Deadly three-vehicle crash in Compton

Record Staff

One person is dead and several injured after an early morning accident Thursday on Rte 147 near Compton resulted in the serious injury of one driver and involved a car, a delivery truck and an ambulance.

According to Sûreté du Québec spokesperson Aurélie Guindon, the accident occurred at around 7:15 a.m. when a car heading towards Coaticook was sideswiped by a delivery truck, was bounced around, and then struck again by an ambulance traveling behind the truck.

All seven people involved, two paramedic, two in the truck, and a man and two children in the car were rushed to hospital, where the man subsequently died.

Police have not yet determined the cause of the accident and the condition of the remaining victims is as yet unknown.

Shortly afterwards, a second accident occurred between two vehicles on the detour set up following the first accident, near Riendeau and Cochrane streets. Both drivers suffered serious injury in the crash, but police do not fear for their lives.

Rte 147 was closed between Compton and Coaticook for several hours as police investigated the circumstances behind the accidents.

Classic performance for Stanstead youth

Stanstead

Last Wednesday, the Haskell Opera House in Stanstead held two musical events aimed at primary school children from the Jardin des frontières and Sunnyside schools.

Thanks to the contribution of the Estrie Regional Conference of Elected Officials and the Ministry of Culture and Communications under the Fund for youth access to culture, the children were able to attend a concert in two parts provided by a string ensemble of the Sherbrooke Youth Symphony Orchestra under the musical direction of Julien Proulx, and a performance of Peter and the Wolf by the Jeunesses Musicales du Canada.

The Town of Stanstead and the CLD Memphremagog contributed to the production, which was aimed at allowing local youth to discover classical music, to encourage young musicians in the pursuit of an artistic career, and to raise their awareness of the Haskell Opera House, with its impressive sound qualities and great historical value.

COURTESY

Last Wednesday, the Haskell Opera House in Stanstead held two musical events aimed at primary school children from the Jardin des frontières and Sunnyside schools.

The event provided young people a rewarding experience that will allow them to be proud of their knowledge of music and the treasures that their town possesses.

The project had the enthusiastic support of school principals Steve Weary and Steve and Julie Dubois from the beginning and included a meeting at each school with the music director of the Sherbrooke Youth Symphony Orchestra, Julien Proulx, who explained the youth musical program, demonstrated some less familiar instruments, and replied to questions.

The concert began with a string trio from the Sherbrooke Youth Symphony and was followed by the Jeunesses Musicales performance of Peter and the Wolf, by Sergei Prokofiev, an opus specifically designed for young children.

The Haskell Opera House is a beautiful auditorium with 400 seats whose original 1904 decor remains. The building is unique. Nowhere else can one sit in a theater bisected by an international border, as most of the audience is seated in the United States for concerts performed in Canada.

With its exceptional acoustics, the Haskell Opera House remains for many an undiscovered jewel.

Remembrance Services to be held Nov. 9 in Scotstown and Bury

Bury

Branch 48 of the Royal Canadian Legion will hold Remembrance Services on Saturday, Nov. 9 at 11 a.m. in Scotstown and 2 p.m. in Bury at the Armoury Community Centre.

After the ceremony, Branch 48 will provide refreshments, catered by the United Cultural Centre. Everyone is welcome to attend.

Why and when to wear a poppy

Members of the Legion sell poppies and wreaths to keep the memory alive for the 117,000 Canadian men and women who paid the supreme sacrifice in the service of Canada. As a result of these sales the Legion helps to ensure that veterans and their families are cared for and treated with the respect they deserve.

Some examples of how Poppy Funds can be used are; funding related to housing and care facilities for the elderly and disabled, Canadian Military family resource centres, assistance to needy veterans and their dependants, provision of medical appliances, supporting drop-in centres for seniors and providing Bursaries to children and grandchildren of veterans.

Officially the distribution of Poppies to the general public starts no earlier than the last Friday in October and concludes on Nov. 11.

Remember when you wear a poppy or display a wreath you honour those who made the ultimate sacrifice in the service of their country and help veterans and their families.

Balasi 'sets the record straight' on Renouveau plan

GORDON LAMBIE

Nicolas Balasi, candidate for Renouveau Sherbrookois in Lennoxville, spoke with The Record Wednesday to offer a clarification on points in the plan produced by the Mayor's Party regarding centralization of city services and reduction of the number of councillors that he felt were being misunderstood. The prospective city councillor said he wanted to, "set the record straight," regarding concerns expressed by Tim Belford in Wednesday's edition.

Balasi addressed what he saw as three main concerns: that the existence of party politics in the city will sow the seeds of corruption in Sherbrooke; that centralization will lead to a reduction in services; and that cost cutting could achieve greater saving with less impact on citizens.

The candidate's defence of party politics was twofold; on one hand arguing that he would rely on interaction with citizens and the independent borough councillors in Lennoxville to hear the voice of the people while also holding to party values, and on the other hand stating that the borough needs to integrate more fully into the city as a whole.

"I just have to remind you that in the party of the mayor, that he founded, there is latitude. There is a party line, values and a core program that you have to agree with, but you have the latitude to disagree on all the other issues," Balasi said. "If I were to be elected and something was of concern to the people of Lennoxville, I would definitely carry it to the council level, and fight for the rights of the citizens."

Asked what would happen, though, if the desires of the borough and the party values were in conflict on an issue, Balasi said that the borough needed to be less focused on itself.

"We have to realize that we're in a city now, called Sherbrooke, and this is a borough," Balasi explained. "(Renouveau Sherbrookois) has a vision for the future that considers the other boroughs too, it's not all focused on yourself."

He said that a borough president would need the humility to recognize that the city coffers are not full of money, and that being a member of a party automatically puts him in an ideal position to have that humility, as he will be teamed up with councillors all across the city.

"I understand Mr. Belford's concerns," Balasi said regarding the other issues, "but moving between theory and practice, things are not always clear."

Balasi restated the established party arguments that the current system of management for borough services is cluttered and confusing, saying that it can take multiple calls for someone to reach the person he or she is looking for.

"There are no other cities in Quebec who have the management of their parks and recreation services in their boroughs," Balasi said, repeating the arguments of Serge Paquin at the plan's announcement. "It's an old model of development, it makes it harder, there are too many people involved."

"We're talking about centralizing the management of certain services and not the services themselves," Balasi said, pointing out that the city has been and will continue to rely on private enterprises to carry out work.

Moving the coordination of city services inward, he argued, would cut out unnecessary complications in the existing systems and make lines of communication clearer, allowing work to get done more quickly and effectively.

"I don't think it's going to have any impact on the services themselves," he said, calling the move to streamline, "an exercise we have to do to see what we can do more efficiently, with fewer services, while maintaining current services for the citizens."

The Renouveau Sherbrookois candidate then explained that centralized management combined with the proposed new 311 service line is supposed to speed up results for the average citizen for a lower cost overall. He suggested that having a person in the borough office that residents could approach for specific requests could still exist as an adaptation to the plan, but pointed out that the logistics and organization of the transfer of services would be worked out gradually over the course of the mandate, following a successful vote.

"I can't look forward and see how the plan will be applied, but I'm aware of the concerns," he explained.

Balasi held to the view that the decision is rooted in cost-saving in the face of city expenditures, saying that sourcing funds for city projects becomes more challenging when having to contend with retirement fund deficits. He pointed out that no one is certain of how best to face the issue, but that the centralization of services is the approach that Renouveau Sherbrookois believes in.

At several times in the interview Balasi referred to the challenges of dealing with city unions, saying that they are not easy to deal with, and that they mostly have the upper hand in the current context, and have a lot more manoeuvring room in negotiations than the city has. While Belford's letter suggested that the mayor is trying to take the easy way out by avoiding union renegotiations as a cost cutting measure, Balasi claimed that such a course of action would not be viable.

"It sounds so easy when Mr. Belford talks about it, but it's not that easy when you are in the mayors shoes: you can't just cut off the union," Balasi continued, "it's just impossible."

In response to the notion that costs would inevitably rise when newly overburdened council members demand raises, Balasi stated that salaries would remain the same.

After the next election, the plan would come into effect, if successful. As a result of the new 311 services, Balasi said, the average councillor's workload will not be greatly changed, despite having a greater number of citizens in each district. He admitted that the workload would increase, but followed that up by saying that Sherbrooke's city councillors are well paid, receiving almost $65,000 a year.

"It's a good wage," Balasi said, "I think they can handle more work."

The Lennoville Residents Association will be hosting a public Question and Answer Session with the candidates for Lennoxville Borough Mayor, Wednesday evening from 5:30 to 7:00 p.m. at the Masonic Hall, 3002 College Street, Lennoxville. Residents are encouraged to come and find out where the candidates stand on the issues, including the re-organization of the borough system. Note: Limited seating.

LRA to sponsor candidate Q&A

Gordon Lambie
Special to The Record

The Lennoxville Residents' Association (LRA) will be sponsoring a question and answer period for candidates running for election in the borough this coming Wednesday, Oct. 23, at 5:30 p.m.

Scheduled to take place in the Masonic Hall on College Street, the event is meant to help residents get straightforward answers, in person, from the three individuals vying for Lennoxville's one city council seat.

According to Steve Pankovitch, President of the LRA, all three of the candidates have been invited to participate in the event, although Comme une eau terre party candidate Jean-Guy Dorval has yet to confirm his presence.

Despite being tempted to call the event a debate, Pankovitch clarified that "it's more of a public forum." He added, though, that debate was not off limits should candidates be interested in engaging in discussion.

Tim Belford will be present to act as moderator, asking questions on behalf of those gathered and, should the need arise, facilitating discussion.

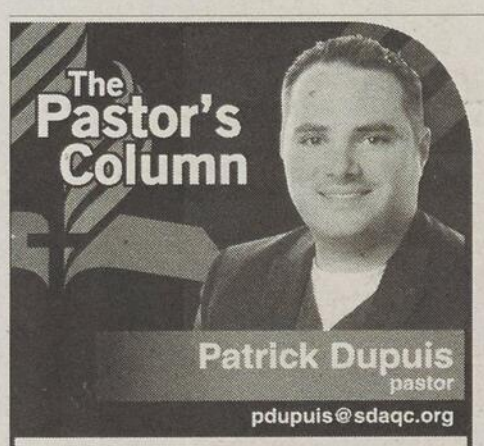

Despite being a politically involved group, Pankovitch pointed out that the LRA does not have a particular political affiliation in its charter, and spoke of the Q&A as an opportunity for candidates to make themselves heard and for residents to get a sense of who is looking to represent them.

"We have no political ties, remember," the LRA president said. "We are a citizen's association without political ties."

EATING FOR HEALTH AND HEALING!

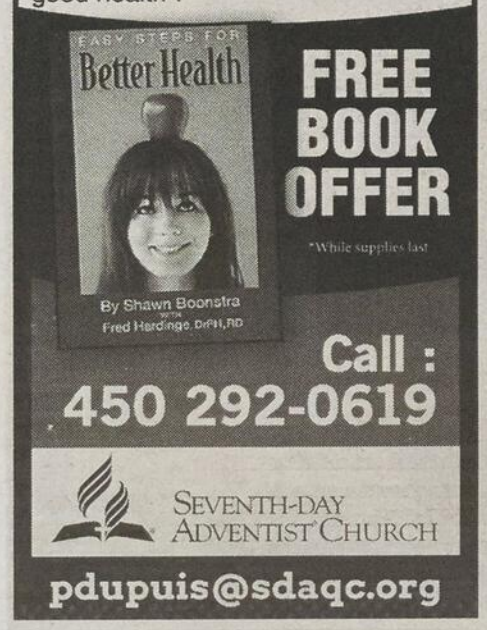

Although today we have access to a large variety of different types of foods, it's quite easy to become confused as to the right choices to make regarding our nutrition. Nevertheless, in order to reach our full potential in life, our choices should always favor the improvement of our health and the prevention of disease. Today's segment will examine the place of meat in our diet.

An extraordinary book entitled "The China Study", published in 2005, examined the data accumulated by a vast scientific and medical study conducted in China by Cornell and Oxford Universities in collaboration with the Chinese Academy of Preventive Medicine. The study discovered strong correlations between diets that are rich in animal-protein and coronary heart disease, different type of cancers, and type 2 diabetes. The authors of the book, T. Colin Campbell, Ph.D., and Thomas M. Campbell II, M.D., therefore suggest that we should avoid consuming meat and animal products and instead opt for a plant-based or vegan diet.

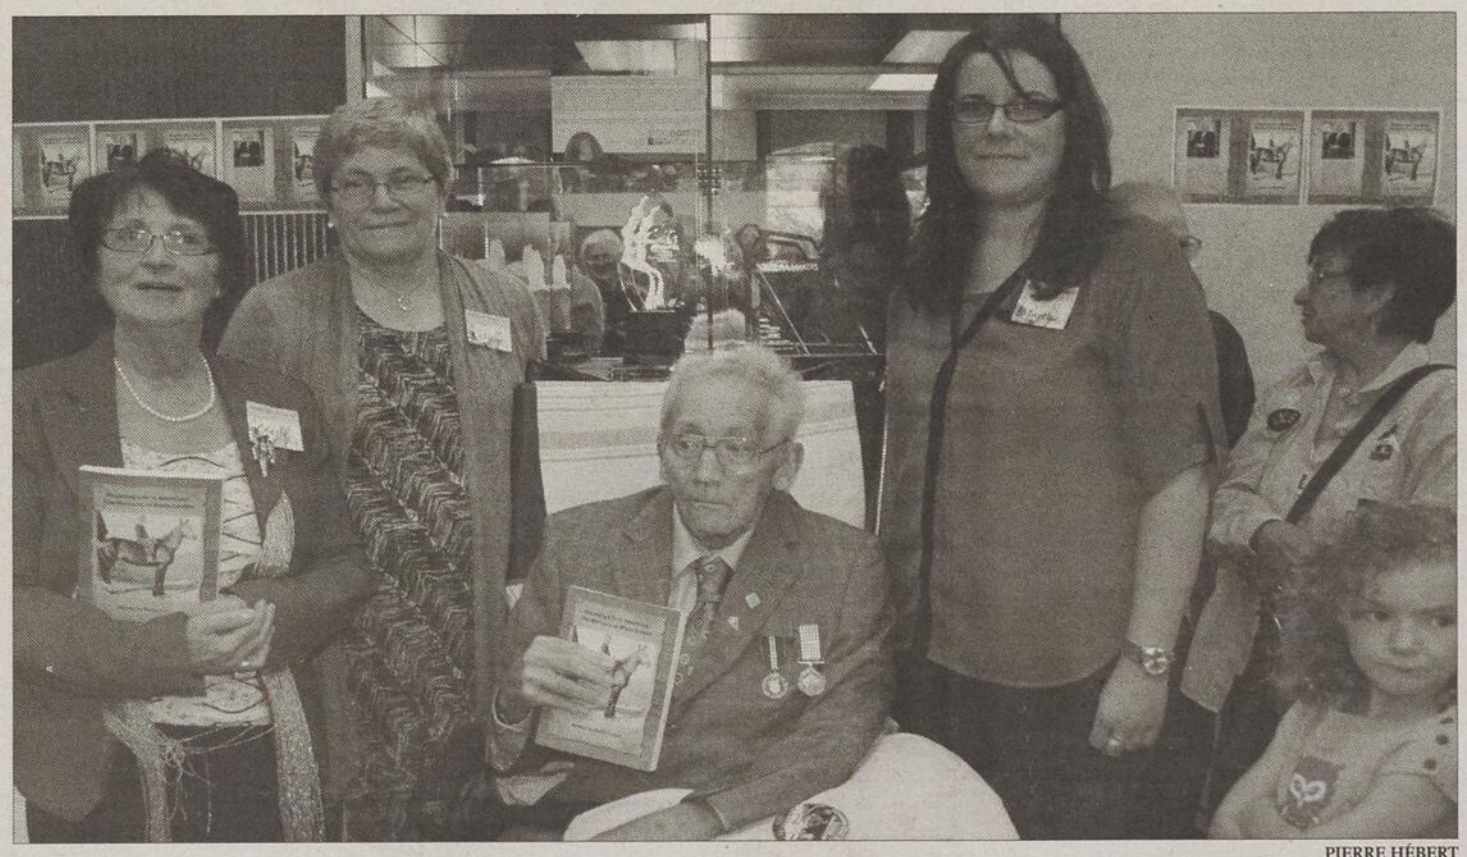

It is interesting to note that the Bible reveals to us that the original diet given to our first parents consisted of whole grains, fruits and vegetables. In essence, a vegetarian diet, or, more specifically, a vegan diet.

The Seventh-day Adventist Church is interested in promoting health and wellness in the Eastern townships. With this in mind, we would like to offer you a free book titled: "Easy Steps for Better Health" by Shawn Boonstra and Fred Hardinge, DrPh, RD. In this book, you will find important information on how simple changes to your lifestyle can help you improve your overall health and wellbeing.

Let us remember that it is God's will, according to the Bible, "that you may prosper in all things and be in good health".

Wells Coates, heritage protector, launches his memoirs

PIERRE HÉBERT

At the launch of Recalling Life in Westbury: The Memoirs of Wells Coates. Surrounding Wells Coates are his wife Cécile Breton, his daughter Colleen Younie, his granddaughter Martha Younie, and his great-granddaughter Molly McCourt.

By Rachel Garber
Record Correspondent

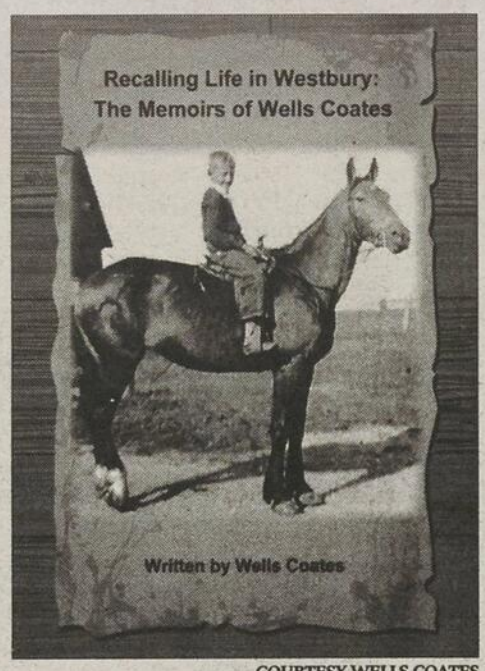

Last Saturday was a sun-blessed day, and Wells Coates emerged from the hospital for a very special occasion. It was the launch of his book, Recalling Life in Westbury: The Memoirs of Wells Coates.

"As you go down life's highway, don't forget where you came from." That's what he wrote, with his autograph, on a slip of paper inserted into each book. He printed 150 copies of his book, and gave most of them away to the family members and friends who attended the launch. More than 120 people were there, just in front of the offices of the Journal regional Le Haut-Saint-François.

Among the guests were current mayors and past mayors, the provincial deputy for Mégantic, Ghyslain Bolduc, and Alain Robert, representing the federal deputy for Compton-Stanstead, Jean Rousseau. One of the mayors was Wells' son, Kenneth Coates, of Westbury. The master of ceremonies was his daughter, Colleen Younie. Most of his ten grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren were also present.

Coates is a storyteller. After one story, his granddaughter Leeanna had commented, "I didn't know that." He says that's when he realized how little the younger generation knew about life in his days. And that's when he decided to write his memoirs.

He also wrote his book for his fellow citizens of Westbury and the Haut-Saint-François. Its stories, its statistics and its detailed descriptions span more than 90 years. (Wells is just three months shy of his 90th birthday.) Many of the places and people described in his book will be familiar to readers. As a youth, he roamed the farms with his tractor, plowing and threshing. He got to know a lot of people along the way. He says he slept in every house on Spring Road, where the farmers put him up after a day's work.

But the book was long in coming. Ten years, to be exact, with time off for heart surgery. Then, just before its publication, he had a stroke that paralysed the left side of his body. Undeterred, he and those close to him proceeded to plan the book launch – a launch befitting the Statesman of Westbury.

Yes, Statesman. Wells was mayor of Westbury for some 30 years, as well as prefect for many years of the Compton County, and then the Haut-Saint-François MRC. He mentions municipal politics in his book. He comments on "the folly of the municipalities bowing to speculators." He tells how he was kept in office by acclamation term after term. A former colleague called him a "rassembleur." He brought people together and got things done.

The book tells about his extensive work with various agricultural organizations, including the Union des producteurs agricoles (UPA) and its forerunners. His ambition when a boy, he said, was "to be an agriculturalist, and not just a farmer." He embraced innovations in farming.

Coates details the many changes that he witnessed in farm life, road development, trains, and more. He describes the "fiery beast," the first steam engine he saw. He tells how horses gave way to cars as a means of transportation. Then the cars were put up on blocks during the Depression years. He describes the impact of the Great Depression on his generation. He lovingly portrays the various machines, tractors, cars and trucks he had. How this truck got a dent in its fender. How that car was cannibalized to make a trailer out of its front part.

It is the voice of Coates as "heritage protector." That's his title on his current business card. He's a member of the Machineries d'antan, a group preserving and showing antique machinery. "Not all change is forward," he cautions.

The cover of the book bears a photo of Wells as a boy on horseback. The horse is Betsey, a "dark buckskin Indian cayeuse mare." From age seven to 17, Wells rode her to and from school, and on innumerable errands. She was very fast, he says. At age nine or ten, he raced her for the first time at the Cookshire Fair, and set a record of a half-mile in 59 seconds. He and Betsey had a whole bunch of adventures, some having to do with snowdrifts you could get lost in forever. He devoted a chapter to Betsey. A whole children's book could be devoted to her.

The Memoirs of Wells Coates is a personal document. The reader can imagine sitting beside his rocking chair, listening to one story lead into another. His lifetime of keen observation and his encyclopedic memory bring alive the land of Where We Are From.

Young driver gets 3½ years for impaired driving causing death

SHERBROOKE

Quebec Court Judge Conrad Chapdelaine didn't mince words in handing down a stiff 42-month prison term to Mason Sinclair, 19, for impaired driving causing death and injury.

"Young people like you are under the impression that these are accidents. However, this is not the case here, where speed, alcohol, and your own stupidity are the only factors involved," Chapdelaine said, adding that the stiff penalty is to serve as a reminder of the consequences of his actions.

Sinclair pleaded guilty to driving while impaired causing the death of his friend Gabriel Tailleur and causing harm to another passenger, David Boisvert, and truck driver, Pascal Monty, with whom he collided on July 30 on Highway 610.

Sinclair had left the downtown area by bicycle after a party where he mixed alcohol and cannabis. He subsequently made the fateful decision to take his step-father's car shortly thereafter when he couldn't sleep.

Driving without a license, without insurance, and without ever having taken driving lessons, Sinclair hit the roads with a blood alcohol level around .150, nearly twice the legal limit of impairment.

Asbestos mom going to jail for drunk driving injury

SHERBROOKE

Another with no criminal record from Asbestos has been sentenced to six months prison for driving while impaired causing bodily harm.

The 42 year old woman pleaded guilty to the charge and was sentenced to six months imprisonment by Judge Paul Dunnigan of the Court of Quebec in Sherbrooke Wednesday.

The woman was arrested by Sûreté du Québec patrol officers after she struck an acquaintance in the parking lot of an Asbestos bar in December 2012. The victim suffered broken legs as a result. The accused registered .186 in a breathalyser test, more than twice the legal limit.

The motorist also assisted police by making an incriminating statement.

The events took place during a wild night during which the woman had argued with her spouse and left the bar in a hurry. The victim was struck when she tried to back out of her parking spot.

Defence lawyer Jean Leblanc and criminal prosecutor Geneviève Crépeau made a joint suggestion of six months imprisonment, which Judge Dunnigan accepted.

Richmond Legionella source remains a mystery

Authorities have been unable to pinpoint the origins of an outbreak of Legionnaire's Disease that hit Richmond this summer.

"It sometimes happens in cases of Legionella but we can't find the source," said Yan Quirion of the Agence de santé et des services sociaux de l'Estrie (ASSE). Although the investigation has ended, the file will remain open in case new information surfaces.

At least three Richmond buildings, including the arena, were inspected by the Régie du bâtiment to ensure that safety and health regulations were being followed.

"Legionella is usually found in humid areas, like cooling towers, and these areas were particularly closely examined during the investigation," Quirion says.

The outbreak affected several individuals in the Richmond region this summer and lead to the death of one person, a 60-year old Richmond woman.

Motorists will have to take a detour via the other ramps and are encouraged to follow detour signs in place.

Plowing festival this weekend in St Valerien de Milton

By Claudia Villemaire
Record Correspondent
RICHMOND

Another all-horse plowing match happens this weekend. But, this one is decidedly different.

This is a three-day event with introductory classes and practice time set for Friday beginning at 10 a.m. Saturday, competition is serious with competitors from across Quebec, Ontario and the US.

This Festival du Labour, (plowing Festival) has been a work in progress for Real Desourdy whose reputation as a dyed-in-the-cloth naturalist, protector of animals of all kinds is well known (he once appeared at this festival riding a team of goats hitched to a small cart). He is a firm believer in the proficiency of a well-trained team of horses to prepare soil and seedbed.

Desourdy admits he's probably been dreaming 'in colour' but, now in its 19th year, the festival has grown slowly providing nature lovers one more weekend with the outdoors, to learn about the art of laying down a straight furrow while managing a team of horses.

Saturday's program includes a special presentation - with the Canadian and Quebec flag bearers riding at the head, a parade of competitors will bring to a close the day's competition.

The evening features a mechoui and lots of traditional music and Sunday, special events at the plowing field will bring the festival to a close. With the theme, "Bringing a bit of the past into the present," Real Desourdy and his soul mate Monique have prepared a three-day event spotlighting the importance of preserving and celebrating the first settlers determination to clear and till the soil on what is today, one of the largest areas of grain corn production in the province.

The event will take place in St Valerien de Milton. From autoroute 20, exit 141, then route 211. For information, call 450 799-1323 or 450 278-6494. The website is festivaldulabour.ca

The field of competition is at 224, 10th range, (Phaneuf), just outside the village of St Valerien.

Moisson Estrie Harvest Fest Sunday

This Sunday, Oct. 20, marks the first edition of the Moisson Estrie Harvest Festival at the Serres St-Élie in Sherbrooke.

The day offers different free activities for the whole family from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. in a friendly atmosphere. Well known chefs from the area, Jason Kacprzak from Bistro Kacprzak, and Jean-Patrice Fournier, from Poivron Rouge caterers, will be present to serve as jurors in a recipe competition, and Louise Rivard, author of the 'Bible of preserves' will be on hand from 2 to 4 p.m.

Besides ongoing children's activities, the festival will feature a Harvest Soup tasting of homemade recipes. The event is also serving as a fundraiser of sorts with organizers hoping to collect enough groceries to fill a dozen baskets.

In addition, all participants donating non- perishable food items will have a chance to win one of many prizes.

Moisson Estrie is a socio-economic organization whose mission is to contribute to the overall well-being of vulnerable people economically through the direct supply of foodstuffs as a means of approach to a comprehensive intervention perspective, either directly or through 'intermediary organizations.'

Mediterranean cemetery

By Gwynne Dyer

"I don't know how many more people need to die at sea before something gets done," said Malta's prime minister, Joseph Muscat. "As things stand we are building a cemetery within our Mediterranean Sea."

He was talking about the part of the Mediterranean between the North African coast and the two islands that are the closest bits of the European Union: the Italian island of Lampedusa and his own country, Malta. In the past two weeks, almost as many migrants have died in that narrow stretch of water – only 120 km. (80 miles) separate the Tunisian coast from Lampedusa – as died along the US-Mexican border in all of last year.

On the southern US border they mostly die of thirst in the desert; in the Mediterranean they drown. The migrants pay the people smugglers in Libya or Tunisia thousands of dollars each to make the crossing in small, unseaworthy, grossly overcrowded boats, but the smugglers don't want to be arrested so they don't go with them. They just hand over the keys to the migrants.

The refugees – more than half of the 32,000 who have reached Italy so far this year come from Syria, Somalia or Eritrea – have no experience at sea. The boats leak, they run out of fuel, they catch fire, and nobody knows what to do. Sometimes the boats just capsize when everybody rushes to the same side to call for help from a passing ship or aircraft.

Then they are in the water, and there are no life-jackets. Last week, when 359 Somali and Eritrean migrants drowned in a single boat, nobody even had a satellite phone to summon help. Most of the migrants can't swim, and even those who can often drown before help arrives. Every sinking brings stories of parents who could swim, but had to choose which children to save.

"For us it's intolerable that the Mediterranean is a sea of the dead," said Prime Minister Enrico Letta of Italy on Monday, announcing that his country is tripling its air and naval presence in the death zone. But as Interior Minister Angelino Alfano warned, "It's not a given that the intervention of an Italian ship will mean that migrants are taken to an Italian port."

They don't want the migrants to die, but they don't want them to stay in Italy either. As in other European Union countries, the flood of migrants from Africa and the Middle East is fuelling a powerful anti-immigrant backlash. And the brutal truth is that the safer the EU countries make the Mediterranean crossing, the more people will try to come.

Most of the migrants currently risking their lives are genuine refugees, but behind them, in the vast sweep of countries from West Africa to Somalia and Iraq, there are several hundred million others who would leap at the chance of moving to Europe.

So the stark reality is that the EU will never make it so easy and safe to get in that even a small fraction of that vast reservoir of would-be migrants actually tries to make the journey.

Stable governments in Tunisia and Libya could stop the boats from leaving their shores, but that will not happen any time soon. In the meantime, people will go on drowning in the Mediterranean, although hopefully in smaller numbers than the catastrophe of the last few weeks.

Here's to the family farm!

DEAR EDITOR:

The DVD project entitled "Here's To The Family Farm" is nearing filming completion. We would like to thank all participants who have invited us into their homes, to their farms and to their business premises to talk about their impressions of life and work on the family farm.

This DVD has given people an opportunity to share personal farm experiences and to express their concerns for the future of the family farm in the Eastern Townships of Quebec.

If you feel you have something to contribute to this project, please call us at 819 826-3342. This is the last call before we begin the editing process.

The DVD will be ready for distribution in early December and available at the Townshipper's office in Lennoxville or through us personally.

Copies of our previous DVD project "Salmon Creek Days, Memories of Dance Halls in the Richmond Area of Quebec" are still available through the Townshipper's Association that has provided much appreciated support for both DVD projects.

What else are you hiding Mr. Sevigny?

DEAR EDITOR:

After hiding to the members of the City Council (and to the citizens you represent) the death certificate of the Sherbrooke airport for two months, we are entitled to ask what else you are hiding, Mr. Sevigny.

Indeed, you gave the impression that you gave the 'mouth-to-mouth' to the patient until we learn (by the tenacity of a journalist) that he had been dead for two months! You were performing mouth-to-mouth on a skeleton.

You took care to erase your traces by "renewing" the city's website, where there are no more historical consolidated financial statements other than 2012, for example. Similarly, we do not find the financial statements of the Societe de transport de Sherbrooke for 2012. Why must they be hidden? I have requested them twice to City Council.

You have launched the new website of "Equipe Bernard Sevigny – Renouveau Sherbrookois" taking care to remove the old site where your promises of 2009 had been... some of them 'renewed' in 2013. We will get back to this...

The change of name of your organization was done behind closed doors by a small committee rather than in a general meeting. Members saw it in the newspapers. Just like independent councilors learn the news from City Council... by the same newspapers.

It would be interesting to ask your candidates of 2009 on their reasons for leaving the party. Candidates who would "reinvent Sherbrooke": Carroll Lauzon, Marc Bellemare, Louise Brisson, Mohamed Adjel, Mariame Cisse, Colette Bernier, Andre Proulx, Denis Beaudoin, Maryse Ruel, Marc Boulianne. Where are they? Even your official agent Jean Bernier left your team to run as an independent. Your press secretary, Guy Ouellet also deserted. So much for a 'Renouveau.'

It is not enough to promise a Debt Management Policy today: we must control it. We have not heard of this policy since 2011. And for a good reason: you have added $75 million in a single mandate to reach nearly 400 million in 2013. That's about $500 for each man, woman and child in this city that you have added to our debt: nice legacy.

But your administration will build MORE sidewalks: about 1.2 kilometres per year. At this rate it will take 200 years to repair the 280 km of existing sidewalks. Those sidewalks will need to be strong, at the pace you take us for a ride Mr. Sevigny.

COLUMNIST

Maybe "consumer economy" is an oxymoron and we don't even recognize the contradiction.

My name is Steve and I'm a consumer

So goes the headline in the Gazette report covering the recent speech from the throne. Some of the stated goals of our government in this sitting include making it cheaper for us to overspend on electronics and legal for us to smuggle booze across provincial borders. It sounds delicious doesn't it?

I've been wondering about what it means when our government focuses on aiding and abetting our consuming ways by forcing businesses to improve their own services instead of improving government services to the public. So I looked up the definition of "consume" to see what our masters think of us when they call us "consumers."

In the Webster's online dictionary I found the following definitions for "consume":

1. To destroy, as by decomposition, dissipation, waste, or fire; to use up; to expend; to waste; to burn up; to eat up; to devour. Also,

2. To waste away slowly.

It is hard to recognize how these unflattering definitions apply to us when so many of us are just scraping by in paying the price for living our daily lives. It doesn't feel wasteful when there remains so much more to buy, so much debt to pay and so many long and hard work hours to manage it all.

It is as easy as breathing for us to see that we would be much happier if we could renovate our kitchens every ten years, keep our kids equipped with the latest smart phones and less guilt-prone if we were to spend another $15,000 extra over the price of a petroleum powered car to buy a hybrid or electric one. Some are able to buy this kind of happiness, but many of us can't. Nevertheless the craving to acquire more remains and is only slightly mollified watching television shows that showcase the outrageous excess of building million dollar bedrooms and the like. Since we hungrily daydream about how much we need and to get it we can't be consumers can we?

Let's consider what we throw out. Things that are still functional are often tossed away simply because it is out of fashion or because a newer model has features no one really needs that the older model doesn't. Most of these are never recycled or given away they simply get trashed and are added to landfills.

How embarrassed would we be should we be forced to pass all our garbage by someone whose house is a single room hut without electricity, scarce furnishings and one pair of shoes to go around?

Food. Prepackaged, precooked convenience abounds. Aren't we blessed? Toss out the wrappers and packaging and the leftovers too. The amount of meat the average Canadian consumer eats every dinner is more than that which an entire family could enjoy in most of the world as they settle down to a single meal of beans or rice or maize if they're lucky enough to get any. We throw away scraps or give them to the dog instead of preparing nourishing and tasty soup for another meal or two.

Let's consider what we don't throw away. Look at our closet floors and see the shoes and things gathering dust there which haven't been pressed into service for many weeks. Explore our garages and sheds and see the variety of tools we have that might see use but a few hours every year. Check how much cupboard or counter space is taken by convenience appliances or storage systems that seemed so necessary once but haven't been used in recent memory.

Consider charity and the few leftover dollars we scrape together to give? How much of it is about giving other people money so that they can become consumers too, just like us? How much of our meager generosity serves to justify our feeding our own immoderate appetites?

I wonder how much we've been duped and brainwashed into a way of life that is wasteful, destructive and fundamentally unhappy? What do we do about it? What do I do? I can't say for sure being so much of a consumer myself, but it is clear that I need a diet and a change of lifestyle.

Thankfulness, thrift, resourcefulness and contentment are bad for a consumer-based economy, I suspect, but they seem to be qualities of a wise and healthy humanity.

Maybe "consumer economy" is an oxymoron and we don't even recognize the contradiction. It would doom any government to propose these goals as a strategy for a truly healthy economy so I guess we won't hear a throne speech about this any time soon. Nor will we hear these values in any of our coming elections except from those candidates and parties who don't expect to receive any votes.

Yes, my name is "Steve" and I'm a consumer.

Startup Weekend offers boost to new IT businesses

Getting a business off the ground in the field of information technology in 54 hours sounds like an impossible task, but this is the challenge issued by organizers of the first edition of Startup Weekend Sherbrooke to be held from Nov. 15 to 17 at the University of Sherbrooke.

Founded in 2007 in Seattle, Washington, Startup Weekend is a non-profit organization which organizes information technology (IT) entrepreneurship competitions in more than 400 cities on five continents and currently has 45,000 alumni. About 80 per cent of the participants plan to continue working with their teammates after the event and 36 per cent of companies created during Startup Weekends are still in operation three months after the event.

"We are mainly looking for three types of participants," says Jean-Pascal Gagnon, one of the seven volunteer organizers of the event. "Designers can develop branding and maximize user experience. Managers are able to develop a business strategy, defining the target market and preparing financial forecasts. Finally, developers can code the IT project and realize the technical aspect. There are no restrictions regarding age or experience of the participants."

Participants are invited to show up on the Friday night to present their ideas for a website or mobile application. Once the presentations are over, participants will vote for the best concept and form teams of five to eight additional people with whom they will work over the weekend. On the Sunday evening, each team will present its business plan, a demonstration project, and its product or service to a seasoned jury.

For its first edition, 'dragon' Serge Beauchemin will serve as honorary jury chair, accompanied by representatives of the event sponsors Raymond Chabot Grant Thornton, the City of Sherbrooke, FounderFuel, and Fasken Martineau.

The winners of the event will receive five mentoring sessions with businessmen and 3-SOFT founder Serge Beauchemin, worth $7,500 and free professional accounting and legal services for incorporation, investor recruitment, and financial advice of an approximate value of $8,500.

"Our first mission is really to promote entrepreneurship specifically in the field of information technology by holding a competition for the creation of businesses. While developing their business network, participants will benefit from feedback from mentors and experienced judges," says project manager Gagnon.

After Montreal and Quebec City, Sherbrooke, will be the third city in Quebec to host a Startup Weekend, an event that organizers want to see repeated annually.

Canada's prime minister to travel to Brussels to conclude EU free trade deal

By Rob Gillies
The Associated Press

Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper headed to Brussels on Thursday to conclude a free trade deal with the European Union, as Canada seeks to diversify its trade away from the United States.

One thorny issue surrounding the deal was overcome Thursday when Canada announced it would lift visa requirements for Czech nationals.

The Czech, which had threatened to block the free trade deal over the visa issue, welcomed the announcement. Canada reimposed visa requirements for Czech citizens in 2007 because of concerns over an excessive number of asylum seekers. Canada's Ambassador to Prague, Otto, Jelinek, said his government wants to re-establish visa-free status "in the earliest possible term."

EU trade spokesman John Clancy said in an email that the European Union and Canada hope to conclude the free trade deal in the "coming days."

Harper posted on his official Twitter account that Canada will "soon" complete negotiations. His office said he will meet with the President of the European Commission, Jose Manuel Barroso.

Yves Leduc, director of international trade for the Dairy Farmers of Canada, said he's been told by a Canadian government official that an agreement in principle has been reached and that the European Union's 28 members and Canada's 10 provinces have to approve it.

Canada has agreed to permit a doubling of the EU quota on cheese exports to Canada in exchange for greater access for Canadian beef and pork producers. Leduc said Canada's cheese industry is angry because it threatens the fine cheese market in Canada.

"For the dairy farmers of Canada this is a deal that is unacceptable. We're more than disappointed," Leduc said. "It will allow significant access of high quality or fine cheeses into Canada, a segment that is supplied by the smaller or medium size cheese factories in Canada."

Harper has said that a free trade deal between his country and the European Union could help the EU establish a beachhead as the bloc embark on separate free trade talks with the U.S. If a U.S.-EU trade deal is reached, it could be the world's largest free trade pact.

Canada hopes to diversify its trade away from the U.S., the country's largest trading partner. Canada's finance minister has said despite Europe's struggles, Canada remains very interested because the EU is still the largest market in the world in terms of the size of its middle class. The Canada-EU deal would make it easier for Canadian companies to invest in, and sell to, the 17-member EU with its 500 million consumers.

In 2012, Canada was the EU's 12th most important trading partner, accounting for 1.8 per cent of the EU's external trade. The EU was Canada's second biggest partner with about 9.5 per cent of external trade.

The value of the bilateral trade in goods between the EU and Canada was $84 billion in 2012, according to the EU. The EU says machinery, transport equipment and chemicals dominate the bloc's exports to Canada.

The trade agreement, on which talks were first launched in 2009, seeks to lower or erase tariffs and facilitate mutual market access for trade in goods, services and investment. It aims at making it easier for companies to bid for government contracts in the other economy.

EU trade negotiations with the U.S. are still in an early stage and suffered a minor setback last week when the U.S. side had to cancel a long-planned negotiation round in Brussels because of the government shutdown. About 100 officials were set to travel to Belgium for the talks. The next round is likely to take place next month.

Balanced budget law marks throne speech

By Bruce Cheadle
The Canadian Press

Mandatory balanced-budget legislation, interprovincial booze runs, public sector bashing and lifetime prison terms are among a grab bag of populist Conservative promises in a mid-mandate policy makeover.

The Tory-blue booty was included in a lengthy speech from the throne Wednesday by Gov. Gen. David Johnston that spent almost as much time congratulating the Harper government on past achievements as laying out future priorities.

As such, the document marked both the belated return of Parliament and the unofficial start to a federal election campaign that is still two years away.

The throne speech made several unalloyed pitches for consumer affections, with promises to "unbundle" cable TV packages, reduce smart phone roaming charges, permit the transport of beer and spirits between provinces and even stop companies from charging for providing paper bills.

It's the Conservative response to a broad appeal for those ill-defined "middle class" voters both Liberals and New Democrats covet.

"To change the channel it's going to take more than a few watered down NDP proposals to do it," sniffed Tom Mulcair, the leader of the New Democrats.

Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau, for his part, dismissed" listed in the speech.

"We have real problems in this country and this government is more preoccupied with its own problems than the problems of Canadians.'"

Probably the day's greatest drama came when police evacuated the historic Langevin Block, home to Harper's working office, due to a suspicious package and bomb threat.

Police took a person into custody and later said the package had been "rendered safe using a robot" before the building across the street from Parliament Hill was reopened.

Within the Senate chamber crowded with invited guests _ but absent high-profile ex-Conservative miscreants Mike Duffy, Pamela Wallin and Patrick Brazeau _ the speech was delivered to near silence.

There was the announcement of an imminent free trade deal with the European Union, and a pledge to confer honorary Canadian citizenship on Malala Yousafzai, the Pakistani teen and Nobel Peace Prize nominee who survived a Taliban attack on her school bus in October 2012.

There was also the promise of a new cyberbullying law, and even a hint at the prospect of abolishing the Senate.

"The Senate must be reformed or, as with its provincial counterparts, vanish," said the speech, delivered in the very chamber that Harper has packed with appointed loyalists _ several of whom have caused his government no end of grief.

The line prompted a rare murmur from the assembled senators and government guests.

But the speech was more noteworthy for how it hammered away at what political strategists like to call "wedge" issues that will differentiate the Conservatives from their opponents at the ballot box.

While a pending free trade deal with the European Union is a truly significant national event, it merited only a single line in the speech.

By contrast, measures that come down hard on public sector workers _ a primarily Conservative preoccupation _ took up almost an entire page.

Parents will be given a say "before drug injection sites open in their communities," the government promised, while also saying it will close loopholes that "allow for the feeding of addiction under the guise of treatment."

Both measures are a direct contrast to Trudeau's Liberal musings about legalizing marijuana.

There are also more tough-on-convicts measures, including language to ensure "a life sentence means a sentence for life," and a promise to ensure immigrants to Canada are selected based on the needs of employers.

There was no room, however, for any Conservative introspection in the 7,000-plus words of Wednesday's throne speech.

Whether it was military procurement, the proposed Canada Job Grant, or the temporary foreign workers program, the governing blueprint acknowledged no obstacles or hiccups, but only a bright, steady future.

Johnston, welcoming MPs back to work after a month-long delay, opened the speech by noting that "the eyes and ears of Canadians turn toward this Parliament, in trust that those who stand here in their place will relentlessly advance and uphold the ideals that are inclusive, honourable, selfless, smart and caring at every turn without fail."

just runs until the funds run out."

With dwindling amounts of money available for the project in recent years, and 40 to 60 children coming in every morning to get something to eat after a long bus ride or a lack of good food at home, that period of time has been getting shorter, according to Irving. It is as a result of those factors that the support of both the church and the high school alumni comes as such good news.

Bob Black and Sue Black from the Presbyterian Church explained that this past summer was the third year that their Sunday school has chosen to hold a "try-athelon" fundraiser, though it is the first time that the money is going to support something as local as the LES breakfast program. The 2013 edition of the event raised $2,000.

"It's called the try-athelon because the point is to go and to try," Sue said, with her husband explaining that the event involved a swim across lake Massawippi, a bicycle run to North Hatley and back, and a run. "The minister and six other people swam across the lake and back." She continued, "most of the children just swam around, but they all biked."

David (Skip) Wright said that the organizers of the 2013 Lennoxville High School reunion were pleasantly surprised by the attendance of 350, with some not present even making donations.

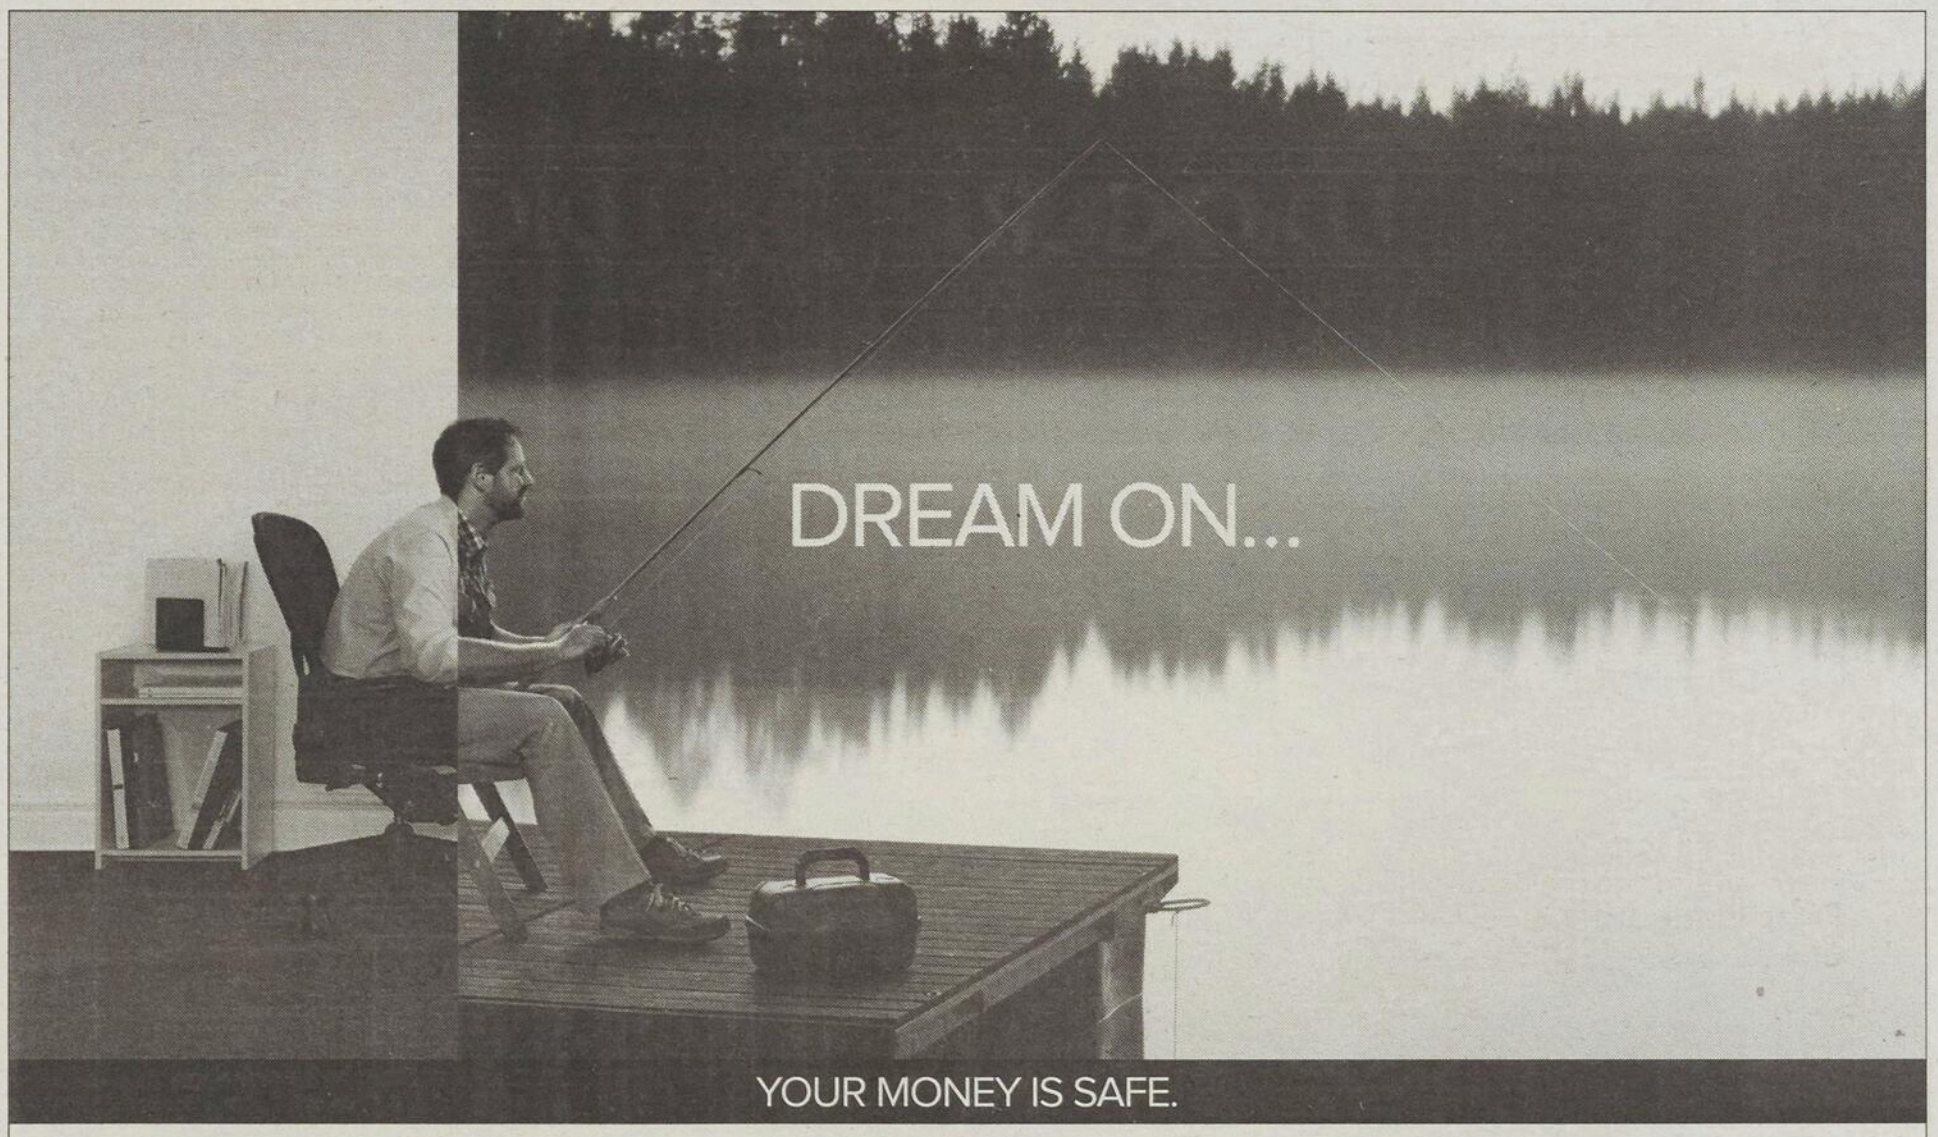

"(The donation) is the surplus that we had, which was unexpected." Wright explained, saying that the money was spilt between the breakfast programs at LES and at the Learning Centre. The reunion contribution to the program was $1,027.81

Both contributing groups were warmly welcomed in the LES cafeteria by a contingent of students who frequent the breakfast program and who will continue to benefit from it, thanks to the community support.

YOUR WEEKLY GUIDE TO TOWNSHIPS CULTURE

OCTOBER 18 - OCTOBER 24, 2013

Ronald Reagan helped make Tom Clancy a star

Thrillers set the United States against a collection of baddies

Good Reads

ELEANOR BROWN

The American Tom Clancy was a lifelong Republican who sold millions of books riffing off the Cold War, then once the USSR collapsed presciently created a "war on terror" in his next generation of spy thrillers. Clancy's influence on popular culture was further cemented with wildly popular shoot-'em-up video games like Splinter Cell. And it's even been suggested that Jack Bauer, the obsessive federal agent in the television series 24, is named partly in homage to Clancy's most famous protagonist, Jack Ryan.

Clancy died this month in Baltimore, at the age of 66. You can always catch up with the career of Jack Ryan, however, through the library stacks.

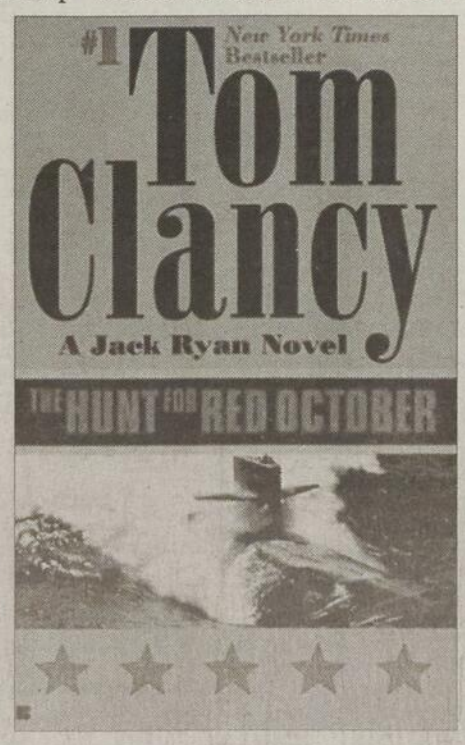

Ryan begins his career as a CIA analyst in The Hunt For Red October (1984, filed in Adult Fiction, although his backstory appears in Patriot Games, published three years later). It's a secret job – he's actually a certified accountant and professor who lucks in to the position after interfering with an assassination attempt on the British Royals.

But the tale begins as a Lithuanian captain handpicks his officers for a maiden voyage on a newfangled stealth submarine its inventors hope will be impossible to track by sonar. All but a handful of the top men are in on Capt. Marko Ramius' plan to defect – the ship's "political officer", charged with ensuring ideological purity on board, is murdered within the first few pages. (Entertainingly, given the current leadership in Russia, the dead political education czar is named Putin.)

Word gets out that the Red October is AWOL, and the Soviets and the Americans both go on the hunt for the valuable sub and its crew.

This is a solid thriller that takes place over 18 days — but it's also filled with gobs of technical information. By the end of this novel, as one wag has noted, you could operate a submarine yourself. (If you're not a techno geek and want to skip the detail and focus on the suspense, rent the movie, which stars Sean Connery as the defecting Russky and Alec Baldwin as Ryan.)

Soon after publication, US President Ronald Reagan publicly called The Hunt For Red October "the perfect yarn", and Clancy's novel went gangbusters. Clancy eventually quit his job as an insurance agent to write full time (the incredibly canny entrepreneur made millions, licencing video games, lending his name to introduce other authors' books, and signing off on Hollywood movies based on his work — including Patriot Games, Clear and Present Danger, The Sum of All Fears and the upcoming Shadow One). He dedicated a later book, Executive Orders, to Reagan in thanks.

The UK Guardian newspaper has noted its top five best Clancy novels, and The Hunt For Red October is right up there. Other Jack Ryan thrillers on the list include Clear And Present Danger (1989) (battling a Colombian drug cartel). Followed by Debt Of Honor (1994), in which a plane crashes and kills hundreds in Washington, D.C. and Jack Ryan is vice-president of the United

My TV. Whose TV?

MAURICE SINGFIELD

Here I am in Calgary. My first time out west. One of the first things I did when settled in was to check out community TV channels on Shaw and Telus, a couple of the local cable providers. We can thank the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) for requiring cable companies throughout Canada to carry community channels on their networks. These channels help define who we are as Canadians.

Much the same as our community channels here in the Townships, Calgary community TV looks for volunteers and people with ideas for new shows continually, although I think they are a little more committed to the process than Videotron is.

The CRTC makes it perfectly clear in their Broadcasting Regulatory Policy: "A community television service's unique identity and reputation are enhanced as it reaches out to involve local groups and individuals, and in the efforts it makes to provide them with access to its programming and production facilities.

Accordingly, interested individuals or groups within the community shall, to the extent possible, be given a fair and reasonable opportunity to access the community television service or use its facilities.

To build public awareness of the community service, licensees shall regularly promote and publicize the availability and objectives of their community television service's access opportunities. Licensees can choose to do so through a variety of means, including but not limited to:

- televised public service announcements;
- social media campaigns;
- town hall meetings;
- "open house" days; or
- paid advertisements.

Consistent with their means, licensees will provide adequate training for volunteers to ensure they may more effectively participate in the production and presentation of high-quality community programming. Training will be provided free of charge on a number of different levels, including but not limited to:

- workshops;
- internships and cooperative education placements;
- online seminars;
- job shadowing; or
- how-to videos.

In following the CRTC regulations, Telus in Calgary for example offers local content producers grants of up to $75, 000 and provides them with workshops teaching professional production techniques.

In Quebec I have yet to see such offers publicly displayed by Videotron, let alone regular media ads promoting "the availability and objectives of their community television service's access opportunities." Maybe it's because of a lack of competition in the cable industry. According to Videotron's website they have over three million subscribers.

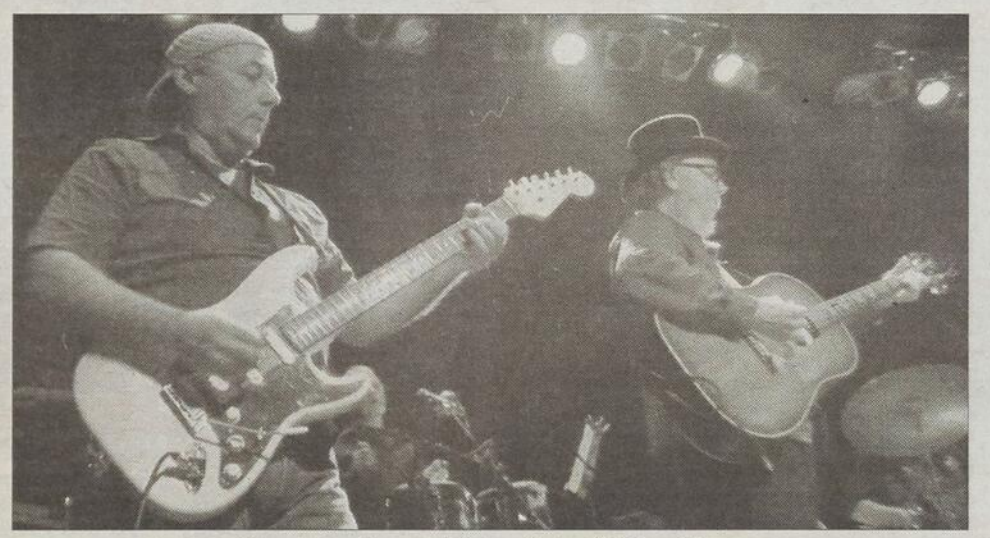

Recently Videotron has applied to the CRTC for a license to operate an English version of their MAtv community channel on the island of Montreal; Mytv. Funny isn't it, considering that anglophones in Quebec already have the right to produce English programming on the existing community MAtv network. "STOP!" does it all the time. The thing is, Videotron doesn't reach out regularly enough to the communities it services to explain such things. Even the French sector. I think they'd rather keep all the opportunity for themselves.

What opportunity you might ask? As stated above Videotron has an obligation as a licensee to provide training in order to produce high quality community TV productions. The thing is, in the MAtv Granby region (Brome Missisquoi and Shefford regions) all community programs, "STOP!" included, are distributed over the cable network in low resolution. In Calgary, community channels expect that one submit their shows in HD if possible, a much higher quality.

This is why "STOP!" releases its shows on YouTube in HD. Curious though that MAtv doesn't allow the shows that are produced in Granby to be released online. Because we produce our show for Télévision communautaire de Waterloo, an independent community TV content producer, we're allowed. Too bad there aren't more independent producers. But if Videotron doesn't make it a priority to encourage communities to participate we're going to be left with MAtv as the main producer of community programming.

The high resolution (HD) MAtv community channel features only the in-house produced programs out of MAtv's Montreal and Quebec City studios. A lot of these shows feature well-known TV personalities from TVA network productions and have imbedded corporate sponsors. There is no reason whatsoever to believe that Videotron won't do something similar with MYtv. Not so community minded after all.

For the latest "STOP!" show featuring Oliver Klaus go to youtube.com/mauricesify or tune into Videotron's community TV channel on their cable network (channel 9) in the Brome Missisquoi and Shefford county regions.

Billy Currington comfortable in a variety of styles

Country Connection

Jessie Aulis

It has been three years since Billy Currington released his last record. Now he has just released his latest effort titled We Are Tonight, his fifth album, which will appeal to his fans and many others.

In the past he has given us brilliant songs such as "Must Be Doing Somethin' Right" and the infectious "People Are Crazy." With We Are Tonight Billy Currington returns to the scene with a collection of what we've come to expect from him as a country artist.

The new album offers a feel-good, relaxed, vacation vibe. It is the kind of album you can play non-stop in your car or in your own living room. It offers ten tracks, including his current top ten single "Hey Girl."

There are songs that cover many topics, from ballads to R&B/Soul, mid-tempo songs and of course upbeat numbers. The album is definitely a cohesive body of work. It is a mature, diverse album that finds Currington feeling at home on anthems as much as on romantic ballads and humour-fuelled numbers.

He is really comfortable in a variety of styles, ranging from traditional swing to his signature R&B injected country music, and his raspy vocals fit each of them to perfection.

With a string of seven career No. 1 singles, this album was highly anticipated. Currington worked here with three producers including longtime collaborator Carson Chamberlain, as well as Dann Huff and Shy Carter.

The album starts out strong with the lead single "Hey Girl." Although the song is a bit of a different style for Currington, it works well for the 39-year-old's appeal as a single, care-free, good ole boy.

There's plenty more good stuff where that came from. Every number for that matter is truly enjoyable. "Wingman" is a tune on which the use of a horn section works great. That "Wingman" didn't do his job.

Instead, Currington sings, "sent you over with a couple of drinks, you never came back, you were supposed to be my wingman wasn't that the game plan." Too late he has lost the girl, she left with the "wingman."

"One Way Ticket" is about how you need to "dip your toes in the river of life." This one could come straight from a Jimmy Buffett or Kenny Chesney's album when he sings "I got a big bucket list and before I kick it I'm gonna buy me a Harley and Route 66 it."

This is a really fun song with a great melody and breezy enough to make you think about taking a trip to the Islands.

Another breezy number à la Kenny Chesney is "23 Degrees & South," a lovely ballad about being with the one you love and "remembering what our love is all about."

"We Are Tonight" is very catchy. It is about a night when basically "everything is right," time stands still and what is important is here and now. "Hard To Be A Hippie" is a country duet with Willie Nelson, who still sounds terrific. The two friends lament about not being able to do the things they used to do.

"Closer Tonight" offers a great melody as well as terrific piano work. Currington sings about wanting his lady to come over, it doesn't matter what they do, as long as they spend time together.

"Another Day Without You" is a heartfelt song in which he thinks nonstop about a lost love. Currington sings about how every day is a "Xerox copy identical twin of the 24 hours before."

There's also a cover of Jack Johnson's "Banana Pancakes." It might not be as laid back as the original version but Currington definitely made it his own, and it works fine. It is still a great song.

"Hallelujah" has a funky, fun groove. It offers clever lyrics. It all makes sense when Currington sings "God is great, man is not / Man made whiskey, God made pot / God made women, we make war / But oh, a good woman, that's worth fighting for."

The chorus is truly catchy and will stay in your head for a while.

We Are Tonight is a focused and well-produced album that plays to Billy Currington's strengths. Currington's unique style is extremely well showcased and this is definitely a release worth buying and listening to.

Movie Review

'12 Years a Slave' an unflinching, shattering look at American slavery

By Jocelyn Noveck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Is it possible to convey, through the experience of just one man, the sweep and enormity of the horror that was American slavery?

That, quite simply, is the formidable task that British director Steve McQueen has set for himself with his new film, the blistering "12 Years a Slave." And even if the movie weren't as good as it is, we'd need to thank him for trying; far too few filmmakers have had the courage or initiative to address head-on the darkest chapter of US history.

As it happens, the film is stunningly good, thanks both to McQueen's unflinching, unsentimental approach and to impeccable casting, most crucially of the wonderfully expressive Chewitel Ejiofor as a man with a truly extraordinary — and extraordinarily true — story.

The film is based on the memoir of Solomon Northup, a black man who was born free in New York. In 1841, Northup, a skilled violinist, was lured to Washington, D.C., with the offer of work. Instead, his "employers" drugged him and sold him to a slave trader.

The very title of the film gives away a key fact, but it's hardly a spoiler. The crux of the movie is not whether, but HOW, Northup summoned the strength

Canada could benefit from alliance with other countries in TV's Golden Age

By Bill Brioux
THE CANADIAN PRESS

TV columnist John Doyle in The Globe and Mail touched a nerve in the production community last week when he suggested Canada was missing from any discussion of "Golden Age" TV shows.

This Golden Age concept has been the subject of several recent books, including HitFix.com critic Alan Sepinwall's "The Revolution Was Televised: The Cops, Crooks, Slingers and Slayers Who Changed TV Drama Forever."

The recent spate of dark, complex dramas such as "Breaking Bad," "Mad Men and "The Sopranos" has been championed as prime examples of "auteur television." The best and brightest filmmakers, frustrated by studios greenlighting nothing but sequels to comic book super-hero fare, are now taking their pitches to US cable TV executives first.

John Landgraf, president of FX (home of such acclaimed series as "Justified," "Louie" and "Sons of Anarchy") says he can't believe the number of feature filmmakers who come through his door each week.

One such filmmaker, Guillermo del Toro ("Pacific Rim"), is behind a dark drama currently shooting in Toronto, "The Strain." That series is one of three new projects seeing FX, partnered with Rogers-owned FX Canada, invest $100 million over the next year in shows shot in Toronto and Western Canada.

Therein lies the answer, perhaps, to Doyle's question. Canada can't go it alone in this Golden Age, but perhaps can with another country as a production partner.

Golden Age TV dramas aren't cheap. They generally draw relatively small audiences in America. Series finales aside, 10 times as many people are generally watching a regular episode of, say, "NCIS" than "Breaking Bad."

While a Netflix or even AMC can use a "House of Cards" or a "Breaking Bad" as a loss leader to drive their brand (and subscriptions), Canadian broadcasters or specialty stations can't make the same investment in a market one-tenth the size of the United States.

A TV alliance between Canada and Ireland may be one path to Canadians being directly involved in Golden Age drama. This is a view championed by Morgan O'Sullivan, executive producer of "Vikings."

With just over six million combined residents, Ireland's TV market is dwarfed even by Canada's. Their airways are flooded not only with American fare but also programming from Great Britain. O'Sullivan, a one-time radio broadcaster who spent years in America working on shows such as "Hill Street Blues" and "Remington Steele," yearned to see his native Ireland play a larger role in TV production.

O'Sullivan was working on movies-of-the-week with US cable broadcaster Showtime when he became involved with the Canadian production company Temple Street. This led to discussions about developing, in O'Sullivan's words, a "mini MTM" — referring to the television studio which produced such prestigious fare in the 1970s and '80s as "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" and "Hill Street Blues." The goal was to create a production alliance to service both Ireland and Canada.

The initiative was launched with what O'Sullivan calls "The Tudor Model." The former CBC series "The Tudors" was shot in Ireland using a mix of Irish and Canadian actors and directors. It aired for four seasons in Ireland, Canada and the US on Showtime.

"The Vikings," also written by English screenwriter Michael Hirst ("Elizabeth"), takes the two-nation concept a step further. Currently wrapping production on a second season in Ireland, the series is produced in association with Shaw Media. Besides Australian Travis Fimmel as lead Viking Ragnar Lothbrok, the historical drama features a largely Canadian cast, including Katheryn Winnick, Jessalyn Gilsig, Donal Logue and Alexander Ludwig. Canadian director Ken Girotti was helming his second season 2 episode this week.

As well, while the series is shot over three large sound stages at Ardmore Studios near Dublin, the dailies are sent by satellite to Canada where digital effects are added by Toronto's Mr. X Inc.

"They've done a brilliant job," says O'Sullivan. "I cannot emphasize how much they've brought to our show." O'Sullivan puts Mr. X's special-effects wizards "right up there" with George Lucas' Industrial Light and Magic.

Canadians get other benefits from this alliance. The talent appreciate the more relaxed shooting schedules. Shooting days in Ireland typically run 10 hours a day, tops, compared to 14- to 16-hour days in Toronto or Los Angeles. Ireland's generous tax incentives — just increased in this week's budget — are drawing more productions to the area, including "Penny Dreadful," a new Showtime horror series starring Eva Green and Josh Hartnett.

O'Sullivan says he is working hard to pool the resources of Canada and Ireland into future TV projects. Whether this results in any Golden Age TV dramas is hard to say. So far, Canadian audiences are responding to "Vikings." It was the No. 1 new scripted Canadian specialty debut of 2013, premiering to more than 1.1 million viewers. It averaged 942,000 viewers a week on History, where it will return in the new year.

Those numbers beat even Mark Burnett's six-part miniseries "The Bible," provoking Hirst to warily joke — echoing John Lennon's cheeky Beatles boast of the '60s — that his show is "bigger than Jesus."

Canadians will likely forgive Hirst this bit of blarney blasphemy if his efforts help bring our talent into TV's Golden Age.

'12 Years a Slave'

and the cunning to survive 12 years in the hell of a series of Louisiana plantations.

Crucial early scenes depict a comfortable, happy life in Saratoga, N.Y., where Northup lived with his wife and two children. That all changes in one hellish moment, when he awakes in shackles, his wallet and papers gone, and realizes he has no way of proving who he is. He loses even his name.

Soon, Northup's on his way to Louisiana. Shock — his, and ours — deepens as he stands for inspection, surrounded by other slaves for sale, many naked, poked and prodded like cattle by their seller (a frighteningly banal Paul Giamatti) who has no problem separating a mother from her small children. (Later, as the mother — a moving Adepero Oduye — weeps, her new mistress consoles her: "Your children will soon be forgotten.")

Northup's first owner, William Ford (Benedict Cumberbatch) is, in the scheme of things, a more sympathetic type, and he appreciates his new slave's intelligence. But he's powerless to protect Northup from a sadistic overseer (Paul Dano, reliably chilling), and a confrontation Northup has with the overseer leads to one of the film's most excruciating scenes — perhaps one of the most painful in any film about slavery. Hung from a tree, Northup is left to dangle for hours, teetering between life and death. His toes, which barely touch the ground, are his only hope. All the while, plantation life continues in full view of this horror: children playing, other slaves working, the mistress looking on from the porch.

Northup survives, but only to be sent off to another owner, the monstrous Edwin Epps, who cites scripture as support for 150-lash whippings. Epps — mesmerizingly portrayed by Michael Fassbender, a McQueen regular — also has sexual desires for a lovely young slave, Patsey, who has to endure not only Master's advances but the poisonous, violent jealousy of his wife (Sarah Paulson, also excellent.) A scene in which Patsey is subjected to Epps' most crazed fury is so harrowing, you may need to close your eyes — but don't. Newcomer Lupita Nyong'o is shattering in the role.

But the film truly belongs to Ejiofor, whose big, soulful eyes seem to register so many things at once: Shock, pain, grit, determination, abject despair at times, cautious hope at others — and always, dignity.

"I don't want to survive," he says at one point. "I want to LIVE." But before he can live, he must survive. It's an extraordinary tale. How McQueen and his team portray that tale is quite extraordinary, too.

"12 Years a Slave," a 20th Century Fox release, is rated R by the Motion Picture Association of America "for violence/cruelty, some nudity and brief sexuality." Running time: 133 minutes. Four stars out of four.

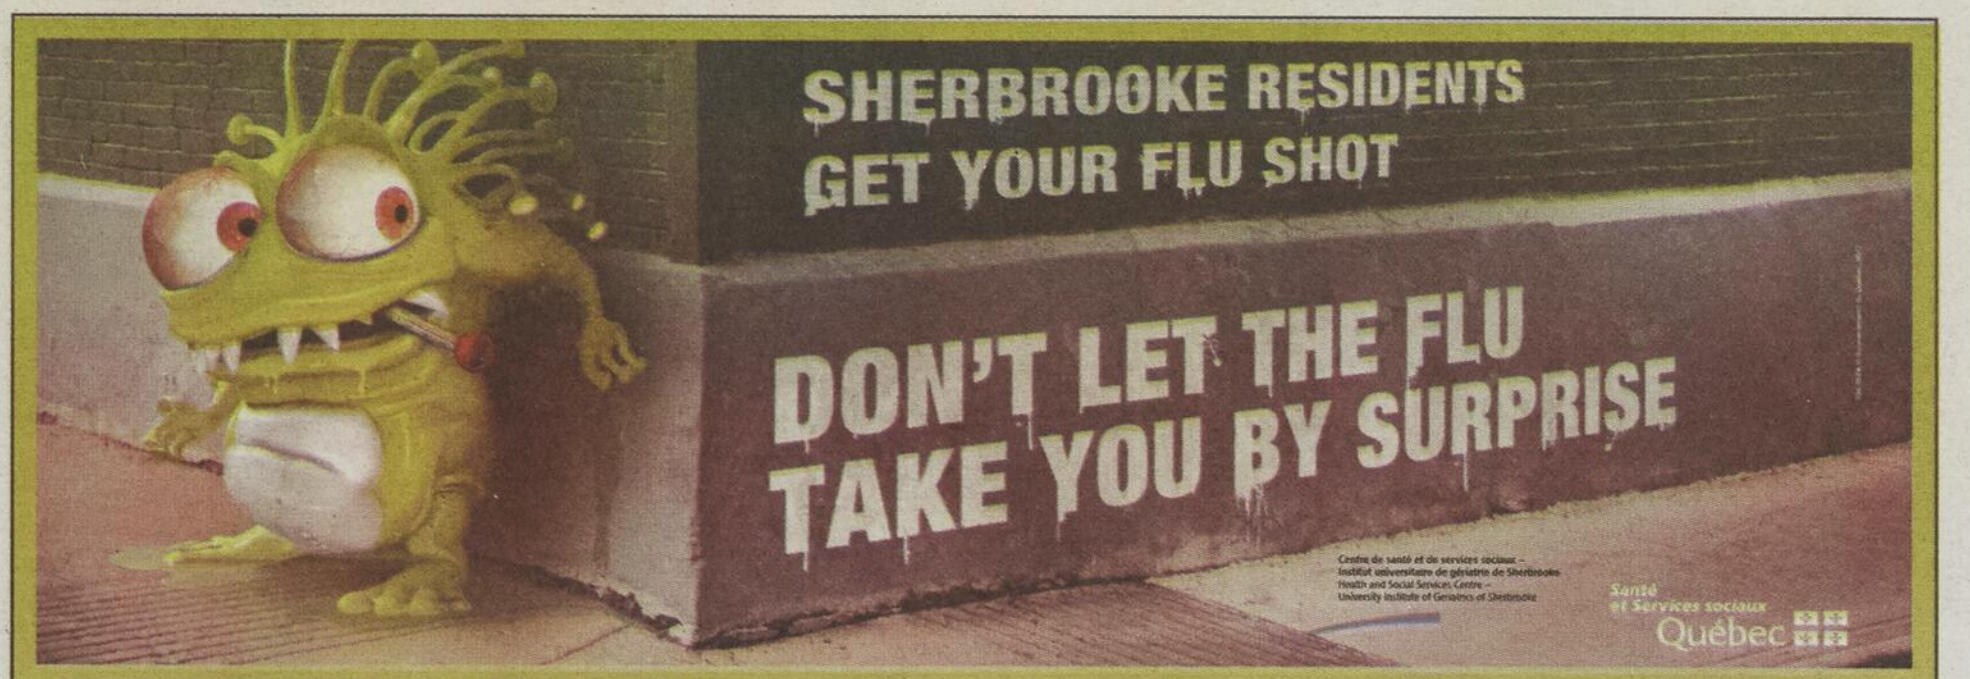

MPAA definition of R: Restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

ENTERTAINMENT BRIEF

Cumberbatch says Assange a 'complex individual'

The Canadian Press

Benedict Cumberbatch says he hopes to reveal "a more three-dimensional human portrait" of controversial WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange in the film "The Fifth Estate," opening Friday. Noting the embattled free speech warrior is dogged by a "kind of tabloid-gossip characterization," Cumberbatch described Assange as a complex individual who "performed a near-miraculous feat" in changing the way we think about media.

"...We aren't even thinking about the playoffs right now, we have two games left in the season. We are focused on Concordia and have to be ready to play."

RSEQ football playoff picture

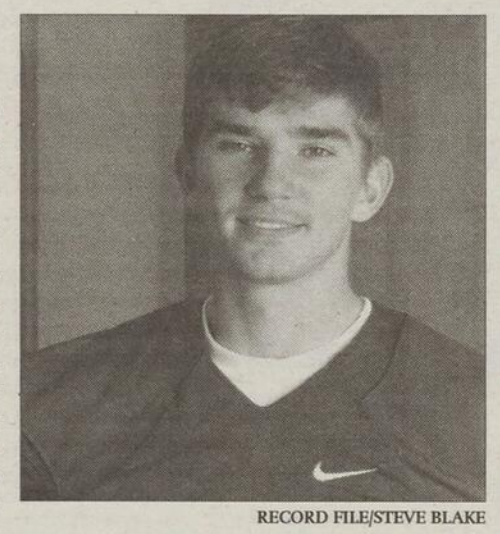

Bishop's is in and the Vert et Or are knocking on the door

By Mike Hickey
Special to The Record

The Bishop's Gaiters and Sherbrooke Vert et Or football teams are back in action this weekend in a pair of RSEQ games that have major playoff implications. The six-team league is back in action after a week hiatus for the Thanksgiving weekend break and only one things is certain with two weeks remaining in the regular season – the winless Concordia Stingers have been eliminated from postseason play. The defending National Champion Laval Rouge et Or need just one win in their final two games to clinch first place and enjoy home field advantage throughout the playoffs.

Kevin Mackey and the Gaiters have already secured a playoff berth but are aiming to host a playoff game for the first time since 1994. The Gaiters enter Saturday's road game with the Stingers tied for second place with the Montreal Carabins, who own the tiebreaker between the two schools. However if the Gaiters can win their next two against Concordia and McGill and Montreal loses one of its final games (Laval and McGill) the Gaiters will host a first-round playoff game.

Bishop's high-powered offence is led by quarterback Jordan Heather and a host of talented receivers.

Jordan Heather has twice been named CIS Offensive Player of the Week, and RSEQ Offensive Player of the Week on three different occasions.

Heather leads the CIS in passing with 2,183 total yards and has twice been named CIS Offensive Player of the Week, and RSEQ Offensive Player of the Week on three different occasions. The fifth-year history major set the school record for career passing yards earlier this year and is just 326 yards short of breaking his own school record for season passing yards that he set in 2011. With two games remaining he is on pace to set a new RSEQ single season passing record.

Ten different receivers have caught a pass this year and five of them have caught at least 20 passes led by league all-star Alexander Fox. Fox is another Gaiter who has his sights set on rewriting the RSEQ record book. Fox is already the most prolific receiver in terms of receiving yards for a career as a Bishop's Gaiter (2,133) and touchdown receptions (19). He enters tomorrow's contest three shy of the league record for receiving touchdowns.

It is a different and more complex scenario for the Vert et Or who trail the fourth-place McGill Redmen by one game for the final playoff berth. Sherbrooke plays Laval in Quebec City Sunday afternoon and finishes the regular season with a home game with the Stingers next Saturday. The most probable scenario for the Vert et Or is to split their last two games and hope that McGill losses to both Montreal and Bishop's. Sherbrooke has the tiebreaker between the two teams due to a 45-26 win over the Redmen back on September 20.

Despite playing a winless team Saturday, Mackey is keeping his squad grounded.

"We can't overlook any team in this league," said Mackey. "Yes we beat Concordia a few weeks back, but this is Quebec and anything can happen. We have to play disciplined football. This is going to be another physical game; we can't afford any mental mistakes or be looking too far ahead. We aren't even thinking about the playoffs right now, we have two games left in the season. We are focused on Concordia and have to be ready to play."

Coach Kevin Mackey is urging his team not to take winless Concordia too lightly.

Phoenix face tough test against Baie Comeau and Rimouski this weekend

By John Edwards
Special to The Record

The Sherbrooke Phoenix return home for a pair of games this weekend and will be looking to build on the momentum of last Saturday's three-goal comeback in Val d'Or.

The Phoenix (3-7-2) host the Baie Comeau Drakkar (7-4-2) on Friday night, in a rematch of last year's first-round playoff series, which the Drakkar swept in four games. On Saturday afternoon, the Phoenix will host the Rimouski Océanic (7-4-1).

While the Phoenix have struggled in October, going 1-2-2 in their five games so far, last weekend's trip to the Abitibi did give some signs of hope. The third-period comeback from 5-2 down to salvage a point must give head coach Judes Vallée cause for optimism, as does the fact that first round picks Daniel Audette (one goal, two assists) and Jérémy Roy (no goals, three assists) each scored three points over the two games.

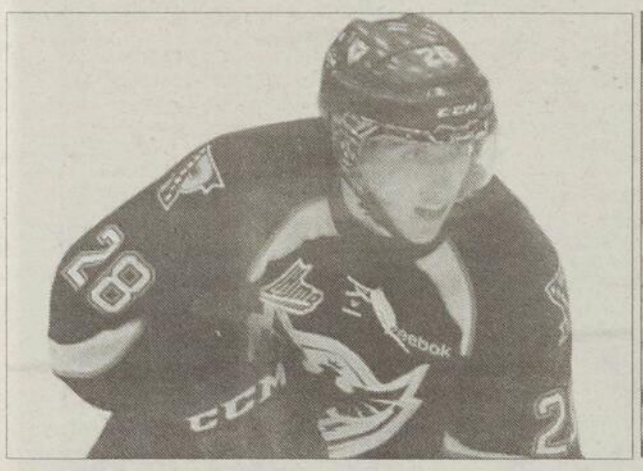

The Phoenix power play, which had been the worst in the league coming into the weekend, broke out for three goals last weekend, as they went 3-for-11 overall, double their success rate so far this year. The penalty kill went 9-for-10 overall, putting the Phoenix tenth in the league.

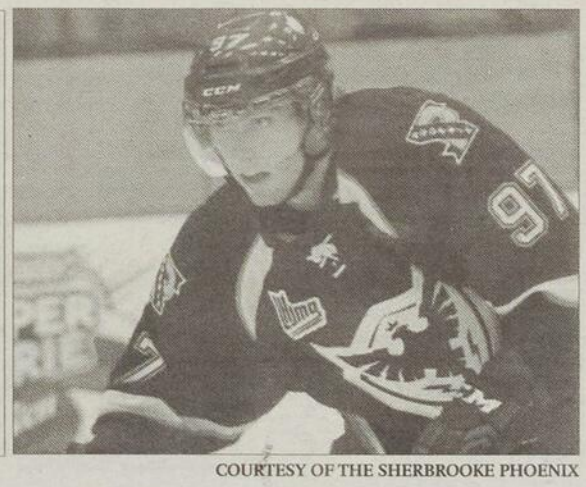

The Phoenix defence will have their hands full on Friday with the Drakkar, the defending East Division champions. This year, Baie-Comeau has scored 53 goals in 13 games, one of only two teams in the league to pass the half-century mark at this stage of the season.

On Saturday, the Phoenix will have to contend with Rimouski forward Anthony DeLuca. The 18-year-old Montrealer is third on the league scoring list with 20 points in 12 games.

Friday's game is the Phoenix's annual Breast Cancer Awareness Night. The team will wear special pink jerseys for the occasion, and there will also be draws and a silent auction to benefit the Quebec Breast Cancer Foundation. Fans are invited to wear pink for the game, which is set to face off at 7 p.m.

Saturday's game, a 4 p.m. faceoff, will be the first Minor Hockey Day of the season. Minor hockey players in uniform, accompanied by an adult, will be admitted free of charge to this game.

The Spark Motion app shortens recovery and improves athlete's skills

A Runner's Mind

Christine Blanchette

Living in a technology driven world, it's not surprising to have an app that now can help monitor an athlete's performance and rehab. The Spark Motion app is user friendly and is portable so you can take it anywhere with your coach or personal trainer. The coach can then monitor your recovery progress and even improve your running stride.

You no longer have to imagine an app that can improve your running skills or correct the way you stretch. The app is here and helping many athletes in their chosen sports to improve their performance, as well as speeding up the healing process for injuries.

In a society where we want instant results the app is a sensation among coaches and physiotherapists who want their athletes to get back into the game or for doctors who want their patients to recover quickly.

COURTESY

In a phone interview with Spark Motion CEO, David Gottfeld from his office in Bethesda just outside of Washington, D.C., he spoke with conviction on the app shortening the injury process by improving communication during treatment sessions through visual feedback between the physiotherapist and / or coach. Spark Motion is a leader in motion analysis technology on the mobile platform. It was built out of necessity by performance and healthcare professionals in the field who knew there was a better way to work with athletes and patients using the latest tablet technology.

Gottfeld, an injury prevention and post-rehab specialist for 20 years, created the only mobile motion app designed for coaches, trainers and medical practitioners.

The engaging Gottfeld said, "The app for the iPad was founded in February 2011 and I was first to market it based on motion analysis. Because I learn visually I thought about how people interpret information by visual learning." Gottfeld wanted to create the app software after realizing traditional schools weren't designed for visual learners. Further, "This evolved into a motion analysis app where patients or athletes can see right away improvements needed to be made to return to full recovery." The app is easy to use and it serves well for visual learners. Gottfeld explains: "For example, it can improve your running skills instantly and the results are sent securely around the world. The coach and athlete can live anywhere in the world by having this app. This app is worldwide and the NBA (Miami Heat) is using it, rugby players, NFL, college sports programs, and runners to improve their form."

Trainers and medical professionals are able to record video with the iPad, analyze the data and give exercises. Gottfeld's idea behind the app is, "We provide the tool and the practitioner is the creator – they hold the power to create." On their website, the perfect golf swing is something players at every level strive to achieve, but almost impossible to accomplish until they discover Spark Motion. The Spark Motion app is helping golfers create a flawless swing with its innovative motion analysis software. With this app, trainers and therapists who film any movement can instantly manipulate the footage by playing it in slow motion. Users can also mark the screen and play movements side by side, allowing them to give corrections on the spot. Gottfeld says, "It is a marriage between practitioners and tablets."

Picky young eaters usually grow up to like variety

ASK DOCTOR K

by Anthony L. Komaroff, M.D.

DEAR READERS: Several of my colleagues at Harvard Medical School have written e-books that contain good information on topical health-related issues. In this week's columns, I'll be featuring four of them that complement readers' questions. The e-books are short, easy to read and can be purchased through my website. I hope you will find them useful. — Doctor K

DOCTOR K: My preschooler will eat only white foods. I'm worried he's not getting the proper nutrients to grow and develop. What can I do?

DEAR READER: I'm not a pediatrician, but when I trained in pediatrics in medical school, I was amazed by how many parents brought their kids to the doctor because the kids were picky eaters.

My pediatrician colleagues here at Harvard Medical School tell me that many "white food fanciers" start off as adventurous eaters. Then around the age of 2 or 2 1/2, they refuse anything with color. Instead, they opt exclusively for white or beige foods, usually carbohydrates. Favorites include plain noodles, chicken nuggets, mashed potatoes, white bread and white cheese.

The good news? By the time most children reach the age of 10, they're digging into a wide spectrum of foods.

While you're waiting for your child to mature, you might be wringing your hands, worried your little one isn't getting enough nutrients and fiber. But if your child is measuring within the growth chart and has energy to spare, there's probably nothing to worry about.

Of course, that doesn't mean you can't try to gently change your child's eating behaviors:

— Counteract your concern. Pressure and heavy-handed encouragement will likely backfire. If you can't stop worrying, speak with your pediatrician. For example, if your child's favorite foods don't include all the vitamins he or she needs, multivitamins in liquid or pill form may deliver what's needed — until your child eats a more balanced diet.

— Set an example. Show your child that you enjoy making healthy food choices.

— Make white or beige smoothies. Make a smoothie out of soy milk and then add some white fruits such as pears, yellow apples or white grapes.

— Be sneaky. Combine cauliflower with mashed potatoes and your little one won't be the wiser. Try other ways to sneak vegetables in with beloved white foods.

— Opt for Cream of Wheat cereal. It's white and has a child's daily requirement for iron.

— Ask your child to help with simple food prep. By handling and touching different non-white foods without pressure to eat them, your child may be more likely to taste them at mealtime.

— Be patient. A typical young child needs multiple exposures to a new food before he'll risk tasting it — and 10 to 20 tastes before he actually likes it. So give it time. (I was the opposite of a picky eater. My mother, playing off the "Build it and they will come" saying, once told me that I was a "Bring it, and he will eat" baby.)

There's a great new book — a short, inexpensive e-book — called "Getting Your Child to Eat (Almost) Anything" by Harvard Medical School's Dr. Qian Yuan, with Robin Westen. You can learn more about it on my website, AskDoctorK.com.

(Dr. Komaroff is a physician and professor at Harvard Medical School. To send questions, go to AskDoctorK.com, or write: Ask Doctor K, 10 Shattuck St., Second Floor, Boston, MA 02115.)

She uses vulgar language, is sarcastic and likes to hit and punch me

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18, 2013

Annie's Mailbox

Dear Annie: There is a young couple in our church who spend the entire mass making out. They kiss, tickle, rub and caress each other every minute of the service. It's very distracting. It is also distracting to see other people in church snickering and rolling their eyes at them. I am praying that these two read your column and have a PDA wake-up call. — Switching Masses

Dear Switching: It is not uncommon for newly enamored couples to have difficulty keeping their hands off of each other. They think others will see it as proof of their love, when in actuality, it is a sign of immaturity. Finding another mass is one option. The other is informing the priest, who should counsel the couple about proper decorum in a place of worship.

Dear Annie: I've been married for 32 years, and my wife has been both verbally and physically abusive to me all that time. She uses vulgar language, is sarcastic and likes to hit and punch me. I almost filed for divorce after five years, hoping it would make her change, but it didn't work. She has anger, stress, weight, sleep and back problems and does nothing about them. She's crabby all of the time.

How do I tell her in a nice way that we will never survive under the same roof unless she makes progress on these problems? — Lost in Wisconsin

Dear Lost: Your wife doesn't believe you will leave her. You've tolerated 32 years of verbal and physical abuse, and quite logically, she expects you to stick around for more. Like many abused spouses, you believe you can make things better, but that requires her cooperation. Please contact the Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women (dahmw.org) at 1-888-7HELPLINE.

Dear Annie: I am the daughter-in-law mentioned in the letter from "Disappointed Parents," who said I retreated to the bedroom while my mother-in-law handled the movers. From their letter, I can understand why you think I might be a problem.

Yes, they did travel a long distance to help us with our move, and it was greatly appreciated. I kept thanking them and continuously asked whether they were OK and whether they needed anything. I was told over and over that they were just fine. The day the movers arrived, my husband and I agreed that he would deal with them and I would keep our small children out of the way in our bedroom. He didn't tell me that he and his father left to go to the bank, leaving his stepmother to handle the movers.

My husband and I both slept until noon that day, but they only castigated me for being "lazy." They didn't mention that I was up until 4 a.m. unpacking. They were bothered that I didn't have breakfast ready for them, even though the kitchen wasn't unpacked. They expected to be entertained. When they decided to leave in a huff, I was bathing our kids. They didn't even lock the front door behind them.

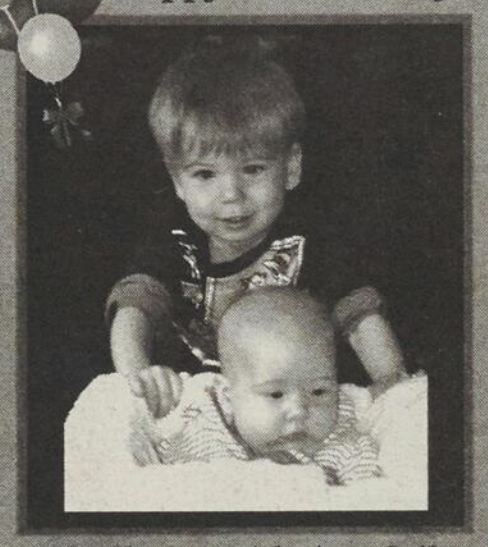

After they left, I received nasty emails saying how rude I was and that I need to apologize. Each one included a laundry list of the ways I am a terrible daughter-in-law and don't know my place. I didn't send birthday and Christmas greetings because my husband said he wasn't interested in doing so.

His father has a history of anger issues and has alienated every other family member. My last email stated that I was cutting off contact. I am too busy raising my children to raise my in-laws. They smile to your face while making lists of slights behind your back. I don't want my kids around such behavior. Thank you for reading my side of the events. — Shell-Shocked Daughter-in-Law

Dear Shell-Shocked: Thanks for providing it. Many readers came to your defense, saying that a new mother who had just moved had her hands full and deserved more consideration. We agree.

Plymouth-Trinity United Church Women

On Tuesday, September 10, 2013, 8 ladies and the Rev. Robin Osborne gathered in the parlour for the first UCW meeting of the fall session. A large collection of toiletries to be given to L'Escale, the local women's shelter was at the front of the room. Our President, Thelma Philbrick, called the meeting to order and we then all rose to repeat the UCW Purpose.

Janet McBurney read the Devotions, one entitled "Other Worlds to Sing In" and the other "Apples of Gold". Rev. Robin closed Devotions with a prayer. After which Ruth Atto received the offering.

Our Recording Secretary, Cathy Marshall, read the minutes of the May meeting which were accepted as read. Then our Treasurer, Janet McBurney, gave her report. Cathy reported that fourteen cards had been sent since our May meeting and a list of cards to be sent was made.

Lois Deagle gave her visiting report of 14 home, 13 nursing home, 152 hospital, 176 phone calls and 50 emails for a total of 405 visits over the summer months.

We are planning our Pre-Christmas Buffet and Sale which will be held on Saturday, November 2 from 3:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. Our menu will consist of ham, baked beans, scalloped potatoes, rolls, salads, cookies and squares. Also we are looking for donations from our congregation for the bake table and sales table.

Several of our members paid the Birthday pig and Happy Birthday was sung.

Rev. Robin closed our meeting with a prayer.

Should I win or lose trick one?

by Phillip Alder

Darin Weinberg, a research sociologist, said, "It matters not whether you win or lose; what matters is whether I win or lose."

That is a good mantra for everybody, although no one wins all of the time.

In bridge, winning and losing tricks in the right order is often important. In this deal, after the most common auction of all, South is in three no-trump. West leads a fourth-highest heart four. How should declarer play?

South has five top tricks: four spades and one heart. He also seems to have several establishable tricks: one or two in hearts, one or two in diamonds and three in clubs. What could go wrong?

Well, the original declarer, expecting the opening lead to be away from the king, played low from the board. He planned to win with his jack, drive out the club ace and coast home with at least one overtrick. However, South was sadly disappointed. East produced the heart king, then accurately shifted to the diamond four.

When declarer drove out the club ace, West returned his second diamond and East took four tricks in the suit for down two.

Now let's try winning the first trick and playing on clubs. What happens?

The contract succeeds. South has four spades, one heart and three clubs. If West leads back either red suit, declarer gains a ninth trick there. And if West returns a black suit, South plays a heart himself.

Yes, this line sacrifices an overtrick when West has the heart king, but those 30 points are paltry when compared to the 400 lost by going down instead of making.
