Vol VII. . . . . No. 50

Monday, March 1, 1875.

The steadily growing popularity of the free delivery system is very clearly set forth in the statistics relative thereto. We learn that from 20,000 per week the deliveries have regularly increased, the number for the week ending Feb. 20th being over 44,000, or more than double the number delivered when the system was first put into operation. People find the Post Office a most convenient medium for communications hitherto entrusted to a messenger or made personally. Boxes or drawers are now almost wholly rented by firms. The pressure upon this department has been thus greatly lessened and the clerks, before overtasked, are now able to keep pace with the work. The receipts of the Office are expected to show an increase of at least $30,000 at the end of the year. As time goes on, and especially when the Office is transferred to the new building, we may expect that the service will be performed in a manner leaving little or nothing to be desired. The public will greatly facilitate matters by: 1st, Addressing letters, &c., clearly, correctly and fully; 2nd, by adopting the street door letter-box.

Passing from local to general postal arrangements one cannot fail to wonder at, and be thankful for, the very complete system of mail routes which has grown up as the Dominion has extended and been settled. That a letter may be posted in the remotest settlements of the East with the assurance that it will be promptly transmitted to its address in the Pacific Province—all for three cents—may surely be considered one of the triumphs of modern civilization. But, efficient as the service may seem, the Postmaster-General thinks improvements are possible, and with that idea he has brought in a Bill embodying several amendments to the old Act. The propositions affecting the public may be briefly stated as follows:

The Postmaster-General will have increased powers to prevent the Post Office being used by swindlers, such as the "Claremont, Daniels & Co," whose nefarious doings were exposed by the STAR last year. Upon proof that such persons are getting remittances through the Post Office, the Postmaster-General is to be authorized to direct that all mail matter directed to them be returned to the senders with the word "Fraud" marked thereon as reason of non-delivery to its address. We should say this wholesome provision will cause operators of the "Claremont, Daniels" type to give Canada a wide berth. To effectually spoil the "little game," however, the power asked by the Postmaster-General should be extended to managers of Express Companies. It has been objected that such power would be apt to be abused, but we are inclined to think that the objection is due more to a desire to find fault, than from any real belief that the clause would be availed of otherwise than to frustrate the schemes of swindlers.

The Bill also seeks to make the payment of mail matter compulsory. This is a most reasonable proposition. In their dealings with the Post Office the public get more for their money than in any other transaction, and it is surely not asking too much to expect that the Department shall be certain of getting the trifle asked for the service, and that without having to go to as much trouble, what with collecting and bookkeeping, as if the amount was hundreds or thousands of dollars, instead of one, two or three cents as the case may be. The postal service of a country should at least be self-supporting. That it is not so in Canada is largely due to the losses and large expenditure for book-keeping, &c., entailed by the credit system. The objection raised to the prepayment clause "will not hold water." The proposition that underpaid matter be not transmitted might perhaps be amended by requiring the payment of double the deficit when such matter is delivered. Very few letters exceed half an ounce, and we venture to say that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred where a letter exceeds that weight, and is not adequately stamped, the neglect is wilful, and with the idea that the Post-office can stand being cheated a little. As with the non-prepayment system, this underpaying habit is one that it is well the people should give up. It might be well to adopt the fine system for one year, after that making full prepayment obligatory.

The proposed change in the postage on newspapers we heartily endorse, though here also we would recommend that a year be allowed to elapse ere the new rule is enforced so that publishers might re-arrange their subscription rates on a basis alike fair to themselves and their subscribers.

The bill proposes that publishers shall prepay the postage on newspaper and magazines at the rate of one cent per pound. At present the postage paid by a subscriber for a daily paper is $1 20 per annum, whereas by the plan of prepayment by weight, the postage would cost him only about thirty cents. The postage on a weekly paper would, under this rule, be reduced to about six cents. All that we have said in favor of the prepayment of postage on letters is equally applicable here. We notice a disposition on the part of some of the country papers to cry out against this proposition, but the objections raised are quite untenable and appear to be grounded in some measure upon a misinterpretation of the clause. The compulsory prepayment of the postage would be a powerful argument for publishers to use in support of a similar demand upon their subscribers. We are sure publishers would be very glad to exchange the long credit system for that of prepayment, and we are equally sure that a better chance to effect that change than that offered by the provisions of the new postal law will never occur. Newspapers are now so cheap that the humblest dweller in the land can afford his weekly record of the world's doings, and the habit, so prevalent in the case of country papers, of shirking the payment of a subscription for years together is quite inexcusable, and one that ought by no means to be encouraged. If a paper is worth having it is worth paying for.

Another welcome amendment is that fixing the rate of postage on books, documents, manuscript, samples and such like at one cent. per quarter of a pound.

Such, we believe, are the main provisions of the proposed new law. In these, as throughout the Bill, the evident aim of the Postmaster-General has been to benefit the public and bring the working of this most important Department to a business-like basis. Since the day of his appointment Mr. McDonald has evinced a laudable desire to improve the postal service as was most plainly shewn by the prompt manner in which the free delivery system—so long advocated in these columns—was put in practice in this city.

THE CHURCHES.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH.

The Rev. Gavin Lang preached in this Church yesterday morning, taking for his text St. John, v. chap. and 6th v.: "When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?" The reverend gentleman preached an admirable sermon, dwelling chiefly on the question in the latter part of the verse, "Wilt thou be made whole." Practical Christianity was enlarged on, and the duty of giving to the support of the General Hospital (the occasion being the annual collection for that institution) most powerfully enforced. In the evening Mr. Lang also preached, and a collection was taken up for the same institution.

ST. PATRICK'S.

The retreat for young men, in connection with St. Patrick's Church, opened last evening, when Rev. Father Burke, Redemptorist, of Quebec, preached, taking for his text the 26th verse of the 16th chapter of the Gospel of St. Matthew: "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and suffer the loss of his soul." No words could express the inmost joy of his heart which he felt in being called on to address them; he had often longed for the happy moment to arrive since he first received the invitation, and though here in one sense as a stranger, still there was another sense in which he was no stranger, for God knew how his heart warmed towards them with the fullest and deepest sympathy. He came to speak to them upon the most important subject which could engage the mind of man,—not worldly affairs, nor matters of business nor worldly science, but the truths relating to salvation—the same truths which Almighty God, the Infinite, Eternal and True, had revealed to them, and which His infallible Church upon earth taught. There was in this world a certain treasure, so precious and so great that nothing else on earth could be compared with it, surpassing all material treasures, gold, silver, lands, &c., earthly and destructible, sooner or later, to pass away, and inevitably to be surrendered at death, when men must bid an eternal farewell to all that this world holds dear. He wished to consider the treasure which passed not away, enduring for ever and for ever, of its very nature indestructible—their immortal souls; and in order that they might realize this, and at the same understand the great importance of the salvation of the soul, he would first consider what had been done to insure its future well-being. In the first instance, if they opened the pages of ecclesiastical history, they would ascertain how the martyrs of the church, who had shed their blood and died in testimony of the Faith, understood the value of the soul; some were hewn in pieces inch by inch; others burned, like St. Lawrence, on a gridiron; or stoned to death like the first martyr St Stephen; or speared to death like St. Sebastian; or beheaded like St. Paul, or tortured to death with red hot irons, suffering every torment which the mind of man could imagine, or even demons devise—and yet they suffered willingly, because they, understanding that they had a soul to save, were prepared to undergo every sacrifice and suffer the most cruel torments, rather than be unfaithful to God, losing their souls for ever.

Having related the story of the martyrdom of Pope St. Clement, who spurned with a smile of disdain the offer of the Roman Emperor—wealth in profusion and the second place in the Empire—if he would recant, death to follow refusal, replying, "You may torture, imprison, and put me to death, but never can I give up my allegiance to my God and my Saviour Jesus Christ." He stated that to neglect salvation was to court eternal ruin, and the triumph of the enemy of their eternal souls, the Devil, of whom St Peter advised: "Brethern, be sober and watchful, for your adversary, the Devil, goeth about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." Their enemy, Satan, watched them by day and by night, without ceasing, slumbering not, ever vigilant in order to entrap their souls in mortal sin, and thus ensure their eternal ruin. He studied in the most minute manner their separate characters, striving to learn their various weak points, if one stratagem failed trying another; tempting one with worldly ambition, luring another to crime, enticing one by the sin of drunkenness, and another by the vile sin of impurity; one to a total neglect of religion and carelessness with regard to the fulfilment of his religious duties, and another by saying, "You can continue to live in mortal sin and at enmity with God, and when you grow old, or come to your death-bed, there will be time for repentance;" seeking in every possible manner to blind and deceive, knowing the value of the soul and how dear it was to the God that made it. The angels of heaven watched over the soul and were interested in its welfare, in which relation they had the testimony of the Divine Saviour Himself, who said "There shall be joy before the angels of God upon one sinner that doth penance"; and what should he say of the interest which Almighty God Himself, the adorable Trinity—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—had in their souls? From all eternity God had thought of and loved them, because He knew that He would create them. What a thought was this? He had then been the object of God's eternal love from all eternity. He had been interested in his welfare, with an infinite, boundless, eternal and unbeginning love. God the Father had designed from all eternity to create them, and from all eternity loved them; God the Son, the second person in the adorable Trinity, designed to redeem them, and coming down upon this earth was born of an humble virgin in a lowly stable, living a poor, mortified and despised life, suffering poverty, hunger and cold, despised even by the very people among whom he chose to be born, and finally subjected to the greatest indignities, scourged, blasphemed, spat upon and nailed to the cross on Calvary's height, where He died to save their souls. God the Holy Ghost, the Holy Spirit of light, wisdom and truth, was also interested in their souls, into which He descended at the moment of baptism, when they became temples of the Holy Ghost, and, in a special manner, endowing them with especial gifts at the holy sacrament of confirmation. God Almighty left upon the soul the grand impress of His Divinity, and as there were three distinct persons in the Trinity, so were there three distinct powers in the soul, originally and wonderfully endowed with memory, will and understanding—memory given, that they might recall the benefits and blessings bestowed by God; the will, that, perfectly free and unrestrained, no power in Heaven or on earth would ever force, for of it there was no coercion, and understanding that they might distinguish and praise the material objects of creation which they saw around them. How boundless was the universe! how glorious the stellar creation; yet all this was destructible; but the human soul, even the soul of a little child, or of the most despicable beggar clothed in rags, was of infinitely greater value in the sight of God, their Creator, than all these material things, great and sublime though they were. It was stated that St. Catherine, of Sienna, had been vouchsafed the sight of a soul in its sanctified state; and she said that no language at our command could possibly describe or give any adequate idea of the surpassing, incomparable beauty of the soul in this condition, so great and so marvellous that, could they but see it, they would willingly, to do it a service, lay down their lives. How grand, then, how noble, and how great, was the immortal part of our nature, to live forever, destined for the eternal joys and happiness of heaven. For this Jesus Christ suffered and died on the Cross; for this the Holy Church was established and gifted with Infallibility; for this the Holy Ghost remained with the Church, and the Holy Sacrament was instituted; and for this Jesus Christ Himself ever remained present in the adorable Sacrament on the altar. Yet, how sad to think of it, what little value men in general placed upon their souls. He declared that eternal punishment would follow unrepentant alienation from God; he dwelt upon the price paid for the ransom of the soul, and concluded with an earnest appeal to be faithful in attendance upon the services of the retreat, to be wise in time and, preparing for judgment and eternity, save their immortal souls, cost what it might.

ROUND TOWN.

— The S.S. "Scandinavian" sailed from Portland at 7 a.m. on Sunday.

— The S.S. "Newfoundland," from Halifax, arrived at St John's, N'd., at 8 p.m. on Saturday.

— Messrs. Moody and Payment, Terrebonne, have gone to England to purchase a stallion for the Agricultural Society of Terrebonne County.

— The Quebec curlers on Saturday afternoon won the Quebec Challenge Cup by 27 shots—their first rink scoring 22, and second, 31, while the first and second rinks of the Thistle Club scored each 13—giving totals of 53 and 26.

— A storeman employed on premises at the corner of Grey Nun and William streets, who was subject to fits, was found dead by his brother, who is employed in the same place, in a bin at an early hour one morning during the past week; it is understood that no inquest was held. A fit is supposed to have been the cause of death.

— Rev. Father Burke will preach each evening at 7.30 o'clock during the present week at St. Patrick's Church; mass will be celebrated at 5.30 o'clock each morning, the instruction to commence at 6 o'clock, to close punctually at 6.30, in order that no interference may take place with the ordinary avocations of the young men in attendance. Confessions will be heard from to-morrow during the week, six clergymen to be in attendance for the purpose.

— A meeting of electors favorable to the return of Ald. McCambridge, held at Lomas' hotel, Point St. Charles, on Saturday evening, was addressed by the candidate, by Mr. M. P. Ryan, and others. Mr. Ryan repeated the charge that Mr. O. J. Devlin had offered Alderman MCcambridge £500 if he would resign, the sum to be retained if the latter did not obtain, within a few months, a Government position; otherwise to be refunded.

— The second annual meeting of the Victor Hudon Cotton Mills Company was held on Saturday; the report, which was esteemed highly satisfactory, was adopted, and the retiring directors, Messrs. Hudon, Sincennes, Cotte, Jacques Grenier, and G. H. Nye, re-elected. Profits realized during the first six months of operation, $26,500, admitting the declaration of a dividend of 8 per cent. and the payment of 7 per cent. on the capital paid up before July last, with the addition of $7,000 to the reserve fund.

— The inquest on the body of Mr. Robert Wilkinson was concluded on Saturday evening. Dr. Roddick, who made a post mortem examination, gave his opinion that deceased died from the "rupture of a blood vessel in the chest with apoplexy of the lungs." Verdict accordingly. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon from Mr. Wilkinson's late residence in St. Martin street, and was largely and respectably attended by members of the Loyal Orange Association and to his comrades of deceased in the army. Mr. Wilkinson was one of the heroes of the Indian rebellion, to whom we owe the preservation of our great Asiatic Empire. He was greatly beloved by all who knew him, both in and out of the army, and much sympathy is felt for his widow under her sudden bereavement.

FIRES.

At 6.30 last evening Constable Lecuyer gave the alarm for a fire at No. 42 St. James street. The men from No. 1 Station attended with a Babcock and quickly extinguished the blaze. The damage is trifling.

A second call brought the Department to No. 619 St. Catherine street, where a fire had broken out in a millinery and toy establishment. The loss is light, insured for $1,600. The property belongs to Mr. Laurent.

THE MOUNTAIN PARK.

Judge Johnson rendered his decision on Saturday in the case of the appeal from the award of the Commissioners, who decided that $210,000 was a fair valuation for the Hall estate expropriated to form a portion of the Mountain Park—striking a mean 12cts. per foot in the valuations submitted for his consideration, and increasing the award $245,000—making in all $455,000, with interest on the former from 13th of March, 1873, the day of notification regarding intention to expropriate. The plaintiffs demanded $539,920.

The Corporation will, doubtless, appeal.

His Honor stated that it was simply his duty to judge of the evidence placed before him; if the valuations were untrue, why did not the Corporation contradict them, but no such contradiction was made. Plaintiffs, Mr. Morrison, usufructuary legatee, and others.

A MEAN TRICK.

A very mean and heartless electioneering dodge was attempted last night, but was, fortunately, discovered in time to be frustrated. A letter purporting to be written by Mr. O. J. Devlin was sent to the Herald, and we believe to other papers also, stating that on account of his nephew's death Mr. Devlin would not contest St. Ann's Ward to-day, but requesting his friends to vote for Alderman McCambridge and Dr. Hingston. The letter was signed "Owen James Develin." The introduction of the second e in the surname caused the detection of the fraud and prevented publication. No comment is needed as to the contemptible meanness of such a trick, and the heartlessness of using a severe family affliction for election purposes. Mr. Devlin has not retired and does not propose to do so until after five o'clock this evening, when he will retire either at the head or foot of the poll as the electors decide.

DASTARDLY.

Yesterday afternoon two drunken loafers, one of them a printer who had been discharged some time since from the Herald, went into the office of that paper and proceeded upstairs to the composing room where they commenced to "rat" the place. They emptied the contents of three cases on the floor and "pied" six other cases, but were observed by the caretaker's daughter before they could "pi" the matter on the galleys. Information was given to Detective Cullen and in about an hour he arrested John Matthews, a printer, who at first denied all knowledge of the outrage, and said that he had spent the whole afternoon with a man named Duke. Cullen left Matthews in the Central Station and hunted up Mr. Duke, who was found in Stone's tavern, who quietly turned "Queen's evidence" and charged Matthews with doing all the mischief. The men will be brought up for trial this morning. Ratting is a very serious offence in England and is, we believe, punishable with imprisonment here. The damage done to the Herald is not very heavy, but the inconvenience and loss of time to the compositors will be considerable.

SNOW-SHOEING.

The Montreal Snow-Shoe Club to the number of about thirty tramped to Longueuil on Saturday, taking the ice at the foot of McGill street. The Longueuil Club fancied their visitors would cross to St. Lamberts, and, wending their way thither, missed meeting the Bleu Tuques, but the mistake was soon rectified and a very cordial meeting ensued. No large room being available at any of the hotels, the Longueuil Club had secured the use of the Town Hall, likewise a piano from the New York and Boston Company and a capital supper, served by that veteran caterer and cricketer, Mr. R. Ridley. The advent of the blanket-coated band made quite a stir among the natives. After supper, Mr. Jones, President of the Longueuil Club, proposed success to the Montreal Club, for which Mr. Grant, Vice-President of the latter, returned thanks and the compliment. The evening was passed very pleasantly; the Longueuilers contributing several capital songs.

The proceedings terminated with "Auld Lang Syne," "God Save the Queen" and cheers for the respective clubs and Mr. Crosbie, the clever accompanyist of the Montreal. The Longueuil boys wanted to bear all the expenses of the gathering, but the Montrealers insisted upon paying the usual rate for dinner, holding that in securing the Hall, the piano and Ridley, the Longueuilians had done handsomely. President Jones stated that next season they hoped to get up races with prizes sufficiently valuable to tempt the Montrealers across the river. We are glad to know that the Longueuil Club is flourishing. It ought to, as it has a goodly number of lady members, and everybody knows what a powerful aid the fair sex is to any enterprise.

FRENCH DATES.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "It is said that Lady Morgan, when visiting Paris, complained to Lafayette of the manner in which conversation was interlarded with dates. But what would she think now of the number of dates a person has to carry in his mind, thanks to a fashion invented by the Republicans? In her day the people only talked about the 14th of July, when the Bastile fell; the 4th of August, when the French noblesse renounced their privileges; the 6th of October, when the market marched to Versailles and brought back the King and Queen to Paris; the 19th of August, when the Tuileries were stormed and taken; the 21st of January, when Louis XIV. was executed; the 31st of May, when the Girondists were outlawed. After the Terror and the adoption of the Revolutionary calendar, people had to remember that the 9th Thermidor meant the fall of Robespierre; the 18th Fructidor (4th of September) the day when Augereau surrounded the Chamber and sent many Conservatives to Cayenne; the 13th Vendemiaire when Gen. Bonaparte commanded the factions on the steps of the Church of St. Roch. Under the Empire there was nothing but the 'sun of Austerlitz.' Napoleon was everything, and dates only reappeared when Charles X. was falling; then came the ordinances of July, and afterwards the three days of July—27th, 28th, and 29th—when the King was driven from St. Cloud. Dates then came quick—Ministry of Casimir-Perier, 13th of March; funeral of General Lamarque 5th of June: Ministry of M. Thiers, 11th of October, etc. Then the three days of June, when Cavaignac put down the Barbes, Louis-Blanc, Ledru-Rollin business with much bloodshed. Afterwards, 10th of December, meaning election of Prince Louis Napoleon; 2nd of December, coup d'etat. Dates again went out of fashion, only coming back when M. Emile Ollivier and his letter of the 19th of January. He became Minister on the 2nd of January, and would have been Minister on the 1st had it not been a Friday. Afterwards came the men of the 4th of September; the 31st of October, when Blanqui and friends took the Hotel de Ville during the siege; the 8th of February, or truce of Bordeaux; the fall of M. Thiers, alluded to as the 24th of May; the creation of the Septennate, the 20th of November, etc. These and other dates are constantly alluded to in the newspapers, in debates, and in conversation without the key, and one is expected to know that the law of the 31st of May means that universal suffrage was violated on that day on the proposition of M. Thiers, and that the laws of September were those which the ex-President launched against the press."

NEWS OF THE WEST.

[Press Despatch.]

TORONTO, March 1.

The Mail this morning says:—"Ominous rumors respecting more than one monetary institution in this city were afloat on Saturday. A meeting of bankers was held, and the wise determination was arrived at to carry over any weaker brethren in this their hour of need. Before the day closed confidence was re-established, and the tempest in a teapot had blown over. Many blame the larger banks for bringing about this state of things, who will do well in that case to reflect on the danger of pulling down the house about their own heads. The old charge of Canadian money being sent to New York was, of course, freely indulged in, and it was argued that we do not give our chartered banks a valuable monopoly to have our business arrangements left at their mercy, when it suits them to employ capital out of the country. In the meantime, we would say that even the rumor of a crisis is hurtful, and that it is the duty as well as the interest of the Banks at once to allay as far as they can any general feeling of uneasiness."

NEW YORK, March 1.

A Washington despatch says Pinchback is very angry on account of his failure to get a seat in the Senate, and he has been using all his influence with the members of the Louisiana Legislature to prevent the adoption of any compromise. He is said to have received a message from Louisiana which convinces him that the proposition made by Wheeler, and accepted by the Conservatives, cannot be carried into effect. The Conservatives who are here seem to fear that the efforts for an arrangement of the difficulties will be defeated by his hostility. It seems to be understood by some that the members of the Louisiana Committee are acting in this matter as a Committee of Congress, but such is not the fact. All their acts are entirely unofficial and in the capacity of private citizens.

The question of an extra session of Congress hangs on the passage of the Civil Service and Appropriation bills. A failure in the Senate of the Tax bill is predicted. It is said that the Senate Committee on Appropriations have determined to attach to the River and Harbor bill additional appropriations, amounting to over $15,600,000, which will require a long debate, and end in sending the bill to the House, when a Conference Committee will be appointed.

THE BERTHIER ELECTION.

BERTHIER, March 1.

The excitement in Berthier on Saturday night was most intense. The streets were thronged with people eager to learn the result. From time to time agents from the different sections of votation arrived with their returns. According as the number of the majority for Cuthbert from each poll was announced bravos and hurrahs were pealed out.

At half-past eleven all the agents but one had arrived and the successful candidate could announce a majority of 230. At this moment a general meeting took place at Guillemette's Hotel and speeches were delivered by the candidate, Mr. Cuthbert; M. Mathieu, advocate; M. Gauthier, Dr. Lavallee, M.P.P.; M. Charland, M. McConville, James Marion and a few others, after which Mr. Cuthbert was taken to his house by his numerous friends. No disturbance whatever occurred.

FOOD SUPPLY OF CONSTANTINOPLE.

The annual consumption of meat in Constantinople and the Bosphorus villages requires the slaughter of about 1,840,000 head of animals in the year; about a million are sheep, 120,000 lambs, and 20,000 oxen. European Turkey supplies most of the sheep and lambs, almost all the rest coming from the Asiatic provinces of the Empire. Vice-Consul Wrench states, in his report of 1874, that the military garrison of Constantinople consumes about 140,000 sheep annually, the vessels of the Imperial navy in the port and Bosphorus 60,000, the Imperial palaces the inordinate quantity of 80,000, and the Mussulman convents of the capital 12,000; these supplies are furnished by contract. There is a great divergence of opinion as to the number of the population of the city and neighborhood, consuming the remaining number of animals.

The Vice-Consul says it may, perhaps, be safe to estimate the population at less than a million souls. The supply of corn is confined to the quantity required by the city and the villages on the Bosphorus. Transportation to Europe is affected from the ports of the producing districts. The consumption of the city and villages is computed at 67,000 quarters of wheat per month, and 19,000 quarters of corn in the form of flour. By far the largest portion of the wheat is furnished by European Turkey, but the wheat flour is chiefly from Odessa, and some from ports on the Danube. The 804,000 quarters of wheat received annually are reduced to flour at Constantinople, and give work to fourteen steam mills.

The Vice-Consul states that the mills are worked only for the supply of the local market, and he says:—"The export of flour from Constantinople is impossible. A duty of 8 per cent. is levied on wheat arriving there, and flour has hitherto been taxed to a like extent on leaving the town; foreign flour, paying this duty but once, on its introduction into the empire, can alone be imported by the provinces." The Vice-Consul gives the quotations in the early part of 1874 at 46s. per quarter for Turkish and Danube wheat, and 52s. for Russian. Constantinople prices are kept moderate by a new source of supply available by the Roumelian Railway.

FREEBOOTERS IN INDIA.

Freebooters of the old stamp are far from being extinct in India. Still, the Meena robs with a skill confounding stupid honesty, and the boldness of a man fully convinced of the dignity and righteousness of his calling. That marriage procession, which the villagers on the route, with their chowkidars and policemen, are turning out to admire, is only a band of Meena raiders bent on looting some neighboring district. In this guise they have been known to defy detection, while traversing the British districts, Ajmere and Mhairwarra, on their plundering expeditions. A week or two ago it was reported that a formidable band of them were seen prowling in the vicinity of Mount Aboo, noted for its sanitarium. According to an interesting report from Major Martin, the officiating political agent in Western Malwa, a chief rendezvous of the Meena bandits in that part of India, is, or was, Holkar's capital of Indore.

Their plan is to enter the town peacefully one by one; lodge with their friends, who spare no pains to make them acquainted with the curiosities, the life, the trade and the riches of the place; and to take service in the city. By these means the Meenas become acquainted with the movements of traffic, so that they are ready to follow in the rear of some costly consignment across country on the shortest notice, and even to correspond beforehand with their distant friends. In this way, the Meenas followed a treasure of Rs 12,500 all the way from Indore to near Oojein, where they made off with the money, after having killed one of the escort. On another occasion they looted Rs 40,000, in transit from Indore to Kotah, killing three and wounding seven of the fifteen men in charge. For these offences three of the bandits were hanged, and nineteen transported for life.

Major Martin likewise gives some particulars concerning the domestic arrangements of the meenas in regard to their plundering expeditions. A Dacoit who joins an expedition at his own private expense is rewarded with a full share, "tank," of the booty—the leader receiving two "tanks." But sometimes it happens that his poverty stands in the way of his going abroad for the common weal, in which case his tribesmen generally start a subscription for furnishing him with an outfit worthy of a Meena and a freebooter. Scrupulously honest in their mutual dealings, the Meenas ordain that only half a share of the proceeds of an adventure shall be set apart for any warrior provided for as above, the other half to go to the person or persons who obliged him.—Pioneer Mail.

Notwithstanding the refusal of England to take part in the new conference on the usages of war, it is said to be the intention of the Russian Government to proceed with it. The Emperor hopes that England may be represented at a later stage.

NEWS OF THE WEST.

[Special to the STAR.]

TORONTO, March 1.

The Police Commissioners of this city have decided in favor of granting 198 tavern, 10 saloon, and 176 shop licenses, a reduction in all of 42. The tax has been raised to the legal maximum, and it is consequently probable that some of those to whom licenses have been granted will not take them out.

The Uxbridge Council have reduced the number of liquor licenses to nearly one-half, and doubled the fees.

The writ for an election to the vacant seat in the House of Commons for North Wellington was received on Saturday. The nomination takes place on the 11th inst., and voting on the 18th.

Mr. N. Gibson has been elected Mayor of Whitby, Ont.

Mr. Wm. Smith, of the steam mills at Ancaster, was instantly killed on Saturday by an explosion of the boiler. He was thrown through the roof, and was found forty yards from the building. John Armstrong, who was working with him, was also injured, it is thought fatally.

The railroads north and west of Toronto are again snow-blocked this morning. The drifts are very heavy.

NEWS OF THE CAPITAL.

[Special to the STAR.]

OTTAWA, March 1.

Last night was the coldest of the season, the thermometer at 3 a.m. registering 40 degrees below zero.

Alonzo Wright, M.P., entertained the members of the Press at dinner on Saturday afternoon. Sleighs were provided, and a large party drove over to the Gladiteur Club Rooms, Hull, where a most enjoyable afternoon was spent.

Mr. Mill's Senate resolutions are likely to come up this afternoon. A lively debate is anticipated.

Mr. Costigan has further postponed his resolutions anent the New Brunswick School law till Wednesday. A number of Catholic priests from New Brunswick are around the lobbies this morning.

It is likely that Mr. Fournier will to-day bring in a bill providing for allowances to the judges.

The Committee in reference to Fraser, Reynolds & Co. and the Intercolonial Railway met this morning but did no business.

The delegates from Winnipeg had an interview with the Government this morning.

The only Prince Edward Island member now absent is the Hon. Daniel Davies, who has injured his leg on his way to the Capital.

The provision in the Post Office Bill that all letters must be fully prepaid will probably be changed.

The newly-arrived scion of the Dufferin family is doing well.

Via Dominion Line.

AMERICAN AFFAIRS.

NEW YORK, March 1.

The persons killed by the accident in St. Andrew's Church, Duane street, were buried yesterday, all expenses being defrayed by the Church and contributions. The investigation has disclosed the fact that the doors in the large proportion of the Churches here open inward, which would prove difficult of egress in case of fire.

NEW YORK, March 1.

Early this morning, Edward Payson Weston and Johnny Judd began a 500 mile walking match in the Hippodrome for a purse of $5,000; both in excellent condition.

BROOKLYN, N.Y., March 1.

Beecher's examination is expected today, and will probably be long and severe; the present situation is regarded as the worst one in the case. It is reported the plaintiff will call Carpenter and Bowen as witnesses in rebuttal. An interview with Henry C. Bowen is published to-day, in which he says that the Beecher-Tilton affair is not his quarrel; he wishes to have nothing to do with its trial, but considers himself justified in rebuking Tracey's uncalled for criticisms of his actions.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 1.

The large four story paper box factory of Geo. W. Plumly, Fourth and Branch streets, took fire early this morning, and was totally destroyed.

ROUND TOWN.

— The person figuring in the morning papers as John McAvenue, for having been drunk and disorderly on Saturday night, is not John E. McEvenue, residing at No. 15 Kent street.

— Samuel Hannah, a carter, was fined $15 or two months' imprisonment by the Recorder to-day for being drunk and damaging a sleigh belonging to James Carpenter.

— Alfred Lacombe, of St. Mary street, laborer, was arrested by the police for indecently insulting Mrs. Gagnon. He will be tried at the Recorder's Court on Wednesday next.

— We regret to notice the death of Mr. James Devlin, son of B. Devlin, Esq., M. P., yesterday morning, after a long illness. The funeral will take place from 256 St. Antoine st. at 8.30 to-morrow morning.

— Michael Guimond, a stonecutter, residing on Jacques Cartier street, was fined $10 and costs, or 2 months' imprisonment in default, by the Recorder for being drunk and indecently exposing himself on St. Lawrence Main street.

— John Callaghan, a rough fellow, was charged at the Recorder's Court to-day with assaulting Mrs. P. Redmond, of Richmond street, Point St. Charles. Callaghan came into the house of prosecutrix in a state of intoxication and wanted more liquor, which Mrs. Redmond refused, upon which the ruffian made a brutal attack upon her, knocking the poor woman down and kicking her. The Recorder denounced the cowardly scoundrel for his brutality, and fined him $20 or two months' imprisonment in default.

MONTREAL WEST CASE.

Proceedings with regard to the Montreal West election contestation were resumed this morning, before Judge MacKay, when the petitioners were examined regarding preliminary objections made to their qualification so to appear.

John Hatchette, merchant, deposed that he had canvassed a number of his customers, Daniel Kearns, Patrick Costello, James Kearns, Wm. Reynolds; had obtained a book for the purpose from Mr. McCord, Mr. White's agent; was the only John Hatchette in the city during the two late elections.

Q. Are you the same John Hatchette who took part in the Montreal Centre election, Jan., 1874?

Mr. Davidson, on behalf of the petitioners, objected to the question as irrelevant, having relation to an election in another District.

Question over-ruled, as it had no connection with the preliminary objections.

Mr McLaren explaining that he merely desired to secure identification, His Honor added—I am satisfied that there is no other John Hatchette in the city, nor has there been any other for more than a year. If you want any other evidence, I will give you his name and address. (Laughter.)

Chas. S. Rodier, jr., manufacturer—Had seen Mr. T. White once at the meeting of his committee on St. Joseph street; represented the latter at a poll on the day of election; had requested several of his tenants to vote for Mr. White; had promised them nothing, nor had they asked anything; pecuniary or any other consideration was not even mentioned; the tenants in St. Antoine Ward paid their rents punctually; it was the tenants in St. Ann's Ward who did not pay so promptly. (Laughter.)

Jean Marie Papineau, cabinet-maker, gave similar evidence, as far as allegations of corrupt practices were concerned, declaring that he had neither received, expended, or promised money or any consideration for any vote whatever. Other petitioners were also examined—amongst others Andre Lapierre, petitioner, who deposed: Had worked and voted for Mr. White; had represented him on the day of election at poll No. 6, St. Antoine street, No. 291; did not remember having sent for voters; had made no payments in connection with the election.

PUBLIC OPINION.

THE MOTHERS OF CANADA.

To the Editor of THE STAR.

SIR,—Your admirable article on "Our Young Men" in the STAR of the 23rd currant has induced me to ask you to have the goodness to open your columns to a series of letters under the above heading, in the hope that the mothers of Canada will bring more home influence to bear upon the moulding of the rising generation, not only among their own loved ones, but among the loved ones of those who are separated from us by the billows of the Atlantic. I mean young men and women who have left the homes of their childhood from adverse circumstances, or a desire to push their fortunes in the New World, and looking for some affectionate friends among the denizens of "this beautiful Canada of ours." As many, I dare say very many of the mothers of Canada have not perused Mrs. Ellis's works, a few extracts therefrom, as a preliminary, will, I doubt not, be acceptable to some, if not to all, of your fair readers; I shall have much pleasure in devoting some of my spare time to the task, which I hope may tend to elevate the minds of many mothers, and, as a natural consequence, the minds of the sons and daughters of Canada.

Mrs. Ellis, in her opening chapter on "The mothers of England," says: "A mother's love could never have been intended merely to be trifled with in the nursery, or expended in infantine indulgence. That which is strong enough to overcome the universal impulse of self-preservation; that which brings the timid bird to stoop her wing to the destroyer in order to lure him from her nestlings; that which softens into tenderness the nature of the eagle and the lion; that which has power to render the feeblest and most delicate women unflinching, heroical and bold, can never have been given by the Author of our existence for any mean purpose.

"In the animal creation we see that this wonder-working principle answers the end of its creation, simply by instructing the mother how to prepare for her offspring, and by enabling her to protect and provide for them during the limited period of their helplessness and incapacity for providing for themselves.

"Thus far the human mother proceeds in the same manner; but as there is an existence beyond this, for which she has to prepare, so the love of the human mother, by its continuance to the end of life, is beautifully adapted to those nigher responsibilities which devolve upon her, as the parent of an immortal being, whose lot, it is her privilege to hope, will be cast among the happy, the holy and the pure for ever."

In the course of my series I shall draw a picture of a once happy family, at one time residing in this city, where, had the mother exerted her influence amongst her sons and daughters as she ought to have done, they would probably have been amongst us still, a happy and undivided family. You have remarked in the article to which I have alluded:

"There is in this city a great deal of material for future good which is wasted and lost to the country. As in all other large cities there are numbers of well disposed, hard-working young men, dissevered from family ties and associations, who are at a loss how to spend their evenings."

My reply to the above is that it is the bound duty of the mothers of Montreal to enable these young men to say, "Our evenings are now pleasantly and advantageously spent in the society of the young ladies."

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
SENEX.

PROCLAMATION OF THE MAYOR OF PHILADELPHIA ON KIDNAPPING.

PHILADELPHIA, March 1.

Mayor Stokley has just issued a proclamation giving notice that the legislature of Pennsylvania has passed an act, which this day received the approval of the Governor, defining the offence of kidnapping. The act imposes a fine of $ 0,000 and imprisonment for a period not exceeding twenty-five years, on all persons found guilty of kidnapping children. Heavy penalties are also provided in cases where persons harbor or conceal stolen children. A provision in the act says:—"This act shall not apply to the detaining or concealing of any child taken or carried away before the passage of this act, when the person or persons so harboring or concealing shall, within thirty days of the passage of this act, surrender up such child to the custody of the nearest magistrate or justice of the peace or to the sheriff of any county within the Commonwealth."

The proviso has reference to the Ross case.

PHILADELPHIA, March 1.

Geo. W. Plumley's paper box factory, at Fourth and Branch streets, caught fire at six o'clock this morning, and was entirely destroyed; the front wall on Fourth street fell, carrying down all the telegraph wires. The factory was very extensive, giving employment to 350 girls, who are now out of work. The loss is total; building worth $50,000, and the stock is valued at $40,000; there is an insurance of $38,000; the building is only partially insured. The manufacture was operated by a Stock Company, of which Geo. W. Plumley is President. It was accidental; the engineer, it seems, was oiling the elevator, when he slipped and fell, breaking the lantern, which ignited some light material on the floor. He stamped out as best he could, and then ran for some water; in the meantime the flames spread with frightful rapidity, and when he returned he found his services of no avail; then it was that the alarm was given. The shoemakers, paint and plate glass house were considerably damaged by water, and the roof of the small branch store was partially burned out.

NEW YORK, March 1.

At the opening of the Tilton-Beecher trial, Tracey continued his address. He had shown them, he said, that after the Woodhull publication Beecher, by the advice of a mutual friend, Francis D. Moulton, had accepted the policy of silence. In 1870 Tilton's difficulties with Bowen arose, and were augmented, as Tilton says, by Mr. and Mrs. Beecher. On December 26th the charges were made against Beecher, and it was then determined to suppress them. Bowen promised to support Tilton in his charges against Beecher, and got him to take a letter to him, but Bowen after this became Tilton's enemy. Two days after this Tilton found himself deserted by Bowen and had made himself inimical to Beecher. Next day Moulton comes and carries away all the letters; not as an emblem of war but one of peace. The only criticism to be passed on the defendant was, that having accepted the policy of silence, he endeavored faithfully to carry it out. Tilton himself was then covered all over with stories of scandal. Those raised by Bessie Turner and his wife, threatening to leave him for his infidelities and cruelties to his her. These were to suppressed at any cost. Bessie Turner was employed to sign the retraction of her stories in order to stop her stories, and she was sent away to prevent her tattling, and so her stories were suppressed. Then Tilton published stories circulated by Bowen against Beecher in the Golden Age. Mrs. Tilton's stories about her treatment must also be suppressed, and she was led to believe that the stories must be denied. Tilton's manner of conducting the affair was to make statements and publish them, while Moulton's way was to preserve silence and allow other parties to make their statements. With Beecher silence was a duty, but with Moulton and Tilton it was only policy and they took these means to keep scandal alive. The failure of the Golden Age had blasted the hopes of Tilton and he was compelled to look for other avenues of success. The money drawn from Bowen in April, 1872, was all expended on his paper. He would show them that friends of Tilton had applied in Dec., 1872, to friends of Beecher and advised them to buy the New York Express, which was then for sale, and for Beecher to take charge of it, while Tilton should go abroad for some months and when he came back to take a foremost place on the editorial staff of that paper.

The Department were called out and they got the fire extinguished with comparatively little loss. Mr. Michael Cooney is the owner, and the house was unoccupied.

—There were two fire-alarms this morning between ten and eleven o'clock. A chimney on Gosford street and one on St. Antoine street took fire. The former soon died out, but the latter communicated to the roof of the house. The men from No. 1 Station, with a Babcock, however, extinguished it. Damage very slight.

—The state of the sidewalks are a disgrace to the city. It is impossible for lady pedestrians to hop along without numerous falls and the majority do not venture out shopping owing to the slippery state of the ground. It is to the interest of store-keepers to keep the sidewalks in good order, but at any rate the police should do their duty and compel all householders to comply with the law and remove the snow from the footpaths.

Beaudry, was sentenced by the Police Magistrate this morning to detention for four years in the Mignonne street Reformatory School. A SINGULAR EXPERIENCE.

We find the following in the Dover, [N. H.] Enquirer: Some eight years ago a lad of thirteen, a son of Charles E. Myers, a well-known citizen of Portsmouth, while fishing from one of the wharves of that city caught a fish hook in the forefinger of his right hand, near the root of the nail, drawing it in to the bend of the hook. His father saw at once that the only thing to be done was to open the finger on a line with the hook and take it out, but preferred to call in their family physician to do it. After looking at it for a moment the doctor, by a sudden twist, wrenched the hook from the finger, minus the barb and point. The parents were justly indignant at such rough treatment, and insisted that the hook was not all removed, while the boy came near fainting from extreme anguish.

The doctor, however, insisted that no inconvenience would result, and dressed the finger in some simple and safe manner, and in due time the wound healed. But the finger and arm troubled him for a long time. After a year or two the lad's health had so failed as to become a subject of serious alarm to his friends, he being subject to frequent and alarming fainting fits and other spasmodic affections or symptoms. The state of affairs continued for years, with more or less intensity until a year or two ago, when the boy's health became nearly or quite restored. In the spring of 1874 the young man, while dressing himself one morning, tore a pimple from his left shoulder, and, on examining it, he drew from the flesh the point of the hook which seven years before was imbedded in a finger on the opposite side of the body.

EXTRA EDITION.

7 O'CLOCK.

THE election to-day will be ranked as, probably, the most quiet and orderly which has ever occurred in this city, the reason for which is mainly attributable to the number of separate polling places, instead of all the voting being done in the City Hall, and partly to the weather. Good order was preserved everywhere. We have not heard of a single arrest, and there were few cases where the oath had to be administered.

The vote polled was a fair, but not a very large one, and the feeling of the public in most of the contests was too "one-sided" to cause much excitement. The voting for Mayor was almost a farce, and Mr. Beaudry would have been wiser if he had not entered on the contest at all. St. Ann's, St. Antoine and St. Lawrence were the most exciting wards, but McCambridge, Foster and McLaren took the lead early, and gradually increased their majorities.

Below will be found the official figures at the close of the poll:

CHAPTER XIII.

Two men, in the garb of country farm servants, came forth. One carried a gun, the other a lantern and a large stick. The dog came bounding and barking before them.

"Heaven have mercy on me!" said Edith, now scarcely able to prevent herself from fainting.

"Maister swear he heard a shriek and a shot," said the man with the gun.

"Ees, he swear it, but he heard many a one afore, and never said a word 'bout un," replied the other.

"You see, he seed there two a go down to the ruins—two on 'em—a la[d] an' a lass. Weel, it were no bisness o' his'n, though he says he know'd 'em, and he war jist goin' to bed when he heard a kind of a shriek and then a pistol. Ain't it strange?"

"Ees," said the other.

"Lads and lasses don't generally come to the ruins sich nights as these," continued the other.

"Noa," replied the other, with a vacant grin. "Noa, they don't."

"Well, I don't sa nout," said the first speaker, "but maister said as how we war to find 'em. Now Turk, he ain't half a dog; he ain't no nose at all."

"It's my idea the birds is flown," chuckled the man with the lantern.

"Maister says not," continued the one with the gun.

"Then find 'em, Bill."

"Ye must come down below, John," replied the other. "You go first—the path is rough. Hold the lantern down they can't be gone far."

"I wish the[y] were gone to the devil," said John, yawning. "I am fast asleep."

"Well, wake up, man—we'll find 'em. Go on, Turk—see away, my boy."

The dog, thus admonished, began running down the path which led to the sea beach. The men followed him, and in a few minutes disappeared.

"Good Heavens! they will find him. Old Merton says he recognised me. The wretched old miser must be mistaken. But I must not be found here. Once in my room—in my bed—not all the oaths of all the country would convince one man or woman of the truth of his assertion. Let me go, then, ere they return. My life is on the quickness of my steps. 'Tis past two o'clock."

She rose and moved cautiously across the room. The stairs were reached. The descent was worse than the ascent; but, by great energy and coolness, Edith succeeded in reaching the apartment below. The door opened towards the tower; hurriedly drawing her cloak around her, Edith turned to go.

She very nearly shrieked.

As they reached the doorway, but before she was out of the deep shadow of the night, she saw right in her path, a gun in his hand, the old man Merton, who himself, despite his extreme age, had come out to fathom a mystery which some instinct told him might be serviceable to him.

"Betrayed!" muttered Edith, as she quietly ret[i]red and sank upon her knees.

Awful visions rose to her view. Arrest!—a dungeon!—a trial that would shake all England and make her name a byeword!—a scaffold! She shook with agony. But for her youthful constitution and extreme energy, she would have sunk under the blow.

"What is life now to me? Better join him than be cursed here below. Never shall felon's brand fall on me. Adieu! farewell!—'tis better so—adieu, my own dear Horace—go find a worthier mate. Never shall your eyes gaze with pity on one you so truly and nobly loved. Heavenly Father, whose commands I have outraged, forgive my folly, my crimes—even that awful one I am now about to commit."

In a short time she was enabled to make her escape from the dreadful situation in which she was placed.

Edith Blythe was, like many others in this world, a mixture of good and evil. Had she been reared in her own home by a tender father and a good mother such as Lady Edith would have been, it is more than probable that the good would have predominated largely in her character. As it was—educated under the eye of a morose and bad man, an inmate of a school where the mind and morals were neglected to think only of accomplishments—Edith reached her home utterly devoid of any knowledge of her severer duties, and sought the repose of her pillow.

Edith was now more the victim of false shame than anything else. A free confession to her father would have spared her all. Sir Richard would have soon rid her of John Edwards, but she preferred acting upon those romantic thoughts with which her mind was so strongly imbu[e]d.

Hence the fatal accident which had placed her in so dangerous a position, and which now suggested to her the awful idea of suicide.

She rose more pale, more ghastly, more haggard than before, and turned towards the edge of the cliff. Concealed by the ruins, she contrived to reach a spot at some little distance from the pathway.

She stood upon the edge of that dizzy height. She gazed upon the boiling and raging waters, and shuddered.

"The night is like my soul dark and gloomy. 'Tis a fit time for such deeds as mine. But I shall not reach the water. My body will be found—the crime will still be known—hush! they come."

Edith again sank on the ground, this time lying at her full length along. At that instant the dog reappeared, followed by the two men, bearing something heavy in their arms.

"It's woundy heavy," said one. "Poor fellow, he fell a goodish bit; will maister take IT in?"

IT.

That little monosyllable went to the girl's heart. He was then dead.

"I suppose un will," replied John; "there is u[n] standing yonder. I wunder war the lass is. I suppose we must hunt for her next."

"But first let us take un in," said Bill. "I'm plaguy tired. Go on, Turk."

The dog ran before, his nose to the ground. Fortunately for Edith, he was of a race whose sense of smell was not very acute. They all passed Edith by unnoticed. She rose at once, her wild resolve having passed away, and followed.

"I might escape in the confusion. 'Tis drawing towards morning."

"Well," said John Carter Merton, as they approached, "have you found them?"

"One, and that a dead 'un," replied Bill, with a brutal laugh.

"Who is it?" asked Merton, eagerly.

"Jacky Edwards, the Blythe pet," said Bill, with another laugh. The gamekeeper had often refused to drink with him.

"Silence!" roared Merton, "and take him in. Hold your comments. Perhaps he may not be dead. How far did he fall?"

"Well, not far; we wint right down and found nout. Jack and me was a coming away when Turk found him on the bush crag."

As they spoke they reached the door-way and went in. The old man followed and closed the heavy door. Edith distinctly heard it both barred and chained.

"Merciful Providence! perhaps he is not dead," she cried; "let me be laughed at for my follies, if it be not true that murder does not stain my soul. I would almost give him my hand to save his life. But I must go. If I cannot return unnoticed, rumour will be busy tongued indeed."

Muttering these words and following them up with many an incoherent cry, Edith Blythe moved along with as noiseless a step as possible, and, no one interrupting her, was soon at some little distance from the tower which contained such fearful evidence of impetuous folly.

By the time Edith reached her father's house she was comparatively calm. The window of the library was untouched; she pushed it gently open and entered. Then she closed it behind her and crept upstairs without her shoes and without a light. She was too well used to the house to require a candle; that might have betrayed her.

Her room was reached. Here a lamp burned in readiness for her, and with suspicious forethought she proceeded to take off her soiled clothes. These she placed in a drawer, which she carefully secured. Then she prepared for her night's rest, or rather her morning's sleep. She felt the necessity of not appearing ill that day, when Horace was to meet Lord Claude and the Earl of Hampton at dinner.

THE TERRIBLE SCENES IN THE FRENCH ASSEMBLY.

There have been some stormy debates in the English Parliament. O'Connell in the heat of debate once tore the buttons off his waistcoat, to let forth, as it were, the pent up floods of his trans-cendent eloquence. Brougham once fell on his knees in the House, and other honorable members have declared their intention to die on the floor of the House if the measures which they advocated were rejected. But they who have seen and heard these conflicts can form no adequate conception of the rancorous party feeling which excludes for the time, even from men who are generally reasonable, any appeal to reason. Neither reason nor conciliation, neither patriotism, nor loyalty, could find any place in the tumult which howled throughout the whole of a recent sitting of the National Assembly provoked by M. Jules Favre in animadverting upon the conduct of other parties with respect to the Constitutional Bill. M. Jules Favre's temper is always under control; his voice, calm and even, betrays no symptom of emotion; he does not allow impulse to run away with him; he uses neither sword nor lance, but deliberately takes a brush and plasters a whole party with mud, all the while calling them mes honorables contradicteurs. It would be difficult to imagine anything more galling, more exasperating than this style of attack, and the scenes of violence which arose in consequence, however reprehensible, were not without their raison d'etre. The chief scene was caused by M. Favre asserting that Louis Seize had broken faith with the people. He said:

"My honorable adversary, M. de Carayon Latour, has alluded to the Monarchy at the outset of the Revolution. I can understand his doing so, for there were then noble aspirations that were ruthlessly sacrificed, bright hopes that had to be abandoned, at the close of the 18th century, at the time when the blossoming of philosophy, the expansion of the progress of ideas, had brought the French nation up to a level with that other nation that had preceded her in the path of civilization. I acknowledge that it at that time there had been an intelligent Monarchy a close alliance might have been concluded between the Monarch and the nation, which would have guaranteed the security and the grandeur of the country [uproar on the Right]. That alliance which was dreamt of as possible was broken. But by whom? By him who believed that his power was threatened [great shouting on the Right]."

M. de Belcastel—It should not be permitted to use such language on the morrow of the 21st of January.

Another Member—It is adulteration of history.

The President—Do not interrupt.

Count Doutset—You should not let the speaker falsify history.

Marquis de Castellane—He is outraging our feelings.

Marquis de Dampierre—If you let him go on he will panegyrise regicide [terrible uproar].

M. Jules Favre—That alliance was broken by him, who, believing his power was menaced and his crown in danger, brought the aid of the foreigner [tremendous noise on the Right]. He did more, he authorized his faithful noblesse to leave the national soil on the eve of an invasion. [Great uproar].

M. Louis de St. Pierre—Tell us about the Army of the East. What did you do with it in 1871?

M. Jules Favre—You have spoken of the crimes of the Commune—you, the upholders of Monarchy. Listen to my reply. You have calumniated France. I avenge her [further uproar].

M. de Sugny—Wait at least until the sons of those who perished on the guillotine are out of the house.

Baron Chauraud—We cannot tolerate an apology for regicide from a French tribune.

Count Doutset—It is through you that we lost Alsace, which Louis XIV. had given us. (Great uproar from the Right and Left.)

The President—I cannot allow a dialogue of that violent kind between members of this House and the speaker. Those who wish to reply will have an opportunity of doing so [applause from the Left; uproar from the Right.]

Baron Chauraud—We cannot allow a French tribune to be defiled in this way.

The President—I cannot help it if the opinions of the speaker are unpalatable to a section of his colleagues; but however disagreeable his speech may be I must protect the expression of his feelings. (Great applause from the Left; renewed uproar from the Right.)

Count Doutset—History should not be thus perverted.

Duke de la Rouchefoucauld-Bisaccia—It is our right—our duty—to protest against such language.

M. Jules Favre—History records that to defend Monarchy and uphold its own privileges the French noblesse quitted the national soil and enrolled themselves under the orders of Prussia and Austria. (Great applause from the Left; howls from the Right.)

Duke de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia—Why, those who remained had their heads cut off.

Count Doutset—And you; did you not leave Paris under the Commune?

Several members on the Right—Oui, oui; you ran away under the Commune.

M. Jules Favre—I was saying that the French noblesse had taken service under Prussian and Austrian generals.

Marquis de Montaignac, Minister of Marine—It is a falsehood.

M. Jules Favre—I was saying that the French noblesse had borne arms against their country—that it had shattered itself against the armies of the Republic—the greatest crime that can be committed in a civilized country.

M. de Gavardie—Yes, you stick in the tribune. You are afraid that any one should get in to reply to you.

The President—M. de Gavardie, pray be silent.

Baron Chauraud—We cannot tolerate such insults (tremendous uproar).

The President—Be silent, gentlemen. Even I cannot hear what the speaker says.

M. Jules Favre—You ask why the Monarchy is unpopular? That is the reason why. And how did it return? Why in the baggage of the enemy (tremendous applause on the Left, renewed uproar from the Right).

M. Pages Duport—The Monarchy saved us; it saved Alsace!

M. de Trevenano—Do you think this Assembly is the Club des Jacobins?

M. Jules Favre—There remained one crowning humiliation for the Monarchy—it received it at the hands of M. de Carayon-Latour yesterday, when he placed it under the protection of a foreign Minister [Bismarck], who exults over the miseries of France, and insults her (indescribable noise). That is why the Monarchy is no longer possible.

Here arose a terrible scene. The Right and the Left rose in their places and surged up towards each other, and crowded round the tribune. It is fortunate there is no open space between the Right and Left else a violent collision would have taken place. This scene lasted for nearly three-quarters of an hour, and the House—both Right and Left—was in a fever when Jules Favre concluded his speech. There was another scene when he said that the Monarchists had fawned in Imperial antechambers while Republicans were dying in gaols and on board pontoons. Another scene, yet more violent, occurred when M. Bocher, quivering with indignation, protested against such language as that of M. Jules Favre on the morrow of the anniversary of the execution of Louis Seize, and emphatically described the Republic as the offspring of sedition and the parent of despotism. Some members of the Left threw in his teeth the name of Philippe Egalite—and an attempt was made to pull him bodily out of the tribune. There are people who believe, in spite of these edifying proofs of the harmony and conciliatory feelings of hostile parties, that an accord will be established. We shall see.—English Paper.

TROUBLE IN MARYLAND PRISON

The Baltimore Sun says that while the convicts, over six hundred in number, in the Maryland Penitentiary were seated at dinner, on Sunday, 17th inst., one of the colored convicts named Justice Shipley, rose from his place and walked out to kitchen, which adjoins the large the dining-room. All the convicts are fed in this dining-room together, at long rows of narrow benches like the forms in a school-room, the whites and blacks separate, with a guard over them, stationed on elevated places in the main aisle and at the top and bottom of the room, with a watch at the doors also. The convicts come in in squads, marching by lock-step, during the working days from their shops, and on Sundays from the corridors in which their cells are located. Not a word is spoken at meal times, or indeed at any other time in the prison, silence being the rule enforced by discipline. No one is allowed to rise from meals until all are through, then the signal is given and the convicts retire in squads as they entered.

The colored man Shipley went out into the kitchen without saying anything and without permission. Four officers were on duty in the room. Shipley, on reaching the kitchen, drew from under his clothing a bar of iron, which he had taken from his bedstead and secreted. With this weapon in hand he rushed upon the officer of the prison in charge of the kitchen, Mr. John T. Barber, and attempted to brain him. Mr. Barber, with great coolness, retreated towards the dresser or cupboard, where his revolver was lying, and after obtaining the weapon ordered the desperate convict to his place again. In the meantime the officers in charge of the dining-room remained at their posts over the regiment of convicts engaged with their meal. The negro Shipley still continuing his desperate assault upon Mr. Barber, and the officer finding his life in peril, fired the ball from the revolver, striking the prisoner on the forehead over the eye and glancing from the skull bone. This did not intimidate the convict, and the officer fired again. The second shot struck full in the convict's mouth, carrying away a front tooth, the ball passing through the tongue. Wounded badly as he was, the convict continued his desperate assault, and received a third shot over the hip joint.

After receiving this wound he rushed back into the dining-room, where, with his mouth bleeding and all the prisoners excited by the reports of fire-arms which could be heard in the breathless silence that prevailed, he called upon the other convicts to rise. Almost simultaneously with this call the six hundred prisoners, whites and blacks, sprang to their feet, and matters assumed a threatening aspect; but the coolness and bravery of the officers, who, drawing their revolvers, threatened to kill the first man who left his place, had the effect of restoring order. It was a moment of intense excitement, which nothing but the icy coolness and bravery of the guard could have conquered. One white convict, under the tempting excitement of the moment, came out into the aisle and, with voice and manner, essayed to play a part in leadership; but he was met with a loaded revolver at his head, the officer holding it telling him, in a quiet, conversational tone, 'If you don't take your seat instantly, I will blow out your brains.' He sat down at once. The rest of the convicts found it prudent to imitate the example of obedience. The instigator of the mutiny, wounded as he was with three balls, was only taken after a most desperate resistance, in which he was knocked down."

BENEFICIAL EFFECT OF USEFUL EMPLOYMENT ON PRISONERS.

The introduction of useful employments into prison, constitutes, says the annual report of the directors of English Convict Prisons, a main cause of an astonishing diminution of crime referred to by them. The figures show a total of 8,852 convictions during the past year, as compared with 10,741 in 1869, and 15,549 in 1864, a very remarkable exhibit certainly. It is believed the right way of appealing to the victims has here been discovered at last—the secret being useful employment, and as a London paper says it is easy to see in what a number of ways it must act beneficial. "Instead of the monotony of picking oakum, a monotony in which the mind of the burglar, like that of Mr. Tennyson's Guinivere, goes slipping back on the old pleasant sins, is superseded by the comparatively intellectual tasks of the smith, the painter, the shoemaker, the tailor. One may imagine that even the tone of the physique, on which the moral tone, after all, much depends, is improved by pleasant and profitable labor. All of us know that we are never so ready to be sulky, ill-tempered, mischievous, and peevish as when our tissues want restoring, our hands employment, our minds occupation. Desœuvrement, to use the French word for which our vigorous race has no equivalent, means feeble health and unamiable character among the respectable classes, and it means purposes of actual crime with the criminal population. Useful employment keeps them from such imaginations, and enable them to find a trade and an honest livelihood when they are released from gaol. In this matter there is still much to be done; and as the penal colony seems impracticable, prisoners' aid societies are one of the best outlets for benevolence. But more than half the battle is won when a man or a woman has acquired a taste for, or a habit of, working. It is pleasant to find that women are set to work which has a beauty of its own, and in its way an elevating effect. Female prisoners are busy with mosaic pavements; out of 233 discharged from Working prison 30 have learnt to work at mosaic tiles. A smaller number have acquired the art and mystery of plain needle-work, six can wash and two can cook. It is complained that the women do not care to push their literary education beyond two of the R's, writing and reading. In this modest view of their literary wants and powers they only take after some of their sisters who ought to know better. On the other hand, the male schools work admirably, and it is said that some men over sixty years of age have learned to read."

AN AWFUL FATE.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Mrs. Mary Mills, wife of J. W. Mills, senior member of the firm of Mills, Spelmeier & Co., for six weeks past has been confined to her room by severe illness, and was just recovering, and had intended to come down stairs to dinner yesterday. Feeling pretty well yesterday morning, she engaged in light employment about her room, and at the time the accident occurred [about eleven o'clock] was cutting out a dress pattern in front of the grate. Her back was turned to the fire, and she had no knowledge of her danger until the flames began to leap over her shoulders and lap her cheeks with their death-telling breath. The poor woman describes this moment in the most terrible manner, when she realized that the flames were enwrapping her body. She says that all the incidents of death by fire which she had ever read about came up before her mind like a vivid panorama.

Her presence of mind was completely gone. She was only a few feet from the bed, where several blankets were spread. It would have been but the work of a moment to have snatched up one of those woollen extinguishers and with it smothered the flames. But as in every other case of the kind, she in her terror did just the worst possible thing she could have done. Her fright led her to seek the presence of others, and she rushed screaming down stairs. At each step she made the fatal flames gathered strength and breadth, until by the time she reached the kitchen they enveloped her as in a cloud. The first object to meet her eye on getting below was the cisterns, and she made a desperate effort to raise the covering for the purpose of jumping in. But her strength was already failing her, and she fell hopelessly to the floor, a smouldering, blazing heap. The only person in the house at the time was the servant girl, who was perfectly beside herself with fright, and utterly unable to render her mistress any aid.

The agonizing screams of Mrs. Mills brought the neighbors to the scene, but too late to render any assistance. The terrible work was done. Nearly every article of clothing the suffering woman had worn was burned off, and the body from the waist to the feet was a crispy mass of suffering flesh. The tight under-garment about the waist, breast and shoulders saved that part of the body from serious injury, else death would have come at once. It is only that part of the body that was not burned to death. The poor victim lies writhing and clutching invisible objects, and screaming almost constantly. If her nervous system recovers from the shock she may live suffering on for several days. The suffering lady does not realize her true condition, but talks continually between her screams of what a warning it will be to her when she recovers, to avoid carelessness about fire.

A PLOT FOR A NOVEL.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph writes to that journal: Novelists in search of a story might do well to work up a most remarkable and romantic case which has just come before the Petition Committee of the Assembly. The facts are briefly these: Jean Thierry, the son of a cobbler, ran away from his parents in search of adventure at the age of fourteen. After going round the world in various characters he met with a rich friend, who left him his fortune, with which he finally settled down in Venice, where he died and bequeathed all he had, amounting to 20,000,000 francs, to his family. This was in 1676. As soon as the fact became known Thierrys from all parts of France rushed to Venice, but the bank, after paying large sums to persons who were subsequently found to have no legitimate claim, stopped short, and put the matter into the hands of the law, where it appears to have slept till 1797. In that year Bonaparte destroyed the Republic of Venice, and seized the public Treasury, together with the Thierry succession. Since then no less than 300 persons have laid claim to it unsuccessfully. The last alleged heir is a Mme. Cotton, who swears she is the only descendant in a direct line. The Petition Committee put aside her claim on the ground that the matter is before the tribunal. Such appears, in fact, to be the case; but, as it has already been there since 1869, it is likely to remain there a few years longer. The succession is said to amount now to 100,000,000 francs.

POISONOUS CLOTHING.

The Boston Globe says:—And now poison has got into things to wear as well as into things to eat, so that people who would be on the safe side must avoid both food and clothes. Pro. Gintl, according to the Frankfort Gazette, has found out that a certain number of English and Alsatian manufacturers have lately in "printing fabrics been substituting for albumen cheaper materials, such as arseniate of glycerine and acetate of clay. They do not scruple to sell fabrics containing two or three grammes of arsenical acid per yard under the form of arseniate of clay. This is especially the case with printed calicoes and muslins presenting white designs on a violet ground, or calicoes with yellowish brown or brownish red patterns shades which the uninitiated buy without suspecting the danger incurred in wearing them. The arsenic is not in an indissoluble combination, for on the fabrics being placed in water for a few seconds they give off a considerable quantity of it. These productions are generally sold at a low price, and have evidently not been washed after being printed, as this would have removed a portion of the color." This is worse than lignine in table syrup, for a person can contrive to subsist without that toothsome though treacherous delicacy, but in these hard times who can keep out of calicoes and muslins? People who wear such goods in yellowish broun or brownian red may find some compensation for the risk they run in being able to get good seats in the street-cars, which we suppose will be liberally patronized by the undertakers.
