RECORD/DAN HAWALESHKA

- Dunkin's Laurel Sherrer finishes the biggest project of her career as production manager of Chronicle of Canada.

Friday morning in the life of a secret agent

"And take upon's the mystery of things
As if we were God's spies."

Lear

It was daylight. Special Agent Tadeusz 'Bugs' Letarte rolled over in his wide white bed, opened one eye and looked at the clock. 7:19. Damn. Another day. He tried to think what day this was and decided it must be Friday. Damn.

He threw back the bedclothes, rolled the other way and swang his feet to the floor. He reached for his slippers with his right hand and put the right slipper on his right foot first. Left-handers, he thought, probably put the left slipper on first. You think of things like that when you're a spy but the thought gave him no pleasure.

He stood up, felt his pyjama bottoms begin to slide and stopped them by spreading his knees, pulling them up and fastening the button over his belly. "Molson muscle," he thought, as he scratched his right buttock with his right hand and headed into the kitchen. He yawned as he reached for the electric kettle and ran water into it from the tap. He looked through the kitchen window and saw a fresh powdering of snow over everything. Damn.

He turned off the tap, plugged the kettle into the socket on the back of the stove and scratched his left buttock with his left hand as he padded into the bathroom. He stood over the bowl, found the fo-reskin of his flaccid pecker with the thumb and index finger of his right hand, pulled it out and stared straight ahead at the pattern on the wallpaper as the night's accumulated poisons ran into the bowl. He farted and sighed. Damn. Another day.

By Tadeusz Letarte

When he had finished, he went to the bathroom sink, ran cold water into his cupped hands and splashed it onto his face. Something in the Bible about that. Moses or somebody was ordered by the Lord to watch his people drink at the river and choose only those who cupped water in their hands instead of those who stooped to drink it straight. Nobody knows why. He dried his hands and face on the towel and felt the stubble on his chin. Later.

The cat's dish was empty again, which explained the scrabbling he'd heard in the night. The cat had been trying to serve himself but hadn't been able to open the cat-food box. Stupid cat. He opened the box and poured Purina Cat Chow into the dish.

The cat must have heard him because he came quickly in from somewhere and said "Prp."

"You're welcome," Bugs answered.

red. The cat was apricot-colored, pineapple-shaped and made mostly of foam rubber. Leopold Bloom's cat said "Mrg" or something. Ulysses. Day in the life of.

Special Agent Tadeusz Letarte padded back to the kitchen scratching his right buttock with his right hand, yawning again, and continued on to the bedroom. He found his pants and put his right leg in first. Left-handers probably do it the other way, he thought. The incidence of left-handedness is higher among homosexuals than among the general population. Fact. Nobody knows why.

He took a clean shirt from the drawer and put that on, the right arm in the right sleeve first. In heraldry, he thought, the left side is sinister. Something menacing about that. A Bar Sinister was the sign of illegitimacy. Simon Bar Sinister was the name of a villain in that clever cartoon spoof of the Perils of Pauline. Sweet Polly Purebred versus Simon the Bastard. He took socks from the drawer.

You could have a Jewish villain and call him Simon Bar Mitsvah. William the Conqueror was a bastard, son of Robert the Devil. He wondered if the Conqueror's coat of arms had a Bar Sinister. Could ask the lady at the university library but she wouldn't know. They never know the answers to anything you ask them.

Dressed, he returned to the kitchen and saw with a certain satisfaction that the water in the kettle was boiling, steam clouding the corner of the kitchen window. He opened the cupboard with his right hand, took a teabag from the jar with his left and dropped it into a mug from the drainboard. He unplugged the kettle and poured steaming water over the teabag. It turned brown almost immediately and darkened as he watched.

He found a spoon in the dishrack, bounced the teabag up and down three times, then mashed it against the side of the cup with the back of the spoon. He fished it out and dropped it into the garbage. Real spies, he supposed, take black coffee in the morning — stale coffee — sweetened with a shot of rye.

He added a spoon of sugar, a splash of milk and stirred it with his spoon which he then dropped into the sink. Damn.

His stomach gurgled and he found a donut in the breadbox. Jelly. Strawberry, he supposed, although it was impossible to tell without sending it down to the lab for analysis. He ate it, whatever it was, washing down every couple of bites with a swig of tea while leaning against the sink and staring out the window at the snow.

He wondered if the incidence of happily married couples is greater when the party of the first part married a party of the opposite hand. Mix and match. Somebody somewhere was probably drawing taxpayer's money to do research and publish a paper on it.

The mind of a spy is a treasure trove of idiot information. You sit in a bar in the afternoon watching the little golden bubbles rise through a glass of cold draft and you think about left-handedness and happy marriages while people look at you and wonder why you aren't at work like everybody else in the world. You could tell them you are researching a scientific paper. A Dissertation Upon the Mechanical Laws and Properties Appertaining to the Creation, Arising and Dispersal of Gaseous Spheroids in a Glass of Canadian Ale.

Friday. He put his empty cup in the sink, got his hat and trenchcoat from the hook behind the door and put them on, right arm first. Won't you step into my parlor? said the flyder to the spy, and I'll suck out all your juices.

He walked into the living room and sat down before the battered old Underwood upright on his desk. With his right hand, his good right hand, he took a sheet of virgin paper from the drawer and feed it into the machine, then turned up the collar of his trenchcoat, pulled down the brim of his hat and began to type.

von Bulow film realistic, lawyer says

By Ingrid Abramovitch
The Canadian Press

Harvard law professor Alan Dershowitz, who wrote the book on which the movie Reversal of Fortune is based, recalls once trying to correct the grammar of his former client Claus von Bulow.

The Danish aristocrat, convicted of trying to murder his millionaire wife Sunny by injecting her with an insulin overdose, gave his lawyer a dark smile.

"Oh professor, what you are saying is that I'm better at comas than at commas," answered the enigmatic von Bulow, whose wife has been comatose since 1980.

Reversal of Fortune is the story of how Dershowitz managed to reverse von Bulow's attempted murder conviction and persuade a higher court that he was innocent.

The film is playing at Merrill's Showplace in Newport. Check the WHATSON listings.

As directed by Barbet Schroeder, it is also about the strange relationship between the scrappy, Brooklyn-born lawyer (played by Ron Silver), and von Bulow, portrayed with sinister elegance by Jeremy Irons.

"I thought (von Bulow) was probably guilty when I took the case," says Dershowitz, whose 29-year-old son was a producer of the film. "Everybody in America thought he was guilty."

WHY TOOK CASE

During an interview in Montreal where Dershowitz spoke to McGill University law students, the U.S. lawyer said he accepted von Bulow's case for several reasons.

The first is his affinity for "cases of last resort." Often, these are also clients who make headlines, like television evangelist Jim Bakker, hotel owner Leona Helmsley and Jeffrey MacDonald, the former Green Beret physician convicted in 1979 of murdering his pregnant wife and children. MacDonald was the subject of the book and television movie Fatal Vision.

But the typical Dershowitz case has an element beyond its mere tabloid potential.

He is an ardent defender of the U.S. legal system and Bill of Rights, and felt that von Bulow's case could put both to the test.

"Why are we helping guilty people to get off?" an indignant student asks Dershowitz in the film.

"Because," he responds, "the system is there for the one innocent person who gets accused."

CHANGED VIEW

Studying the trial that convicted von Bulow, Dershowitz says he came to believe in his client's innocence.

"Suddenly the evidence started to fall apart," he says.

But while evidence of Sunny von Bulow's drug addiction and depression came to light during the Stamps commemorate Canada's historical conflicts

O Canada, our home and native land/ We stand on guard for thee. Those are some of the words from our national anthem. I wonder just how much they really mean.

Unlike many countries, Canada is a nation that came into being through negotiation rather than through conflict. The wars involving British North America prior to 1867 were those involving British troops on colonial soil.

When I say that we came into being through negotiation, it sounds like a very peaceful and smooth operation. It was, in fact, just the opposite. The events leading to the birth of this nation, and those events afterward, have been full of strife. The history of this strife is noted philatelically.

In 1864, John A. MacDonald led a delegation to Prince Edward Island for the first conference on Confederation. It was so little thought of at the time that the circus which was in town at the time actually drew more attention than the conference. At the Confederation negotiations, each group and province wanted assured rights. Quebec, because of nationalism, wanted a separate state within confederation. John A. MacDonald, however, had recruited Sir Georges Etienne Cartier as a leading personality to bring French Canada into confederation.

Finally, on July 1, 1867, a proclamation brought the British North America Act into force for four provinces, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. A new nation was now standing on very shaky legs. Prince Edward Island, the site of the first conference, held out until 1873.

A 1927 stamp to commemorate Confederation shows Sir John A. MacDonald.

Meanwhile, great efforts were being made to include the western portion of the country. One problem were the Métis. Métis were half-breeds, the result of Indian and French mating. They lived in the Red River settlement in the Fort Garry, St. Boniface region of Manitoba.

When Canadians were sent in to survey for a road to be built between Fort Garry and Lake of the Woods, the Métis feared losing their land. They went about choosing a leader to defend their rights.

That man was one Louis Riel, a well educated and intelligent person. They ensued a rebellion which became known as the Red River Settlement Rebellion, or the Riel Rebellion.

The Red River settlement status was eventually settled by an Act in May, 1870 which allowed Manitoba to enter confederation. But that was not the end of Riel.

Riel was elected to parliament in 1874; however he didn't remain in Ottawa. He fled from his enemies and was subsequently banished from Canada. In 1885, along with a band of Cree Indians under the Chief Poundmaker, a Hudson Bay post was raided. A short time later, another Indian chief by the name of Big Bear sacked the small town of Frog Lake and massacred all the inhabitants.

Riel was captured on May 15 of that year and convicted of murder by an all English Protestant jury. He was hanged on November 16, 1885.

The event had a profound effect on the whole country, but nowhere greater than in the predominantly Catholic French-speaking province of Quebec. The issue of Riel's death is still in dispute today. The centenary of the Riel Rebellion was commemorated by issuing a stamp in 1985 depicting Gabriel Dumont who was chosen by Louis Riel as his Military Chief.

QUEBEC REBELLION

The government of John A. MacDonald was racked with what became known as the Pacific Scandal in the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the link that lured British Columbia into confederation. There were other scandals as time went on. One of the more famous being in the John Diefenbaker cabinet.

There has always been a certain rebellionism — for want of a better word — in Quebec. It stems from nationalism on the part of French-speaking Canadians. Sometime prior to October, 1970, there had been bombings directed towards Federal institutions, including military buildings and post boxes. The messages left were the initials FLQ (for the Front de Libération de Québec).

At first it wasn't taken too seriously. However, as time went on and as the bombings and graffiti became more frequent, members of the organization known as the FLQ were tagged as terrorists.

In October of 1970, the Montreal Police went on strike. A person from the British consultat in Montreal by the name of James Cross was taken hostage; the FLQ claimed responsibility. A member of the Quebec National Assembly, Pierre Laporte, stood up in parliament and declared the FLQ as nothing but a bunch of terrorists.

The Prime Minister of Canada, Pierre Trudeau, imposed the War Measures Act because of the police strike and the army took over, making numerous uncalled-for arrests.

Then, Laporte was abducted.

Pierre Laporte was found dead, slain by his abductors who were consequently allowed to flee to Cuba in exchange for the release of James Cross. The political situation in Quebec and Canada has never been the same since, for out of that one situation was born a party whose aim is to take Canada out of confederation.

O Canada, Our home and native land. But, for how long?

Laurel Sherrer plays traffic cop for huge book

Laurel Sherrer of Dunkin juggled material from far and wide to get the book done by deadline.

By Avril Benoit

SHERBROOKE — "This was all Rita's doing," Laurel Sherrer said about how she wound up as production manager of one of the most hectic projects in Canadian publishing history. "I was working at the (Montreal) Daily News in its final days, so I was enthusiastic about just about any job offer."

The soft-spoken Sherrer, a native of Dunkin, near Mansonville, was recruited to join the Chronicle of Canada team by Record reporter Rita Legault, who took a leave of absence last winter to work as a contributor to the book. There were more members of the Eastern Townships media squad working on the book: former Record reporter Rossanna Coriandoli wrote captions for photos and laid out pages, Cowansville native Jimmy Manson was chief historical researcher, and Stanstead journalist and author Louise Abbott wrote some of the sections.

Both Sherrer and Coriandoli are former editors of Townships Week.

"I was at Chronicle for about a week as copy editor when they asked me to be production manager," Sherrer said in a telephone interview from her Montreal office. "It took me quite a while to figure out what the job entailed," the 27-year-old added with a chuckle.

Research for the thousand-page book was almost done when Sherrer joined the project. Chronicle books are all made according to the same format, with brief articles summarizing the main points of a given event and lots of illustrations.

MULTI-NATIONAL

The Chronicle of Canada is the most recent in a series of books that includes Chronicle of the 20th Century, Chronicle of the Second World War and Chronicle of Mankind. It was also the first book the Paris-based parent company had produced in Canada; others were put together in places like Hungary, Sweden, Germany and Taiwan.

Chronicle of Canada editor-in-chief Elizabeth Abbott led meetings every week for 23 weeks to block out 42 pages at a time. Step by step, column by column, staff got the mammoth task done.

Sherrer concerned herself with getting it all done in time. She coaxed university academics into understanding that she was serious about deadlines and about finishing the whole book in 14 months. She arranged for research reports to be sent out to the writers, then for the proposed texts to go to the consultants. At any one time, she was juggling the work of up to 25 writers.

She mounted a huge calendar on her office wall and tried to keep a handle on all in-coming and outgoing material, with overlapping eight-week schedules for each block of material. She became the office traffic cop whose raison d'être was to keep everything flowing smoothly.

DETERMINATION

"Being stern with people is not my strong point," Sherrer said. "Things were behind schedule all the time. All I could do was maintain this 'ideal schedule' on paper and in my mind try and approximate it."

The snags took many forms, but invariably spawned emotional ups and downs for the team. A common problem, she said, was that the staff would come across a great photo but no information about it. Or a researcher would propose a fascinating story idea, but subsequent researchers sent to gather more information and flesh out the story couldn't find any references to it at all.

At one point, they came across a lovely photo of Lady Agnes MacDonald — Sir John A.'s wife — at a ceremony for a new railway bridge. There was a picture, and the story would surely follow. In the heat of production, the page was laid out to include Lady MacDonald and 20 lines of text.

Unfortunately, the source of the picture was a newspaper which had run nothing but a brief caption with the photo. There simply weren't enough facts on which to base a 20-line story. The solution? A general overview of the railway controversy of the day.

LET DOWNS

Sherrer said there were instances where the editors would leave room in their lay-out for a particular event, and discover that the writer had taken the liberty of changing the focus, hence the date, of the story. The writers often had very good reason for adapting their text to fit the research they were able to come up with; they would sometimes discover that the real climax of a said issue occurred later or earlier than they had anticipated from the outset.

"It was inevitable in a lot of cases and we accepted that," Sherrer said. "But we had to be careful that we didn't have someone dying on one page and making a speech on the next."

Chronicle of Canada has enjoyed widespread praise from critics since it was released last month. Not surprisingly, however, advance readers came across some errors in the book.

NOT OUR FAULT

Another notable mistake in the Canada book is the misspelling of British Columbia on some of the maps. Sherrer explained the maps were produced in Europe by graphic artists who may have thought they were doing the Canadians a favor when they changed Columbia to Colombia, in accordance with the spelling of the word they were familiar with. "Oh those Canadians, they don't know how to spell!" Sherrer jokingly imagined the map-makers saying.

"When there's a mistake it seems to jump out at you as if there were neon lights on it," Sherrer said, adding that considering all the information packed into the book, it's amazing that it's as factual as it is.

She's hoping her employers will make good use of the knowledge she has gained in doing Chronicle of Canada by sending her to the South Seas for a few months as production manager for Chronicle of Australia. "It's almost confirmed," she admitted with a hint of pride, adding that "Head Office" in Paris is considering whether to ask the Montreal team to produce another book.

Sherrer and Abbott are the only employees left in the Canadian office now that their baby is on bookstore shelves. They're tying up the loose ends, such as returning photos to their owners.

"I can't believe my luck," Sherrer said of the possibility of continuing her career Down Under.

"Chronicle of Canada isn't a best-seller yet," she said, "but I have so many relatives in the Eastern Townships that I'm sure once they find out about it, it will be."

Canadians turn back Fenian invasion

Volunteer militia defends against a Fenian invasion near Cook's Corners.

Another Fenian attempt to invade Canada takes place at Trout River.

May 25, 1870
ECCLES HILL, Que. — Canadian preparations against a possible Fenian invasion paid off today, as the country's militia easily drove back an attack led by John O'Neill. Since the Fenian invasions of 1866, Canadians have been vigilant in training their own troops and monitoring Fenian activity. However, the arrival here of dynamic Fenian leader O'Neill spurred the Fenians to launch their latest invasion from Vermont. The Fenians also hoped to take advantage of the fact that many Canadian troops have been sent to put down the Red River uprisings.

In their quest to capture Canada and hold it ransom in return for liberating Ireland, the Fenians have pushed relentlessly. The Americans have only looked on and allowed it.

"The Great Fenian Scare."

There are a number of references to the Eastern Townships in the book, including this one about the Fenian invasion of Cook's Corners in 1870.

A treasured letter

Open the mailbox and there on top of the junk mail lies a letter from a relative or an old friend. Your spirits rise. You can hardly wait to get back to the house to spend a few minutes with that someone from Florida or Labrador or Toledo, Ohio. One of life's little pleasures.

Writing letters is one of my hobbies. Consequently my collection of replies from politicians, artists and writers has grown over the years — from the greats and the not-so-greats.

These days I leave the complaints and causes to the young activists. I write only for pleasure: for my own and, I hope, for that of those to whom I write.

Let me share part of one of those letters with you.

When Hugh MacLennan died a few weeks ago I looked up a letter I had received from him in answer to one I had written to him.

The reason for my letter was two-fold.

I had just finished reading one of his books and was so deeply moved by it I felt I must tell him.

And about that same time I had had the opportunity to sit in on one of his lectures at McGill.

I sat with a student friend at the back of the room where I would be less visible among the long hair and blue jeans. I was dumbfounded at the lack of attention and disrespect the students showed this great writer.

They talked, told jokes, dropped books, worked on assignments or just read.

Whatever

By Myrtle Gallup

"Why were they there?" I wondered in my letter to Mr. MacLennan.

His reply, two single-spaced typewritten pages done by the great man himself, began: "I was touched by your letter and grateful to you for sending it..." This from a busy man no doubt well into his next novel by then; yet he was not too big to write to me.

His humbleness surfaced again as he recalled the thrill he had experienced once as he stood outside a bookstore in New York City where one of his books was on display in the window.

As to the actions of the students? Now here is a little gem that may never reach the archives. Mr. MacLennan wrote: "Students here in the back rows of all large classes behave as you saw them. It doesn't matter much; they catch anything they want to hear if they are interested, and if not, who cares?"

I treasure that letter.

Write to someone you know this week. Better still, write to someone you don't know. The result could be your little reward for walking to the mailbox.

By the way if anyone should ask what I'd like for Christmas, nothing would please me more than a postage meter with a lifetime guarantee.

Book traces hockey to Russia

By Alan Adams
The Canadian Press

Russians were playing a form of hockey long before the game was embraced by Canadians, says a new book on the history of the sport in the Soviet Union.

Lawrence Martin says in The Red Machine that hockey was played in Russia "before the first recorded Canadian exhibition."

In North America, it's generally recognized that hockey originated from a game played by Englishmen on the frozen harbor at Kingston, Ont., in 1860. There are also claims that hockey — or hurley as it was known then — was played in Nova Scotia as early as 1810.

But Martin contends there is "documentary evidence that Russians were playing the game in the middle of the 19th century" in Leningrad, then known as St. Petersburg.

"We live under this myth that it is a Canadian game," Martin said in an interview from Ottawa, where he is a visiting lecturer at Carleton University school of journalism.

WORKED IN MOSCOW

Martin did research for the book while in Moscow as a correspondent for the Toronto Globe and Mail from 1985 to '88.

The hockey he describes is more like bandy, a game thought to have been born in England and played on ice with 11 players aside. The game employs a ball six centimetres in diameter and sticks with upward curving blades, similar to those used for field hockey.

"The Russian archives don't refer to bandy until the early 1900s," Martin said. "They use hockey to describe what they were playing in the mid-19th century."

"The Canadians played it (hockey) different back then, too."

Both the Canadians and the Russians used a rubber ball in hockey's early years. Canadians switched to a puck in the late 1870s, but the Soviets stuck with the ball until 1946.

"The basic point is they have been passing and skating longer than we have," Martin said.

The Red Machine is a sweeping, well written history of the Russian game that should appeal to avid fans wanting a thoughtful insight into Soviet hockey.

FAN WITH CLOUT

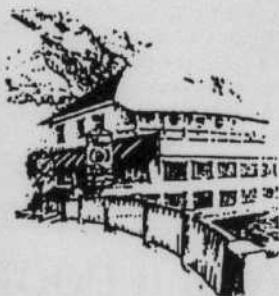

Martin writes that former Soviet president Leonid Brezhnev was a passionate hockey fan who scolded national coach Konstantin Loktev for resuming a 1976 game against the Philadelphia Flyers. Loktev had ordered the Soviet players off the ice to protest the Flyers' rough play.

"When he (Brezhnev) asked me why I decided to continue the game, I replied that it would have been very simple for me not to do so," Martin quotes Loktev as saying. "I suggested to him (Brezhnev) that all he had to do was call Philadelphia, tell me to stay in the dressing room, and I would have stayed there."

In 1969, after renowned coach Anatoly Tarasov pulled his team off the ice because of a disallowed goal in a Soviet league game, Brezhnev ordered them back out.

"Brezhnev sent down one of his aides and told Tarasov to get out there and start playing the game," says Martin. "You would hardly see Brian Mulroney or George Bush doing something like that."

Sci-fi book addresses the issue of dinosaur DNA

Jurassic Park by Michael Crichton (KNOPF: RANDOM HOUSE): $26, 400 pp.

His best novels, such as The Andromeda Strain and The Terminal Man, have been those that skirted along the fine line between contemporary technology and futuristic applications. Michael Crichton's books about deadly spores and the implantation of computer devices into epileptic humans gave readers a vicarious thrill and the feeling of having insight into current trends in science.

With Jurassic Park, Crichton again applies his interesting formula to come up with a technothriller that is considerably more readable than his last two efforts, Congo or Sphere.

Taking his cue from the Extinct DNA Study Group at Berkeley University, Crichton imagines that it may someday be possible to extract DNA from fossil remains of dinosaurs. His novel makes the supposition that a greedy entrepreneur is able to use this technology to come up with an island retreat off the coast of Costa Rica that makes Disney World look like a playground for kids.

John Hammond's InGen Incorporated is the corporate criminal which creates a gigantic theme park on an island off the Central American coast, where prospective hundreds of millions of funseekers will be able to pass through the domain of dinosaurs much the same way that they cavort among Mickey, Pluto, and friends. Just as Jurassic Park, named after the principal era that dinosaurs flourished in, is about to open, a few flaws begin to creep into the smooth-running enterprise.

A small, but deadly dinosaur known as a velociraptor has somehow found its way off the island and is terrorizing the frightened population living along the beaches of Costa Rica. Autocratic John Hammond has summoned Dr. Alan Grant and his graduate assistant Ellie Sattler, both paleontologists actively working on a dig in the badlands of Montana, to spend a weekend on his island so that he can question them about dinosaur lore. Several workmen have been victim of curious injuries that appear to have been the result of animal attacks, and not mere construction accidents.

With an egotistical John Hammond convinced that his created world of reconstituted dinosaurs is about to become one of the wonders of the world, not to mention the spin-offs and residuals from mini-dinosaurs and Jurassic Park memorabilia, the artificial fabric begins to disintegrate. Arthur Crichton ton includes some interesting characters in his thriller, such as the free-thinking mathematician Ian Malcolm, who is based on Heinz Pagels. Malcolm introduces ideas about the relatively recent discovery of the chaos theory, derived from the commentaries of Ivar Ekeland and James Gleick, which are given some controversial practical applications in Crichton's fictional assault on certain aspects of the scientific community.

The action sequences and unfolding drama of the storyline of Jurassic Park are first rate, but the most provocative aspect of Crichton's book is his manipulation of scientific theories with the subtlety of the better science-fiction creators like Asimov or Bradbury. Jurassic Park adds snippets of information stolen from the pages of The Scientific American to a "what might be" scenario to come up with a sure-fire bestseller.

Album reveals Badfinger as a formidable live band

RECORDINGS REVIEWED
Badfinger Day After Day (RYKO — A & M)

They began as the Iveys, in Swansea, Wales, signed on with the fledgling Apple label in 1968, caught the attention of Beatles George Harrison and Paul McCartney, and after a name change to the distinctive Badfinger recorded one of Paulie's tunes, "Come And Get It", and the rest was history. Magic Christian Music featured soundtrack recordings from one of Ringo Starr's earliest thespian adventures, and Badfinger's subsequent string of more than a half dozen albums led to their becoming one of the leading British Invasion exports into the 1970s.

The hits came, with "Day After Day" and "Baby Blue" making it to #4 and #14, respectively, in 1972, but their Apple recording contract dissolved in a nasty dispute, as Badfinger moved over to Warner Brothers. Albums such as Wish You Were Here and Ass failed to find the kind of reception accorded No Dice, Straight Up and Christian, but the lack of chart reaction could not detract from Badfinger's quality playing and singing. Day After Day is a rediscovered "live" album recorded at the Cleveland Agora in 1974, when Badfinger's original quartet was concluding its final tour.

A year later Peter Ham, the band's brilliant songwriter, would take his own life — apparently as a result of over-touring, Badfinger's waning popular success, and the manipulations of an unscrupulous business manager. In 1979 two of the band's members, guitarist Joey Molland and drummer Tom Evans, collaborated on Airwaves, which had moments reminiscent of Badfinger's inspired magic. Four years later Tom Evans fell prey to the suicidal fate that had taken his mate Pete Ham, creating the unusual circumstance of one half of a badly under-rated rock band having been lost in the space of eight years.

Joey Molland had a hand in preparing Day After Day for release, and the CD quality sound reveals that Badfinger was a formidable live band in addition to being an inventive, resourceful studio group. Two of the band's hits are featured, "Day After Day", and "Baby Blue", both Ham Compositions, as well as such album cuts as Tom Evan's "Blind Owl", and four Joey Molland compositions including the hard driving "Sometimes", "Give It Up", and the more mellow "I Don't Mind".

Badfingers may never have quite come out from under the shadow of the Beatles — George Harrison utilized the guitarists for his Bangladesh Concert album — but aside from James Taylor, they were one of the most enduring Apple acts to benefit from the Beatles' corporate largesse. As Day After Day testifies, Badfinger could play with the best of the British groups — as spontaneous on stage as The Who, and as vital and energized in their presentation as The Stones.

If this CD initiates a concerted effort to put Badfinger's early Apple and Warner's catalogue back in print then Day After Day will have achieved a great deal for the devoted following of this Wales group which was marked by such sadness and adversity in their personal lives.

SOUNDS LIKE CHRISTMAS

Amid the flood of seasonal recordings, several Christmas releases with a distinct country flavor will be receiving airplay in the next few weeks. Of these, an a capella collection of songs by such singers as Ricky Skaggs, Willie Nelson, Tammy Wynette, and newcomer Tim Mensy serves to point out the purest voices in country.

Skaggs performs "O Come All Ye Faithful", Willie warbles on "Away In A Manger", Tammy makes a valiant attempt at "It Came Upon A Midnight Clear", while Mensy sings the spiritual favorite "Go Tell It On The Mountain". Standard holiday fare, much of this music on Voices Of The Season: A Capella (EPIC—COLUMBIA), but the show is completely stolen by a resoundingly tight harmonic effort on "Silent Night" by a group known as Zaca Creek. Their unique arrangement of barbershop quartet treatment laid against countrified vocal flourishes is truly the highlight of A Capella.

If the rest of their recorded work comes anything near sounding as wonderful as Zaca's rendition of the traditional carol, then groups such as The Oak Ridge Boys, Alabama, and Restless Heart have some very serious vocal competition.

A sampler of prominent BMG-RCA artists titled Home For The Holidays is notable for a powerful interpretation of "The Little Drummer Boy" by Restless Heart, with some stirring acoustic guitar playing and synthesized orchestral effects. Vocal harmonies on this track, as well as on "In A Manger" by Baillie And The Boys, and Foster and Lloyd's "Christmas List", are outstanding. K.T. Oslin almost makes us forget Elvis's enduring, captivating "Blue Christmas", as she gives this classic the cocktail lounge, sexually-charged vocal treatment.

Unfortunately Canadian group Prairie Oyster's tasteless "Christmas In Jail" tries to make us laugh at the pitiable idea of a drunk having been caught doing 75 miles an hour in the wrong lane, who, fortunately we are meant to think, only hits a cop car. Keith Whitley's "There's A New Kid In Town", and Don Williams's velvet intonations on "O Come, All Ye Faithful", manage to get the album back onto a serious note. Songs by hot artist Clint Black and Paul Overstreet round out this set.

A different kind of Christmas from our northern version is celebrated on Charlie Daniels' Christmas Time Down South (EPIC—COLUMBIA). The title track is a Daniels original, as are several other songs here, "My Christmas Love Song To You" and "Mississipppi Christmas Eve" representing the more inventive of them. "Carolina I Hear You Calling" and "Carolina (I Remember You)" allow Charlie Daniels and his full band to mix a bit of nostalgia with the Christmas spirit on this distinctly regional country album.

When it comes to purely traditional country versions of seasonal standards such as "We Three Kings", "Joy To The World" or "O Little Town of Bethlehem", Dolly Parton's Home For Christmas (COLUMBIA) is sure to warm many a country heart. Dolly attacks these favorites with her big-voiced gusto and all her enthusiasm. Remarkable on all of these collections is the standard of the Nashville players, who obviously all find that Christmas brings out something special in their session playing, just as it does in these familiar country artists.

TRAVEL

Escorted motorcoach tours expect a rosy future

By Felicity Munn
CP Travel Writer

People who take escorted motorcoach tours are becoming more sophisticated, and that's just fine with the tour operators who cater to them.

"The traditional markets — the mature travellers — are healthier, better travelled, more worldly," Tom Frenkel, president of the National Tour Association, said in an interview during the association's annual convention in Montreal.

"As a result, we're finding a lot of activities on tours that we've never seen before. We're finding polar bear trips to Northern Ontario, river rafting, dune buggy rides, snowmobile rides on icefields, bicycling, photo safaris ...

"We are more desirable to younger people and so now the tours are becoming popular with (people in) the workforce."

The average age of the 10.3 million Americans who took escorted coach tours in 1989 was 55, a recent survey indicates.

ROSY MARKET

The National Tour Association, the largest escorted-tour trade group in North America, represents 3,700 tour companies, hotels and tourism associations in Canada, the United States and Mexico.

Changing demographics paint a rosy future for the industry.

Lillian Morgenthau, president of the Canadian Association of Retired Persons — CARP — says "mature" Canadians, those aged 50 and up, currently comprise about a quarter of the population. By the year 2000, the proportion is expected to approach one in three.

Baby boomers are "a huge population bulge," she points out. "All those yuppies are going to become muppies, as in mature."

The buying power of older people also is rising. As it is, CARP estimates the mature population is responsible for 75 to 80 per cent of all leisure travel.

"Somebody who's working is confined to one or two trips a year," said Morgenthau. "But a person over 50 who has no obligations can go any time."

As with all types of travel, however, the immediate future of escorted tours is uncertain.

"There are so many imponderables," George Guenther, outgoing president of the tour association, said at the Montreal meeting. "The Middle East, the economy ... it's fuzzy."

Frenkel said his company, Presley Tours of Makanda, Ill., has found that people are waiting longer to book but overall the numbers are about even with last year.

WHERE THEY GO

Favorite destinations for mature travellers are natural wonders and national parks, historical sites, warm-weather destinations and beaches, fall foliage trips and special events and festivals, the association has found.

There's something out there for everyone, says Frenkel.

"For the person who's looking for a trip that allows them to see a lot of terrain, there are trips that move to different destinations every night."

"For the ones who want perhaps a more in-depth experience in a particular area, there is the trip that goes there and spends a few nights."

Many factors go into making a coach tour a success, Frenkel added, but key among them is the escort.

"They are educators, they are entertainers, they are people who you feel safe in following because they know where they're going."

"There is no particular area of employment we find our escorts in, there is no particular age group. It takes a very special kind of person.

"Actually, (entertainer) Joel Grey was here last night. And I was thinking what a good escort he would be," Frenkel added with a laugh.

"He was personable and warm and outgoing. Some day if he ever wants to get off the big stage and go on the little one ..."

Book inspired by Chateau Laurier

By Julia Elliott

OTTAWA (CP) — Meet Me at the Chateau implores the paperback's title. It's a familiar invitation, heard often throughout the 78-year history of this regal Ottawa hotel.

A beacon of comfort and elegance for common folk and famous people from around the globe, the walls of the Chateau Laurier hold a history of Canadian times unparalleled in the country.

Joan Rankin, a 71-year-old grandmother, lets us relive some of these memories in a 190-page book called Meet Me at the Chateau (published by Natural Heritage - price $24.95). It's an account of her memories of the "Grande Dame of Rideau Street" and those of others who worked there.

Rankin's love affair with the "dignified and hospitable" French Gothic-style hotel began in the 1920s when "my dad took our family to the Chateau Cafeteria for hot chocolate and muffins" one cold and snowy November day after a Remembrance Day ceremony on Parliament Hill.

Then from 1943 to 1952, as a passenger agent for Trans Canada Airlines (now Air Canada) with a desk in the lobby's west corner, Rankin had an excellent vantage point from which to watch prime ministers, ambassadors and movie stars who came through the Chateau's bronze-and-glass revolving doors.

She remembers Winston Churchill's "V-for-Victory salute," Dwight Eisenhower's flashy "big grin" and Charles de Gaulle's

"ramrod-straight" posture.

HOLLYWOOD GUESTS

Hollywood guests such as Randolph Scott, Bette Davis, Marlene Dietrich and Nelson Eddy felt the Chateau's castle-like magic.

Ottawa-born actor Lorne Greene said his goodbyes to Canada at the Chateau. Paul Martin Sr., Canada's former high commissioner to Britain, remembers meeting Greene on his way out of the hotel. Greene told him: "I'm off to Hollywood to make my fortune."

In the early 1900s, an American — Charles Melville Hays, general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, dreamed of building a large central railway station in Ottawa and, nearby, the finest hotel yet to be built in Canada.

The hotel, to be called the Chateau Laurier in honor of then-prime minister Sir Wilfrid Laurier, would cost between $1.25 million and $1.5 million. Two months before the hotel's official opening on June 1, 1912, Hays died in the fateful Atlantic crossing of the Titanic.

But he left a legacy in the Chateau. Built of smooth granite blocks and light-buff Indiana limestone, its dazzling copper crown (turned green through oxidation) features turrets, dormers and gables.

DISLIKED NOSE

Laurier was the first to sign the guest register, but was reportedly miffed because the nose of his marble bust in the lobby was askew. The nose had been chipped when the workman carrying the bust into the hotel dropped it. Another sculptor repaired it, but apparently the prime minister was not impressed.

In early years, Chateau employees dealing with the public were inspected at the beginning of each shift for personal grooming and fresh uniforms.

Debutantes "in fashionable white gowns, elaborately trimmed with trains, long white kid gloves and head-dresses of white ostrich plumes" enjoyed grand "coming out" receptions with the governor general in attendance, says Rankin.

In the 1920s, former bus boy and waiter Danny Lupino remembers maitre d'hotel John Adam as a "real disciplinarian."

"If the platters weren't red-hot, if the Welsh rarebit wasn't bubbling in the chafing dish, if you forgot the parsley with the fish or the watercress for the roast beef, he would order you to go back and do it properly."

When the east wing was added in 1929, legend has it that the roofing contractor, a copper-and-oxidation expert, told workmen that "whenever it became necessary for them to urinate while on the job, they do so into a pail. When a pail was full, it was to be dumped over the new copper roof" — speeding up the oxidation process, says Rankin.

Children with an interest in art should get themselves over to Champlain Regional College this Saturday. Fine Arts teacher Ken Madokoro will be holding another of his innovative workshops for artists between 10 and 14 years of age. This is the last workshop of the season, and will be followed by a public exhibition of the kids' work in the foyer of the Molson Fine Arts building.

Madokoro initiated the visual arts workshops because he felt that art education for youngsters was lacking in our Eastern Townships schools. Madokoro is sympathetic to efforts of elementary school teachers to get serious art education into the mainstream curriculum. He was a school teacher in British Columbia and Ontario before coming to Champlain.

"I have two sons in Grade 5," he writes, who "are being short-changed in this area of education."

"We have music and physical education specialists but no one in the area of visual arts," Madokoro says.

He feels the Champlain workshops are a small step toward more structured art activities for "young people who are at a stage of great potential."

Hopefully Champlain College will offer another series of workshops this January. NOTES will be the first to let you know.

Insiders at CBC Radio's Quebec Community Network in Quebec City say they were assured in November by the Mother Corp.'s top brass, Donna Logan, that their jobs were secure despite impending layoffs elsewhere. The massive budget cuts announced this week shut down entire TV news operations in many cities across Canada; shows like Monday Night Special from CBC Montreal were axed. The radio service was, for the most part, spared this time around.

By AVRIL BENOIT

That's a relief for us in the Eastern Townships. The Radio News reporter job in Sherbrooke has been vacant since early summer when David Tweedie left to become news supervisor in Montreal. The Oka crisis sapped the news budget so much that managers decided to save a few dollars by leaving the Sherbrooke bureau vacant for a while.

Finally, after all these months without CBC news coverage of our region, it looks like David Tweedie's replacement may soon be making his or her way here to open all the mail that's piled up in the CBC office. Three journalists made the short list of applicants and were interviewed yesterday. Two of the applicants are from Montreal's newsroom, while the other is from the Quebec City service. NOTES will keep you posted.

By the way: the much beloved David MacLaughlin, who held the Townships job a few years ago, was rumored to be considering a come-back, but decided to stay in Winnipeg.

Canadian author Margaret Laurence lived in West Africa between 1950 and 1959, when she was in her early twenties. This was a frantic time when colonial powers were losing their grip on nations which fought for independence.

Laurence wrote a collection of stories about her experiences there: The Tomorrow-Tamer. Those stories have been dramatized for radio and will be aired as this week's Morningside Drama at 11:30 weekdays. The dialogue in Laurence's African book is said to be so good they can be lifted from the page. Tune in 91.7 FM.

Yoko Ono turned Lennon into a cottage industry

Ten years after he was murdered, John Lennon has gained immortality and become a cottage industry — partly because of his music, but largely through the merchandising efforts of his widow, Yoko Ono.

By Rick Hampson and Larry McShane

NEW YORK (AP) — Imagine coffee mugs and tote bags. Imagine greeting cards and prescription eyewear. Imagine doodles turned into limited-edition prints.

In the 10 years since John Lennon's murder, such items have become part of the legacy of the ex-Beatle and author of such songs as Revolution, Working Class Hero and Gimme Some Truth.

Lennon's death on Dec. 8, 1980, ended his comeback after five years as a reclusive homebody. But his name, face and voice are still out and about, thanks largely to the enthusiastic efforts of his widow.

"Since 1981, I promised myself and ... the fans that I would keep on dishing out something of John's every year," Yoko Ono said in an interview a few days before what would have been Lennon's 50th birthday on Oct. 9. "I simply don't like the idea that John would just become a library item."

Posthumously, Lennon has become a cottage industry. Living in the cottage, of course, is Ono — and her constant companion, Sam Havadtoy.

Their office, Studio One, is on the ground floor of the gothic Dakota apartment house where Lennon was killed as Yoko looked on. The wall behind Havadtoy's desk is covered with Lennon's photos and album covers — a reminder of who still makes the money here.

SET UP EMPIRE

Attempts to cash in on Lennon's memory began even before his body was cremated — John Lennon Frisbees, dinnerware and charm bracelets.

Ono was never involved in this flood of low-budget merchandise.

But a year after the slaying, Ono was back running the Lennon empire.

She ended the 1980s with a reported net worth of $500 million US. Yet she says "bad karma" dogged her through the decade:

- Double Fantasy producer Jack Douglas collected about $2.7 million in a settlement with Ono after suing her for royalties.

- Elephant's Memory, the backup band at Lennon and Ono's 1972 Madison Square Garden concert, sued for $70 million, claiming in the process that Yoko was musically so inept that her keyboard was unplugged during the show.

- Ono had to pay an undisclosed amount to the writers of the song Makin' Whoopee for copyright infringement in her own song, I'm Your Angel.

- Fred Seaman, Lennon's former assistant, systematically stole Lennon's diaries, tapes and slides from the Dakota. He pleaded guilty to second-degree grand larceny and received five years probation.

LENNON SHOT

On the night of Dec. 8, 1980, John Lennon was returning home with Ono after a recording session for her Walking on Thin Ice single. He stepped from the limousine and moved toward the entrance of the Dakota apartments.

A demented fan, Mark David Chapman, was waiting on the sidewalk with a copy of The Catcher in the Rye and a .38-calibre revolver. After Lennon passed him, he opened fire.

The slaying produced a worldwide outpouring of grief. Tens of thousands of people gathered in New York's Central Park for a ceremony that culminated in 10 minutes of silence; the Dakota front gate became an instant shrine; three distraught fans committed suicide.

But even as John Lennon died, his legend had been born. Lennon and Ono's Double Fantasy LP was climbing to the top of the charts, and Starting Over was to become his most successful single.

Magazines were filled with Lennon's story: how he and Ono rescued their relationship after Lennon's 18-month "lost weekend" in Los Angeles in the mid-'70s; how he took several years off to help raise his son, Sean; how he had agonized about ever recording and playing again.

HARSH BIOGRAPHY

That image — prophet of peace and love, devoted family man, seminal rocker — was virtually uncontested for eight years, until the publication of Albert Goldman's The Lives of John Lennon. The 719-page biography depicted the legend as a violent, vain, Liverpool thug who descended into a Howard Hughes-like world of drugs and paranoia.

But Lennon's life, so glaringly public and intensely documented, served to refute some of Goldman's charges. Imagine, a movie culled from vaults of previously unreleased film footage, showed a healthy and happy Lennon making love to his wife, talking about life and politics, singing his own songs.

Lennon was married to his first wife Cynthia when he met Ono at a London art show in the late '60s. In short order, Lennon divorced his wife, married Yoko and, in 1970, left the Beatles.

John and Yoko collaborated on everything: bed-ins, avant-garde films, music and finally a son, Sean, born in 1975.

At this point, Lennon says he became a househusband to their child while Yoko ran the family business. The arrangement continued until Lennon told the woman he called "Mother" it was time to make music again. Double Fantasy followed just before John's death, although it was not to be Lennon's swan song.

Since 1980, Bruce Springsteen has released three albums, Michael Jackson two. Lennon — or, more accurately, Ono — has released five albums: Milk and Honey, Menlove Ave., the movie soundtrack Imagine, the John Lennon — Live in New York collection and a boxed CD collection for Christmas '90.

In addition, The Lost Lennon Tapes, featuring hours of unreleased Lennon music, became a popular syndicated radio program.

Ono has overseen all these projects.

"People ask me, 'What would he have done in the '80s?' I say, 'Let's talk about what he HAS done in the '80s,' because he has definitely," she said. "In spirit, I think he's alive, and we're getting the benefit."

In October, a barefooted Ono greeted a visitor to the Dakota in a high-ceilinged first-floor room with white carpet and black onyx walls. Curled up on a chair, she serenely sipped herbal tea from a mug decorated with a Lennon drawing of John and Yoko with the inscription, "Grow Old With Me."

The mug is one of an assortment of Lennon collectibles available (by appointment only) from Bag One Arts Inc., the entity that controls reproductions of Lennon's art work.

Although Bag One's gallery a few blocks from the Dakota deals primarily in lithographs of Lennon's work — $600-$700 each — it also sells the collectibles, including $3 laminated bags that bear Lennon's drawings.

Where does all the money go? "Yoko is very funny about (saying) where the money goes. . . . But some goes to the Spirit Foundation," said Lynne Clifford, who runs Bag One for Ono. The foundation, established by Lennon and Ono before John's death, has contributed to causes ranging from a home for drug addicted children to bulletproof vests for police officers.

Back at the Dakota, Ono receives a familiar question: Is this all commercialism? Has the iconoclastic ex-Beatle been sold out?

She laughs. "No. I didn't sell out John. And I'm sure John would be happy I'm still keeping him out there. . . . There's a commercial aspect, yes, but I mean, why not? I was a partner, and I still feel that I'm a partner."

Geminis float despite CBC cuts

By Bill Anderson

TORONTO (CP) — With a script right out of The Twilight Zone, the Canadian TV industry held its annual Gemini Awards bash on Tuesday — trumpeting its bright future despite massive budget cuts hitting the CBC.

Reports of devastating blows to local CBC-TV service came late in the day Tuesday — too late apparently to change the script for the event broadcast live on the national CBC network.

The show went on as if nothing had happened, and host Joe Flaherty steered the program through various skits and gags about the rosy prospects for Canadian television in the '90s.

Off screen, however, reporters swarmed CBC chairman-designate Patrick Watson, who declined comment until a CBC news conference today in Ottawa.

National anchor Peter Mansbridge, who won a Gemini as best overall broadcast journalist, said afterwards in an interview: "It's very hard to determine right now what the effect will be on The National, but let me tell you, it's hard to celebrate when I know a lot of my colleagues will be losing their jobs."

Journal executive producer Mark Starowicz, whose program picked up two Geminis, also said it was unclear how The Journal would be affected. But he said the CBC is not a fat cow but "a scrawny alleycat living by its wits."

The bad news about the CBC overshadowed the honors being given out for some genuinely splendid Canadian TV.

TOOK AWARDS

Leading the way was the CBC mini-series Love and Hate, which took three awards on Tuesday and claimed the most Geminis — five — in the three-day event honoring work in more than 50 categories.

Other big winners named by the Academy of Canadian Cinema and Television included CBC's family series Road to Avonlea, the CBC movie Where The Spirit Lives and the CTV newsroom drama ENG.

Love and Hate, about Saskatchewan politician and wife-murderer Colin Thatcher, earned star Kenneth Welsh a Gemini for best actor in a dramatic program or mini-series. Director Francis Mankiewicz was also honored and the show was named best dramatic mini-series.

Avonlea's big prizes on Tuesday went to Jackie Burroughs, for best performance by a lead actress in a continuing dramatic role, and the series also won a "people's choice" prize based on votes from readers of TV Guide.

ENG scored a key win as best dramatic series, and star Art Hindle upset sentimental pick Bruno Gerussi to win best performance by a lead actor in a continuing dramatic role.

Where The Spirit Lives, a drama about a native girl abducted by the government and taken to a residential school, had four Geminis overall, including awards Tuesday for best TV movie and to star Michelle St. John for best performance by a lead actress in a dramatic program or mini-series.

ENG had three wins overall, including a writing award.

The Gemini broadcast itself was hardly a winner. The show ran 25 minutes past its scheduled two hours and rarely rose above the level of the banal.

HUMAN ELEMENT

The most human moment came during a tribute to the comedy team of Frank Shuster and the late Johnny Wayne. After a video retrospective of their career, Shuster said "that was so generous, I'm sure Johnny heard it."

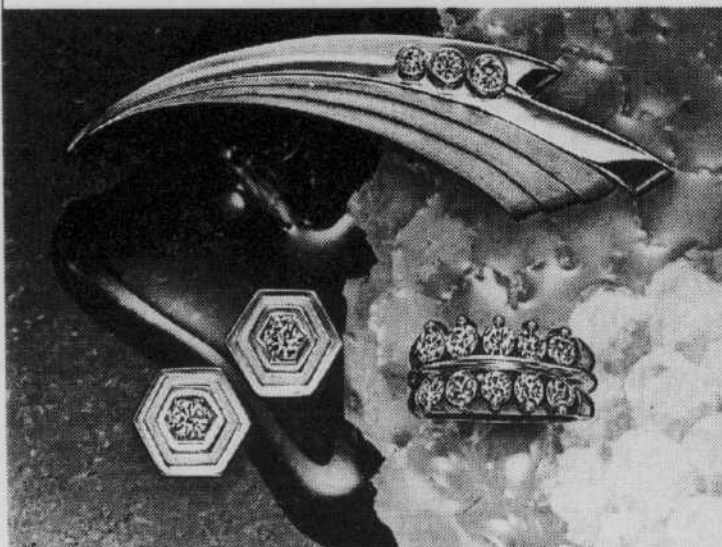

In other awards, CBC's Codco was named best variety series while The Kids in the Hall, also on CBC, won best writing in a comedy or variety program or series.

Norm Perry, formerly of Canada AM, won for best performance by a host, interviewer or anchor.

Highlights of the first two days of the Geminis will be shown Sunday on the cable channel YTV.

The Gemeaux, for excellence in French-language television, will be given Dec. 16 in Montreal.

'Beachcombers' airs its final episode this week

BY BOB REMINGTON

After 19 years, CBC's "The Beachcombers" bobs off into the TV sunset Wednesday night, Dec. 12.

The long-running series about a group of misfit log salvagers on the British Columbia coast is the longest-running drama on Canadian TV. Several members of the cast and crew, including lead Bruno Gerussi, blame CBC management for untying them from the safe mooring of Sundays and setting the show adrift on Wednesdays, where ratings subsequently declined. Some observers, however, say "The Beachcombers" has been at sea for years and that it was time for the show to sink or swim on its own.

Whatever the reasons, its passing should be noted with a moment's silence. "The Beachcombers" had problems — some scripts of late were awful — but after 19 years, even cynics grew attached. Adieu.

• Over at CTV, meanwhile, Christmas begins arriving on Sunday, Dec. 9, with the colorized version of "Scrooge," the 1951 British classic starring Alastair Sim as the crotchety old skinflint whose heart is warmed by three ghosts on Christmas Eve.

The movie, titled "A Christmas Carol" in its U.S. release, is one that purists will want to watch the way it was made, in beautiful black-and-white. While one can appreciate the technology, watching "Scrooge" in color detracts from its mood.

• On Sunday night, Dec. 9, CTV also runs "Live It Up: A Scrooge's Guide to Christmas." This Christmas version of the CTV consumer and lifestyle program "Live It Up" features guest stars Bill Cosby, Andrea Martin and Dan Gallagher, the rotund host from MuchMusic.

Cosby offers what are promised to be "hilarious tips" on buying for kids, while Martin gives a "generosity test." Gallagher plays Scrooge.

• YTV is also getting ready for Christmas with a "Father Knows Best Christmas Reunion," featuring Robert Young and Jane Wyman, and "The Miracle," starring Lassie. Both air Sunday, Dec. 9.

• On Sunday, Dec. 9, CBC airs "The Last Winter," a movie fantasy about the inevitability of change, involving a grandfather (Gerard Parkes), a grandson (Joshua Murray) and a mythical horse named Winter.

COVER STORY

Connie Chung on public affairs and private lives

BY KIRK NICEWONGER

"That's why I find (doing) these stories significant and gratifying."

Connie Chung has looked through both ends of the microscope.

Her career has been based on asking personal questions. But last summer Chung found herself on the receiving end: She made headlines with her announcement that she would be withdrawing from the weekly grind of her series, "Face to Face With Connie Chung," in order to "aggressively pursue" having a baby with her husband, Maury Povich.

Chung continues to anchor "Face to Face" news specials, the latest of which airs Monday, Dec. 10, on CBS.

She is clearly pleased with the two main stories on the Dec. 10 special: investigative reports on raped women who have no way of finding out if their attackers have AIDS and on the alleged dangers of breast implants.

"The rape story is the one I'm particularly moved by," says Chung. "One of the women in the story had no idea that her rapist had actually died of AIDS complications, and our producer, (who) had gotten ahold of the autopsy report, was the one who told her. Can you imagine?"

As for the second story, Chung says, "The FDA has never ruled on (the long-term safety of) breast implants. Women have been implanting them in their bodies for 30 long years, and these devices have never been approved."

Connie Chung

Chung says. "Not taking an advocacy point of view, but if something changes as a result of what we do, or at least people start looking at it, that's what makes it worthwhile."

Presumably one of the things that makes it less worthwhile for Chung has been enduring the press coverage of her private life after her announcement of her desire to have a child. "It was without a doubt the last thing I wanted to do," Chung admits. "But we just decided that honesty was the best way to go. I think there's a lot of impropriety in talking about your personal life, but in this particular case it was the only choice I had."

It's a strange predicament for a journalist to be in, to actually know how it feels to have the most intimate details of one's life speculated on in the media. Did Chung's experience cause her to look differently at journalism itself? "I think I've always been sensitive to personal questions either directed at me or that I direct at someone," Chung says. "If someone's willing, if they have no problem with it, then I proceed forward. But if someone's indicating to me great discomfort, then I wouldn't go ahead anyway. It has little to do with what has happened to me; it's just the way I always have been."

THURSDAY

This season on NBC's "The Cosby Show," Clair (Phylicia Rashad, r.) and the rest of the Huxtables have welcomed a new addition to the household: Clair's second cousin Pam (Erika Alexander, l.), who hails from a tough Brooklyn neighborhood. The series airs Thursday, Dec. 13.

IN FOCUS

The most famous reindeer of all makes another Yuletide appearance as CBS rebroadcasts "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer" on Friday, Dec. 14. Originally broadcast 27 years ago, the story of the shiny-schnozzed deer who helps Santa find his way on Christmas Eve has become almost as beloved as the song by Johnny Marks that it's based on. Burl Ives provides the narration, and Marks composed seven additional songs for the special.
