Friday evening the members and a large number of fraternal brethren of nearby and city lodges gathered in Ormstown, when Glenorm Lodge was holding a church service at St. Paul's United Church. The Rev. C. H. Dickenson of the American Presbyterian Church, Montreal, conducted the service and was assisted by the local clergy, Revs. A. F. Pollock, W. T. Payne and W. Ross. St. Paul's choir were in charge of the musical programme and rendered some fine solos and quartettes. The collection taken up at this service will be used for charitable purposes. Following the service, the regular meeting was held, the lodge was favored with a visit from Right Worshipful Bro. J. A. McDonald, Grand Master of Grand Lodge of Quebec, who was accompanied by Past Master Roman and other members of the Valleyfield Lodge. After the meeting the large number of brethren assembled about the festive board and enjoyed many good things to eat, along with the after dinner speeches made by visiting brethren. Bro. A. W. Lang of Montreal, was among those present and proposed the toast to Grand Lodge. Bro. Lang, Past Master of Glenorm Lodge, never fails to make a visit on an occasion of this kind and his witty remarks are always enjoyed. The Wor. Master M. R. Stalker presided.

Mrs. Peter McLaren was hostess at a delightful dinner party on Sunday, October 22nd, in honor of her 85th birthday. The following members of her family were present: Mrs. Elizabeth Phelps, Mr. Noel Phelps of Lexington, Mass., Mr. and Mrs. Munroe, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Tait and little daughter Shirley, Mr. and Mrs. Phil Burns of Montreal, Dr. W. S. and Mrs. McLaren, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. McLaren, Misses Phyllis, Marion and Jean McLaren.

Miss M. Bancroft and Miss Mayme Lang returned to Montreal, after spending the past four months at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Parkinson.

The W. M. S. members of St. Paul's United Church gathered in MacDougall Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 17th. One quilt was tied and another partly quilted and several other pieces of sewing completed. Donations of material were received. A very fitting tribute was paid to the late Mrs. Flora Hunton by Mrs. W. G. McGerrigle showing her unselfish, cheery life may well be taken as an example for all. A letter of thanks for work done for the Family Welfare Relief in Montreal, was read, more work is being sent for in the way of cut out garments for babies and small children. Arrangements for the autumn thankoffering meeting have been placed in charge of the programme committee. A reading by Mrs. J. Boyd and a trio by Miss L. Bazin, Mrs. S. Osmond and Mrs. A. Anderson concluded the meeting. At the close of this meeting members of the W. A. held a short session to make some arrangements for a supper to be held on Nov. 10th to celebrate the 102nd anniversary of St. Paul's.

Fire Protection Needed

The disastrous fire at Montpetit's attracted hundreds to the scene and aroused in the minds of many the question of some co-operative system of fire protection for the farms. Had there been an engine and hose on the scene it would have been a simple matter to extinguish the flames and allay the fears of neighbors. If the fire had occurred the night before, when a high gale was blowing, the entire River Road for a distance east, which is lined with houses and barns, would have been in serious danger. As it was, many surrounding buildings were in danger and some ignited. The modern system of having all the water supply and pumps under the barn roof increases the fire hazard. Although the pump at Montpetit's was in the barn he had just recently dug a new well, but the water had to be bailed out as there was no pump attached. Had the fire equipment in Huntingdon been available the river, right at hand, could have been put to good use. Some co-operation and the installation of auxiliary equipment for use in surrounding townships would prove very useful in many cases. In the days of quick transportation and with adequate machinery available it is folly to remain entirely helpless in such emergencies.

R.C.M.P. CHARGES HEARD AT COURT IN VALLEYFIELD

$50 Fine For Selling Smuggled Sugar—Illegal Possession of Alcohol—Tobacco and Cigarettes Basis of Cases

On Wednesday a number of cases were heard before Magistrate Miller in Valleyfield. The cases brought about by the R. C. M. P. heard were:

F. O'Connor charged with selling smuggled sugar. The accused pled guilty to the charge and was fined $50 and costs.

Modeste Cousineau of Valleyfield, was found guilty of having illicit alcohol within his possession. He was fined $200 and costs.

Isaie Loiselle of St. Louis de Gonzague was found guilty of having cut tobacco which was illegally manufactured. The accused failed to appear at the court and was ordered to appear the day following. He failed to make this appearance and a bench warrant is being issued. He was duly fined $50 and costs.

The fourth case was that of Fred Palmer, Jamieson's Lines. The accused failed to make his appearance at the court. The case was held over until November 15. The accused is charged with being in possession of smuggled cigarettes.

MINISTERS MEET AT RUSSELLTOWN

Rev. J. E. Lloyd is Host and Delivers Address on "The Christian Faith of Today"

The Frontier Ministerial Association of the United Church held its October meeting at the home of the Rev. J. F. Lloyd, Russeltown, and there was a large attendance of members. The subject of study for the day was a series of addresses given at the Quadrennial Conference of the Student Christian Movement at Edinburgh last January. The paper was given by Rev. Mr. Lloyd, and he briefly reviewed each of these addresses as they have been published in a book entitled "The Christian Faith of Today." These addresses while dealing with different subjects, and by different people had this in common that they all pointed to Jesus Christ as the One adequate for the need of the world today. The essay summarizing the message of the leaders to the youth of today stressed in modern thought the old themes of the Gospel. To some the New Testament seems so remote that it can be of little value to us in the twentieth century. But because of what the Gospel is, not a set of rules to be applied mechanically, but the revelation of the eternal principles of a life possible to man in union with God through Jesus Christ, it is the solution of our problems as it was of the problems nineteen hundred years ago. This life comes to those who are listening to God as He speaks. The fellowship of the Spirit is a real experience. It had its base in Pentecost, and Pentecost came to men who were listening to God. Pentecost is God's answer to man's obedience. To those seeking for a God worth believing in the choice is between Jesus or nothing. From the study of these addresses given at this great conference of students gathered from many countries it is evident that the leaders of the Student Christian Movement are presenting a Gospel that is virile and challenging, and adequate to the needs of today.

A discussion on the essay was opened by Rev. Mr. M. Williams who spoke in appreciation of the paper, and emphasized the thought that the principles of the Gospel are directive. He quoted from Dr. Sloan Coffin, "Jesus was not concerned with supplying new beliefs, but in supplying new men." These addresses remind us how we need to reconsider and restate, lifting out of the past, the splendid truths which are the faith of the Church. A very interesting conversation followed in which many participated, it centered round the certainties of the Christian faith, and the difficulties of interesting people in them.

After prayer and the benediction the Rev. Mr. Lloyd assisted by Mrs. Herbert Gilmore, Mrs. Wm. Gilmore, Mrs. Wilfred Robinson and Mrs. Wm. Wood entertained to a delicious lunch. Mr. Moore and Mr. Duncan on behalf of the Association expressed the appreciation of the gracious hospitality.

City Gas & Electric Corporation Ltd. Shares Listed on Montreal Curb

Colonel P. L. Browne, the President of City Gas & Electric Corporation, Limited, announces that the common stock shares of the Company are now listed on the Montreal Curb Market and will be called for trading on the 1st of November. It was felt by the Directors that now that the Company had over one thousand shareholders, such action was required so as to provide the necessary facilities to trade in the Company's common stock.

The Company has made good progress since the beginning of the year, having taken over the assets of the Yamaska Power Company and Consolidated Utilities, Limited, adding thereby not only to its fixed assets but also, earning power and customers.

Negotiations are now under way whereby other utility properties will be acquired, broadening the scope of the Company's operations.

MEETING LOCAL TEACHERS' ASSN.

A meeting of the Local Teachers' Association was held in Huntingdon Academy on Saturday afternoon with the vice-president in the chair.

The main item of business was the election of officers which resulted as follows: President, Miss Jessie Snaden; Vice President, Miss Gladys Herdman; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Mary Pringle; Executive—Ormstown, Miss Willa McNeil; Hinchinbrooke, Miss Carrie McFarlane; Elgin—Miss Ruth Stark; Dundee—Miss Mary Ashton, B.A.

Miss Mabel A. McMillan gave a concise resumé of chapters five and six of the 'Psychology of the Maladjusted School Child." Mr. J. B. MacMillan in a few minutes discussion, brought out several interesting practical points from this resumé.

The next meeting will be held Dec. 9th.

HOWIE GRANT TO OVERSEAS TEAM

Will be Playing-Manager of National Hockey Team at Prague, Czecho-Slovakia

Howie Grant, local amateur hockey star, has agreed to accept the position of playing-manager with Czechoslovakia's national hockey team this winter. Grant will leave for Prague on October 27 and will be away five months. His team will tour Europe throughout the winter, visiting such capitals as Warsaw, Berlin and Paris, and crossing the Channel to play in the British Isles, in London, Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Grant, a fast and rangy centre, has had an extensive career in Montreal. He has played with Northern Electric and Bell Telephone, in the Railway-Telephone League, with Victorias, in the Senior Group, and with Lafontaine in the Mount Royal League. Last winter, Grant was a member of the Hershey, Pa., hockey club.

Howie is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grant, local baker. He spent the summer here in Huntingdon and played on the local softball and baseball teams. His many friends will be glad to hear of his having secured such a position and wish him the best of luck with his continental team this winter.

Lachute Watchman Publishes Musical Magazine For Canada

A new Canadian Magazine published in the interest of good music has made its bow to the public. The magazine is of 24 pages, eight pages of which are musical numbers. The magazine is the product of our good friends, the Lachute Watchman, of which Mr. J. S. Giles is the owner. Mr. Giles has coupled with him a young staff of not only accomplished journey men, but includes a master musician. The writer of the magazine is Mr. A. Fassio, also of Lachute and one who has long been identified with the promotion of good music in eastern Canada. With the publishing of this monthly magazine the promoters not only hope to make it a profitable adventure, but to do much good for the musical art in general. The Musical Review of Canada will discuss any change or advance in methods of instruction; it will contain advice as to the markets for instruments whether it be for a band or home. The time was ripe for Canada to have its own mouthpiece for the musical world, and our confreres of Lachufe who are financially interested in this adventure are deserving of commendation. We extend to them our congratulations upon publishing such an impressive number as is No. 1. of Vol. 1. The annual subscription price is set at $1.50.

177 Gallons Alcohol Seized by R.C.M.P.

About 3 a.m. on the 23rd of Oct. the combined night patrols of Clarenceville and Hemmingford detachments of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, in charge of Constable Maloney, seized an American Ford V 8 coupe containing 177 gallons of alcohol, in the neighbourhood of Farnham.

The driver of the car on being flagged to stop applied the brakes and endeavoured to turn around. Finding his retreat cut off, however, he abandoned the car and load and made off across country. Upon examination, the car was found to contain 177 gallons of alcohol in five, and one gallon cans. The car and load were immediately placed under seizure and handed over to the Collector of Customs for custody.

W. B. Bradshaw New Manager For Bank of Commerce at Ormstown—J. K. Goodfellow to be Hemmingford Manager

The Canadian Bank of Commerce has announced the superannuation of Mr. C. W. Hawley, Manager of the Ormstown Bank, thereby creating a vacancy that will be filled by Mr. W. B. Bradshaw, the present manager at Hemmingford. The Hemmingford vacancy will be filled by Mr. J. K. Goodfellow who has been the accountant at the St. Catherine and City Hall Branch in Montreal.

Mr. Hawley's superannuation is to take place on or about November 18. For 11 years Mr. Hawley has been the faithful secretary of Glenorm Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Ormstown, and in further appreciation of his services the lodge members made a presentation to him at the last regular meeting. Mr. Hawley was the recipient of a handsome club bag. Mr. Hawley in company with his brother intend to spend the coming winter in the sunny south.

District Press Association Entertained at Lucerne-in-Quebec

The worth of a local press association was again demonstrated on Saturday. The Ottawa and St. Lawrence Valley Press Association met on Saturday at the beautiful Lucerne-in-Quebec. The hosts were Messrs. J. S. Giles, "The Watchman", Lachute, and J. E. Laurin, "The Echo" of Hawkesbury. It was a happy thought for our hosts to settle upon the idea of meeting at Lucerne, for it is very doubtful if any one of the Press Party would again have an opportunity to visit this delightful place made so gorgeous through the expenditure of millions of dollars by the C.P.R., and the wealthy people of Canada who have found it possible to pay the membership of $2500.

This exclusive spot, 42 miles from Ottawa so beautifully adorned by nature, found the press representatives present from Cornwall Standard-Freeholder; Alexandria Times and Glengarry News of Alexandria; Perth Courier; Carleton Place Canadian; Lachute Watchman; Hawkesbury Echo and the Huntingdon Gleaner; and were accompanied by their wives, so that the total number present reached 25.

During the business meeting matters that concerned the papers in Ottawa and St. Lawrence Valley were given attention. Progress was reported upon the movement started last spring whereby the newspapers hope to extend some publicity for the benefit of the trading condition within their respective fields.

As the party was about to disperse late in the afternoon Col. A. G. F. Macdonald of Alexandria moved the vote of thanks to Messrs. Laurin and Giles for the entertaining of the Press party at Lucerne-in-Quebec, which marked another red letter day for the Association.

Woman's Association Meets.—

Mrs. John McClatchie entertained the Powerscourt Woman's Association at her home Wednesday afternoon. A good number of visitors and members were present. Sewing and knitting was the work for the afternoon. Supper was served by the hostess, proceeds from which amounted to $9.70.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. G. S. McClatchie last Thursday were Mr. and Mrs. D. Forrester, Mr. Lorne Forrester and Mr. and Mrs. Milne, Sr.

Mrs. E. M. Wood spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Archie Cameron at Howick.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Rutherford and Mr. Leslie Rutherford were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Ross on Sunday.

W.C.T.U. SCHOOL OF METHODS AT DEWITTVILLE

$25 Again Voted Towards Temperance Educational Campaign — Several Life Membership Pins Presented

A W. C. T. U. "School of Methods" was held in the Presbyterian Church, Dewittville, on October 18th. The Church was prettily decorated with flowers and the arriving ladies were hospitably welcomed by the members of Dewittville Union.

It was decided that the county again undertake the Temperance Educational Campaign and give prizes to the amount of twenty-five dollars.

A paper on World's Missionary Work by Mrs. Hastie was read by Mrs. McGerrigle, Mrs. Hastie being unable to be present. A minute of silence was observed in honour of those departed since last we met.

Several beautiful selections from sacred songs and solos were sung with Mrs. Reece at the organ.

Each local president had been asked to speak on the problems in her work. Several did so, stressing interesting others in our cause, non attendance of members at meetings, etc.

Mrs. Davis of Huntingdon Union read an interesting paper on problems in general in temperance work.

A bountiful dinner was served to all by the ladies of Dewittville Union.

Rev. Mr. Miller of Huntingdon led the devotional period.

The first item of the afternoon's program was an address by Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D. Mrs. Reece sang very feelingly "God's Way is the Best Way."

Several County Life Membership pins were presented to: Mrs. John Ross from Athelstan Union, Mrs. Wm. Price from Franklin Centre Union, Mrs. Ward McLean from Dewittville Union, Mrs. J. C. Moore from Brooklet Union.

Mrs. Wilson, Provincial President, gave a most interesting report of the Provincial Convention held in Magog the last week in September.

Mrs. Van Vliet, Mrs. John Gordon and Mrs. McIntosh each gave a recitation. These were very much enjoyed. A paper on Lord's Day Observance was read by Mrs. Boyce, Athelstan, and also a paper on Peace and Arbitration by Mrs. W. J. Maither, Brooklet.

Mrs. Reece made an appeal to the local Unions to endeavor to organize Loyal Temperance Legions.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the ladies of Dewittville Union and the meeting was brought to a close by the president.

LOCAL MEETING DISTRICT I.O.O.F.

Grand Lodge Officers From Montreal Attend District Meeting and Banquet

A district meeting of the I.O.O.F. lodges of Valleyfield, Ormstown, and Huntingdon was held in the local Lodge Rooms on Wednesday evening.

There was an enthusiastic assemblage of about seventy-five members, of which fifteen were from Valleyfield, and twenty-five from Ormstown. During the course of the meeting addresses were given by Grand Master Frank Henshaw, Grand Patriarch Thos. Schelker Grand Scribe George Wilson, and Grand Secretary George Lang, all of Montreal. A delicious banquet followed the meeting. Toasts were proposed to the Grand Lodge Officers by Dr. H. R. Clouston, and responded to by the Grand Master; to the visitors, by P. M. Elder, response by Walter Walsh, of Valleyfield; to the Rebekahs, by C. W. McClatchie, response by Past Grand Master Decarie. In all, the meeting was a very successful affair.

Sixty-five Pupils For New Agricultural School

We have been informed by Mr. P. N. April, director of the new Agricultural School at Ste-Martine that the classes for this season's term have been completely filled. Already decided that but 60 pupils should be accepted this year, due to insistent demands five more pupils have been accepted and the enrolment now stands at 65. Of this number there are twelve English-speaking students. This school term will prove especially beneficial for these students for apart from the agricultural course offered they will have the advantage of securing a working knowledge of the French language and of practice in conversation.

Dundee by Mrs. Geo. Fraser

Church News.—

A very interesting talk on mission work in Africa was given Sunday morning, by Rev. J. E. Lloyd of Russeltown, in Zion United Church, both at the church service and at Sunday School. Mr. Lloyd has served as a missionary in that far away land for quite a number of years. His familiarity with the people and their modes of living enables him to bring a very vivid and interesting story back to the people here and these stories were very much appreciated by all ages, last Sunday morning.

Miss Bella McBain entertained at her home on Saturday, Mrs. W. G. Cook, Mrs. M. Davenport, of Montreal, and Mrs. Margaret McDougal of Lancaster, Ont.

The Bowling Club members convened on Monday evening and formulated plans for the Annual Turkey Stag Party. It was unanimously decided that no raffles would be conducted within the hall. The gobbler that will be raffled through an advance sale of tickets, presently weighs over 40 lbs., so Mr. Stark announced. Committees were appointed to take care of the various details of the programme and an earnest effort is to be made to make this, the 5th annual Stag Party the best on record. In accordance with the times the admission fee will be reduced from 75c to 50c. Each admission ticket sold will entitle the holder to a free ticket for the drawing on the big turkey. The refreshments to be served at the party will be supplied by the Bowling Club members.

On Monday evening the Y meeting was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Dawson. Thirty members and friends were present. Miss Lorna McWhinnie gave an interesting report of the Provincial W.C.T.U. Convention, which she attended in Magog. A cup donated to the Y which secures the greatest increase in membership during the year came to Huntingdon County. Several "Round Robin" letters were sent to absent members. Miss I. Cowan, field secretary of the Upper Canada Tract Society was present, and gave a very interesting account of the work this Society does in assisting the sailors of the inland waterways of Canada. The Y promised to donate several Comfort Bags. Three new members were added to the roll. A social hour was spent in games and refreshments, after which the singing of Auld Lang Syne and a hearty vote of thanks to the Dawson family and the various committees brought the meeting to a close.

Miss Dorothy McConville of Saranac Lake, N.Y., motored to Huntingdon on Sunday to spend the day at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McConville.

The Beauty of Nature

American Beauty rosebuds peering through the snow!

Were Ripley to pen such a picture in his daily newspaper column the majority of his readers would have a certain doubt about the authenticity of his accompanying statement, and especially when told that the snow was five inches deep. However, that was the real sight offered us Wednesday morning when we stepped out into a brisk air and a mantle of white had enshrouded every inanimate object within our view.

Tuesday afternoon's snowstorm was one of the worst blizzards ever experienced in this part of the country. In character it was not only local, but general throughout the province, eastern Ontario, and the Northern States. The power and telephone companies suffered the most severe general damage ever to have been their lot at one time, in this province. After the noon hour Tuesday a light snow began to fall, melting as soon as it struck the ground. Later a slight drop in the temperature caused the snow to take form on walks and roads. The effects of the storm accumulated as the day wore on and when it began to abate its fury about midnight there was a five-inch mantle of snow everywhere.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good;" and the heavy precipitation will certainly prove beneficial to the farmers whose wells were almost dry, and the land difficult to plough. However, the power and telephone companies, and the fruit growers, suffered untold damage by the storm. Apple trees were broken down; shade trees on many a lawn crashed under the immense weight of the heavy snow; and shrubbery suffered generally. All party and long distance lines into the Huntingdon Bell Telephone office were out of commission.

As an instance of the serious extent of damage—on a two-mile section on the Vance sideroad south of Huntingdon but eight telephone poles remained standing. A party who came in from Franklin on Wednesday morning was continually stopping to disengage telephone wires from his automobile chains. Electric light and power service were disrupted about seven o'clock Tuesday evening and while some were inconvenienced by the lack of light others suffered also from the lack of heat, for many of the private homes as well as public institutions in the district have furnaces fitted with electric blowers.

In the cities and throughout the province thousands of former telephone and power linesmen, and men possessing electrical knowledge, have been called to work in a task which will require weeks of steady labor to repair.

In some places the snow had a tendency to drift and helped to block traffic, as well as trees, poles, and branches across the roads. A Montreal man who had been visiting relatives in St. Anicet left there Wednesday morning about eight o'clock. He reached Huntingdon about three o'clock in the afternoon, saying that it had cost him, between being towed, pulled out of ditches, having obstacles removed, $24. to reach here. He had hoped to get to Montreal for afternoon work.

Thus was one of the worst early blizzards that this district and province has ever experienced.

The electric service was disrupted Tuesday evening at seven o'clock and resumed today (Thursday) at 11.35 a.m. As the Gleaner depends wholly upon electric power to operate its machines publication of the paper had been necessarily delayed. Although dated as appearing Wednesday this week's Gleaner is actually being printed on Thursday, October 26th.

Huntingdon, Wednesday, Oct. 25th, 1933

Baby Clinic Promoted by W. I. The Women's Institute appears to be the public spirited body of women that aims to do things, and succeeds in many of its objectives. The Institute has long been urging the establishing of the Health Unit in Huntingdon County. The County Council has endorsed the scheme, thanks to the organization efforts of the W. I. who had the benefits of such a unit placed before the County Council. The only apparent hitch in Huntingdon County having its Unit today is that Beauhearnois County is not so unanimous. Valleyfield and Beauharnois, the two largest populated centres favour having the Health United organized for the benefit of Beauharnois and Huntingdon counties, but unfortunately some of the parishes are not prepared to endorse it to date.

The thin edge of the wedge for a Huntingdon County Health Unit is now being driven. On Friday, October 27th, a Baby Clinic under the auspices of the W. I. is to be held in the County Building. The clinics will be held monthly, and be conducted under the personal supervision of Dr. A. Lapierre of the Provincial Health Board. He will be assisted by Miss Nina Macfarlane, a graduated nurse, and Miss Lucille Lefebvre. Babies brought to this clinic will be thoroughly examined and if found ailing in any respect medical advice will be prescribed.

Both in the United States and Canada are to be found health extension syndicates. These syndicates have arranged with life insurance companies to have their larger policy holders subject themselves voluntarily to a medical examination annually. The information so gathered tells them how the individual is, and what he should do to correct his ailments or habits, so that his life may be extended. This life extension work has proved extremely beneficial to mankind, and has had a telling effect upon extending the average span of life of policy holders. What can be said in this respect of the Life Extension Syndicates in Canada and the United States, can also be credited to the Health Units of this Province. Friday will see many a mother take her baby to the Baby Clinic, and if the baby is not found to be up to the prescribed standard as to health, worthwhile advice or treatment will be supplied gratis.

The W. I. are to be highly commended for making such a progressive move and especially when we consider that these clinics under Dr. Lapierre are to be regularly conducted each month.

Save the Co-operative Factory From Ruination The word co-operative is often misconstrued and possibly those misconstruing it are under the impression that they really do co-operate at all times. The mere fact that a man has affiliated himself with any co-operative movement does not necessarily say he shares with his co-partners.

At the present time the Co-operative Milk Factory in Huntingdon is undergoing a trying time. The farmers who entered into this co-operative did so with a view to creating an outlet for the disposing of the milk produced on their dairy farms. 125 of these farmers were of one mind at that time and it is to be hoped that as they now have an investment of nearly $30,000 they will maintain that co-operation and not lose it, through breaking faith with the co-operative principle.

When the factory was built it was necessary that it be done in a hurry and perhaps that is the reason why the big financial outlay. The factory has been built for the manufacturing of cheese and butter. It appears that the farmers who lined up with this co-operative had hopes of operating the factory during the summer months and during the fall and winter to market their milk in Montreal. If such a procedure is to be followed, is it not creating an uncalled for overhead that will mean the breaking down of this co-operative movement? In all industrials an effort is made to keep every machine operating every hour that it is possible; in other words keep the plant working and running smoothly at all times. This usual objective is not apparently being carried out in connection with the Co-operative in Huntingdon. The not carrying out of this objective may mean the breaking down, and this co-operative factory going into the discard which is not hoped for or wanted by anyone.

At the present time the Co-operative is shipping a large shipment of milk to a Montreal customer, at a price on paper that seems very attractive. The mere fact that this contract is not sufficiently large to take 100% of the milk produced by the patrons is likely to cause discord that may bring about the ruination of the co-operative scheme. The patrons of this factory have already suffered a loss of about $1200, through dealing with a Montreal milk firm in 1932. That does not mean that the present customer in Montreal is likely to jip them in this manner, but has it not often been the case that farmers felt in shipping to Montreal as individuals they did not get fair treatment in regards to the test of their milk. The cost of handling and shipping the milk to Montreal is a very substantial amount, and if the test of the milk is tampered with, it brings about a discord amongst the shippers that is bound to break down the co-operative movement.

With a large shipment of milk going to Montreal daily it means that the butter or the cheese plants must be partially idle. This means that the money which the patrons have subscribed to this plant is not earning interest, therefore the whole plant would be uncalled for. The co-operative might well consider the advisability of either having all milk manufactured into cheese or butter, rather than try to cater to distant markets.

The shipping of milk to Montreal is the one market that is likely to bring about the great disruption amongst the patrons. It is natural that milk going to this market must be cooled and particularly well cared for at the farm. The farmer who lives nearest to the factory is able to get his milk in early in the morning, and naturally it is this milk that gets the preference to go to Montreal. If that milk obtains a higher price per 100 pounds than that of the neighbour's who does not cool his milk so thoroughly and takes it to the factory later in the morning, he naturally expects he should be paid a higher price for the cool milk. The farmer who lives a distance away from the factory and has not his milk 100% cooled has also a grievance, because it is his milk that contributes more to the maintainance and upkeep of the property.

The milk question in Huntingdon is just the same as it is everywhere else. It is a great problem to handle. The factory in Huntingdon as we have already stated is needed, and Huntingdon has an advantage over many communities because it already has this factory. If discord is tolerated it will mean the ruination of this factory and a very great loss to everyone who is producing milk whether they be patrons, shareholders or otherwise.

When the next general meeting is held it is hoped good judgment will be used, and that no rush decisions are settled upon without being carefully weighed by those who are best posted in the milk business.

Honest Grading Maintains Trade A certain apple grower at Franklin sold a number of barrels of apples in Huntingdon a few years ago. These apples did not turn out to be as was represented, the top rows being fine and the remainder of the barrel very inferior. The apple grading stations built in recent years have done much to improve the standard of apple packing, so much so that people are getting more inclined each year to buy only graded apples from these stations. This year the Franklin apple grower who sold the inferior apples in barrels years ago, has sold apples in a hamper with two rows of fine McIntosh on top and the balance of the fruit being nothing better than a wild apple. It is true the hamper was not supposed to be a pack from the grading station, but the mere fact that the man who grew and sold the fruit has been identified as a good apple grower and interested in the welfare of the Apple Packing and Grading Station makes one feel he should be censured for his actions. An apple grower following such a practice is not only injuring his own future, but is tearing down the good work of his neighbours who no doubt are doing their level best to build up prestige and the apple trade in general.

Smuggling Sugar, Etc. The mere fact that the Federal Government settled upon the idea of raising money to help govern the Dominion by placing a 2c a pound tax on sugar is no excuse why anyone should smuggle that commodity. Laws are made to be obeyed, not to be infringed upon. Whilst it is true this 2c a pound tax makes sugar much dearer in Canada than the United States, we Canadians have many things that our American cousins have to pay more for. After all said and done, are the individual Americans who number amongst the rank and file one bit better off than the Canadian folks in the same category. We are quite convinced from what we have learned that the Canadian folks are a little bit better off on the whole.

Smuggling goods in from the United States is not clever, and anyone who attempts to follow that practice deserves little sympathy. Our Canadian Government employs Custom Officers to collect these lawful custom duties. If we evade the paying of such duties, are we not just deceiving ourselves, who form a portion of the Canadian populace. The dishonour that follows one who has smuggled is a blemished character that they carry for the rest of their days, especially if they live in a small community such as this. Smuggling is not worth the price, if you feel you must buy, or that it is more convenient for you to make your purchase south of the line; be fair with Canada and declare your goods and pay the duty if dutiable.

Xmas League Will Require New Officers Any newly formed organization that calls for subscriptions from the public is very likely to come in for considerable criticism. If the money subscribed is spent locally based upon the opinions of the organized association it is certain to be criticised, rightly or wrongly as the case may be. This has happened to the Christmas Tree League movement of Huntingdon, but last year saw that criticism diminish to a frazzle. The reason for that attitude subsiding was that the critics realized that the League was doing a worthwhile work, and that it was saving the corporation hundreds, if not thousands of dollars over the period of time the League has been in operation.

The coming winter will see greater demands upon the League than in recent years. Citizens who feel they will be able to devote considerable time towards the welfare of the town, and its needy, will be wanted to head the League work. The President and the Secretary-Treasurer have intimated that they wish to be relieved of their respective offices this winter. These offices should be filled by willing and ardent workers. Within a few weeks time a general meeting will be called. In the meantime it would be well for the Municipal Council and others interested in the welfare of the League to approach parties to fill these vacancies; bearing in mind that the recipients of the offices will have much to do and must be willing to sacrifice some of their time for others.

Pay More Attention To Details It is the small hole in the wall that lets the water run out and which gradually grows larger till all the water is out. It is the small detail in the business that often causes the big losses at the end of the year. In a word, when times are bad the merchant is watching more closely his little leaks than ever before. This is as it should be. Merchants today must see that they close up the leaks and that every dollar spent is spent to some good purpose. True, you may have to spend money to make money. But the day of letting these leaks continue is past. The day is at hand when every detail should be carefully analyzed. Weigh in the balance the expenditure. Does this window produce enough business? Am I using the right kind of advertising? Am I reaching all the people in the district who could use my goods? These are questions that the live active merchant will put before himself every day. If he will analyze the situation he will realize that he can save money and reach the people in a more thorough and economical way than he has been doing. Look into the details carefully. Stop the leaks and thus make sure of your business for the year.

Practise Freedom In the Home Instead of fault-finding and scolding it would be well to try persuasion in active form. In one home, we were informed by the housekeeper that her man had given up smoking, as she had never allowed him to smoke in the house. That was a form of compulsion.

Another lady said she had cured her husband of the liquor habit by serving him with iced dry ginger ale, and by not waiting until he asked for it. A neighboring lady visited the home of her friend and tartly asked her why she allowed her boys and girls to litter up every room in the house, and even permitted her husband to leave his pipe and tobacco in the living room. The spirited and home-loving lady replied, and we interpret the meaning of her answer:

"The marks of the little muddy feet upon the floor can be easier removed than the stains where the little feet go into the highways. The prints of the little fingers upon the window-panes cannot shut out the sunshine half so much as the shadows that darken the mother's heart over the one who will be but a name in the coming years. And if my John finds refuge and care, and his greatest happiness within its four walls, he can put his boots in the chair and hang his coat on the floor any day in the week. And if I can stand it, and he enjoys it, I cannot see that it is anybody's business."—(Selected)

Devotion Overworked

In 1893, Gaston Foy, a Frenchman, received a life sentence to Devil's Island, off the coast of Guiana, for murder. His wife appealed to the court to have herself sentenced to the same place to be near her husband, but was refused. Disguised as a man and changing her name to Lebouc, she murdered the principal witness against her husband, confessed the crime and also went to Devil's Island for life, without discovery of her identity. She soon met her husband, but her secret was never discovered. He died in 1913. A few years later his wife, still passing for a man, was offered repatriation back to France, but refused it, preferring to stay on the penal island near the grave of her husband. The truth of her sex was not discovered until her death last month, and although burial of women is forbidden on the island, special permission was obtained to dig a grave for her beside that of her husband.

Out With Crow Cannon

Between horse racing seasons, H. D. Gryrear, a jockey of Matfield Green, Kan., kills crows, both for sport and remuneration. In four months, he killed 16,000 crows, causing the county commissioners to quit paying bounties before bankrupting the county treasury. Fryrear, knowing where the big crow roosts are, sneaks up on them the darkest hour of the night with a special extension shotgun that fires ten times without loading. He has killed as many as 207 crows with ten shots. Next morning he gathers up the slain crows. Still more deadly is his home-made cannon made out of a gas pipe loaded with a gallon of powder and a gallon of old piston rings broken up into pea-size slugs. This heavy artillery is touched off with a fuse. It costs 50 cents to fire it once, but Fryrear claims he has brought down as many as 175 crows with one broadside.

Grief Carpets

Four years ago, at the little village of Beiriz in Portugal, the wife of a well-to-do farmer lost her only child, a little boy. To divert her mind from her loss she took up carpet-making, and so proficient did she become, and so popular were the brightly colored rugs and carpets she made, that before long she had six apprentices. Today that little home work-shop has grown to a great factory employing 300 women workers besides scores of others employed in minor jobs and in transport. The wool comes from the flocks of sheep which graze on the slopes of the Estrella Mountains, and the Meiriz carpets now find their way all over the world.

Underground Blaze

For several days a householder in Durham, England, smelled smoke and fumes in his cellar. Soon the earth under the house got warm and the family, fearful of what was coming, moved out. Diggers from the local gas company, wearing gas masks, dug down and at a depth of six feet found a smoldering mass of coal and ashes. Then it was recalled that this ground once was a swamp. A raised wagon road built of ashes with a large per cent of unburned coal in it covered up along with the swamp and forgotten was responsible for the fire. In some way air had got to this bed of coal, ashes, iron and sulphur minerals, caused oxidation and finally spontaneous combustion which set the whole mass afire.

Awnings Save Him

When Roy M. McDavidson, Hanover, Penn., awoke with a headache in a New York hospital he was astounded to learn he had fallen eight storeys from the window of his hotel bedroom and was suffering merely from a slight bump on the head after his long drop. Gaping holes in the awnings over the hotel windows showed at each floor, and when he landed on the roof of a one-story extension he was wrapped in sufficient canvas to form a cushion.

Invisible Glasses

Movie stars with defective eyesight have a horror of wearing eyeglasses, chiefly because it is believed they detract from their personal popularity. Many of them do wear eyeglasses, but they are not noticeable. Recently a well known screen star showed a visitor a tiny curved lens she wore invisibly under the eyelids. She stated such lenses are worn quite generally, unknown to the public, by screen and stage folk.

Young Vagabonds

At The Dalles, Ore., a telegraph operator heard moans coming from a refrigerator car parked beside the railroad station. Investigation revealed two girls, aged 14 and 16, and a boy of 12, locked inside. They had come from Lewiston, Ida., and were more dead than alive when released. They were homeless and looking for jobs.

Hobo Trick Worked

Bearing all the external marks of a hobo, a man entered a Springfield, Missouri, store and asked for the proprietor. "For only 25 cents I'll help you beautify your city," the stranger told the storekeeper when he appeared. "What on earth could you do for a quarter that would help Springfield?" the merchant asked. "I'd move on to Joplin," repiled the tramp. He got the two bits.

Turtle Still Young

In 1895, Ora Newton, Noblesville, Ind., then a farm boy of 12, found a turtle. He carved his initials on the shell and turned it loose. Recently Newton found the same turtle on a neighboring farm, his initials still plainly readable, 38 years after they were cut in its shell. Newton says the animal has grown very little during all these years.

"Knowing" Bird

Peter Arendas had his fortune told by a parrot at a fair at Tardos, Hungary. The bird picked out a card on which was printed: "You will meet your death within an hour." Arendas, much amused, entered one of the swings, lost his balance, fell and was killed.

Early Sleep Best

The old saying that "one hour's sleep before midnight is worth two hours afterwards," although ridiculed by doctors generally, has been substantiated by Dr. Theodor Stockman, principal of a boys' school in Duisburg, Germany. Blaming late study at night for students' drowsiness and lack of interest in recitations, Stockman established a rule that his pupils had to get four to five hours' sleep before midnight, then get up at 3 o'clock in the morning to do their studying. The result has been not only a great advancement in school work, but a remarkable improvement in general health of the students.

Alive After Execution

On June 2, 1930, Robert White was executed in Nevada's gas chamber at Carson City. He is since reported to be alive in an Alaska village. After the execution no one claimed the body of White, so the story goes, and it was spirited away to a house near the state prison. There methylene blue was injected into the body and oxygen administered to bring him back to life. This treatment has restored life in numerous cases of asphyxiation. According to the tale White, when fully recovered, made his way to Alaska to hide from the law. If this story is true, White technically should have no fear of the law which carried out the sentence passed upon him.

Sees Again at 85

Twenty years ago Mrs. Mary Gleason's eyesight began to fail. Five years later she was totally blind. A few weeks ago Mrs. Gleason, now 85, became ill and was confined to her bed at her home in Butler, N. J. Her daughter applied cold compresses to relieve pains in her head. After two days of this treatment, Mrs. Gleason suddenly discovered she could see again. Her vision gradually strengthened until now it is normal for a person of that age. For the first time she has looked upon several of her grandchildren born in the last 15 years.

Dyed Sparrows

With nothing better in sight to make a living, Tom Redman, Little Rock, Ark., trapped some English sparrows, dyed their plumage and sold them at high prices under odd-sounding names. Officers in disguise who got onto his game were offered the pick of his birds at $11 a pair. They found cages of birds of all colors in Redman's "bird store." In his work room were half a dozen sparrows in an improvised dryer heated by an electric bulb. Also bottles of all kinds of dyes and bleaching materials.

Santa Claus Act

After Cortez conquered Mexico, 400 years ago, the Spanish king, to salve his conscience, granted a perpetual pension to the descendants of Montezuma, the conquered ruler. These pensions have been paid ever since to a constantly increasing number of the Aztec emperor's posterity. When Mexico gained its independence from Spain, the Mexican government continued paying the pensions. Now Mexican treasury officials propose to put an end to this Santa Claus act.

Alfonso Coins Must Go

Coins which bear the head of ex-King Alfonso are to be replaced in a few weeks by the new coinage of the Spanish Republic. The head of Don Alfonso will be replaced on the face of the peseta by a female figure representing the Republic. On the reverse will be the arms of Spain. The twenty-five centimes coin will bear a symbol of the Republic of Workers with a peasant shaking hands with an industrial worker.

Non-Bobbing Barber

On religious grounds, Mr. Kasser, Brighton, Eng., barber, refuses to bob or shingle women. In his shop window he displays a text from the Epistle to the Corinthians: "If a man has long hair it is a dishonor to him. If a woman have long hair it is a glory to her." As a Christian, I could not cut a woman's hair," Mr. Kasser says. "My wife thinks as I do and deplores the immodesty and vanity of the women of today."

Wheat For Church

To help pay off the debt on their church property, members of the Methodist church at Grinnell, Kan., have leased 320 acres to be put into wheat this fall, the proceeds of the crop next year to be applied to the debt. The seedbed has been well prepared, all labor, gas, oil, etc., being donated by the people of the community. Now the big problem is to obtain 240 to 250 bushels of seed which is scarce out there.

Money Saved Him

Homer T. Berry chose to fight a hold-up man for the cash at his filling station in Chicago. The robber fired twice at close range. One bullet buried itself in the plaster. The second felled Berry. Waving to a motorist, Berry limped to the car and was sped to a hospital. The bullet was extracted from his pocket. It had torn a hole through a five dollar bill and flattened out against a lump of half dollars and quarters.

Queen's Stockings

Stockings believed to have been a gift from Queen Anne to the Countess of Dartmouth, are being shown in Sydney, Australia, at a loan exhibition of antiques. The stockings bear the royal initial, surmounted by a crown, and are a nut-brown shade. It is believed they were among the first machine-made hose in Great Britain.

Boston Once N.J. Capital

It is virtually unknown to the present generation, says Dr. Carlos E. Godfrey, State historian, but Boston, Mass., was once the capital of New Jersey. It was from 1688 to 1692 he says, from the time proprietors of East and West Jersey made absolute surrender of their powers to King James II, until they arbitrarily reasserted their former claims of jurisdiction.

What Are Your Problems?

By Mrs. S. Davis
at W.C.T.U. Rally, Dewittville

Fifty years ago the problem of dealing with Intemperance and the excessive use of acoholic drinks, resulted in the birth of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and its organization in Quebec City and Province.

As the enthusiasm spread from one community to another, many branch Unions were organized, for women felt the need of identifying themselves with Temperance work, that they might be strengthened, in defending their homes and children against the tide of Intemperance and through the different departments, much good work has been accomplished by faithful and active W.C.T.U. women.

But in 50 years many changes take place; the pioneers pass on, and the next in line are not always so enthusiastic. Modern thought and ambition has developed along the avenues of prosperity, wealth, material gain, get rich schemes at any cost.

Legislation has favored the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages. We have trusted in promises of curtailed sale, and distribution of alcoholics, but have been sadly disappointed.

Educational institutions do not always stress the value of a sound body or a controlled appetite. How many of our young people have yielded to the temptations, following cocktail-parties and other social gatherings, their will-power sadly weakened leaving them an easy prey to the enemy, thus the Brewers and Distillers increase their wealth and strength, to strangle all efforts put forth by fathers and mothers, who toil in summer's heat and winter's cold that their children might have a chance to be sober and industrious citizens. Again the speed and hurry requirements of this age, have left little time, to devote to the study of preventive work, or social problems, and this will and has provided a generation of those who are not interested and are satisfied that some one else will carry on.

Another problem that confronts us is that the daily press is always ready to advertise and advance the interests of alcoholics in a community but seldom do they give any space to our Plan of Work or the preventive agencies we support.

No organization can be active and succed in its work without money, and women must economise in this depression age, so they begin by cutting out membership in different organizations.

The W.C.T.U. has suffered from this, as some Unions have disbanded for the present, feeling they could not afford to support their membership.

Every Provincial Convention has a Memorial Service and we note our workers are passing on. Fifty years of service in Temperance work will surely have a reward, in knowing we have upheld a sober citizenship; our deeds of charity and kindness have been helpful to many discouraged ones, and through our Educational Campaign we hope to let the Light shine in and on Truth.

Seldom are we flattered but oftimes are we faulted, yet we do not allow ourselves to be discouraged, knowing that God is on our side, and we can do all things through Him.

Wealth of Quotations in Shakespeare's Work

Read a scene from Shakespeare's plays every day. Soon you can outquote everybody in your circle and aggravate them. Aren't we all struggling for superiority? What an easy way to gain it—and at the expense of only slight application. Shakespeare is the most quotable of all the human race; and every one has gone to that fount of quaint English and untarnished wit—and got his quotation wrong.

That is why we have the Shakespeare concordance and Bartlett. They are useful in finding out that what you want to quote is not in Shakespeare at all; such as "What is so rare as a day in June?" which we once attributed to Longfellow (and got seven letters setting us right); and "Spare the rod and spoil the child." Mr. Shakespeare might have said that in his mature years, after his youthful experience with Magistrate Thomas Lucy, but he did not, at least not in those words.

If there is anything that William Shakespeare did not say clothed in brilliant verbiage it would be hard to find. Read him and see. Sir Francis Bacon had no such command of his English, scholarly as he was.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

French Bread For Variety

Soften 1 yeast cake in ¼ cup lukewarm water to make a kneadable dough. When smooth and elastic, cut across the top in both directions. Have ready a pint of lukewarm water. Into this put the ball of dough. It will sink but in 15 minutes will float, a light, puffy sponge. Turn water and sponge into mixing bowl. Add 1 teaspoon salt and 5 cups flour. Stir together to form a dough stiff enough to knead, adding a sixth cup of flour if desired.

Knead Well

When the dough is stirred until it does not stick, turn onto a floured board and knead 15 or 20 minutes. Part of this time it may be lifted as high as the arms will reach and dropped onto the board with force. A very little flour may be used while kneading, but if the bread is properly mixed and handled it will not stick to hands or bowl. Cover and set aside to rise in a temperature of about 82 degrees Fahrenheit until doubled in bulk. Then turn out carefully onto board upper side down, and cut into halves. Roll these into long rolls (each will weigh a little less than 1½ lb.) Place in French bread pans, cover and let rise till light. Bake about ½ hour. When nearly done brush surface with white of egg beaten with 1 tablespoon of cold water and return to the oven. Repeat the glazing if desired. Two tablespoons of cornstarch diluted with cold water and cooked in 1 cup boiling water may be used instead of the eggs. Return to oven each time after using the paste. The starch gives it a soft crust and the egg the crisp, tough crust usually seen on French bread.

Splendid Work in Africa

The medical missionaries of West Africa have brought about a decided improvement in the condition of the natives, particularly as concerns sleeping sickness and leprosy. Government officials have made tests and reported that the percentage of the entire population having sleeping sickness virus circulating in their blood has been reduced to 2.6 per cent, and that the percentage of new cases in the entire population has been reduced to 1.35 per cent. The conclusion is that while the disease is not yet completely stamped out, it is no longer epidemic. The vigorous measures of government and missionaries have saved villages and tribes from practical extermination.

Aids in Dress Cutting

One amateur user of dress patterns finds it a great help to keep in the workbasket a bit of bright-colored crayon. With this, when she first opens a pattern, she writes upon the less familiar pieces their names. The main pieces, as front, back, and sleeves, can be instantly recognized by their shapes; in the case of others, one is compelled to look at their numbers, and then turn to the pattern directions in order to identify them. This is where a bold crayon inscription saves time, for one can see at a glance "cuff," "back inset," "belt," "facing," etc.

To Measure Hems

This amateur also finds it a good plan to use a small rule—hers is a 10-inch wooden one light as a feather—for the gauging of hems and tucks. It is much more easily handled than a tape measure, and is also very convenient for drawing lines to make sure of straight cutting when a strip of binding material is wanted, and for the marking of tucks and seams when very accurate machine stitching is desired.

Probably all amateurs experience difficulty in the handling of rayon material, because it is so wiry and "stretchy." Many have found to their dismay the two backs or fronts of a dress entirely dissimilar, the under piece having pulled away from the upper in process of cutting. This can be obviated if the cutting-out surface is covered with a piece of blanket or other rough woollen material. Upon this the rayon can be carefully laid out for cutting, and it will not slip.

"In the Lawful Money of Canada"

GOVERNMENTS, like individuals, live and learn. Thus in the terms and conditions of the Dominion's 1933 Refunding Loan it is stated that principal and interest shall be payable in "the lawful money of Canada."

For years, Dominion and Provincial Governments, went on issuing bonds payable in gold, or payable in the funds of the country in which they happened to be sold. One of the bad consequences was that last year, when the Canadian dollar was at an eighteen percent discount in New York, holders of these bonds, payable in New York, demanded United States funds (this demand came from Canadians as well as from Americans), with the result that Canada was soaked for millions of extra dollars.

With export of gold prohibited, Provincial and municipal governments couldn't ship gold to New York, consequently had to buy American dollars to meet their interest. They bought, and they paid plenty. It didn't (contrary to a general impression) mean gain for the United States, but it did mean loss for Canada. Loss at least for those in Canada who didn't hold any of the bonds.

The new loan corrects this mistake. People who purchase the new bonds must take payment for them in Canadian dollars; which is as it should be. With the world currency still far from being settled, any other scheme would be simple folly.

Colonization

IT does not fall within the province of any member of the Ministerial party at Ottawa to attempt to give any lessons to the Quebec Government in the matter of colonization. Everybody knows that the only sincere efforts that have been made up to the present time in this regard have been those directed by the Taschereau Government. On many occasions Premier Taschereau has appealed to the Federal Government to help the Quebec administration in the enormous and costly work of relieving the congestion of the urban centres by getting men who are qualified to till the soil to return to the land. But always the Prime Minister and the Minister of Colonization and their colleagues at Quebec have failed in their endeavors, through evident bad faith at Ottawa. After many vain efforts on the part of Quebec to obtain Federal co-operation, Ottawa has resolved to leave the work of colonization entirely in the hands of the provinces, which are refused the aid that would seem to be essential to the completion of an efficient plan of colonization. Ottawa seems to lack all interest in colonization; at all events, the Federal Government will do nothing to advance the work. What is executed in this respect must be done exclusively by the provinces. These are facts which the member for Compton has no right to ignore.

Less Selfishness The Need

HON. W. D. Euler, M.P., former Minister in the King Cabinet, made a rather remarkable and significant address before the London Kiwanis Club, when he urged the need of a more equal distribution of wealth, the limitation of manufacturers' profits, and the establishment of unemployment insurance through taxation of industry in good times.

While admitting them to be Socialistic ideas and though denying that he was a Socialist, Mr. Euler declared that they should be put into practice. "In a world where there is plenty, it is discreditable to think that many people are without visible means of sustenance. The depression should be taken as an opportunity to correct present-day evils. If they are not corrected, we will travel towards Socialism." He added that we are already practising Socialism to a greater extent than ever before, citing public ownership of railways, hydro-electric, water and gas systems.

In advocating a more even distribution of wealth, Mr. Euler stated that "wealth depends on labor's efforts on the natural resources of the country, and labor has not received quite the share to which it has been entitled. I believe in higher wages and would go so far as to say that it would be wise to limit profits so that only a fair share goes to manufacturers." He laid the cause of most of the world's troubles today to the selfishness of the human heart and added: "I can see the time when governments will have to interfere in business where it is a case of greater good for the greater number of people." Finally he said in regard to the introduction of new machines: "I believe in better machines, that will give the working man shorter hours and more time for beneficial recreation and time with his family."

Such statements by a man of Mr. Euler's standing, himself a large employer of labor, must give pause for thought on the part of employers generally. Agreed that many lines of industry today are suffering from oppressive taxation, low prices and contracted markets, for their products, nevertheless the fact remains that in good times the laborer in many industries did not receive a fair deal and today thousands of them in Canada are receiving less than a living wage. While political manoeuvres have played a part in the amassing of wealth by many capitalists and industrialists, the exploitation of labor has also had its role.

Human cupidity and insatiable greed have run hand in hand with the growth of Canada, industrially and as a country, much the same as in other countries, contributing in no small measure to our economic distress. Today we have the C.C.F. movement in Canada, allegedly designed to provide a Utopia for the masses. Across the border, the NRA seeks to force the employer to deal more fairly with his employee, to increase his wages and shorten his hours of work.

How much more sensible in every way if manufacturers and employers of labor generally would voluntarily undergo the change of heart necessary to provide the utmost possible benefits for their employees, to pay them a living wage and thus to improve the surroundings in which their children will be reared? Fortunately a good share of industrialists have long since recognized the truth of the saying that "the laborer is worthy of his hire." If every Canadian employer would take this view and if the government would take a determined stand against the human octopi who prey upon the public treasury, talk of socialism and communism would soon fade into nothingness.

Never Loses Interest in You

SOMEONE has well said that your home paper never loses interest in you. To this possibly you have never given a passing thought. No matter whether you like the newspaper man or not, he likes you. If he is true to his profession and publishes a paper for the people, he allows no personal matter to interfere with his work of news gathering. He may meet you as a stranger, yet along with his best and dearest friends chronicles your success and sorrows wherever you may be. Those who would forget you but for your home paper, are ever reminded of your existence by some item in the paper where you spent your boyhood days. Others may deceive and defraud you. And yet there are some in the community who are not subscribers for the home paper.

Check up Necessary Here

SPECIAL instructions should be issued at once to all Provincial and police officers to check up every headlight on motor cars. At the present time you cannot drive upon any highway without personal danger at night due to bright blinding headlights. With the dark nights and long wet evenings of the past few weeks this has become very serious. It is now necessary to use the full lights for night driving. Therefore, many of these lights are so powerful that they completely blind the approaching motorist and endanger their lives. When lights are properly focused and the right candle power used there is no danger. Many are driving with one light only and it is often so powerful that it endangers the lives of others on the highway. There has always been great difficulty about the proper regulations of headlights. Laws are writen but nothing has been done of late. Parking regulations, speeding by-laws, overloading, brakes and other parts of the traffic laws are being enforced. Why overlook this, one of the most important?

Driving against one of these blinding headlights leaves a person in a state of total darkness for a small fraction while the eyes are being readjusted from the darkness and the bright blinding light. During that period you cannot tell if you are on the road or in the ditch. You cannot see a thing that is in front of you. You cannot judge your distance. You are driving along taking a serious chance, trusting that nothing will happen. This can all be eliminated if every motorist is checked up and dealt with according to the law who drives with glaring headlights beyond a certain candle power or lights out of focus. Public voice should be raised to force the enforcement of the headlight laws. This should be done at once and every officer of the law should be instructed to check up closely all headlights. If this is known the motorists will see that they have their headlights right just as they take care not to be caught with defective brakes. Force the issue of self protection should be the attitude of the motorist and the public.

Avenues of Labor Closed to Youth

AT Newmarket, in Ontario, the Hon. W. G. Martin, member of the provincial Cabinet, declared the other day that one of the most tragic aspects of the present economic crisis was a state of forced idleness amongst the youth of the Dominion. Obviously, therefore, since employment is lacking, and since we do not know how long this state of affairs will persist, one duty, that is incumbent upon the public authorities is to endeavor to find means that will occupy the mind of the youth of the country in a healthy and helpful way. In this province, for example, we should encourage and facilitate attendance at such institutions as the commercial and technical schools, where courses can be offered in social, political and economic science in preparation for the larger life that inevitably will be opened to the youth of the province, for the period of economic depression will not be eternal.

A Familiar Prediction

PREMIER Bennett would have us believe that if the Dunning budget was restored, "within fifteen months fifty per cent of the industries in the Dominion would be ruined."

Such a prediction has a familiar ring. Indeed, much the same sort of argument was advanced by the Republicans during the presidential election of only a few months ago in the United States. The electors of that country were told that if the Democrats should attain office, grass would grow in the streets of the great cities. Far from that being the case, industry has experienced considerable recovery in the United States since the time of the advent of the Roosevelt administration and the outlook is much more hopeful than it was during the Hoover regime.

It is very often the policy of spokesmen for the one party to go to extremes in condemning the platform of the other parties. In doing so, they sometimes make themselves appear ridiculous. The public is generally able to appraise at its true worth the effect of any major proposal which may be made regarding the direction of its affairs and it is also able to evaluate the predictions which may be made by party spokesmen regarding those proposals.

The Liberal party in Canada is no more likely to commit itself to a policy which, according to Mr. Bennett, would close 50 per cent of the country's industries within 15 months' time than the Democratic party was guilty of appealing to the people of the United States on a platform which, according to the Republicans, was to have the effect of causing grass to grow in the main streets of American cities.

Has no Bed of Roses

IF there is any organization under the canopy of heaven that is expected to do something for nothing it is a newspaper. The people who read the sheet, no matter how big or small it may be, seem to have the idea that the generating force behind it savors of perpetual motion. This is contrary to the facts. Everybody seems to think that the publisher of a daily or weekly newspaper is a philanthropist. So he is. But the time comes when the philanthropist can go no further. Money talks. The philanthropist can't pay his printers out of the questionable showers of blessings that descend on his head. And even if he could the printers might appreciate much more a small financial donation. So, as Gilbert and Sullivan said about the policeman, the lot of a publisher these days is not a happy one.

Paying Cash

$10, and under, cash; over that amount twelve months' credit on approved joint notes." For fifty years these lines appeared at the bottom of advertisements of sale of farm stock, implements, etc. They are not seen any more. In their places are the two words "terms cash." This piece of information was furnished the other day by W. J. McKinney, the well-known auctioneer, who has conducted more sales this fall than in any other like period. Rarely is credit asked for at sales. More rarely is it given to persons buying stock or implements at auctions. In other days a year's credit induced persons to buy more than they could hope to pay for in the time given. Notes came due, farmers needed the money and pressed for payment. The maker and the endorser were required to secure an extension of time at the bank or elsewhere. Additional costs were incurred, and too often men became involved to an extent they had not contemplated and carrying a load under which they had eventually to give up. Credit wisely used is often a blessing to the industrious and thrifty. Employed thoughtlessly has placed many a man on the roadside. If out of the present conditions men and women learn to refrain from buying that which they cannot pay for at the time good will follow evil in every department of life. "Terms cash" are words that should appear at the bottom of sales of all kinds of merchandise, as well as at those of farm, stock and implements. What a happy place would Canada be today had we all learned to "pay as we go" when times were good.

Hints For Municipalities

PERHAPS no person in Ontario is better qualified to speak with authority in regard to the problems which face the municipalities of the province at the present time than Thomas Bradshaw, of Toronto, whose services have been commandeered to re-organize various municipalities which were in pronounced difficulties and who has succeeded in introducing reforms which have been of appreciable advantage to the ratepayers affected.

A business man of long experience and particularly adept in dealing with financial problems associated with municipalities and business concerns, Mr. Bradshaw was induced to make the following recommendations in regard to municipal administration when he spoke at a recent meeting of the Ontario Municipal Association, stating that he blieved them worthy of both consideration and application as a means of maintaining municipal record and credit:

1. Increase in municipal debt must be halted; that now existing can and should be decreased.

2. Assessment, the basis of the whole municipal structure, must be sound and almost 100 per cent revenue producing. Provision should be made in the budget for non-collectible taxes. Properties of delinquent taxpayers should be eliminated yearly and the roll freed from dead assessment.

3. The budget should be completed by January 31 in each year.

4. Expenditures for the year should not exceed cash receipts for the year. There should be no debit bank balance at the end of the year.

5. The first instalment of taxes in the year in which they fall due. The accumulation of large arrears undermines the municipality's credit and is often the indication of approaching financial difficulties.

7. Bank borrowings and bank interest should be kept down to a minimum. Bank loans should be necessary only in the first three or four months of the year, pending receipt of the first installment of taxes.

8. Current deficits should never be funded. If such a rare condition should arise, the deficit should be levied for in the succeeding year.

9. Relief debentures, if justified, should not be for more than five years, and for only 25 per cent to 50 per cent of the net cost of the year's relief.

10. Educational costs must be reduced—and they can be.

11. Local improvement debt should be incurred only when absolutely essential and well within the benefitted ratepayers' ability to pay, as well as that of the general ratepayer.

12. Public Utilities operations should yield a profit after all operating charges, depreciation, interest and principal.

13. Guarantee of bonds should not be countenanced. Subsidized bonds are not a sound method of financing.

14. Capital debt should be incurred only when a corresponding useful and necessary capital asset is acquired.

15. The instalment method of issuing bonds is the only safe and sane way of issuing debentures for municipal purposes.

16. If bonds are issued by the Sinking Fund method the annual levy must be made, turned over to the fund, invested immediately and in only the highest grade of securities.

17. Adequacy of the sinking fund should be tested annually and certified to by the auditors.

18. Municipal debentures should be payable in Canada only. It is doubtful if the added marketability in making payment in United States or Great Britain is compensation for the risks of exchange.

19. Municipalities must adhere to the terms of the debenture contract. Technical equivocation must be avoided.

20. Municipal accounting should be efficient and in capable hands. There should be a continuous monthly audit.

Food For The Lunch Box

What children eat is of utmost importance!

Not only many of the ills of childhood (decayed teeth, stunted growth, etc.), but some of the physical disorders of later life have been traced to lack of proper nourishment during the early years. Today as never before the food and health habits of children are being studied with a view to improving them wherever possible.

In Country Districts

The school lunch very naturally has come in for its share of scrutiny.

In country or small town schools, however, when no lunchroom is provided, the teachers or the parents should accept the responsibility for carrying on this important work. If it seems absolutely impossible to serve a hot luncheon, the next best thing is a hot beverage to accompany the cold lunch brought from home. This can be accomplished with very little equipment or effort, and at an extremely small cost per person.

In warm weather, cold milk can be substituted for the cocoa or soup, which are the simplest forms of hot food that can be served. There is almost no excuse for failing to provide this very simple supplement to the noon luncheon.

The noon lunch, whether served at school or carried from home, must provide food suitable to the age and needs of the children in sufficient variety and in such form as to encourage healthy appetites. Be sure and have some raw foods (fruits and vegetables) in every lunch box every day. This is vitally important

There are certain mechanical aids that help to make the food more apto the preparation of a box lunch petizing. In the first place, the selection of a container, which keeps the food in the best condition and which itself can be cleaned easily and thoroughly is necessary.

Proper Container

Of the numerous sorts of boxes and baskets designed especially for this purpose, the metal container probably has the fewest disadvantages. It protects the food from rain and snow, it can stand a great deal of abuse, and it will hold firmly glasses or jars which contain soft or semi-liquid foods. There is some danger from food spoilage when food particles or crumbs are allowed to collect in a metal container. Frequent washing in warm suds, followed by a rinse with boiling water and occasional exposure to sun and air will, however, make it perfectly safe.

Food Values

Fuel Producing Foods—Sugars, carbo-hydrates and fats; bread, potatoes, macaroni, spaghetti and noodles; cake, cookies and candy; fats such as butter, butter substitutes and lard; oils such as cotton, peanut, olive; whole grain cereals made from oats, rice, wheat, corn and barley; sugars such as cane and beet; and syrup such as corn, maple and honey.

Growth and Disease Resisting Foods—Vitamin A—Butter, cream, whole milk, egg yolk, spinach, carrots, tomatoes and cabbage. Vitamin B—Green vegetables, fruits, whole cereals, yeast and cabbage. Vitamin C—Raw tomato, raw grapefruit, raw limes, raw lemon, raw orange and raw cabbage.

Use New Pumpkin Pie For Hallowe'en Party

Whether the Hallowe'en party takes the form of a dinner or an evening party, the shiny faced pumpkin must be brought into it somewhere. For dinner, there is nothing better than a delicious new pumpkin pie made with cocoanut to give a fine, new flavor with fresh pumpkin. For the evening party, tarts with the pumpkin filling are delicious, too. But whether pies or tarts, use a light pastry that is especially adapted for shells, such as the one given here.

Pie Crust—2 cups sifted cake flour; ½ teaspoon salt, ½ cup cold shortening, ½ cup cold water (about).

Sift flour once, measure, add salt and sift again. Cut in shortening until mixture looks like meal. Add water, a little at a time, mixing with a knife or spatula until the dough cleans the bowl of all flour and pastry. Use as little water as possible. Roll dough ⅛ inch thick on slightly floured board. Fit loosely on pie plate. Turn edge and prick with fork. Bake in hot oven (450) for 15 minutes. Makes one 9 inch two crust pie or twelve 2½ inch tart shells. Use ½ recipe for one pie shell only.

Delicious Pumpkin Pie—Use ½ recipe given above to make pie shell and line plate with pastry. Then fill with this fine flavored custard:

1½ cups premium shred cocoanut; 2 cups cooked, mashed pumpkin; 1 cup sugar; ½ teaspoon mace; ½ teaspoon cinnamon; ½ teaspoon allspice; 3 tablespoons butter, melted; 3 eggs, slightly beaten; 2 cups milk, scalded.

Combine ingredients in order given and mix thoroughly. Pour into pie shell. Bake in hot oven (400) 15 minutes, then decrease heat to moderate (350) and bake 30 minutes longer.

A lady novelist claims that she can dress for a dance in five minutes. It would, of course, take her much longer than that to put on some clothes.

Diamond Drilling Most Tedious Task in World

Perhaps the most tedious job in the world, especially if measured by visible results, is the drilling of holes in diamonds. A hole .0004 on an inch in diameter takes two weeks of continuous drilling 24 hours a day, says Pathfinder Magazine. During the drilling fresh diamond dust and oil are dropped upon the spot where the steel needle is attempting to bite into the gem.

No machine being delicate enough, the work is all done by hand or foot power. The steel needle remains stationary, while the diamond to be drilled is mounted on a spindle and rotated rapidly.

These drilled diamonds are used as dies for drawing the tungsten wire filament used in incandescent light bulbs. No hole has ever been bored fine enough for the filament of a three-watt lamp, so these must be etched in acid to reduce their diameter. The town of Trevoux, France, has practically a monopoly on diamond drilling.

Meaning of "Fast Color"

Materials known as "fast color" may not necessarily be fast under all conditions. The direct rays of the sun affect colored materials as well as our own skin when exposed.

Guaranteed "fast color" materials will with fair treatment give satisfactory service during the life of the materials. Such materials are trade-marked and may be purchased by the trade name.

Vat dyes are used by the manufacturers of such trade-marked materials. They are the most stable dyes for textile purposes. They are harder to use and much more expensive.

Such materials will cost two or three cents more per yard, but give one the assurance of satisfactory color throughout the life of the material.

The modern dying industry uses the most satisfactory mordants to set dyes. The color setting treatments of salt, vinegar, or sugar-of-lead solutions are not effective with present-day methods.

A colored man got his nerve together and took a flight in an aeroplane. As he climbed out after the ride, he turned to the pilot and said: "Suh, Ah has to thank yuh fo' both dem rides."

"What are you talking about?" said the aviator. "You had only one ride."

"No, suh," returned the passenger, "Ah done had two—mah fust and mah last."

A Newspaper Advertisement That Cost $500.00

A country merchant was rather skeptical as to the value of advertising in a weekly newspaper. He was willing to pay the price to find out, and this piece of curiosity cost him $500.

Bruce Brewer, vice-president of the Ferry-Hanly Advertising Company, is authority for the following test of the value of advertising made by a country merchant who thought no one read his ads.

To convince him, the editor suggested writing an ad with a lot of copy in it, such as the merchant believed "nobody read," "and somewhere, buried in the copy, offer a dollar bill to every one who reads the ad and brings it to your store. If you do that, I will run the ad free, just to prove folks do read advertisements."

In spite of the warning of the editor that it would cost money the merchant accepted the challenge.

The ad contained so many words that it had to be set in type even smaller than that of the regular reading matter, but, buried away down in it was this offer. "To every one who brings in this ad we will give a one dollar bill." That was all that was said about the dollar.

The newspaper had not been out an hour before the store was full of people waving copies of the ad. The experiment cost that merchant nearly $500, but it proved to him, as nothing else ever had, that subscribers to the local weekly read it from end to end and everything in it.—California Publisher.

Gleaner readers read the advertisements. Your store has fall merchandise to offer. Have your store goods advertised regularly in the Gleaner.

According to statistics grocery and hardware stores should spend from $1.00 to $1.50 per week for every $100 worth of groceries sold during that week. A clothing store should spend from $2 to $3 per week for every $100 worth of merchandise sold during the week.

Gleaner advertising costs $7.70 per column.

Athelstan by "Adda-Lyne"

The monthly meeting of the United Church Woman's Missionary Society was held Thursday afternoon in Munro Hall. The subject being "Jesus, the Babe," being the first of brief studies of some of the personal characteristics of Jesus. The monthly leaflet readings on Living Issues in China were given by various members. Plans were made for the Annual Thank-Offering meeting. The Temperance Secretary gave several important items from the monthly news letter.

Saturday afternoon a Mission Band Rally was held in Munro Hall when members of Bands from Huntingdon, Gore, Brooklet, Kensington and Athelstan were present. The local Sunshine Mission Band under the leaders, Mrs. G. Boyce and Mrs. W. Wilson presented a short programme of songs, readings and an exercise which deserves special mention, "Church Building" was very interesting and instructive. Miss Marguerite Cairns, president, presided. The special speaker of the afternoon was Miss McKenzie of the Church of All Nations, Montreal, who gave a splendid and suitable address to the children assembled. Rev. J. Woodside presented two life membership pins and certificates to Nora Wood and Edna McHardy. Also certificates for memory work were presented to Jean Barrie, Edna McHardy, Thelma and Allen Stewart. While the offering was being received, a most appropriate solo, "Working together" was rendered by Mrs. Reese. Refreshments and a social hour was then enjoyed by over one hundred children and older friends. The local Band had a splendid display of work on exhibition which will be forwarded to the Supply Secretary, Montreal.

Miss Bessie Cairns of Hemmingford, a returned missionary from China, addressed the congregation of the United Church on Sunday afternoon. She gave a most interesting account of the work being done by herself and other missionaries and doctors at the port of Kongmoon.

Ten members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union attended the School of Methods, held at Dewittville on Wednesday of last week. The two sessions proved very interesting and helpful. There was a splendid attendance.

Mrs. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. F. Hutchings and family spent the week-end with friends in St. Lambert.

Messrs. James Ross, Harold Wattie, Leslie Elder and Mr. J. Ferns, Huntingdon, left Friday morning for Chicago, where they will attend the Century of Progress Exhibition.

The many friends of Mrs. Peter Munro will be glad to know she has returned home from the hospital, Montreal, and is still steadily improving.

Hemmingford by Mrs. A. F. McKay

Within a week there have been three fires of mysterious origin in this village. On Friday evening, the 13th, Mr. M. B. Fisher had a stack of hay destroyed by fire, the origin of which is as yet unknown. On Friday evening, the 20th, the Presbyterian Church sheds started to burn, this fire having been started in the rear of the sheds. Origin still remains a mystery. Little damage was done as it was noticed shortly after the fire had started. On Saturday evening the 21st Mr. Andrew Cascaden's work shop was set on fire, also from the back of the building. Mr. Cascaden, who is a carpenter, had some tools stored there, also many other useful articles, many of which were destroyed. The building was razed to the ground. It is understood that an investigation is under way.

Mr. G. E. Clayland and Mr. W. B. Stewart of Montreal were Sunday visitors here.

Mrs. E. E. Bourdon has renovated her house at Barrington.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Lane of Montreal were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. McKay.

Birthday Party at Aubrey.—

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Moore entertained at the dinner hour Thursday in honour of their mother, Mrs. Wm. Moore's eighty-third birthday. Friends from Riverfield and Beechridge were present and enjoyed a very pleasant afternoon. Mr. Thos. Farmer, brother of Mrs. Moore, who is on a visit home, after an absence of fifty-five years spent in California, was one of the guests, and enjoyed the renewal of old acquaintances.

Glad to report that Mr. Sherman Robb, who has been laid up with blood poison in his thumb, is on the road to recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Cameron and family of Verdun, were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Robb.

Mr. Russell Gruer has gone to Montreal to attend the United Church Theological College for the coming session.

Mr. and Mrs. John Bruce, Paul, Miss Sally and Mr. Angus McDonell left for their home in Concord, Mass., after spending the past week, visiting friends in this locality.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Bruce spent Sunday in Lachine, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Nigel Bruce.

Mrs. W. Robson of Huntingdon, was a recent guest of her daughter, Mrs. Angus Black.

Riverfield by Mrs. J. McLeod

Birthday Celebrations.—

A party of young people were entertained on Tuesday by Mrs. McLeod in honour of her daughter, Elizabeth Armstrong, who attained her majority. Miss Armstrong was the recipient of several choice gifts from her many friends. Included in the party was Miss Reta Robertson, who reached her 15th birthday on the previous day. Mrs. Gerald Roy planned a surprise party at her home, to which many of the schoolmates of the guest of honour were present. Miss Robertson also received many tokens on this occasion.

A very pleasant surprise awaited Miss Reta Robertson on her return from school at the home of her sister, Mrs. Gerald Roy when several of her girl friends gathered to convey their good wishes on her 15th birthday. Before lunch was served they presented her with a beautiful hand bag, and other gifts, which Reta appreciated very much, and thanked them for their kind remembrance. After lunch they played games until a number of boys joined the merry bunch of girls, and a few hours of real fun was enjoyed by all. The usual Hip! Hip! Hurrah! was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Roy for their kind hospitality.

Obituary

The Late Clarence G. Storrie

Clarence G. Storrie passed away peacefully at the Laurentian Sanatorium, Ste. Agathe, Que., at midnight, Friday, Oct. 20th, 1933.

The deceased was born on February 20th, 1888, the youngest son of the late John Storrie and Elizabeth Grey Miller Simpson of Scotland. He came to Canada about twenty years ago and worked in Greenshields Ltd., Montreal, until 1930, when he was forced to retire on account of ill health. The last three and a half years of his life he spent in Ormstown, where he became a familiar figure and made the acquaintance of many kind friends. His wife Muriel Hastie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hastie of Ormstown, and several brothers and sisters in the Old Land, survive him.

The funeral held on Monday at 10.30 at St. Paul's Church was largely attended showing the esteem in which he was held.

Obituary

The late Mrs. John McCaffrey

One of Trout River's oldest and most esteemed residents, Mrs. John McCaffrey, died on Thursday, Oct. 19th, after an illness of four weeks.

The deceased, whose maiden name was Bridget Brady, was eighty-five years old. She married John McCaffrey, by whom she had one son John, whose loss left a void in her heart that could never be filled. Her husband died some thirty-four years ago. During the many years she lived at Trout River, Mrs. McCaffrey endeared herself to a large circle of friends and acquaintances by her many sterling and lovable qualities. Being of a charitable, energetic, and deeply religious nature, she was always prominent in church and social activities, in fact she spared neither time, energy nor material aid to further any good work that came within her field of action.

She leaves to mourn her loss a step-son, Patrick, in San Diego, Cal., two sisters, the Misses Catherine and Margaret Brady, two brothers, Charles, all of Trout River; and William, of Lancaster, Ont., and a large number of nieces and nephews.

Mrs. Alfred Langlois of Tupper Lake, N.Y., is spending a week with her father, Mr. Cleophas Richer.

On 17th of October, an enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Léger, on the return from a honeymoon trip to Alexandria and Ottawa. A large number of people greeted their return by spending the night in dancing and singing. A wonderful lunch was served by the groom's mother, Mrs. James Léger. Congratulations are extended to the young couple, wishing them much happiness, good health and success in the future.

Moving Picture Show.—

On Friday evening, representatives of the Ford Motor Company of Canada and Cunard Steamship lines, entertained a small but very appreciative audience, with a picture trip through the immense "Rouge" plant in Detroit. The stupendous amount of machinery was shown in detail and attention was drawn to the various divisions, by a "talkie" machine. The Cunard pictures showed a trip overseas, visiting London, Paris and Holland. To those who have the habit, either by force of circumstances or otherwise, of staying in the home burgh, had their education considerably expanded. After the show Mr. E. Clark and his associates, Messrs. D. Mitchell, W. Stavert and D. Theoret were entertained at the McLeod home.

Riverfield People Present Program at Hemmingford.—

A party from Riverfield attended the Presbyterian Church supper, in the Town Hall, Hemmingford, on Thursday night, also contributing to the program, the Rev. Mr. House being chairman. Mesdames J. S. Carmichael, E. Robertson and S. Reddick presented the dialogue, "Making Jelly for the Minister." Miss E. Armstrong, selections on the Hawaiian guitar, Miss R. Robertson, a dance, "The Sailor's Hornpipe," and a recitation by Mr. R. J. Keir, "Over the hills to the poorhouse."

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Burnett of Notre Dame de Grace were Thursday visitors at the home of Mrs. J. McLeod.

Mr. Morley Bennett and the Misses Sadie and Mary Bennett af Calumet and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gorham of Montreal, accompanied Mr. Raymond Carmichael on a visit to his old home on Sunday.

Mr. P. "Bossie" Fernandez, who spent the past few months at Erindale, the summer residence of Mr. R. H. Gordon paid a farewell visit on Sunday to the many friends he had made, during his stay. Mr. Fernandez contemplates returning to Jamaica in the near future, taking with him his bride, the present Miss Grace Gordon.

Howick by Mrs. J. R. Younie

The Howick Women's Institute will meet on Saturday afternoon next in the Fertile Creek Hall. Mrs. Henry Wilson of Athelstan Provincial President of the W.C.T.U. will be the chief speaker. A meeting of the White Ribboners will follow and mothers are asked to bring their children to this meeting. Mrs. Reese, also of Athelstan, will speak to the children.

Mrs. Wood of Athelstan spent the week-end at the home of Miss Florence Cameron. On Sunday morning she sang a beautiful solo in the United Church, entitled, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say."

Rev. D. A. McLennan of the Bible Society preached on Sunday morning in the United Church, at St. Louis de Gonzague on Sunday afternoon and at Georgetown in the evening. He was entertained at the manse by Rev. and Mrs. A. B. B. Moore.

Mr. W. L. Gebbie and Miss Gladys Gebbie of Brome spent the week-end visiting with friends in Howick, Miss Gladys remaining for a few days with her friend, Miss Margaret Younie.

$135 Realized at Church Supper.—

The chicken-pie supper and sale of work held in the United Church on Friday night last was a decided success. All the articles for sale were soon disposed of. About $135 was realized.

Miss Christina Cameron was home for the week-end.

Miss Clark, Miss Corrigan and Mr. and Mrs. Lyall Hynds spent Saturday in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Younie and family spent Saturday in Montreal, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Corkran.

The German Government officially notified the general secretary of the League of Nations tonight of its withdrawal from that body.

Thereby it carries out a decision announced last Saturday even though reports had intimated that she might remain.

Only a few hours before the communication was sent to Geneva, the officially-inspired Diplomatisch Politische Korrespondenz asserted that "it will be easy to find a basis of an understanding for regulating the equality question" if other powers define their disarmament intentions.

Simultaneously Chancellor Adolf Hitler demanded his Government be accorded equal rights, said Germany wanted only peace and maintained that the Reich has heavy domestic burdens.

Automobile licence plates in the province of Quebec next year will show black figures on a background of aluminum grey, it was learned at Quebec today.

The plates will also be slightly longer than usual, but not so broad. On the left, "Que." will be written vertically, with "34" on the right of the plate with the number between.

The new plates will be available from February 1, 1934, and motorists must have them on their cars within a month from that date.

From present indications the Canadian National Railways will close the current calendar year with an operating profit of at least $7,500,000, which means that the publicly-owned road will contribute that sum toward meeting the interest charge of about $57,000,000 on the debt due the public. This compares with a net operating revenue for the calendar year 1932 of $5,647,334 and for the previous year of only $2,313, according to the compilations contained in The Canada Year Book.

As the interest on the debt due the public must be paid either out of the operating profit of the railway or out of the federal treasury, or both, it is interesting to observe the trend in both the operating results of the Canadian National Railways and the interest on the public debt owed by the railway. In 1923 there was a net operating revenue of $12,543,443 and in that year the interest burden was $35,041,380; in 1925 the net operating revenue rose to $24,702,775 and the public debt interest increased to $40,438,235; in 1926 the operating net was $36,213,349 and the interest was $39,197,223, although the latter had been reduced as the result of an agreement whereby the interest at 4 per cent on $34,927,098 G.T.P. debenture stock was cut to 2 per cent.

President Roosevelt suddenly opened the way today for relations between the 16-year-old Communistic Government of Soviet Russia and the United States

In a matter-of-fact letter to Mikhail Kalinin, President of the Soviet Republic, Mr. Roosevelt 10 days ago invited him to send a representative here "to explore with me personally all questions of standing between our countries."

On Wednesday, Kalinin cabled acceptance of the invitation and designated M. Litvinoff, Commissar for Foreign Affairs, to come to Washington to talk with Mr. Roosevelt. A date for the conference remains to be set.

Today in his office packed with newspapermen, the President read his letter and the reply.

At the same time in far away Moscow the exchange was made public. It was the first time since the overthrow of the Czarist regime in 1917 that the Governments of these two nations had been in direct communication.

Fire of unknown origin tonight almost wiped out St. Joseph's University, causing damage tentatively estimated at $1,000,000. The main building and "Old University" unit were levelled. Only the new chapel, skating rink and gymnasium survived. The institution was under jurisdiction of the Holy Cross Order. Dr. H. A. Vanier, Superior of the University, was unable to state the amount of insurance carried.

The fire spread to nearby residences, destroying three homes and threatening business establishments. Firefighters from Moncton, Sackville, Amherst and other towns converged upon this village.

No one was reported injured.

The university had 300 students this year. They were in chapel when the fire broke out and filed out quietly. All their personal belongings were lost.

Activities at the university for this term, at least, seemed ended. All students whose homes are located outside St. Joseph were taken to Moncton for accommodation.

A well-known French Acadian university, St. Joseph's has graduated men famous in many walks of life.

The Week-End

With an eye toward repeal that officials blieve imminent, the United States Government is drafting its tax programme in the expectation of receiving a minimum of $500,000,000 in taxes from distilled liquors during the first year of legal sale.

This gross income, however, would be offset by an automatic reduction of $227,000,000 now collected through special taxes that would end with prohibition.

To raise the amount the programme calls for would require a tax on domestic liquor ranging between $2.50 and $3 a gallon. The domestic tax now stands at $1.10 a gallon.

Representative Hill, of Washington, chairman of the House ways and means sub-committee said that a tax of $2.60 a gallon appeared to be about as high as the committee could go with safety to prevent bootleggers and rum-runners fron. underselling.

The naked right foot of a girl, found Sunday between two large rocks in the water 175 yards from the mainland at Peninsula Gaspe, in the County of Gaspe, Que., has been identified as that of Marguerite Ascah, 17, missing from that village since August 31, according to information received at Royal Canadian Mounted Police headquarters in Fredericton, N. B.

As yet, the discovery has failed to explain the fate of Marguerite and her cousin, Maude Ascah, 15, for whom Quebec police have been searching since their mysterious disappearance.

The foot, found by Marguerite Ascah's mother, an aunt and a cousin, has been forwarded for analysis to Dr. Rosario Fontaine, Montreal, Medico-legal expert, for the province of Quebec.

Chancellor Hitler, making his first speech directly to the public since Germanq's withdrawal from the League of Nations was tumultuously cheered at Regensburg, Germany, Sunday as he criticized jingoistic patriotism and reiterated Germany's desire to live peaceably but on equality with the rest of the world.

The occasion for his speech was an assembly of storm troops at Germany's Hall of Fame in the countryside near Kelheim, Bavaria. A tremendous ovation greeted the Chancellor when he went on the speaker's platform.

"We who experienced 4½ years of war," declared Hitler, "are best qualified to know its terrors. We also are best qualified to understand the difference between hurrah patriotism and the genuine spirit of unity."

President Roosevelt Sunday night announced the creation of a Government market for gold and an easing of the gold embargo in telling the United States of his recovery policies with a firm assertion that "we are on our way."

Standing firmly by his recovery programme, the President rapped the "chiselers" of the National Recovery Administration; assured an increase in agriculture prices with the words "if we cannot do it one way we will do it another;" promised a maintenance of Government credit and "a sound currency;" and announced the dollar would be revalued after a restoration of the price level.

Mr. Roosevelt put the operation of the Government market for newly mined gold under the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

"Whenever necessary to the end in view," he disclosed, "we shall also buy or sell gold in the world market.

The Hidden Chateau

A Canadian Story by Frank Giolma

"It was then I told my lawyer. He urged that I put the whole matter into the hands of the police but could not guarantee that if I did so my name would not leak out. When I refused to follow his advice he suggested that one of his clerks, a man who had more than once successfully handled delicate matters for other clients, should see Mrs. Bonnington and make some new arrangement. I agreed and some four weeks later was informed that a definite sum had been agreed upon and that it was to be paid in future through my solicitor.

"That arrangement has been—if I may use the word in such a connection—honorably adhered to by both parties until recently when I suddenly received direct and extortionate demands from Mrs. Bonnington, whom to my amazement and horror I recently met at a friend's home under the name of Mrs. Smyth.

"The announcement of my son's engagement to Miss Lorimer was the opportunity she or rather the man behind her, for the work was not hers, had been watching for. You may not believe me, but a man who had been accepted as one of ourselves, a member of this club Arthur Selwyn, the man who has been shot up in the trail cabin approached me, saying he did so as an intermediary in the hope that he might be able to save me from disgrace.

"He showed me letters, all forgeries, but very clever ones purporting to have been written by men to Mrs. Smyth and which he stated she was determined to use in court against me in an action for breach of promise unless I kept my word and married her. The letters had been written with devilish cunning, enough intimate details of my life being mentioned to make them carry conviction and, of course, were in many respects of such a nature that any decent man would do anything to stop their publication.

"I came here, not knowing she was going to be present, determined to quietly decide on some action. Two courses appeared open to me, I could pay her through Selwyn more hush money; but then I knew she would never be satisfied until she had taken my last dollar The other course was to take her at her word and marry her, but you will, I am sure, realize that I felt that to be impossible. But I had to decide on something as I felt it was no longer right to keep my son in ignorance of the affair or to allow Miss Lorimer to take our name with such a cloud hanging over it.

"When I arrived and found Mrs. Smyth here I asked for her price. She named a figure that was prohibitive and demanded my consent or the public announcement of our engagement within forty-eight hours. If I did neither she was going to put the matter in the hands of her lawyer and he would begin action against me at once.

"I had to give my answer tonight. I did so. I killed her, and so I place myself in your hands."

"You mean, Mr. Haliburton," Cartwright remarked quietly "that you shot Mrs. Smyth?"

"Yes, I shot her and am willing to pay the penalty."

"Your confession, Mr. Haliburton," Cartwright said, "naturally falls into two separate sections: the first being your association with Mrs. Smyth; the second, her death Now, Mr. Haliburton, I ask you, apart from your alleged shooting, is your confession true or just a story told for some hidden motive? Take the first part: is that true, Mr. Haliburton?"

"Every word of it," Mr. Haliburton replied "and—"

"One minute, please," Cartwright interrupted. "Now as regards the murder of Mrs. Smyth. How did you kill her?"

"I shot her," Mr. Haliburton answered.

"With what?"

"Her revolver."

"Well, let me tell you, Mr. Haliburton, that she was not killed by a shot from that revolver. That revolver was not fired. She was killed by a bullet from a high-powered automatic."

"And besides, Mr. Haliburton," remarked, "you were sitting in a seat some eight chairs to my right in the front row when the shot was fired. I happened to look that way and could see you clearly by the light from the stage. You did not leave your seat."

Mr. Haliburton looked confused. "But—" he began to protest.

"Why waste our time?" Cartwright remarked abruptly. "If the first part of your story is correct it may help us and help considerably, but the rest of your story is just an attempt to hinder us in our duty; why, I don't know. But that's a serious thing to do, Mr. Haliburton, a very serious thing to do, let me warn you." There was a knock at the door. "Just see who's there, will you, Jack?" Cartwright said, turning to Hilton.

Hilton opened the door and George Haliburton entered. He stopped for a moment on seeing his father, then came forward towards Cartwright. He was clearly laboring under great excitement.

"What is it?" Cartwright asked.

"My father's been telling you he killed Mrs. Smyth," he said.

Cartwright nodded. "He has," he answered.

"He didn't, I did," young Haliburton almost screamed.

"Don't be a darned fool," Cartwright replied. "You were standing just in front of Hilton and myself, holding the stage curtain ropes and never moved out of our sight even for a moment. Neither you nor your father had anything to do with her her death. But I see how it is. Your father thought you had killed her to save him and you thought he had killed her to save your name, and so each of you wanted to hang to save the other. I admire your motives, but there's no need for either of you to sacrifice himself. I think you both had good cause to wish her dead. Nobody could blame you for that but neither of you had any part in her murder.

"Personally, knowing what I do, I feel rather sorry for her. She was the sport of fate and fate will have to answer for her deeds, good and bad. So far as you two gentlemen are concerned, her death comes without doubt as a happy release. But as I was saying just now to your father, what he's told us may be of very great help in the arrest of the murderer. And— But there's somebody else at the door."

Young Haliburton opened it and turned to Cartwright: "It's Tommy Durrant," he said. "He wants to see you."

"Good heavens," Cartwright ejaculated. "He's not going to confess, too, is he?"

"Oh, no," young Haliburton replied with a rather sheepish laugh. "But he says he's something he wants to report to you right away, as he thinks it is important."

"Good!" Come in, Durrant," Cartwright called out. "Oh, you two gentlemen had better remain," he remarked to the two Haliburtons. "Now then, Durrant, what have you discovered?"

"As you know, Cartwright," Durrant said, "I've been on guard along the west balcony. I've made a point of examining every room except number fourteen. That's where the sick waiter is and Dr. Tomlin keeps the door locked.

"Just because I couldn't go into it, that room interested me. Every time I walked past the door I could hear the poor devil moaning inside the room. I thought that perhaps I was disturbing him, so next time I went by on tip-toe. Didn't make a sound, you understand. And when I did that the man on the other side of the door didn't make a sound, either. Then not thinking what I was doing, when I came back again along the balcony I forgot to walk on my toes and as I passed his door there he was moaning again. That made me think, so I took off my boots and crept right back to his door. At first I didn't hear a sound then I distinctly heard two people talking. In whispers, you understand, so that I couldn't hear what they were saying. But there were two men talking in the sick waiter's room.

"Naturally I thought that Dr. Tomlin must be in there. But then I didn't see how that could be; I mean, how the doctor could have come up and gone in without me seeing him, unless he had deliberately dodged in behind my back, so to speak. Anyway, I thought I'd make sure so I tried the door and asked: 'Is Dr. Tomlin there?' Nobody answered, but the whispering stopped and in a second or two the moaning began again.

"I started to come down to tell you and met Dr. Tomlin coming up. I told him what I had heard. He said I must be mistaken. But he said I was to come down and tell you, and if there was anything wrong he'd come here or telephone from one of the rooms. He's up there now, and I am sure there's somthing fishy about room fourteen."

"That's the best news we've had so far," Cartwright exclaimed. "Something definite at last, eh, Hilton? And the doctor's up there now, Durrant?"

"Yes, he was going straight to room fourteen, he told me."

"Good! Then we'll go up there and he can let us in." As Cartwright spoke the telephone bell rang. Hilton took up the instrument.

"It's Dr. Tomlin," he said. "He wants to speak to you, Haddie."

"Cartwright speaking, Doctor," Cartwright said. "Yes, what? What's that?" Cartwright threw the instrument down and started at a run for the door. "Come on" he called out, "all of you. The doctor was going to tell me who killed Mrs. Smyth when somebody stopped him. I could hear them struggling." As they all ran after him from the room along the passage and up the stairs on to the balcony Cartwright suddenly stopped and held up his hand for silence.

"The rest of you guard the door; he's in room nine; while Hilton and I go inside," he said in a whisper. "If anyone tries to bolt, shoot them down. If the door's locked we'll break it in." But the door of room number nine was ajar. As they pushed it wide open standing with revolvers ready for any eventuality they saw that a terrific struggle had taken place there. Chairs and tables had been overturned. The telephone still lay on the floor. Near it on the polished wood they saw smears of blood. They went into the bathroom. One look showed that the struggling men had gone in there. They examined the room carefully, looking in the cupboard and under the bed, but could find no trace of Dr. Tomlin.

"You're sure he was phoning from here?" Hilton asked.

"He said so." Cartwright replied. "And besides, you can see it was here the struggle took place."

"Well, he's not here now. What about room fourteen?" Hilton said.

"That's where we're going," Cartwright replied.

"You people guard the door again just as you did just now."

The door of room number fourteen closed, but the key was in the Yale lock. Cartwright opened it and entered with Hilton. The room had all the meticulous tidy primness of a sick chamber.

Beside the one bed stood a small table on which was an orderly array of medicine bottles. A cheery fire threw out a glow of quiet comfort.

In the bed, on the white spread of which there was hardly a crease, lay a man. He was on his back, very still, staring up at the ceiling. He did not turn his head towards them when Cartwright and Hilton entered nor when Cartwright spoke to him.

Cartwright stepped over to the bed, peered down at the man and then turned to Hilton standing beside him. "Shot in the forehead," he said, "and only a few minutes ago."

A quick search of the room in which there was little furniture took only a few minutes. Again they found nobody and no trace of the man who had killed the waiter.

"All the rooms up here are occupied except ours, Durrant's and those of the other fellows on guard," Hilton said. "He must be in one of them."

There were ten rooms then empty. They started with the nearest working their way along the balcony, Durrant and the Haliburtons keeping guard outside. Nash, Landon and Skeuse came up and being hurriedly told what had happened started searching the rooms at the other end. The tension increased as room after room was entered and searched without result. At length only one remained.

Skeuse's hand trembled as he unlocked the door which they had found locked. It was Landon's room and so he claimed the right to enter first. Every man held his gun ready. Durrant who was known to be a crack shot followed Landon as closely as possible.

A hurried glance confirmed by a quick, but thorough search showed the room was empty and nobody had been there.

"Where's the doctor got to?" Durrant exclaimed as they stood outside on the balcony, again utterly baffled.

"It would take a powerful man to overcome him," Cartwright said, "and an even stronger man to carry him out of the room and along the balcony. And anyway, where's he carried him to? If he's still alive where's he got to and if he's dead where's his body? Will you Durrant and Nash, keep guard up here while Landon and Skeuse send the rest of the guards and Morden down to Skeuse's office. I'm going to organize another drive of the whole of this chateau. Every room and corridor and the cellars, every place is going to be dragged."

CHAPTER 10

"I have always been taught that the impossible never happens, that there is a reasonable solution to every problem that the supernatural does not interfere in our lives, that ghosts no longer walk the earth," Cartwright remarked when he came into Skeuse's room at a few minutes after six to find the other searchers waiting there for him. All had the same report. None of them had found any further trace of the murderer let alone the murderer himself. "We know," Cartwright continued, "that the man is here in this building and has been all the time and yet he comes and goes and kills and kidnaps as he pleases.

"Just realize this for a moment. During this night we've searched every nook and corner in this chateau upstairs and downstairs and although now he's got to hide Dr. Tomlin as well as himself we have not found him."

"The murder of that poor devil of a waiter is what I can't understand," Landon remarked. "Whenever I tried to guess who had taken Mrs. Smyth's jewels and killed Selwyn I always ended up wondering about that man in room fourteen. He was the one unknown quantity. When Durrant told about hearing voices in his room I felt sure I was right and he was the man we were looking for. But now he's been shot and phut goes my theory."

"I was thinking of the waiter myself," Cartwright replied, "for the same reason as you were and also because I felt he had the opportunity to commit the crimes if he had a pass-key to his room. But then I've suspected at one time or another pretty well everyone in the building. In fact at one time I thought you were all in league and implicated in Selwyn's death. But I've dropped that idea long ago. Personally," Cartwright added rather bitterly, "I rather wish he'd kidnap me next for that seems to be the only way in which I shall ever see him."

"Well, as for suspecting us," Nash remarked. "You need not apologize, for at first I felt certain that you and Hilton were not policemen at all, but a couple of gunmen who had taken the real policemen's places. I once read something like that, or it was in a play. You see we expected two policemen and if by some means or other two gunmen could have stopped them coming and taken their places, they could play the very devil with us here. No telephone and no way of any of us getting out or anyone else getting in. You see what I mean. And as for the Selwyn murder, why we've only your word for it. It all fitted together like a jig-saw puzzle until Mrs. Smyth was murdered and, of course, I knew neither of you had done that because I saw you both sitting in the hall at the time. But I'll bet that every man and woman in the chateau has a theory, and they are all just as right or wrong as yours and mine."

"I think," Miss Dwight said, "that Constable Hilton should tell us what he is think about so profoundly. He has been very silent, but I have been watching him and feel sure he has evolved some scheme or theory that we ought to hear about."

"Hilton you have the floor," Landon said.

"Well, I don't suppose my thoughts are worth anything," Hilton replied. "But here they are. We've all been searching for one man. We've taken it for granted that the man who took Mrs. Smyth's jewels killed Selwyn, killed Mrs. Smyth, killed the waiter and has kidnapped Dr. Tomlin. That is a pretty large order for one man. But suppose three or four, or even only two or three, were working together? You see how they would be able to help each other. Take the kidnapping of Dr. Tomlin for instance. Given two or three men instead of only one and it seems much more reasonable. From what I've heard of Mrs. Smyth and more especially Selwyn, I can quite believe there are plenty of people here who would have felt justified in killing them, feel they were doing so in self-defence. Remember, Durrant heard two people whispering in room fourteen. Perhaps the waiter was one of a gang and was killed by his partner for some reason or other. And again, there's the man who came right into the hall and gave the answer to the charade. He might have just killed Mrs. Smyth and then got down into the hall. There would have been time, but I don't see why he should take the chance he did. But if there are two men one might have given the answer to the charade just to give the murderer a few seconds longer in which to escape before the curtain went up.

"Or take the search we've just been making. We've examined every room and cupboard and the cellars and, well, every place in which a man could possibly hide, and haven't found a trace of the man we are looking for. Now so far as I am concerned I've got to own I simply can't believe we shouldn't have found our man if somebody wasn't hiding him. He himself may not be a member of this club or a guest, but I believe he's being helped by some of the members or guests.

"There, Miss Dwight, are my wonderful thoughts. Do you think they are as valuable as you expected?"

"Oh, yes," Miss Dwight replied. "I didn't expect you to tell us the names of the murderers if there are more than one. But I am glad you've said what you have, because I am sure you'll be making a mistake if you work on the theory that the murderer is one of the members or guests, or even the staff. Of course, both you and Sergeant Cartwright are at a distinct disadvantage in not knowing anything about any of us. Naturally at first you searched among us for the murderer. As I have told you already, I am sure he's not one of us and that none of us is helping him in any way. He's a stranger to us, but a man who's familiar with the chateau. He was the man as I've said before who gave the answer to the charade. And now since I last saw you I think I've found out something else about him.

"I'm by nature a looker-on at life. I like to wander about talking to this person and that. I get enjoyment in this way and make lots of acquaintances among all sorts and conditions of people. During this visit I've discovered a most interesting character, the chief pastry and bread cook. A woman, and Scotch, as you may have guessed from the excellent cakes and cookies. But I suppose such things are beneath the notice of men.

"Well, interesting character number one is the Scotch cook, and interesting character number two is her helper, an undersized very English girl from the county of Essex.

"Scotch and English. If you know anything about those nationalities you'll realize the immense interest I derive from watching those two, shall I say, get on together.

"As a matter of fact, they like each other and work well together. At least they did so until two or three days ago. But now there's a really serious rift between them. Somebody has been stealing cakes, bread and food generally from the larder, the locked larder, you understand, and Mrs. Abercrombie, the cook, has accused Mary, the helper, and Mary is up in arms and refuses to do any more work until Mrs. Abercrombie proves her to be a thief or apologizes.

"Now I'm sure Mary hasn't taken the things. Whatever could she want to steal bread and meat for when she can take all she wants openly.

"They called me in to deal with the matter, a kind of female Solomon come to judgment, this evening. I told them what I thought and that was that somebody else was taking the things and taking them at night.

Healthy ... Happy ... Wise!

COUNT those friends of yours who get a lot of happiness out of living. Health helps them see the bright side of things—smooths over the every-day bumps. They're happy because they're healthy.

Downcast days frequently follow common constipation. It may cause headaches, loss of appetite and energy. Yet it can be overcome usually by eating a delicious cereal.

Laboratory tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN supplies "bulk" and vitamin B to aid regularity. ALL-BRAN is also a rich source of blood-building iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that in leafy vegetables. Special processes of cooking and flavoring make Kellogg's ALL-BRAN more palatable than ordinary bran.

Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. Chronic cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Get the red-and-green package at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

IMPORTANT!

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN—because it is all bran with only flavor added, gives you the generous amount of "bulk" needed to promote proper elimination.

It is recommended as much more efficient in relieving constipation than part-bran products which cannot contain as much "bulk."

Keep on the sunny side of life

Ideas For Hallowe'en.

Here are some ideas for games culled from various sources which may help you in your preparations for your Hallowe'en party:

Black Cat Contest—Black paper cats are scattered about the floor. At two opposite ends of the room the children line up, forming two equal sides. One member from each side is blindfolded and told to walk about the floor. When a bell is rung (any other signal may be used) he stops. If he is standing on a cat, he gets a point for his side. The first two players return to their lines. Two other players, one from each side, are blindfolded and carry on the same procedure. At the end the winning side is the one having the most points.

Blow Out the Jack-o'-Lantern—On a table is set a jack-o'-lantern with a lighted candle. The players are divided into two sides, one side being called the ghosts and the other side the witches. Each player, one at a time, is led to the jack-o'-lantern, and after he has been blindfolded, is turned around three times and told to blow three times. If he succeeds in putting out the light, he scores a point for his side. At the end of the game the side having the most points wins.

Pass the Pumpkin—The players form a circle, and all except one are given small orange paper pumpkins. At the given signals each player passes his pumpkin to the right and keeps on passing those he receives. Every few seconds a signal is given, and the person who is empty-handed at that time drops out of the game. One pumpkin is taken out of the circle, so that again there are pumpkins for all players except one. The game continues in this manner. The winner is the one who remains in the circle longest.

Pumpkin Seed Race—The players are divided into two teams. At one end of the room are placed for each team a heap of pumpkin seeds and a table knife. The leader of each team puts as many seeds as he can on his knife and carries them to the goal at the other end of the room where he drops them into a cup. He then returns and gives his knife to the second player on his team who carries seeds on his knife, and so on. When all have finished the seeds in the cups are counted, and the team that has the most seeds wins.

Find the Cats—Small paper cats are hidden about the room. The players march around in a circle to music. The music suddenly stops, and all search for the hidden cats. In a few seconds the music begins again, and the players rush back to the centre of the room. Only those who have found a cat march in the circle; the others must drop out of the game. Thus the play continues until all the cats are found. The winner is the one who is last to drop out of the circle.

Wild Goose Chase—Get every one in line, then pass slips of paper, each one containing a stunt that must be performed without getting out of line. One might read, "Hang your cap on the andiron"; another, "Take a volume of Edgar Allan Poe from the book-shelves." Other good ones would be, "Tie your handkerchief to the newel post." Pick up a safety pin from the floor," and "Open a magazine on the table to page 10." Of course the hostess will be the leader of the chase and will see that the line of march goes over the route where the stunts are done. But remember they must all be done in passing. If one fails to see the safety pin in time, for example, or does not get the handkerchief tied to the post he must pay a forfeit later in the evening.

Now that every one is in the spirit of the evening, let pandemonium reign. Slips are again passed; this time each one contains the name of some popular song. The hostess conducts with a baton. As the baton is raised each person starts to sing the chorus of his song, going through with it if possible. Those who laugh or fail to know the words must step out of the crowd and sit down to listen.

For the Vegetable Tournament, place as many beans are there are guests in a hat. Six or eight of them should be colored black by dipping in ink. Those drawing the black beans must fight the duels. With much ceremony the hat is passed a second time but this time only to the contestants. It contains two potatoes, two turnips, two carrots, and two green peppers. Those getting the same vegetables fight each other. Each one is given a teaspoon and a silver knife. The game, which is just as much fun for those looking on as for the players, is to hold your vegetable on your spoon and try to knock off your opponent's with your knife.

For the relay race, the crowd divides into two sides, the Nuts and the Cranks. At the far end of the room place a card table containing two bowls of nuts and two nut crackers. There should be as many nuts in each bowl as there are players on a side, preferably Brazil nuts or pecans, which are hard to crack. The leaders of the two sides run to the table, take a nut from their special bowl, which is labeled, crack it then take a whole nut and run back the length of the room to their side. There they give their nut to the next one in line. He takes it to the bowl, cracks it and gets his whole nut. This continues until every one on one side has cracked a nut. The side finishing first of course wins.

No matter how wild or different a Hallowe'en party may be there must be fortunes. And where would you be more likely to look for them at a wild party than in the jungle? So you must organize a hunt. Around the rooms, hide little animals from a Noah's ark or animal crackers, each one with a fortune tied to its neck with ribbon, red for boys and blue for girls. If a boy finds a fortune with a blue ribbon he may leave it where it is or show it to to a girl. But every one must have a fortune.

Here's hoping you will enjoy your party.

How to Hide Patches

It is often necessary to lengthen a garment. Most people do this by taking out the hem and applying a facing. Sometimes this works very nicely and is all that is necessary, but with many kinds of materials the fold of the old hem shows plainly and proclaims to the world that the garment has been lengthened.

A good way to do is to apply a strip of contrasting materials, using other bits of the same color elsewhere, not to make it look pieced. Usually it is better to scallop or notch the piece applied to make it look more like a fancy trimming. This idea can be applied to coats for children or grownups, as well as for dresses.

Use the same idea when necessary to patch a child's dress. Sometimes a big piece is necessary to hide a huge rent. Over this put a butterfly of contrasting material, a big fancy pocket or a ruffle.

When button holes fray out and are just big holes, make them into bound button holes. If a piece of the same goods cannot be taken from a seam, use contrasting material or braid.

This works nicely for men's overcoats. Often a coat is threadbare right at the seam but not bad elsewhere. The seam can be ripped out and made just a fraction of an inch smaller so that the threadbare place is taken out.

Typhoons and Cloudbursts

Typhoons have produced some of the world's most remarkable cloudburst floods, writes Charles Fitzhugh Talman in Asia Magazine. Perhaps the most disastrous cloudburst on record was the one that occurred in the Kii peninsula of southern Japan on August 19, 1889, during the passage of a typhoon. The resulting flood drowned 1,500 persons and caused immense destruction of property A typhoon also brought the heaviest 24-hour rainfall ever measured, on July 14-15, 1911, when 46 inches of water fell from noon to noon at Baguio, the summer capital of the Philippines, starting huge landslides that buried portions of the famous Benquet road. But a second typhoon repaired some of the damage wrought by the first; for it washed away most of the debris; reducing, it is said, by $250,000, the cost of rebuilding the road.

YOUR LIVER'S MAKING YOU FEEL OUT OF SORTS

Wake up your Liver Bile

—No Calomel needed

When you feel blue, depressed, sour on the world, that's your liver which isn't pouring its daily two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels.

Digestion and elimination are being slowed up, food is accumulating and decaying inside you and making you feel wretched.

Mere bowel-movers like salts, oil, mineral water, laxative candy or chewing gum, or roughage, don't go far enough.

You need a liver stimulant. Carter's Little Liver Pills is the best one. Safe. Purely vegetable. Sure. Ask for them by name. Refuse substitutes. 25c. at all druggists. 53

The Hidden Chateau

So they are friends again and tonight are taking turns to watch the larder, sitting in the dark there with a cook's natural weapon, a rolling-pin, ready for use.

"When I peeped in there half an hour ago Mrs. Abercrombie was on guard. Nobody's been near the larder so far, but she told me that the head linen maid told her late last night that comebody's been stealing linen bed sheets from the linen closet. Of course, I'm just as sure the thief in this case is not one of the club staff as I am that Mary's not been stealing cakes and buns and bread and cold chicken. A murderer has got to eat, and so I can understand the thefts of food, but I have to own I can not see why he should take white linen sheets."

"Well, it's getting very near to Christmas," Nash remarked, with a laugh. "Maybe he's going to drape himself up as a ghost and spring out on us or something like that. He's taken so many chances and got away with them, I expected he thinks he can't be caught."

"If so, we'll have him soon, now," Landon said. "That's how most criminals get taken, isn't it, Cartwright? They get careless and make a slip. I believe Miss Dwight's right in everything she's said. But the stealing of those sheets certainly intrigues me. I think, Cartwright you and Hilton are doing mighty good work, good solid police work, you understand, but I'd like to have one of these 'detectives of fiction or real life here to see what he'd do that we hadn't thought of. I mean for instance, what what would he make of the theft of these sheets. Very likely that would give him the clue to the whole matter, and all he'd have to do would be to arrest his man. All of which is interesting but not very helpful, eh." Looking at his watch with surprise and then at the clock on the mantelpiece. "Seven o'clock, and morning at that. A tub and breaker would appear to be in order. If there's no objection, Cartwright, I'll go along now and then relieve one of the fellows on duty."

"Good," Cartwright agreed, getting up as he spoke, "I think it would be a good idea if we all acted on that suggestion. it seems we've got to play a waiting game, anyway," and without further delay they all followed Landon except Skeuse, who said he had routine duties to attend to but would meet them later in the grill-room. When Cartwright and Hilton went there Miss Dwight was already sitting alone at a table set for four.

"Reserved for you and Tommy Durrant," she said. Durrant sauntered up as she spoke. "And I've not only kept your places," she continued, "but I've ordered breakfast for each of you as well."

"Daring woman," Durrant exclaimed, "do you realize you have rashly attempted the most difficult task a woman can undertake? Whether you have succeeded or not we shall know when the waiter appears."

"One out of three is pretty good average in a gamble or blind speculation" Miss Dwight replied. "And surely I know enough about you three to diagnose the breakfast wants of at least one of you. I am getting on, you know, and feel I really must begin to study the whole duty of a wife"

"Ah, now we shall soon know the worst," Cartwright remarked as a waiter approached with tray. "You know, I feel as if my very soul were going to be laid bare to the public gaze. Watch, look listen," he added as the waiter began placing the different plates and dishes before Durrant, Hilton and himself.

"Miss Dwight," Durrant said, as he lifted the different covers, "you are a mind-reader. Grapefruit, oatmeal, eggs and bacon, toast, marmalade and coffee. You've certainly hit the bulls-eye this time. When I'm seriously considering settling up with my creditors and settling down in life, you will hear from me."

"No doubt Miss Dwight full appreciates your rather fulsome praise, Durrant, Cartwright remarked. "But at the same time, I think even 'you will agree the ttsk was not so very difficult. Bacon and eggs, porridge, toast, marmalade and coffee. Why, Durrant there are actually hundreds of thousands, of men eating identically similar breakfasts all over the world. Which, of course, means you are, so to speak, stock size, if you understand. No striking individuality, Durrant.

"Now look at what the lady has ordered for me. Orange juice, a small plain omelette, toast and coffee. Nothing coarse about that, Durrant, rather the outward and visible sign of a highly refined character. Miss Dwight, I certainly must congratulate you on the wonderful manner in which you have read my very complex personality. You obviously recognized that I am no ordinary man and by doing so, prove that you are also no ordinary woman. As a result, you can safely ignore any overtures made by Durrant in the certain knowledge that you will hear from me in due course."

"All of which is very pretty and that sort of thing," Hilton said. "But look at me," throwing out his chest. "Miss Dwight realizes that I am a caveman, a he-man, a movie hero; the great masculine character that has stalked through poetry and the drama since the beginning of time; the man whose deeds have been sung by bards and pictured by cameras; the man who has been worshipped by flappers of all ages and spinsters and married women of all countries and climes, the man who does not remove mountains by faith, but by sheer brute strength and who, of course, is so handsome that even the gods are jealous of his beauty. A demi-god in short. And see what this most discerning lady has ordered for me in place of the usual sacrificial feast. Scotch oatmeal, smoked Alaska black cod, a lightly done tee-bone steak with mushrooms and French-fried potatoes and coffee.. Nothing effeminate about that. Miss Dwight, I feel it my bounden duty to prove by my actions here and now how well you have divined my heroic character. You are certainly a fit bride for a hero, and as soon as I have found and slain the dragon or his present-day equivalent, I shall come and drag you by the hair to my robber lair, that is, if tresses are in fashion again by that time. This shingling is distinctly hard on the caveman stuff."

"Bravo, Hilton," Durrant said. "I never thought you'd be as effective in the council chamber as you are on the field of action."

"Jack's one of those quiet strong men," Cartwright replied, "whose good qualities only become apparent when other men quail and blench with fear."

Elected Director

E. W. KNEELAND,

of Winnipeg, President and Director Kneeland Grain Company Limited of Winnipeg and prominent in the Canadian Grain industry who has been elected to the Board of Directors of North American Life Assurance Company.

"All of which is very nice," Miss Dwight remarked. "But I would point out that despite hot water, plates and dishes, these wonderful meals I have ordered will be spoiled if you men don't finish talking and begin eating. I've finished my meal of dry toast and tea, so with your consent I'll smoke and look on with pleasure while you all enjoy the fruits of my handwork or thoughtfulness." She produced her long amber holder and leisurely inserted a cigarette.

"I must certainly put a special mark against today in my diary," she remarked. "Three proposals before breakfast. That might very well be a record. Of course, I need not mention the reason for these phenomenal outpourings of love. Much better to let my descendants think when they read my words that they were tributes to my transcendant beauty. Ah, here comes Mr. Skeuse. He is looking for you, Sergeant, but judging by his face he is not bringing news of further murders or kidnappings. I suppose that sounds rather callous. But if I don't keep a stiff upper lip and refuse to let myself realize that people are being killed I think my nerves will give way," she added with almost a catch in her voice.

Skeuse came up to their table. "You'll be glad to hear that it stopped snowing at about two o'clock this morning," he said, "and a quick thaw has set in. Liable to rain now at any time. I've got four men out breaking the trail as far as the cabin. The drifts will be too deep past that to tackle for a day or so. But I think they'll get to the cabin." He leaned forward towards Cartwright and lowered his voice so that only those at the table could hear. "They are pulling up a small bob-sleigh with them to bring Selwyn's body. The carpenter's fixing our big horse-sleigh ready to take all three out just as soon as the trail's possible. I suppose you could act as coroner and hold an inquest, Sergeant, but I thought you'd rather have it held at Parksville where they'll be buried."

"Quite right," Cartwright agreed. "The men are going to see if they can fix the telephone wires but I expect they'll be down at three or four places where they can't get at them until tomorrow," Skeuse continued. "So far as I know everyone's going to leave at the first opportunity. You can't blame them, can you? What's worrying me is the atmosphere here. I mean it's not good for the club or the members to feel they have got to sit in silent mourning, and yet one doesn't like to suggest they should carry on just as if there had been no tragedies, does one?"

"Well, that's what we're doing," Cartwright replied, "and after breakfast I think we'd better circulate among the others. Badminton, cards, anything is better than hysterics, and we're liable to have those on our hands if we don't do a little organizing. We've got to think up some way of getting everyone to begin. The rest will be easy. What do you say, Jack?" turning to Hilton.

"Why not start in with a bang, so to speak," Hilton answered. "Do something in which everyone's got to take a hand, ladies and men?"

"That's the idea. But what?"

"Say a tug-o-war in the big hall? Everyone to take a hand, including the staff. We could make up teams, married men and women versus singles, staff versus members and guests and as a climax I'll offer to pull against any two men on a thirty-foot rope. There's nothing like a tug-o-war to shake people up and when that's over we can break up for badminton or bowls or the gymnasium or what you like. I feel we've got to force the others to take part at first."

"Good. Will you arrange for the rope Skeuse and the rest of us will gather the others in the big hall. In about an hour eh? Arrange about the guards, Durrant. They've got to remain on duty."

If anyone had harbored any doubt as to the reception the tug-o-war contest would receive, such were soon dispelled. At first some of the men seemed to hang back from participating, but just so soon as they realized their women folk were included, took up the suggestion with enthusiasm. The majority obviously grasped the reason for the contest and determined to do all in their power to make it a success. When they eventually gathered in the big hall at a few minutes past ten it was learned that the married men had wagered six hundred dollars on their team to win in three straight pulls and that this sum had been covered by the singles. All the members, their wives and guests took part on one side or the other, Morden acting as umpire.

The first pull went to the singles after two minutes. As they got ready for the second, a man wearing a mackinaw coat and holding a hat in his hand came into the hall.

"That's Henderson, the man in charge of the trail-breakers," Skeuse said to Cartwright. "I think he's looking for me. I told him especially not to come in here, as I didn't want the club members to be reminded in any way about that affair."

"Why not? Ask Morden to tell him to wait outside until we're through," Cartwright replied.

Skeuse did so and Morden went and spoke to Henderson, returning to umpire the second pull, which went after four and one-half minutes to the "married."

Immediately the pull was over, Morden came unostentatiously up to Skeuse.

"I think, Mr. Skeuse," he remarked in a low voice, "you ought to see Henderson as soon as this contest is over. He has a rather important report to make to you and Sergeant Cartwright."

"Will it wait until then?" Cartwright asked.

"Oh, yes. I do not think three or four minutes will make any difference," Morden replied.

"Then let's go ahead in the usual way," Cartwright answered. "If we hurry or look worried, people will begin to be suspicious and the good effect of this 'do' will be wiped out."

Although both teams were feeling the strain of the two previous pulls, they fought with even greater tenacity in the last. For some seconds despite the fervid exhortations of their captains neither team would give or could take an inch the teeter remaining stationary above the chalk-line. Then it sung towards the "singles" only to come to a stop and then move slowly back towards the centre and over the same ground and then the "married" team seemed to suddenly gain new and irrestible vigor and the "singles" were pulled ignominously over the line and taken at a run half way up the hall.

Asking Hilton to organize the next contest and to carry on until they returned Cartwright and Skeuse went quietly out to meet Henderson in the secretary's room while the rest of the gathering were still laughing and protesting together.

"Something gone wrong?" Skeuse asked. "I suppose there must be, or you wouldn't have come into the great hall."

"Yes, Mr. Skeuse, there's something seriously wrong," Henderson answered. He was a heavily-built man who spoke slowly. He was not the type of man who is easily flustered or excited.

"Well, what's happened? Not another murder?" Cartwright asked.

"No, it's not like that," Henderson replied. "Kind of strange, Mr. Skeuse, what my old lady would call ghostlike."

"Well, why not sit down and tell us in your own way," Cartwright suggested. "Tell us everything. You are in charge of the trail-breakers, are you not? Well, tell us all that's happened from the moment you started out this morning. That's the idea, isn't it, Skeuse?"

"Yes, do that Henderson," Skeuse said.

"Very good, Mr. Skeuse," Henderson said. "I took Phillips, Rowland and Naylor with me. Our orders were to take the bog-sleigh up to the trail cabin and bring Mr. Selwyn's body back. Phillips and Rowland had used the sleigh last and said they'd left it in the little barn where it's always been kept. So they went to bring it up to the trail but couldn't find it. They were both sure they'd taken it back to the barn. Pretty hard to find anything left outside in the deep snow and so when we couldn't see it anywhere I thought I'd best come and tell you. Just as I was starting, Naylor saw the end of the sleigh sticking out from a drift on the west side of the chateau a long way from where it ought to have been. Of course, we thought they'd mislaid it and forgotten and so started off to break our way up the trail to the cabin.

"It was hard work, dirty wet sloppy work, the snow all slushy so as you couldn't walk on it or through it, but we got up to the cabin all right. I saw at once that we couldn't go any further, yet. The drifts haven't thawed up there and would be right over a man's head, so I didn't worry any more about trying to go past the cabin, Mr. Skeuse.

"You remember you gave me the cabin padlock key and told me I'd find the door locked. I knew you'd said that because I had the key in my pocket. But when we got to the cabin the padlock was hanging open on the door. The door was shut you understand, but not locked."

Skeuse looked at Cartwright as if he expected some comment from him.

"I am absolutely certain Hilton and I shut the door and the padlock was locked," Cartwright said with conviction.

"Well, it wasn't locked when we got there," Henderson replied. "The door was shut, you understand, but not locked.

"Of course, I thought there'd been a mistake, but as the door was shut, didn't think it would matter much; so we arranged the tarpaulin sheet and blankets on the sleigh and opening the door went in to bring Mr. Selwyn's body out. But there wasn't any body there, Mr. Skeuse. The chair was where you said it was and there was some dark stains on the floor, but Mr. Selwyn's body wasn't there."

"You're sure—" Skeuse began, but Cartwright interrupted:

"Wait a minute Skeuse," he said. "Nobody could make a mistake in a matter like that." Then to Henderson: "You are certain the sleigh had been moved or rather Rowland and Phillips are sure they didn't leave it where you found it this morning?"

"They're careful men, both of them. And you'll understand, we did a lot of talking and thinking about the matter as we came back. When they'd last used the bob-sleigh they'd been hauling stones on it and that was before the snow came. But when we found it this morning it was half way up the snowdrift with lots of snow under it as well as on top, so it must have been taken from the little barn after the snow began to fall."

"All of which makes it quite clear," Cartwright said, "that somebody's been ahead of us and brought Selwyn's body down from the cabin to the chateau. I wouldn't be surprised to hear he'd held a funeral service right in front of us," he added in a bitter voice.

"Now we know why he took the white sheets," Skeuse remarked.

"Yes, he thinks, and plans everything, doing what he wants with the orderly precision of fate" Cartwright agreed. "Well, there's only one thing to do as we are obviously not heaven-sent geniuses, and that is plod along after him, hoping he will trip up sooner or later." Suddenly turning to Henderson: "You're sure you can't put the telephone wire up today?"

"I'm afraid not," Henderson replied. "But, of course, we could try, if it's that important."

"It is. Listen, I'm a rich man and the son of a richer. I say that so that you'll understand that I can do what I'm going to promise, although I am only a police sergeant. Now, Skeuse, I want you to witness what I'm going to say. If you and your three men, Henderson, get the telephone wire up so that I can get through to Vancouver by six o'clock tonight, I'll give them two hundred and fifty dollars each and you five hundred."

"We'll do our best," Henderson replied looking doubtfully at Cartwright's uniform, "but that's a lot of money to promise. If I tell the others and there's any trouble—" he added.

"Don't you worry about the payment," Skeuse interrupted. "I will vouch for that," with a laugh. "Sergeant Cartwright doesn't think as much about such sums as you'd think about as many cents."

"Then I'll go and get the others, have a bit of lunch and get that wire up if it can be done. Thank you, gentlemen," and he hurried away.

"Hadn't we better go and see where the sleigh was hidden" Skeuse asked.

"Yes, we'll go now," Cartwright replied.

As they walked carefully through the snow round to the west side of the chateau, following in the trail made by the men that morning, Cartwright said: "Skeuse, how did you know I was good for that money?"

"I don't know if I ought to tell you, but Colonel Richards told me who you were when he said he was sending you up here. But it's only fair to say he mentioned that it made no difference and under no circumstances was I to let you know he'd told me. So don't give me away when you see him."

"Oh, well, that's not so bad." Cartwright replied a little more cheerfully. "You see I want to play this game off my own bat and dad's money and influence keep butting in."

"I admire you for that. And you've certainly got a wonderful chance in this case, haven't you?"

"Chance? If so, all I can say is I've made a sorry mess of it. Why this man, whoever he is, simply runs rings round me; does just as he likes and makes a joke of the Interprovincial Police, Skeuse."

COULD NOT DRESS HERSELF

"For neuritis I am using Kruschen Salts" writes a woman of 60 years. "And they are a real benefit, for I could not dress myself sometimes, my left arm was so painful. I take Kruschen every morning, and the pain has now gone. I was recommended by my doctor to take salts of some kind that suited me, and I find Kruschen is the best. In fact it is wonderful. I feel ever so much better, and I shall always take it. I am 60 years of age, and have not felt so well for years."—K. P.

The pains of neuritis and sciatica are a symptom of deeper trouble—the same trouble that causes rheumatism, gout and lumbago. They are a sign of an impure blood-stream. They show that poisons have crept into the blood.

Kruschen is a combination of six natural salts, which ensure internal cleanliness and keep the blood-stream pure. New and refreshed blood is sent coursing to every fibre of your being. Then, neuritis, sciatica and kindred ills all pass you by.

Blood Testing Helps Sales.—

In a recent letter Mr. R. B. Faith, Director of Extension for Holstein-Friesian Association, states that during the past month four carloads of blood-tested cattle were sold to New York State and that possibly three more carloads will go out before the end of October. The work of blood-testing has been progressing rapidly in Ontario and it is expected that by the end of the year there will be 200 herds under Federal supervision. The work has had favorable results so far, with losses not exceeding 10% and many herds passing through clean of Bang's Disease. The Extension Department is desirous of establishing blood-testing areas in Quebec and will have interesting announcements to make in this connection in the near future. The first week of October the Extension Department were commencing work on twelve herds in Oxford County and will later enter the counties of Brant, Wentworth and Perth.

$125 Raised at Kensington Church Supper.—

The supper and entertainment in connection with the Kensington United Church, which was held in Kensington Hall on Thursday evening was largely attended by friends from the surrounding district, and many from Malone, Howick and Ormstown. Supper was served to nearly 400 people, and the ladies are to be congratulated on the success of the undertaking. Rev. J. H. Woodside acted as chairman, and called on the Revs. T. F. Duncan, of Franklin, C. A. Haughton, Dundee, P. McK. Sampson, Athelstan, J. H. Miller, Huntingdon, who gave short addresses. Rev. F. Cotnam, Constable, N.Y., was present and delighted the audience with one of his crayon sketches, "The Call of the North," while Mr. Audley Anderson and Miss Marjory Salter assisted in the program with a short play. Miss Cora MacFarlane presided at the piano. Many thanks is extended to all those who contributed in any way to make this supper such a success. Proceeds of the evening amounted to $125.

The Kensington W.M.S. held their Thank-Offering meeting on Sunday morning in the church, and were fortunate to secure the services of Miss Bessie Cairns, returned missionary of Kong Moon, South China, who gave a general outline of the work done in that district. The choir rendered the anthem "So send I You," suitable for the occasion. Rev. J. H. Woodside was present and conducted the regular service, introducing the speaker, Miss Cairns.
