Lower Westmount residents each seek $5,000 in lawsuit against "noisy" MUHC hospital

Seeking award of $5,000 per person for residents' lost use and enjoyment of property

anthony.abbondanza@tc.tc

Residents of lower Westmount are seeking authorization to launch a class-action lawsuit against the McGill University Health Centre (MUHC), McGill Healthcare Infrastructure Group, SNC-Lavalin, and Innisfree Inc. for what they claim to be incessant and excessive noise emanating from the Glen site-based superhospital, according to the firm representing the residents, Sylvestre, Fafard, Painchaud (SFP).

Under the banner of the Neighbours of the Glen Campus non-profit group, residents of Westmount and Cote-des-Neiges-NDG are not only seeking a court order to stop what many have described as non-stop, daily noise, but also to be awarded damages of $5,000 per person for loss use and enjoyment of their property and the violation of their right to a healthy environment.

Sylvestre, Fafard, Painchaud, the Montreal law firm which specializes in class actions, filed the motion in Quebec Superior Court on behalf of about 3,000 impacted residents, SFP lawyer Catherine Sylvestre told the Examiner Monday morning.

Although difficult to estimate the length of time it can take to receive a response, Sylvestre said based on experience it should happen within a year.

Noise level

The first public reports of the noise emanating from the recently-opened Notre-Dame-de-Grace-based hospital's heating, ventilation and air conditioning system began in April 2014.

Tests conducted by WSP, a sound engineering firm hired by Westmount, on November 28 and 29 at 66 and 76 York St. demonstrated that the noise was indeed as much as nine decibel levels above the city's permitted levels (levels vary according to location and time of day).

Residents asked SNC-Lavalin, who led the Groupe Immobilier Sante McGill consortium tasked with building the hospital, to resolve the issue, but without success.

"We have exhausted all efforts and all provincial and municipal channels to resolve the problem," said Marc Felgar, among the plaintiffs, of York Street in a released statement. «Regrettably, we have no choice but to turn to the courts as a last resort.»

"Despite Lavalin's longstanding knowledge of the noise problem, and public statements that they would work on a solution, there has been no noticeable improvement to the noise, including in the overnight hours," added resident Barrie Howells.

The waiting game

The city of Westmount, too, has met with MUHC and SNC-Lavalin officials several times over the course of the year to resolve the matter. When at an impasse, Mayor Peter Trent asked the Environment Minister to intervene without success. According to Christina Smith, a city councillor representing the affected district 5 in Westmount, council is still waiting to receive a noise mitigating report from SNC-Lavalin – one that was promised for March 1.

The amount sought by the residents may change, depending on whether the noise improves or worsens over the course of the year, said Sylvestre.

MUHC reacts to lawsuit

In a statement, the MUHC said: "While the MUHC would naturally prefer that operational noise not be an issue, we recognize that it is a source of concern for our community. The MUHC is committed to working with our private partner, the Groupe Immobilier Santé McGill (GISM), to ensure that it acts urgently to respect its obligations and put in place a long-term solution that complies with regulatory requirements."

Work to the main ventilation ducts and parts of the air extraction system at the Research Institute – located at the Glen site – were conducted in January in effort to reduce the load on the ventilation system.

The second phase of the work is ongoing, but acoustic and mechanical readings have yet to be completed to assess the improvements.

"There is nothing more important to the MUHC than the health and wellbeing of its patients and their families, as well as the community as a whole," read the statement.

A SNC-Lavalin spokesperson told the Examiner the company is unwilling to comment until they review the pending lawsuit.

All persons who are residing or have resided, and all persons who are working or studying, or who have worked or studied since February 1st, 2014 within the area bordered on the north by Cote-St-Antoine Street, on the west by Marlowe Street, on the south by De Maisonneuve boulevard and Ste. Catherine Street and on the east by Lansdowne Street are automatically part of the class action suit.

"I'm very sympathetic to their cause," says Mayor Trent

Westmount to continue amicable approach towards MUHC noise resolution

anthony.abbondanza@tc.tc

Peter Trent wasn't surprised to learn that Neighbours of the Glen Campus, a group of Westmount residents, have launched a lawsuit early this week against the McGill University Health Centre (MUHC), SNC-Lavalin, and Innisfree Inc. to put an end to what they described as incessant noise emanating from the new superhospital in Notre-Dame-de-Grace.

"It was something they've talked about for some time now," said the Westmount mayor. "I understand they're frustrated. They come to the city and we have nothing concrete to report to them and then they get no answer from SNC-Lavalin."

Residents have been plagued by the noise ever since the superhospital's heating, ventilation, and air conditioning system at the Research Institute was activated in late 2013.

SNC-Lavalin has publicly stated the performance capacity of the HVAC system has been reduced to 50 per cent since October 2014. Since then, SNC-Lavalin and its Groupe Immobilier Sante McGill (GISM) consortium partners have continued to search for a long-term solution to the noise issue.

Westmount began cooperating with MUHC officials toward a resolution to the problem after reaching an impasse with SNC-Lavalin officials late 2014.

"They're still promising a real and concrete solution in the not too distant future," said Trent, referring to a noise mitigation report city officials expect to receive by May 20. Initially, the report had been announced for March 1. "From the city's standpoint, we are still marching along the route of trying to solve this thing amicably."

Recently-repaved Sunnyside Avenue already ridden with cracks

Westmount spent over $125,000 to reconstruct the road last summer.

anthony.abbondanza@tc.tc

Westmount city council approved, last summer, a $125,700-contract to Sintra Inc. for a major road repaving project on Sunnyside Avenue, from Upper Bellevue to Lexington. One year later, the avenue is already ridden with cracks.

"I walk there every few days. You can't help but see them. They're all over the place," said Patrick Martin, district 1 city councillor.

Sunnyside Avenue is located in the northern residential sector of Westmount, one that is without heavy traffic on a daily basis. Sintra was contracted to remove the old pavement, repair the base, and install a new pavement.

"I am quite disappointed with the cracking that has occurred in the new pavement," he added, noting the street shouldn't have cracked despite the harsh winter.

The reconstruction work was part of a larger $4,441,400 roadway reconstruction program for several streets in Westmount in 2014.

Martin, who is also Westmount's commissioner of public works and utilities, told the Examiner a site visit is planned with the contractor and the public works department within the week to inspect on what he called "the deficiencies" and agree on an action plan.

"Our definition of fix it is don't just put a sealer on it. Melt the asphalt so that it joins and bonds," he said.

Sintra never returned the Examiner's request for an interview.

Work guaranteed

The city does have a three-year guarantee on the work completed.

It's not the only street that will need to be redone by Sintra, according to Martin, as a portion of Ste. Catherine Street is also showing unexpected cracking. This project, too, is under a three-year guarantee.

It's unclear whether the fault lies with the city's pavement designs or the contractor. Martin, who oversees the function of the public works' department, said a review of the department's asphalt re-pavement design is in order.

"I understand it's hilly here and we have underground streams. We have to learn from this and not have crack after crack in our streets," added Martin.

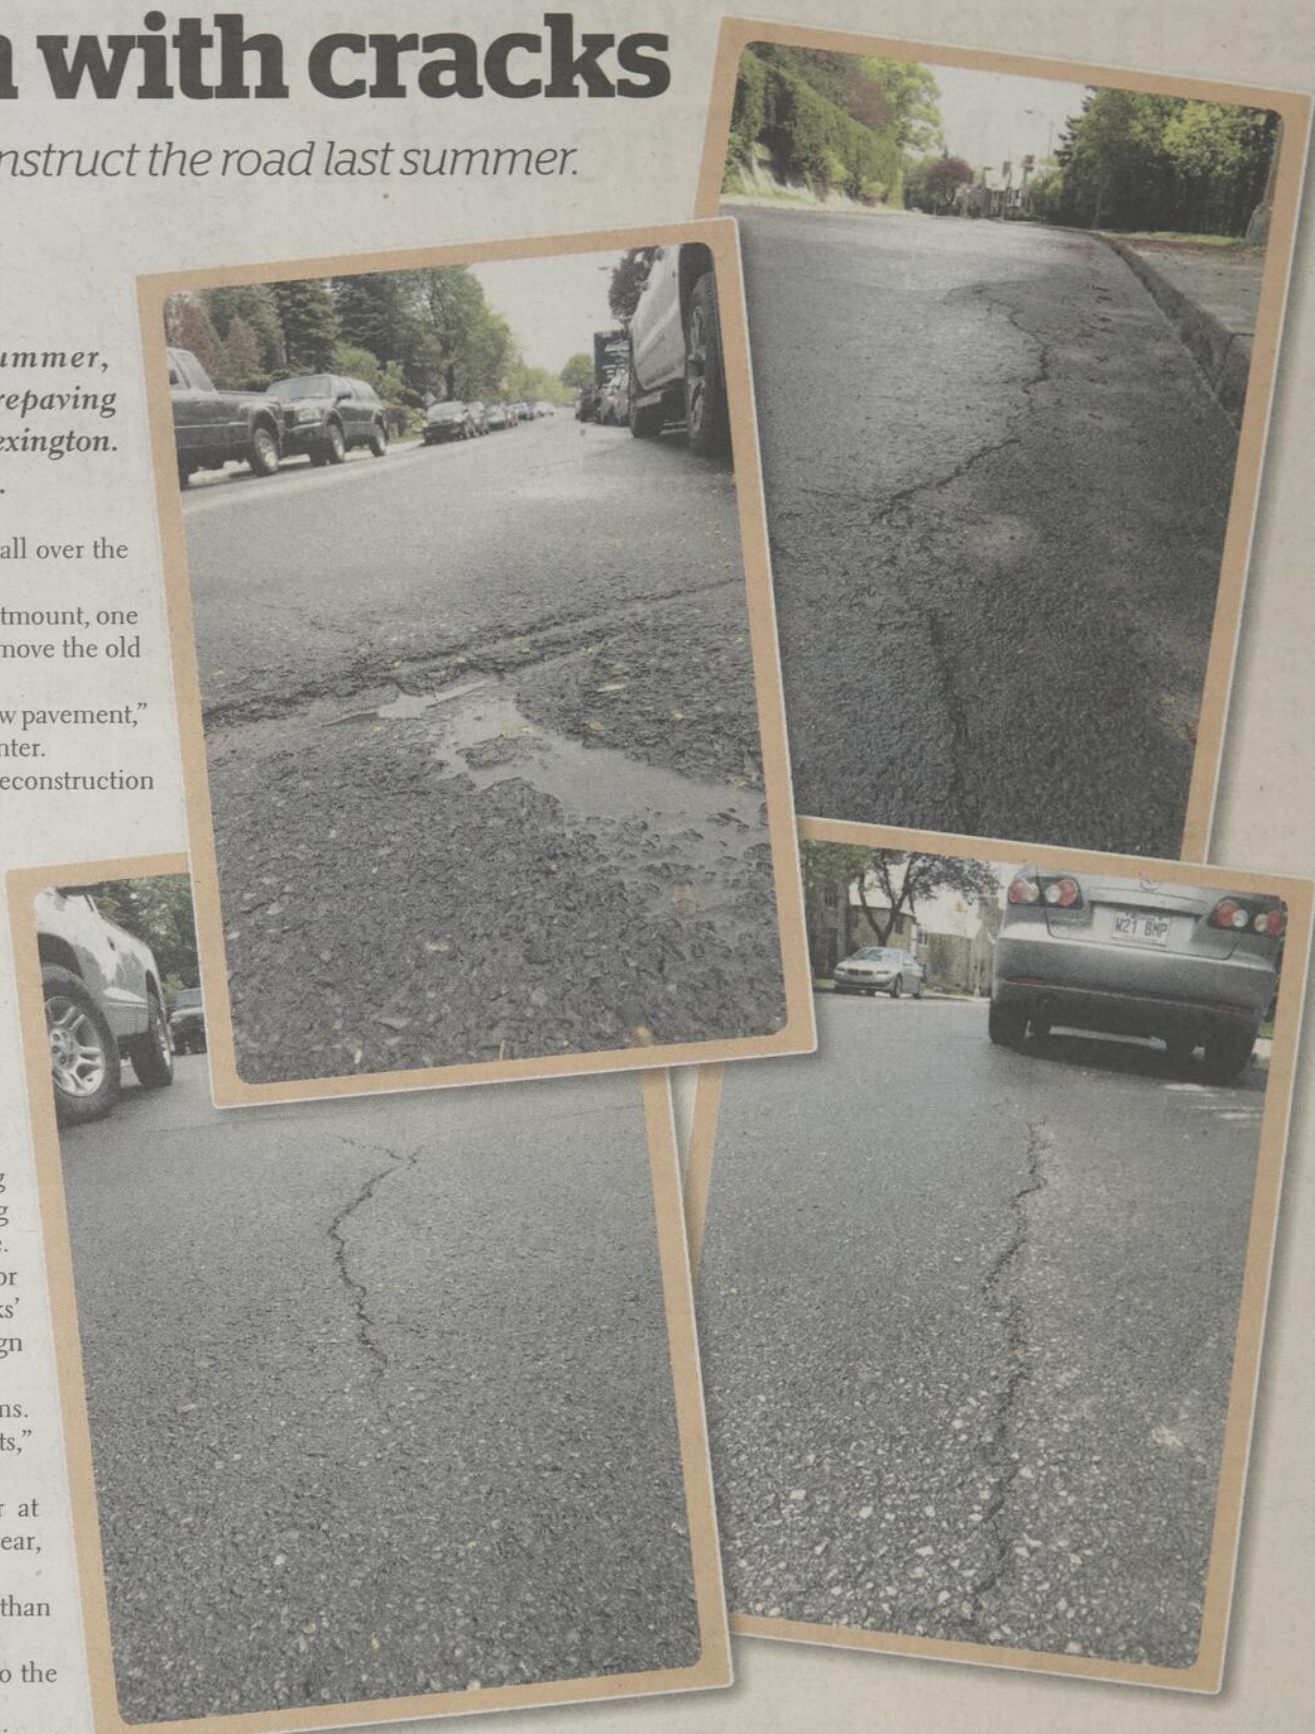

Tarek Zayed, a civil and environmental engineering professor at Concordia University was surprised to learn the street was repaved last year, after viewing several current photos of Sunnyside Avenue.

"The finish looks old and that's not good," said Zayed, who has more than 25 years of experience in construction industry.

He said the various cracks found on the street may be attributed to the improper compaction of the base or sub-base of the street.

As for the small pothole on Sunnyside Avenue, it could be the bituminous materials that is typically used for paving was not in good condition, according to Zayed.

The harsh winter, too, could have played a role in the appearance of the pothole.

Several cracks line Sunnyside Avenue, a street that underwent a $125,000 reconstruction last summer. Examiner - Anthony Abbondanza

Westmount, which did threaten legal action against SNC-Lavalin last summer before pulling back, can change its course of action if the city deems progress towards remediation has halted. Trent told the Examiner that MUHC officials were made aware that cooperation has a shelf life. "For any reason nothing materializes, our own strategy will change," he said.

The Westmount mayor added that if the iron fists in the velvet glove approach – as he characterized it – the city is taking does work, there is a "potential for a much quicker remediation" than legal action.

MUHC hopes to give its unused equipment to nations in need

● anne-frederique.hebert-dolbec@tc.tc

Several medical equipment left behind during the McGill University Health Centre (MUHC) move could be sent to developing nations, where the needs are urgent. However, unlike the Centre Hospitalier Université de Montréal (CHUM), the MUHC is not yet ready to take steps in this direction.

Before the medical equipment reaches Africa or Central America, a number of steps must be completed, according to a policy established by the Quebec's health minister.

This week, Radio-Canada explained in detail how the CHUM will send medical equipment overseas to countries that need a helping hand.

With the relocation of the Royal Victoria Hospital barely finished, and two big moves set for the coming months, the MUHC is still at the very beginning of a similar process, according to Julie Paquet, MUHC's head of communications.

"When hospitals are emptied, we clean the site and create an inventory of our equipment. Then, we need to identify whether there are needs in health institutions affiliated with the MUHC or in any hospitals and organizations elsewhere in Quebec. Last of all, we can offer what is left to charitable organizations for them to distribute it in other countries," she said.

Collaboration santé internationale (CSI) is the only organization in Quebec accredited by the minister of health to receive the health network's unused material. For example, right now, hospitals are all gradually making a digital switchover.

Meanwhile, many of the old ultrasound systems, encephalograms and other equipment are still in excellent condition.

Since its creation 46 years ago, it collaborated on many occasions with the CHUM. The move, however, promises a greater transfer of equipment.

"When we receive the equipment, our team verifies that it is functional. If this is not the case, the volunteer engineers try to repair it. If it is impossible, we send it to recycling," explained Pierrette Defoy-Dolbec, chief executive of CSI.

The organization has many partners from around the world, who regularly send requests to make their health facility operational.

"When we receive a request, we make sure the organization behind it is credible. We have several eligibility requirements. We ensure people have the ability to operate the equipment they receive, keep them in condition and repair as required," added Defoy-Dolbec.

Urgent needs

Since its founding, CSI has sent medical equipment to over 90 countries. In 2014 alone, 19 countries have been served. According to the CEO, the needs are still particularly acute in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and in Haiti.

"DRC is a huge country," said Defoy-Dolbec. "The conflict that has been raging there for the last 20 years is the deadliest since World War II. Over 60 per cent of the population lives below the poverty line and life expectancy is only 50 years."

In partnership with the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), CSI is working to improve health care in 27 health institutions throughout the DRC. The collaboration with the Diocese of Bukavu resulted in the complete equipment of the hospital in Bukavu, a town on the eastern tip of Congo, in the province of Kivu.

Over the last five years, 24 containers carrying equipment for an estimated cumulative value of nearly $2 million were shipped to Haiti. During the 2010 earthquake, CSI has sent nearly $425,000 worth of materials, equipment and medicines. Within 10 days following the earthquake, Haitian beneficiaries have received all the necessary support through CSI local partners.

Police investigating road rage incident on Sherbrooke Street

● anthony.abbondanza@tc.tc

A man was hit by a taxi driver at the corner of Sherbrooke Street and Wood Avenue on May 6 in an apparent case of road rage.

The man claims he was hit by the taxi driver as he stood in front of the car, protesting he was previously cut off by the said taxi, according to Station 12 of the Service de Police de la Ville de Montréal (SPVM).

Police are investigating the incident, which occurred at 8 p.m., said Const. Stephan Laperriere.

If the investigation can prove that the 45-year-old taxi driver, a Laval native, did indeed hit the man in question, he could be charged with armed aggression.

"We have a lot of these incidents happen throughout the year. They're not aware their driving can cause emotions in other drivers to the point where a person can't control their emotions. It's breaking point. The person's had enough," said Const. Laperriere.

Westmount native Eugenie Bouchard took top honors at the 42nd Quebec Sports Gala last week, where she was named international female athlete of the year.

It's been tremendous 12 months for the tennis player, who moved up from the 32nd to the 7th place in the world. She became the first Canadian in history to reach the finals of a Grand Slam tournament.

Bouchard has reached the semifinals of the Australian Open and French Open in 2014, besides competing in the Wimbledon final. She also won the first tournament of her career on the WTA tour in Nuremberg, Germany. In addition, the athlete has contributed to ensuring Canada's place in the World Group Fed Cup for the first time in history.

Her success and progress have been acknowledged by all. She has received, among others, the title of the "most improved player of 2014," awarded by the WTA, as well as the Canadian Press' "female athlete of the year."

The 42nd Quebec Sports Gala, animated by Chantal Petitclerc, Jean-Luc Brassard and Claudine

Douville, has crowned the winners of the "Maurice" for their performances during the year 2014, excluding the Olympic and Paralympic Games in Sochi that were recognized last year.

Chamandy also offered solid performances in the senior category, in which she earned three more medals. She won gold in mixed synchronized diving, silver in the one-metre springboard competition and the bronze in the three-metre competition.

From July 17 to 19, Chamandy is set to participate in the Junior Elite Nationals in Edmonton, Alberta.

A spinathon for hope!

Last April 26th, known westmounters, Mr Anthony Zitzmann and Mr Jean-Christophe Bedos have completed a fundraising spinathon at b.cycle on 601 rue de la Gauchetière. The proceeds of the event will fund the Enbridge® Ride to Conquer Cancer® charity which these two gentlemen are co-chairing. The aforementioned is a cycling event held on July 11 to 12 and spans 200km from Montreal to Quebec. The money raised will help fund cancer research and care at the Segal Cancer Centre at the Jewish General Hospital and throughout Quebec.

More bird watchers than birds at Summit Park

● examiner@tc.tc

About a dozen bird watchers of the Bird Protection Quebec group visited Summit Park Tuesday morning to catch a glimpse of birds during the spring migration period, which began mid-April.

Around 33 species of the Warbler bird have been observed at Summit Park over the years, including the chestnut-sided warbler. Interestingly, the Baltimore Orioles, for which the Major League Baseball team is aptly named, also migrates to the park before heading north to their breeding grounds.

Unfortunately for the local bird watchers, there were no birds to observe.

As part of the 38th annual TD Canadian Children's Book week, authors visited St. George's School of Montreal, Selwyn House, and the Westmount Public Library last week.

Chiara Uegaki shared her passion for reading, writing, and storytelling with the students at St. George's and the kids at the library, whereas students from Selwyn House received a special visit from Rukhsana Khan.

From May 2 to 9, 29 authors and illustrators visited hundreds of schools, public libraries, bookstores and community centres across Canada to read from their books.

This year's theme, Hear Our Stories: Celebrating First Nations, Métis and Inuit Literature, celebrated stories published by and about members of Aboriginal communities.
