LANCASHIRE STRIKE THREATENS TO DISRUPT BRITISH INDUSTRIES

Extent to Which Strike Call Will Be Answered by Cotton Weavers Will Only Be Known Monday—As Most Serious Industrial Dispute Since General Strike Looms, Relief Workers Organize to Handle Cases of Distress—Two Hundred Thousand Immediately Affected.

Manchester, England, August 27.—At noon today factory whistles throughout Lancashire called 200,000 cotton workers out on a strike which threatens to become the greatest industrial dispute Great Britain has experienced since the nationwide general strike of 1926.

How far the strike call will be obeyed by the weavers, who are the first affected, will not be known until Monday morning when the mills re-open their doors. Only a small response to the call is expected in some districts because of temporary working agreements already operative. In other districts the stoppage will be complete.

A tragic aspect of the struggle is that the negotiations for peace were wrecked, not on the main issue of wages, but the reinstatement of about 3,000 workers already on strike.

On Monday at least 150,000, or fifty times the number whose reinstatement was demanded, will be out of work. In their present mood, only the law of attrition seems likely to bring the employers and the operatives together for renewed negotiations.

Many cases of distress already were being handled today in Lancashire. Several organizations were distributing food parcels, but the problem of relief will be greatly augmented next week.

There was no sign that the Government would interfere at the present stage. The cabinet held a session in London in the forenoon and the main attention was directed toward the results of the Ottawa Imperial Conference.

The failure of the Lancashire weavers to report Monday would mark wide extension of the present situation. The Burnley workers walked out on August 1, but consented to further conferences with the owners, thus averting a general strike.

Lancashire operators and employees held the final conferences yesterday without reaching an agreement, but with the week-end yet young, there doubtless will be last efforts to get the weavers back to work Monday. Other workers will not be involved for a while.

The cabinet had an important session on its programme today. The Ottawa Imperial Conference was down as the topic of discussion but it was almost certain the strike situation would be talked over as well. However, Henry B. Birtwistle, Labor Minister, has stated no good would be likely to come from Government intervention at this stage.

The cotton industry has been up for many months, with employers seeking to reduce pay and introduce more looms per weaver. The owners even offered to raise pay in some cases if the system were agreed to. But the workers said several thousand men would lose their jobs if the "more looms per weaver" plan was generally introduced.

STRIKE MOVE IN IOWA NOW 'FADING OUT'

Peace Settled on Council Bluffs and Sioux City Sectors of Farmers' War for Higher Prices Today.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Aug. 27.—Peace settled on the Council Bluffs and Sioux City sectors of the farmers' war for higher prices today.

Picketing continued on three of the four main highways leading into Council Bluffs, Sheriff P. A. Lainsworth reported, but was without violence of any kind. He expressed the opinion the strike movement was "fading out."

A settlement of the milk price war at Sioux City last night served to relieve the tension of the situation. An agreement was signed to give producers $1.80 per hundredweight for their product. The previous top was $1.40. Immediately afterward the producers agreed to lift their attempted blockade of the city.

There was, however, an attempt to spread the movement toward the vicinity of Des Moines, where 1,000 pickets were ready for action. Sheriff C. P. Keeling at Des Moines said he would use every available resource to keep the highways open.

South Dakota holiday supporters agreed to start a non-selling campaign September 5th if other state organizations agreed.

SOVIETS HINT AT REPRISALS AGAINST BAN

Economic War Between Russia and British Empire Seen if Great Britain Accepts Demands of Dominions.

Moscow, August 27.—The threat of Soviet economic "reprisals" against Great Britain's acceptance of Dominions' request at the Ottawa Imperial Conference to limit importations from the Soviet, was sounded in the newspaper Economic Life today.

In the first published comment here on the outcome of the Conference, the newspaper declared:

"It is evident to any one that the consequence of such limitation means a decrease in the volume of Soviet orders placed in England, which is now admittedly greatly significant in many branches of British industry. Soviet Russia sells chiefly wheat, timber and dairy products to England and buys heavy industrial equipment. Viewing the international aspect of the conference the newspaper said it demonstrated 'the deepening contradiction between Great Britain and the Dominions and the sharpening of a fight between the United States and Great Britain for world markets.'"

FIGURES SHOW RESULTS OF PREFERENCE ON RAW SUGAR

Ottawa, Ont., August 27.—The workings of the British preference are illustrated by the figures on raw sugar which appear in the British Trade and Navigation report for July. The preference on sugar went into effect on April 20.

In July, 1931, the importation of sugar by the United Kingdom from the British West Indies amounted to 29,009 cwt. of 112 lbs.; last month it was 508,962 cwt. The value of last month's import was $244,728, or an average of 9s 13 per cent.

Last month the British importation from Cuba was 1,605,650 cwt. valued at $455,404, or an average of 5s 3d per cwt. As to quantities, in March, the month before the preference came into effect, the British importation of raw sugar from the British West Indies amounted to 169,077 cwt., compared with 242,435 cwt. in the same month of the year before. In May it was up from 119,962 cwt. to 387,558 and in June from 109,343 to 597,593.

RETAIL TRADE STILL HELD TO NARROW RANGE

Approach of Fall Causes Contraction in Consumer Demand for Many Lines of Apparel—Collections Slow.

Montreal, Que., August 27.—Retail sales of dress apparel have slowed down with the advance in season, but a fair movement is maintained in ladies' hosiery, shoes, millinery, etc.

Visiting tourists have been more numerous during the past two weeks and dwellers catering to their special needs report increased business.

Trade movement in woollens is moderate and fall business among clothing manufacturers is developing slowly.

Dry goods jobbers are booking big small orders for fall delivery and placement orders are held to small quantities.

Groceries continue to move in normal steady volume and in the provision market has been noted a continued strengthening of butter prices.

There is little indication of a revival of activity in the industrial section, the general foundry trade, steel mills etc., are on restricted production and building trades are quieter than usual at this season.

Collections slow to fair. Fourteen district failures are reported for the week with total liabilities of $130,000.

Come to the Fair

Sherbrooke's Exhibition opens tomorrow and will continue to September second. The Exhibition is a show window, and it is being dressed with the best of everything that the Eastern Townships produce.

Whether you are interested in fruits or machines, in cattle or in flowers, here you will find the aristocracy of your favorites.

The successful business man, the successful farmer and the successful industrialist of today is the one who keeps in constant touch with his community's latest and best achievements. They are his measuring rod for his own success.

The Exhibition fulfils that function for Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships.

As Sherbrooke and Eastern Townships people take an active interest in Sherbrooke and Eastern Townships business, so will this city and district grow and prosper.

The farmer and the labourer who are willing to leave the progress of their community wholly in the hands of a few active leaders, are patriots as poor as the prominent citizen who takes no interest in the difficulties and aspirations of the worker and the agriculturist.

In these times of crisis it is the duty of all citizens to take upon themselves a share of the patriotic burden of community thinking.

Learn what this district has to sell and needs to buy, that your own buying and selling may be done more intelligently.

Come to the Fair!

THEOSOPHISTS' LEADER IS ILL

Theosophists throughout the world are alarmed by reports that Mrs. Annie Besant, 54 (above), president of the Theosophical Society's international organization, is critically ill. She is at her home near Madras, India. Mrs. Besant was sponsor of Jiddu Krishnamurti, Hindu theosophist, hailed as the new "World Teacher," whom she brought to America several years ago.

TO STUDY ECLIPSE EFFECT ON ANIMALS AND FLOWERS
Boston, Aug. 27.—The Boston Society of Natural History is watching to see what the animals and flowers will do during the total eclipse on August 31st. Reports on some previous eclipses said cocks crowed, swiftness flew low and some flowers closed their petals.

FOG AND RAIN STILL DELAY HUTCHINSONS

Possible that Next Leg of Transatlantic Flight May Be Postponed Several Days.

Port Menier, Anticosti Island, Que., Aug. 27.—Fog and rain throughout the Lower St. Lawrence River area today lengthened the enforced stay here of the "Flying Hutchinsons." The City of Richmond, powerful amphibian flown here on Wednesday from Saint John, N.B., by George Hutchinson, still rode at anchor in the bay while the eight members of the party patiently awaited for clear weather. It appeared possible that the next leg of their transatlantic flight might have to be postponed for several more days.

The flight began in New York Tuesday. Next leg will take the City of Richmond to Labrador and thence to Greenland, Iceland, Faroe Islands, the British Isles and Continental Europe.

Although anxious to continue their leisurely course across the Northern Atlantic, Hutchinson is determined to avoid hazards. Besides a crew of three and a cameraman, Hutchinson's wife and two small daughters are in the party. They have been provided with every comfort during their stay here and the youngsters are learning lessons in natural history at first hand among the wild life on this heavily wooded island.

not leave here to continue his globe-girdling flight until September 1 or later. He is awaiting the arrival of the steamship Derbiay, due September 1 with a supply of gasoline, he said.

GERMANY STILL SEEKING MONEY TO MAKE WORK

Possibility of Reduction of Interest on Internal Debt Hinted at by Minister of Economics in Interview.

Berlin, Aug. 27.—The government's search for funds to finance its projected employment programme may embrace a reduction of interest rates on Germany's domestic debt.

This conclusion was reached today after Dr. Hermann Warmbold, Minister of Economics, had told the Associated Press interest rates on the foreign debts would not be altered but that he could give no assurance as to the internal debt.

Government circles seemed agreed additional taxation, even a compulsory loan and an increase in the inheritance tax from three to thirteen per cent. would be likely to cause hardships unless industry and business were relieved of some burdensome interest charges.

German industry and business are confronted with debts totalling $3,600,000,000 marks, more than twenty billion dollars. The annual interest charge is 6,200,000,000 marks of which 5,000,000,000 marks is payable in Germany.

Some newspapers are hinting of the "necessity for printing more money" to finance the Government's programme, which among other things contemplates an expenditure of 300,000,000 marks to provide a year's work for 150,000 men.

The National Socialists continued today to deny reports their chieftain, Adolf Hitler, had suffered a nervous breakdown. They said he was merely enjoying a short holiday in the mountains.

ONTARIO DOGS TO RECEIVE REWARD FOR LIFE-SAVING

Faithful Canines Saved Thirty Lives in Ontario During Past Two Years, Humane Society Records Show.

Toronto, August 27.—Four dogs, whose heroic achievements have earned them the right to enter the canine hall of fame, will receive engraved collars and the Humane Society medal for bravery, at the Canadian National Exhibition dog show.

Humane Society records show thirty lives were saved by dogs in Ontario alone during the past two years. Details of the exploits will be recorded and placed above the kennel of each dog who has saved at least one human life.

The dogs rewarded are those who left a place of safety of their own accord to bring a human life from water, fire or similar hazard. It is considered there is a difference between the dog whose barking warned a family the house was on fire, and the two collies at Bigwood, Ont., who rolled over and pawed out the flaming dress of a school-teacher after she had jumped from the second-storey window of her home.

There is also thought to be a difference between the dog who stayed on shore at Port Credit barking when two children were in distress in a leaky punt, and the dog at Balm Beach who swam out in the lake and held a child above water until help arrived.

THEFTS ALTER ECONOMY PLANS OF GOVERNMENT

Manitoba Government Will Be Forced to Extend Additional Aid to University as Endowment Funds Vanish.

Winnipeg, August 27.—Defalcations in the endowment funds of the University of Manitoba, may necessitate a change in the economy programme of the Manitoba Government.

As part of its campaign for a balanced budget the Government planned to reduce the university grant and this step, it is believed, is now out of the question if the University is to continue to function in its usual way.

The grant was reduced from $500,000 to $400,000 at the last session of the Legislature and, faced with the need of further economies, the Government had requested the University to reduce expenses to permit of a further cut. Salaries of the University staff will be reduced from the opening of the fall term by possibly thirteen per cent. and increases in fees were announced yesterday.

In the meantime Government auditors are going over the books to determine the extent of the irregularities which led to the arrest of John A. Macbray, K.C., bursar and chairman of the Board of Governors. Macbray is held under bail charged with the theft of more than $47,000. A number of trust funds are known to be seriously depleted if not almost completely wiped out and the loss to the University may run to $1,000,000 or more.

PROMINENT OIL MAGNATE PASSED AWAY IN TORONTO
Silas Richard Parsons, Chairman of Board of British American Oil Company, Ltd., Died Today.

Toronto, Aug. 27.—Silas Richard Parsons, chairman of the Board of the British American Oil Company, Ltd., died here early today. He was seventy-eight years old, and had been ill for some months.

Mr. Parsons had held high rank in manufacturing circles in Canada and for nearly thirty years had been a leader in commercial and industrial affairs, playing an important part in the development of Dominion resources.

He was president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in 1917, having previously been a member of the Ontario Executive Committee and vice-president of the Transportation Committee, a director of the Union Trust Co. Ltd., and the Canadian Fire Insurance Co.

His widow, formerly Miss Annie Kate Hillwell, of Winnipeg, and three daughters survive.

Conn., central figure in an international search since his disappearance from Ottawa, Ont., arrived here to join his father, Joseph V. Esposito, Honolulu lawyer.

The boy, who was spirited away from the Canadian city in an automobile July 28, was accompanied by a sister. They were met by their father.

THRILLS FILL LIFE OF NEW ENVOY

Enough thrills to fill a novel have been packed into the life of Norman Armour, above, counselor of the American embassy in Paris, who has just been named minister to Haiti. Shortly after his marriage to Princess Myra Koudacheff in Russia in 1918, he saved her life in the revolutionary disorders. Ordered out of Volodga, Russia, where he was serving as a connecting link between U. S. consuls, he refused to go and was escorted out by Bolshevik troops.

When a band of revolutionaries boarded the train en route to Moscow, Armour burned the red and green secret codes of the state department and got through safely. No kin to the Chicago Armour, he is the son of a wealthy New England family and a Princeton graduate.

ECLIPSE AREA IS AFFECTED BY UNUSUAL STORM

Magnetic Storm Caused by Sun Spots Not to Interfere With Examination of Solar Eclipse.

New York, Aug. 27.—One of nature's rareties, a "magnetic storm," is predicted for the total eclipse in Quebec and New England next week, but it won't interfere a bit with seeing.

The prediction is an example of a new kind of scientific forecasting, possibly the first time when advance notice of a magnetic storm has been important to a large number of persons.

Magnetic storms are electrical disturbances coming from the sun. Scientists think they are caused both by the invisible ultra-violet rays and by slower moving hypothetical "electrical particles" shot out from the sun.

The forecast for the eclipse is made by A. M. Skellett, of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, New York. It is important information for the scientists who will use the long twilight of the eclipse, and its momentary "night," to learn more about the reasons for radio fading and differences between day and night transmission.

This magnetic storm, says Mr. Skellett, is likely to strike a day or two before the eclipse.

Its source is a sun spot. The sun revolves on its axis like the earth, but takes twenty-seven days for one turn around, so the spot shows up facing the earth every twenty-seven days. It is only when it is facing the earth that the magnetic radiations are felt.

FEAR EXPRESSED THAT PLANE HAS CRASHED SOMEWHERE IN ATLANTIC

Passing of Time Without Any Word from Lee and, Bochkon, Who Are Flying "Green Mountain Boy," Is Causing Worry—Only Hope of Rescue, if Plane Fell in Mid-Atlantic, Would Be by Passing Ship.

MOLLISON MAY NOT TAKE OFF FOR SOME DAYS

Return Flight to England Will Be Undertaken as Soon as Weather Conditions Are Favorable.

New York, Aug. 27.—Captain J. A. Mollison told the Canadian Press today he would not be able to make any decision as to the time of his take-off on the return flight to England until after another conference with Dr. James Kimball, weather expert, during the morning.

The British flyer who made the first westward solo crossing of the Atlantic a week ago, was refreshed by a long night's sleep and ready to take off just as soon as Kimball gave the word weather conditions were all right. It was doubtful whether weather over the Atlantic would be good enough for some days apparently.

When he does get away Mollison will fly his light aeroplane to Saint John for an overnight stop, and thence to Harbor Grace, Nfld., where he will pause for the trans-Atlantic hop.

Mollison's experiences as New York continues to pay him tribute today included a visit by Mayor James J. Walker and a gold medal from the city. Mollison and the Mayor met last night in the flier's hotel suite.

In a jovial mood, the Mayor said: "I felicitate you especially on the ride you have taken, because more comfortable to take yourself for a ride than to be taken for a ride. Sometime I'll tell you more about that, latter phase."

WILL GIVE PLANE FINAL INSPECTION

Port Hawkesbury, N.S., August 27.—Pilot R. T. Wickford and two companions, bound for Harbor Grace to make arrangements for final inspection of Captain J. A. Mollison's plane there, left Port Hawkesbury for the Newfoundland airport in their amphibian this morning.

When the plane was last taken to the air, but had taxi down the smooth strait of Cansu waters for a distance of several miles. It was then 7.40 Eastern Standard Time.

Wickford, with Willie Calder, aircraft inspector and L. Lesperance, Toronto mechanic, arrived here yesterday from New York by way of Grand Manan, N.B. They put aboard one hundred gallons of fuel preparatory to completing the flight to Harbour Grace, where they will await Mollison's arrival from New York on his eastward flight.

DISCOVERIES PROVE CANCER IS HEREDITARY

Dr. Madge Macklin, of London, Ont., Tells Genetic Congress of Results of Investigation into Cancerous Diseases.

Ithaca, N.Y., August 27.—Dr. Madge Macklin, of London, Ont., today told the Sixth International Congress of Genetics meeting at Cornell University that cancerous diseases are shown by statistical study to be hereditary.

Medical men, Dr. Macklin said, have recognized for some time that cancer was hereditary in some animals but were disinclined to believe the same condition applied to human beings.

Statistical study, she held, showed conclusively that the same types of cancer sometimes occur in members of a single family in a manner which cannot be attributed to chance.

Failure in many instances to trace the hereditary nature of cancer, she said, was due in part to lack of diagnosis in previous generations or to occurrence of death from other causes among parents afflicted with incipient cancer.

She urged that persons whose antecedents were known to have suffered from cancerous diseases should submit to periodic examinations at the hands of competent physicians, preferably at established cancer clinics in order that possible hereditary recurrence of the disease might be checked in its early stages.

Dr. Macklin insisted, however, that she was not attempting to London, August 27.—Europe's assumed today the trans-Atlantic plane "Green Mountain Boy," long unreported out of Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, bound for Oslo, Norway, was down in the Atlantic, and the only hope was rescue by a passing ship.

A second day came without any news of Clyde Lee and John Bochkon since they took off at 5.02 a.m. (Eastern Standard Time) on Thursday with thirty-seven hours of gasoline in their plane's tanks.

The airports at Oslo and Bergen, Norway, kept their lights going all through last night, as did Croydon and several other fields along the fliers' route to Oslo. None of the regular fields had any hope to offer.

It was generally assumed that even if the United States pair had weathered Atlantic storms they may have encountered, they must have been compelled long since to alight with empty fuel tanks. Their deadline was exhausted long before nightfall, Oslo time, last night.

MINERS TODAY MAPPING OUT AN OFFENSIVE

Bases to Be Established Near "War Area" Where About 15,000 Strikers Were Repelled by Gunfire and Clubs.

Gillespie, Ill., August 27.—Striking Illinois miners today mapped plans for a second offensive against operating mines in Southern Illinois.

Disregarding warning of Franklin County authorities that no invasion would be tolerated, the Miners' Central Policy Committee here said bases would be established soon near the "war area" where about 15,000 strikers were repelled by gun fire and clubs Wednesday night.

The committee refused to make public details of the contemplated invasion but stated several thousand men would advance into the territory in attempts through peaceful picketing to dissuade miners from working under the new $5 wage agreement. Strikers claimed units from unions in Kentucky, Indiana and Oklahoma would join the movement.

Several incidents served to arouse feeling among both strikers and working miners. Frank Moulin, a Franklin County mine examiner and supporter of the new wage scale, was wounded in the hand by shotgun slugs as he stood in the yard of his Zeigler home last night. He said the shot was fired by one of two men in a passing automobile.

In Christian County the grand jury returned indictments against As to quantities, in March, the rioting in connection with a strikers' march on Taylorville, a week previous, Ray Tombozzi, striking Taylorville miner, reported the front porch of his house was shattered by a bomb yesterday.

THE WEATHER
PARTLY CLOUDY AND SOMEWHAT COOLER

A shallow depression near Lake Huron has caused showers and thunderstorms in nearly all parts of Ontario and Quebec, with high temperature at Ottawa and Montreal, while in other parts of the Dominion the weather has been mostly fair and moderately warm. Pressure is high over the Southeastern States and immediately west of the Great Lakes, but low in the Mackenzie Valley and over the Rocky Mountain States.

Forecast: Fresh southwest winds, with local thundershowers. Sunday: Fresh northwesterly winds; partly cloudy and somewhat cooler.

Temperature yesterday: Maximum 87, minimum 60.

Same day last year: Maximum 75, minimum 45.

The Effect of Time on a Will

What would be the effect of distributing the capital of your Estate now in accordance with a plan set, say, five years or more ago?

Would there be sufficient capital and revenue to meet all debts, legacies and annuities?

Your Will should be brought up to date and made flexible to meet changing conditions — at same time consider appointing a corporate Executor, such as this Company, to manage the Estate.

SHERBROOKE TRUST COMPANY

CREDITS FROM NEW YORK AND PARIS EXPIRE

$400,000,000 Credit Obtained by British Treasury Year Ago in Vain Effort to Preserve Gold Standard.

New York, Aug. 27.—The $400,000,000 credit obtained by the British Treasury a year ago in New York and Paris, in a vain attempt to preserve the gold standard, expires today. Of the $200,000,000 supplied by a syndicate of banks under the leadership of J. P. Morgan and Co., none has been in use since April 5th, on which date the last of the bills drawn against the credit were paid, while all but $50,000,000 of the credit line has been cancelled. It is this $50,000,000 of unused credit that expires here today without renewal.

The French half of the credit consisted of a $100,000,000 overdraft on a syndicate of French banks, which was extinguished early this year and $100,000,000 of British Treasury one-year notes which were sold to the French public. A portion of this issue has been bought up in the open market. The Bank of England recently has been accumulating francs for the purpose of redeeming the remainder today.

Geneva, August 27.—Bolivia sent the League of Nations another note yesterday in connection with its dispute with Paraguay over the Gran Chaco.

The communication reiterates that Bolivia seeks an outlet through the Chaco to the sea not only as a necessity but as a right.

"Bolivia never upheld the theory that necessity creates the law," said the note, "it is the law which creates the necessity." The country's right to possess what belongs to it. That is Bolivia's case."

PREMIER BRACKEN VISITS TORONTO

Toronto, August 27.—Premier John Bracken, of Manitoba, arrived here yesterday on a private business trip, during which he will attend the Canadian National Exhibition which opened yesterday afternoon.

Premier Bracken is expected to comment on the situation in the University of Manitoba's $1,600,000 endowment trust fund. He expressed satisfaction at the conclusion of conferences on wheat marketing held with Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, at Ottawa.

RAIN TODAY IS A RELIEF FROM CRUSHING HEAT

Rivers and Lake Shores, that Have Presented Rather Disconsolate Appearance This Summer, Scene of Happy Crowds During Past Two Days.

Few Sherbrooke citizens were displeased today by the appearance of a cool, refreshing rain. With the thermometer hovering in the vicinity of the 90 degrees mark yesterday, the heat was crushing and depressing. The rain this morning, light and cool, came as a relief.

The past two days, as far as weather conditions were concerned, were the finest this summer, and rivers and lake shores which have presented a more or less disconsolate appearance during the past few weeks, were the scene of happy crowds last evening. Swimming and canoeing were enjoyed during the past two days as perhaps never before this summer.

The rain today will also be of benefit to the farmer. The past ten days of warm, sunny weather have been perfect—but a little moisture now is desired.

Centuries of Savage Struggle Inflame War Spirit in Bolivia, Paraguay

Behind the war urge sweeping Bolivia and Paraguay in the latest crisis to grip South America's "dark and bloody ground" lies a background of implacable hatreds nourished by centuries of struggle and death.

Land-locked Bolivia, looking around restlessly for a permanent pathway to the sea, is carrying on a struggle that dates back for generations. Descendants of the fierce and aggressive Incas, intermixed with Pizarro's Spanish Conquistadors, the Bolivians are an isolated race, always in fear of being cut off from the pathways of commerce.

Paraguay, not yet recovered from a war that wiped out two-thirds of her population, also is animated by a heritage of mixed blood in which Indian ancestry predominates.

Not only is Bolivia cut off from the sea, but the northern section of the republic is almost inaccessible from the south. To reach the mines, must cross Peru or Chile. Rubber and crops from the northern and southeastern sections must go out by way of the Paraguay river to Buenos Aires. Yet it is easier to enter Bolivia from either ocean than to go from either of these regions to the other.

Along the Java border live the Quichas, an Indian race once ruled by the Incas and now living in the 12,000-foot high plains of the Andean foothills. They are poor and live in miserable squalor. Peonage or debt slavery is general.

The dominant class in Bolivia is the Cholo group, made up of descendants of mixed Spanish and Indian ancestry. They are the shopkeepers and politicians, generally wealthy.

La Paz, the present capital, is the highest capital in the world. The legal capital is Sucre, farther south, but the government moved to La Paz when the railway made it the principal city.

The chief Indian tribes, the Quichas and the Aymaras, are given to drug and coca leaves and drink chicha, dulling the senses to all save savagery.

Between Bolivia and Paraguay, in the angle formed by the Paraguay and Pilcomayo rivers, lies the Grand Chaco, a desolate, tropical wilderness, only half explored and tenanted by Indians who have never been anything else but savages.

Both Bolivia and Paraguay claim extensive and conflicting rights in this area—Bolivia because it per-

HUGE SEAPLANE HAS UNDERGONE FINAL TRIALS

British Engineering Produces a Great Flying Plane Which Could Carry Sixty Passengers.

London, August 27.—Handled with ease remarkable in so large a flying machine, Britain's biggest aircraft, and the largest military aeroplane in the world—was demonstrated in flight over the river Medway at Rochester recently. Built by the Short company, world famous in the design and construction of fine flying boats, the new giant first moved from the slipway only a few weeks ago. This was only the fourth flight since the launching—evidence that no important modification of any kind has been necessary to the original design—and all of the experts invited to watch the flight were astonished at the speed and handiness of the great craft.

The boat weighs thirty-three tons with full load on board and is intended for long distance reconnaissance with the Royal Air Force. Incidentally, it was insured in London for $500,000, which is easily the biggest "cover" yet placed on any British aeroplane.

When the company's guests arrived at Rochester the giant craft was lying at her moorings, with all of her six Rolls-Royce engines. Two mechanics emerged from the hull of the boat and began to start the motors, moving quickly about the lower ring. Within four and one-half minutes all six screws were revolving and the boat was gliding over the surface of the water. First the pilot, Lankester Parker, taxied about the water, turning straight ahead, turning to port and starboard and moving in a complete circle with a radius of little more than 100 yards. While the visitors still marvelled at the ease with which the immense biplane could be steered the pilot opened the engine throttles and after a short take-off run of 12 1/2 seconds, the giant lifted off the water.

Though the craft was not flown at full speed she gave ample evidence of ability to fly exceptionally fast for an aircraft of such size, and it was noticed that three or four light aeroplanes flying overhead during the demonstration failed to keep up with her. And Major H. G. Brackley, Air Superintendent of Imperial Airways, who sat beside Parker in the pilot's cockpit, spoke afterwards of the brilliant handling qualities of the giant.

The great craft is constructed largely of duralumin, and the planing bottom of the immense boat hull is stainless steel. The six "buzzard" water-cooled motors, each of which develops up to 930 h.p., are mounted in streamlined nacelles between the planes, three pairs of engines arranged in tandem. Thus the craft has three tractor airscrews in front and three pushers at the back. The hull is 89 1/2 feet long and contains within its capacious belly comfortable living quarters for the crew of ten men, four machine gun emplacements, space for the carriage of a spare engine, ingeniously

It is all very well to say that the man who makes no mistakes makes nothing. In themselves mistakes have no merit and often do harm to others. They are profitless except to the extent to which they increase the sum total of useful experience.

THE GOLD ERA OF THE EASTERN TOWNSHIPS.

Gold is at a premium because the United States and France are said to have cornered the gold supply. There is nothing exciting about it. With all the gold in the mint vaults the Washington Treasury is just as happy as the mythical King Midas who, having acquired the magic of turning into gold everything he touched, found that he could not eat or drink gold.

Yet all the world is scratching for gold, and it is coming from the four corners of the earth, from unexpected places, and particularly from mining fields long since abandoned—even unto the days when mining engineers were ready to admit a "lost lead" or an end of alluvial deposits.

Down near the border, where Compton County abuts New Hampshire, much alluvial gold was recovered some fifty years ago, but the lost benches were abandoned for these many years. In Ditton township, where the brooks came tumbling down from the height of land which marks the boundary line, some expert old prospectors, under the direction of Dr. Harvey, a former Dominion Government geologist, have been making a systematic study of the rivers and rivulets which yielded rich returns in the days when primitive sluice boxes and riffle boards were used.

Their discoveries have aroused anew the interest of miners, and are like to confound the prophets of disaster who live in Pessimistic Parlours.

Working northward on the same streams where much gold was retrieved from the gravel beds in 1885, the engineers and prospectors have garnered nuggets which will set the country agog.

Cookshire will be the headquarters. A room has been set aside in the County Town Hall for the use of the experts, and Senator Rufus Pope, in alliance with other local men, believes that modern mining methods will unfold untold riches.

It has been known for several decades that in almost every brook valley in Compton County "colours" can be rocked to sight in the old-time miner's pan.

Gold is not a scarce metal. It exists in many places, but except in recognized gold areas, the getting out of the gold costs more than its value. But with the present demand for gold, there may be found "pay dirt" in many localities previously under-estimated.

Where such colours may be found by either farmers or prospectors the experienced mining engineers at Cookshire are prepared to report on the outlook without any charge for their services. Gravel samples may be brought to their offices in the County Hall.

On the Gilbert River, in this district, there was taken in a distance of less than one mile over $1,500,000 in gold. The gold area in this district is estimated at two hundred square miles.

THE BURDEN OF CHOOSING.

Onesime Gagnon, M.P. for Dorchester, has been mentioned as a possible successor to Camillien Houde as leader of the Conservative Opposition in the Quebec Legislature. Mr. Gagnon is a barrister, first elected to the Dominion House of Commons in 1930, defeating Lucien Cannon by 338 majority. He practices law in Quebec City, and is forty-four years of age, with a family of six children.

He was general secretary and organizer of the Conservative Convention held in Quebec in 1929, where full preparations were made for the impending Federal elections.

Differences between the Conservative members of Quebec in the choice of a permanent successor to Mr. Houde will require to be adjusted before a regular convention is called, the while C. E. Gault is acting as temporary leader of the Opposition. There is no thought of making Mr. Gault the permanent leader.

Mr. Houde still desires to impose his wishes on the sitting members in the choice of a permanent successor, and favours Aime Guertin, of Hull, but there are those who prefer Maurice Duplessis, of Three Rivers.

Mr. Gagnon's name has been advanced as that of one whose choice would bring about unanimity. His acquired Oxford accent, gained whilst attending the English university, would appeal to a few

English Conservative members in the Assembly. But Mr. Bennett is averse to the opening of any constituency in Canada where it can be avoided, and he would be loth to consent to the transfer of one of his Quebec lieutenants to the provincial field.

There is a precedent in Ontario where the Liberals chose a Federal member as leader of the provincial opposition, in Mr. Hepburn, and allow him to continue his services in the Federal House, whilst preparing the tactics and declaring the policies of his followers in the Ontario House.

There will, within the year, be two big conventions for choosing a leader—one for the place formerly held by Mr. Houde, and the other for considering the continuance in the Federal field of Mr. King.

"UNDER THE FLAG."

There is likely to be an October session of the Legislative bodies in all the nations of the British Commonwealth. They will implement the findings of their respective delegates at the Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa.

By that time the numerous details of the trade settlements will have been studied and digested. The application of the agreements is now at the door of the business men of the various countries and colonies.

Fully as important as the details is the sentiment of the alliance. On all the markets of the Empire upon which the sun never sets, the people, the buyers, the consumers, will be in a friendly and receptive mood.

Tariff preferences may help, but the strong factor which will eventuate will be the personal preference of the people, and their readiness to "try out" the goods which are natural to the country of origin.

Some British trade mark should be originated, advertised, and driven home for quick perception. The two-word slogan "Buy British" is a bit too arrogant. It is not all-embracing in the sense of what we know. "Under the Flag" would be better.

Already we have won a place in Britain for our Canadian tobaccos.

We can make and gain preference for many other things Canadian, our maple sugars and syrups, for instance. These have heretofore had only a taste sale in England, and our export trade has not been as profitable as it should be for an article so delicious and so exclusive to Canada.

Canada now has the chance of the ages to practically make the vision of Sir Wilfred come true so that the Twentieth Century shall belong to Canada—both for numerical and commercial growth.

EDITOR'S NOTE BOOK.

There are indications of improvement in conditions, but flurries on Wall Street, and on the stock markets elsewhere, are not to be taken as symptoms. There were recent flurries in the shares of the United States railways because they had received loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and were then able to avoid going the way of others into the hands of receivers. The future of railways as common carriers is not bright enough to justify the purchase of shares from an investment standpoint, but rails still have an attraction for speculators. Borrowed money may relieve but it should not deceive.

It cannot be called reprisal when we are still willing to buy as much from the United States as they buy from Canada. But we weary of buying too much from a country which erects a hostile tariff against our farmers and our forest products, particularly when that country discounts the par value of our currency.

Is a doctor justified in exceeding the speed limit? asks one of our correspondents. Surely he is, when it is an errand of mercy. But it does not thrill one to see the undertaker almost doing the same thing on his way to the cemetery. In the midst of life we are too often in a dead rush.

THIRTY YEARS AGO TODAY

From the Files of the Sherbrooke Record.
August 27th, 1902.

Mrs. Bompas, wife of the Bishop of Selkirk, arrived from her home at Cariboo in the Yukon, to spend several weeks with relatives in Lennoxville.

Ralph H. Fletcher arrived at his home in Sherbrooke after spending several months on a tour of the principal cities in Europe.

Mrs. William Morris entertained a number of friends in honor of Mrs. J. Henning Nelms, of Baltimore, Md., and other American guests.

Dr. W. A. Farwell, who had been taking a military medical course at Aldershot, left England, with Mrs. Farwell, for a visit to Paris and Vienna before sailing on his return to Sherbrooke.

Ven. Archdeacon Davidson, of Freilighsburg, presided at the laying of the corner stone of the new St. Paul's Church in Mansonville in the presence of a large gathering.

Mrs. A. N. Worthington, Mrs. Frank Thompson and Mrs. E. Winn Farwell were hostesses at the weekly tennis club tea, which was attended by a number of out-of-town guests.

At the annual meeting of the Sherbrooke "Y" Miss G. M. Bradley was elected president, Mrs. H. Spencer vice-president, and Miss Ethel Fuller and Mrs. R. G. Davidson secretaries.

The New Sherbrooke House was filled to capacity on the occasion of its opening under the management of Bodwell & Wright. The first guests to register included Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Lennon, of Boston, Dr. George L. Hume, of Compton, Henry Henson, of Clareville, and R. A. Darker, of Cookshire.

The Sherbrooke Market, on the eve of Fair Week, was crowded with buyers and sellers, farmers of the district having finished their haying and coming to town with large supplies of dairy products, meats and new vegetables, which were quickly converted into cash.

LOONBEAMS

by Ted Bullock.

Of all the exhibitions staged in the larger Canadian centres every fall, few are better than Sherbrooke's.

Yet I have always had a soft spot in my cardiac apparatus for the galaxy of rural regional fairs in these Eastern Townships which precede and follow the Sherbrooke blow-out.

This fall I have been too busy to go to any. And I have taken it to heart, because I promised myself months ago that I was going to have a whale of a time writing columns on every one of them.

So when Alfred Wood came over to my desk quite late yesterday afternoon and suggested that I knock off work long enough to journey by Puddlejumper to the Richmond Fair, I leaped at the chance with whoops of enthusiasm.

I knew I was in for an honest-to-goodness good time.

I hoped, also, to find material for to-day's column.

I was right on both counts. Two columns would be not enough to tell the tale.

I can bounce off only the high spots.

Herr Doktor Taschereau's minions have somewhat upset the even tenor of the highway in their zeal for good roads, but not all the bumps between here and San Diego could ruin the effect of the scenery we ran into from the moment we emerged from the cut in the top of the hill leading down to Windsor Mills.

My friends know me as a mild man, yet I'll tangle right here and now with any egregious ass who pops up with the boast that there is a handsomer river valley anywhere in Canada than that of the St. Francis.

In Richmond, never having seen the town before, was astounded to observe how high a proportion of the buildings are of solid brick construction. It lends an air of stability to the community which I much admired.

But few persons were on the streets, most of the population being at the Fair.

On the grounds we spied the usual midway, the usual exhibits, the usual Eastern Townships folk. An ice cream vendor informed us that the consumption of ice cream and pop was "something scandalous."

Perhaps the 91-in-the-shade which I detected on a thermometer was somewhat to blame, though you never can tell, as you shall see if you have the patience to read further.

Close by the race track I was overwhelmed with unholy glee to observe a clerical gentleman, with his collar on backwards, peeping through a crack in the fence at the midway girl-show.

A bit further on I ran into the biggest policeman I ever saw in my life, red-faced with heat, drinking ginger ale out of a diminutive bottle.

In the floral show there was a prophecy, carried out in nasturtiums and dahlias—I think they were dahlias—of what a solar eclipse would look like if it were not a solar eclipse.

Stimulated by these inspiring sights, the Chief and I joyfully accepted the invitation of the Fair's directors to a spot of hospitality in the retiring-room.

And still further stimulated by the hospitality, we decided to make the evening memorable by inventing a new kind of dinner.

I tell this because it may start a new fashion in dining in these parts.

To the Hunting booth in the the exhibits department where splendid tea, and luscious whole wheat bread, and raisins and dainties served by a comely lass, constituted an appetizing first course.

Then to Henry Ingram's House in Sherbrooke for a dish of soup-aux-pois as only Henry's chef makes on Fridays.

And finally, for a salad and trimmings, to the Chateau Bullock on Walton Avenue.

So, after some hours' conversation, to bed, more firmly convinced than ever that regional fairs are an institution indispensable to my Loonbeamatic idea of Canadian civilization.

NO NEW CASES OF PARALYSIS Quebec, Aug. 27.—No new cases of infantile paralysis had been reported to authorities overnight and the number of patients under treatment remained at fifty-two.

The mild epidemic which has developed here during this month led civic officials to forbid re-opening of schools. Twenty-eight patients are in hospitals, but physicians say none are in danger. A few cases have also been reported at Drummondville, Que., but these are also stated to be of a mild type.

PRESS COMMENT

"BRITISH FIRST" MUST STAND FIRM ALWAYS

As months go by it is more and more apparent that Great Britain adopted the tariff policy in the nick of time. If it had been deferred a month or two later—and it would not have been adopted at all if Viscount Snowden and a few other leaders, including Lloyd George had their way—complete disaster would have overtaken the country. And the collapse of Britain would have dragged down other countries.

Figures show that in the first two complete months after free trade was abandoned, British trade improved to the extent of $13,000,000 per month, or over $60,000,000. Those figures are even better as time goes by.

As a result of the Imperial Conference the figures of British trade will improve at the expense of non-British countries.

What those countries will be compelled to see, especially the United States whose Hawley-Smoot tariffs forced Britain into taking that step in self-defence, is that they will have to lower their tariffs and bargain for a bigger share of British imports.

Britain is now in a position for the first time of being able to bargain on equal terms with protected countries, and when the Prime Minister calls for the world economic conference it is not likely that a United States, or any other country, will hum and haw about taking part.

MODERN FATHER WRITES DAUGHTER

Wall Street Journal.

Dear Daughter Winnie:—You ask me if your husband should stay on his present position at an "adjusted" salary, but you forget to tell me what he would do if he didn't. You and he couldn't very well come here just now. Your brother Sheridan's salary has just been "reconsidered," so he moved into his old room at home, and brought his family with him.

Your sister Eloise telegraphed the next day that Wilfrid has just been offered a new contract that was an insult, so your mother is airing her room. Wilfrid never could endure insults. Your sister Frances, who you will recall has been a private secretary, wrote last week that if anybody thinks she is going to drop to the level of a common typist, they are mistaken, so we expect her any day.

What with those and the younger children, I imagine that as long as Rupert's salary is merely being "adjusted," he had better stay. An adjustment is nothing like a reduction. It's hard for me to keep up with the new language of big business, but as I understand it, an "adjustment" is the equivalent of a raise. Of course, Rupert wouldn't know that, he's been working only since 1928; he should ask some old-timer to explain what a raise is.

My own business is coming along fine. It was sold on the court house steps last Friday, but there were no bidders so the sheriff let me keep it. That makes the best month I've had in the uptown. Your affectionate father.

HERE IS ANOTHER CONVERT TO PRIVATE INITIATIVE Halifax Herald.

The cartoon published by the Winnipeg Free Press is both ungenerous and uncalled-for. The pioneers in radio broadcasting in this Dominion have done useful work, and the results would be greater today had it not been for the delaying and embarrassing situation in which they were placed.

Let us quote one paragraph from the report of the Parliamentary Committee. It follows:

Your Committee desires to express at the outset, to the present radio broadcasting stations, this tribute: That they entered as pioneers in a field of service in the early days, and under trying handicaps and sacrifices, worthily kept pace with a science fraught with ever-changing improvements and development, and rendered this service under handicaps, which is most praiseworthy.

Our own belief is that certain agencies in this country are disappointed with the report of the Parliamentary Committee, which checks any possibility of plunging Canada into another maelstrom of public spending. For this the Committee deserves the gratitude of the Canadian people who view with the most grave concern the almost fantastic figures that represent the position of Dominion public ownership today.

WHO DO NOT READ NEWS-PAPERS Toronto Mail and Empire.

The relationship between Governor Roosevelt and the former President was distant. They were something like fifth cousins; but Franklin Roosevelt married his cousin, who by some freak of genetics was the niece of Theodore Roosevelt.

It is difficult to believe that any newspaper reader would have such quaint ideas about public men as seem to prevail among many Americans. The point is, of course, that perhaps a minority of Americans read daily newspapers, and there must be millions who see no papers of any kind. It is among them that ignorance persists and superstitions flourish. They are the natural prey of unscrupulous politicians, and we have had the slightest doubt that if it is of any advantage to the Democratic candidate for people to mistake him for the late President or for his son this misapprehension will be widely spread.

A FOREIGN APPRECIATION OF CANADA'S PRIME MINISTER Christian Science Monitor.

The question, is the Prime Minister as "big" in fact as he is in the impression he conveys, is a fruitful source of discussion among even those who know him. In figure as in manner Mr. Bennett tends to dwarf the average individual, with his brusque self-confidence, his trick of forestalling explanations with a word. He has dealt with "big business" so long and so successfully as lawyer, director, president in a multiplicity of organizations that this attitude of command is second nature

Social and Personal

Mr. and Mrs. Carroll C. Waldron, of Beverly, Mass., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Baker, Wellington street.

Mr. Gordon Loomis has returned from Metis Beach, where he spent the summer at the Boule Rock Hotel.

to him. He makes decisions and puts them into effect with equal celebrity. On the other hand if he makes a mistake he is equally quick to realize it and to reverse it. What he despises is hesitation and half-measures.

This trait was strikingly manifested when, in 1930, after defeating the MacKenzie King administration, he appeared at the Imperial Conference in London and presented to the British Government what was interpreted in some quarters as a virtual ultimatum—preferential tariffs to the Dominions or loss of their trade. Although a storm of criticism followed these "bullying tactics," the United Kingdom under a national government soon thereafter agreed to the policy of tariff walls and Empire preference, and Mr. Bennett's prestige rose accordingly.

This same fearless and direct action marked all his pre-election speeches and placed him in power where he could have a chance to prove his words. No matter if the problems of economic deflation and unemployment eventually proved to be beyond any one man's control he tackled them wholeheartedly, according to his best traditions, with sky-high tariffs, anti-dumping laws and the issuing of a "blank cheque" on the treasury.

In public life the Prime Minister might appear to possess some of the characteristics of a "dictator" but in his personal relations he is understanding, sympathetic, generous in giving both honor and financial assistance. A reader and student, he is sensitive to criticism. He enjoys a good joke even when on himself, and for a public man, is delightfully human.

In the Conference he will certainly be decisive, outspoken, confident, but never tyrannical nor narrow, and the delegates from overseas will find him always a fair fighter, ready to bargain shrewdly but on the solid basis of mutual respect and profit.

A GOVERNMENTAL TRAVESTY. The Vancouver Sun.

The Kidd Report, so it is said, recommends a legislature in British Columbia of fourteen members and a cabinet of six members.

It sounds interesting and economical. But there are certain dangerous contingencies to be considered.

Suppose, for instance, a legislature should line up eight of one party and six of the other. The party commanding eight members would have to choose six cabinet ministers out of its eight members.

Having organized itself with six generals and two privates, it would still have to elect a speaker.

This would leave one lone member sitting on the floor of the House as spokesman for the great unwashed. That is to say, he would be left there if he could survive the indignity of being picked out as the lowest in the class.

And it would be an indignity. Imagine being singled out as the only fool in your party!

The chances are that this sole surviving private member would resign and go home. Then, the parties being even, the House would deadlock and the Government would call another election and do the whole thing all over again forever and ever until somebody stole some thing and the police got indignant and the line-up changed.

It is a fine economical plan, but it has its dangers.

This has all happened where there were five times as many members drawing sessional indemnities.—Editor.

Prior to his departure from Sherbrooke, Rev. Father Thomas J. Walsh, S.J., officiated at low mass, at eight o'clock on Wednesday morning in the Private Chapel at St. Patrick's Academy. He was assisted by Rev. Father Courtney, Brother William, of Montreal, and Brother Daniels. The Chapel was lavishly decorated with a profusion of beautiful flowers, Killarney roses adorning the Altar. The service was attended by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Walsh, Mr. and Mrs. D. A. McManamy, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Murphy and other relatives. Following the service, the clergy, Brothers and guests were entertained at breakfast, which was served in the Academy's dining room. In honor of the school's name, the decorations were carried out in green, with a silver bowl of mixed garden flowers centering the breakfast table. After breakfast Father Walsh inspected the Academy, going about the familiar rooms where only a few years ago he himself was a student. The newly ordained priest also officiated at the Mass, which was held at the convent of the Precious Blood on Monday morning and on Tuesday at Mont Notre Dame.

CHICAGO DIMS DODGERS' HOPES FOR A PENNANT

Cubs Take Third Straight Game from Brooklyn to Strengthen National League Lead—Pirates Move Within Half a Game of Second Place.

New York, August 27.—For the first time since Charlie Grimm took over the reins, the Chicago Cubs can afford to sit back and take a breathing spell.

Winners of seven successive games and of seventeen of the twenty-two they have played under Grimm's leadership, the Cubs today were six and a half games in front of the National League field.

They trounced the pennant-hungry Brooklyn Dodgers yesterday for the third time in a row by ten to four, smashing Hollis Thurston, Dazzy Vance and Jack Quinn for eight hits and nine runs in the third inning. Behind that lead, Lou Warneke coasted to his nineteenth victory of the campaign. The sensational rookie right-hander has lost only five games, three of them to the Dodgers.

The Dodgers, their pennant hopes temporarily dimmed, now must turn their attention to holding on to second place. While they were taking their trouncing at Chicago, the Pittsburgh Pirates, behind the seven-hit pitching of Leon Chagnon, blanked the Phillies by eight to nothing, and moved to within half a game of the Dodgers.

The only other National League game of the day provided Dizzy

SPORTING NOTES

PHILADELPHIA GIRL WINS TORONTO MARATHON SWIM

Toronto, Aug. 27.—For the third year in succession, Margaret Ravior, Philadelphia's contribution to the Canadian National Exhibition, won the women's marathon swim. While thousands crowded the lake shore, crushing against stout fences built to keep them from joining the swimmers in Lake Ontario, the strong young American flashed through to another brilliant triumph yesterday.

Brylen Armstrong of Detroit, came through in the dying minutes of the struggle to take second place, and May Looney, of Warren, Ohio, made it an all-American triumph in the first three. Dorothy Nalevick, Glen Cove, N.Y., was fourth, more than thirty-seven minutes behind the leader.

Toronto's contribution to the first six were Ruth Tower Corsan and Ruth Downing, who finished fifth and sixth. Miss Downing was more than seventy-five minutes behind the champion.

Miss Ravior made her own pace from the time Premier George S. Henry started them off, and continued until she climbed onto the finish float a winner. At no time was she greatly threatened.

Twenty-nine thermalists started the long grin but six of these dropped out before the winner crossed the finish line. Those remaining in the water after the first six completed the grind were ordered into their accompanying boats.

An interesting entrant was Liza Commando, of French River, a young Indian maiden, who, accompanied by her brother in a canoe, made a valiant effort to keep up with the leaders. Her style, however, was unworthy of her courage, and she trailed the better swimmers most of the way.

Dean with a chance to win his second game in three days. He pitched the Cardinals to a four to two decision over the New York Giants, allowing only five hits of which two were home runs by Carl Hubbell and Melvin Ott.

There was no change in the relative standing of the American League leaders as the New York Yankees and Philadelphia Athletics both won. Johnny Allen outpitched Ferrer as the Yankees beat Cleveland by four to two. Gehrig's twenty-ninth homer and Ruth's thirty-seventh circuit smash helped the young right-hander hang up his eighth successive victory and his fourteenth against two defeats this season.

Home runs by Bob Grove, Al Simons and Jimmie Fox, the latter's forty-seventh of the campaign, helped the Athletics to whip the St. Louis Browns by five to four, although it was Simmons' single in the ninth inning that drove across the winning run. Grove struck out ten men in winning his twelfth game of the year.

The Chicago White Sox collected eighteen hits, including seven doubles and two home runs and still managed to lose a decision to the Boston Red Sox by eleven to eight. The Red Sox got thirteen hits and what was more to the point, fourteen passes from Gaston, Gavilan, Chamberlain and Faber.

He had been reading knightly romances and grew dissatisfied with the present unromantic state of the world. He believed it his duty to inject romance into the daily grind.

On a rainy, muddy day he sallied forth to perform some knightly errand. He saw a pretty girl about to step from her car on to the dirty pavement. Hastening forward, he spread his coat under her dainty feet.

She looked at him in surprise. "Well, of all the damned fools!" she exclaimed.

NEW CHAMPION EMERGES FROM MARITIME GOLF

Percival Streeter, Saint John, Defeated Jack Harris, Nova Scotia Champion, in Final Yesterday to Replace "Gint" Cain, of Yarmouth, as Maritime Monarch.

Saint John, August 27.—The crown of Maritime golfdom rested upon a new head today. Surviving the swack's tournament on the links at Riverside, Percival Streeter, Saint John, replaced "Gint" Cain, of Yarmouth, as the champion of amateur golfers in these three provinces. Cain was eliminated in the semi-finals by Jack Harris, Nova Scotia champion from Wolfville, who in turn fell before Streeter in the final yesterday by four up and two to go.

Although Streeter won decisively, Harris seemed to be dogged by an irresistible jinx. Time after time, his shots went into the woods or other places almost as unpleasant. The Saint John player also had a good share of trouble but he managed to escape with fewer difficulties.

One feature of yesterday's play was the recovery made by Harris towards the end of the first eighteen holes. By securing a birdie two for the eighteenth, he finished the morning play on even terms with his opponent. At the ninth hole, Streeter had been four up. The young Nova Scotia champion whittled this disadvantage down to one before his sensational capture of the last hole in two strokes.

Golf ordinary and at times worse than average was the rule in the final afternoon round. Harris became acquainted with the woods and all the rough spots along the course. The match ended on the sixteenth green with Streeter four up after keeping the lead for the last seven holes.

HALIFAX LADY PLAYER WINS
NINTH MARITIME TITLE

Halifax, Aug. 27.—An accurate short game, deadly around the greens, carried Edith Bauld, of the Ashburn Club, Halifax, to her ninth Maritime Women's Golf title yesterday. Mrs. Carrie Hutchinson, of St. John's, Nfld., outdrew the Ashburn player, but could not match her accurate iron play, and the match ended on the twelfth green when Miss Bauld sank her putt for a par three to win seven up and six to go.

Mrs. Hutchinson, star of the Bally-Haly Club, in St. John's, was not at her best, and failed to display the strength that had carried her through the tourney. Miss Bauld, on the other hand, was stroking at the top of her form, and covered the outward nine in forty-two, remarkable figures for the difficult Brightwood layout. Her opponent needed forty-eight, and failed to win a single hole.

Louise Sterling, of Fredericton, captured the championship flight consolation, three and two from Mrs. H. L. Dennison, of Moncton, in an all-New Brunswick final, and Miss V. Stockwell, Ashburn, to tie first flight honors from Mrs. C. Creighton, Brightwood, three and two.

Mrs. N. McLaughlin, Truro, won the first flight consolation final from Mrs. M. Holloway, Brightwood.

INDIAN COVE CAN BOAST OF LONG HISTORY

Old Province of Quebec Offers Much in Way of Adventure and Historical Data to Those Interested in Its History.

At a period in the history of Quebec, when hundreds of wooden sailing vessels visited the port during the season of navigation, and when shipbuilding flourished as well, the various coves and shipyards on the south shore of the St. Lawrence—At Levis, Lauzon, and Indian Cove—were hives of industry, sharing to the fullest the prosperity of the Ancient Capital. It is not exaggeration to say that thousands of workmen with their families resided in the coves in those districts and there was little or no scarcity of work for all, ship smiths, ship carpenters, axemen, steevedores, timber towers, spar, sail and rope makers, riggers and labourers, though at very low wages it is true. As a matter of fact the great majority of the people at the time were directly or indirectly interested in shipbuilding and the lumber business, on which they depended for a living. All the extensive coves and sawmills, practically from the vicinity of the Levis ferry landing to New Liverpool and even westward were scenes of much activity, crowded as they were with great crabs of square timber from the forests of the Ottawa, Gatineau, Garden Island and other districts, representing as it did a vast amount of capital. So close were the crabs to one another in the coves that it was possible to walk for several miles without the danger of wetting one's feet. French-Canadian axemen were to be found busily engaged preparing the timber for shipment to the United Kingdom and other countries, while crowds of longshoremen, headed by the steevedores,

LITTLE LAKE PLAYERS WIN OVER RACINE PARK PER- FORMERS

In a friendly match, a squad of young Little Lake racket wielders won three matches out of four from a quartette of Racine Park representatives. Four singles matches were contested with the following results:

Claude Bertrand, Little Lake, defeated Leopold Lavoie, Racine Park, 8-10, 6-3, 6-1; Gaston Audet, Little Lake, defeated Fernand Courchesne, Racine Park, 6-4, 6-8, 6-2; Andre Bachand, Little Lake, defeated Sydney Spanswick, Racine Park, 1-6, 6-0, 6-4; Paul Andre David, Racine Park, defeated Paul McMahon, 6-1, 6-0.

A return match will be played in the near future on the Lake Park surface.

FRENCH DOUBLES TEAM DE-FEATED IN SEMI-FINAL

Brookline, Mass., August 27.—Henri Cochot, French Davis Cup star, and his eighteen year old protégé, Marcel Bernard, were eliminated yesterday from the semi-finals for the United States doubles championship by Ellsworth Vines and Keith Gledhill. The scores were 16-14, 3-6, 4-6, 9-7, 6-2.

Vines and Gledhill qualified to meet the defending champion, Wilmer Allison and Johnny Van Ryn, who reached the final by taking the measure of George Lott and Frank X. Shields by a count of 6-3, 2-6, 9-11, 6-4, 13-11.

found employment in loading the scores of vessels, clippers, barks and brigs—crowded together at the numerous blocks or piers.

In the shipyards on the south shore, gangs of workmen found employment through the winter seasons in assisting in the construction of many of the finest wooden vessels that for years sailed the seven seas, and contributed in no small manner to the reputation of Quebecers as shipbuilders. Some of the best sailers were built in the George T. Davis yards at Levis when the trade flourished, the Daylesford in 1853, and at a later period the Comet, Gananoque, Warburton, Onetime and Bonneton. The Titanic, of 1,405 tons, was built by the Davies in 1887. It was 1820 that Allison Davis, a native of Scotland, and ship captain, established a patent ship at Levis, it being the first of its kind in British North America. He also had a dry dock in which vessels were repaired. Mr. Davis was accidentally drowned while leaving a ship that was at anchor in the stream in 1886, and the present Davis firm dates from that period. George Taylor had a patent ship at Levis in 1844. Other shipbuilders on the south shore years ago were Messrs. W. Russell, E. W. Sewell, F. X. Marquis, W. Charland and Duna & Samson, from whose yards many famous vessels were launched from time to time during the past century, including two clipper ships for the China trade, the Tea Taster and the Morning Star, built by Mr. Sewell.

The last wooden vessel built on the south shore or in Quebec for that matter, except during the Great War period, was the barkentine White Wings, of 430 tons, constructed by William Charland and launched from his yard at Lauzon in 1903. After being launched, the White Wings took on a cargo of sawn and other lumber for the erection of houses at River Plate, in South America, for the Maguire firm.

Lauzon years ago had the distinction of having a large brewery within its limits, quite close to the Charland shipyard, originally owned by a Mr. Patton, but not a brick of the old building is left to mark the spot.

For generations all the territory from the Government highway at Lauzon, at the Island of Orleans ferry landing, though actually forming part of the ancient parish of St. Joseph de Levis, which was canonically erected in 1694, although the Roman Catholic Church registers date from 1679, as far almost as Beaumont, was known as Indian Cove. Scores of English speaking workmen with their families resided in comfortable small wooden houses in this cove and in the parish proper from the early days of the past century. But the mills, wharves, piers, booms, even the people have disappeared, all but the old Gilmour pier and wharf, which have been landmarks for years, and the place that was once so full of life and business activity is now as silent as the tomb.

The saw mill, lumber yard and cove of William and James Patton formerly occupied the site of the present extensive Davis works and the graving dock, while the adjoining property was known as the William Cream timber cove. From there almost to Beaumont the firm of John Gilmour & Co. owned several coves, covering many acres of the shore territory, where immense quantities of square timber were stored. Here as many as twenty sailing vessels were very often to be seen moored side by side at the different docks and piers taking on cargoes of timber. But with the close of the era of shipbuilding and the timber trade generally, business steadily declined and as a result Indian Cove is little more than a memory with the present generation of men and women of Levis and Quebec. The spacious dwelling, once the home of the Gilmour family, overlooking the firm's property, now serving the purpose of an hospital—and the old school house, where so many of the boys and girls of Indian Cove received their early scholastic training, still stand, however, on the highway of St. Joseph de Levis, but such well travelled hills as Patton's, Walsh's, Maguire's among others that ran from the cove to the ancient village have been practically impassable for years. Among the residents of Indian Cove at one time were such well known families as the Murphys, Dorans, O'Briens, Graces, Nevills, Berrigans, Harneys, Burn-sides, O'Neills, Harts, Maloneys, Kellys, Walshs, Maguires, McFarlands, Wrights and Frenchs. The great majority, if not all of these hardy pioneer workmen, have long since passed over to their reward and their children are scattered far and wide.

Indian Cove was so named generations ago for the reason that encampments of Montagnais and other Indians from the north shore and Micmacs from New Brunswick, for many years, even down almost to the middle of the past century, during the summer seasons, pitched their tents or wigwams there. It is recorded that many of these Indians, during their sojourns on the south shore, made pilgrimages annually to the famous shrine of Ste. Anne, paddling in large bark canoes by way of the north channel of the St. Lawrence river, taking their families and all their worldly possessions with them. On arrival at St. Anne they erected birch bark lodges on the shore to shelter themselves during the sojourn of several days, during which time they attended to their spiritual requirements. The savages are credited with having proceeded from the beach to the threshold of the modest temple walking on their knees, so great was their religious fervor, at the same time reciting their prayers. Many of their dead found a last resting place in the cemetery adjoining the little chapel there. It was a great treat at one time for the younger generations of Quebecers to be permitted to cross to Levis to visit the Indian encampment. Before leaving in the fall for their hunting grounds the Indians received gifts of bounty money, blankets, clothing, etc., from the Imperial Government authorities.

The building of the three stone forts on the Levis heights overlooking Quebec, constructed by the Imperial Government between the years 1865 and 1871 at an enormous expenditure contributed in a large measure to the prosperity of the residents of Levis, Lauzon, Indian Cove and St. Joseph. There were a large number of officers and sappers of the Royal Engineers employed in the work who parted with money freely in the enjoyment of life there. The large forts, which are marvels of workmanship, were built originally for the defence of Quebec, but were never manned or armed and have been used as store rooms for war material by the local military authorities for years. While at work the military men occupied No. 1 Fort, which has since been known as the Engineers' Camp, in the vicinity of where the officers and men of the regular army went under canvas every summer, where the militia corps down to a late period underwent their annual twelve days' training, and where the local rifle ranges are presently located.

Soon after Wolfe's arrival and his taking possession of the Island of Orleans, troops under the command of General Monckton occupied this district, including St. Joseph, and from the heights of Levis the artillery carried on a persistent bombardment, from which buildings in Quebec suffered serious damage. The Roman Catholic church at St. Joseph was converted into a hospital by the English military authorities in 1759 and here many of the wounded and dying soldiers were treated by the medical officers. It was to this ancient and sacred edifice that the body of General Wolfe was removed after his death on the Plains of Abraham, where it was embalmed and where it was shipped to England on the 15th October on board H.M.S. Royal William, of eighty guns, escorted by Admiral Saunders' fleet, sailing amidst the booming of a farewell salute from the guns at Quebec. The Royal William reached Portsmouth, England, November 17, and the General's body was carried ashore with naval and military pomp, including the firing of guns and the pealing of muffled bells. The funeral took place at Greenwich on November 20.

The town of Levis is named after Chevalier de Levis, who defeated General Murray at the battle of Ste. Foy on the 28th April, 1790. That part of the south shore which juts out into the river in front of the church of St. Joseph, opposite the Island of Orleans, has been known as "Cap de Levis" from the time of Champlain and was so named in honor of Henri de Levis, Duc de Ventadour, Viceroy of New France.

LAST WORDS OF FAMOUS PEOPLE ARE RECALLED

Great Personages Have Died, Some With a Prayer on Their Lips, Some With a Message for Loved Ones, and Some Without a Sound.

At the majority of us live wondered at some time during our lives what our last words will be on this earth. Great men and great women have died, some with a prayer on their lips, some with a message for loved ones, and some without a sound. Many have passed away loving, and others hating, and giving vent to their love or their hate. Statesmen have met death with a thought for their party or country; men of the Church have met death with a message of good-will; kings have met death with honor and bravery; queens have gone to meet their God with a soft word for their murderers. Perhaps a few examples of the last words of famous people would help us more clearly to understand the thoughts of those we read of; those who have passed on; those who have become famous in history, in life, in love and in death.

Queen Elizabeth, beloved monarch of England, at the end of a most prosperous reign, begun amid dangers and strife and many difficulties that were overcome by bold measures and prudent counsels, died exclaiming, "Ah, my possessions for a moment of time!" She desired a few moments to give counsel to her friends and subjects. George IV met death with almost a jest on his lips, for turning to Sir Walter Waller on whose arm he leaned, he said, "Watty, what is this?" Then he hesitated and continued, "It is death, my boy, and they have deceived us."

The Danish Sovereign, Frederick V, greatly beloved by his loyal subjects, cried, "There is not a drop of blood on my hands." His reign had been free of wars, strife and bloodshed. Henry VIII who had altered the entire course of the religious life in England, principally the monastic life, cried "Monks! Monks! Monks!" Edward VI the young, sickly boy-king, with his fast-fading eyes fastened on the ceiling, commended his soul to God saying, "Lord take my spirit!" Cromwell the Iron Man of the Ages listened to the discourse of those round him as his time came, and then just before the end he cried "Then I am safe," and was silent forever.

The last word of Charles I, of England, while standing on the scaffold was to Archbishop Juxon. It was just one word, "Remember." He referred to his desire that his son Charles should forgive his father's murderers. Ann Boleyn, in the same terrible situation clasped her throat with her hands and cried "It is so small! It is so small!" She was the proud possessor of a beautiful throat and it was her one vanity. The thought of the executioner's knife was too much for her. Her thoughts of her country fled at the last moment. She thought only of herself.

Sir Thomas More, as he yielded himself to the executioner, said with a sorry voice, "For my complicity down, let me shift for myself," and he prepared himself for his death. Joan of Arc, while at the stake, ready to be burned by the people, ended her eventful life with God's name on her lips.

General Wolfe, a brave man and a gallant soldier, requested that he be raised up from the ground, as the yells of his army came faintly to his ears. He cried, "What, do they run already? Then I die happy." Sir Philip Sidney, after he had relinquished his last drop of water to a parched comrade, turned to him and said, "Let me behold the end of the world, with all its vanities." Mirabeau requested that he die while delicious strains of music were played near him, but he died before the music was heard. Mozart, the master of melody, ended his life with the words, "Let me hear once more those notes I love so well. They have been my solace and my delight." Haydn, forgetful of his art, and thinking only of his King, cried "God preserve my Emperor! Alfieri's last words, dear earth were, "Clasp my hand, dear friend, I die!" Goethe, ended thus, "Light, more light!" Tasso murmured in a soft voice the Latin expression "In tuos manus Domine." Byron in his last moments struggled before saying, "Come, come, no weakness now; let's be a man to the last."

Bolton congratulated himself, as he closed his eyes on the world. He congratulated himself upon the purity of his works, saying "It is a great consolation to a poet about to die that he has never written anything injurious to virtue."

Sir Walter Scott as his last moments on earth came, murmured, "I feel as if I were myself dying." He realized that his end was so near. Doctor Johnson, the rough, kind heart, who loved a good hearty, died as he said to Miss Morris, "God bless you my dear."

Washington as he died at Mount Vernon cried out, "It is well!" Even his last thought was for his country. He referred to the state-ment he had made some time previously to his death that a man died when he had done his work in the world, and done it well. Benjamin Franklin's last words were considerably different from those of Washington. He cried, just before he passed away, "A dying man can do nothing easily." He knew he was dying.

Madame de Staël long exiled from her own country passed away in sorrow, but she said "I have loved my God, my father, and my liberty." Hannah Moore's last words were "Patty—joy!" Grotius murmured swiftly as he heard the end coming, "Be serious." He had been serious all his life. He seldom smiled. Haller, cried out in a loud voice, "The artery ceases to beat!" Adams died thinking of his country and said: "Independence forever!" Jefferson thought more personal thoughts as his last moment drew near, he said "I resign my soul to God, and my daughter to my country."

Locke cried to Lady Masham who was standing near his bedside, "Cease now!" Poor Lamb after a most self-sacrificing existence wrote his last words to a friend, "My bed-fellows are cramps and a cough; we three sleep in a bed." He died without saying a word. Bishop Broughton's last words on earth were, "Let the earth be filled with His Glory!" Archbishop Farrar said, "I shall be happy." Farrar, Crammer and George Herbert all said the same words as their time came, "Lord, receive my soul."

Albert, Prince Consort to Queen Victoria, murmured as he passed away, "I have such sweet thoughts." Laurence, as he was dying, cried to his men, "Do not give up the ship!" Thurlow always a wit, jest-even at death. "I'm shot, if I am not dying!" he cried. Addison gave vent to his thoughts in an excited cry, "See how a Christian can die!" King Augustus, one of the old-time kings, faced death standing stiff and firm with the following words on his lips, "A King should die standing." Napoleon died, thinking of his men, his army and his past life. He murmured "Tête de l'armée." Nelson brave sailor, man of iron will, made his last statement, which was symbolic of his entire life: "I have done my duty."

Charles II, died with a thought towards Nelly. His last words were "Don't let poor Nelly starve." Some claim he was speaking of a woman, some say his thoughts were for his horse, and some say he referred to his pet dog. It cannot be definitely stated which is correct.

From the above examples it will be seen that men and women meet the end running the gamut of feelings ranging from humor, as in the case of Thurlow to pathos, as in the case of Franklin.

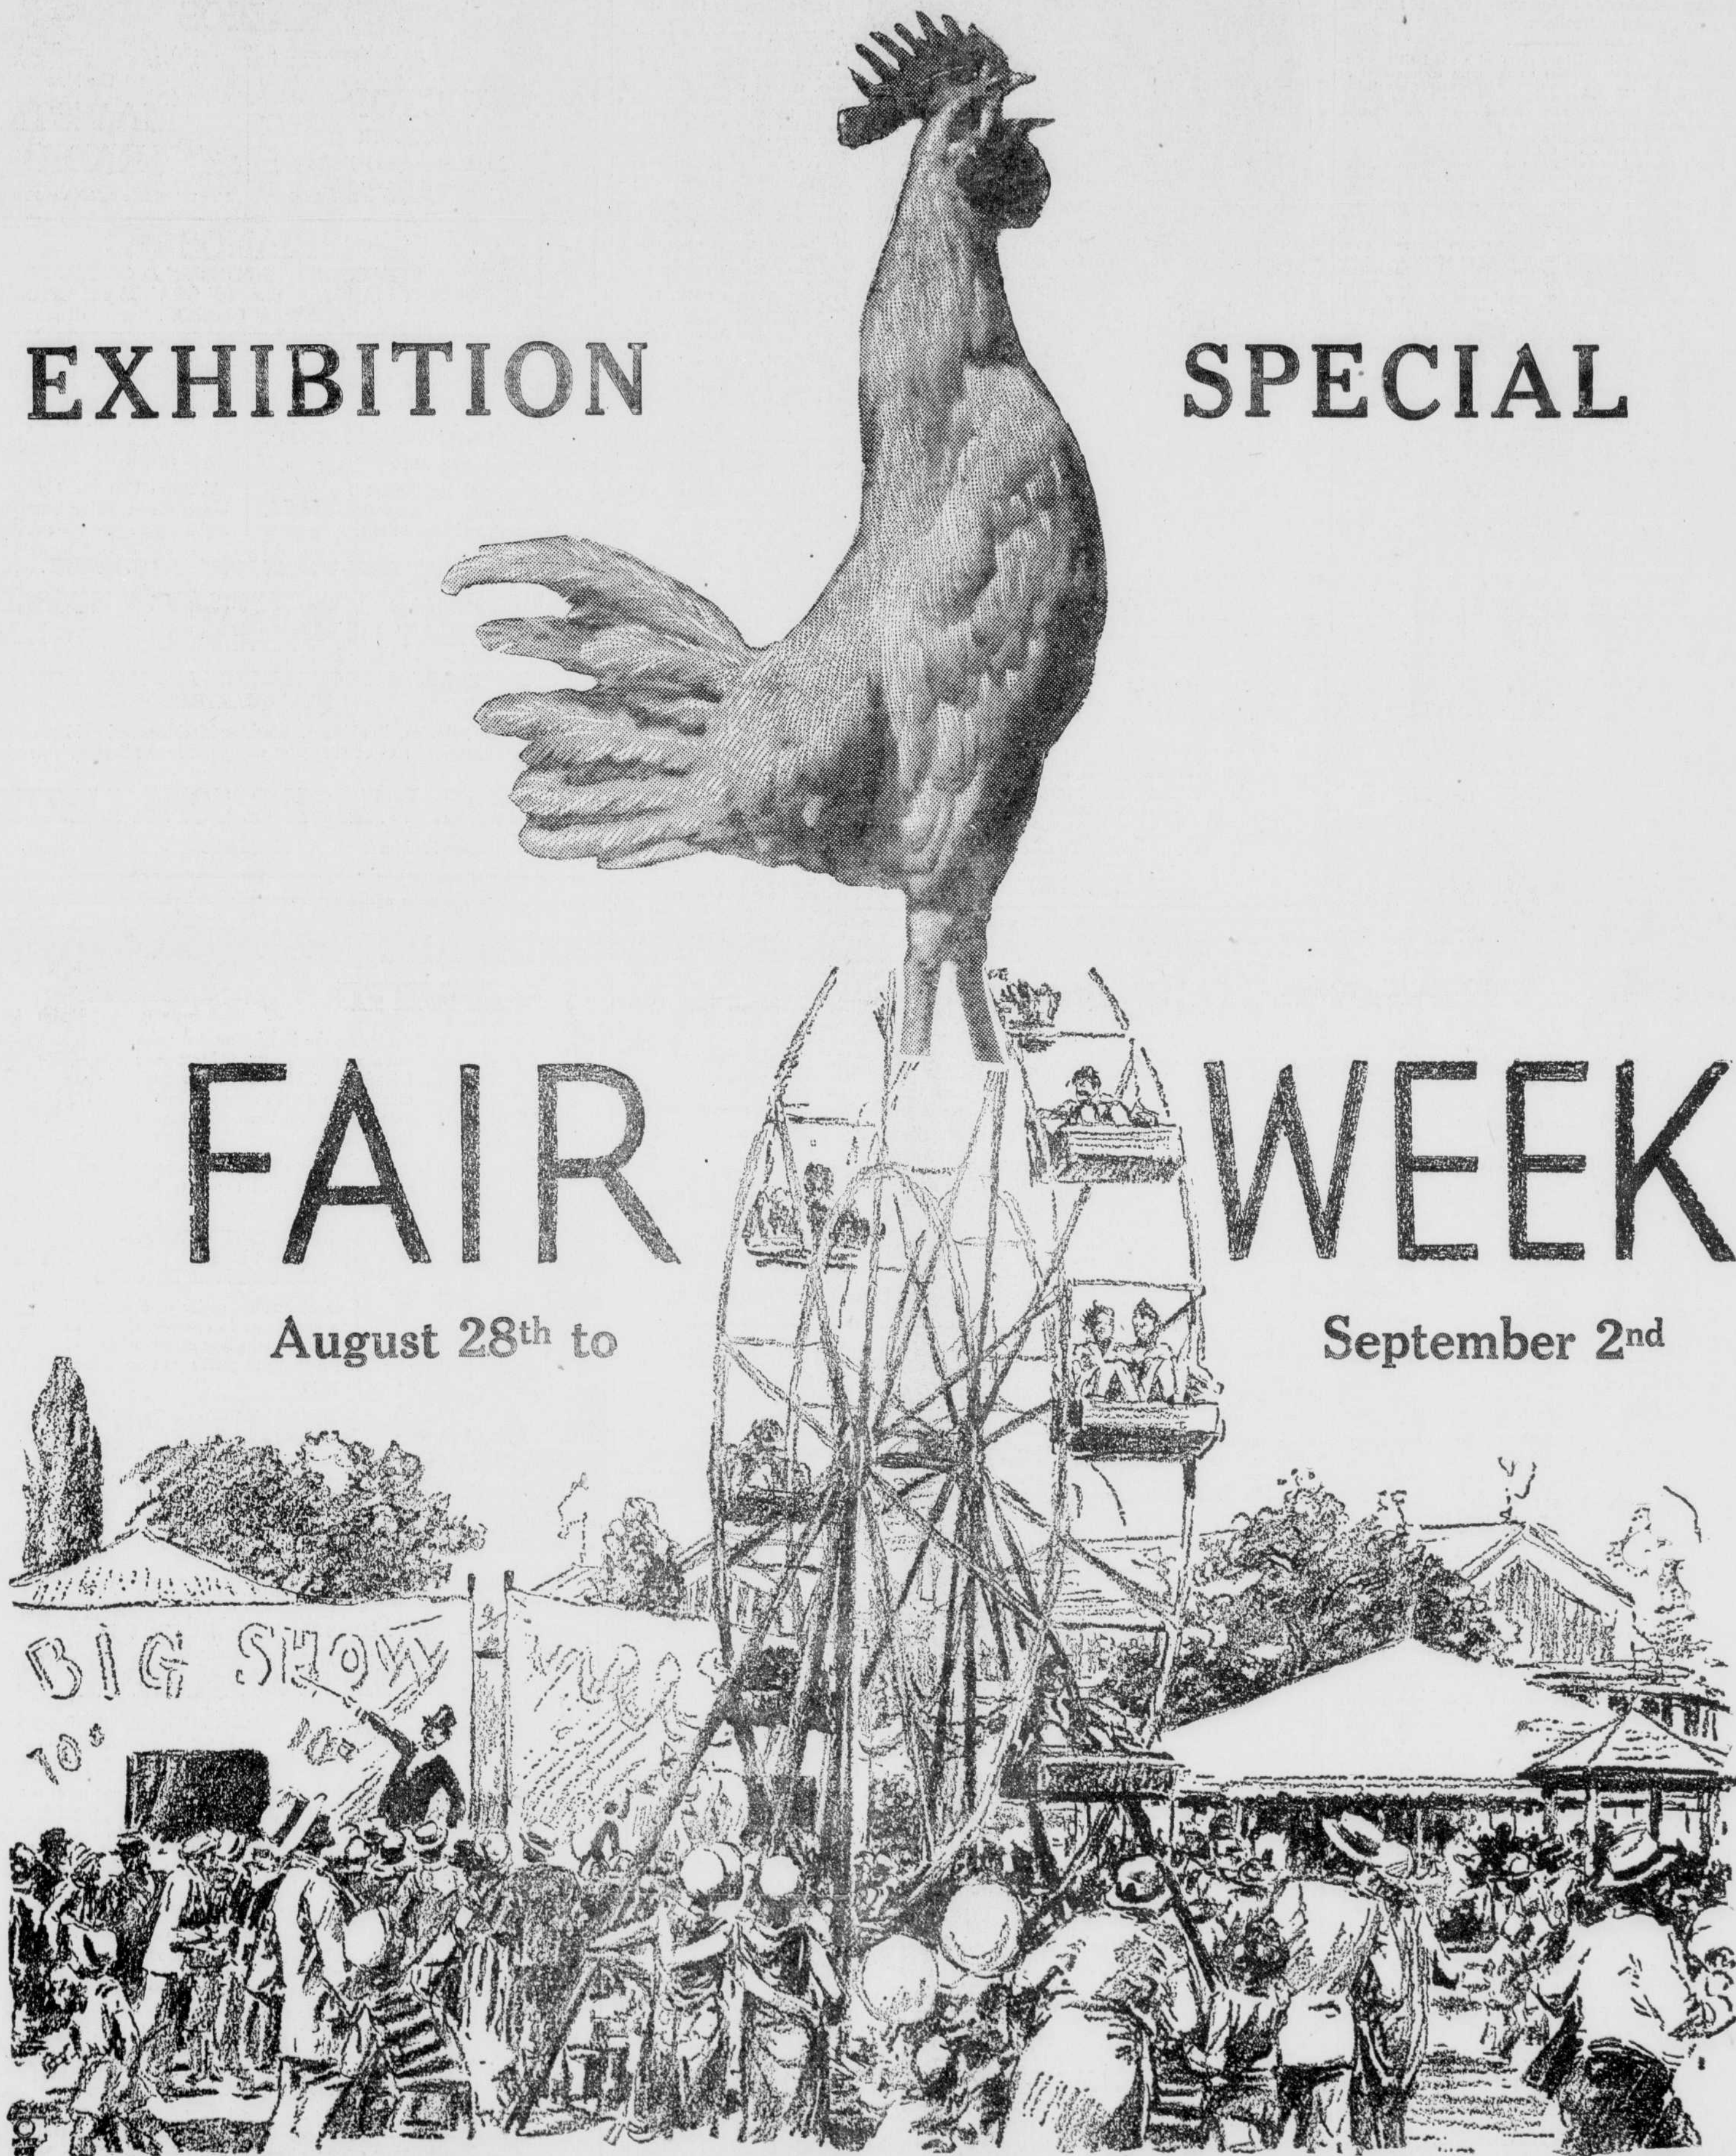

EXHIBITION

FAIR WEEK

August 28th to

September 2nd

GREAT EASTERN EXHIBITION WILL OPEN IN SHERBROOKE TOMORROW

For Six Days the Eyes of Eastern Canada Will Be Focused Upon This City as Thousands of People, Attracted by the Irresistible Spell of Exhibition Week, Pass Fair Ground Gates—Band Concert Tomorrow to Usher in First Day—Elaborate Programme for Entire Week, Featured by Special Attractions.

Sherbrooke, justifiably proud and expectant, today stands on the eve of a great event. The exhibition is about to start.

The words this year symbolize more than ever before the thrill, the exciting throb, the incomparable splendour of fair week—as the officials of Canada's Great Eastern Exhibition, after months of planning and endeavor, prepare to welcome the people of Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships—more, the people of the Province of Quebec, the whole of Eastern Canada.

As the Sherbrooke Regiment Band, under the direction of Professor Havar, renders a pleasing programme, music, with its magic, its delightful thrill, will tomorrow afternoon usher in the first day of Fair Week. The opening words will be written to Chapter 48 in the history of the Sherbrooke Exhibition—where there is no doubt will be the finest, the largest and the most elaborate ever staged in this city.

There is something about all exhibitions—from the small county fair to large and impressive expositions such as is opening in this city tomorrow—which is quite inexplicable. There is a fascination, a gripping interest—vital and strong within one, that make Fair Week welcome and new every year.

The large variety of attractions, the unsurpassed gaiety, the bright lights, sparkling in their variety, contribute towards creating the happiest week of the year.

For forty-eight years the Sherbrooke Fair has attracted large crowds. The officials, courageous and ambitious, undaunted by the difficulties they have had to face in 1930 and in 1931, have carried on this year and have planned a magnificent week. Their plans, should clear and favourable weather permit them, to materialize in the proper manner, will mean an exposition above the ordinary.

For six days, the eyes of Eastern Canada will be focused upon this city; for six days, thousands of people will crowd through the Fair Ground gates, coming from far and near, attracted by the irresistible spell of Exhibition Week; for six days, Eastern Townships farmers will exhibit their stock and display with modesty so characteristic of them, their fine achievements in this particular section of the province; for six days, Sherbrooke will thrill with the strong vitality of a world of excitement, of noise, of laughter.

All roads today lead to Sherbrooke. The railways, realizing the importance of the event, have offered their co-operation and support. Visitors to the exhibition will be able to take advantage of specially reduced rates. From all stations in Quebec and certain parts of Ontario, a fare and a quarter, valid for the duration of the exhibition, will be in force. A one-way fare valid from August 31 to September 1.

The Fair Grounds are the scene of much activity today as exhibitors bring in their cattle and other livestock. The final touches are being given to the decoration of the grounds—to the buildings and various departments.

The mid-way—that important and thrilling feature of the exhibition, without which no fair would be complete—is being installed. Froud, dancing steeds, the finest horses in the Eastern Townships, are being brought in.

This work will continue part of the day tomorrow, and will probably not be finished until Monday—when the Fair is scheduled to start in the complete sense of the word.

A band concert will be given at two o'clock tomorrow afternoon in front of the Grand Stand, when a programme of stirring music will be rendered by the Sherbrooke Regiment Band, under the able direction of Professor Havar.

Tomorrow evening at eight o'clock, the Sherbrooke Harmony Band, with its sixty-five musicians under Professor Charles Delvenne assisted by a male chorus of fifteen voices, will give another concert that will bring to a conclusion an interesting day. The chorus of male voices which will accompany the renditions of the Harmony Band is something that has never been tried on an open-air platform in this city.

There will be no lack of music at the Exhibition this year. Leo Laliberte, chairman of the music committee, has seen to that.

Professor Delvenne and his "Professional Band" will give a concert every morning at 10:15 o'clock in the Park. These same musicians will furnish the musical selections for the afternoon and evening performances on the Grand Stand during the entire week.

All day Tuesday, in addition to Professor Delvenne's band, the Cookshire Concert Band, of which H. A. Stevenson is president, and which is under the baton of Professor Henry Turcotte, will render various selections. The Sherbrooke Harmony Band and the Sherbrooke Regiment Band will be present on Wednesday and Thursday, while on Friday the Lennoxville Town Band, under Professor Joseph Blanchard, will be in attendance. Free concerts will be given in the park during the entire week at 10:30 a.m., 5 p.m., and 7 p.m.

Monday, when the Fair starts in earnest, is Decoration Day. The city will be in gala attire as perhaps never before. Merchants, dealers, citizens—all are requested to have their establishments, places of business and residences decorated. Sherbrooke will be "all dressed up" in a manner becoming the opening of Fair Week.

A monster parade will be held at noon, when every attraction from the grand stand review to the Indians in the wild west show will be represented. The civic authorities have promised a novel electric display on the main thoroughfare of the city, and the parade committee, consisting of Mayor Ludger Forest, Ralph Webster and Leo Laliberte, promise a parade as has seldom, if ever, been held in Sherbrooke.

Children will be welcome to the Fair on Monday—although Tuesday is really their day. Perhaps never before in the history of the Exhibition has so much been done towards providing an interesting, unforgettable week for the kiddies.

Youngsters love the Fair. For them it holds an appeal as for nobody else. They sit spellbound before the Grand Stand performances; they walk through the Midway, amazed at its marvels, bewildered by the "mysteries" of the snake charmer, the freaks and the funny man; they sit with happy, laughing faces in the Ferris Wheel, and gasp as their little hearts skip a beat when they are wheeled around; they ride in the merry-go-round, the whip, the caterpillar and experience the thrill of their lives.

Perhaps the children do not appreciate, as do their elders, the real significance of the Exhibition, but their joy, so visible even after a tiresome day when they trudge their weary way home, is something so fine that one feels the Fair, if it has done nothing else, has been a success in making them happy.

The raising of poultry will begin early in the week. The Poultry Building is thronged with exhibitors, and it is interesting to notice that lady exhibitors are quite prominent in this department.

Harness races are scheduled to start in the afternoon. This is one of the oldest sports in the Dominion and has retained a firm hold upon Eastern Canada and New England. Slight changes have been noticed in harness racing during the past twenty-five years, rubber tires and low-wheeled sulky having gradually made their appearance.

The "Old Guard," disliking changes of any kind, has been bitter in his criticism, but to no avail. And he is due to witness other changes. The public is demanding them. The large majority of the people at an exhibition on this day will be a knowledge of racing and is merely interested in seeing action. It is a fact that the fine points of a race are lost on the average spectator. He may not even know the use of a stop watch—but he can appreciate a closely contested heat. The harness horseman of today must play to the gallery.

Tuesday, of course, will be Children's Day. The kiddies will be admitted free to the Grounds, and to the Midway attractions for five cents. Chief among the prizes to be contested on this day will be a prancing Shetland pony to some fortunate boy or girl whose name will be drawn. An expensive 15-jewel watch will go to the next boy or girl who is lucky, and a third prize, also a watch, will be given.

All that is necessary of each child in order to get a chance to win one of the big prizes is that they hand in a special card filled out with their names and addresses at the gate. Perhaps there is not a child in the Eastern Townships and Beauce County who is not waiting with eager expectation for this big day.

Wednesday is designated as "Eclipse Day" and will be the most important day of the fair. Sherbrooke will be almost in the centre of the path of the eclipse. With a totality of close to a hundred seconds it is expected that the great phenomenon will attract much attention in this locality and the Exhibition Grounds offer a desirable point of vantage. The elevated ground will allow spectators to view the eclipse at their ease and appreciate to the fullest extent this spectacular episode of 1932.

Dr. Stratton, who is at Magog with the scientific expedition from Cambridge, England, has pointed out that the Exhibition Grounds will be the most advantageous point from which to witness the eclipse.

It is on this day that the Agricultural Minister, Hon. Mr. Godbout, Hon. J. E. Perreault and other important ministers are expected to visit the Fair.

Thursday, apart from the usual events, colorful and thrilling in themselves, will be featured by a "Birthday Party" which will be tendered by the directors of the Exhibition to all persons whose birth coincides with the inauguration of the Sherbrooke Fair, August 28 to September 2, 1885. "An Eastern Townships Day" will also be held. This is also known as "Old Timers' Day." Every person over seventy-five years of age, both in the Townships or Beauce County, will be given the freedom of the Grounds.

Never before in the annals of the local Fair has such an extensive programme of sporting events been drawn up as for this year. Friday will be the athlete's day. The outstanding item, of course, will be the five-mile marathon for which a great number of entries have been received by the Record's Sporting Editor. The race will truly be a "classic," staged on the half-mile track in front of the Grand Stand. La Tribune's tug-o-war has awakened no little enthusiasms, and twelve teams have announced their intention of striving for the gold watches which will be offered as prizes. A "strong man" event will also prove of much interest, especially to the competitors who will be awarded no less than $300 in prize money.

This "strong man" event is not in the nature of a race, but rather of a trial of strength. It will recall to mind the pioneers of the Eastern Townships who carried on their backs heavy sacks of wheat for many miles between their farms and the grist-mill. Starting from Wel-ington street, the contestants will walk to the race track at the Fair Grounds and first prize will go to the man who bears his load the longest.

During the week, the Baby Show will be an event of preeminence. Nearly five hundred entries have been received for this contest. Doctors will adjudicate who has the best, the most perfect baby in the Eastern Townships. Every child will receive a thorough medical examination, a decidedly profitable feature of the contest in itself.

Every sign today, on the eve of the opening, points to the fact that industry will be well represented at the Fair this year.

The advertising value of the Sherbrooke Exhibition is recognized by one and all as something practically inestimable. Many of the two hundred or more important plants in the Eastern Townships are exhibiting in the Manufacturers' Building.

The unique displays in the Main Building are something that will be well-worth seeing. Furthermore, a banner year is prophesied for the agriculturists and stock breeders. For the first time in the history of the exhibition almost all classes are confined to the Eastern Townships' exhibitors, with the result that the bulk of the prize money will remain in the community.

Trade and educational displays, covering every industry for which

Eastern Canada is noted, will be seen in the Industrial Building, while the three attractive exhibits—ladies', floriculture and arts—will be housed in the building to the right as one enters the main gate of the Grounds. The flowers and plants on the ground floor will present a magnificent and well-arranged showing. Owing to the nature of the exhibit, the cut flowers, it is believed, will not be placed until Monday night.

MR. TETRAULT WELCOMES ALL TO EXHIBITION

President of Eastern Townships Agricultural Association Optimistic Regarding 1932 Fair.

It is with a feeling of optimism for the success of the 1932 Fair that J. S. Tetrault, president of the Eastern Townships Agricultural Association, through the medium of the Sherbrooke Daily Record, extends a cordial invitation to residents of Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships, and to visitors from adjoining counties of the Province and other parts of the Dominion and the United States, to attend Canada's Great Eastern Exhibition.

"Eastern Township citizens, we know, appreciate the benefits that accrue from this Exhibition," he says. "But a true appreciation is of little value. What we want and need is an active participation. Every farmer and breeder should be an exhibitor. There shouldn't be one man, woman and child in the cities who at least spend one day at the Fair."

He pointed out that the Exhibition, this year, has been brought within the reach of everybody. A slashing cut has been made in the price of admission at the Main Gates and the full benefits of the Exhibition can be obtained for thirty-five cents—or, in the instance where tickets have been bought in advance, four for a dollar.

"1931," he continued, "was a year laden with many important happenings. It was actually the year when the depression, threatening and materializing in 1930, reached and affected all classes. While this year we would not be so bold or foolish as to say the depression is over, we have no hesitation in saying that it is passing. The average man is content that better times are coming—the clouds are thinning, and will soon break."

day night. The upper part of the building is devoted to the ladies' department, where exquisite fancy work of all kinds, including typical French-Canadian examples of weaving, dyeing and rug-making, may be seen.

The children's department is always an important one at the Fair. It is on the upper floor of the Industrial Building. There, a scene of activity is noticed from morning until the closing hour. Specimens of children's handwork—ranging from hand writing and essays to handicrafts in paper, wood and metal—are on exhibit. Every year there are creditable attempts in pencil and colour work, and it is in this that the girls excel—needlework and embroidery, cooking and preserves.

The other attractions of the 1932 Fair are too numerous to mention. There will be the horse show—with haughty steeds striding gracefully through their paces—the arts show, the dog show. Innumerable others will fall within the scope of the 1932 Exhibition. It is impossible in an article of this length to outline them all in detail. One must go to the Fair to appreciate it.

See the New and Indestructible PLOW POINT

At the Sherbrooke Fair.

After several years of research, we are now manufacturing a plow point of metal which will last approximately six times as long as the ordinary point.

When you use these alloyed points to break new soil, or to turn over ground which is rocky or unusually tough, you may be sure that they will last about twelve times longer than ordinary points, for the steel alloy which goes into their construction is virtually unbreakable.

They Have Lasted Four Years Already.

These new alloy points are actually in service. Some of our customers have been using them for more than four years, and say they are still giving satisfaction, whereas, formerly, they sometimes used as many as four or six ordinary points a year.

The prices of these new Alloy Plow Points are as follows:
Points weighing five pounds or less, each $1.50 | Points weighing over five pounds, a lb. 30c

To guard against error in ordering these points, be sure to tell us the make and number of your plow and, if possible, the number of your old point. Better still, send us the old point so we can be sure to furnish you exactly what you need.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS IN FAIR HISTORY

Pages of Time Turned Back to 1884, When Initial Steps Were Taken Towards Organizing Eastern Townships Agricultural Association.

A history such as that of the Eastern Townships Agricultural Association cannot but be interesting. There are few people, outsiders, who know much about this institution, the Sherbrooke Fair. They know that it is held every year and they regard it much as a traditional event. While they look forward to it every fall with keen anticipation, they less trace, perhaps, of the happenings, the historical significance of the past. That is why a brief sketch of Canada's Great Eastern Exhibition is particularly interesting at this time, on the eve of what will be one of the most elaborate events of its kind ever held in this district.

The Sherbrooke Fair is forty-eight years old. In two years it will celebrate its golden jubilee. Thus, in order to review all the important facts, it is necessary that one turn back the pages of Time to the year 1884, when the initial steps were taken towards organizing the Eastern Townships Agricultural Association. This association is the governing and administering body which operates Canada's Great Eastern Exhibition, Canada's Great Eastern Winter Fair and Horse Show, and Canada's Great Eastern Exhibition Arena.

At this time the annual meeting of the Sherbrooke Ploughmen's Association was held and a committee appointed to look into the possibilities of organizing a district fair. This committee later recommended that steps be taken to form a joint stock company with power to organize agricultural and live stock fairs and hold sales. It was then that the project, which is of such immense proportions and importance today, was launched.

The committee which laid the "foundation stone" of the E.T.A.A. consisted of R. N. Hall, R. W. Heneker, W. A. Hale, John McIntosh, Jr., J. A. Camirand, A. Stevens, R. H. Pope, W. H. Green and R. H. Tylee.

A prospectus was shortly drawn up, suggesting a capital stock of $25,000, estimating $10,000 as necessary for the purchase of land and the erection of buildings. The shares were fixed at $10 each.

Subscriptions amounting to $7,520, representing 752 shareholders, had been received by June 8, 1885—as a result of over forty meetings which had been held throughout the Eastern Townships, in such places as Knowlton, Richmond and Ayer's Plains, Huntingville, Spring Road, Randolph, Coaticook, Compton, Marlinton and Ulverton.

A provincial charter had been obtained and in 1885 it was decided to purchase a part of the Terrill Farm, twenty-eight acres, and this was the first unit of property which is at present owned by the Eastern Townships Agricultural Association.

A permanent secretary was appointed in the person of R. H. Tylee. Plans were drawn up for a main building, office, cattle sheds, grand stand and dining room. In addition, a prize fund offering $4,000, was authorized.

The first exhibition was staged on October 6, 7 and 8, 1885—being formally opened by the Lieutenant-Governor of the time. There were 11,000 visitors, and entries from Quebec, Ontario and different parts of the United States totalling $50.

The first annual meeting of shareholders was held on January 13, 1886, and from then on the progress was steady and rapid. This is noticed in the remarks made by President Robert N. Hall in his address to the shareholders on January 12, 1887. An additional seven and a half acres of ground were purchased, a main building erected at a cost of $9,000 and $18,000 expended on other improvements.

A disastrous fire, causing an unfortunate setback by the destruction of several horse barns and thirty valuable stud horses, occurred during the exhibition of 1887. The owners were partially reimbursed for this loss by the Federal Government, and in addition many personal donations and a grant of $400 from the exhibition were made.

There were hard times then as today. Financial stringency continued and in 1888 a loan of $6,700 was secured from the bank on the personal endorsement of a group of directors.

R. H. Tylee was succeeded as secretary in 1888 by E. W. Farwell, and the latter in 1890 by H. R. Fraser. The position of secretary was filled by the latter until 1890, when Walter M. Tomlinson was appointed and held office until 1909.

MANY LEGENDS ABOUT INDIANS ARE UNFOUNDED

Dime Novels, Movies and Fiction Have Perpetuated a Portrait of an Indian Who Exists Only in the Imagination.

So much is known popularly about the Indian that is not so. Dime novels, movies, and fiction have perpetuated a portrait of an Indian who exists only in the imagination.

Legend has such a strong hold on the public that in California at Indian festivals the aborigines of that region feel that they must import into their ceremonies some of the dress of the Indians of the Mississippi plains, two thousand miles eastward. Feathered head dresses such as are commonly associated with Indians were never worn by the California Indians, but their public must be pleased.

As an antidote to misinformation, Charles Amsden, secretary of the Southwest Museum, Los Angeles, has compiled a list of popular misconceptions about primitive people. Here are some of them:

Civilized man has nothing to learn from primitive man. A mysterious race lived in America before the Indians came. Races of giants and pygmies once lived in North America.

The people who built the ruined pueblos and cliff-dwellings of the Southwest and the mounds of the Mississippi drainage area mysteriously vanished from the earth.

The Indians are descended from the "Lost Tribes of Israel," or from the Welsh, Greeks, Phoenicians, Irish, Egyptians, Polynesians, or any other known people of the Old World.

Disease and illness were almost unknown in ancient times.

The cruder the object the older it is.

Everything unearthed or found abandoned is very old.

Every scratch made by primitive man has a meaning, every figure or design created by him a symbolic interpretation.

Indian pictographs are a system of writing, which will one day be deciphered and tell wonderful tales.

There is "an Indian language."

All Indians understand and frequently use the expression "How!"

"Ugh!" "papoose," "squaw."

All Indians believed in a "Great Spirit."

The Indian is stolid and unemotional, lacking in humor and imagination.

Indian men are a lot of lazy louts and women do all the work.

Primitive peoples have no laws, no system of government, and little discipline.

Only civilized folk get married—and divorced.

It was right for Americans to resist British invasion, but wrong for Indians to resist American invasion.

Civilization has been a great boon to the Indian, who has shown base ingratitude in not adopting its ways with enthusiasm and appreciation.

Civilization has derived nothing of importance from the Indian except corn and tobacco.

The Indians have no diseases now that they did not have before the time of Columbus.

The American Indian is rapidly disappearing.

Intelligence is a product of civilization. People today are much more intelligent than they were a few centuries ago.

The archaeologist depends on guess work and imaginative speculation for all of his conclusions, but will never admit it.

Archaeologists dig solely for specimens.

H. E. Channell then filled this post.

During this period, there was little of moment to record, except that a steady pressure towards improvements and educational development was noticed. H. B. Miller, who had worked as assistant secretary, succeeded Mr. Channell in 1913 and served until his enlistment with his battery in the early part of 1915, when Sydney E. Francis was appointed as acting secretary. The appointment was made permanent in 1916 on the death in action of Major H. B. Miller.

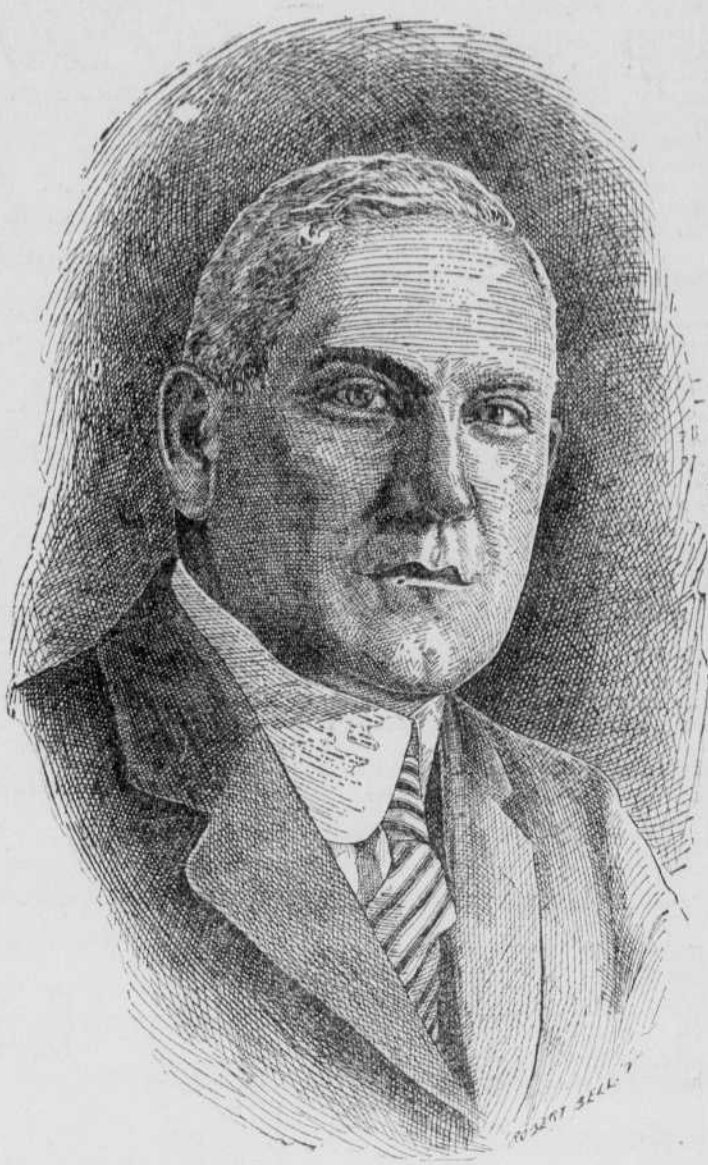

The Exhibition Grounds were used for billeting and training purposes in 1915 and during the World War period. It was not until the close of the War that progress was resumed.

Since then, there has been marked advancement. Difficulties, of course, have been encountered, but conquered.

The Fair has marched on year after year.

Today it is at its peak.

VICE-PRESIDENT OF E. T. A.

Mr. Charles B. Howard, M. P., who is vice-president of Eastern Townships Agricultural Association.

AN ARTIST.

By Ted Bullock.

There is one man in the Eastern Townships I have wanted particularly to meet ever since the 1931 Sherbrooke Exhibition. Briefly, at last year's fair, I had inspected a remarkable exhibit of photographs, a display not only of superb technique but of genuine art.

I expressed my admiration, as usual, in a somewhat loud voice.

A charming damsel, whom I did not know, overheard me. "Have you never met Nakash?" she asked.

"No," I replied, "and I am afraid I never shall. I am leaving Sherbrooke in an hour. But I shall never forget some of those pictures of his."

That was last year.

This week, just twelve months later, I was invited to attend a preview, in Nakash's luxurious King Street studio, of the items which will make up his 1932 exhibit.

On the walls hung twenty-four pictures.

There was Nakash's masterpiece, "Mother," a print of which I hope some day to own; a living, speaking study of an aged, weary woman's face.

Last year it was the centre of the exhibit.

This year, beside it, will appear another masterpiece, a strongly contrasting study in bromoil titled "The Road to Nowhere." The new work, also, tells a story. It is a story of youth, of children travelling joyfully along a sun-splashed forest path toward a mysterious wall, hazily visible through the trees.

"Where," I asked, turning toward four outdoor scenes, "do you get your subjects?"

Before me were two bluish water-pictures capturing the elusive charm of the gentle St. Francis, and two magnificent snow scenes.

"All within two miles of this room," replied the artist. "There is beauty everywhere."

"Beauty everywhere for those who can see it," I thought to myself.

Then I turned to the portraits, best, perhaps, of all Nakash's work—to a peaceful, scholarly study of Dr. Ellery Read, pastor of lovely Plymouth Church; to a vivid, reddish portrait of dynamic, red-headed little Canon Alan Shafford, of Montreal's Church of St. James the Apostle; to a rakish likeness of gallant Jim Houlden; to a distinguished study of Sherbrooke's veteran Police Lieutenant Lachance; to a charming picture of tiny Jean Fletcher.

"There are few photographers in Canada," I declared, "who can capture the spirit of a human face as you can. How do you do it?"

Nakash smiled.

"Portraiture," he explained, "must be more than merely a limning of facial lines. A good photograph is a story. It is not just a map of hair, eyes, nose and mouth."

Nakash, it seems to me, has done a great deal of very hard work to attain the technical skill he possesses, and an even greater deal of very clear thinking to learn how to conceal his brilliant technique in the finished beauty of his pictures.

Few people, in these times of financial stringency, are buying ropes of pearls and custom-built motors.

Expensive luxuries seem, just now, to be things of the distant past and of the dim future.

Yet it is unnecessary for civilized families and individuals to forfeit all the comforts and refinements of life.

The little things, odd and unusual, which give an elegant touch to living, are lower in price today than ever before.

POLICE CHIEF ISSUES A FAIR WEEK WARNING

Twenty-Five to Thirty Additional Men on Police Force During Exhibition Week—Headquarters on Grounds.

Police and fire protection. These are two features of Exhibition Week that go unrecognized by many—and generally unappreciated.

But every year, municipal police and firemen are especially on the alert—the police to protect the public from the trickery and misdemeanor of dishonest and petty thieves who make it a point to attend fairs and such events. The firemen to safeguard life and property.

H. O. Camirand, Sherbrooke's efficient and popular Chief of Police, has added between twenty-five and thirty men to his staff for Exhibition Week, and these are to be scattered throughout the city.

The police and firemen have temporary headquarters on the Fair Grounds, the fire fighting apparatus consisting of a steam engine, a hose reel and a motor-driven chemical engine. This is adequate machinery to combat any fire that might break out on the grounds, or hold the blaze under control until additional help arrives.

Through the medium of the Record, Chief Camirand voices his customary "Fair Week Warning" to the public.

A person should beware of pickpockets, he said. Every year there are such individuals on the Fair Grounds, although last year the number was smaller than usual. Pickpockets do not find Sherbrooke a healthy place when they are observed by the Law.

There will be two "big days" for the pickpockets, the Chief said—Monday, during the giant parade, and Wednesday, during the eclipse.

He smiled at the latter inference. "As the moon is about to slip in between the sun and Mother Earth," he said, "a person is apt to be so engrossed in the phenomenon as not to notice the approach of a suspicious looking stranger and the subsequent disappearance of a watch or pocket-book."

Citizens of Sherbrooke are also advised to carefully lock the doors of their homes when they go out. "There is always a number of strangers in town during Fair Week," he said. "Of course, we check on all suspicious characters and order them out of the city. The police will do everything possible to protect the public—but, the public must help also," the Chief says.

Buy advertised goods. They must always give full value.

Wife (during domestic argument): "I think you are very unreasonable, Thomas." Husband: "I certainly was. I expected you to be reasonable."

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC NEEDS GREAT STUDY

Automatic Signalling in This Modern Age Has Developed into a Real Science.

It becomes necessary, in a town or city, as it gradually increases in population, to place officers for directing the circulation of traffic, in order to facilitate its movement with all the necessary protection against accidents. The pedestrians, principally, require particular attention, on account of the slowness of their movement compared to the vehicular speed.

As everything develops and improves, the officers' command of the direction is now replaced by automatic signalling, by means of illuminated signals in colors of red, green and amber. The red color signifies the complete stop of the circulation in the signalled direction; the green color represents the order to circulate; the amber color is to advise that stopping will be ordered in an instant and that only pedestrians and vehicles, already in the act of crossing can continue to circulate. It is well to remark, at this point, that the duration of the amber colored signal is particularly predetermined upon the necessary time to protect the pedestrians venturing in the street intersection, and that the start to cross must not be affected by any vehicle not pedestrian, in the lateral way, under this signal.

Automatic signalling is periodically controlled, by means of an electric timer, the duration of each of the illuminated signals being fixed in advance, according to statistics established upon the average obtained from the different movements in the circulation, for each street intersection; just as the work done by the traffic officer represents an efficient direction. The ordinary automatic controller repeats its periodical rhythm incessantly, until a different adjustment is manually made thereto. Several ordinary automatic controllers may be joined with a distant master-controller, permitting the simultaneous operation of several signalling controls for a certain number of street intersections. The interconnection of several automatic controllers, with a master-controller, permits, in one case, several distant operations of all the signalling simultaneously, while leaving each intersection under the particular control of its controller; in another case, this interconnection permits the synchronization of all the controllers, for the progressive movement of traffic.

The adjustment of the incessant periodical rhythm, of any ordinary automatic controller is generally based on the daily average of the various movements and of the density of the circulation, relatively for any intersections. This adjustment, though, cannot conform itself to the varying mass of the circulation, several times repeated during the course of the day, without making manually the suitable changes, to obtain a maximum of efficiency. It must, furthermore, be considered that the several days of the week do not generally resemble each other, in comparison of the movement and of the density in the circulation, at the same daily hours. The necessity of frequently making this adjustment requires the employment of auxiliary agents; this fact diminishes the advantage of the automatic signalling principle, which has for basic object the saving of the traffic officer's salary. The most recent improvement of the automatic controller provides a weekly adjustment, with numerous daily changes and variable every day; this permits the coordination automatically, with maximum efficiency, of the signalling to the different movements and to the variable density of the circulation at each intersection, at any hour of the day and differently for all the weekly days. The adjustment of this new controlling principle, predetermined upon the statistics established weekly according with the circulation of any street intersection, requires but rare changes and, generally, for special occasions only. This principle represents the most efficacious work, for the direction of the circulation, that any special officer may maintain without respite, while saving the greatest possible sum of expense.

DRESSED TO A KING'S TASTE

Though more familiar to Americans in the civilian garb which he wore upon his visit to the United States last year, former Foreign Minister Dino Grandi of Italy is shown here in the glittering uniform of his country's ambassador to Great Britain. He posed for this picture as he arrived at Buckingham Palace, in London, to present his credentials to King George.

The development of the controller for automatic signalling left much to be desired, for a long time, and that permitted the origin of a great number of designs, which represent the expression of "ordinary automatic controllers," the function of which is based upon the periodical adjustment of a predetermined rhythm and repeated indefinitely until that adjustment be manually changed. The cause for the necessary changes, in the majority of cases of ordinary controllers' use, being due to that proportional adjustment, increases the expense sometimes to a point where the economy disappears. It is most logical that a controller having a flexible programme of numerous automatic changes will be much more efficacious and economical.

A different principle of automatic signalling, operated by the passing of vehicles upon the roads, has also been put on trial. The advantage of this principle resides in the signalling of the progressive movement to the vehicle ready to advance with the intersections, either from the one or the other of the crossed streets. The disadvantage of this principle is due to the fact of the time being limited, by the vehicular speed, in the opening of the passage for one of the roads and, immediately after, opening the passage for the other transverse road, which offers no time nor any protection for the crossing of the pedestrians. This principle, being arbitrary, commanded by the vehicles in crossways, becomes a simple system of ordinary control if the amber colored signal is given to permit the pedestrians to cross; a longer period of the red signal, to permit the pedestrians to cross, decreases the advantage of this principle and constitutes a defeat in signalling. In certain little travelled parts, a vehicle could not stop before crossing and after having signalled, without being obliged to wait for the passing of another vehicle; that is to say, the right of proceeding will only be given the first vehicle by the arrival of another vehicle operating the right of way.

The development of automatic signalling is now being affected towards signal operation by means of the urban tramways: the tramcars being considered, in numerous commercial centres, considerable obstructions, and their direct operation of the signals, in order to permit them to circulate without delay, is considered very advantageous. One of the main reasons for which the tramcars should directly operate the transverse street signals, particularly where they are crossing without preliminary stop, is to properly notify the momentary suspension of the lateral way circulation and assure all the necessary protection, without being obliged to slow suddenly, so causing uneasiness to passengers.

In short automatic signalling is now a stable fact and must be considered, especially for any spot requiring a protective direction of the circulation, of the greatest advantage. Its installation becomes an economical duty that adds credit to any municipality, and increases the resources of a population.

The editor stood at the pearly gate. His face was worn and old; He meekly asked of the man of fate Admission to the fold. "What have you done," St. Peter asked "To seek admission here?" "Oh! I ran a country printing plant On earth for many a year. The door swung open sharply, As Peter touched the bell, "Come in," said he, "and take a harp. You've had enough of—or trouble."

Canadian Women Demand Beatty Washers

The Beatty is the choice of the majority of Canadian women because it quickly washes the dirtiest clothing to a snowy whiteness. No need to rub or to boil, no need to use soda or other chemical products to remove dirt. The Beatty removes grime without damaging fabrics. You have only to fill the tub, which has a six-sheet capacity, turn the switch; and in six minutes the clothes are washed clean and ready to be rinsed and put through the bluing.

The Simplest Washer on the Market

The Engineering Department of the Beatty factory designs all the company's products, and makes all the basic tests. Beatty engineers spent four years experimenting on and testing the Beatty washer before production was commenced. In past years the company has captured more than two hundred certificates.

BUILT FOR USEFULNESS AND DURABILITY

The mechanism of the Beatty is simplicity itself. The four moving parts are built to eliminate friction and wear and are doubly reinforced to give years of use. The mechanism rests on a strong base reinforced with solid iron, with cushionings to hold the moving parts in perfect alignment. Several thousand dollars were spent operating the machines before the first one was put on the market. Buy a Beatty and be sure of satisfaction through the years to come. Telephone or visit the nearest Beatty dealer for a free demonstration.

Thousands of dollars have been spent on the most up-to-date buildings and machinery in the laying out of factories for production of Beatty Washers. There are many other Beatty lines, but the Washer comes first in the plant.

Thousands of Beatty Washers are shipped by truck or by rail every month. The factory is near both C.P.R. and C.N.R. stations so that the firm can ship quickly by freight or express.

Beatty Electric Sweepers are greatly in demand everywhere. Functioning more easily, cleaning more quickly, lasting longer—for these reasons they enjoy a great sale.

INSTALL A COMPLETE BEATTY LAUNDRY OUTFIT IN YOUR HOME

A washer is not complete without the washing equipment illustrated above, which saves 25% more work and time on wash-day. For that 4,000 series of these wash-day. Ask your Beatty representative about the free wash-day accessories supplied with each Beatty Washer.

VIGOROUS WASHING ACTION

The agitator which rotates 106 times per minute turns the clothes vigorously from top to bottom, backward and forward very rapidly, cleaning all the dirt out of them. With an ordinary family washing it is not necessary to heat a second tub of water when you use the Beatty. Its marvellous speed enables it to do the whole washing before the water goes cold.

Millions Use BEATTY PRODUCTS from Coast to Coast.

Established in Canada for more than 56 years, Beatty Bros. Limited have built up a widespread business and make hundreds of different articles. Today there are millions of people who use Beatty products in cities as well as in the country. Beatty Quality is known throughout Canada.

If you or your friends are interested in the Beatty products described below, do not hesitate to ask the nearest Beatty branch or dealer for free literature. It will be sent promptly, along with any special information you desire.

GIANT PARADE TO BE STAGED MONDAY NEXT

Will Include All Exhibition Attractions and Many Beautiful Floats Entered by Leading Industries.

Complete with cowboys and Indians, horses, clowns and bands, the great parade to be staged by the Sherbrooke Fair on Monday, promises to line with people the city's business and industrial streets. It will extend for an entire mile, and in it will be included all the exhibition attractions and a number of pretentious floats entered by leading industries.

The directors in charge of this huge Sherbrooke Fair feature, Mayor L. Forest, Ralph Webster and Leo Laliberte, have arranged an elaborate programme for the parade to follow and its route will include all the busiest sections of the city. Leaving the exhibition grounds at 11 a.m., the parade will proceed along Park avenue to King street east, west on King to Wellington, north on Wellington to Frontenac, west on Frontenac to Belvidere, south on Belvidere to Galt, east on Galt to Alexander, north on Alexander to Aberdeen, east on Aberdeen to Wellington, and north on Wellington to St. Francis street, where it will disband.

Seven bands will provide ample music for the long procession. One of these is a novelty colored band from the Midway. The Sherbrooke Fire Department have entered the first fire engine used in the city. Built in 1872, the engine, which will be of great historical interest, is this year celebrating its sixtieth anniversary.

Mayor L. Forest, a director of the Sherbrooke Fair, will be in the vanguard of the parade, driving with Miss Dorothy Louise Munro in her George IV phaeton, complete with coachman and footman, the most pretentious of horse show equipment. Following him will ride Mr. J. S. Tetreault, president of the Sherbrooke Fair, accompanied by Police Chief Camirand.

The following is the order of the parade:

CENTURY MARK IS PASSED BY NOTED JOURNAL

Chamber's Journal of Edinburgh and London Founded Under Title of Chamber's Edinburgh Journal in 1832.

That most interesting of periodicals, Chambers's Journal, of Edinburgh and London, has reached the century mark, for it was on February 4, 1832, that it was founded under the title of Chamber's Edinburgh Journal. The last February, 1932, number is a centenary one, containing a commemorative supplement in addition to the usual amount of good literary fare that is characteristic of Chambers's. W. Forbes Gray has the honor of writing of the long and honorable record. The founders, he reminds the readers, claimed that theirs was the first publication in which "original and respectable literature was conveyed at the minimum of price for the use of the people at large." Substantially, it is stated, that has been Regiment Band, Mayor Forest, driving with Dorothy Louise Munro, President Tetreault; Chief of Police, R.C.M.P. (Royal Canadian Mounted Police), Fire brigade, City of Sherbrooke's first fire engine. Attraction band on special sight-seeing bus provided by Provincial Transport. Chorus girls from grand stand review. National Brewery stallions. J. S. Mitchell Co. Ltd., float, Harmony Band. E. A. Vogel stable, show horses. E. Spafford stable, John Peters stable. Ben Howard stable, Ross stable, Scott Draper stable, Aubert stable. Heavy horses, Magog Band, Magog Board of Trade float, "Black Beauty" pony donated by Mr. Malcolm Mitchell to be given away by Sherbrooke Fair on Children's Day. the object of the Journal throughout its history. The "living stream of instruction and entertainment" which has now flowed for a hundred years shows no sign of abatement. The editor's address in the first number was signed by William Chambers, who long afterwards confessed that it was written in a fervid state of feeling. The "grand leading principle" inspiring the venture, was "to take advantage of the universal appetite for instruction which at present exists, to supply to that appetite food of the best kind, and in such form, and at such a price, as must suit the convenience of every man in the British Dominions." Every Saturday the poorest laborer was to have in his power to buy "a meal of healthful, useful and agreeable mental instruction." More than that, every schoolboy was to be able to obtain with his pocket-money "something calculated to influence his fate through life." The editor, indeed, did not despair of showing "such a specimen of the powers of the printing press" as hitherto had been "unexampled in the history of literature." There were more than words in the hope, for in a few years the Journal was catering to two hundred thousand readers, and using more paper yearly than all the existing Scottish newspapers put together.

Some quaint suggestions in the prospectus give an idea of social conditions in those days. For example: "For the benefit of poor old men and women who live in cottages among the hills, and who cannot sometimes come to church, because the roads are miry or because the snow lies deep on the ground," the editor promises to give "excellent pithy passages from the works of the great British moralists." Those who "reflect deeply on the constitution of man" are to be presented with "passages from the works of Newton and Bacon, the learned Encyclopaedists, and other English luminaries of the present and preceding ages." These remarks show that the Scottish people—even the humblest—were sound readers in those days, when Shank's mare was the popular means of progress.

William Chambers anticipated the demand for literature for young folks. He referred to boys as these "harmless little men," an "exceedingly ill-used people," for whom he promised "lots of nice little stories about travellers in Asia and Africa." There were also to be lessons in the building of rabbit houses on scientific principles, and in the art of legerdemain.

The first number of Chambers's Edinburgh Journal was of eight foolscap folio pages, but when the weekly reached its thirteenth year it was reduced to royal octavo. The same quantity of matter was given, for while the first numbers contained eight pages, those issued on and after January 6, 1844, had sixteen double-column pages. In its earliest form Chambers's had three columns to a page, the type being very small. It was then published from 19 Waterloo Place, Edinburgh, every Saturday and the price was three-halfpence. The imprint said it was conducted by "William Chambers, author of the Book of Scotland, etc., and Robert Chambers, author of Traditions of Edinburgh," etc. At first Robert Chambers was only a contributor, but with the fourteenth number he became joint editor with William.

Chambers's Journal met with much opposition from the press because of its success, some papers declaring it to be an illegal publication. The cause of this envy was that the Journal had more circulation than the newspapers. It was even denounced to the Stamp authorities as "infringing upon the proper domain of the newspapers." Some of the most strenuous protests came from the Edinburgh and Glasgow press. Another bother was the bombardment with requests that the brothers should run their magazine in the interests of religion. In vain was the explanation made that it "was addressed to persons of all shades of thinking, religious and secular, and that they could not take sides"; the demands continued with a good deal of abuse, the conductors being "called names."

Sir Walter Scott died on September 21, 1832, and a week later Chambers's Journal issued a twelve-page supplement containing a graphic account of his career. This was the first elaborate and authoritative biography of Scott. Robert Chambers was a friend of Scott and had been collecting facts concerning him for ten years.

Among the readers of the Journal were the shepherds on the hills and it was their habit to pass it on. The shepherd, on finishing, would place it under a rock, and another would get it as he came up in the course of his duties. The shepherds were one to every four square miles, so the Journal covered wide territory as it went from rock to rock of the boundaries. Among the contributors at that time were Hogg, the Etrick Shepherd, Hugh Miller, whose "The Old Red Sandstone" ran through the numbers; George Thomson, John Galt, Mary Howitt, Miss Mitford, Maria Edgeworth, Thomas Hardy, and a host of other worthies. Today the contributions to Chambers's Journal come from all parts of the world. The contents are varied, including fact and fiction, all in good literary form. Chambers's Journal has started its second century with a new dress of type and is more attractive than ever.

ENGINEERING IS YOUNGEST PROFESSION

Considering Short Duration of Industrial Age, It Is Amazing What Has Been Achieved by Applied Science.

"Of all professions that of scientific engineering is the youngest," states Professor E. Geoffrey Culwick, Jr., E.I.C., and he goes on to say that when we compare the short duration of the industrial age with the centuries during which the soldier, the church and the lawyer have ruled the world we are filled with amazement at what Applied Science has done. And since this latest phase is so recent, the engineer is of necessity absorbed in putting his own house in order; while he is trying to develop the best technique for his training he has continually to adjust his curricula to include an ever-increasing volume of knowledge; little wonder then that he is too absorbed in his work to realize and prepare for his ultimate status in society.

Canada, though a comparatively new country, by virtue of her geographical position, natural resources, and the qualities of her people, is destined to a great future, and with that future will come great opportunities and responsibilities for guiding the future of mankind. At present, naturally and rightly, she too is concentrating on putting her own house in order, and the chief work of our engineers is in developing those natural resources and the resulting growing industries which will be the foundation, but not the whole structure, of our maturity.

The great responsibility for anticipating and preparing for the future of the engineering profession in Canada naturally lies with our universities and all who cooperate in the education of engineers; one must remember that we are not preparing men for present conditions so much as for those of twenty or thirty years ahead, and consequently our chief responsibility is to posterity.

The university, as the seat of higher education and learning, has gradually evolved through various stages. At first its function was the education of the clergy, who held a practical monopoly of knowledge. Following the renaissance of learning in western Europe the universities gradually became the reserves of the upper classes, their object being the education of gentlemen. The third and last stage has been brought about by the remarkable increase in scientific knowledge and its applications during the last century; the practice of the professions requires a steadily increasing training and knowledge which is outside the scope of the schools and which necessitates the continuance of education into the early twenties. The old aristocratic idea of university education is therefore dying (its last stronghold is Oxford) in the face of the ideals of democracy, and the colleges are becoming more and more the training places for the professions.

HEIRESS "SELLS U. S. SHORT"

Anita Baldwin, above, one of the wealthiest women in the United States and heir to the millions of her father, the late E. J. "Lucky" Baldwin, race horse king, has announced at her estate near Los Angeles that she plans to sell all her vast holdings and retire to Europe to study art and music. She is tired, she said, of the worry and care incident to the management of the estate of her father, who was reputedly the largest landholder in California. Prior to going to Europe, she expects to make her home in Canada for an indefinite time.

This increasingly democratic role of the universities is one of the best signs that the world, by the gradual increase of intelligence and equality of opportunity, may yet cure itself of the evils which cause so much misery and suffering. At the same time there are two tendencies, on this continent at least, in the present movement which give cause for alarm. I refer to the decrease of pure learning and the idea that everyone should go to a university.

The marked vocational trend of professional courses is due chiefly to the demands of industry, which, built as it is on a strictly economic and material basis, cares much for the utilitarian qualities of its servants and little for their intellectual wealth and general happiness (except in so far as these things make them work better). The argument for a broader intellectual outlook is bound up with the fallacy of the idea of the university for all. There is no higher stage of organized education than the university; in it, therefore, provision should be made for the encouragement of the very highest social ideals and intellectual endeavor. The expenditure of money and effort on students of inferior quality will reduce the general efficiency and hinder the development of that minority of first-class minds on which, if anything, the improvement of the world depends. The danger is in the "tendency to level down all superlatives in the name of equality and good fellowship."

If the present vocational trend persists, there is the possibility of the superior intelligences of the world being divided into two camps; the scientific and the artistic. Instead of minds finely balanced in all the true values of knowledge and artistic perception, there will be two groups whose mutual understanding and sympathy will steadily decrease, to the obvious detriment of the common weal. The only remedy for this tendency lies with the individual himself, encouraged by the spirit of the universities: it is here that we must act independent of, and, if necessary, contrary to, the demands of industry. After all, the use of industry should be, not the provision of large dividends for shareholders, but the universal development of that material welfare which is necessary before mankind can learn to appreciate the higher wealth of the intellect and the spirit: it should not so dominate our educational policy as to hinder the growth of the latter. "If pure learning is to survive as one of the purposes of universities, it will have to be brought into relation with the life of the community as a whole, not only with the refined delights of a few gentlemen of leisure. I regard disinterested learning as a matter of great importance, and I should wish to see its place in academic life increased, not diminished. Both in England and in America, the main force tending to its diminution has been the desire to get endowments from ignorant millionaires. The cure lies in the creation of an educated democracy, willing to spend public money on objects which our captains of industry are unable to appreciate. This is by no means impossible, but it demands a general raising of the intellectual level."

No one with best interests of this country at heart could be in favor of denying university education to a proportion of those who, under our present system, obtain it, without providing for them a training equally as good, and probably better fitted for them, elsewhere. The need for adequate training and education of craftsmen and practical men, who may have great and valuable talents who are not the possessors of financial brains is being more and more realized; the actual provision of institutions suited to this purpose is bound, sooner or later, to follow this growth of opinion, and with the movement should be coupled a broader and higher conception of the function of the university. The rapidly increasing scope of engineering studies is making the inclusion of both a sound general training and specialization in limited fields more and more difficult of accomplishment in an undergraduate course; the scope of the general training is growing to such an extent that much specialization can only be achieved at the sacrifice of that broad outlook which should be the aim of university training. For example, the increasing importance of radio and of aeronautics calls for their fundamentals to be included in the general course, instead of being optional subjects. Further, specialization necessitates an increasing emphasis on the economical and practical side which can only be properly appreciated if the study is undertaken in close contact with industrial conditions.

A certain battalion was lined up for inspection. With them was their mascot, a Great Dane. Something annoyed the dog and it uttered a loud "Bow-wow."

The whole battalion formed fours.

SAND HILL

A very impressive service was held in the Anglican Church on Wednesday evening, when Rev. A. T. Oakley, late of Kirkdale, was inducted into the mission by the Rev. Rural Dean Buckland, of Cookshire. The service opened with an appropriate hymn, after which the authority from the Bishop of the diocese was read. Mr. E. Hemming, church warden, presented the keys of the church in token that the congregation accepted Rev. Mr. Oakley as their lawful clergyman. The Rural Dean gave a short address, speaking on behalf of Rev. Mr. Oakley. Mrs. R. Labaree presided at the organ.

When the Coldstream Guards leave the Royal Palace, London, to attend annual manoeuvres at Pirbright, it is not without a little ceremony. This was the scene as they changed guard with the khaki-clad Royal Sussex regiment, which will guard the palace during the absence of the Coldstream troops.

The Bridge Club and several of their friends were hostesses on Tuesday evening, August 23, to one of their members, Mrs. J. P. Mitchell, who is to leave town shortly.

The affair took place at the home of Mrs. Alvin Sherman. The evening was pleasantly spent, three tables of bridge being in play. The prizes went to Mrs. Worthen, Mrs. C. M. Smith and Mrs. Robins. During the evening, Mrs. William Taylor presented to the guest of honor, a half of those present, a handsome handkerchief case, filled with handkerchiefs. Enclosed in the package, Mrs. Mitchell found a poem composed for the occasion, which spoke of the regard in which she was held amongst the friends she had made since coming to town. Refreshments were served by members of the club.

The Presbyterian Circle held a very successful lawn social at the home of Mrs. Mary MacLeod on August 23. The weather being ideal, a great many availed themselves of the opportunity of meeting their friends and eating ice cream and cake. Small tables were placed on the lawn and a bouquet of flowers adorned each table. The C.G.I.T. girls served and were attractively dressed in white, with green crepe aprons and head bands. The porch from which the ladies were served was trimmed with green and white streamers and a profusion of flowers. The proceeds were very gratifying.

Howard Humphrey is staying at Dufferin Heights with Col. and Mrs. B. B. Morrill and doing caddy duty at the golf links.

Way's Mills baseball team played Stanstead married men Sunday. The score was twenty-one to six in favor of Way's Mills. In another game played between Stanstead and Ladd's Mills, the score was five to seven in favor of Ladd's Mills.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Oliver, of Barnet, Vt., are spending their vacation at Brown's Hill and Marleton and called on friends here.

Mr. Gordon Geddes and his sister, Gweneth Geddes, entertained the Y. P. S. in the Union Hall on Tuesday evening of this week. The meeting was open to the public and a good attendance was in evidence.

The meeting opened by a reading by Mrs. A. A. Ryan, after which followed the debate, as already mentioned in the last news items. The subject of debate was "Resolved that the farmer contributed more to the community than the tradesman."

The leader of the affirmative was Mrs. W. B. Holmes with Gweneth Geddes and Edwin Humphrey as colleagues, and the leader of the opposition was Gordon Geddes, with Hilma Jock and Charles Humphrey as colleagues. The arguments put up on both sides were very clever and showed that the young people of today are taking an active interest in present day affairs. The decision was in favor of the affirmative with Mr. Howard Gilley, Mr. Earle Hovey and Mrs. W. B. Sargeant as judges. A piano solo was given by Margaret Breaky and a vocal solo by Phyllis Daniels, with Marion Perry at the piano. The president, Mr. Herman Humphrey, was chairman for the evening. The national anthem closed the programme and then games were played by the young people.

Mr. Moody Merrill spent a recent week-end in Montreal, a guest of his brother, Mr. Clifford Merrill.

Rev. and Mrs. E. Merrifield and son are guests at the home of H. L. Johnson, Minton.

LETTERS SHOW NOTED WRITER'S GREAT GENIUS

Interesting Sidelights Thrown on Character of Charles Lamb by Letters He Wrote to Intimate Friends.

It has been remarked about Charles Dickens that no other writer had so many friends. Unlike many other men, who have emerged to fame and riches, he did not change his friends as time went by. He merely added to their number and cherished the humblest of his friends not less affectionately than those with whom it might be thought he had more in common. One of these now emerges from the shadows in a series of letters that has been running in the Bookman and now is published under the title of "Dickens to His Oldest Friend: The Letters of a Lifetime from Charles Dickens to Thomas Bead." In one respect it shows us Dickens in a new light.

We had read many years ago that the difference between Dickens and Thackeray was that if a friend wrote to Thackeray on behalf of another friend, perhaps a young man coming up to London to seek his fortune, Thackeray would immediately send the struggling a cheque. Dickens would not give him any money but would, on the other hand, lavishly spend his precious time in hunting up lodgings for him and assuring himself that the newcomer was not being tricked by a landlady. But now it appears that Dickens was equally generous with his money.

For instance, in a letter sending $10 to Bead he said, "Let me entreat you not to turn your thoughts to this small enclosure until you have devoted every ten pounds you have to every demand that presses upon it." But when the two men first became friends it was Bead, and not Dickens, who would occasionally act as banker.

Three years before Dickens had written, "If your expectation of receiving some money has been realized will you lend me $5 for a short time? If you have been disappointed, I shall esteem your kindness quite as highly as if you had had the money; and if you have not it will be of the most essential service to me."

It was quite a common occurrence for him to borrow a couple of sovereigns until pay day and Bead, who had introduced him to journalism and secured for him the post of parliamentary reporter for the Morning Chronicle, seemed always to have a few pounds whenever Dickens turned to him. In the end it was different, for if Bead did not begin to slip down hill he at least made no progress upward, while Dickens flashed by him like a comet.

We learn now that many of these loans which Dickens sought were for the purpose of helping his pecuniary father, the original of Mr. Micawber, out of his perennial difficulties. He was forever getting into debt and his son was forever getting him out. It was not until the publication of Pickwick in 1837 that these anxieties of the young author were removed. Thereafter money flowed freely to him. He spent it generously and even capriciously, lived like a prince, contributed to scores of charities and needy friends, and in the end leaving an estate of nearly $100,000. His transition to affluence was swift, but the marks of his early privations never left his mind, and again and again in his books we glimpse them. In these letters Dickens shows what we have always thought to be the essential mark of literary genius. They flash with humor and dim with pathos like his novels. In fact, what ever Dickens — or any other authentic literary genius — wrote, showed his peculiar stamp. Even a brief note of condolence or congratulation bore in its very texture the unmistakable Dickens signature.

He loved to write, and while we know how severe was the toll which some of his novels were compiled, there was a joy in the work that rewarded him. The letters to Bead show his capacity for observing trifling details, and his joy in seizing upon the right, the inevitable, word to describe it. His letters, like his novels, have what so few modern writers have—gusto. He delighted in his success, and he knew that Bead, too, rejoiced with him. He was continually inviting his friend to visit him, and when the intervals between their reunions were considerable he kept him informed of everything important that was happening to him, and much that was unimportant but today has its own peculiar charm. We quote from one letter which refers to his own biographer: "Have has Foster been and gone, after patronizing with suavity the whole population of Broadstairs and impressing Tom Collins with a profound conviction that he (F) did the ocean a great favor when he bathed."

We catch glimpses too of his devotion to his sister-in-law, Mary Hogarth, who died when she was seventeen. He writes: "Thank God she died in my arms and the very last words she whispered were of me. Of our sufferings at the time and all through the dreary week that ensued I will say nothing—no one can imagine what they were. You have seen a good deal of her — and can feel for us and imagine what a blank she has left behind. The first burst of my grief has passed and I can think and speak of her calmly and dispassionately. I solemnly believe that so perfect a creature never breathed. I know her inmost heart and her real worth and value. She had not a fault."

On the occasion of his daughter Kate's wedding, he wrote: "Lord, how the time and life steal on! It was but yesterday that Kate always had a scratched knee—and it was but the day before yesterday when there was no such creature." The editor includes an odd note from Bead himself who lived until 1891 with these treasures in his desk. A writer collecting material about Dickens approached him for reminiscences and he replied:

"It is true that I was present at Charles Dickens' wedding; that I acted as his best man; that I signed the register; but at this distance of time I have but a faint recollection of a scene which it would now be interesting to describe, but which, at the time it took place, when Dickens' after fame was very far from being foreseen, seemed only to be a very commonplace affair."

GREENLAY

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hayes and children have returned to Shawville, after spending a week at the home of her father, Mr. W. Greenlay.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Berry and two daughters, of Montreal, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hess.

Mrs. Earl Robinson and son, Douglas, of Berlin, N.H., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. David Stuart.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Case, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. McMorine and Mr. J. W. Young, motored to St. Johnsbury, recently.

Mrs. Mildred Morey and son, Garth, have returned home, after spending ten days in Mansonville the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Martin.

MARTINVILLE

Much sympathy is felt for Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Snow, Johnville, in the loss of their farm buildings by fire.

Rev. and Mrs. Mitchell were tea guests of Mrs. M. J. Mack and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Parker before leaving for their new home in the Madeleine Islands.

Mr. Thomas Walker has returned to his home in Maple Grove after spending a few days visiting his sister, Mrs. E. Butler, and Mr. Butler, Mrs. T. A. Butler and son, Lloyd, of Sand Hill, were recent visitors at the same home.

Mrs. Parker spent a day visiting friends in Coaticook recently.

Mr. Amede Cote had the misfortune to lose a valuable horse recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Butler, Mr.

C. S. Butler and little daughter, Mary, of Lennoxville, and Mrs. D. Burk, of East Angus, motored to Maple Grove and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Stewart recently.

Two friends were having an indignation meeting of their own. Both had suffered domestic strife and now they were comparing notes. "Aren't women the limit?" growled the first. "We husbands don't know anything at all and our wives know everything."

"Well," said his companion in misery, reluctantly, "there's one thing my wife admits she doesn't know."

"What on earth is that?"

"Why she married me."

THE UNKNOWN TERROR

WHEN TARZAN CAME TO THE GRAVEYARD OF THE ELEPHANTS, LITTLE NKIMA WENT NEARLY MAD WITH EXCITEMENT.

BUT AT THE ENTRANCE TO THE CANYON TARZAN PAUSED, AND THE APES HESITATED, LOOKING TO ONE ANOTHER IN INQUIRY. A STRANGE ANIMAL SCENT HAD COME TO THEM DOWN WIND.

ONLY HAIR-BRAINED LITTLE NKIMA VENTURED THROUGH THE PASSAGEWAY, BUT IN A FEW MOMENTS THE MONKEY WAS BACK, SCREECHING IN WILDEST TERROR.

WHEN NKIMA TOLD OF A DREAD ANIMAL LARGER THAN ANY IN THE WORLD, TARZAN ORDERED THE GREAT APE, AKUT, TO GO BACK TO RETRIEVE THE WEAPONS THAT HE HAD LOST IN HIS FALL.

AKUT FOUND THEM AT THE FOOT OF THE CLIFF.

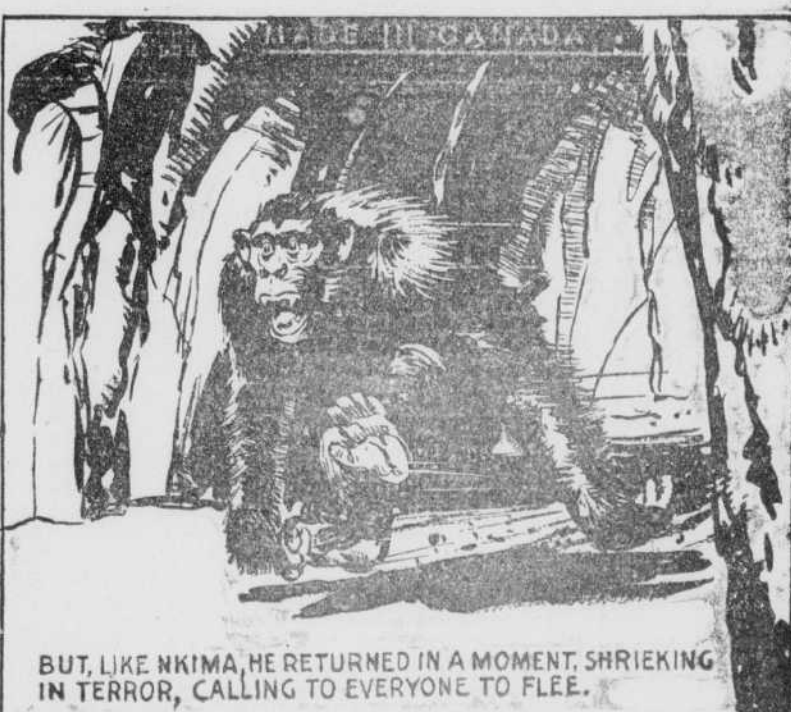

THEN HE SCRAMBLED UP THE WALLS OF THE GREAT CANYON.

WHEN TARZAN RECEIVED HIS WEAPONS BACK.....

.....ONE OF THE MORE VENTURESOME APES WENT WARILY INTO THE PASSAGEWAY.

BUT, LIKE NKIMA, HE RETURNED IN A MOMENT, SHRIEKING IN TERROR, CALLING TO EVERYONE TO FLEE.

TARZAN WAS NOT APE ENOUGH TO JOIN IN THE PANIC FLIGHT, AND AS A MAN HE HAD TO CARRY THROUGH HIS PLAN TO RESCUE VON HARBEN.

NKIMA CLUNG TO HIS LEGS SCREECHING WHY DID HE NOT TO GO, BUT TARZAN SHOOK HIM OFF AND ENTERED THE GRAVEYARD.

WHAT HE SAW MADE HIS HEART STAND STILL.

WHAT DREAD THING WAS IT THAT PUT THE BRAVEST OF BEASTS TO FLIGHT AND STOPPED THE LORD OF THE JUNGLE IN HIS TRACKS?

WATERLOO FIRE ORIGIN IS STILL UNDETERMINED

Cause of Blaze Which Destroyed Property of A. W. Watson Unknown—St. Joachim Church Disaster Accidental.

Waterloo, Que., August 27.—Mystery still shrouds the origin of the general fire which this week caused damages in Waterloo district of between $50,000 and $60,000.

The theory which was first entertained regarding the start of the fire, which destroyed the fine property of A. W. Watson, in this village, was dispelled when it was learned upon Mr. Watson's return from Montreal the day after the disastrous blaze that an insurance inspector had recently visited the property and pronounced everything, including the stove pipes and chimney, to be in satisfactory condition. It was first presumed that the fire had originated from a defective chimney, but this apparently was not the case.

The Watson residence was one of the finest in Waterloo, and the loss, together with the contents of the building, is an irreparable one for the family.

An investigation into the fire which destroyed the Catholic Church and presbytery of St. Joachim de Shefford has satisfied the authorities that the origin was accidental. The direct cause of the fire, however, is unknown.

The loss of the church and presbytery is a tragic one for St. Joachim. The church was the second one to stand on that particular site and was built thirty-nine years ago. Erected fifty-seven years ago, the previous church had replaced an older edifice of worship which stood in a different part of the parish. A bolt of lightning caused the destruction of the old church forty-one years ago. Work upon the

HISTORY MADE IN WEST COAST LUMBER TRADE

British Columbia Mills Shipped More to Overseas Markets in July Than States of Washington and Oregon Combined.

Vancouver, Aug. 27.—For the first time in the history of the Pacific northwest lumber industry, British Columbia mills during July shipped more lumber to overseas markets than did the combined mills of the states of Oregon and Washington. At the same time this province was practically excluded from the United States market by the tariff of four dollars per 1,000 feet, shipping only 45,000 feet to the Atlantic coast and California by water in July, against 7,000,000 feet in May.

British Columbia shipped 43,400,000 feet or 59.6 per cent of the total of 72,800,000 feet sent overseas from the province and two states during July. In the past Washington has accounted for more than half the overseas export lumber trade of the area, with Oregon second and British Columbia third.

Australia and the United Kingdom, two markets now almost closed to Washington and Oregon, took 32,600,000 feet of the amount shipped by British Columbia.

During the first seven months of this year water shipments of lumber from British Columbia, Washington and Oregon showed a loss of more than forty per cent, compared with the same period last year.

building which was destroyed this week was started two years later. Rev. Father Napoleon Menard, parish priest, rushed into the burning church as soon as he discovered the fire and managed to remove the Sacred Host and a statue.

IMPROVED TONE NOW PERVADE TRADE CIRCLES

Action of Stock Markets Reflects Dissipation of Unwarranted Near-Panic Fears in Commercial Quarters.

Toronto, Aug. 27.—In a burst of buying enthusiasm, Canadian share prices skyrocketed upwards during the past week and not only were many new high prices for the year recorded, but the volume of trading also attained new high levels.

The concerted upward drive of stocks reflected the dissipation of unwarranted near-panic fears and the return of confident buying on the part of the speculative public. Optimism was rampant and cheered by reports of a slow but steady revival in business conditions, marked upswings in commodities especially cotton, and improvement in New York share prices, traders on the Toronto Stock Exchange again saw, although to a lesser degree, the return of the old "boom" days.

Stocks suffered from some profit-taking last week but on the whole they gave evidence of stability which indicates the rise of the past few weeks has been well founded. The change for the better in Canadian stock markets has preceded to a certain extent, any marked change in business but although no definite improvement has yet appeared in Canadian trade, a better tone is pervading business circles.

An idea of the swiftness of the upswing in prices on the Toronto Stock Exchange in the past five weeks is obtained from a selected group of twenty-three issues which in the past forty-five trading days have appreciated on the average 102.9 per cent or maintained a gain of approximately 2 1/2 per cent, daily. This constitutes what is probably the most consistent and sweeping advance in the history of the exchange for a similar period. Results from the Empire Conference favoring certain industries, particularly the base metal producers, which have been in the forefront of the advance, the St. Lawrence Treaty and the natural reaction to thirty-one months of almost continual decline provided the constructive developments for the advance, which in its scope and breadth scarcely received a setback during the whole period.

Traders who last week looked for a corrective movement in stocks were disappointed. What setbacks did occur were followed by a rush of new buying with the result that at no time did shares close at lower levels.

Secondary issues such as Canada Cement, F. N. Burt, Service Stations, Consolidated Bakeries and Cocksfoot Flour usurped the centre of attention from the old standbys, but although trading was more active in these stocks the widest gains for the week were recorded by the old market leaders.

Canadian Pacific perhaps had the largest gain on the market jumping three points during the week to 20. Ford was up 2 1/4 points to 11 1/4 while International Nickel moved 2 1/2 points higher under the most active demand it has enjoyed this year or longer. This stock was heavily bought in New York as well as Toronto but there was nothing in the daily news to account for the revived demand. The bond market which is generally regarded as a necessary precursor of a rise in stocks, continued to display firmness last week throughout practically the whole list. Issues of the Dominion of Canada, payable in New York have been particularly strong, but demand also continues to a marked degree in issues payable in Canada.

FURTHER INCREASE SHOWN IN TRADE WITH JAPANESE

Increase of Practically Five Million Dollars During First Six Months of This Year Indicated.

Ottawa, August 27.—Canada has increased her favorable trade balance with Japan by something over five million dollars during the six months ended with June 30, 1932. Imports from Canada to Japan in that period amounted to 25,226,000 yen, as compared with 17,167,000 yen during the same period in 1931. (A yen is slightly less than half a dollar at par).

Japanese exports to Canada during the first six months of this year amounted to 4,244,306 yen, as compared with 4,742,834 yen the previous year. Paper pulp made a big item, being valued at 2,385,900 yen during the first half of this year, while printing paper exports were valued at 1,804,000 yen. During the first half of 1932 the paper exports from Canada to Japan amounted to only 106 yen.

While less wheat was exported to Japan during the period the value was increased to 5,002,100 yen, as compared with 4,742,834 yen the previous year. Paper pulp made a big item, being valued at 2,385,900 yen during the first half of this year, while printing paper exports were valued at 1,804,000 yen. During the first half of 1932 the paper exports from Canada to Japan amounted to only 106 yen.

LITTLE IMPROVEMENT IN WHOLESALE TRADE SEEN

Winnipeg, August 27.—The weekly trade report of the Canadian Credit Men's Trust Association Limited for the week ending August 27th, 1932, is in part as follows: Halifax, very little change is reported in conditions generally during the past week. Wholesale and retail trade continues slow. Collections just fair. Saint John: Very little improvement is shown in wholesale trade during the past week. Retail trade reported fairly good. Collections slow.

MANY WITNESS FINAL DAY OF RICHMOND FAIR

Despite Threatening Weather Early in the Day, More Favorable Prospects Later Brought Many to Annual Event.

Richmond, August 27.—Although early weather prospects for the final day of the annual Richmond County Fair were not as favorable as on the opening and second day. Shortly after nine o'clock, the sun began to break through the clouds. This brought out the crowds and by ten o'clock, large numbers of residents of the district and visitors from more distant points began to make their way through the gates. Judging was completed in the majority of the classes yesterday, although the final awards in one or two sections will not be announced until today. This is especially true of the special prizes for show championships.

The grand stand performances yesterday afternoon and evening attracted the usual large numbers and the admissions at the gate were well up to average.

The exhibits in the main building continued to attract great interest, while the work shown in the ladies' children's, and domestic arts sections were the centre of many enthusiastic gatherings. These exhibits are of the highest calibre ever seen at the local fair.

The cattle parade and the horse races also had their devotees. The entries in all sections of the livestock division are high in number and quality and the races were hotly contested. The full programme will be in operation throughout today and added interest is lent to the closing afternoon and evening by a series of amateur sporting events which will be staged before the grand stand.

EMPLOYMENT DURING FIRST PART OF AUGUST DROPPED

Ottawa, Ont., August 27.—Manufacturing reported a large reduction in employment at the beginning of August. This was partly due to the usual mid-summer shut-downs for holidays, the importance of which for this record was intensified this year by the fact that the close of the month fell at the weekend, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The largest losses were those of a seasonal character in iron and steel and textile mills. The tendency was also downward in construction, logging, retail trade, transportation and services. On the other hand, vegetable food and leather footwear factories, telegraphs and wholesale trade showed improvement.

Statements from 8,028 firms showed employment of 791,632 persons, as compared with 812,871 on July 1st. The index number stood at 86.3 compared with 88.7 on July 1st.

Exports to Australia are running at a higher level under the trade agreement entered into last year, according to the records of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The export value in July was $479,058 compared with $328,896 in the same month last year, in June $27,520 as against $381,091, in May $431,556 as compared with $378,506, and in April $363,129 as against $227,728.

Imports from Australia, however, are not yet what they were. In July the total was $215,064 compared with $378,500 last year, June $435,538 compared with $282,710, May $233,090 compared with $778,449 and in April $76,835 against $457,060.

KIRCHHOFF DEAD
Reichenhall, Germany, August 27.—Vice-Admiral Hermann Johann Kirchhoff, who was second in command of the German units involved against the boxer uprising in China in 1900, died yesterday at the age of 81. The admiral had long been confined to his bed. He retired from the navy in 1902.

CANADA'S BUSINESS WITH BERMUDA ON THE INCLINE

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 27.—Bermuda affords an excellent example of the increasing trade which Canada is doing with British Empire countries. During the first four months of the present fiscal year, April to July inclusive, Canadian domestic exports to the Bermudas totalled in value $391,907 compared with $520,221 in the same period a year ago. In view of the considerable decline in prices since then the increase in volume is very large.

The imports from Bermuda have increased markedly, every month showing an excess over the same month last year. The total value of the four months' imports was $137,333, compared with $48,769 a year ago, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

What is most important — is to get your Money's Worth!

Most merchants, for some time past, have declared that they are selling their goods for less than any of their competitors.

They ought to explain what they mean by cheapness. There are some types of merchandise which can be bought for nearly nothing, yet which are too dear at the price! That kind of a purchase is never a bargain.

The policy of our store is built on the principle of satisfaction for the customer, never on comparisons with other establishments.

We do not pretend to sell at the lowest prices in the city: we claim only that WE ALWAYS GIVE A CUSTOMER HIS MONEY'S WORTH. If you believe you cannot get for your dollar more than a dollar's worth, but if you want to get a FULL DOLLAR'S WORTH for your dollar, compare our merchandise and our prices with the merchandise and prices of any other merchant.

THAT KIND OF COMPARISON WE INVITE.

MEN'S SUITS

We have a number of suits, assorted patterns and sizes, which we invite you to compare, one or two pair $9.50 of trousers, for

And another lot of superior outfits, some with two pair of trousers, at $12.50

Perhaps you, like most of the rest of us, have found that the present crisis has reduced your income and that you are obliged to count your dollars and even your five-cent pieces. But that need not mean that you must be poorly dressed!

Style is still style. To neglect your appearance in the name of economy is to do yourself more harm than good. Remember that it is not your income, alone, which has gone down. The cost of living, and clothing prices with it, has suffered a sharp downward turn.

We enumerate below a few items only to prove this. And these items, like everything else we have in our store, are the last word in style. Save as much as you will, but remain elegant. The secret is to know where to shop.
