Work by Bishop's prof shortlisted

By Catherine Dean
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Regarding Fauré, edited by Bishop's University music professor Tom Gordon, made the short list of the 1999 Prix Opus, given by the Conseil Québécois de la musique. This is the first time an English book has been awarded such an honour.

Gordon described the genesis of the book.

"It's a complete Bishop's story. 1995 was the 150th anniversary of Gabriel Fauré," he said. "He was the teacher of Ravel and was a very important French composer at the end of the 19th and in the early 20th century – a very influential, very important composer whose music I have always loved as a musicologist. I had never done any research on his work and it became a personal project to get to know more about Fauré and his work. I decided to invite everyone who had written something about him. It was the only sesquicentennial conference on Fauré. It was held at Bishop's University in May of 1995 and enjoyed the participation of scholars from France, England, the United States and across Canada."

Fauré is probably best known for his romantic work in the late 19th-century.

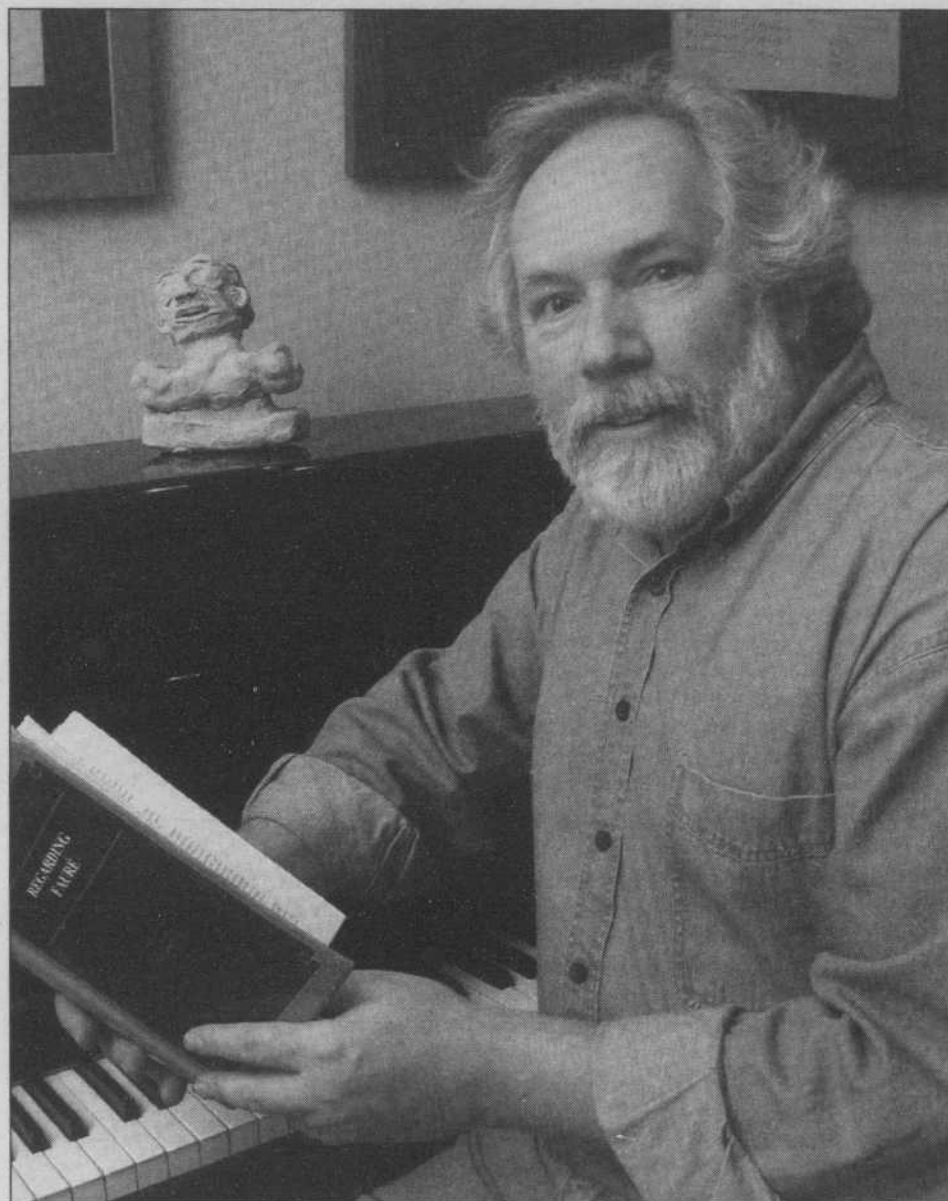

"His best known work is a setting of The Requiem," Gordon said. "Many composers - Mozart through Verdi did settings of The Requiem. Fauré's is distinctive because it leaves out hell and retribution and looks at Paradise and the welcoming of the angels. It is set in the most sensual music you could imagine, which is why it is one of the most frequently performed of the requiem settings."

Fauré's work was not elitist.

"His songs were written so they could be performed well by amateur singers instead of by professional opera stars," Gordon said. "Fauré says in his letters that they put too much emphasis on their technique. He was extremely popular with music lovers, but not with musical performers."

Though Fauré's early music was considered more traditional, his music of the early 20th century was as avant-garde as that of Debussy and Ravel.

"Everyone who contributed papers (to the conference) did so in light of the anomalies of the composer loved by amateurs and ignored by professionals who wrote music a lot of amateurs would find too weird and too adventurous," Gordon said.

Gordon and the other participants were particularly pleased to welcome scholar, Jean-Michel Nectoux to the conference.

"Jean-Michel Nectoux is the world's foremost Fauré scholar and has remained close to the Fauré family. Over the last 30 years, he has published Fauré's correspondence, critical writings on his music, edited his music for republication and has added an ever-more comprehensive biography of Fauré. Not only did he write one of the best essays in the volume, but he brought with him two young performers who did a series of concerts during the conference. At the conference, he came to everyone's paper – it was like a scholarly laying-of-hands," Gordon enthused.

Gordon's next project will examine the work of French writer Jean Cocteau.

Donation Luc LaRochelle: A history of photography

The Bishop's University Art Gallery presents the exhibition Donation Luc LaRochelle: A History of photography through the collection of the Musée des beaux-arts de Sherbrooke.

French, British, American and Canadian photographs are included in the memorial exhibition highlighting LaRochelle's gifts to the Sherbrooke museum.

LaRochelle, lawyer, art lover and man of letters, has gathered an important collection of 600 works of art, 300 of which have been donated to the museum. Bishop's presents the collection of photographs, which offers a glimpse of the history of modern photography.

The exhibit runs from Jan. 12 to Feb. 20. Opening hours are Tuesday to Sunday from 12 to 5 p.m. The opening reception takes place on Jan. 19 from 5 to 7 p.m.

Let your taste buds do the walking – fine dining is a Townships tradition

L'Arlequin captures the flavours of Europe

By Sunil Mahtani

Picture this: You enter an elegant dining room tastefully decorated in deep greens and reds which stylishly offset the wood furniture. On the walls are serene, small-format paintings and tiny lamps. The service is excellent and the cuisine is drawn from a most colourful culinary palette. Each course improves upon the last in subtlety and richness.

Imagine all that – and you can bring your own wine!

The affordable eatery is Restaurant L'Arlequin on Belvédère Street in Sherbrooke. Owners Frédéric Paul and Jean-François Ruel specialize in European cuisine and each mouth-watering dish tastes as good as it sounds, all delivered with style and substance by chef Christian Fréchette and sous chef Marie-Josée Dodier, who did a magnificent job the night my companion and I ate there.

The owners obviously adhere to the principle that a few main dishes done exquisitely is better than the mediocrity that inevitably faces a small restaurant that attempts a great number of dishes in the name of offering selection.

L'Arlequin has about 15 main dishes served in the evening, but they are so brilliantly prepared one misses nothing. And there is enough variety in the main courses to please even the most discerning tastes.

But let's not get ahead of ourselves. A good meal must be savoured from the starter. We begin with the soup.

It must be said that most restaurants unfortunately do not make a good soup. My experience has been that soups in local eateries are either watered down or so thick with corn starch they are inedible. Either way they are bland.

This is not the case with L'Arlequin. The Velouté de poissons is an excellent fish soup, very smooth and creamy with a little punch to it. My friend's Potage du marché, the daily soup which tonight was Crème de legumes, was also light and smooth. Both were served in perfect, modest portions and left us in anxious anticipation of the delicacies to come.

The appetizers were also delicious and refined. The Quenelles de chèvre frais aux deux sesames grillés was an attractive dish of creamy goat's cheese formed to look like honeycombs covered in black and brown grilled sesame seeds. The delicate cheese was served with tomatoes, cucumber, salad which included the eye-catching kale, and a creamy white house dressing.

The Salade de thon frais et fines herbes was a delightful surprise featuring tiny chunks of fresh tuna – the real thing – veggies and olives around the plate.

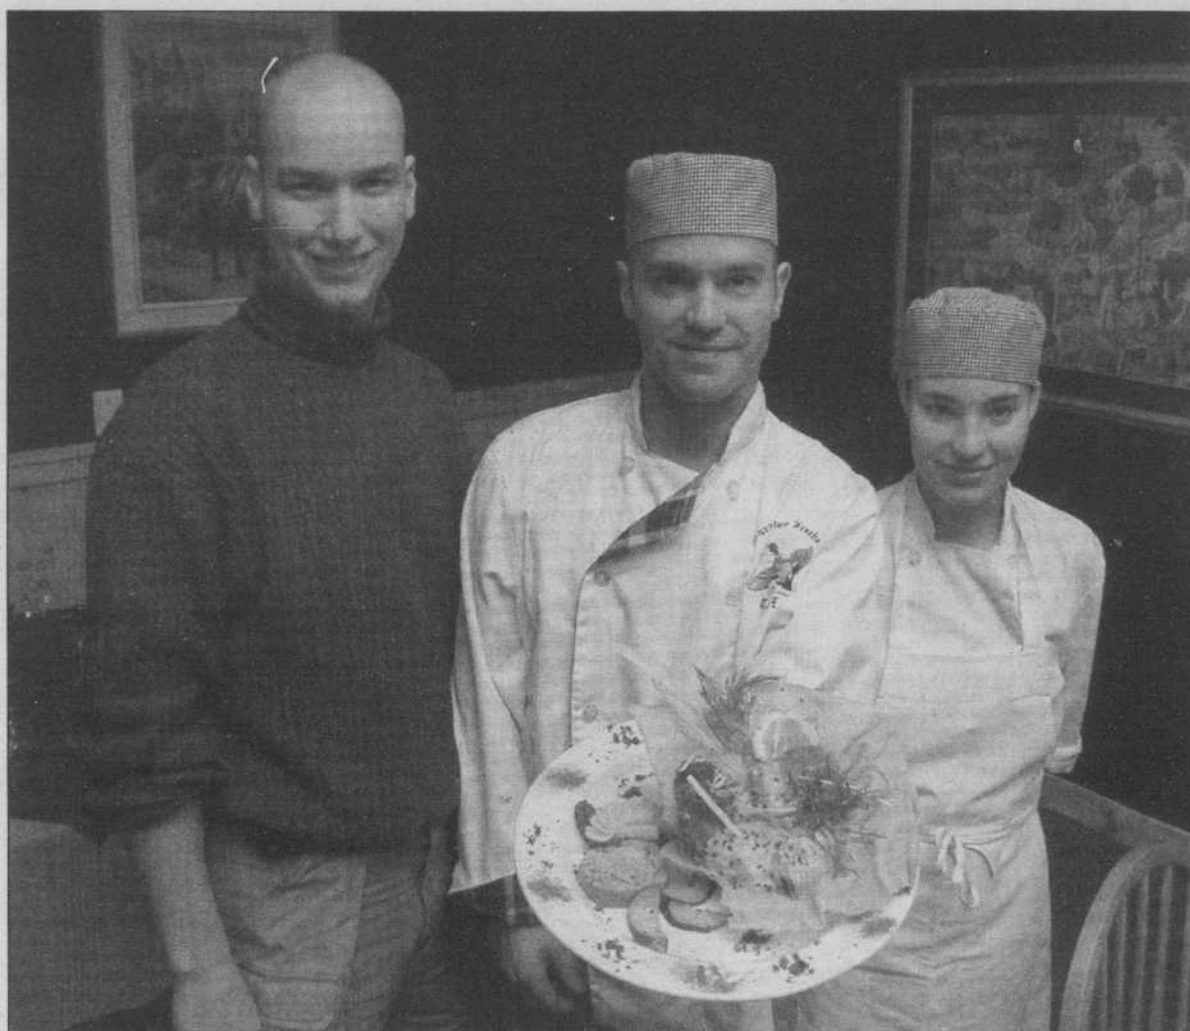

If these were just the appetizers, imagine the meals.

The delicate odours of the triumphant main dishes preceded them to our table and started our juices flowing.

The Rosette d'agneau à la crème de brie et miel was a lamb dish that simply melted in the mouth. Tender slices of lamb were served with an excellent subtly sweet and sour dark sauce. It was served with puréed beets, herbed potatoes and al dente veggies.

The Aguillette de canard aux noix d'acajou et érable followed the lead of the lamb. It was a fabulous, tender duck dish covered with ground walnuts and a pleasant maple sauce. It came with the same fine accompaniments.

We decided to try some cheeses and were served a varied selection including Le béneictin, a blue cheese from St-Benoît-du-lac; Le Biquet, a goat's cheese from Chesterville; and Le Victor et Berthold, made with unpasteurized milk in Notre-L'Arlequin owner Frédéric Paul, chef Christian Fréchette and sous chef Marie-Josée Dodier... creating culinary delights.

PERRY BEATON/SPECIAL

Dame-de-Lourdes. They were elegantly served with pears, apples, oranges and starfruit.

By this point, we expected the desserts to be exquisite and were not disappointed.

The Gâteau mousse au chocolat et Grand-Marnier was a sublime, smooth creation that would satisfy any chocolate.

The pièce de résistance was the Mille-feuille aux amandes, Cappuccino et Tia Maria, in which the layers of light pastry were covered with bars of real chocolate and almond paste, with just a hint of coffee and Tia Maria. Simply amazing.

The coffee was bold and punctuated the meal with the confidence expressed throughout the evening.

Two table d'hôtes, not including gratuity, costs around $68.

Other mouth-watering dishes on the table d'hôte include Fricassée de ris de veau et foies de faisans à la coriandre et olives; Éventail de boeuf et foie gras à la grenobloise; and Portfeuille de thon rouge et langoustines à la florentine.

A seven-course Menu Gourmand is offered for around $34.50 and an eight-service Menu Gastronomique will cost you $42.50.

They are also open for lunch and nine daily specials cost between $6.95 and $13.95.

Often the service at a restaurant is simply an afterthought for the owners, but at L'Arlequin, they take pride in catering to the every whim of their clients. They've got it right off the bat, with water glasses waiting on the table for customers, but only on the reserved tables for a most personalized service. And when the charming waitress didn't know the answer to our question about what a Filet de vivanneau was in English, she phoned and promptly returned with the answer, Red Snapper.

Frédéric Paul and Jean-François Ruel have taken everything into account to create one of the finest dining experiences one can have. Make your reservations now.

CSIS spy museum: don't touch, don't look

By Jim Bronskill
SOUTHAM NEWS
OTTAWA

Headed about Canada's new spy museum? Of course not - it's secret. And the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, home of the confidential collection, isn't planning guided tours any time soon.

Hidden away in a security vault at CSIS headquarters, just east of Ottawa, the technology museum features an array of cameras, recorders and other devices the spy service has used over the years to track, watch and tape suspected subversives and terrorists. Many of the items on display still rate a "secret or top secret security classification," says a CSIS document describing the effort to "highlight the service's rich technological heritage and protect its many rare and unique artifacts."

CSIS, created in 1984, succeeded the RCMP Security Service, an elite branch of the Mounties responsible for counter-espionage and terrorism. CSIS deleted portions of the document before releasing it to Southam News under the Access to Information Act. However, it reveals the museum covers four basic themes:

- Telecommunications interception: Devices used for pulling in and processing audio communication.
- Trade craft: Items for clandestine transmission and reception of instructions by covert operatives.
- Surveillance: Gadgets used to identify or track individuals.
- Intrusion: Devices that secretly take photos or record conversations.

"From Cold War-era tape recorders and specialized cameras to trade craft items, the museum offers a rare glimpse into the past and provides hints at today's modern capability," says the CSIS account, prepared last September. The collection includes many one-of-a-kind items created by the service for specific cases, as well as several devices used by foreign spies against Canada and its allies.

CSIS spokesman Dan Lambert said the service strives to keep on top of scientific advances.

"Obviously, innovation and technology is important to us in terms of our job, from a number of different standpoints. Lambert was leery about discussing tools of the spy trade, leaving one to speculate how closely the new museum's artifacts resemble gadgets from the James Bond films, such as the wrist-watch signal tracker or the cell phone equipped with stun prongs.

But the public can view at least a few genuine spy devices. A Havana museum run by Cuba's security service features trophies captured during the island's long-running battle with the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. Code machines and listening devices were disguised as everyday items such as a cigarette lighter or chess set, while a phoney rock hid secret CIA documents and spy gear.

Closer to home, the National Museum of Science and Technology in Ottawa has featured two spy-related exhibits during the past year. Last October, the museum displayed Second World War-era devices used for coding and deciphering secret messages. An ongoing exhibit, Eye Spy, explains the historical role of photographs in espionage, from cameras concealed in ties, hats and watches to modern-day surveillance satellites. The CSIS exhibits, though, have been off limits even to most members of the service.

"While the museum is still under development and construction, visits are restricted to those employees working on the displays," says the CSIS document. "Currently there are no plans to open the museum for organized tours in the near future."

CSIS also reminded employees who visited the museum during construction "not to discuss what they have seen outside the service."

Displaying Deberdt

Parisian-born Christian Deberdt is one of the Townships painters currently featured at the Galerie d'Art Courtemanche, 250 Principale in Magog. His acrylic works are shown alongside Luigi Tiengo and the late Normand Hudon. The three-way show ends early next week, so catch it if you can on Friday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. or Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m.

From novels and biographies to cookbooks and beyond, there's nothing like a good read

Larger than life family gives story wings

Crocodile Soup By Julia Darling

There's not a boring moment in 'Crocodile Soup', Julia Darling's deft, witty and well-paced first novel. This is not only a comic novel, but one which is deeply touching as well.

Gert Hardcastle works for an English museum, seeking a life of quiet obscurity as she looks back on her strange childhood in a house haunted by a lady poet. She lives with Jean, her chameleon-like mother, her twin Frank, competitive and difficult as a child with whom she still shares a mysterious kind of communication and George who loves to bake towering cakes but must leave the family home to look after the family crocodile farm in Africa.

As Gert pursues a love interest in her inept and touching way, we see her childhood unfold - replete with the terrors of the English school system, Gert's inimitable way of refusing to compromise in matters of school, friendship, opinions and manner of dress.

A truncated attempt to run away is both hilarious and sad. Gert's brilliant twin Frank's life with its own contours and detours parallels her own with his foray into private school, Eastern religion and eventual breakdown. Though the two no longer see each other, they communicate frequently.

There is much to admire, in Darling's remarkable descriptions and clever turns of phrase.

Every second page contains such phrases as: "We danced as if we were possessed; stamping the splintering floorboards beneath our feet.", and "A gullible heart? I preserved the phrase and placed it up my sleeve, so that I could look at it later under a magnifying glass."

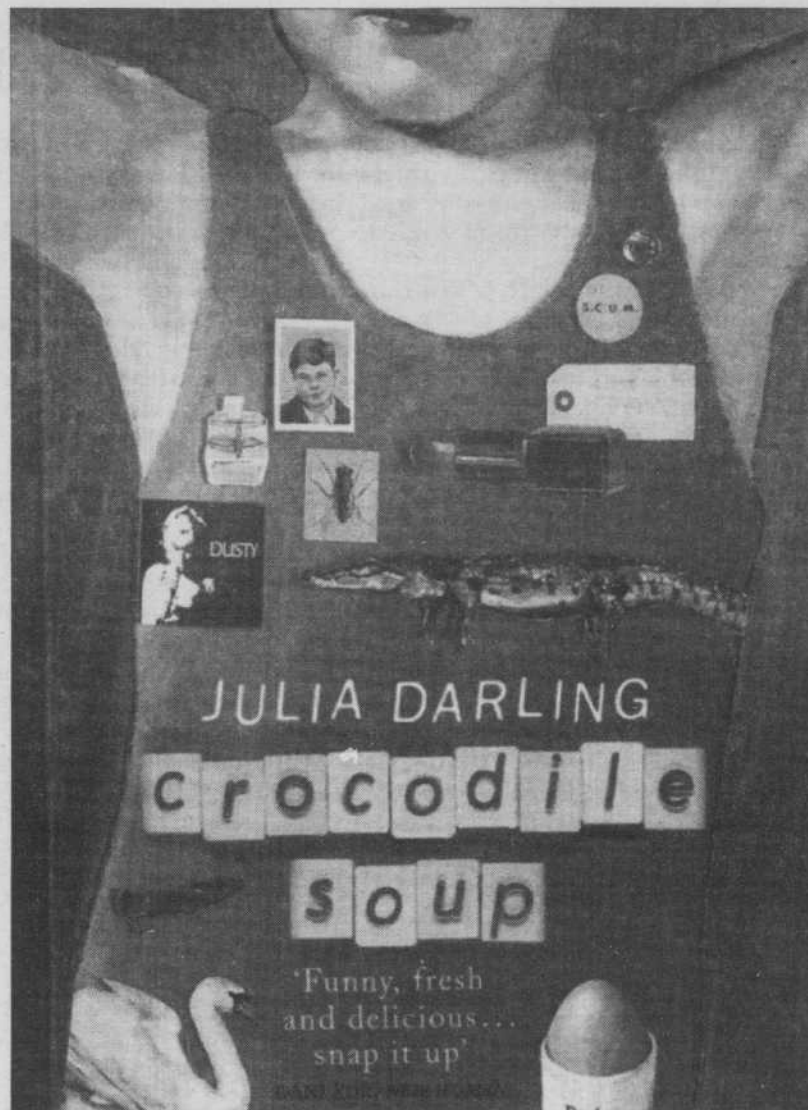

While creating a main character with a family larger than life, there is something wholly believ-

BETWEEN THE COVERS

able in Hardcastle's escapades - her coming to terms with her society, her family and her sexuality. Darling sends up English society and its social mores writing hilariously of a museum director constantly trying to popularize the museum, English schooling, and conformity. Never cruel, but always hilarious, Darling's humour is informed by self-awareness and a penchant for the underdog. Even the peripheral characters in the book - Gert's security guard friend, her school tutor, her mother's bawdy best friend Mabel, her one friend at grammar school are fleshed out and interesting.

One cannot help but root for Hardcastle in her attempts to woo a co-worker at the museum, which ends in a disastrous but hilarious manner. Fortunately, this half-requited love generates a more lasting one and final closure to Hardcastle's childhood and forgiveness of her self-absorbed mother.

Inchbold reveals telling secrets of the past

Ex Libris By Ross King

History buffs and adventure fans will be enthralled by Ross King's latest novel, Ex Libris. This is King's second book. He has also written Domino, a critically acclaimed novel. Born in Canada, King now lives near Oxford.

Seventeenth-century England is rife with superstition and religious unrest in this book. Isaac Inchbold is our unlikely hero as a middle-aged, near-sighted bookseller who rarely ventures beyond the quiet world of his books. He is unwillingly thrown into another world of mystery and intrigue, however, when the enigmatic Lady Marchamont requests his presence at her father's castle. Thus begins an adventure filled with dark castles, secret rooms, strange coincidences at every step, suspenseful chase sequences and even more excitement.

A mysterious book is the object of Inchbold's quest as Lady Marchamont hires him to find this valuable work, a lost Hermetic text supposedly written by an Egyptian priest. Inchbold follows the clues to discover that all is not what it appears to be - including Lady Marchamont.

The characters and plots are conventional; there is nothing too outrageous here. The focus is placed on developing the story, not the characters as Inchbold seeks to solve the mystery of the lost parchment.

There are two main plots in this book: Isaac Inchbold in 1660 searching for the lost book and Lady Marchamont's father and his two friends in 1640, smuggling this same book out of Prague and into England under threat of religious persecution. We get a sense of the England at this time, and the risks people took to save important scientific and other knowledge found in books.

BETWEEN THE COVERS

CAROLINE

This is a time in England when Catholics and Protestants alike suppressed books about science, the occult and philosophy that contradicted Christian scriptures. Politics and religion were intertwined, and both were unstable. Civil wars were rampant among Catholics and Protestants, and among different branches of Protestants. People could be killed for possessing or smuggling banned books.

Our hero finds himself unraveling the past as he tries to connect Lady Marchamont's search for a missing book with Sir Walter Raleigh's search for the legendary El Dorado, a lost city of Gold. It is amusing to follow this fearful, asthmatic character become a risk-taking, determined character as he decides to solve the mystery on his own.

Like his character Isaac Inchbold, Ross King certainly knows his stuff when it comes to history and literature. King demonstrates his vast knowledge of religion, astronomy, philosophy and even of explorations of the New World. He gives lengthy information about Galileo's scientific breakthroughs and his subsequent religious persecution along with referring to many Greek and Roman myths along the way.

These history lessons are interesting but King can be very long-winded. His plot twists are always surprising and he succeeds in delivering a suspenseful and exciting tale, but the long descriptions of history often detract from the adventurous storyline. Still, the book is fun to read and King always keeps us guessing.

Expositions variées pour bien commencer l'année

Par Guylaine Hébert

COLLABORATION SPÉCIALE

Ouf! C'est exaltant la période des Fêtes, mais le calme est le bienvenu après cette succession de réceptions et de bombances, non? Voilà donc le moment idéal pour s'offrir des sorties culturelles plus paisibles telles que la visite d'expositions...

Le Comité d'action culturelle Magog-Orford et la Ville de Magog nous invitent à découvrir, si ce n'est déjà fait, les huiles et aquarelles de l'artiste-peintre estrienne Emöke de Galocsy, d'origine hongroise mais vivant au Québec depuis 1952. Ses œuvres enrichissent, dit-on, nombre de collections privées et publiques. À visiter aux heures d'ouverture de l'Hôtel de ville de Magog jusqu'au 25 février.

Toujours en périphérie et jusqu'au 30 janvier cette fois, l'Espace Hortense, au P'tit Bonheur de St-Camille, présente les œuvres de Pierre Bail. Féru d'architecture patrimoniale et de muséologie, Pierre Bail expose quarante toiles sous le titre Architectonique. Il ne faut pas s'attendre ici à de l'art figuratif, car cet artiste "laisse tomber l'image" au profit du geste et de l'expression.

En plein centre-ville de Sherbrooke, deux nouvelles expositions prendront l'affiche à la Galerie Horace à compter d'aujourd'hui. Il s'agit, d'une part, de Ode à un poète de l'artiste Hélène Belzile, dont les travaux s'inspirent essentiellement de l'œuvre de Gaston Miron, L'Homme rapaillé. Ce "rapaillage" d'objets cueillis dans la nature et de fragments de poèmes cherche ici à exprimer la "dimension poétique du monde". En outre, salle deux, Mario Pouliot interroge l'acte de création par des sculptures et peintures de diverses techniques.

Souignons au passage que le Regroupement des artistes des Cantons de l'Est, fondé il y a quelque 25 ans et qui dirige la Galerie Horace depuis une quinzaine d'années, propose chaque mois des expositions doubles dans le souci constant de favoriser la recherche et l'innovation.

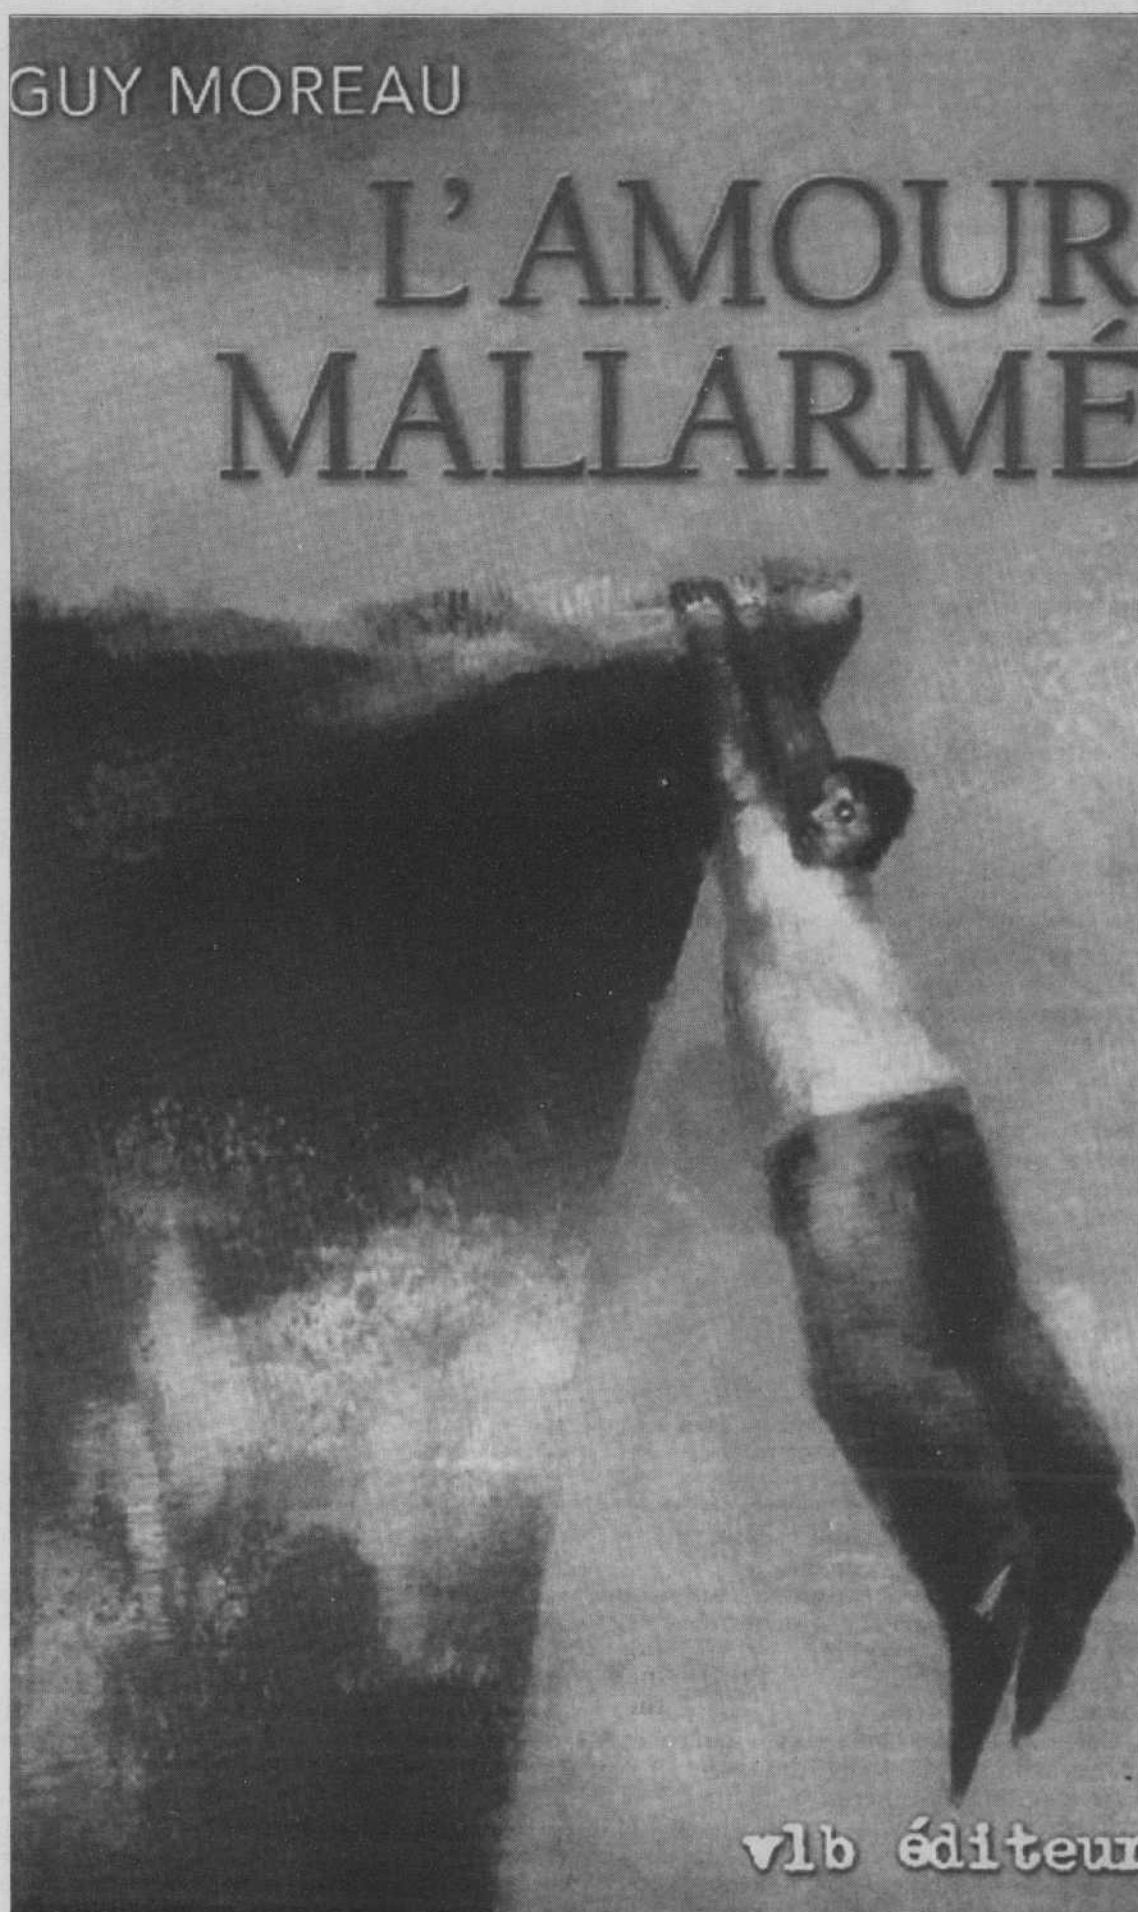

Ceux qui préfèrent les assises du passé apprécieront, quant à eux, l'exposition permanente de la Société d'histoire de Sherbrooke intitulée Sherbrooke 1802-2002, deux siècles d'histoire. La salle Andrée-Désilets du Centre d'interprétation de l'histoire de Sherbrooke réunit notamment plusieurs photos, objets, dispositifs interactifs et reproductions de journaux d'époque qui mettent en scène l'histoire de notre capitale régionale, qui célébrera ses deux cents ans en 2002.

C'est plutôt votre "L-Z-Boy" qui vous manque? Alors installez-vous confortablement, car vous serez rivié à votre fauteuil si vous mettez la main sur le dernier livre couronné du Prix Robert-Cliche, L'amour Mallarmé. J'ai carrément subtilisé à un ami ce premier roman de l'auteur estrien Guy Moreau après en avoir dévoré les premières pages. La sensibilité et la langue désinvolte de cet adolescent, Mallarmé, qui raconte ses premiers émois amoureux, sont un pur délice. L'authenticité du personnage conjugué à un environnement qui nous est familier - Windsor, St-Denis de Brompton, Sherbrooke... - touche droit au cœur.

Si les Fêtes vous ont donné un regain d'enthousiasme pour la musique folklorique, sachez que Presse Boutique café, coin King et Wellington, propose, les premiers mardis de chaque mois, et pour un prix dérisoire, des musiques traditionnelles du Québec, d'Irlande et d'ailleurs interprétées par des musiciens de la région. Exceptionnellement ce mois-ci, la soirée se tiendra mardi prochain, le 11 janvier.

Enfin, ceux et celles qui souhaitent entendre les meilleures pièces du répertoire de David Bowie peuvent se rendre au Café du Palais, mercredi soir, afin d'assister au spectacle hommage de la formation Changes. À noter que ce bar, dont la popularité semble n'avoir jamais défailli d'une génération à une autre, présente régulièrement de ces spectacles, dont récemment ceux consacrés à Pink Floyd et à Janis Joplin. Une initiative dont même les plus jeunes raffolent.

The myth that plagues Keanu Reeves

By Jamie Portman
SOUTHAM NEWS

The myth has plagued Keanu Reeves for years. It has surfaced repeatedly in the tabloids and has been a hot item on the Internet. It has even made it into the mainstream press. Basically it claims that the young Canadian film star has been involved in some kind of long-term gay relationship - possibly a form of marriage -- with entertainment mogul David Geffen.

Geffen is the former record magnate who joined ranks with Steven Spielberg and Jeffrey Katzenberg to form Hollywood's newest big studio, Dreamworks. Geffen is also openly gay, but he still feels a need to come to Reeves' defence. He told a Los Angeles magazine recently that when the story first started circulating, he hadn't even met Reeves.

But he admits the rumours may have been further fueled when he and Reeves encountered each other at the Geffen Playhouse, a live theatre which Geffen operates in Los Angeles.

"As I was going through the row, there was Keanu Reeves. I looked at him and said: 'So was it as good for you as it was for me?'"

Geffen stresses this was the first time he and Reeves had ever met.

Geffen has also come to the defence of Tom Cruise, who has also been the target of rumours casting doubt on his heterosexuality.

"There are people who are gay who would love to believe that anybody who is cute must be gay," Geffen says. "Unfortunately, it's not so."

SOUTHAM

Movie producer David Geffen denies he and movie star Keanu Reeves, pictured in his latest movie, Matrix, have a romantic relationship.

Canadian producer Barnet Bain's Metafilmics company is continuing its policy of making movies with a spiritual or metaphysical dimension.

It plans a major TV film version of Second Sight, Judith Orloff's best-selling book about a psychiatrist who discovers she has psychic powers.

Last year, Metafilmics survived several scathing reviews and achieved commercial success with its movie starring Robin Williams, What Dreams May Come.

"Our feeling is that there is an explosive change in the landscape of American thought and belief," Bain said recently. "Many people are searching for meaning in life beyond materialism. We want to address that. Our company was founded specifically to produce spiritually informed projects."

The company is currently producing a mini-series on Linda McCartney's life for CBS Television.

British filmmaker Anthony Minghella -- the man responsible for The English Patient and this year's Oscar hopeful, The Talented Mr. Ripley -- is continuing to push the envelope.

In The English Patient, the title character played by Ralph Fiennes spent a large part of the movie dying from burn injuries. In The Talented Mr. Ripley, Matt Damon plays a young sociopathic killer. Now, Minghella has signed a contract with his favourite studio, Miramax, to write and direct a new and as yet untitled movie with truly inflammatory subject matter -- a 15-year-old boy's sexual affair with an older woman, who also happens to be an accused Nazi war criminal.

Disney isn't wasting any time in getting its 1999 animated hit, Tarzan, into the home.

The movie arrives both on home video and DVD on Feb. 1, and in an effort to woo more families into the DVD market, the disc version includes several bonus items: A Tarzan "Read-Along" story, a Trivia game, the original theatrical trailer, Phil Collins' Strangers Like Us video and a sneak preview of Disney's upcoming spring release, Dinosaurs.

Carrey delivers stunning performance as Kaufman

Review of Man on the Moon

By Harry Hodge

After being snubbed for an Oscar nomination last year, Jim Carrey has become a man on a mission by playing a man on the moon.

Ignored by the Academy for his turn in The Truman Show in 1998, Carrey has put together the performance of his career as eccentric comic Andy Kaufman in the highly-anticipated Man On The Moon. Carrey manages to capture the mannerisms and routines of the offbeat comedian, capturing the essence of a character who is at times endearing and at others infuriating. After making a splash with the controversial The People Vs. Larry Flynt, director Milos Forman shows his flair for big-screen biographies of colourful personalities with a penchant for over-the-top exploits.

Forman chronicles Kaufman's rise to stardom from his childhood in Long Island, his unhappy turn as an immigrant mechanic in the hit series Taxi and his run of strange public appearances and publicity stunts. Kaufman seemed to constantly be toying with his audiences, trying to push every button just to see what would happen.

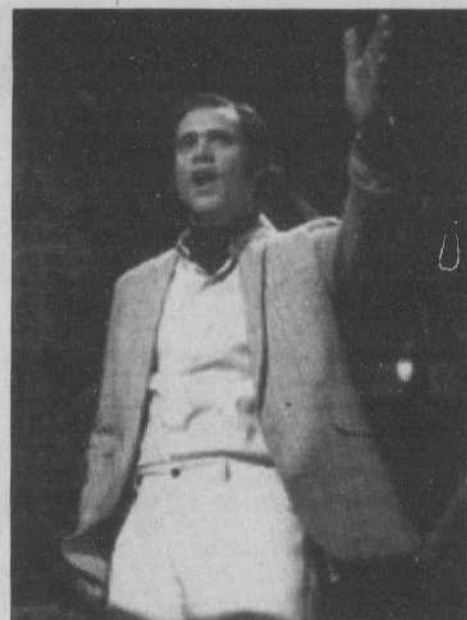

The film also explores Kaufman's relationship with gag writer and friend Bob Zmuda (in a strong performance from Paul Giamatti) as they concoct their warped schemes. Zmuda collaborated with Kaufman on many of his best-remembered shticks, from the creation of the repulsive lounge lizard character Tony Clifton to Kaufman's foray into the world of pro wrestling. In Man On The Moon, Forman documents the comedian's biggest and strangest routines and capers.

Dragged along by his wacky client is agent George Shapiro, played by Danny Devito, and Kaufman's girlfriend, Lynne Margulies, portrayed by Courtney Love. While these are prominent characters in the film, Devito and Love quietly take a back seat as Carrey runs the show. At times wild-eyed and manic and at others vulnerable and tragic, Carrey leaves viewers bleary-eyed as his Kaufman character finally succumbs to cancer.

But here the film resists becoming maudlin and rather focusses on Kaufman's knack for the bizarre and the possibility that Andy is still out there somewhere, set to be unleashed on an unsuspecting 21st-century.

However, the future is now for Jim Carrey, who turns in one of the best performances of 1999. Oscar better not make the same mistake twice.

Jim Carrey as Andy Kaufman... endearing and infuriating.

Pooches, mobsters and pant fires

Reviewed by Paraskevi Mazarakiotis
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

K-911

Charles T. Kanganis' K-911, a sequel to K-9, is a light, adorable film about a cop and his German Shepherd. It offers a mixture of puppy love, guns, police chases and humor.

James Belushi is as wisecracking as ever as Dudley, a cop who cannot get over his wife's death. Consequently, his job and career are falling apart. Dudley's only reason for living is his partner in crime - his dog Jerry Lee (Mac). Lately, however, Captain Byers (James Handy) notices that Jerry Lee's aging is a nuisance on the job and that Dudley must replace him with a younger dog. Dudley is determined to prove that Jerry Lee is still capable of helping him catch the bad guys - even if it means risking his life.

K-911's storyline focuses primarily on Dudley and Jerry Lee's relationship and their emotional journey rather than on police work. For this reason K-911 is bound to please animal lovers more than detective genre fans. Mac's (Jerry Lee) irresistible puppy looks will surely capture the affection of animal lovers.

Pants On Fire

Rocky Collins' romantic comedy about doomed marriages and love triangles is a total bore and disappointment.

Julie (Christy Baron) and Barry (Neil Maflin) are lovers, but they are married to other people. Naively, Barry decides that he wants to marry Julie and ask his wife for a divorce. Indecisive Julie, however, still clings to her husband, Max (Harry O'Reilly), who compulsively lies to her. Julie plays yo-yo with Barry and Max until she gets pregnant and is unsure of whose child it is. Thank God that the pregnancy forces the storyline to come to a long-awaited end!

If Rocky Collins' film is a disappointment it is due to the characters' lack of depth. As an audience, we feel very little sympathy for them. Julie's confusion is understandable, but then she manages to annoy us. Max's selfishness, aggressiveness, and childish behaviour merit our disgust, and Barry's over-sensitivity and naivete are pathetic and sickening.

Save yourselves two hours of boredom.

Mickey Blue Eyes

Kelly Makin's hilarious film is the marriage of the romantic comedy and the gangster genre. Those familiar with the gangster genre will surely get a kick out of this one.

In Mickey Blue Eyes, Hugh Grant is Michael, an Englishman in New York, who falls in love with a mobster's daughter, Gina (Jeanne Tripplehorn). When Michael proposes to Gina, his life gets slightly complicated. To be the perfect son-in-law, Michael must not disappoint Uncle Vitto, who asks him for a simple favour that involuntarily lures him into the Mafia crime scene. One thing leads to another, a deadly accident occurs within the family, and Michael is to blame. With Uncle Vitto as the enemy, the FBI are Mickey's only friends.

One of the film's most memorable and amusing scenes are Michael and Gina's wedding, where FBI agents are disguised as florists, priests, and caterers to entrap Uncle Vitto and family.

Hugh Grant is brilliantly funny as he plays the intimidated, tongue-tied English loverboy who tries to learn the walk and talk in order to pass as Mickey Blue from Kansas City. This role, however, is not very different from the characters he played in Three Weddings and a Funeral, Notting Hill, and Nine Months. It seems that Grant plays the tongue-tied loverboy so well that he cannot get cast as a different character. Hey, if it works for the audience, it works for him.

Soap on the 'Net

TVDATA

The Internet can be a powerful tool for daytime fans. The information online about soaps is abundant. One of the newest Web sites, www.soapoperastore.com, really is one-stop shopping. The site sells merchandise from all the different soap operas, and its auction area gives fans a chance to bid on personal items offered by the stars, as well as wardrobe and set items such as a lamp from Palmer Cortlandt's (James Mitchell, pictured) mansion on All My Children. But there's more to the site than just items to purchase. There is a section devoted to show information including storyline recaps, teasers and on-set gossip. There are also games, puzzles and articles on hot soap-related issues.

Another Website covering all the soap operas is www.soapcity.com. It's an extension of the all-soap opera cable channel SoapCity and is updated daily. It offers a plethora of information on all the daytime soaps, polls, regularly scheduled star chats and a variety of links to other soap sites.

For the official word on all the soaps, each of the big three networks has a Web site for its soaps featuring cast bios, previews and chat rooms.

-General Hospital, One Life to Live, All My Children and Port Charles are at www.abc.com.

-Days of Our Lives and Passions are at www.nbc.com.

-As the World Turns, The Bold and the Beautiful, Guiding Light and The Young and the Restless are at www.cbs.com.

Magazines such as Soap Opera Digest also offer a good portion of what is in their weekly publications at their online sites (the Web address for Soap Opera Digest is www.soapdigest.com).

There are also a number of chat sites that offer open chat rooms where fans can gather to talk about their favorite daytime divas and scoundrels.

Talk City (www.talkcity.com) offers just such a room for Days of Our Lives fans. Another chat site to check out for celebrity and open chats is the appropriately named Yack! site (www.yack.com).

And, of course, soap fans can always check out TVData's site at www.clicktv.com. This column is posted there, along with "Soap Synopsis" and "Soaping Up," a column that lets viewers write their own storylines.

Roosevelt Remembered

TVDATA

For one-third of the 20th century, the most powerful woman in America was Eleanor Roosevelt. Anyone whose misconception of a First Lady is that she is someone relegated to picking china patterns ought to watch Eleanor Roosevelt, an episode of The American Experience airing Monday, Jan. 10, on PBS. The profile is an engaging tribute to the woman whose truly democratic spirit helped millions. Extending over more than two hours, it features rare home movies and the voice of Roosevelt herself.

The documentary begins with her 1884 birth into one of New York's wealthiest families. A homely child whose mother feared her looks would doom her, Roosevelt adored her gadabout father. She was reared by her religious grandmother after both parents died young, but she was truly molded by an English boarding school — where independence was stressed. The education served her well. When she married her cousin Franklin and eventually bore six children (one died at seven months), she always kept her independence. She traveled around the world, shining the light on society's ills.

British Butterflies

TVDATA

Pete Postlethwaite (right) stars as Inspector John McKeown, an abrasive cop who finds a fast friend in a young street urchin he meets during a murder investigation, in the gripping two-part British import The Butterfly Collectors. It airs Sunday and Monday on Showcase Canada.

This is a psychological drama masquerading as a police story. What else would you expect from the creators of the deliciously dark Robbie Coltrane series Cracker? This new two-part drama is the work of the same writing, producing and directing team that made Cracker so successful internationally that it inspired a short-lived Hollywood clone.

Like Cracker, The Butterfly Collectors is only incidentally a police story. It is primarily a character study of two men — one middle-aged, cynical and beaten but still highly moral, and the other young and committed but essentially amoral — and how their unlikely relationship turns destructive. Postlethwaite, the talented British character actor, plays McKeown, a lifelong "cop" who doesn't think much of his work. His prickly personality has stalled his career and contributed to the failure of his marriage. While investigating the murder of a petty drug dealer, he comes across 17-year-old Dex (Jamie Draven), one of two youths who found the body during a break-and-enter. McKeown quickly dismisses Dex as a murder suspect and thinks little more about him. But in the course of the investigation, McKeown learns details about the life of the teen-ager that threaten to break down his cynical reserve.

Blue Returns

TVDATA

NYPD Blue stars Andrea Thompson and Kim Delaney return to prime time when the ABC series' seventh season kicks off on Tuesday, Jan. 11. In "Loogie Nights," Detectives Sipowicz and Sorenson (Dennis Franz, Rick Schroder) are disgusted when two fellow cops who may have beaten a man to death expect the investigators to cover for them. On the home front, Sipowicz continues to struggle to raise his son after the death of his wife, and Kirkendall (Thompson) considers reuniting with her ex-husband.
