funds to support the 4424 Club Inc., the Westmount Senior Citizens' Group and the Child's Play Group Centre as recommended by the ad hoc committee on Social Affairs.

FLOWER SHOW --- The annual Spring Flower Show will open on Wednesday, April 18, and will run for approximately three weeks. Last year the show attracted more than 33,000 visitors.

DOG AND BICYCLE LICENCES expire on April 30. Bicycle licences cost $2 and may be obtained at the police station on Stanton Street. Dog licences cost $5 and are issued at City Hall. All dogs must be kept on a leash while off the owner's property effective May 1.

WILL YOU VOLUNTEER? --- Leaders are urgently required by the Boy Scouts in Westmount. No scouting experience is necessary. All that is required is an interest in youth and a willingness to serve. Interested? Call District Commissioner Eric Mountjoy at 488-8736.

CPR FENCE REPAIRS --- At the request of Council, the Canadian Pacific Railway is surveying all the fencing of its right-of-way within the boundaries of the City to ensure that it is in good condition. Repairs will be undertaken as necessary.

LIBRARY TRUSTEES --- After serving two terms on the Board of Library Trustees, Mrs. T.R. Meighen has been succeeded as Chairman by John Mappin. Mrs. James Donville has been elected a trustee for a three-year term. The Council wishes to express its appreciation to Mrs. Meighen for her accomplishments on behalf of the Library over the last six years.

NEXT WEEK'S WEATHER

By ERIC NEAL

April 14 to 21

Trees are budding and sugaring-off is coming to an end. So are the moon first quarter rain and sleet storms. Floods are receding. It is break-up time north of the river.

Since Good Friday arrives in the cold, although sunny, period following the equinoctial full moon, we could have a few evening snowflakes until Saturday. Still stormy along the coast. Mainly sunny through the weekend, with light breezes to play with Easter bonnets.

Temperature range: south, 25 and 55 degrees F.; northern and Gulf counties, 10 and 50.

Siren-less ambulance crashes

Traffic piles up as first aid given to injured ambulance driver.

(see also page 9)

Four persons in an ambulance on its way to the Montreal General Hospital yesterday morning found their way there, delayed and not the way they expected.

All four received injuries when their ambulance, travelling east on Sherbrooke street, was hit by a 1971 Oldsmobile headed south on Lansdowne avenue through the intersection. The ambulance swerved across Sherbrooke onto a lawn near the northeast corner of the intersection, hitting a wall of the Abbey apartments and suffering $900 worth of damage.

The ambulance, part of the Community Ambulance Service in Verdun, was transporting a Montreal woman who had suffered a heart attack through Westmount when the accident occurred. The woman, Mrs. Conrad Lepine of N.D.G., was lying on a stretcher in the back of the vehicle receiving oxygen from the attendant Brian Wallace of Montreal when the mishap occurred.

Mrs. Lepine received injuries to her right hand as a result of the accident, while Mr. Wallace injured his back. Also injured

MEETINGS

The April mid-month meeting of city council is scheduled for Tuesday evening at 8 pm.

The April meeting of the Westmount Municipal Association, which normally would have been held last Tuesday evening, has been set for Tuesday evening, April 24, in Victoria Hall.

Board winds down

The Westmount School Board met for just over three hours Monday night, trying to close up as much business as possible before their dissolution June 30.

Plans for the May meeting are to have a "communications" meeting with representatives of school committees, home and school associations, and others to plan the continuance of school control once the school board has finished its duties.

In June, commissioners expect most of their time will be taken up meeting with and presenting candidates for PSBGM commissioners, to be elected June 18.

the City of Westmount, April 1973." carry any explanation of its purpose.

However, it was stated at city hall yesterday that the new format for the intended monthly was requested by the Westmount Municipal Association as a replacement for the widely-criticized, less-frequent, slick-paper "Westmount Letter" heretofore published by city council.

President M.E. Nixon of the WMA, at that body's Mar. 13 advisory council meeting, moved a resolution to request the changes. He explained that in his view the suggested bulletin should be "prepared by the city and not be information written by others," that it should be separate and "independent of any other agency."

He also declared that the project should not compete with any other media.

News withheld

However, the city with its corner on its own news developments, particularly public business conducted in the private general committee of council—where presumably the decision for the publishing venture itself was taken—held a number of announcements from the public media which freshened the largely previously-published items in its revamped sheet.

Chief of these was a major story, disposed of in four lines, that "Council has voted funds to support the 4424 Club Inc., the Westmount Senior Citizens' Group and the Child's Play Group Centre as recommended by the ad hoc committee on social affairs."

The committee rendered its report to council three weeks ago last night and it was summarized the following day in The Examiner. Full text of the report was carried in this paper a week later—since when news of action on the report has been awaited.

The funds apparently were voted by council in camera and the action kept secret for release in the city's own new publication.

Other items kept

There was similar non-mention to the conventional media, including The Examiner, of the succession of John Mappin to Mrs. T.R. Meighen as chairman of the library trustees; that the CPR was surveying its right-of-way fences to effect repairs, at the request of city council; and opening dates for hard-surfaced junior tennis courts, March 27; clay courts, May 1, and the swimming pool, not later than June 1.

At recent WMA advisory council meetings, Mr. Nixon had been critical of the city's communications with citizens, asserting in particular that insufficient recreation department information was available to the public.

However, the recreation department each week has heretofore delivered to The Examiner announcements of its programs, leagues, clinics and other events, and complete listings of scores, standings and scoring leaders, which have been published in full. Recreation Supervisor John Garland only last week expressed complete satisfaction with Examiner coverage of his department.

Mr. Nixon at a recent WMA meeting also made a reference to "distorted" reports, bringing a retort from one of his own members who has not always been sympathetic to this newspaper, that he thought Examiner coverage of WMA meetings had been particularly fair and complete. He made special reference to the report of the WMA's recent debate on the Hillside public housing project and its possible alternatives.

Circulation scored

Mr. Nixon also has been outspoken about alleged inadequacies of The Examiner's circulation.

However, The Examiner's paid subscribers now total just short of 3,000—virtually double the paid membership of the WMA, a possible indication as to where most community-oriented citizens turn for their information and guidance on municipal affairs.

There are, by the last census, 8,165 households in Westmount, but Census Canada rated only 5,390 of these as family units, those most likely to have an active interest in the community and its news. Rather more than half of Westmount dwellings are apartments, with a high proportion of transients, short-term tenants and others unlikely to have roots and interests in the Westmount community other than as an abode.

Facts given

The Examiner's circulation department has calculated that the paper, going almost exclusively to Westmount addresses, reaches nearly 80 percent of the individually owned Westmount homes.

The Examiner's Adcomp division calculates that the new one-sheet "Bulletin" should have cost the city's taxpayers for printing, envelopes, stuffing and first class postage approximately $1,200 plus taxes.

The Examiner's advertising department would have offered a full page, type-set, carrying considerably more data, in both languages if required, with delivery this week to every Westmount home in addition to the regular subscriber list, at its government ad rate of $180, with no tax applicable.

Circulation, Adcomp and advertising departments were not consulted; the editorial department was not even informed of the project nor of its content.

Reid Tilley, barrister, starts new N.S. career

A. Reid Tilley, retired Imperial Tobacco executive and veteran commissioner of the Westmount School Board and of the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal of which he was chairman, has taken up a new career in Kentville, N.S.

Mr. and Mrs. Tilley moved to Nova Scotia in 1971 after 34 years' residence in Westmount.

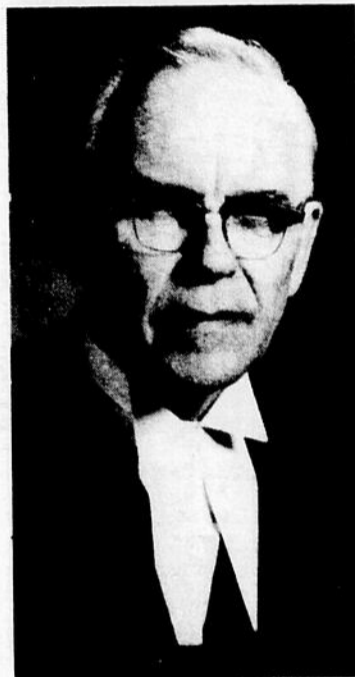

A lawyer by training, Mr. Tilley shortly after his arrival in Kentville became an articulated law clerk in one of the firms in that town.

Last Friday, having completed his articles and passed the examinations required by the Barrister Society of Nova Scotia, he was called to the bar and expects to practice in Kentville with the firm with which he was articulated.

Mr. Tilley reports that he and Mrs. Tilley are enjoying their new Maritime life-style.

"What I didn't appreciate," he writes, "was how much I was going to enjoy the varied problems and the direct contact with people which one gets as a small town lawyer."

Traffic chase brings attack on policeman

A Westmount Police patrolman tried to pull a driver over on St. Catherine street at Lewis avenue early Saturday morning, and found himself in a chase and eventual tussle with a 27-year-old Verdun man.

The officer had attempted to arrest the man for driving on the left side of the centre line of St. Catherine. The car pulled away and got as far as 4282 Dorchester before it finally was cut off by the pursuing policeman. When the constable approached the car, he was kicked in the shoulder by the man.

Police arrested the assailant and charged him with both the traffic offence and assaulting a police officer.

He was released according to law on promise to appear in Westmount Municipal Court at a later date.

Three-car collision hurts four

Three Westmounters and a Montreal resident were slightly injured in a spectacular three-car smashup at Chesterfield and Prince Albert avenues Thursday morning.

Mrs. Sonja Newman, 26, of 4 de Casson road, was headed north on Prince Albert avenue in her 1973 Montego when she was struck by Charles Banks, 30, of Montreal, who was proceeding west on Chesterfield in a 1971 Volkswagen. Mrs. Newman's car slid across the intersection into a 1971 Volvo headed southward on Prince Albert, driven by Clarke Blaise, 32, of 533 Victoria avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Blaise, who were recent victims of a house fire, received bruises in the mishap, as did Mrs. Newman and Mr. Banks. All four were taken to Queen Elizabeth Hospital by patrol car, and were later released. The cars were tagged for over $500 damage each.

Gas spilling from one of the damaged vehicles brought the Westmount Fire Brigade to the scene to wash down the street.

Liability in the accident has not been determined, and no charges have been laid by Westmount Police.

We Say

DIRTY POOL

THIS newspaper and successive administrations of the City of Westmount have, down through many years, enjoyed cordial and mutually productive relationships in the interests of what we always have regarded as the best city in Canada.

We have shared respected confidences and information with relays of fine mayors, aldermen and city officials. We have served each other well in the common cause of serving the citizens and the community they comprise.

We have shared a concern over communications and discussed them in general terms. We have offered what expertise we possess, accumulated over no little time in various media here and elsewhere, against a Westmount background dating from boyhood, to the city gratis.

Even while we take our chances, the good with the bad, with this newspaper commercially, we are deeply conscious that The Westmount Examiner is in fact a community institution held in trust to serve its readers as conscientiously as honesty, skill and judgment permit.

We happen to think those same qualities are incumbent upon those who occupy city hall for either the honor of office or their livelihoods.

Even while a meeting with an alderman and a city official was being postponed to discuss the very matter, The City of Westmount put in motion its "Westmount Bulletin," reproduced on our front page as it appeared this week.

We are not jealous, we are not fearful for The Examiner.

We are disgusted.

This administration in other ways is making an honest attempt at economy and preserving the heavily-laden Westmount taxpayer from waste and unnecessary expense.

Yet this expensive exercise of a whim was executed in typical, traditional council committee secrecy and with no announcement of intent—when the ostensible object of the thought and effort, if such was in fact expended, was to inform.

It is waste of public funds, with an indicated intention of repeating the folly monthly.

It is a shoddy, unprofessional product totally unworthy of the City of Westmount which one alderman already has remarked to us reminds him of a newsletter to parents from a second-rate private school. (Westmount has no second-rate private schools.)

It has been intimated to us that what has happened here, so far as The Examiner is concerned, is retaliation for the strong editorial position taken by this newspaper on some public issues which may run contrary to official thinking, particularly our consistent opposition to the public housing pet-project boondoggle and, more generally, our long-standing scoring of the conduct of public business in private.

If this be the case, let those at city hall who believe it be on notice that this newspaper stands on its duty to take honest, open stands on public issues—of which this editorial is but another example.

And that if the "Westmount Bulletin" is the kind of decision to which council is now turning, it will be countered with persistent investigative reporting of any such incompetence and waste, with appropriate editorial opinion, for guidance of the citizens.

As always, The Examiner's columns will be open to others' views, contrary or otherwise.

—J.W.S.

The price of democracy: I

THERE's news in the fine-print, legal-looking ads.

Take the returns of election expenses.

Back in January, within the delay of three months required by the elections act, the agents of Mr. Robert Keaton and Hon. C. M. Drury duly published in these pages their returns which held no particular surprises.

Mr. Keaton, the NDP candidate here in the October federal elections, showed an outlay of a modest $4,204.92. A week later, the incumbent and victorious liberal, Mr. Drury, declared $42,002.94—almost exactly 10 times Mr. Keaton's amount.

In the closing days of the campaign last autumn, there was considerable conjecture as to what Tory Mr. Michael Meighen was spending. The underdog Mr. Keaton was heard more than once to estimate that Mr. Meighen's unsuccessful drive for office must have Tony has been drafted as public affairs analyst on a feasibility study of the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline.

Geoffrey Lalonde stepped into the vacancy on March 26, 1972, as my new special assistant. A former Senneville, and more lately of Westmount, Mr. Lalonde will often be mistaken for Tony over the telephone.

Plan," International Journal; various articles on political, military, social and literary affairs, The Globe and Mail and The Globe Magazine.

Present position: Commissioner of official languages. Keith Spicer holds one of the most delicate jobs ever held by a man employed by the government of Canada. His is the job of steering the spirit of the country between defending the rights of Canadians concerning the two official languages and encouraging Canadians to participate in the two major cultures available to them. Civil Service Review, June, 1971: "Since I became the commissioner of official languages for Canada on April 1, 1971, my colleagues and I have approached our task in a spirit of informal diplomacy: We believe that the only civilized approach to our work is to appeal to people's sense of reason and fair play." And on the other hand, "Parliament has given us substantial powers, including the right to summon witnesses and to compel people to produce documents deemed requisite to an investigation. We hope, however, that we can carry out virtually all our work in a relaxed atmosphere, resorting to these powers only in the very rare cases when complete refusal to cooperate might force us to act more formally."

The Official Languages Act was approved unanimously by Parliament in July, 1969. The commissioner monitors, on behalf of Parliament, the performance of federal institutions in carrying out, within practical limits, section 2 of the act which makes English and French "the official languages of Canada for all purposes of the Parliament and government of Canada."

"Everything is in readiness for Tuesday when the pupils of the Hilda Galt School of Dancing will present the second edition of 'One Night of Rhythm' at Victoria Hall. The first edition was presented to a capacity audience last May and was enthusiastically acclaimed by all who saw the show. Over 150 pupils will appear in a very diversified program which includes toe, tap, ballet, acrobatic and exhibition ballroom dancing and musical comedy routines."

"One of the pleasant aspects of representing St. Antoine-Westmount in the House of Commons is that half your constituents give you practically no trouble at all. The City of Westmount has proved itself well able to look after its own. Ross Webster, therefore, will probably find himself more occupied with the problems of the St. Antoine district, where a matter of major concern is unemployment."

"A group of residents have formed an action committee in the Westmount area, to protest the annual seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The members of the committee believe the hunt to be barbarous and unnecessary and their ultimate goal, along with thousands of other Canadians from coast to coast, is the complete abolition of the harp seal hunt in the gulf. The Westmount committee is one of the first in the Montreal area."

Attending the Assembly

The president of the National Assembly, Jean Noel Lavoie, gave an interview the other day wherein he criticized the meagre attendance of the deputies at the debates of the Assembly.

There is no doubt that he has a good point. On numerous occasions recently the bells have sounded to call additional deputies to form a quorum, 30 when committees aren't sitting as well and 20 when they are.

While on the surface this would seem to indicate a lack of diligence, this is far from the case.

Old speeches

Most of the time so far, this session has been taken up with the debates on the inaugural address and the budget, each of which are allocated 25 hours of debating time. While the principal speeches by the official representatives of the various parties usually are well researched and reported, many ensuing interventions are not and sometimes, it seems, the occasion for many to dust off old speeches just to put something on the record.

While this is going on, it is small wonder that many deputies and ministers feel that aspects of their jobs other than house attendance might be more productive. There are correspondence and phone calls to attend to, meetings with various groups, discussions with civil servants in the various departments to solve outstanding problems, plus a host of other details.

The party line

To top it off, the members of the government party can't really get too original, as the purpose of the exercise is to stick close to the party line. Without solidarity, a government would be walking the plank toward defeat. Thus, the tendency is toward repetition. This might be a logical procedure given the system, but it is rather dull and the temptation to attend to other tasks is strong. As discipline is relative, problems of attendance naturally arise.

While the problem will remain to a certain degree it is less acute than previously. A committee headed by the speaker has succeeded in considerably stream-lining procedure, permitting a more expeditious study of credits and legislation.

We Say ...

cost as much as $100,000.

The suspense is over. The return published belatedly last week—some two months overdue, according to the law—declares Lawyer Meighen's outlay to have been rather modestly short of the guesses: $59,908.38, to be precise.

To be sure, this was $17,905.44 or 42.6 percent more than the more careful Mr. Drury. But we must be fair: Mr. Drury, as president of the Treasury Board, probably is more experienced than Mr. Meighen in handling money—particularly other people's (yours and ours)—though at this annual tax return time many of us question whether Mr. Drury or his government colleagues are particularly frugal.

We have been wondering what all this proves. If the spending is related to the results—and we do not mean to suggest for a minute that there is the smallest trace of old-fashioned vote buying herein involved—it would appear that Mr. Meighen got the worst deal. As the biggest spender, not only did he not win but his 9,856 votes cost him $6.08 apiece. On the other hand, perhaps Mr. Keaton's supporters were too parsimonious; their man didn't win, either—and the votes cast for him cost only a bargain basement 89 cents each.

Mr. Drury appears to have been the shrewdest shopper for, not only did he win handsomely, but he did it with seeming economy. The 22,109 ballots which returned him to Ottawa had a price tag of $1.90 per voter. That strikes us as pretty moderate in these days of galloping inflation, sort of equating an elector to a pound of reasonably good beef.

However, in all this the smartest candidate to run in Westmount may have been Mr. Peter Foster. He flushed out 260 votes in this constituency without, reportedly, spending a cent. Communist economics can't be all bad.

The price of democracy: II

THERE is a woeful lack of interest, concern or debate over the restructuring of the education system of the island of Montreal.

While this culminates with the new boards and island council which take office July 1, much of the process already is in tow.

For example, the school committees which form, or should form, the basis for the new philosophy of personal, local involvement and of universal suffrage, have been in being since last autumn. The committees are still, by and large, feeling their way.

Far too many citizens, even parents of children in the schools with the greatest interest in seeing that the system works, are still too tentative in showing their interest, if any.

We have had an enumeration all over the island. Now the lists are open for inspection and revision as required. There has been the barest minimum of notification given by the PSBGM—the various Catholic school commissions have done a far more forthright job—that citizens have only until next Tuesday to see that their names are on the lists for the June 18 elections.

(The Westmount School Board, on its own initiative, last week reminded Westmounters that the local board office at Westmount High School is the list inspection point for the new PSBGM Ward 4, which will embrace Westmount.)

There is then the matter of candidates from Ward 4. Despite word from the education committee of the Westmount Municipal Association that there are plenty of potential candidates, just who they are is unknown to the public. Deadline for nominations to the PSBGM is June 4, a little more than seven weeks away. It seems incredible that no one has yet declared himself or herself in this ward. Who is waiting for whom?

We believe that the legislation under which restructuring is to take place is a long-overdue opportunity for the ordinary citizen to make himself heard and to participate in the molding of the educational process.

It is an opportunity to become a countervailing force to the excessive centralization of decision making in the department of education at Quebec.

It is an opportunity to replace appointees with elected persons.

But the whole process runs the risk of becoming a classic case of people getting what they deserve—a professional-dominated educational system in this instance—unless they bestir themselves and dare to become involved, and soon.

Greene avenue greener thanks to parks people

(A copy of the following letter has been sent to The Examiner:)

Dear Sir:

We wish to congratulate the parks department for the great idea it had of planting trees on Greene avenue below Dorchester boulevard.

Our thanks are directed particularly to Mr. Leo McGregor whose judgment and diligence in directing his congenial crew made it a fast operation, with little damage to the surrounding lawns.

The trees will provide very welcome greenery to this otherwise pretty section of the street which, in the past five years that we've known it, has lost all its trees, one by one.

Already, some out-of-town visitors to Westmount have noticed the trees and, no doubt, when the leaves are out, driving up Greene avenue—one of the main access roads to Westmount—will be more pleasant.

Indeed, thanks for making Greene avenue greener!

Sincerely,

Elyse and Richard van Leeuwen

Pop bottlers not responsive

Sir: I would like to express my thanks for the article by Mr. Andy Dodge in the March 15 issue concerning my work in collection bottles for recycling; also for the kind word about those two wonderful ladies, Mrs. H. Vineberg and Mrs. G. H. Nation.

I have received many reassuring letters since the article appeared. However, the main soft drink manufacturers mentioned in the article have remained silent. Apparently to them, the recycling of bottles is not an important project. We all know that it is, in order to keep the ecology issue alive.

The citizens of Westmount and nearby areas have clearly shown their interest and concern regarding my project.

Anyone willing to dispose of any type of bottles or glass containers may contact me at 932-2711 and we will pick them up. I am assured of the co-operation of The Examiner's readers, because I know they are concerned.

Mr. Spicer's salary is $38,000.

How to Help

Westmount has been exceptional in its efforts to stimulate biculturalism—primarily in the educational program opportunities we have given our children.

In his second annual report to Parliament last month, Keith Spicer referred to the teaching of second language skills in Canada as a country-wide catastrophe. Perhaps it may be suggested that our greatest asset, and our contribution to Canada and the office of the commissioner, lies in a plan and a proposal for the successful bicultural experience we have had here.

Professionalism marks 'Sunshine'

By MARK ELLWOOD

You've got to hand it to Little Mary Sunshine or, that is, the cast and crew of Little Mary Sunshine.

The show was a success. One of the factors was Steve Petruska's insistence on professionalism.

For instance, when actors were not in a scene, they had to wait in an adjoining classroom to prevent backstage noise. Steve would not allow actors to be seen before the show or during intermission, nor would he allow flowers to be presented publicly at the end of the show or any of the other things that mark an amateur show.

Even professional superstitions were followed.

Wednesday night's audience was the largest and the most responsive to the light and cheerful character of Kim Ware, Deanna Jordan's overtones of Lisa Minelli, Jack Shore's foolish clowning, and the stern leadership of Jeremy Porteous.

Of course, one cannot forget the other leads in their respective roles, and the constant flirting of the forest rangers and the young ladies.

Backstage suspense

Backstage the musical was just as exciting and suspenseful as it was out front. A pair of forest ranger boots was found missing only a couple of hours before opening and had to be replaced.

After the sparklers which were used at the beginning of act two had almost failed to light for the dress rehearsals and the first performance, a stage hand had to light them with a blow torch. Standing nearby was another stage hand prepared for the worst with a fire extinguisher.

Money-wise the musical did better than expected. Expenses ran to about $2,000 for royalties, costumes, props, music and set materials. All but about $300 of this was brought in from ticket sales. Steve Petruska would have liked more advertising but confessed that he didn't know the area and the people to contact in order to get advertising. However, the show drew good crowds each night and a small loss was worth it.

Westmount High School NEWS

Everyone who worked on the show was satisfied, specially since their efforts proved that Westmount High could produce a worthwhile professional show and that similar efforts may be seen in years to come.

To everyone who saw or worked on the show, thank-you.

Three months for shoplifting plus assault

A man arrested for shoplifting in the Miracle Mart at Alexis Nihon Plaza at 2:45 pm Tuesday assaulted the store's security officer who was detaining him while waiting for Westmount policemen to take him away.

William Wayne Stone, alias Wayne Hyland, 23, was charged with assault and shoplifting Wednesday morning in Westmount Municipal Court and, after pleading guilty to both counts, sentenced to three months in prison for each charge, sentences to run concurrently.

Stone claimed residence in Montreal, though he is originally from Toronto.

were Mr. Lepine, who was riding in the front seat of the vehicle, and Frank G. Conlon, who was driving the ambulance. Mr. Conlon received injuries to his chest, left wrist and hand, and right leg, and is recovering in hospital. Mr. Lepine injured his left leg.

The ambulance was being escorted along Sherbrooke street by a Westmount Police patrol car, which had been summoned into service when Mr. Conlon discovered he had a defective siren on his vehicle. Westmount Police had led the ambulance through the city from Atwater avenue to pick up the woman in N.D.G., and were on their way back through Westmount when the collision took place.

Lionel Rose, 71, of Montreal had been driving south on Lansdowne avenue when he heard the police siren approaching the intersection. He stopped to allow the vehicle to overtake traffic waiting for the light on Sherbrooke street; once the patrol car had passed he started up to cross the intersection. The police vehicle was reportedly three or four car lengths in front of the ambulance as it passed Lansdowne.

Front end demolished

The front end of the ambulance was demolished due to impact with the wall; the left rear fender of the vehicle was also pushed in. Mr. Rose's car suffered $250 damage to the right front bumper. Mr. Rose himself was unhurt.

The four victims were transported to the Montreal General Hospital in two ambulances summoned from the Executive Ambulance Company.

LP detention

Two juveniles stole an LP record from a third youth in Westmount Square Monday evening. The victimized 15-year-old called Westmount Police at 7:35 pm; attending officers were able to apprehend the young thieves soon afterwards. The two, aged 14 and 15, were charged Tuesday in Social Welfare court. Each was sentenced to a week's detention.

Dr. I. Campbell to head High Home-School

The new mental health team at Westmount High School will explain their expanding role in education to parents and students at the Home and School annual meeting and election April 25 at 7:30 pm in the school.

The team attempts to work with families and staff clarifying difficulties and educational problems. It includes a psychiatrist, Dr. Helen Czevic; psychologist, Dr. George Mager; nurse, Mrs. Pauline Valle; and a member of the school guidance department.

During an informal question forum, questions about the withdrawn student, students who skip, those with learning difficulties, those showing stress and students who suddenly change friends or their pattern of life will be discussed. Any questions and all concerns will be welcomed.

During the first half-hour new officers will be elected for the Home and School. Nominations may be made either in writing to the secretary, Mrs. B. Lax, 2 Westmount Square, or at the meeting, with the consent of the nominees.

A report also will be made of the highly successful fashion show put on by students and the Home and School in March which raised $1,050 for the scholarship fund, which helps graduating students attend CEGEPs. Mrs. M. Backman directed the show and 80 student models took part along with the student orchestra.

The proposed new slate of officers includes: president, Dr. I. Campbell, 256 Kensington avenue; vice-presidents, Mrs. Sheila Robertson, 730 Roslyn avenue, and Mrs. Pauline Ashton, 464 Argyle avenue; treasurer, Mrs. Ann Fish, 39 Cote St. Antoine road; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Marie Lloyd-Smith, 530 Argyle avenue; recording secretary, Ken Sinclair, 335 Roslyn avenue; and past president and social values chairman, Dr. D. Laskey, 4379 de Maisonneuve boulevard.

Committee chairmen: membership, Mrs. Joan Bell, 78 Arlington avenue; class representatives, Mrs. Rene Fitzgerald, 4341 Montrose avenue; program and extra-curricular activity, Mrs. Mary Dodge, 622 Sydenham avenue; publicity, Mrs. Marilyn Muir, 43 Burton avenue; scholarship, Mrs. M. Backman, 564 Claremont avenue, and hospitality, Mrs. Michael Lash, 657 Cote St. Antoine road.

St. Andrew's Holy Week marking set

The beginning of Holy Week will be observed this Sunday at St. Andrew's United Church when the Palm Sunday service of Holy Communion takes place. New members will be received.

Arrangements are being completed for a Good Friday service at St. Andrew's when the ministers and members of Dominion Douglas and Westmount Park United churches will participate in a joint service at 11 am on April 20th.

Members of St. Andrew's outreach committee assisted by volunteers sponsored a tea for senior citizens residing at Prospect House last Monday.

Nearly 400 persons attended a youth service at St. Andrew's last Sunday. Members of the church's midweek groups for children and young people paraded and took part in the worship. Folksongs were sung, accompanied by Harold Knowles on the guitar.

A meeting of the Griffith-McConnell Auxiliary takes place at St. Andrew's next Wednesday at 2 pm. The guest speaker will be Rev. Donald Burns, recently appointed administrator of the home.

Passover arranged at Shaar

Congregation Shaar Hashomayim Monday evening will commence the celebration of the holiday of Passover which symbolically relives the Jews' exodus from slavery in Egypt.

Services will be held that evening at 6:10 pm in the main Synagogue. The following morning services will be held at 8:30 am in the main Synagogue, with the sermon delivered by Rabbi Wilfred Shuchat.

The second day of Passover will be ushered in at 6:30 pm, Tuesday evening. Services will be held on Wednesday April 18, at 8:45 am in the main Synagogue, with the sermon delivered by Rabbi Herbert Mandl.

Dominion to hold Communion

Palm Sunday will be observed in Dominion-Douglas United Church in the morning worship this Sunday. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered. New members will be received.

Dr. Douglas Smith's sermon, "...and yet a greater triumph," will deal with the death of Jesus which is the theme of the adult study group at 10 o'clock. What is the meaning of the Good Friday Cross? Why have Christians throughout the ages centred the good news of God's grace in the Cross?

The annual Good Friday Remembrance of the three Westmount United churches will be held in St. Andrew's at 11 am.

Zelda Heller appointed by Ottawa

Mrs. Zelda Heller, 4998 de Maisonneuve boulevard west, former theatre editor of The Montreal Star, has been named director of performing arts in the arts and culture branch of the department of the secretary of state.

She will be responsible for developing and administering a policy for the performing arts (theatre, music and dance) in line with the government's broad policy of encouraging cultural expression and appreciation among Canadians. Her appointment to the Public Service was effective March 1.

Mrs. Heller grew up in New York City. She began studying piano at the age of 6 and made her debut recital at 16 in Steinway Hall. In 1943 she graduated from the Juilliard School of Music with a BS in piano and went on to take a BA and MA in musicology at Columbia University.

After graduation, she worked as editor for music publishers in New York for a year, spent a year in Rio de Janeiro setting up a branch office for an American music publishing firm, and six years in France working with avant garde theatre groups and writing scripts and freelance articles. In 1959 she published a book on the Bolshoi Ballet.

She came to Canada in 1961 and since then has been active as a freelance writer and broadcaster. In 1965 she joined The Gazette as a critic, reviewing music, theatre and film. She became theatre editor at The Star in 1968. In 1972, she received the first grant from the Canada Council for travelling critics, and travelled across Canada to cover the theatre scene, while continuing her work at The Star.

Local couple spends holiday in England

A trip to England can be made for reasons sentimental, reasons historical, or just for the purpose of enjoyment.

Take the trip of Russell D. Hammond and his wife, of 4280 de Maisonneuve boulevard west, last August and September. They came back bubbling with news of family, new acquaintances, old friends and stories about the many places they visited in England, Wales and Scotland.

"Perfect trip and weather, no rain as usual," Mr. Hammond wrote friends on his return. "We call these pilgrimages, we love them so."

The Hammonds spent their first week in Loughton, Essex, 14 miles north of London with fast Underground service to the central city. They were able to visit such sights as the Tower of London, St. Paul's Cathedral, Buckingham Palace, Madame Tussaud's and the London Zoo during the week, as well as having ample opportunity to shop and visit old friends.

A two-week trip then followed,

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Hammond with highlight stops at Bath, Plymouth, Burton-on-the-Water, Warwick Castle, Stratford-on-Avon, Chester, Durham, and on to Edinburgh by way of Castle Bar.

Did preaching

Mr. Hammond was able, during the trip, to turn his hand to lay-reading and preaching during Sunday services at St. John's Church, Buckhurst Hill, St. Stephen's Church in Walthamstow, St. Mary Magdalene in Taunton, Somerset, and at Waltham Abbey in Essex.

Mr. Hammond used the trip to discover historical data about his own family, a popular hobby among Canadians returning to the "old country." The Hammonds, he relates, found their way into England in 1066 AD during the Norman conquest, when they fought under William the Conqueror. The family was known for business and shops in Essex and Kent, but broke into several different lineages, each with its own coat-of-arms (there are at least eight).

The Hammonds took in churches, abbeys and castles throughout the British Isles during their trip, both with tour groups and on their own. This year, Mr. Hammond hopes, "we plan a less-hurried trip," when they will spend more time with friends and new acquaintances.

Fire Brigade away twice

The Westmount Fire Brigade found itself outside city limits twice in the past week, once in Outremont and once at the St. Laurent fire station, for mutual aid calls.

Last Tuesday a call from St. Laurent at 11:27 am brought the local firefighters to cover at the station while St. Laurent men answered a major call.

On Thursday, Westmount men went to 436 Cote St. Catherine road at 5:18 am to help Outremont fight a house fire there. The call kept some trucks away from Westmount for 3 1/2 hours; it turned out firemen were needed here during their absence.

Snow prangs

Westmount Police were notified of seven traffic mishaps in two hours during the snowfall Tuesday morning. None of the occurrences resulted in injuries and only one was serious enough to necessitate filing a police report. The tally was recorded between 8:30 and 10:30 am.

Face-lift for block

The apartment complex on St. Catherine street between Kensington and Metcalfe avenues is undergoing a major face-lift. Bricks surrounding the glass store-fronts are removed to make way for precast concrete. New signs for the stores will be embedded in the new substance and the sidewalk will be replaced to allow for greenery and other improvements.

The entrance to the 200 Kensington avenue apartments, at the side of the building, has been completely torn up to allow for installation of a larger sewage drain, according to the building's superintendent, M. Davis.

Open house

Marymount High School, which is attended by many Westmount Roman Catholic youngsters, is holding an open house for interested parents today from 1:30 to 4:30 pm and from 6:30 to 9:30 pm.

Human rights is subject for contest

The Canadian Human Rights Foundation is offering $5000 in grants to writers, university graduates, undergraduates and others interested in preparing books, dissertations, or projects dealing with some aspect of human rights in Canada.

Conditions for the awards have been made simple, can be written, visual, or in other form in English or French. Applicants are being sought from across Canada or abroad.

Initial winners will be announced after June 1, 1973. It is hoped that the quality of the submissions will warrant at least two initial awards and possibly more later in the year.

Judges include Prof. Maxwell Cohen, 519 Victoria avenue, and Mme. Therese Casgrain, 250 Clarke avenue.

The foundation's board includes Westmounters Leslie Buzzell, CA, 4300 de Maisonneuve boulevard; Mrs. David Nicholson, 33 Rosemount avenue; Hon. Justice Harry Batshaw, 4336 Montrose avenue; Prof. Cohen; Maynard Gertler, 88 Church Hill, and Dean Howard I. Ross, 56 Summit Circle.

Submissions should be sent to the Awards Committee, Prof. John Humphrey, Chairman, Canadian Human Rights Foundation, Suite 2165, 630 Dorchester boulevard west, Montreal 101, Quebec.

Cultural Recreation Project takes skills to young, old

By ANDY DODGE

The Cultural Recreation Project, a Local Initiatives Project which has taken over the facilities of the Office for Community and Social Development at 1210 Greene avenue, does not plan to be around for long but hopes to have an impact while it exists.

The project is a 15-person operation designed to help other community projects "innovate and bolster their own programs," according to project co-ordinator Miss Rina Fraticelli. Existing agencies are being taught to take over new programs innovated by CRP staff.

CRP is not connected to any specific agency or program, but sends its instructors "any place we feel is in need of help," Miss Fraticelli said. "We want to fill the temporary gap in instructors and train them to carry on." Already the Westmount Senior Centre, Weredale House, the Catholic Men's Hostel, Park Extension Community Corporation, and Montreal Association for the Blind have felt the effects of the services offered.

Five at Senior Centre

Five different young people, for example, spend regular time at the Westmount Senior Centre, teaching furniture refinishing, puppetry and bridge and offering advice on drugs and prescriptions which the older folk might need. These skills will be passed on to the seniors so they eventually can instruct themselves and each other.

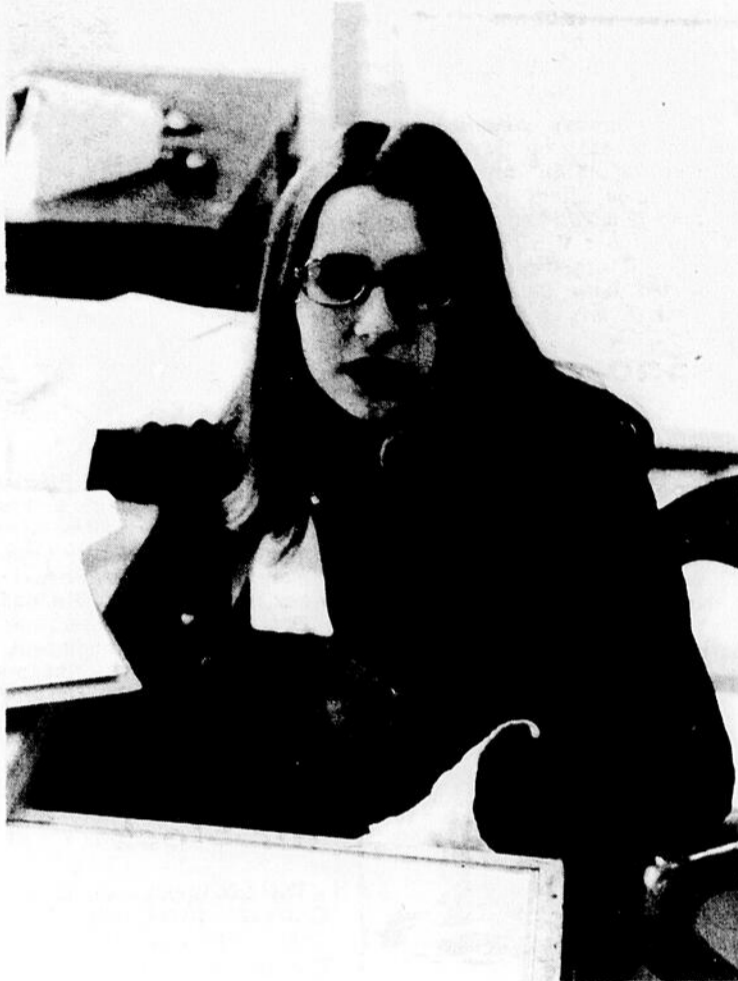

At the Montreal Association for the Blind, one girl is teaching inmates to play "Braille bingo," as well as handling adjustment problems for those recently blinded.

The 12 "program assistants," as they are called, have had their 40 hours each week filled with various projects at locations around the city, even though CRP began only in January. "Because of the time shortage we had to hire people and get them to fit the needs of the centres," Miss Fraticelli noted, rather than seeking out needs and finding people to meet them. We've been very lucky with the people we hired."

The workers generally work on youth and senior citizen projects, rather than programs for the middle aged (although blind people come of all ages). Time is divided about equally between seniors and youth, though initially most projects involved the former.

Something to relate to

"It's sort of hard to do just human relations, getting people involved with no real excuse. But if you have a skill and can go to them with it, you give them something to relate to," Miss

Rina Fraticelli

Fraticelli said in describing the purpose of the project. She considers the skill-instruction will be a "drawing card" for the centres with which CRP works.

"We're solving a need," she observed, "not just making people aware of a new need they have to solve."

The program costs $29,835 for four months of LIP funding. Some $25,500 of this is spent in salaries for the 12 "program assistants," Miss Fraticelli, a bookkeeper and a secretary. Office expenditures are kept to a bare minimum—there are two desks, two phones, a typewriter and adding machine—so that the extra money can be used for the projects. The staff has an average of $20 each month to use for expenses, including transportation.

Though CRP will apply for a renewal of its grant, which runs out June 1, they don't expect to get one. "From the number of people we're affecting, there's a chance they might renew it, but we're sort of resigned to the fact that we won't get it," Miss Fraticelli said. She felt most of the staff would look for other jobs when the time came, perhaps doing the same type of work.

Messiah ends music series

Expanded horizon

The original grant application was drawn up by David Oliver of the Office for Community and Social Development. When the grant came through and the "Office" was disbanded, he asked Miss Fraticelli to be co-ordinator. She expanded the horizon of the original grant, which was to be for lower Westmount and St. Henry, but kept the goals about the same.

Miss Fraticelli has worked previously for the 4424 Youth Clinic and as a detached worker in Westmount.

E. A. Thorne will offer commentary on recordings of "The Messiah" Wednesday at the Atwater Library's music appreciation night, starting at 8 pm.

The music and discussion, free to the general public, are the last of the Atwater Library's program of Wednesday night features for the 1972-73 season.

Library officials have not yet determined the next season's program, which begins in October, but commented that the presentations would be "varied and interesting."

Parents observe lessons

Parents' days at the Westmount recreation department's dance classes were held last week.

Proud mothers and fathers were given the opportunity to observe their children during their lessons.

Little girls in pink leotards, tutus and slippers demonstrated their new-found skills as did the tap dancers, baton twirlers, Highland dancers and gymnasts.

The 121 boys and girls range in age from six to 14. They have been greatly involved since September in learning the art of dance.

Miss Beverly Adams, who has been instructing the classes, gave a brief outline of her aims and techniques of teaching.

The week of demonstrations brought to a close the dance lessons until September.

Break-in

Westmount Police were notified early Monday morning of a break-in at 4484 Sherbrooke street, although the complainants were not able to determine what had been stolen from the offices in the building. Investigating detectives found that the building had been entered by way of the back window.

Ventilated

Officials of the Aviron Institute, 3035 St. Antoine street, found 15 windows broken in the school at 3:15 pm Sunday. They estimate each window will cost $10 to replace.

Air Cadets have program Saturdays

By Flt. Sgt. DEAN TOPLIS

In addition to our regular Monday night training, No. 1 Air Cadet Squadron has a diverse program of sports and training on Saturday mornings. This program includes karate, floor hockey and flying scholarship training.

The karate training is open to all cadets in the squadron who wish to take it. They receive excellent instruction in an ancient form of Chinese karate.

A floor hockey team was organized by Flt. Sgt. Colin O'Neill. The team, which practices each Saturday, is willing to accept a challenge to a game from any other youth or cadet group.

Flying scholarship training is also given on Saturdays. Cadets having two or more years' service with the squadron and who are 17 as of last Aug. 1 are allowed to take this course, which is the first step toward achieving a private pilot's or glider pilot's licence through the air cadets.

The squadron's Link trainer, an aircraft simulator, is in operation on Saturdays as well as Mondays. In this machine, cadets get a chance to see what it is like to fly an airplane by instruments alone. They fly the simulator "blind," using only the instruments to determine their direction and attitude relative to the ground.

In the planning stages are photography, radio, and a chess and checkers club, and many other activities.

The squadron meets at Westmount Park School.

Snatch fails

A gang of teenage youths failed to snatch a purse from a young woman in the tunnel of Westmount Square Thursday evening. She phoned Westmount Police about the incident at 6 pm. Police are still looking for the youths.

Heidi: five firsts

Westmount swim star Heidi Borner, 17 Grenville avenue, took top individual honors over the weekend among 600 swimmers at the first annual Pointe Claire Hall of Fame Meet at the Pointe Claire pool.

Heidi, swimming for the MAAA, stole five first prizes and broke three provincial records, one of them her own. She also set a record by winning the 400-metre freestyle event, the first time it has been offered in the 11-12-year-old age group.

Heidi took the 200-metre freestyle event with record-breaking time of 2:20.6, and then took the 100-metre butterfly with a time of 1:14.1. In both events she broke records previously held by Wendy Quirk, who has now moved on to set records in the 13-14-year age group.

Heidi is not far behind, however, as she now holds provincial records for her age group in every freestyle event for the 11-12-year age group. She also holds the 800-metre freestyle record over swimmers from every other age group in the province.

Heidi has qualified and plans to swim for the national championships in several different categories, including long-distance freestyle events, which are her strongest categories.

... and he says it's the car for our family, 'cause it's plenty roomy for Mom and us kids... and it's easy on his pocketbook too, which is a good thing 'cause there's five in our family.

He says when he gets his new FORD he'll buy it at HY-ROAD FORD 'cause they always give him a good deal. My DAD should know... he's bought three cars from them before.

And you know... Dad also says that a friend of his "leased" his new FORD from HY-ROAD.

Weredale's floor hockey faltering

By DAVE PETERS

After having a strong first half of the season, the Weredale senior floor hockey team has been having a lot of problems. They dropped their last two games of the regular season to St. Thomas Aquinas and St. Brendan's, and are down one game to none in a best-of-three semi-final. They lost this game to St. Brendan's who showed marked improvement in defeating Weredale 12-4.

After this dismal start to the playoffs, coach Norm Ham-brooke has had the team practising every night in an all-out effort to break out of this slump.

The next game is scheduled for Tuesday night, to be played at Weredale.

Also in floor hockey, Weredale has submitted a team in the Maurice Richard tournament to be held at Caughnawaga in the new gym facilities there. This will be a one-day tournament of three or four games on April 21.

Conrad Wilson, one of the junior staff who plays for the Westmount Rugby Club team, has been chosen for the all-star team and will soon be travelling to Boston to play against other teams in that area.

Easter holidays are coming next week and will be greeted by all the boys in the House.

Local oversight of schools mapped

District status doomed

Westmount Schools Superintendent R. T. B. Fairbairn told the local school board Monday night that Westmount probably will lose its separate status as an administrative school district in June, when the establishment of wards and the reshuffling of the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal takes place as a result of Bill 71.

Mr. Fairbairn told the commissioners that he thought it unlikely that each administrative district would have a parents' committee to oversee operation of schools in the area, but that these would be established according to other criteria.

Commissioners took exception to this policy, and agreed with Commissioner Brian Emo that "the regional parents' committees should lobby very strongly to have regular meetings with superintendents and elected commissioners" for each district.

Commissioner Mrs. Muriel Kaplan noted that section 619 of Bill 71 established parents' committees for each administrative district and wondered whether Mr. Fairbairn's doubts were well-founded.

Mr. Fairbairn said he would check and report again at a later meeting.

High School loses nine

Neither Roslyn School nor Westmount Park School had any change in enrolment during the past month, Superintendent R. T. B. Fairbairn told the Westmount School Board Monday night.

Westmount High School lost nine pupils in that time, however.

There are now 951 students at Westmount High School, while 825 attend Roslyn and 396 go to Westmount Park.

Up in air

It is not yet known whether there will be an English kindergarten at Roslyn School this fall, as parents have not yet expressed their wishes on the subject. Superintendent R.T.B. Fairbairn said a meeting of parents April 25 will help the school determine the demand for an English class of five-year-olds at the French-immersion school.

Media centres move closer

Media centres proposed for Westmount Park and Roslyn schools have "passed the initial screening," according to Superintendent R. T. B. Fairbairn, and have taken the first step toward being approved by the PSBGM.

Mr. Fairbairn told Westmount school commissioners Monday night that a request for a $25,000 capital equipment project had been cleared by a PSBGM

McGill refuses bequest

McGill University has refused to handle a bequest sent to it by the Westmount School Board recently because it discriminated against women. Commissioner Brian Emo told the board Monday night. The bequest, given by Isobel H. Wolfe, is for a graduate of the "Westmount High School for Boys" going on to McGill, in memory of her son, Angus McCoy Smith.

School commissioners were in a quandary over how to handle the $15-a-year prize once there are no longer any commissioners, and no Westmount High School graduates will be going straight into McGill once the university dissolves its CEGEP program beginning this fall.

It finally was decided that the commissioners would send the bursary back to Crown Trust to handle, if this can be done legally.

"We feel sorry for the families involved," Commissioner Mrs. Muriel Kaplan said about the problem. "And we understand the extenuating circumstances."

The problem of this bursary, as well as a recommendation from Mr. Emo concerning the turnover of all assets held by the board, will be dealt with during the May meeting.

Free recitals are given nod

The Westmount School Board gave unqualified support Monday night to free recitals offered by Mary Morter, who has been giving poetry readings and discussions along with guitarist Chuck Wiseman to grades 6, 8, 10 and 11 students at Westmount schools.

Miss Morter is applying for a Local Initiatives Program grant to continue her presentations, considered by the Westmount Fine Arts Committee and school commissioners as "excellent."

committee which had considered "floods" of other proposals from other schools. Now the appropriation must go through the greater board's budget committee, finance and legislation committee, then be cleared by the PSBGM itself and passed on to the island council.

If the proposal makes it through the steps, it should be approved shortly after May 15, when the island council is to receive it, he said.

Quitting by Robb refused

Westmount School Board Chairman Mrs. Joan Rothman Monday night rejected a letter of resignation submitted to her by Commissioner James Robb, who had felt he could not attend future school board meetings.

Mr. Robb, who is also a member of the top-level island council, found that that body decided to meet on the second and fourth Mondays of each month. Since the school board regularly meets on the second Monday of the month, he felt he could not serve adequately on both bodies.

Mrs. Rothman pointed out that he had been able to make it, albeit an hour late, on Monday night. The May meeting had been moved to Tuesday night, May 15, so they could hear about decisions made at the meeting of the provisional island council before they hold their own meeting. His absence at the final meeting of the board, scheduled for June 11, was felt to be inconsequential since few decisions will be coming out of that meeting.

Mr. Robb, therefore, is still Commissioner Robb.

Commissioners show split on 'human awareness' plan

The human awareness program initiated by the Westmount School board and now recognized by the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal met a snag Monday night at its origin.

School board commissioners could not agree on how hard or fast to push for the implementation of the program, even at the local level.

By a vote of 3-2, with Commissioners Muriel Kaplan and Jennifer Gooch dissenting, the school board passed a resolution of "continued support for the human awareness program, specially in the elementary schools."

The agreed-to motion was itself a watered-down version of a resolution passed by the public health committee and passed on to the school board. The committee's idea was to have the PSBGM find teachers interested in human awareness, arrange to have three-week courses prepared for them, and to allow them free time to take the courses once they were available.

Mrs. Joan Rothman, the chairman, told the board that courses could be arranged easily by universities if they were given sufficient prior notice, and that they would arrange for "crash" courses in group dynamics, child development and other areas. Training would take about three weeks of intensive studies, after which teachers could read and study on their own alongside the regular courses they teach.

Special school

The Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal is hoping to establish a special education high school somewhere in the west end by this fall, Commissioner Mrs. Muriel Kaplan said Monday night. Mrs. Kaplan told the Westmount school commissioners the school, which would handle mostly "not educable mentally retarded" students, is under study by the PSBGM.

Immersion trip to Jonquiere is cancelled

The Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal has had to cancel a proposed trip of students to Jonquiere for three weeks of immersion French, because of lack of interest.

Commissioner Mrs. Muriel Kaplan told the Westmount School Board Monday that only 14 students had applied for the trip, which was expected to handle 30.

"Three weeks is just too long," Commissioner Harvey Goodwin commented on hearing the news. He said other experiments had shown that one week was more tolerable for student exchange programs, especially for grade 7 students.

The Westmount School Board planned Monday night what it hopes will be the main "communications orientation" meeting of representatives of various committees, to get them working together and ready to take over oversight of Westmount schools once the local board is dissolved in June.

The meeting, planned as part of the board's own monthly meeting May 15, will include members of the three Westmount school committees, incoming and outgoing presidents of home and school associations, representatives of the Westmount school French, fine arts, and health committees, and a member of the education committee of the Westmount Municipal Association.

The representatives are to discuss with the school board what their responsibilities should be, what issues they will have to deal with, and what lines of communication they should establish for effecting change in the schools.

Roslyn group cool

Commissioners reported that both the Westmount High and Westmount Park school committees had generally been in favor of such an orientation session. Commissioner Harvey Goodwin, speaking for the Roslyn school committee, said the group had been somewhat averse to the idea originally, but that "they might turn around" now that the plan was down on paper.

School Board Chairman Mrs. Joan Rothman outlined some of the areas to be discussed at the session, including "where the committees saw their future," and offering them a "compendium" of historical notes on actions of the present and past school boards. She said others had expressed an interest in discussing subjects they were concerned about.

Commissioner Mrs. Jennifer Gooch said she felt the most important aspect of the meeting would be to "establish lines of communication between the school committees and the PSBGM."

The meeting was moved from the regular Monday night date of May 14 to May 15 because of a conflict with the provisional island council meeting to be held that Monday night. Commissioners hope to be able to go over some substantive items of their own before the group meeting with committee representatives takes place in the Westmount High School library.

Winds . . .

exact—because of difficulty commissioners had making their way through the lobby of Westmount High School to the board room. A Scottish-Highland group was holding a large recital in the school auditorium, drawing a large crowd.

Four visitors attended the meeting, including Mrs. Barbara Moore, president of the Westmount High School Committee; Mrs. Marion McFarlane, French liaison representative from Roslyn School, and Mrs. Peggy Maude and Mrs. Louise Vibeny of the Westmount Community Pre-School Association.

The meeting opened with a flourish of bagpipes from down the hall, and more were heard during the evening.

Park pre-school future up to PSBGM

The Westmount Community Pre-School, which has been operating out of the basement of Westmount Park School for a year and a half, received unanimous support of the Westmount School Board Monday night in its bid to continue operating there in the next school year.

It is up to the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal to decide whether the basement space should be used by the pre-school free of charge, as it has in the past; everyone in Westmount seems happy with the arrangement, however, including Westmount Park School Principal A. L. Tedford.

Mrs. Peggy Maude, one of the pre-school's directors, told the commissioners that the organization has been run as a non-profit parent co-operative, enrolling 44 children from all parts of Westmount during the past year. Parents involved in the effort, Mrs. Maude reported, include single-parent families and families in which both parents are working.

Four tuition free

Answering questions from commissioners, Mrs. Maude said that four of the children now enrolled are coming to the pre-school tuition-free and that others are receiving some degree of scholarship assistance. This was considered an important factor in the original establishment of the pre-school, that it provide space for those in financial need. Mrs. Maude assured commissioners that this obligation was being met as much as it could be.

Commissioner Harvey Goodwin pointed out that because the program was receiving rent-free facilities, "each child is receiving a subsidy of about $130" when compared to tuitions

Fine Arts Committee to continue

The Westmount Schools Fine Arts Committee, which has operated for several years alongside the Westmount School Board, hopes to continue functioning on its own once the school board has dissolved.

This information came out with submission of the committee's report Monday night by Commissioner Mrs. Jennifer Gooch, the school board's representative to the committee.

The committee will ask for a renewal of its $600 grant from the PSBGM, money it feels it has "used effectively and to the benefit of at least 2,000 students."

being charged by other Westmount nursery schools.

Mrs. Maude told commissioners that teachers and staff have had or are receiving training in pre-school education, to fulfill requirements of the provincial department of social affairs.

The logistics of moving materials around when Westmount Park scholars need to use the basement for indoor recess or lunch periods has been handled "very well," Mrs. Maude said.

Space 'unrentable'

Commissioners commenting on the program felt the pre-school was making the best possible use of the space, deemed "unrentable" by Commissioner Mrs. Jennifer Gooch. "It's not as if Westmount Park School was losing money."

Chairman Mrs. Joan Rothman felt that one possible improvement of the program might be to communicate more with the Way Ahead project run from the Unity Boys' Club on Greene avenue. "Perhaps," she suggested, "there are some children who could be better stimulated and served in Westmount Park School and vice versa."

Mrs. Maude said she would look into the matter for the next school year.

How MUC plans to take over

Story and Pictures by Examiner's Andy Dodge

COMMUNICATIONS' WESTMOUNT vs. MONTREAL: The Westmount desk sergeant can use a miniature telephone console (on left in top picture) when the regular police switchboard is not in use. The phone behind the console is hooked up to police boxes throughout the city. Next to them are a phone for outgoing calls and one hooked into the city hall system which can also be used for outgoing calls. On right is the police radio phone, in constant touch with police cars. The lower picture shows Montreal emergency phone operators, who receive calls, write down messages and send them to dispatchers (in top of picture) who notify the cars. Eleven operators can be put to use during peak hours.

DIRECT LINES TO POLICE STATION: Of note in the Westmount Police station, not found at the downtown communications centre, are direct-line phones. The one at the top creates instant communications with the mayor's house; below it are a private emergency phone for use by police only, an emergency phone to the Westmount swimming pool, and a direct line to a resident's house. On the bottom row are the police PAX phone, connected to downtown headquarters and other Montreal and suburban stations, and another direct line to a Westmount resident.

Westmount could be hooked into an island-wide communications system in a matter of seven or eight weeks, according to MUC Police Director Rene Daigneault, once he gets the go-ahead from "the politicians."

Plans are completely worked out on paper, and new crystals are waiting to be installed in Montreal Urban Community police cars to allow for a changeover of all island forces to one police emergency phone number: 872-1313.

At a certain pre-arranged time on a certain pre-arranged date, Westmount Police cars would be dispatched from the Montreal police communications centre. In another 21 weeks, the entire island would be linked to the central communications system.

Westmounters who called the local police number for an emergency once the station lost its own radio would have to wait while their complaint or request was called downtown by a Westmount officer.

Relayed

The changeover would mean that emergency calls would be handled by 11 men seated at switchboards, who take down the nature and location of the call on a card, then send it to one of five dispatchers via a conveyor belt; the dispatcher notifies a car to answer the call. The entire process takes an average of 20 seconds.

A new console would be installed to allow for a fifth division in the operation (there are now four divisional dispatchers) to handle police calls in west-end municipalities including Montreal West, Verdun, LaSalle, Cote St. Luc, St. Laurent and points west. Westmount would be included in the duties of the dispatcher already assigned to speak to "west Montreal" cars.

The whole changeover is "not a permanent project," Mr. Daigneault told The Examiner recently. "This is just a temporary first phase."

The permanent project, now under study by Bell Canada, is at least three years away, according to Mr. Daigneault. This includes installation of a vast network of computers, more sophisticated dispatch consoles, and an intricate system whereby patrol cars can receive information stored downtown in a matter of seconds.

In the meantime, Mr. Daigneault is waiting for the green light to centralize emergency calls in the downtown communications centre. He must receive authorization from the MUC Council and the Security Council headed by Judge Jacques Coderre. The authorization has been slow in coming.

Political

"There's no problem with the system," Mr. Daigneault said, reassuringly. "The only problem we have is a political problem."

Mr. Daigneault said the centralization of communications would not cause language problems among the public, policemen and dispatchers, since all policemen are bilingual. Communications, he said, will go out in the language policemen prefer.

Because of the communications link-up with Montreal, a Westmount-based policeman who came across a person speaking only Spanish, for example, or Arabic, would be able to call on an officer who speaks that language. Central communications has a list of policemen who speak foreign languages, covering every language except Chinese.

The idea behind the centralization of communications, Mr. Daigneault claims, is to provide all residents of Montreal island with one easily-remembered phone number to call in case of emergency. At present a Westmounter involved in a traffic accident in Pierrefonds, for example, has to spend time looking up the local police number before he gets service.

In addition, the centralization of dispatching facilities allows cars to come from Sector 15, for example, into Westmount (Sector 30), when no Westmount cars are available. In such cases, other cars are brought in to patrol Sector 15 while the Westmount emergency still necessitates the locals' absence.

Home cover

Despite the central emergency number, Westmount residents requesting police surveillance of their homes during summer vacations, or who wish to tell the force about a special event or situation, would still be able to call the station directly. For surveillance, the station would be able to notify men of the address as they went out on patrol. For pre-arranged situations, the station would call to the downtown dispatcher at the proper time.

Use of the downtown emergency facilities would bring several innovations not found in Westmount's present police headquarters. The 11-man "automatic call distribution" system would mean that calls could be answered at once during normal days, and cars dispatched 20 seconds later. In peak periods, such as during a power blackout or a snowstorm, the system allows for up to 33 calls to be handled in one minute.

It must be remembered, however, that roughly 2.5 million people will be served by the 11 operators, while one percent of that number are now being served by Westmount's single switchboard, under normal conditions. The Westmount policeman answering calls (Montreal uses civilians in that capacity) can switch the call to the desk sergeant if he is busy; if a serious overload is taking place on the four incoming lines, calls can be switched to other offices in the station, all of which can immediately contact police vehicles.

Screening

The civilian operators in Montreal's communications facilities have been trained to screen calls as they come in; it would be impossible, however, for a downtown operator to recognize a person by their voice or to have an intimate knowledge of the type of people calling to register complaints.

Vehicle dispatchers are, of course, trained police officers.

A policeman receiving an emergency call in Westmount sometimes finds it necessary to keep the complainant on the phone while he dispatches a car to an address, waiting until the car is on its way before receiving a description of suspicious person or directions on which way a burglar is running. He then forwards this information to the car as it makes its way to the address.

When calls are received in Montreal, it will be up to the civilian operator receiving the phone call whether to pass the call on to one of two supervising officers after dispatching the required vehicle. The supervisors would have dispatch microphones to be able to speak to the pursuing car as it answered the call.

Montreal Police have no accurate idea of how long it takes for a police car to get to its destination once an operator answers the telephone. They claim ambulances, when called, average 2½ to 3 minutes response time, and figure roughly the same time applies for policemen.

Westmount Police have had no complaints, they say, of time-lag between receiving a call and getting a car to the address.

Use of the Montreal system in Westmount would allow citizens to speak by phone directly to police cars in extenuating circumstances. Officials emphasize, however, that this system can be used only when absolutely necessary, and then only when the caller is calm and rational.

Taped

All calls going through the Montreal system are tape-recorded, allowing police to play back calls to check on addresses or information if the original message is garbled. The calls are also recorded separately and kept for a least three months, for use in court cases or detective work. With these tapes, the time (to the second) is recorded on another track to allow for cross-checking.

Westmount Police do have a small tape recorder hooked up to their telephone switchboard, which can be turned on at the discretion of the officer answering the call. Although nowhere near the sophistication found in the Montreal equipment, policemen feel it serves its purpose well for the limited area and population of Westmount.

Montreal Police cars have, until recently, been equipped with three channels for transmitting and receiving police calls. The first of these channels is a normal divisional band, used to speak with the downtown dispatcher or, if necessary and by a switch at headquarters, to other cars in the division.

Another channel is used to speak to any department of the police force, for example to request identification of a certain license plate number or have a special switchboard operator call Hydro-Quebec or Bell Canada for assistance. Eventually, it is planned to have the channel hooked in with a vast computer bank to give cars instant information on crime suspects, stolen vehicles or other pertinent data.

Anywhere

A third channel allows Montreal (and present Westmount) cars to speak to cars anywhere on the island or within a 50-mile radius of Montreal. The system, referred to popularly as the "General System," can also be used for police cars to speak with the Quebec Provincial Police, Autoroute Police, RCMP and Harbor Police, although not with cars belonging to those forces.

Westmount cars cannot call direct to a Montreal dispatcher to have the system put in use, but can get their own dispatcher to

er local police radio control system

notify Montreal of their need to use the system.

The "General System" was felt by many to serve most inter-municipality needs while still allowing effective local control of police communications in specifically local situations. Westmount City Council passed a resolution last year suggesting "serious consideration" be given to the possibility of changing the "General System" slightly to meet the needs of an inter-urban police force.

New cars being purchased for use in Montreal are now being equipped with six channels, including more divisional channels than the one previously used. The six-channel radio allows for cars to be transferred from one division to another, or to move between divisions while filling in for busy patrol cars.

Montreal cars (and, supposedly, future Westmount vehicles) operate on a "duplex" system, meaning that a dispatcher speaks to cars on one frequency while the car speaks back on a separate one. This means that while all cars in a sector can hear calls from the dispatcher, they cannot hear responses of other cars.

No car-car

The system means a policeman in one car cannot speak to a policeman in another car except by getting clearance from his dispatcher; this means that radios are tied up by car-to-car calls only during emergency situations. Most major urban areas have duplex systems because of the volume of calls which might be travelling in either direction at the same time.

In Westmount and other municipalities, cars can hear and speak to each other, as well as hearing calls back to headquarters. In certain situations the time it takes for a dispatcher to repeat a request for help from an officer may be enough for a serious crime to occur.

Westmount's "simplex" system, which they actually call a three-way system (station-to-car, car-to-station, and car-to-car) also includes walkie-talkies, on the same bands and frequencies as car radios, for use by beat men or even by patrolmen leaving their cars. The system is very helpful when covering entrances to a building or when patrolling parks, as well as on many other occasions.

Once hooked up with Montreal, there will be no more walkie-talkies, according to Mr. Daigneault. Though these might be instituted as part of the permanent system, some years hence, beat men and parks patrol would have to communicate with headquarters by way of police box phones for the time being.

Mr. Daigneault did suggest as an aside, that he "might study" Westmount walkie-talkie system to see if it could be used in an integrated network. No plans for their use have yet been drafted, however.

PAX net

A present PAX phone network providing immediate communication among various police stations on the island, and including departments of Montreal police headquarters, is now popularly used for the purpose of inquiries. A Westmount officer can pick up the receiver, dial three digits, and have immediate communication with Pointe Claire police, if he likes, or with the Montreal detective division.

The PAX phones will probably also be used, once communications have been integrated, to notify the emergency switchboard that a burglar alarm has gone off. Because of the size of the MUC, there is no way that a burglar alarm system could be installed downtown; instead, the present Westmount system probably will stay where it is. The change will add about 30 seconds to the response time once an alarm is triggered.

Telex machines are used extensively in Montreal police headquarters, sending messages between offices and around the world. By having communications integrated downtown, an operator will not be responsible for relaying messages sent to Montreal from out-of-town to other police-stations; descriptions of missing persons, for example, or stolen vehicles can be transmitted from a central dispatcher to all units on the island.

In the present system, when such a description is sent to Westmount for immediate notification of local police cars, a red light on the machine notifies Westmount's dispatcher of the urgency of the message. Thus, the extra time taken includes the time to retype and retransmit the message from a local police station.

Control

One of the downtown headquarter's most innovative institutions, created by Mr. Daigneault's predecessors, is the emergency control room, which would be made available to police forces throughout the MUC. The room is used for direction and observation of riots, demonstrations or emergency situations requiring the particular attention of the director and his chief inspectors.

One wall of the room is a white screen on which maps, closed circuit television pictures and photographs can be projected to allow for constant surveillance or information about a particular situation. The director, flanked by deputies, messengers and dispatchers can control police movements and activities. The system allows him to speak directly to every police car on Montreal island, if necessary.

Until now, a Westmount inspector has usually been stationed in the room during such an emergency situation requiring his attention. The inspector has been stationed by a PAX phone, in direct communication with the local station, to keep Westmount Police informed of a situation or to direct them. An integrated network would remove this step, since Westmount cars would be controlled from the same console as other Montreal cars.

The city of Westmount has, during the past year, been sharply critical for the plans drawn up by Mr. Daigneault, noting the problems with the system and the experience of other cities in North America and around the world. New York City experimented with centralization of communications in 1969, and is now moving to completely "localize" the system. Chicago uses a central communications office, but phone calls are routed to sectional dispatchers, who can speak to cars and complainants at the same time.

Disdain

City Council also criticized the system for taking effective control away from local authorities, a charge Mr. Daigneault seemed to consider an insult. "One of the mayors has already written me he will fight integration . . . so as not to lose the authority he's had on his police force," he said in a recent interview with The Montreal Star. His disdain for political infighting indicated he felt he could exercise better control over police than a municipal mayor. Mr. Daigneault was specially irked that municipalities rejected the present plans for a tie-in with the Montreal communications system. "We offer them a three-million-dollar system," he said, "and they say 'puh!' "

EMERGENCY CONTROL ROOM: Montreal police can make use of this compact communications center during times of crisis and concern to keep constant watch on a situation. Dispatchers sit directly below their commanding officers who can keep track of the situation on the screen.

Montreal North's Yves Ryan wants out of Montreal tie

Montreal North Mayor Yves Ryan wants out from the integrated police communications network into which his city has been linked for close to a year.

"We don't want to be used as guinea pigs any longer," Mr. Ryan told The Examiner last week. "I don't think being connected with Montreal is doing us any good."

Mayor Ryan offered up his city as a test case for establishment of an integrated communications system last spring, and has been regretting the action ever since. He is now in the process of filing suit against the Montreal Urban Community to have his previous system re-installed pending investigation of the entire communications process.

His complaints about the system are numerous, including the fact that once an accident victim had to wait 25 minutes for a police car to arrive. At one point, he said, burglars quietly escaped from a building because the police car went to the wrong address.

Unacceptable

He considers "unacceptable" the experience of "being told by a recorded message to wait a few seconds" for an operator to attend to an emergency call. Although Mr. Daigneault stresses the words "few seconds" in the recording, Mr. Ryan said his citizens had never been faced with such a situation when they were able to call the local force.

Mr. Ryan does see some advantage to police integration, such as the merging of special squads—fraud, homicide, and detective squads, for example—into island-wide organizations. He noted, however, that community services, traffic control, and other distinctly local operations "reflect the community" and should be kept under local control.

A check with the Montreal North Police station revealed that there is no way policemen at the station can monitor conversations between patrolmen and downtown dispatchers. Although they monitor the dispatch of cars 24 hours a day, they have no idea what the cars say back to the dispatcher, nor do they know when a patrolman needs help available at the station. A man from police headquarters must phone the Montreal North station to request special assistance for one of their own men.

Calls transferred

When police escort or assistance is needed to help with a funeral or procession in the city, a sergeant from the station must call downtown on the regular emergency line to have a car dispatched to the event. Officials report they get "a few" calls from citizens requesting vehicles, calls which have to be transferred downtown by telephone.

Calls gradually have increased in volume over the year, leading local police to assume they are not being carefully screened downtown. As people learn they can get a police car more easily from Montreal, they increase the number of requests for services.

The MUC dispatcher finds it necessary, on occasion, to send a Montreal North car outside the city limits. In each case, however, a patrol car from another sector has been sent in to the city to "cover up" for the absent vehicle while it is on assignment.

"There are pros and cons to everything," one official said of the situation. He indicated, however, that he would prefer to have many of the aspects of the old system.

Exhibition at Artlenders: where you can rent them

By FAYE MARCOTTEE

Art buffs take note: Artlenders at 318 Victoria avenue is having a rotation exhibition of contemporary artists until the end of April.

Established over 18 years ago by Jean Newman, Artlenders offers a unique service to the public.

Mrs. Newman spent over a year researching the possibilities of a lending gallery and finally chose a New York service as her model. She was at first operating out of her home in the West End, but after building up sufficient clientele moved to the more spacious premises on Victoria avenue. Wedged between two large structures, the gallery is a successful example of exhibiting on a compact scale.

Mrs. Mary Thomson is the present owner, having joined the company in 1966. She chose involvement in the art field as it had been a lifelong interest and study that she can now delve into since her return from Western Canada.

Mrs. Thomson sees her role as more of a liaison between the artist and the public. Because most artists are not very business oriented, it's necessary to have an interested party arrange the exhibit and particulars of the sales. She feels that artists today have a better chance of surviving and even attaining a measure of fame because of the public's affluence and diverse tastes.

becoming specially popular with offices. Whereas homeowners usually choose a picture with the option to buy, Mrs. Thomson feels that in the stark atmosphere of an office, a painting is more dominant and so companies very often will try out a few.

The exhibit began last Saturday. It will feature such artists as Paul V. Veaulieu, Sidney Menkes, Bruce le Dain, William Roberts and Pauline L'Abbe Jones, to name but a few of over 20 participants. The works will cover the gamut of styles from traditionalists to abstracts. Artlenders in open Tuesday to Saturday from 10 am to 5 pm. Drop into the gallery, guaranteed that the exhibition will be diversified enough to suit all tastes.

Only one in area

Artlenders is the only private rental gallery in the Montreal area. This service will rent a painting for a monthly fee based on its value. The arrangement is

'It's all so worthwhile'

Achievement of senior centre here year's accomplishment of Mrs. Dunn

"The achievement of a senior centre" has been a year-long goal—and accomplishment—of Mrs. Winnifred Dunn, who now finds she must leave the Westmount Senior Centre's directorship because of ill health. Mrs. Dunn took time out this week to tell The Examiner about her past year's experiences and ideas while grasping onto an idea in the minds of several community groups and building it into a successful operation now used as a model for other such groups in Montreal.

As social action chairman of the diocesan Anglican Church Women, Mrs. Dunn came into contact with Rev. J. Ernest Nix, Minister of the Westmount Park United Church, who had been working with the Office for Community and Social Development and Inter Faith to conceive a recreational centre for senior citizens in Westmount. Mr. Nix asked her if she would "Consider having an interview" to become director of the centre, already planned on paper.

Active on many fronts

Already active on many fronts in a volunteer capacity, Mrs. Dunn considered the proposition, which in her mind meant "a commitment to be working every day," rather than haphazardly as she had in the past. She agreed to the interview, was chosen for the job, and set to work in early 1972 to establish a centre in Westmount Park Church.

Her idea of "establishing" such an operation, however, meant sitting back and "looking at the needs of seniors," then holding get-togethers at which seniors could determine their own interests and ideas for a centre. Mrs. Dunn did offer a questionnaire based on her own feelings of what seniors might like. Some of the ideas were accepted, others rejected.

Mrs. Dunn had no difficulty finding community resources to help her set up classes, projects and activities for senior citizens because of her past experience with many social service groups. She found that many such organizations actually came to her to offer their services, though every time she consulted members of the centre to ask if they felt the services would be worthwhile.

"Social and recreational programs were not enough," Mrs. Dunn felt, pointing out that senior citizens were as much a part of society as younger citizens. "There must be services available to provide ongoing counselling to members in whatever area they need it."

Discussion groups

With this in mind, Mrs. Dunn organized discussion groups with the Westmount health depart-continually growing, the same as everybody else."

Mrs. Dunn felt, though, that the centre offered more than information and recreation for seniors. "It offers companionship. Belonging. A concern for each other," she said.

"You become a senior, your job disappears. Your friends disappear. Your family disappears. You're left all alone. This reverses all that. It's a family circle. The members refer to it that way quite vocally."

Mrs. Dunn felt that another important service provided by the centre consisted of making referrals for them to community resources. Often if a senior is afraid or embarrassed, Mrs. Dunn has found herself getting in touch with lawyers, police or ambulances for them.

"There were some very traumatic situations I was involved in," Mrs. Dunn said. "The senior just needed someone to call."

Mrs. Dunn often found herself going into the community on behalf of seniors to find residences for them, to work as "a bridge" between the centre and agencies or hospitals.

"I can't see a centre or a place where seniors come with a problem and go home with the same problem," she said, explaining her devotion not just to the centre and its activities but to the seniors who were members and to the larger community. Mrs. Dunn has found herself on radio and television and in city-wide newspapers, explaining the program and speaking out for the needs of seniors.

'Multi-service centres'

Looking into the future, Mrs. Dunn sees the eventual growth of "multi-service centres," where seniors would be able to avail themselves of social and recreational programs, information and referral services, and individual counselling, all available on a regular and ment, tax officials and advisors, insurance experts, nutritional experts, government services, consumer groups and others able to deal with problems affecting seniors directly. Twice a month the centre holds such counselling sessions, a significant part of the very full schedule offered to members.

"They've become more aware of the world around them," Mrs. Dunn said of the group, now numbering over 200. "They're ongoing basis. She visualizes such centres as the responsibility of the federal, provincial and municipal governments to ensure perpetuation of the programs.

In the meantime, she expects Westmount seniors "to look forward to greater growth with a new director—but with their help."

For her own future, Mrs. Dunn plans to take a "long rest," six weeks relaxing in England. On her return she expects to be an active member of the centre's board of directors, probably handling a portfolio assignment, though she's not sure which one. She plans to stay away from the day-to-day activities of the centre, however, and hopes a new director can become firmly established during her six weeks away from Westmount.

"It has been a very rigorous year," Mrs. Dunn said, looking back. "But none of the work has been a burden for me because it's been a part of working for something. I haven't even been aware of using up energy. Every minute has been a joy. It's all so worthwhile."

N CJW holds affair here

The National Council of Jewish Women will hold their annual spring fashion show and sale, this year entitled "Second Hand Rose," at Victoria Hall on April 11 and 12.

Famous-name fashions will be modeled during the show by members of the council, then sold at discount prices to anyone in the audience. The sale will feature old and new clothing, piece goods, household items and bric-a-brac.

A second feature of the show will be a baked goods contest and sale, with judges including Madame Jehane Benoit, George Balcan, Doris Clark and Pat Inglis. Prizes for the contest include a clock radio, camera and complimentary dinners.

Proceeds from the sale go to support the council's community work, including children's libraries, student aid, drug education, meals-on-wheels and various educational programs.

Centaur's Mandragola is fun

As we were arriving at curtain time last Thursday night, Maurice Podbrey was just leaving Centaur Theatre in its now well-established home in the old Stock Exchange building downtown.

If one went along with, for example, The Star's reviewer who panned the current production, Mandragola, with little mercy because of alleged childish smut, one might have thought that Mr. Podbrey was going home or to a nearby pub to hide his embarrassment.

Rather, we'd like to think Centaur's artistic director was leaving well satisfied with the current production being a lot of light fun and being in the hands of a capable cast and crew.

To be sure, Centaur's own program describes this Machiavellian piece as "this nasty little play" and frankly tabs the various characters as sexually-obsessed, infamous, slimy parasite, learned fool, covetous, conniving, perverse, and lady of the streets.

Generous guffaws

Thusly billed, it seems superfluous to nit-pick that the performance is merely lugubrious. Specially when the night we were there, and we think the Star man was too, the two swift-moving acts were well endowed with generous audience guffaws—admittedly many of them our own.

Heaven knows these days theater, and particularly the cinema, is dominated by all sorts of unredeemed vice and porn. The childishness therefore is to come down hard on a quite harmless and diverting effort which happens to have as its perfectly natural theme a young man's desire for a beautiful young woman who is wed to an impotent old coot.

Other reports to the contrary notwithstanding, the casting was excellent, the acting and particularly the miming well done, the costumes, set and specially the makeup imaginative, and the whole production fast-moving with lots of bounce.

Just the thing for us on a Thursday night to relax after putting the paper to bed. —JWS.

Those library displays: How they come about

By ANDY DODGE

Displays at the Westmount Public Library are designed not just to get people to read books, but to cheer them up, stir their interest, inform them, relax or move them in a hundred other ways.

Largely the work of Mrs. Margaret Mustard, who works regularly in the cataloguing room of the library, the displays generally stay up for two weeks at a time, alternating between "cheerful" subjects such as gardening or springtime and more serious questions, like drug addiction and pollution.

The displays have varied success in getting people to read books on the subjects featured—Mrs. Mustard admits she might mis-read the interests of the community occasionally—but in general they have succeeded in getting people interested in books they might otherwise ignore.

Current-event ideas

Mrs. Mustard thinks up most of the exhibits, getting her ideas from current-events discussions in the news media or from her own sense of what she feels people would be interested in. During the 1970 October crisis, for example, she set up an exhibit of "Peace and Quiet" to put the public in a more relaxed mood. A recent exhibit about the North American Indian was the result of dispute about the James Bay project.

Often outside groups request space to put up exhibits. The visual Arts Centre on Victoria avenue, for example, will start an exhibit Monday at the library concerning the handicrafts instruction available at the centre, which has just opened a campaign for funds. Often artists display their crafts on several of the boards.

New display boards designed last year by local artist-architect Harry Mayerovitch have been a great help for library displays and those from outside, according to library director Mrs. Norah Bryant. Paintings, drawings, and photographs—usually with "some connection" to Westmount—have been exhibited there from time to time. At other times they are used for extended displays of library subjects.

Related books

Books concerning the subject being exhibited are posted on a shelf next to the display, and people are able to take them out, directly off that shelf. Often Mrs. Bryant finds books which have not been taken out in years get picked up while a display is on.

Much of the matter used in the exhibits comes from the creative hand of Mrs. Mustard herself. A large cut-out of a wolf boasting "all the better to read with," advertising large-print books for senior citizens, was made by Mrs. Mustard, as was an ornate design to surround the announcement of "remembrance of things past." Many posters are donated by individuals and companies, though some have to be bought.

Some of the displays receive recognition outside Westmount as well. The display of large-print books was photographed and sent to the publisher in England, who used the pictures in a nationwide advertising campaign. A game called "Bibliopoly"—designed to show people how to use the library—received recognition in a major library journal.

Despite the pretensions of some people that the display "takes a stand" on a certain subject, in most cases the library tries to stay clear of partisan issues. A recent display on women's liberation showed a woman breaking out of chains. This was in no way meant to indicate the library's feelings about the subject, Mrs. Mustard assured The Examiner, but just to get people interested in the subject.

Cookery, gardening tops

Cookery and gardening are the most successful subjects touched by the displays, according to

Mrs. Margaret Mustard sets up the latest library display, a "more serious" one on drug addiction.

Mrs. Mustard. Many people are unaware of publications in this field, including those from the departments of agriculture; others have forgotten, perhaps, that there are books on the subjects, but are reminded by the displays.

Last week a new display board, separate from the others, appeared in the library to show announcements sent out by the City of Westmount. These, it is hoped, will help remind people of city council meetings, special city events, rink and pool hours.

In general, Mrs. Mustard feels she is doing a service not only to the library but to the public with the displays. She tries to keep people interested, active, aware, happy and sharp.

Conductor's count-down

The blast of last week's announcement has caused city-wide comment in our local music sphere. It had to happen.

I heard the sensational tidings on the 8 am radio news broadcast last Wednesday.

Yes indeed, it had to happen Franz-Paul Decker has been dismissed from his post as music director of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra and the facts could not have been delivered publicly at a worse time! The day of the MSO annual bazaar in Victoria Hall!

I went for a short period and—buzz, buzz, buzz. It was the topic on many lips. Decker's "count-down" is something that numerous members of the MSO also went through on his bidding. Now he has received the same treatment. Specifically, I can refer to the late solo flutist, Wolfgang Kander, who was "demoted" to sit beside an "import." That is comparable to being a top executive and suddenly cast down to a lower rank.

Readers who follow this column will remember the article I wrote last year saying there were many new musicians in the MSO and quite a few came from foreign shores. Also, that concert and opera stars often had to make a "name" abroad before being appreciated in their native city, mentioning Edward Johnson, whom I had the pleasure of sitting beside when he addressed a banquet meeting of the ORMTA Convention in Toronto almost two decades ago. (I was also an invited speaker.) He changed his name to "Eduard di Giovanni."

I had a telephone call from a very irate violinist—one of the newcomers in the MSO who pounced into me for the content of the article. When he finished his tongue lashing, I said, "Thank you for reading my column." A sudden pause! He did not know that I am a musician and when I told him a "thing or three," he simmered down. I asked him where he came from—Argentina. He is very aggressive (I will not give him the satisfaction of mentioning his name) and said how good it was there. I said, "Then why did you come here?" This is one of the countless anecdotes in the book that I am writing.

Congratulations

Congratulations to the Board for their ultimate decision: President Robert Bruck, 517 Clarke avenue; Dinis Langelier, general manager, and Pierre Beique, former general manager of the MSO and now consultant to the president. It is too bad they did not hold on to Zubin Mehta—a real genius who has become world famous and really makes the MSO sound "first class" when he conducts.

One statement by Decker which I read is absolutely incorrect, that "permanent conductors are hated in the city in which they live. You know that in any orchestra the musical director is hated after he has been there any length of time." May I give this long list of permanent conductors who remained with their orchestras for many more seasons than Decker as proof to the contrary.

The first few are deceased but any symphony lover will be well acquainted with these men of the podium: Toscanini, Bruno Walter, Serge Koussevitsky, Sir John Barbirolli, Pierre Monteux, Sir Eugene Goossens, Dmitri Mitropoulos, Sir Thomas Beecham, Hans Kindler, Artur Rodzinski, Otto Klemperer, Charles Munch, Fritz Reiner, Ernest Ansermet, Sir Adrian Boult, Leopold Stokowski, Erich Leinsdorf, Josef Krips, Goerge Solti, Arthur Fiedler, Kiril Kondrashin, William Steinberg, Herbert von Karajan.

Enough proof?

City denies
high school
safety OK

Westmount High School is operating without a safety permit from the City of Westmount, Chairman Mrs. Joan Rothman told the Westmount School Board Monday night.

The permit was denied the school because of inadequate emergency lighting in the building.

Mrs. Rothman said she had been told of the denial by Westmount's director of services, Frank Davis, who indicated to her that the school can still be occupied, but that a city permit would certainly be advisable.

Commissioner James Robb told his colleagues that the same problem had faced Roslyn School, but that emergency lighting recently had been installed there. The PSBGM recently approved $40,000 worth of funds to correct the problem in the City of Montreal, where inspectors have also been cracking down on code violations.

Building codes for public buildings were only recently updated by the Quebec Municipal Commission, and inspectors throughout the province have been enforcing new emergency lighting standards, Mr. Robb said.

Ottawa replies on study

Westmount School Commissioners received a reply this month to their request for a federal study of second-language teaching methods used in Quebec, it was learned at Monday night's board meeting.

The reply, from the secretary of state's office in Ottawa, mentioned that a meeting is being held this month on the subject of second-language teaching, and that proposals such as the Westmount School Board's might follow from that meeting.

committees get
separate funds

Parents' committees and school committees are to be recognized as separate entities and will receive separate budgets for operation, it was announced at Monday's Westmount School Board meeting.

Chairman Mrs. Joan Rothman, speaking on the activities of the finance and legislation committee of the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal, told commissioners that the committee had accepted the idea behind the Westmount board's motion passed last month, that more funds and facilities be provided for operation of school and parents' committees. She said they had not accepted the actual motion from Westmount, but "they recognized separate budgets for parents' and school committees," a fact which puts them on a firmer footing in relation to the greater board.

Commissioner James Robb, who sits on the provisional island council which makes final approval of such matters, said the proposal had been tabled at the top level until guidelines could be worked out. The council was to work on the guidelines this week, and he suspected the criteria for committees would remain as part of the total budget, which will come up for approval on April 30 "if we're lucky."

ROOFING FIRST AID: The city public works department's "cherry-picker" vehicle came in handy last Friday afternoon to patch up loose roofing tin flapping in the wind of this multiple dwelling at Blenheim place and St. Catherine street. Shortly before, a large sheet of the metal dropped into Blenheim in a spot normally occupied by a parked car.

QAPSB changes are condemned
by dying board

The Westmount School Board strongly opposed the proposition that the Quebec Association of Protestant School Boards be able to change its constitution during this month's information meeting of the provincial body, it came out Monday night at the local board's monthly meeting.

The reaction came to a proposal that the QAPSB "waive the rules of the old constitution"—still in effect—"that amendments can be made only at annual meetings of the association."

Chairman Mrs. Joan Rothman opened discussion of the QAPSB with the announcement that Commissioners Brian Emo and Mrs. Jennifer Gooch, who will represent the Westmount board at the meeting, should "vigorously oppose the resolution on principle." Mrs. Rothman seemed to feel the change would allow the QAPSB to change the constitution whenever it pleased.

The Westmount Commissioners will continue to stand by their concern over the demand for "solidarity" of member boards, included in the preamble to the proposed constitution, to be approved at the QAPSB annual meeting in October. The issue was first brought up in January, when Commissioner Emo presented his objection to the principle and nearly had it rescinded.

The QAPSB meetings will be held April 26, 27, and 28 in the Montreal area.

Only two quit

Westmount schools have received notice of only two resignations and of two teachers taking leaves of absence next year, Superintendent R. T. B. Fairbairn told the Westmount School Board Monday night. Mr. Fairbairn said he was surprised at the small number of notices received so far, but said he expected more by Easter.

Roslyn admission bid
seen hazard to WPS French

A request to the Westmount School Board by a resident of Westmount that her child be assured a place in the Roslyn School French immersion program at the grade 1 level next fall brought upon school commissioners the difficult problem of How to Please All of the People All of the Time.

The resident, who lives in the Westmount Park School district, wanted the assurance she felt was her right "as a taxpayer in the City of Westmount."

Schools Superintendent R. T. B. Fairbairn told councillors the request was not unique, that he had received similar requests from other citizens.

"If we accept this request we ring the death-knell for the (30 percent) French program at Westmount Park School," Mr. Fairbairn said Monday night. He felt the move would result in the enrolment at Roslyn of all pupils whose parents wanted them to be taught in French.

At present, pupils from lower Westmount are accepted at Roslyn only if the principal determines there is enough room to handle them.

30 percent needed

Commissioner Jennifer Gooch, a parent from the Westmount Park School district, opposed the idea on the principle that "we need the 30 percent French in our present program, and it needs to be strengthened."

Commissioner James Robb joined Chairman Mrs. Joan Rothman in suggesting that the present policy be continued, at least until a better solution can be worked out. Commissioner Robb felt the French committee should work on the problem immediately.

Hopefully a more feasible arrangement can be worked out by June, the commissioners felt.

'Green Spaces' here gets $40,000 grant

Green Spaces has received a $40,000 Local Initiatives Project grant to continue finding and defending park space within the Montreal urban environment for the next four months.

The organization, located at 4515 St. Catherine street, Westmount, has been working for over a year to examine the many facets of recreation, education, land development and planning which affect the use and maintenance of green areas within the city.

Denise Faille, 247 Melville avenue, is director of the organization, which includes nine other full-time persons. An architect, a sociologist, and an urban economist make up the research staff. Two people are charged with putting together education programs in French and English, including slide shows, films and school discussions throughout Montreal; two others handle media and communications in both languages. A secretary and messenger are also employed by Green Spaces.

The agency hopes to be able to perpetuate itself once the present LIP grant runs out on May 31, and hopes private foundations or a provincial department will fund it after that.

"We've developed a lot of credibility," Mrs. Faille said of the organization, "but of course we've also developed opposition."

Three main goals

Green Spaces has three main goals, outlined in its latest grant application to the Local Initiatives Project:

"To collect and initiate research on open space in Montreal;

"To promote public awareness of the need for green spaces in urban areas; and

"To impress upon all levels of government the need to establish a procedure for the acquisition of sufficient green space in urban areas."

Green Spaces is most intensely involved in defending the Viau Golf Course in Montreal from destruction for Olympic housing. Members have written dossiers and pamphlets on the subject in conjunction with seven other citizens' groups and agencies, and are trying to influence politicians through direct appeal and public opinion.

The organization also claims to be involved in eight or nine other research projects separate from their education programs in schools and through the media. They are working on celebrations scheduled for this summer to mark the centennials of St. Helen's Park and Mount Royal Park, including booths, exhibits, and public relations campaigns in connection with the events.

Sulpician start

The organization was formed in reaction to proposed development of the Sulpician property, just to the east of Westmount above Sherbrooke street, and has been fighting developers ever since. In the future, according to Mrs. Faille, the group "wants to do some planning ahead of time," proposing possible new areas for parkland and helping plan regions which would include grassy spaces. They also hope to come up with new ideas for "improving the urban environment."

Because of its nature, Green Spaces is able to work closely with other Montreal groups involved with environment and recreation, though it feels it is "broader but more specific" than many of them. The Society to Overcome Pollution (STOP), for example, and its French counterpart are concerned with the environment—including green spaces—but also with garbage recycling, air pollution, legal suits (recently started), and education and publicity.

Les Services Regional des Loisirs de Montreal, on the other hand, is solely concerned with the organization and operation of leisure-time activity, much of it done in parks. Green Spaces deals in some way with both recreational activities and pollution, but only as they relate to parks, playgrounds, and green areas. It is thus able to work more intensely in this field.

Locating the office in Westmount does not reflect on the capability of this city to preserve green spaces, Mrs. Faille is quick to point out. She actually praises the city for its operation in this regard. "We're in Westmount for purely functional reasons."

What about reaction to the proposed Victoria Village scheme, or the Tupper parking lot development?

"We were never asked," Mrs. Faille said.

SMASHUP: Stanley Haines, 56, of Montreal, looks over damage to his 1972 Mercedes with a Westmount Police officer Monday morning. The damage occurred when Mr. Haines, proceeding west on Cote St. Antoine road, drove his car into a 1965 Falcon headed north on Grosvenor avenue at 11:55 am. The Falcon was driven by Miss Irmin Stephen, 36, of Montreal, who suffered slight injuries in the mishap and was taken to the Queen Elizabeth Hospital by Westmount Police patrol car.

Royal Trust Appointment

G. PRENDERGAST

The appointment of Gordon Prendergast as Manager, Westmount Office, is announced by Royal Trust. Mr. Prendergast, formerly Client Services Representative, Montreal Branch, succeeds J. W. Hewitt who is retiring after more than 45 years with Royal Trust, and who has managed Westmount Office since its opening in 1966.
