LE NOUVEAU LOUVRE, PARIS—This building, which forms a large addition to the famous Louvre Palace, extends from the old Louvre to l'Arc de Triomphe du Carrousel. Beyond the arch are the gardens of the ancient palace of the Tuileries. The Louvre is the greatest museum in France. Its collection of ancient, mediæval, renaissance and modern sculpture is probably the finest in Europe, with the single exception of that of the Vatican.

THE BOYS' HOME.

THIS noble institution, which has been of such inestimable benefit to hundreds of Montreal boys, many of whom now occupy positions of trust and responsibility in Canada and the United States, was founded in 1870. It was called into being by a group of devoted men and women, who, having noticed the conditions of life to which scores of homeless boys in Montreal were daily being subjected, determined to do something to better those conditions and to provide the lads with comfortable homes. A lot of land on Mountain street was purchased and a building was erected, one of the directors defraying the cost of the structure. This building has since been enlarged by the addition of two extensive wings, and an industrial farm outside the city limits has also been purchased. The work, therefore, has been marked by success from the very first, and thousands of boys (now business men) owe their present positions in life to the training and the education received in the Home.

The institution is intended to provide a home for boys who, by honest industry, try to earn their livelihood by learning a suitable trade. It surrounds all such with religious and moral influences, and thus not only takes care of the bodies of its inmates, but of their souls as well.

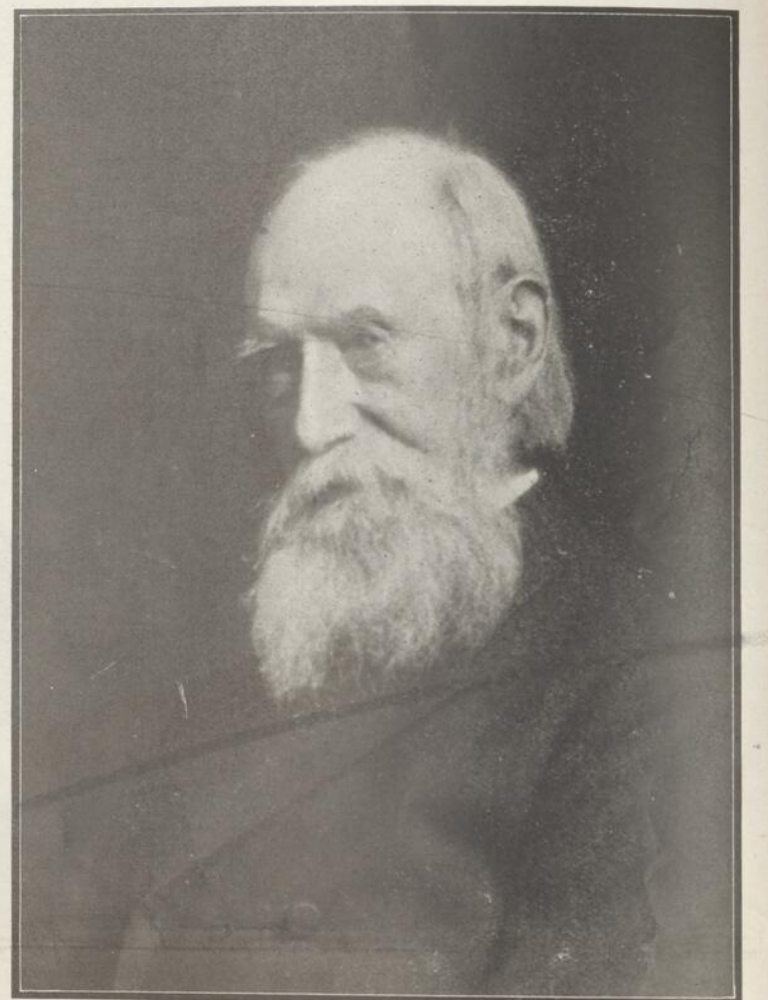

The illustrations on this page will give readers of The Standard an excellent idea of the work the Home is accomplishing to make the lives of the boys pleasant and useful.

For many years the late Mr. Charles Alexander was President of the institution, and it received many generous contributions from his hands. Mr. Alexander was succeeded by Mr. J. R. Dougall, the present president. The other officers are:—

Vice-President, Rev. J. Edgar Hill, D.D.; Hon. Secretary-Treasurer, Chas. S. J. Phillips; Directors, Geo. Hague, Hon. J. K. Ward, J. C. Holden, S. M. Baylis; Advisory Committee, C. M. Alexander, H. ## NATIONALIZING FRENCH-CANADIAN HORSE.

HORSE-LOVERS and horse-owners, throughout the Province of Quebec in particular, will hear with much satisfaction that the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa has taken over the registers of the French-Canadian Breeders' Association, thereby recognizing the French-Canadian horse as a national breed.

The Minister of Agriculture himself is showing great zeal in the work, and has laid out a very thorough plan for improving this staunch species, that found its way into this country in 1665, when Colbert, Minister to Louis XIV, sent out to New France a consignment of horses, which afterwards formed the foundation stock of the present French-Canadian horse.

A noted admiralty practitioner appeared before Judge Hough to argue a motion for the discharge of a bankrupt.

"Not at all," replied the witty advocate; "if your honor will glance over the record in this case, you will find that so far as his finances are concerned, my client is entirely at sea."

So far, some twenty counties out of the seventy-four in the Province have been visited, and in these upwards of 375 horses (335 mares and 40 stallions) have been accepted. The prospects, therefore, of placing this grand species of horse upon a firm footing with other recognized breeds is indeed very encouraging.

It may be said without exaggeration that there is probably no breed of horses living that combines so many useful and attractive qualities as does the French-Canadian—in a word, he is the all-round horse par excellence. From his conformation, substance, quality, action and gait, he is well fitted to every class of work on the farm or in the city. As a worker he has shown himself superior to many of those of the heavier breeds; in the plough or in the hay cart he is quite at home. The loads he is capable of hauling are simply marvellous, considering that his weight is, as a rule, well under 1200 lbs.

As a roadster his endurance is shown by the journeys of 50 to 60 miles per day, and he will turn out the morning after eager to cover a like distance.

BEAUTIFUL PARISIAN MODELS—The Standard, by special arrangement with the celebrated photographer, Henri Manuel, of Paris, is enabled to present, weekly, to its readers, the newest creations in fashion, posed specially by famous Parisian models. The above afternoon gown of satin striped voile in the new yellow-brown shade is from the Maison Martial et Armand, Paris. The skirt has a front panel and a deep band at the foot of the skirt of lace a shade darker than the goods. The waist is composed of this darker lace and Japanese embroidery, and the collar and chemisette are of white mull. A brown straw hat with shaded plumes completes the costume.

For some time past dressmakers have been very much more occupied on the creation and construction of toilettes for the Riviera than for Paris. What the French woman takes with her to the Sunny South is a perfect trousseau, so many different types of apparel being required for such an occasion. Gray and beige seem to be the most favored colors for the journey itself. As for all occasions where a simple, convenient sort of suit is required, woolen check fabrics take the lead, the ground be-

The skirt is very little, if at all, trimmed, and in length just escapes the ground. The jacket is of the quite short-semi-fitting type now in vogue.

Inspiration Received From National Or International Happenings.

Paris designers invariably turn to national or international happenings for their inspiration, and in the expulsion of the religious orders from the new departure do not conflict with the Japanese effects. On the contrary, the two are somewhat closely allied, and in many of the latest productions the two ideas are so blended that it is difficult to distinguish the one effect from the other.

The sleeves of the tailor suit of the moment are the semi-long sleeve, not so short, however, as for a more dressy type of costume. It reaches just halfway between the elbow and wrist, and is terminated by a broad band, fitting quite tightly round the arm, or by a somewhat looser or narrower one. The latter, which has the advantage of possessing greater novelty, brings into play another new French idea, which will certainly be greatly favored as the season advances. This is the plain, stiff linen cuff, placed in the interior and protruding slightly beyond the armband in the same manner as the cuff hitherto accompanying the quite long sleeve. It is closed by a double gold link, or a large single stud. Such

France, followed by the disestablishment of the church, they appear to have found another source from which to draw ideas. In other words, the French fashion designers, knowing that French women of position and refinement are apt to sympathize with the church in its struggle with the Government, have incorporated in the latest fashions a number of effects that are ecclesiastical in character. It so happens that the styles called for by cuffs, of course, require the suit to be completed by a collar of the same description, and, if the jacket is of open cut, a shirt front also. It is, however, greatly the fashion this season—and here we find another novel note—to complete the quite simple travellers' suits by dressy lingerie or lace blouses, of which the sleeves are long, and over which the jacket is worn, thus dispensing with the linen cuffs and collar. All this is a matter of taste; but even travelling costumes, when designed for the Riviera, have a more dressy appearance than for other journeys.

while it gives them when at rest rather a comical appearance. When fighting they rear themselves up to a considerable height, and as they turn quickly and bite very savagely, the assailant has to be on his guard continually. The only way to 'bat' them is for one man to hit the seal hard on the tail, and as the animal rears and turns to go for him, another gets a blow in on the throat. It is, however, very seldom that they are successfully 'batted.' Stalking them is as fine a sport as any one need want. To approach near enough to get accurate aim without alarming them requires the greatest care. It is necessary to keep out of sight, and this is by no means an easy matter on a background that betrays at once every dark speck and every movement. In order to skirt the seas of open water that probably lie between the ice-sheets in winter and the islands in summer, or to avoid such ice as it is unsafe to walk on, long detours and roundabout routes have to be taken and every pinnacle and hummock utilized, and there is a greatly added zest in the imminent risk one is all the time running of getting a wet jacket; for travelling over this ice is, quite by

HOW SEALS ARE CAUGHT AND KILLED.

ON this page The Standard publishes a series of interesting illustrations portraying seal-life in the rookeries among the islands off the Alaska coast. The photographs from which the illustrations were made were taken during the whelping period in the spring, and therefore show seals of all sizes and ages. These are the animals which provide the ladies of the world with their handsome sealskin jackets and coats.

The following description of the manner in which the seals are hunted and killed, from the pen of a noted hunter, will prove interesting:—

"Writers who have personally seen nothing of the seal fishery, and who ought to know better, have imagined that all sorts of cruelties are practised on the seals. This is a great libel. As a fact, there is very little suffering inflicted considering the immense num-

Greenland out to sea, and it was two days and two nights before the vessel could get back to the rescue of the stranded men. The mercury was far below zero, and more than half of the hunters were either killed or rendered helpless by the exposure. The ship finally returned to port with forty-seven of its crew frozen to death and

Though every article used in the town had to be hauled twenty miles by road from the railway terminus at Strassburg, the stores were kept well stocked, and at no time did the supply of coal run out in the town. as an ox, will wait and face his attackers; and the mother sometimes will not desert her pup while it is too young and helpless to escape, but will stay and die in its defence.

"She, too, is a large animal, though as the pup grows fatter she grows steadily thinner; she will turn on her adversary and growl and bite fiercely, and it is necessary to be decidedly wary in getting close to her; but a few blows on the head will quickly kill her.

"Men have often been bitten badly and occasionally divested of important portions of their nether garments as the result of an encounter with a mother seal. As soon as the pup can get into the water, the mother loses her affection for him, however, and quickly leaves him to shift for himself.

"Although the dog, when danger approaches, will generally leave his wife and child on the ice, he does not desert them, but keeps bobbing up in the water, stretching his neck and gazing anxiously at the spot he has left; and sometimes returning on the ice when he finds the business that is toward, he will fight for his family until he too lies beside them; nor is he any mean antagonist, for he weighs four hundred to five hundred pounds, and is a good match for three men unless armed with rifles.

"These dogs have a large and very tough bladder, extending from the nose to the back of the neck, which they can inflate at will, and which renders their heads absolutely impervious to blows, itself, rather exciting work, requiring both activity and judgment. After the dog takes to the water you can generally get a chance at him if you are patient, but quick and accurate shooting is necessary to get him as he bobs up in an unexpected direction; it is necessary also to have a man ready to run and gaff him as soon as hit or you will certainly lose him. The dog will carry away an immense quantity of lead if not lodged in the right place. Russian seal-hunters array themselves in white, which no doubt greatly facilitates stalking. They often have to walk many miles to reach the seals, and at times have to drag them long distances. The risks run seem very great, and yet the losses from the large number of men who annually go to the fishery are very few, notwithstanding that ice and weather are both liable to prove very treacherous. The men are sent out at daylight and take as a rule nothing with them besides their weapons but some hard biscuit."

IN SEARCH OF THE SEAL.

The sealing business is as variable as it is dangerous. Some ships have returned to port with cargoes valued at more than a hundred thousand dollars, each member of the crew receiving five hundred dollars for a short voyage. Again, when only a few seals have been encountered, it is possible for the men to return to port in debt, for they work on shares.

This harvest of the sea is not reaped without danger as well as hardship. The ice-fields, on which the young seals are found, are frequently of vast extent, and to secure their prey the hunters are compelled to go as many as fifteen or twenty miles away from their ship, the only haven of refuge in those desolate regions. The prevalence of bad weather makes this hazardous in the extreme, for at any minute a gale may break up the ice-field.

A few years ago the sealer Greenland landed one hundred and eighty hunters on a huge floe near Newfoundland. While they were engaged in killing the seals a gale blew the

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.
With the meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada in Montreal this week, the following articles, prepared especially for The Standard, on the subject of the origin of Presbyterianism; Presbyterianism in Canada and in Montreal will be appreciated by Standard readers.

The Origin of Presbyterianism.

Presbyterianism has been defined as "a spiritual republicanism—the grand distinctive feature of which is power and authority invested in those who are chosen by the people as their representatives or agents to rule in their name."

In its government it endeavours to secure the advantages of aristocracy, and at the same time recognise the ner the government of our free democracy by councils, provincial assemblies, and the Dominion Parliament. The old text books of Church polity held that the system of government could be traced back to the civil economy of the Mosaic code, which gave the people personal liberty, as well as permanent and efficient national government. All orthodox Presbyterians contend that the system of government is at least apostolic in its origin. They hold that the words bishop and elder in the New Testament describe the same office, and that there was a plurality of elders based upon Saint Paul. The outstanding features of the old Calvinistic theology were the sovereignty of God and the inability of the human will apart from divine assistance; it aimed to exalt God, and at the same time to humble the mind of man. Ultra Calvinism pushed its relentless conclusions so far along the lines of metaphysical logic that a state of mind ordained in every church. The bishops or elders are to be chosen by the people, and when elected to office are believed with one another; the only distinction made is in regard to gifts possessed; the elders who labor in the word and doctrine being counted worthy of double honor. The polity of the church strives to divide authority equally among the teaching and ruling elders, or, in more modern phraseology, among the clergy and the laity. To be consistent, laymen should be eligible for the moderator's chair at the meeting of the general assembly. At a recent assembly in the United States a layman was nominated and elected with enthusiasm to that high office. The Presbyterian Church in Canada has thus far invariably been presided over by a clergyman at the meetings of its supreme court.

The Presbyterian Church in its doctrine urges that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are the supreme and authoritative rule of faith and life. The older generations believed in having a systematized presentation of truth, and delighted to set forth their beliefs in confessions, catechisms, and creeds. The Westminster Confession of Faith is still subscribed to by all ministers inducted and ordained by the church. The agreement acquiesced in by the candidate is about as follows:—"I believe that the system of doctrine and government set forth in the Westminster Confession of Faith is founded on and agreeable to the Word of God." This Westminster Confession is founded largely upon the "Institutes" of John Calvin; Augustine was the doctrinal father of the Geneva theologian, and Augustine was forth a long list of the splendid effects produced by the Geneva theologian. Buckle says:—"Those who associate metaphysics with their religion are led by Calvinism into the doctrine of necessity, a theory which, though often misunderstood, is pregnant with great truths, and is better calculated than any other system to develop the intellect, because it involves that clear conception of law, the attainment of which is the highest point the human understanding can reach."

Modern Presbyterianism has, however, been to a certain extent leavened by the scientific and critical tendencies of the age; there is a growing number of people who feel that the apologetic standpoint is changing; the old catechisms, creeds, and confessions were largely geical sister churches, laboring for the extension of the same kingdom; this in no sense narrow or sectarian, and there are multitudes within its borders working and praying for an organic union with other evangelical denominations. Its influence on the thought and life of this Dominion of Canada has been powerful for righteousness and true citizenship. Principal Rainy, of Edinburgh, has said, "Presbyterianism means organized life, regulated distribution of forces, graduated recognition of gifts, freedom to discuss, authority to control, and agency to administer."

almost akin to Oriental fatalism was the outcome. What many of the friends and foes of Calvinism failed to note was that the system taught both the unchangeable decrees and also the free will of the creature, together with the liberty and contingency of second causes. In Calvin's teaching there was certainly a note of severity and gloom, but there was also a chorus of joy and power. The idea that good men were instruments in the hands of God to accomplish his purposes put Presbyterianism in the Dominion of Canada.

The first colonists who attempted to form settlements in America were Presbyterians; these were the celebrated French Huguenots. Admiral Coligny, who was killed in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, hoped to establish a series of Huguenot colonies on the banks of the Mississippi, and also on the shores of the St. Lawrence; his object was twofold, both to provide a place of safety for the persecuted exiles, and also to secure for France the ownership of these wide-extended territories. Chauvin, who secured from Henry IV. of France exclusive rights for carrying on the fur trade, and who formed a colony at Tadoussac, was a Huguenot; De Monts, who was made governor of all the territory extending from Philadelphia to Montreal, and eastward to the Atlantic, was also a Huguenot. Other names famous in early Canadian history, such as "the De Casans," "the Kicks," and "the De La Tours," were enrolled as members of the French Presbyterian Church.

After the expulsion of the Acadians from the valley of Grand Pre, in Nova Scotia, English settlers were invited to come and settle on the vacant lands; a proclamation was issued offering liberty of conscience to all, and placing all denominations on the same equality; a large number of the new settlers were Presbyterians, and the first minister who labored in the interest of that church in Canada was the Rev. James Lyon, who came to Nova Scotia from New Jersey in 1748, and who spent some years in successful work in Halifax and the vicinity. The first congregation organized was what is now known as St. Matthew's, in Halifax; it was formed in 1749. An interesting fact concerning this congregation is that, about the year 1715, while its minister was suffering from paralysis, the services were conducted alternately by clergymen of the Church of England, one of whom, "the Rev. John Inglis," afterwards became Bishop of Nova Scotia. The first presbytery organized was that of Lunenburg, in 1770; in 1786 the presbytery of Truro was organized; and a few years after the presbytery of Pictou, in 1795; thus was Presbyterianism inaugurated in the eastern part of our Dominion. All the eastern presbyteries have had a great influence for good, not only on the Maritime Provinces, but also on the whole of Canada; one example of the influence of the presbytery of Pictou may be noted. Sir Wm. Dawson, Rev. Dr. George M. Grant, and Rev. Dr. Forrest, Principals of three great Canadian universities—McGill, Queen's, and Dalhousie—all holding their offices at one time, were members of, and were sent out from, the presbytery of Pictou. It has also hundreds of representative men in the learned professions occupying prominent positions in Canada and the United States. In 1765 the Rev. Geo. Henry was settled at Quebec as the first Presbyterian minister in this province; soon after Eastern Ontario was entered. In 1817

Lord Selkirk had a minister settled on the banks of the Red River, at the historic parish of Kildonan. While the church was growing and expanding, it was not one united church, but was composed of many branches, representing the various sections of the church in Scotland. The spirit of union, however, was gaining ground. At six different times a union of greater or less importance was consummated. These represented the Burghers and Antiburghers, united in 1817, the Free Church and the United Presbyterians in 1860, and the union of the synod of New Brunswick of the Church of Scotland with the synod of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island of the same denomination. There were also other unions, but in 1875 all the Presbyterian branches of Canada were united in one consolidated church, called "The Presbyterian Church in Canada." The bodies represented in this union were the synod of the Lower Provinces, the synod of the Maritime Provinces in connection with the Church of Scotland, the synod of the Canada Presbyterian Church, and the synod of the Canada Presbyterian Church in connection with the Church of Scotland. In the year 1790 there were in Canada about 20,000 Presbyterians and twenty-two Presbyterian ministers. At the time of union in 1875 there were 31 presbyteries and 672 ministers; the number of members was $8,000, while $39,000 was contributed for mission purposes, and $92,672 was the total income. Last year there were reported 1534 self-sustaining churches, with 408 congregations; besides this there were 1147 mission stations under the care of presbyteries;

the number of ministers on the roll of the church was 1345; 130,609 families were reported, with 241,511 communicants; 14,400 members were added to the church on profession of their faith and 12,000 by letter. $492,997 were raised for all the work of the church, of which $222,000 was for foreign missions and about $221,000 for mission work in Canada. $30,000 were given to college work, while the grand total donated for all the work of the church last year was $3,080,773. Fifty years ago the Presbyterians of Canada had not undertaken any independent foreign mission work; now the church carries on a great system of home mission work, extending from the plains of Labrador to the gold fields of the Yukon; she has established foreign mission work, in the New Hebrides, in Trinidad, in Demerara, in Central India, in Corea, in Formosa, in Macao, China, and also in the great Chinese province of Honan. The names of such men as Geddie, "the Gordons of Erromanga," "McKenzie of Corea," and "Mackay of Formosa" stand out prominent among the great Christian missionaries of the world.

A few years ago a committee of the church began a million dollar century fund for the extension of the work in all its departments; when they completed their effort the treasurers reported that more than a million and a half had been paid, while the contributions towards ordinary purposes had made a substantial increase over other years. It will also be found that towards denominational charities, such as hospitals, asylums, and children's benevolent homes, the members of the Presbyterian Church are generous contributors. In education she has always taken a prominent part, having fine colleges for the training of theological students; Queen's College, one of the number, being a university where over a thousand stu-

Dear Sir,—Will you please send me one half-dozen of Anti-Cigarette Pledges, because I have friends who smoke, and I would like to get them to stop. They said if I would get the pledges they would sign them.

Archbishop's Condemnation. Quebec, May 23rd, 1907.

The Editor of The Standard.

Dear Sir,—I was delighted to notice, on my arrival home from Bermuda, in reading The Standard of the 11th of May, 1907, that you are waging war against the pernicious use of the cigarette, which is doing so much evil amongst our boys. You have my hearty co-operation in this very praiseworthy effort on behalf of our boys, and my earnest congratulations for what you have already done and are still doing for them.

I call your attention to a pamphlet, "The Cigarette Habit and Its Peril," by Chas. Bathly Hubbell, a personal friend of mine. The article appeared in the New Brunswick Independent some two years ago. It was distributed amongst a large number of our educational institutions, ministers of all denominations, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and all the members of his Cabinet, and several members of Parliament.

I was one of the founders of the Quebec Boys' Anti-Cigarette Union, and for ten years had the honor of being their President.

Enclosed you will also find a copy of a letter from the Secretary of His Grace Archbishop Begin, D.D., which I received last February, strongly condemning the cigarette habit amongst our boys.

With kindest regards, and again wishing you every success in your laudable undertaking, I remain,

Very sincerely yours, (Signed), JOHN C. THOMSON.

Archbishop's House, Quebec, May 13, 1907.

John C. Thomson, Esq. Dear Sir,—I am directed by His Grace the Archbishop to inform you that your two communications on the subject of Anti-Cigarette literature reached him safely, and that he carefully looked through contents.

A friend of The Standard sends the following clipping from the Chicago Record-Herald, dated May 9, 1907:

DEATH WARNS CIGARETTE USERS

Dozen Chums of Boy Who Died From Excessive Smoking Vow at Coffin to Quit Habit.

Detroit, Mich., May 8.—(Special.)—Grouped about the coffin of Herbert Secrest, a 16-year-old schoolboy, whose death was attributed to cigarette-smoking, a dozen of the boys who had been his friends vowed to-day never to smoke a cigarette again. Frank, the 13-year-old brother of Herbert, said that just before his brother died he had made him promise never to smoke another cigarette and to ask the other boys to quit.
