Youth Broke Limb During Game Rugby

West Hill Game Stopped After Accident to Allen Helm

A compound fracture of the leg suffered by Allen Helm broke up the Huntingdon Acad.-West Hill High School game in Montreal Saturday morning when the flashy Academy full-back was tackled heavily in the third quarter and had to be rushed to the Hospital for treatment. The injury occurred after Helm had snared a West Hill forward pass on his own 50 yard line and was racing for a touchdown when two West Hill players caught up with him and laid him low with a hard tackle. He was rushed to the Homoeopatnic Hospital by Douglas Lunan, of Huntingdon, a teacher in the West Hill High school. He remained there Saturday night, and was brought to his home here on Sunday.

Although the Montreal team was leading 12-5 at the time, the local boys were beginning to press and would have had possession of the ball on the Montreal 15 yard line. There was about ten minutes left to play when the game was called.

Before he was carried from the field with a broken leg, Helm had been leading the Academy forces in an inspired attack which seemed certain to tie the score. In the second quarter of the game he pulled a fake kick play, which completely fooled the West Hill line and drew in the secondary defense, and then romped 80 yards down the field on a magical piece of broken field running for a touchdown.

In the play in which he was injured he had speared a West Hill forward pass from the air near center field and ran the ball down to the fifteen yard line where he was tackled.

West Hill broke into the scoring column early in the first quarter when a fast end run from their own fifty yard line netted them forty yards and R. Donald plunged through centre for the score. In the second quarter "Cy" Caldwell kicked a rouge to give the Montrealers a 6-0 lead before Helm's sensational run for a touchdown brought the Academy within striking distance again. Griffith's attempted drop kick for the extra point was blocked.

West Hill got their second major score on a miscue by Helm whose attempted lateral pass to Duke near his own goal line fell into the hands of the West Hill end who passed to Marshall and the latter went over for the score. Donald converted for the extra point.

Helm, Duke, Bennett, Griffiths, George and Les Hayter, Lefebvre and Grant played an exceptionally fine game for the Academy. The game was played on the West Hill school grounds.

The Academy was lined up as follows: snap, I. Laberge; inside H. Griffiths, G. Hayter; middle, G. Salter, Moore, C. Grant; quarter, M. Duke, Alan Mann; halfback, L. Hayter, A. Hatfield, E. Bennett; fullback, G. Lefebvre, A. Helm; end, T. Warden, J. Dawson, J. Kirby.

Zion Church Gets Gift of Old Trowel

Had Been Used at Laying of Church Cornerstone In Year 1868

The Rev. J. A. Mowatt, B.A., of Montreal, retired Chinese Missionary, who filled the pulpit of the United Church in Dundee for several Sundays after the death of the Rev. C. A. Haughton, was present on Sunday, Nov. 15th at Divine Service and delivered a very inspiring sermon to a congregation which filled the Church to capacity. The occasion was the presentation of the Silver Trowel used by Colonel Alexander A. Stevenson of Montreal, in laying the cornerstone of the old Zion Presbyterian Church built in 1868 and which was destroyed by fire five years ago.

The cornerstone of the old church was laid on July 1st, 1868, and it was rather a coincidence that Mr. Mowatt as executor of the estate formerly left by Colonel A. A. Stevenson, who was a grand uncle of his wife and former Miss Stevenson would be the one to discover the trowel among the possessions of the Stevenson family. Colonel Stevenson was a very popular and influential man in his day, being Grand Master of the Order of Masons in Canada. He was also a veteran of the Riel Rebellion and the Fenian Raid where he obtained the distinction of being a Colonel of the Royal Artillery. At one time he was chairman of the Montreal Fire Dept. and served as a city Alderman for a term of years.

That he was in demand for the laying of cornerstones was testified to by the fact that several other silver trowels from other cornerstone ceremonies from different parts of Canada are still to be found among the family heirlooms.

As it was the wish of Mrs. Mowatt that the trowel should be presented to the Dundee congregation Mr. Mowatt arranged with the Rev. J. H. Lynn to set a date on which the presentation ceremony might take place. Accordingly Sunday, Nov. 15, was the date decided on. Mrs. Noel Reynolds, Mrs. Mary Jane Platt, Mrs. Sarah Smallman and Mr. Jas. A. Arnold, who were present at the ceremony in 1868 were seated in the front row of the Church for the occasion.

Huntingdon Borderers' Colours Go To Their Final Resting - Place With Military Pomp and Ceremony

Remembrance Day Programme Featured by Cablegram from Field-Marshal, the Duke of Connaught

The colours of the Huntingdon Borderers' Regiment which repulsed the Fenian Raiders in 1866 and 1870 were given a final resting place in a colourful ceremony held at Huntingdon on Wednesday, November 11th. The ceremony, combined with an Armistice Day celebration, was attended by hundreds of visitors from this district and many other sections of the province. The First Armoured Car Regiment, Montreal, with military equipment and a force of sixty officers and men were present for the occasion.

After a ceremony at the soldiers' monument the colours were taken to the St. John's Anglican Church where they were received by the rector, Rev. W. S. Hatcher, from Col. Buchanan, acting on behalf of Lt.-Col. L. D. LeMoyne, commanding officer of the regiment.

The celebration started at ten o'clock in the morning with a parade which started at the County Building and proceeded to the monument. The parade featured local Great War, Boer War and Fenian War veterans, School Cadets, Scouts, Town and County officials and the Montreal regiment. Military equipment from Montreal included an armoured car and two reconnaissance cars.

The procession was headed by Lt.-Col. Buchanan, who was followed by two motorcycles driven by men of the regiment, and the regimental bugle band. The two reconnaissance cars were next in line carrying Fenian Raid veterans, and these were followed by a group of Great War veterans, led by Major T. L. Irving of St. Anicet. The Montreal regiment and armoured tank were followed by the Huntingdon Academy cadets led by Allan Helm and Irving Laberge, under command of Sgt.-Maj. Wallis. The Huntingdon Scout Troop led by Assistant Scout Master Reg. Daniel, was also accompanied by Rev. M. W. Williams, Assistant District Scout Commissioner, of Valleyfield. Town and county officials brought up the rear of the procession. The parade proceeded up King street along Bouchette, down Chateauguay and up Dalhousie street to the monument.

For the first time in at least forty years a saluting base was to be seen in Huntingdon. This was placed at the southwest corner of Prince Arthur Square on which the colours were presented in 1870. The salute was taken by Lt.-Col. LeMoyne. With him on the platform were two officers of the Regiment, Capt. H. R. Clouston, Warden L. Blair, Mayor Faubert and Mrs. H. R. Clouston representing the nursing sisters.

At the soldiers' monument the ceremony was conducted under the chairmanship of Dr. (Capt.) H. R. Clouston. It was begun with a hymn, "O God our help in ages past," followed by a prayer by Rev. J. H. Miller, D.D., of Huntingdon United Church. Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D., of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church gave the dedicatory address. This was followed by the blowing of the town siren at 10.58½, a roll of drums, the Last Post at 11 o'clock, when two minutes of silence were observed. Reveille was then sounded.

Wreaths were deposited by Mayor Faubert on behalf of the town, by L. E. Blair on behalf of the county and the ceremony was concluded with the singing of "O Canada" and the National Anthem."

The wreaths borne on the colors were given by Mrs. Lucy Bicknell, daughter of Ensign Montgomery, who had received the colours from H. R. H. Prince Arthur.

Capt. Clouston and Lt.-Col. LeMoyne spoke at the monument. An interesting feature of the former's speech was a cable which he read from H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught who presented the colours in 1870: "Am glad to hear that the old colours of the Huntingdon Borderers are to be deposited in church. I hope they may ever be cherished as the memento of the gallant services of the regiment. Signed, Arthur, Field Marshal."

"Seventy years ago," declared Dr. Clouston in his address, "some of the Irish in the United States believed that if they took Canada they could separate Ireland from Great Britain. It only required a small measure of success and the cause would have been taken up by tens of thousands.

"For many reasons Montreal was a key point of attack and word was brought that they would come through Huntingdon County. In 1866 there was some gathering of Fenians at Malone and troops were held in readiness here.

"In 1870 the Fenians crossed the border at Trout River and the Borderers were ordered to meet them. Soldiers were sent from Montreal via Coteau to Port Lewis to assist and support them.

"Some were quartered in the County Building where we started the parade; some in the Huntingdon Academy here to our left; and the remainder encamped on this square. The ammunition was stored in the church on the side of the square where the colours will rest.

"In the morning they began their 12 mile march to the border. Kipling says that it makes no difference to the man concerned whether he is killed in a border raid or at the Battle of Waterloo. On that day 66 years ago the Huntingdon Borderers presented themselves as a living shield for Canada against a foe whose strength they knew not, whose morale they could only guess. But they did know that the enemy was provided with the newest of arms, a breech loading rifle with bullets with a most terrible power to wound and that the enemy was well placed behind a barricade.

"Yet with the utmost bravery they went forward across the open fields determined as one veteran told me yesterday to 'drive the Fenians back or leave our bodies on the ground.'

"Had the Fenians withheld their volleys a few moments, or showed more resistance there would have been many widows in Huntingdon that night and many in this audience would never have been born.

Couple Celebrates Wedding Anniversary at Hemmingford

Mr. and Mrs. Narcisse Stringer were pleasantly surprised Sunday evening when a few friends called at their home to remind them of their thirty-fifth wedding anniversary. A pleasant social evening was enjoyed by all present. Mr. and Mrs. Stringer were presented with a purse of money.

Those from away to attend were Mr. and Mrs. N. Parent, Howick, Mrs. Narcisse Stringer, Howick, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Rabidoux, of Mooers Forks, N.Y., Rev. Father Berthiaume, of Hinchinbrooke.

After all had partaken of the bountiful luncheon they left for their homes wishing Mr. and Mrs. Stringer many more years of wedded life.

A union service was held in St. Andrews' United Church Sunday afternoon, with the congregations of Knox, Roxham and St. Andrews' United Churches in attendance. The minister, Rev. Victor Rose was in charge of the service and Rev. S. Ralph Collins, of Cammondongo, Portuguese West Africa, missionary on furlough, was the guest speaker. Much interest was shown by the audience in Mr. Collins' vivid portrayal of the work being done by the Mission Station in Angola.

An interesting feature was the singing of a verse of the hymn "O Come Let Us Sing of a Wonderful Love" by Mr. Collins, in the Umbundo language.

The music for the service was under the direction of Mrs. E. Clelland, and Miss May Bennett. The joint choir sang the Anthem "As the years go by". The solo parts being taken by Mrs. S. Dunlop and the Rev. Rose.

We are grateful to Mr. Collins for this visit to our community thus making this service possible.

The second meeting of the Young People's Society of Hemmingford United Church took place on Monday, Nov. 9th. The meeting opened by singing, followed by games. Mr. Kenneth Johnson then gave an interesting talk on "War poetry". The meeting closed in devotions under the guidance of Mr. Rose.

The Turkey Supper under the auspices of the St. Andrew's Presbyterian ladies, which took place on Armistice evening, Wednesday, Nov. 11th, was a social and financial success.

A short but varied programme followed the supper. The programme was in Armistice keeping. To the following who assisted much credit is due. A violin solo by Miss Geraldine Clayland, accompanied at the piano by Miss Millicent Orr.

Electric Service For New Erin and Elgin Residents

For some time the residents of New Erin, Elgin, and Covey Hill have been trying to complete arrangements with the power company so that they would be supplied electric service. Their efforts had not brought forth very fruitful results so they requested the Huntingdon County member, Hon. M. B. Fisher, to take up the matter in their behalf. Hon. Mr. Fisher communicated with the officials of the Shawinigan Water and Power Company. As a result of his letter and an interview which followed, Shawinigan officials have made the announcement that they will this year construct an extension to their distribution system at New Erin to serve the farmers in that locality, and that they will also construct an extension 2.7 miles in length on the Elgin Road. They have also promised serious consideration of the Covey Hill situation.

Life-Saving Awards Given To Two Boys

Concert Program Included Presentation of Two Purses of Money

Honorary testimonial certificates of the Royal Humane Association were presented Watson Rowat and Dunsmore McClatchie at a public concert which was held in their honour in the Munro Hall, Athelstan, on Thursday evening.

The programme was presided over by Rev. A. Nimmo, and opened with community singing led by a choir of Athelstan ladies. There followed some very mystifying sleight-of-hand tricks by Stanley Currie, of Huntingdon. A vocal solo and encore were given by Mrs. E. Wood. There also were violin solos by Clifford French, and vocal and guitar solos by Alton Warden, of Huntingdon. A novelty number by nine ladies was particularly enjoyed. It depicted a meeting of the Cinderville Sewing Circle, and the acting was all in pantomine. Mrs. Ella Boyce was the reader, and the accompanist was Mrs. N. W. Reese. It was a little gem of entertainment in which all parts were particularly well portrayed. Two skits, also in pantomine, by Mrs. Harold McCaffrey and Jack Elder, and vocal accompaniment by Mrs. Reese, were heartily applauded. Miss Evelyn Purcell also assisted in the accompaniment.

During a short intermission a silver collection was taken, and the proceeds, a substantial amount, were divided between the two boys in whose honour the concert was held.

Before presentation of the certificates Rev. Mr. Nimmo thanked the Athelstan people, and particularly Mrs. Reese for their staging such a successful event, and Scoutmaster M. R. Primeau, of Huntingdon, for having secured the testimonial certificates for the boys. At the conclusion of the programme Scoutmaster Primeau spoke a few words of congratulations to the boys, stating that he was glad to have had some part in securing recognition for their valiant efforts, and thanked the Athelstan people who had helped him secure the necessary information and photographs for the affidavits.

Scottish Queen Subject Young People's Address In Exchange Program

Howick Minister, Rev. T. J. Watson, Displays Usual Entertaining Skill at St. Andrew's Church

The Young People's Society of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Huntingdon, launched the first in a series of exchange programs with other Young People's Societies throughout the district when Rev. T. J. Watson and the young people of the Georgetown Society put on a concert in the church here Friday evening.

The program included a talk on "Scottish stories—grave and gay", by Rev. T. J. Watson, recitations and vocal and instrumental music by the members of the society. Mary, Queen of Scotland, whose life was one long and bitter struggle with Elisabeth, Queen of England, was the topic of the grave portion of Rev. Watson's address.

Mary's life was tragic and pathetic, stated the speaker. She was only 45 when she was beheaded. The date was February 8th, 1587. Just before she died she said to her servant, "I die like a true woman to my religion and like a true Scottish woman." Her death was a crime in the sense that she had no trial. Mary was ready and willing to die. For twenty-six years she had lived in the blaze of courts and the clamour of war and then for nineteen years the prison doors had closed behind her. She had been married three times and her three husbands were dead when she herself went to the block. She had married the Dauphin of France when she was yet a girl living in France. Then, when she returned to Scotland she married Darnley, a weak and foolish nobleman, and later Bothwell, a border ruffian.

There was a shadow of doom over her whole life. She was born in a tempest. Six days after her birth her father died. She was sent to France as a child of six, and ten years later married the Dauphin. For six months she reigned as Queen of France then, at the age of nineteen, she returned to Scotland—to a land that was in the throes of a transition from the old world which she knew, and loved, to a new world she knew not, and hated. And she had only her beauty and her subtlety with which to fight the difficulties she met there.

Mary made many blunders. Her marriage to Darnley and Bothwell were two of the chief of these. Perhaps some small justification for her action could be found in the character of the men she had around her. There were the Douglas's, the Hamilton's, the Lennox's, Murray, cold and crafty, Morton steeped in blood and treason, and John Knox, the most unlovable of all great men.

There was much that was alloy in the gold of Knox's character. He had no Christian meekness. He was audacious and unscrupulous. Calvinism with Knox at its head, lowered over Scotland like a thunderstorm that at any time might burst. Mary was always anxious to justify herself in the eyes of Knox for she knew a man when she saw one. She tried hard to please the fiery protestant preacher but Knox hated Catholicism, or any other religion that was opposed to his own, and Mary was a Catholic.

Mary was brave and courageous. She never forgave an enemy and never deserted a friend. She never quailed before the bludgeonings of fate. She was a "bonny" fighter.

As an introduction to the gay portion of his address, Rev. Watson reminded his listeners of the words of a wit who said "that a surgical operation was necessary to get a good story into the head of a Scotchman." Then he told a number of extremely funny stories which showed how false this statement was.

The program given by the young people was as follows: Recitation, Miss Anderson; Songs by the Bible class; Violin solo, Ralph Logan. Musical accompaniment was supplied by Miss B. Kerr and Mr. Darwin Stata.

Enquiry Into Cost Of Producing Milk Will be Continued

The enquiry into the cost of production of fluid milk in the Montreal area carried on by the provincial government will continue this season. It is necessary that the milk commission should have ready to hand the most exact figures available on costs from year to year. Farmers of the Huntingdon and Howick districts have co-operated splendidly in supplying these figures in recent years. This co-operation is greatly appreciated. The work this season will be carried on as usual by C. E. Boyce, of Huntingdon.

Travel Talk and Pictures Enjoyed by Large Audience

Through the medium of coloured slides and descriptive comments, the large audience that assembled in McDougall Hall, Ormstown, on Friday evening, November 13th, were given glimpses of a tour of England by rail, sea and air when Mr. H. Black, of Montreal, of the Cunard White Star Line Co., addressed them under the auspices of St. Paul's United Sunday School.

The grandeur of the English cities, picturesque bits of countryside, snow covered mountains and home scenes were brought vividly before the audience with the slides which illustrated the progress of the tour made by the lecturer.

Musical items by the school pupils included a solo by Alexa Rember, piano duet by Bernice and Thelma Todd and choruses by the junior classes of boys and girls brought a splendid evening entertainment to a close.

Although the weather looked rather unfavourable on Saturday it did not prevent high prices being obtained at the auction sale of the late Archibald McEwen, where the entire herd of Holsteins and machinery were disposed of by the Auctioneer T. J. Graham, who conducted the sale in a satisfactory manner.

Cows ranged from $40.00 to $80.00; grade yearlings sold as high as $37; mixed grain sold at 47c. per 40 lb, with good prices for the machinery. This sale was strictly a cash one, and when one compares prices of today with the prices of a few years ago when "credit" was the pay, we feel that prosperity is once more coming into sway.

The annual supper of the Ormstown Presbyterian Church was held on Tuesday, November 10th, under the auspices of the Young People's Society. Although the weather was not very favourable, a large crowd gathered to participate in the good things.

Music was provided during the eevning by Miss Helen Ross, Mr. F. Weale, Mr. Lionel Upton and Mrs. Pearce.

There was a work table, candy booth and fish pond. The general proceeds amounted to $147.00.

Those interested in the Poppy Day Fund will be glad to learn that from the canvass made by the Boy Scouts, together with the sales in the stores, $18.00, the net proceeds, were sent by the Scouts to the Canadian Legion Branch in Montreal. This year's amount was six dollars more than last year.

Trout River Boy Becomes Rear Admiral

James D. McNair Advanced To High Rank in the U. S. Navy

An unusually high honor has come to a former Trout River boy. Chaplain James Duncan MacNair, of Maine Conference, has been advanced to the rank of Rear Admiral Chaplain Corps, United States navy, retired. This advancement on the retired list is in accordance with an act of U.S. Congress, January 16, 1936. Chaplain MacNair was with the sixth regiment of marines in France during the World War and was cited "for extraordinary heroism in the operations against the enemy from June 6 to June 14, 1918, in performing his services in daily risk of death from enemy fire, when his labors in locating and burying the dead and giving comfort to the wounded were given with fidelity to duty under all conditions." Only one other World War Chaplain has been advanced to this rank.

He and his wife now live at 329 Brookline blvd., Brookline, Delaware County, Pa.

He is shy about talking of his experiences in France, shy even about showing the ornately decorated commission which he has just received from the President of the United States.

"I did only my duty," he says.

But that duty, as he saw it, was to devote every moment of his time to risking his own life in order that the dead soldiers upon the battlefield might have a Christian burial and that the wounded might be comforted by a minister of the Gospel.

"Yes," it was dangerous," he admitted. "A Catholic chaplain and I, with about eight men, went out during that week and looked for the dead to bury them. Of course, when the Germans heard the noise our spades and shovels made as we dug graves they would start firing. It was miraculous we were not killed.

"We buried all the dead we found—even the Germans. We took from the necks of these gallant lads the two tags everyone of them wore. One we tied to the stick we drove into the ground as marker for the new graves. The other we took with us for later identification.

"Armed? Oh, no, the chaplain is never armed. I carried only a small penknife, not for protection, but to use to cut the tags from the men we buried."

But because he did so much more than his duty, displayed "extraordinary heroism" and suffered deafness in its performance now 18 years later he received his reward.

He was graduated from Boston University and from the School of Theology there and then went to Swans Island, Me., to preach. He carries a gold watch his congregation gave him when he left Swans Island.

A veteran chaplain of the navy told him about the service and he decided to enter the navy. He spent 22 years on battleships and other craft and ashore. During the World War he was with the marines in France.

Young Man Badly Injured In Car Crash

Valleyfield Citizens Secure Post Office as Well As Delivery

Hubert Ostiguy, who was the victim of a serious accident last Sunday when the car in which he was riding took the ditch near St.-Timothée, is on the way to recovery in the Valleyfield Hospital.

The victim accompanied by two Valleyfield friends, Jos. Bisson and Réal Lacroix were returning from St.-Timothée at five o'clock in the morning. Apparently obstructed by the heavy fog the driver took the ditch. The car overturned. Mr. Ostiguy remained underneath the car until a neighboring farmer came to his rescue. The two other occupants were thrown from the car. Lacroix suffered a deep gash over the left eye and five stitches were necesssary to close the wound. Bisson was uninjured. Ostiguy suffered a fractured skull and remained unconscious for 12 hours.

The Town Council of New-Salaberry through their member of Parliament at Ottawa, Maxime Raymond, had their Post-Office reopened last Thursday on Grand-Ile Avenue. Damien Cousineau has been appointed Postmaster. To obtain this demand the Council claimed that the citizens were obliged to get their parcels and correspondence at the Valleyfield Post-Office and that the distance between these two places was considerable.

The Valleyfield Band committees held their meeting last Tuesday when the election of honorary and other officers took place.

In his opening remarks Chairman Arthur Vinet welcomed all the new members and the new board of directors and expressed his confidence in the future successes of the Band. At the close of his remarks and when all the directors had said a few words to those present, the honorary officers were named as follows: Mayor Philorum Billette, Prof. J-N. Charbonneau, Mus.-D., Lt.-Col. G.-W. E. Aird, Maxime Raymond, M.P., Delpha Sauvé, M.L.A., Hector Meury, Adrien Cholette and Raphael Bélanger, I.C.

After the election it was moved by Albert Leblanc, seconded by Mr. Aubin that the Bellerive Band be called the Valleyfield Band.

Quebec Session Concludes

THE special session of the Quebec Legislature has concluded, and with it one of the most exciting sessions that has ever taken place in Quebec. Premier Duplessis promised some interesting revelations and these were commonplace in the Public Accounts disclosures. There was also considerable new legislation of a far-reaching kind. The reform of the Elections Act and the severe penalties now applicable to those who attempt impersonation should prove a strong deterrent to such practices in future. The adoption of ballots with stubs and other precautions should also aid in securing honest elections and minimizing the chances of fraud.

There seemed to be general satisfaction over the reorganization of the Quebec Provincial Police. The Liquor Commission was abolished, and both these are understood to be temporary measures. In the case of the Provincial Police, an interesting suggestion is to the effect that Hon. Mr. Duplessis may invite the Federal authorities to place the R. C. M. P. forces at the disposal of the Province, subject to compensation for the work performed. But the Premier is much of a provincial autonomist, and it is unlikely that he will hand over our policing to the Federal force, although many believe that would be the best procedure. Abolition of the Public Service Commission has aroused opposition from certain engineers, but the move finds the legal fraternity strongly in favour of the change. The session was called to vote the annual estimates but much constructive legislation has also been passed.

The first session of the National Union Party has shown that they believe in getting things done with the least possible delay.

A Co-operative Effort

INSURANCE is the greatest co-operative effort in Canada. The interest of the shareholders in Insurance companies is negligible, about two per cent. 98% of all Life Insurance funds belong to the policyholders themselves, some 3,500,000 in Canada. This policyholders' money is invested in promoting national development in every township and farming community in the Dominion. It is in first mortgages, in federal, provincial and municipal bonds. The abrogation of interest payment agreements seriously affects the savings of a great number of men, women and children. The safety of their investments, which means the safety of invested capital and the observance of interest obligations, is a matter of national interest and importance.

With the participating type of policy which is general today, most policy-holders consider their investment in insurance as the soundest possible saving plan as well as protection against loss of earning power, or the removal by death from a family of the wage earner. It is obvious then that the men in charge of this public trust are forced to seek means of safe-guarding the obligations which they have to policyholders when radicals repudiate their obligations on the money borrowed from millions of Canadian citizens.

Preparation for Peace

SINCE the Remembrance Day celebration, we have been asked by one of our Great War veteran readers "Do militaristic displays make way for ideals of Peace?", and he asked us to give our viewpoint in an editorial this week. Following a celebration in which there was a militaristic display, it would seem that we were wont to depreciate the importance of Wednesday's ceremonies, or detract from its success, but we were asked for a frank declaration and therefore we must express the conviction that such displays tend to glorify war. Such declarations, we know, are open to wide argumentation, and we, ourselves, would like to be convinced that such displays are in no way a deterrent to peace.

Speaking further to this philosophic individual he commented favorably on the sermon given by St. John's Church rector, in which expression of praise we concurred. But then he added "Did it not seem rather strange that when the rector was preaching peace, speaking of the veterans of the Great War, the Fenian raids, and of the Lord's disciples, made no mention whatever of the armed soldiers sitting before him. In the midst of the ideals of peace, there were the very elements of war, young men who were being prepared for that very purpose, in uniform, with polished buttons and burnished guns. How can we ever secure peace if we prepare in such way for war?" There is depth to our kind Veteran's words, and there is meaning. We will leave these words to your own mind for pondering upon, and judging of their weight.

Personally, we figure, there must be armed forces to police the world, and to assure peace for the individual countries. Nations must be prepared to defend themselves against possible aggressors, but in that preparation for defence do we not build a militarism which some day will set itself in motion, and is it not responsible for hallucinations of a sort which tend to make us imagine that we are at the point of being attacked, and in that way we offend and insult other nations, eventually causing war. The remedy would be that all nations should disarm. Without ammunition no shot can be fired. Dare we even hope for such a Utopian state?

Recognition of Public Service

PEOPLE around Athelstan turned out as a body Thursday night to honour two young boys, Watson Rowat and Dunsmore McClatchie, for their heroic and successful efforts in saving the life of William Allen, near the Dunn Dam, at Powerscourt, last summer. The demonstration was in the nature of a public concert staged by local talent with the assistance of Huntingdon talent. There was no admission charge to the concert but the total amount of the silver collection was divided between the two boys.

Loud compliments were paid these two boys by the chairman and the various speakers on the programme. The youths were extolled for high public service and held as an example for others to follow. It was well and fitting that these boys' efforts should be publicly and tangibly rewarded, so that they will ever remember the grateful hearts of local citizens for their valiant deed. The occasion was also the presentation of honorary testimonial certificates from the Royal Humane Association.

The Remembrance Day Celebration

HUNTINGDON'S Remembrance Day celebration, favoured with clear weather, proved as successful as it was impressive. The ceremonies which started with the parade from the County Building to the Soldiers' Monument were carried out with military precision. The event here was of more than double significance since that day took place the official deposition in St. John's Church, of the King's and Regimental Colours of the Huntingdon Borderers' Regiment, which had been presented to the local Company at the close of the Fenian Raids by H. R. H. Prince Arthur, now the Duke of Connaught. Particular colour was added to the event by the presence of five of the Fenian Raid veterans who took part in the celebration, and thoroughly enjoyed the events of the day.

Military headquarters were very kind in making all the arrangements for the deposition of the colours, and in delegating the officers of the First Armoured Car Regiment, to carry out the ceremonies. The local Committees are indebted to Brig.-Gen. Alexander, and Lt.-Col. LeMoyne, for their supervision of details. Thanks are also due in large measure to Lt.-Col. Browne, Sgt.-Major Wallis, and Capt. Bélanger, as well as to the Royal Canadian Dragoons, of St. Johns, for sending their armoured and reconnaissance cars.

Huntingdon and district war veterans attended almost in full force and local business places cooperated by closing during the parade and ceremonies. It was a very successful event and the local Committees, County and Town officials are worthy of high praise for their work in making Huntingdon's 1936 Remembrance Day the best ever held here.

Broken Promises

WHEN Messrs. Aberhart, Maynard and Manning commenced their ruthless slashing away of legal contracts in Alberta, they were possibly labouring under the misapprehension that by refusing to pay monies which they have been shown to be able to pay, all the little people in the land would be on their side, and all the big fellows would be arrayed against them. However, they are now finding that economic problems are not so simple as might at first appear. There is no clear-cut cleavage between big and little, for all big institutions are composed of a mass of small people who have invested their savings in those institutions.

The big fellow, for the most part, invest directly through their own investment bureaus. The small people include their savings in the investments of the great concerns. Insurance companies are a composite of many small holders of policies, for it is obviously safer for an insurance company to have 1000 holders of $1000 policies than 10 holders of $100,000 policies. Similarly, the capital of mortgage loan institutions is largely composed of the small investments of people whose savings are too small to invest separately.

It is upon those little people that the brunt of the Alberta storm is impingeing with the most disastrous effect. From London, England, to Vancouver the small investor, who had thought to have erected an economic backlog against decreased earning ability in old age, finds himself beset by the Social Credit Party's broken promises to pay money lent in good faith.

Milk Sale Increased by Distributors

MR. ROSARIO MESSIER, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, has raised the question of milk sold through the stores as opposed to milk sold by means of route wagons. His contention is that certain concessions of the prices should be made to stores.

On this point, it is pertinent to recall that a University survey made several years ago in the United States showed conclusively that people used more milk when they obtained it from route wagons than when they obtained it through the stores. The reason then given was that when milk was regularly delivered at the door, the customer made use of it, even when he (or, more usually, she) had not particularly looked ahead and considered using that milk. Conversely, the effort of ordering milk from a store, or of going to the store for that milk, was sufficient to cause a decrease in the use of milk.

It is not necessary to stress at this late date in the development of appreciation of food values the necessity of a large milk consumption for health in a community. But Mr. Messier's advocacy of special concessions for the stores in his Retail Merchants' Association reminds one again that such stores have as their economic justification only the service they render to the consumer. And on the question of milk sale, the consumer is better served by the distributor with his route wagons. From the standpoint of the farmer-producer, sale of milk by the distributor is more beneficial than sale by the stores. This is undeniably true if for no other reason than that the route-wagon distributor is the chief means by which an increased demand is developed for milk.

SHAVE IN SELF SERVE SHOPS

Moscow, Russia, has opened a self-serve barber shop as an experiment. In quarters formerly occupied by an old-style barbering establishment comfortable chairs have been lined up before washstands and long mirrors. Customers are invited to sit and shave themselves for a nominal sum. The only barber present is Nina Saveilyeva who is called an "instructor." Her duties require her to see to it that patrons wash their hands before shaving and receive the necessary supplies, and to act as instructor to the inexperienced.

TRACTOR TRAINS SUCCESSFUL

The Government of Tanganyika is reported to have found tractor trains successful in serving remote districts. According to a report from Johannesburg, one eight-wheel tractor hauls two trailers, the three vehicles having 12 pairs of tired wheels. The total length of this road train is 74 feet. The load is distributed as between three tons on the tractor and six tons on each of the trailers, and it has been found possible on good surface without steep grades to carry 20 tons. A feature of the design is that the trailers are mounted on bogies, which enable the outfit to cross areas of loose sand and boulders.

TWELVE-YEAR WALK HOME ENDS

After walking for twelve years, Michael Horvath has reached his old home in Gyor, Hungary, from Siberia, where he was taken prisoner during the World War and detained there after peace was declared. In 1924 he started to walk the 10,000 miles to Gyor. It was the only way of reaching his own country, for he had no money. Almost everywhere, especially in Poland, he fell among friends who provided him with food and shelter. At last he set foot a few weeks ago in Hungary, and when, in the first village he entered he knocked at a door to ask for bread he was amazed to find it opened by his old company commander, who gave him an enthusiastic welcome.

ROADS MAKE NO DEATH RECORD

During the last 10 years 1,450,000,000 railway passengers have been carried in New South Wales with one fatality caused by railway operations. This statement is made in railway statistics just issued which state that 1,450,000 passengers are carried every year on the State railways.

SWIMS LIKE FISH

A woman from New Castle, Delaware, has swum ten miles in the Delaware river with her hands and feet shackled. She covered the distance in three hours 40 minutes. Last year the swimmer, Miss Delema Jones, a 29-year-old bookkeeper, swam nine miles in two hours 12 minutes with hands and feet tied securely.

FARM HOES DODGE TAXES

Class distinction has been raised between agricultural and gardening implements in Australia, and implement dealers of Melbourne have trouble in explaining it. By a new sales tax a person wishing to buy a hoe for his garden must pay tax, but a hoe for farming purposes can be had tax free.

WANTS BELL TO RING

On a farm near Kingston, Ont., lives Wallace H. Robb, farmer-poet. Robb has bought a huge bell such as is used in churches, at a cost of $1,000. "I am just going to ring it when I feel in the mood for it," says Robb. It is not only poets who enjoy the solemn tones of a bell in the countryside or in the city either. The neighborhood appreciates what Robb is doing for it.

BOYS SEIZE STREET CAR

When the conductor of a street car in Sydney, Australia, asked two boys for their fares, they knocked him off the car. The motorman came to his mate's aid, and one of the lads was stunned. The other then jumped on the car, took the motorman's place and sped off. A truck driver chased the car and disconnected the trolley pole. The boys were arrested.

MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY

On his twelfth trip across the Mediterranean Sea, Abdel Rahman Fadl hoped that some day soon he would cease to be a man without a country. Born in Egypt, he wandered round Europe, including Russia. Four months ago, in Athens, Greece, it seemed to him a good idea to go back to his native land. But on his arrival at Alexandria he was refused admittance and on his return to Greece he learned that he was not wanted. So he has been sailing back and forth across the Mediterranean because there is no place he can land.

er children to their schools, they

California, whose pleasant winter climate is not an unmixed blessing because of the thousands of persons it attracts to that state who must be helped, has a new problem. Since the advent of the "house trailer" California has become the principal winter Mecca of these wandering families who have little of this world's goods. It is estimated there are 50,000 children of school age in the state now, and more coming in every day. Unless local communities admit these trailer children to their schools, they will go uneducated. Being non-citizens of the districts in which they find themselves their parents pay no taxes toward the upkeep of schools and there is no way of collecting tuition from them.

HITCH HIKING BABE

Starting from his farm near New Palestine, Ohio, at daybreak, Henry Phies was startled to see a little tot standing beside the road giving every indication without actually thumbing for it, that she wanted a ride. Henry picked her up and drove on into town. There it was found the youthful hitch-hiker was Maggie Coffey, two years old, who on some strange impulse, had crawled from her crib and, unknown to the family, wandered out on the highway just before dawn.

TAXI FOR DRINKERS

Taxi companies in San Antonio, Tex., are offering a new service to passengers. Motorists too drunk to drive their own cars home may call a taxi company and ask for the "blotto special." Two men answer the call. The drunk driver is loaded into the taxi and one of the men drives him home while the other follows behind with the tipsy one's car. This service costs double fare and is worth it, compared with the danger of a booze-soaked motorist trying to drive his own car.

BOLT HITS GEESE

While Mitchell Cloningher was fishing from a boat in the Willamette river near Portland, Ore., a blinding flash of lightning caused him to pull for shore to seek shelter from a storm just breaking. Suddenly he saw a flock of wild geese drop down out of the sky, dead. There were 12 of them. The only explanation is the same bolt of lightning had struck the geese in flight.

Motor Show Will Open Saturday

Lieutenant-Governor, the Honourable E. L. Patenaude, will preside at the Official Opening of the Montreal Motor Show in the Sun Life Building, next Saturday, November 21st. He will be accompanied by the Presidents and General Managers of the most important automobile firms in Canada, by representatives of the Federal, Provincial and Municipal Governments, as well as the industrial, financial and social life of the Metropolis.

The guests of honour will visit the Motor Show between 8 and 9 P.M. Saturday evening. They will then assemble in the main salon of radio station CHLP, in the Sun Life Building from which the official speeches will be broadcast through stations CHLP and CKAC between 9 and 9:30 P.M.

"Never has such a Motor Show aroused such widespread interest as the Montreal Motor Show which will officially open its doors next Saturday, November 21st, in the Sun Life Building, and which will remain open until Saturday, November 28th", said Mr. T. H. Price, Director and former President of the Montreal Automobile Trade Association Limited and Montreal Branch Manager of General Motors Products of Canada Limited.

"In fact", continues Mr. Price, "this is only the second time in the history of the Automobile Industry that the Motor Show will be held in the Fall. This will allow thousands of people living outside of the Metropolis—in all parts of the Province of Quebec, the Maritime Provinces, Eastern Ontario and in the New England States—to come to Montreal and admire what this industry has on display. All roads are open to automobiles at this time of the year making it easy to travel, while this was impossible when the Motor Show was held during January. Moreover, for those who do not travel by motor cars, the railways will offer excursion rates from a great many communities and it will be the same with the motor buses of the Provincial Transport Company".

"For these reasons, a larger number of visitors from out of town are expected in Montreal for the week beginning next Saturday, and hotel reservations are pouring in for important automobile dealers conventions".

Hemmingford

The November meeting of the W. I. was held on Friday p.m. of the 6th, with an attendance of sixteen ladies, over which Vice-President, Mrs. Henry Stewart presided in the absence of the President, Mrs. G. S. Walsh.

Singing of the National Anthem brought the meeting to a close.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Murray and baby Joan of Plattsburg, N.Y., were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Brogan.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Brogan of Montreal spent Sunday at Henry Ouimet's.

Mr. Picobac of Essex Centre pressed the fragrant glow of his pipe with a case-hardened thumb.

As if to illustrate the booming of Canadian industry, the oracle of sunny Southern Ontario's Burley tobacco belt exhaled clouds of fragrant smoke from his Picobac-filled pipe.

"Eh, boy", sighed he, relaxing, "it's a mild . . . cool . . . sweet smoke, this Picobac. Canadians should count it one of their blessings."

"Only a few of this gallant band remain—men of four score years or over. As we know them they are: Peter Belair, J. C. Bruce, J. H. Buchanan, Michel Demers, John S. Elder, Robert Henderson, Samuel Henderson, Thos. Hingston, John McDowell, of which Veterans Belair, Bruce, Demers, Elder, R. Henderson were present. Both Mr. Elder and Mr. Henderson were out in '66, seventy years ago. Probably there are some others who have not made themselves known to us. Some have not been able to come out today because of the weight of advancing years. Because of their bravery a few weeks later, H.R.H. Prince Arthur of Connaught, a son of the Great and Good Queen Victoria, presented these Colours to the Huntingdon Borderers on this same square which has been known as Prince Arthur Square ever since."

Our Heroic and Martyred Dead

"In the course of the revolving year," declared Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D., in his dedicatory address, "the 11th of November has come to us once again. And once again we are drawn to this spot that is sacred to us by reason of the Memorial that has been raised to our heroic and martyred dead. We owe it to their memory and we owe it to ourselves not to forget what this day calls to mind—the consummation of the great war, the gracious fruit of that terrible sowing of blood and tears, the Peace that came to the war-torn world on the 11th day of November, 1918.

"We do reverence here," the speaker continued, "to the memory of our heroic dead who offered themselves for their country and who died that Freedom might not die. One glorious youth of that lost generation, the young English scholar and poet, Rupert Brooke, has told the story in his beautiful touching lines.—

"These laid the world away, poured out the red
Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years to be
Of work and joy, and that unhoped serene
That men call Age; and those who would have been
Their sons, they gave, their immortality."

"How great was the sacrifice they made! How incalculable is the debt we owe to them! We remember them today; and we bow in humble grateful memory as we recall their names.

"We remember also their comrades who came back—we do honour here and now to the living heroes who took the same risks, who braved the same dangers, who manifested the same devoted spirit, and who have been preserved as living witnesses of the heroic mould in which that war generation had been cast.

Surviving Veterans All Deserve Well

"These surviving veterans all deserve well of their country. Wherever there are any of them that are in need, a grateful country must not forget and must not neglect them. However hard the times may be, however straitened in finances the Treasury may be, the care of the needy veterans, the sick and the maimed and those broken in mind as well as in body, must ever be one of the very first charges on our national revenues. Let us never forget the heroes and martyrs who lived through the awful ordeal of the Great War and bear the honourable but costly marks of that searing trial by fire.

"And now, let us ask, Did the noble dead die in vain? And have our living heroes passed through their awful agony in vain? During the course of the great war, one of the slogans that passed from lip to lip on the battlefield and in the homelands was this, "It is a War to end War." In no small measure the courage and endurance that were manifested were fed from this assured conviction. For 18 years the Peace has lasted, but the peace has not been unbroken. There have been various smaller wars; and there have been dark threatenings of another great war that shall fill the world with death and destruction. The world is sick of war, the world is sick for peace. There are two great motives for peace that are making themselves felt today. The first is FEAR. There is the fear of what another world-war would do. The makers of instruments of death have made many new discoveries and inventions since the last great war—the staggering prospect is that another world-war would issue in the destruction of our very civilization and all the precious fruits that have been so slowly and painfully gathered in these thousands of years. There is this haunting fear that is abroad. But there is another great Motive for Peace that is very active today, and that is BROTHERLY LOVE—nothing new in this Christian world of ours, but new in the universality of its application that we have been so long in applying. God hath made of one blood all men to dwell on the face of the earth—that is the story of the creation of man. The Son of God came to save, not a special portion of the human family, but the world. We are brothers all—why should we hate our brother? Why should we fight with our brother? Christ died for His enemies in order to make them His friends. "He is our Peace". His example and His spirit are our only hope of peace. Our soldiers fought and our martyr-soldiers died in the hope that peace might come through their suffering and through the death of those fated to die. Let not the great sacrifice and offering have been made in vain. Let us have the will to peace, and give ourselves to the making of peace. This is the insistent call that is sounding in our ears today."

Lt.-Col. LeMoyne Talks on Colours

Lt.-Col. LeMoyne speaking in both French and English gave an address on the subject of Colours.

In his opening remarks Lt.-Col. LeMoyne, Officer Commanding, requested that Mayor Faubert transmit to the citizens of Huntingdon the congratulations and good wishes of Military Headquarters. He also complimented the Huntingdon Gleaner for having given so much publicity to the celebration. Continuing, he said:

"Colours" were originally carried to form rallying or leading points. The first record we have of a British Colour is the Dragon Ensign at the battle of Hastings in 1066.

"On banners and pennons of English nobles and knights, in the hundred years war, the Red Cross of St. George on a white ground represented the national ensign of England. This still adorns all British Infantry Colours, either as the basis of the British flag or on the white ground of regimental Colours of regiments wearing white facings.

"Prior to 1700, every company of a regiment had its own Colours. That of the Colonels being plain, usually of the colour of the Regimental coat or facing, but the Lieut. Colonels and all the rest had a small St. George's Cross in the upper left-hand canton; the Majors and the others being distinguished according to rank, by one or more stars, lozenges, piles wavy or other devices, arranged in various ways on the fly of the Colour.

"After the accession of Charles II, the St. George's Cross was removed from the canton and extended over the whole Colour with a white edging when borne on a blue, green or yellow Colour. The Colonel's Colour remained plain while those of other companies were distinguished by Roman Numerals.

Red Cross Superimposed

"In due course, the Red Cross was superimposed on the Scottish white Saltire on its blue ground and restored to its former position in the upper left-hand canton in the Regimental Colour, but it remained extended over the whole surface in the King's Colour. Some time after 1700, Colours were reduced to three and finally to two—the King's and the Regimental. Relics of the days of Company Colours can be seen today in the custom of the Company badges of Guards' regiments being borne in rotation on the Regimental Colour and in Scottish regiments the Company Commander's pipe banners are still carried. Any personal or armorial badge or device on the Colours in course of time was forbidden and regimental badges, mottoes and floral wreaths took their place together with the number of the Regiment in the Line. In the case of "Royal" Regiments, the ground colour of their Colours conformed to their facings—Royal blue. British Marine regiments of 1740-48 had a ship in the centre of their Colours.

Battle Honours Later Inscribed

"Battle honours were inscribed on British Colours about the end of the eighteenth century. The first battle honours authorized were in 1768—"Emsdorff," in 1784—"Gibraltar", and in 1801—"Minden." In comparatively recent times the Royal Crest—"The lion and the crown"—was introduced as the Spearhead on Colour Staffs, the unwieldy size of Colours was reduced to a standard size and a bullion fringe was introduced for all regiments except the Royal Marines. The latter only carry "Gibraltar" as a battle honour in addition to their badge of the globe of the world.

"Colours in the British Armies today consist of the King's and the Regimental. The former is a Union Jack, bearing the Sovereign's Cypher in the centre and the number of the battalion in the top left-hand corner. The ground of the Regimental Colour is the same colour as the regimental facings and in the centre is a Regimental badge or sometimes the Royal Cypher with the name of the regiment inscribed around it. The design is approved by the College of Heralds before being authorized. Battle honours are only borne on the Regimental Colour, except in the case of honours for the war of 1914-1918 which may be borne on the King's Colour—the latter honours cannot exceed ten.

"Battle honours have been granted in a haphazard manner and many battles in which Regiments have participated have not been commemorated by "Honors". The largest number of battle Honours borne on any British Colours are those of the Gloucestershire Regiment who carry 43. Colours are only carried by Foot Guards and Infantry Regiments. Rifle regiments do not carry them, as a feature of their original employment was concealment; hence they did not carry Colours which might disclose their position.

"Standards" are carried by Household Cavalry and Dragoon Guards and "Guidons" by regiments classified as Dragoons. They have evolved from the banners of the knights of the middle ages—The Standard (a square banner) was carried by a "banneret". The "Guidon" (from the French "Guide homme") ends in a tail or point and was carried by a knight. When a knight was created a "banneret" the point of the pennon was cut off transforming it into a Standard. Hence the Standard being the Senior symbol it carried by the senior regiments.

Trooping The Colours

"The origin of Trooping the Colour, or Colours, is older than the present British standing army of 1660. It is derived from the ceremony of "Lodging the Colours". In the 17th Century, it was the custom before a battalion or a company was dismissed to quarters, bivouac or billets to "troop" the Colour, or Colours, down the ranks, and the Ensigns then taking their Colours to their lodgings and displaying them from there, the battalion or Company trooped past the Colour and so came to know the rallying point in case of alarm. The Colours were also "trooped" at Guard mounting and Retreat.

"The King's Colour is only trooped in the case of a guard mount over members of the Royal family, H.M.S. chief representative in British possessions or in the case of a ceremonial parade in honour of the King's birthday, or on the occasion of the presentation of Colours.

"The first known instance of the present ceremony of "Trooping the Colours" was by the Brigade of Guards in 1755.

"Colours are a regiment's emblems of loyalty and its traditions. They are consecrated on presentation and in the infantry are always carried by subaltern officers and provided with an escort.

"Uncased Colours should always be saluted by military or civilians. They are accorded a general Salute on being marched on or off parade.

"The King's Colour is only carried by a guard or escort when mounted on a member of the Royal Family, His Majesty's official representative within the area of his jurisdiction, the head of a Foreign State or foreign royal families.

"A Colour should never be "let fly" except when Saluting.

"Nowadays when it becomes necessary to replace old Colours with new ones, they are placed in a church for safe keeping and as an emblem of the Regiment's sacrifices. At one time they sometimes became the property of the Colonel and in some cases were solemnly burnt. The only known Colours of a British regular regiment in Canada today, are those of the 69th Foot, and hang in the Anglican Cathedral in Quebec."

The Honours Of Battle

Speaking in French Lt.-Col. LeMoyne told something of the "Honours of Battle" which were first accorded by the King in 1787, for the Elmdorff engagement, and the second time, in 1801, for the battle of Gibraltar. Such honours are given the same as if they were to a particular person, the difference remaining that, to gain "Honours of Battle" they have to be rightfully earned, while a title, often, is accorded before it is earned. The "50th Borderers' Regiment" merited and received its honours of battle, known under the Trout River engagement, as it appears on the Regimental Colours. These honours are always inscribed on the Regimental, not the King's Colours. However, the King made an exception for the Great War, and allowed as many as ten battles to be inscribed on the King's Colours. In England, there are certain regiments which have been in existence for more than 200 years, who have taken part in battles in India, Canada, Egypt, and other countries, consequently having won many "Honours of Battle," for example the Gloucester Regiment which has won 43 such honours. These things have been stated, he said, to emphasize the honour and tradition so that listeners would properly appreciate what it was to have "Trout River" inscribed on such colours, and, today they represent the loyalty and traditions of a regiment.

"Here, in Canada, as in England," he said, "we like tradition. We, Canadians, are particularly proud of the glorious traditions which have been handed down to us. We realize with what courage and pride they accomplished their duties which have made for our country the glorious land that it is today. I would like to leave you with the conviction that we owe our loyalty to these traditions, and the proper way to show our appreciation is to apply ourselves to our particular tasks better than we have in the past."

A sound system was installed at the square and at the church and carried the voices of the speakers to many who would otherwise have been unable to hear a thing.

The Deposition Of the Colours

After the ceremony at the monument the parade re-formed and proceeded to the Anglican church where the colours were handed over to the rector of the church in a colourful military ceremony.

"Remembrance Day is a day of memories," stated Rev. W. S. Hatcher, who gave the Armistice Day sermon in the church, "and we are all asked to refresh our minds on the great event which took place in the past. Some things we can forget, some things we'd like to forget, but there are some things which we must not forget. Sometimes the memory of those days recall certain things of which we are proud, and some of which we are not. We are not proud that war came, or of the destruction it brought but we are proud of the qualities of courage and self sacrifice which the men showed when they were called upon.

Referring to the war veterans, the speaker said, "Those qualities which we admire and which you showed are required to-day. Courage, self-sacrifice and devotion to duty are required to-day in every day life. Canada can neglect some things, but it can't neglect the duty it owes to its war veterans—the men who rallied when the need was great.

"We thought that the last war was a war to end war, but today the nations of the world seem to be on the verge of war again. A memory of Great Britain which makes me proud, is the fact that, to my mind, there is no nation in the world today, that is striving for peace more than she is. The British Empire is taking up the trust committed to her by those who fell in the Great War. Peace is what the world and civilization needs today."

After the address a dedication hymn was sung and then the presentation of the Colours took place.

Ceremony Was Very Colourful

The ceremony in itself was of a very impressive nature. The Old Colours, with the Colour Party under arms, remained in the vestibule until the last verse of the hymn preceding the combined military and religious ceremony, then they moved forward in slow time, halting two paces from the foot of the chancel steps. Lt.-Col. Buchanan who acted for Lt.-Col. LeMoyne during this ceremony, took his post at the foot of the steps facing the Colour party. Rev. Mr. Hatcher then came to the chancel steps and said, "We are gathered together in this church to lay up these Colours of the 50th Regiment. No more fitting place could be found wherein to deposit these emblems of Duty and Service than the House of God, where praise and prayer are wont to be made."

The Commanding Officer then took the King's Colour in his right hand and the Regimental Colour in his left and moved to the top of the steps and halted, the Officers drawing swords and the Colour Party presenting arms. In handing over the Colours to the officiating clergyman, the C.O. said, "These consecrated Colours, formerly carried in the service of the King and Empire, I now deliver into your hands for safe custody within these walls," and the clergyman replied, "I receive these Colours for safe custody within this Church." Rev. Mr. Hatcher then placed the Colours on the altar, the C.O. resumed his seat, the Colour Party sloped arms, and the following prayer was said, "Almighty God and Lord of Hosts, we now lay up within this House of Prayer these emblems of Thy Grace and Blessing; may all who look upon them be reminded of their duty to their God, their King and their Country, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen." Then followed the Lord's Prayer and the benediction. The National Anthem was sung while the Colour Party presented arms, and at its conclusion they retired, the special service being completed.

For the first part of the service which was entirely in charge of Rev. Mr. Hatcher, he had Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D., and Rev. J. H. Miller, D.D. assist him.

Luncheon Guests At the Chateau

After the presentation, all those who had taken part in the day's services were guests of the Armistice Day committee at a banquet in the Huntingdon Chateau. Speakers were L. E. Blair, warden of the county, Mayor D. Faubert of Huntingdon, Lt.-Col. LeMoyne, Lt.-Col. Buchanan, (Capt.) Rev. Rollit, C. M. Oney, Chairman of the Restoration Committee, Mr. R. E. Cogland, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and Father Pigeon of St. Joseph's Church. Dr. Clouston, chairman, read messages from D. E. Black, M.P. and from Hon. Martin B. Fisher, Provincial Treasurer, who regretted their inability to attend the celebration.

The toast to the King was proposed by Dr. Clouston and that to the veterans by Rev. Capt. Rollit.

"The army and the navy is the police force of the nation," said Lt.-Col. LeMoyne in a brief address. In the world of the present day we are getting an example of what might means. But England is leading the way towards peace and England is on guard for us in case of war. Lt.-Col. Buchanan stated that he was very much interested in reading the accounts of the Fenian Raids as they had been printed in the Huntingdon Gleaner.

Father Pigeon, after expressing sentiments which he said were natural for such an occasion, asked his listeners to resolve not to forget the men who fought against a common enemy, and to be practical, he said, "these men must be remembered tomorrow as they are today." He also urged a union of the Christian forces of the world against the now rampant common enemies, Communism and Bolshevism.

During the afternoon Brig.-Gen. Pagean, retired, Montreal, visited St. John's Church, and asked permission to inspect the flags. He was very interested in the stories of the Fenian Raids which were told him. Having attended the the Cenotaph service in Montreal that morning he said he wanted to have some small part in the ceremonies here and therefore drove out to see the colours which had been deposited in the church. He explained the procedure necessary should any of the Fenian Raid veterans request that they be buried with the regimental colours resting on the casket.

The staff of Brig.-Gen. Alexander, D.O.C., gave every possible assistance. No trouble was too great for Lt.-Col. Browne, A.A. and Q.M.G. Capt. Bélanger and Sgt.-Major Wallis were sent out to co-operate with the local committee. Engineers drew plans of the Prince Arthur Square and marked the positions of the various bodies around the monument; forms of parade were furnished and the Order of the Church Service supplied.

The First Armoured Car Unit was selected to come out and participate, Lt.-Col. LeMoyne to represent H.Q. and Lt.-Col. Buchanan in charge of the Unit.

Among the Military Headquarters representatives and Montreal officers present were Lt.-Col. LeMoyne, Lt.-Col. Buchanan, V.D., Major McClelland, Major O'Connor-Fenton, Major Falls, V.D., M.O., Capt. Cathcart, Capt. Ross-Smith, Capt. Morgan, Capt. Griffiths, M.O., Capt. (Rev.) Rollit, Lieutenants Tindale, Morris, Sharpe, Reynolds, Ardagh, McClelland, Wood, Robertson.

Veterans in The Parade

The veterans who marched in the parade and wore official berets courteously provided by the Huntingdon Red Cross: C. M. Oney, H. G. Bickford, W. E. A. Rowat, Louis Cappiello, Arthur Chambers, Arch. Free Trial of Vick Products For Better Control of Colds Offered by Local Druggists

Free Packages Contain Trial Size Vicks Va-tro-nol and Vicks VapoRub, with Details of Plan that Cut Sickness from Colds in Half in Clinic Tests

In your own home this winter, wouldn't you like to see sickness from colds cut more than half? That was just one of the results averaged by thousands of people in clinic tests of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds—a practical home guide to greater freedom from colds.

The free trial packages now offered by your druggist introduce you to Vicks Plan and the products that make it possible: Vicks Va-tro-nol and Vicks VapoRub.

To Help Prevent Many Colds

Vicks Va-tro-nol is the scientific aid in preventing colds. Vick Chemists spent more than nine years and $250,000 in research, experiments, and tests before perfecting this exclusive Vicks formula.

Va-tro-nol is specially designed for the nose and upper throat, where 3 out of 4 colds start. The moment you apply it—a few drops up each nostril—Va-tro-nol spreads swiftly through this trouble zone, aiding and gently stimulating Nature's defenses.

Used at that first sneeze, sniffle or any sign of nasal irritation—Nature's usual warning that a cold threatens—Va-tro-nol helps to prevent many colds, and to throw off head colds in the early stages.

And when neglected irritation has led to a stuffed-up nose or a miserable head-cold, Va-tro-nol brings comforting relief. It reduces swollen membranes, clears clogging mucus, makes every breath clear and cool again.

You'll find Va-tro-nol wonderfully easy and pleasant to use, at home and at work.

To Help End a Cold Quicker

When a cold strikes without warning or gets by even the best precautions—as some colds always will—Vicks VapoRub helps end it quicker.

You simply massage VapoRub on the throat, chest, and back for three minutes. Almost before you finish rubbing, VapoRub starts to bring relief two ways at once: (1) It acts direct through the skin like a poultice or plaster; (2) Its medicated vapors, released by body heat, are breathed in for hours—about 18 times a minute—direct to the irritated air-passages.

This combined poultice-and-vapor action loosens phlegm, relieves irritation, helps break congestion. While the patient relaxes into comfortable sleep, VapoRub keeps right on working. Often, by morning the worst of the cold is over.

Cough Drops Free, Too

For the throat that is dry and harsh, or irritated by coughing, Vicks Medicated Cough Drops—throat-soothing ingredients of Vicks VapoRub in pleasant candy form—provide quick, convenient relief.

THE MOVING FINGER

Quebec women who have worked together in various organizations to secure the provincial franchise have once again met frustration. It will disappoint a great many that the new Government apparently could not make up its mind at once on a matter of such elementary justice.

But Quebec women need not be downhearted. Modern information in regard to the human body and mind will eventually sink through to the level of some of the bleak and all but desolate intellects of the grossly ignorant type of member still tolerated in parts of this province.

In medieval Paris it was the immemorial custom to have a double celebration of the Epiphany and the Feast of Fools. The dramatic story of what happened when the Hunchback of Notre Dame was crowned "Pope of Fools" is told in "Notre Dame de Paris" by Victor Hugo. The underworld gang leader of the day was the King of Egypt, head of a tribe of gypsies. They contributed to the gaiety of the occasion with grotesque satires and burlesques ridiculing unpopular policies and people of the times.

In the news last week we find Toronto-The-Good featuring a burlesque on motherhood. The majority of the Quebec Legislature who voted against the franchise for women may be too dense to get the suggestion but if they have read some of the revolting details of the so-called "Stork Derby", surely they would blush with shame for the indecent attitude certain speeches implied.

We would like to submit a couple of questions to the Supreme Court, or even the inferior public.

1. Did Charles Vance Millar throw a million dollars to the dogs?

2. Is the Millar Mothers' Marathon to rank with the Dionne Quintuplets as an educational force?

Mrs. Lily Kenny, 32 years old and mother of 14, said to be a French-Canadian, claims the Millar fortune, as 11 of her children were born in the 10 years since Millar's death.

The other night in a Toronto hotel she got in a fight with her husband and a photographer for a New York tabloid. She knocked both men flat and also hit a Mr. "X" who has attained fame as the father of five illegitimate children of Mrs. Clark, a rival for the fortune. Mrs. Clark seeks the money so that she can obtain a divorce and be enabled to make an honest man of Mr. "X". After the fight Mrs. Kenny took her husband to the hospital as she feared he had collapsed from liquor and maybe poison. He was found to be in no danger and the happy parents returned home. Alas in the meantime the eleven children had scattered all over the neighborhood. The baby was over a block away.

The comment of the hysterical mother on this situation was: "I was nearly crazy. I should be in the bug house. It's enough to drive you mad." The whole world will agree with Mrs. Kenny in this opinion whether she ever gets paid for her labors or not.

Just by way of contrast and possibly to add emphasis to the sordid drama of motherhood gone mad, there is at Eastview, Ont., the trial of Dorothea Palmer, charged with advertising birth control and contraceptive methods. Medical testimony at the trial appears to be overwhelmingly in favor of Miss Palmer's work.

Dr. Hutton, Medical Health Officer for Brantford, Ont., said: "We have to face reality . . . The better classes are practicing birth control and we can't stop them. The only solution is to make information on the subject available to all."

We can vouch for the following facts. About eight years ago a Mrs. Blank wrote to a City store for prices on the books of Dr. Marie Stopes, which had been recommended by a European friend. The reply stated that these books were banned for circulation in Canada. At a Women's Institute Convention at Macdonald College there was some informal discussion and a Lachute woman recommended these books. Mrs. Blank was thoroughly curious and determined to investigate at once. She checked out from the convention and took a train to Ottawa. By exercising discretion the next day she had the loan of a book, "Contraception, by Dr. Marie Stopes." It was marked "Censor's Copy. Condemned". Nevertheless, Mrs. Blank made copious notes. She wrote the publishers in England regarding a copy. They replied that owing to censorship a copy would have to be mutilated and sent a few pages at a time at a cost of $15.00 As it was a criminal offence to transmit the matter through the mails the recipient would be subject to fine or imprisonment upon detection.

The ban has since been lifted to some extent because the books of Dr. Marie Stopes, based on the text book mentions, are now advertised in the mail order catalogues.

Dr. William Scott, Professor of Obstetrics at University of Toronto testifying in the current trial, stated that he is now lecturing on the subject of contraception, having started three years ago. This marked the first teaching of the subject in Canada. It is interesting to note that Dr. Marie Stopes based all her investigations on this subject on the premises that the medical profession consistently ignored the "status of women" in the matter of procreation. Her work is acknowledged now almost everywhere, as of fundamental importance.

Also in the news last week was the name of another famous doctor, a native of St. Andrew's East, Quebec, Dr. Maude E. Abbott, B.A., M.D., L.R.C.P. and S., F.R.C.P., who was given honorary fellowship from New York Academy of Medicine. Dr. Abbott received her Bachelor's degree from McGill University in 1890 and was appointed to the staff nine years later. She was recently given an honorary LL.D. degree by McGill, and has gained international recognition for her work on congenital heart disease.

And the women of Quebec, in the opinion of our Legislature, are not even capable of marking a ballot! But Time marches on! Beware!

"The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,
Moves on: nor all your Piety nor Wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line,
Nor all your Tears wash out a word of it."

"ENGLAND'S ACT AND DEED"

Victories of by-gone days were celebrated last week. The struggles of the frontier in 1866-70, when the Fenians threatened Canada, were linked with the World War Armistice Anniversary by the restoration of flags presented nearly seventy years ago to the Huntingdon Borderers by Prince Arthur of Connaught. The aged Duke of Connaught sent his congratulations by cable on this last occasion.

This same week Premier Baldwin announced in the House of Commons that Canada is to become the Empire arsenal. The manufacture of ammunition is thus to be concentrated near the source of unlimited raw material and at safer distance in respect to possible attack from the air.

It gives one a prickly feeling along the spine to realize that even in the unimportant (from a world standpoint) Fenian Raids, the St. John's Church in Huntingdon was used as a storehouse for ammunition. There is a subtle justice, therefore, in the fact that the restored emblems of victory should at last repose in this Church. It is in accordance with well understood military tradition.

But we can also understand perfectly well why cathedrals have always been the first target for enemy bombardment. We cannot deny that most of the massacres in this country were in retaliation for religious activities. The present Spanish revolution appears to be a conflict of ideals in relation to political morals.

The anticipated world conflict that appears to be averted only from day to day by the strategy of some political hero, will doubtless be waged in the cause of right and religion by all combatants.

Premier Baldwin announced on November 13th that the nation was prepared to "go from peace to war perhaps over-night." A secret document contains plans for complete mobilization of population and industry, in which the Dominions and Colonies are included. Canada is to train recruits for the Royal Air Force.

Following upon the recent aggressive utterances of Hitler, all this sounds like a game of dare and double dare. But again, it has a terrifying echo. Lloyd George declares:

"You cannot hope to re-establish peace in the world if you attack national systems of government which do not conform to your own."

When the import of these announcements is fully considered any person who still entertains the agreable notion that the Canadian people will have time to vote on the question of participation in war must be pretty dumb. It will be just like the Fenians and the Huntingdon Borderers. When the enemy is at your gate there is only one answer. The first objective of an enemy is to intercept and destroy the munitions. Contrary to accepted belief, there are safer refuges than churches, especially in air raids.

After all this local revival of interest in the activities of the Irish and the fact that Canada is in the military spotlight, if not on the spot, we recall Kipling's "Ulster":

The dark eleventh hour
Draws on and sees us sold
To every evil power
We fought against of old.
Rebellion, rapine, hate,
Oppression, wrong and greed
Are loosed to rule our fate."

Glenelm

That perfect harmony exists between the teacher of Eddy's School, Miss McGerrigle, pupils and parents is manifested that through the kindness of Messrs. J. G. Henry, W. Lang, and I. St. Onge, the teacher and pupils were conveyed in autos to attend the Armistice celebration held in Huntingdon, Wednesday, Nov. 11th.

The pupils were much interested in the parade, service, and especially the band music. At the close of the services, the pupils were hospitably entertained to luncheon at Miss McGerrigle's home, Huntingdon.

A very pleasant time was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. D. Elder, on Friday evening, when about 25 invited guests met to celebrate the 18th birthday of their only son, Ross.

The evening was spent in cards and dancing, Stark Bros. and Roy McFarlane furnishing music.

Delicious refreshments were served by the hostess, Mrs. Elder.

Master Harold Donnelly, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Donnelly, is recovering nicely from his recent operation for tonsils and adenoids in the Alice Hyde Hospital, Malone. Harold was nicely remembered with a post card shower from his school friends.

Mr. and Mrs. George Clark, Peterborough, Ont., visited friends in this vicinity last week.

Miss Mary Bruce, Huntingdon, spent the week-end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Watson. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Miller, Dundee, were recent guests at the same home.

Mrs. Pearl Smith, New Rochelle, N. Y., is spending a week's vacation at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Bonnar. Mr. Scott Howe, Newport, Vt., spent the week-end at the same home.

Mr. Douglas Murray is spending a holiday at the home of his uncle, Stanley Murdoch, Syracuse, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Richardson, Montreal, spent the week-end at the home of her mother, Mrs. Mary Anderson.

Mrs. Wm. J. McGibbon and son David, Constable, N. Y., spent the week-end at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Gordon.

WAX KILLS HIM

While on holiday at Wembley, London, Alexander McKenzie Pressley, 41, stationmaster of Langmorn, Morayshire, looked out of the window. He slipped on a mat on the polished floor and crashed through the glass. Pressley died from throat wounds.

Zion Church Gets Gift Of Old Trowel

Before the presentation, Rev. J. H. Lynn read an extract from the minutes of session of 1868 as follows: "The present pastor the Rev. Donald Ross, formerly of Vaughan and Southwold was inducted to the charge of Dundee on the 6th March, 1866. He is a native of Nova Scotia, like his two immediate predecessors. Since his incumbency various great and important changes have taken place in the congregation. A magnificent new Church (Zion) has been built. The cornerstone was laid on the first day of July 1868 by the Most Worshipful Alexander A. Stevenson, Grand Master of Masons in Canada. The basement was occupied in the winter of 1869, the congregation having resolved not to enter the auditorium permanently till the whole indebtedness upon it should be provided for. The Church was opened in the summer of 1870 and is one of the finest country Churches in the Church."

As Mr. Mowatt made the presentation of the trowel he said he hoped that it would be kept by the congregation and passed on to future generations. Mr. Lynn then called on Mrs. Noel Reynolds to unveil the trowel.

A picture of the Rev. Donald Ross, pastor of the charge when the old Church was built in 1868 was given to the congregation by the courtesy of Messrs. L. S. McPhee and John McPhee was also presented.

Rev. Mowatt chose as the text of his sermon the 17th verse of the 27th chapter of Genesis: "And he was afraid and said how dreadful is this place this is none other but the house of God and this is the gate of Heaven." In his remarks Mr. Mowatt stressed the point of the universality of the worship of God. The work of the pioneers, the hardships and privation they endured, testified to their industry and perseverance. Their desire for Churches and schools was ample proof of the goal they had been striving for. It was a debt we all owed our predecessors to carry on in their stead. A severe testing time was before the Church said Mr. Mowatt, with new ideas and persuasions creeping in on all sides. What position was the Church to hold in the future? Would it change with the times or remain in the past? The Nationalistic spirit which causes wars should give way to a unifying Christian influence. Let the Christian Church be a free institution and stand for equality and the problems of mankind would solve themselves. During the offertory period a special anthem was rendered by the choir.

The congregation at Dundee are deeply grateful to Rev. J. A. Mowatt and Mrs. Mowatt for their kindness and generosity in donating the trowel and especially to Mr. Mowatt for coming out to Dundee to make the presentation.

In the evening Rev. Mr. Mowatt delivered a Missionary lecture under the sponsorship of the W. M. S. which was very interesting and instructive. The offering taken was for the benefit of the Society and will go to help make up their allocation.

Covey Hill

The funeral service for Mrs. Frederick Cole was held on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 28th, at Trinity Anglican Church, Havelock, Rev. Mr. Howard conducting the service, which was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and country neighbours. Friends in both Montreal and Havelock expressed their sorrow and sympathy by very numerous and beautiful floral offerings. The pall-bearers were Robert McKee, Edward Louden, Scott Simpson, and William Perry.

Mrs. Cole, the former Louisa Purkis Barrett, was the first bride to be married at Trinity Church. She was the authoress of an interesting sketch of the church history; on its wall is a tablet to the memory of her eldest son, Lieut.-Col. T. Minden Cole; and she now rests in the adjoining graveyard beside her husband who died forty-nine years ago. She is survived by four sons, Arthur of Cobalt, Ont.; Ernest and Percy, of Montreal; and Heber, of Ottawa; also by her two daughters, Miss Ellie Cole, of Montreal, and Mrs. E. Dowsley, of St. Lambert; and a number of grandchildren. Her son Frederick Minden died in 1920, and Alfred, six years ago.

Up till about two years ago, the physical and mental faculties of the deceased lady seemed to keep pace in the wonderful vigor and alertness, wonderful in a woman of her great age. Reading and lending good books, writing numerous letters, tending her flowers, sewing on articles for her private L.A. sale, extending a charming welcome, whether it was to the Bishop of Montreal or a country neighbour's child, every moment of her day was filled with planned activities. Our best birthday wish for our modern girls is that when the tale of their years shall be told, their record may resemble in useful beneficence that of her who has seen well nigh a hundred anniversaries. With her annual return to "The Lilacs" we felt settled for the summer; on her departure from the Hill we realized the season's best was gone. Dear Mrs. Cole, the au revoir of autumn's past is now adieu.

Dundee

A very charming social event took place on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 12th, from 2 o'clock till 5 at the Manse, Dundee, when Mrs. J. H. Lynn was "At Home" to the ladies of the Dundee and Laguerre congregations, and received for the first time since her marriage on Sept. 18th, to the Rev. J. H. Lynn. About thirty guests were present at varying times during the afternoon. Rev. and Mrs. Lynn received the guests at the door while Mrs. Lynn's sister, Miss Ruth Laughlin of Montreal, looked after the ladies wraps. Refreshments were served to the ladies by Mrs. J. J. Fraser, Mrs. H. A. Cameron and Mrs. R. G. Steven, who acted as hostesses for the occasion. Mrs. Ernest Watterson poured coffee while Mrs. W. A. McNicol poured tea. A very enjoyable afternoon was spent by all those attending.

Mr. and Mrs. William Templeton of Montreal, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Fraser and family.

Ideas Claimed Most Powerful

Huntingdon Y. P. S. Hears Interesting Talk by Rev. W. S. Hatcher

"Ideas," declared Rev. W. S. Hatcher speaking on the subject of "What is the most powerful thing in the world," at the meeting of the Huntingdon Young People's Society on Monday night, "have the greatest power in the world." The speaker showed, for instance, what a power the idea of God occupied in the world, by referring to the magnificent churches and cathedrals built by men to glorify Him. The ideas that drove men out of the corners of the earth to Christianize those who had never heard His name also showed what a power the idea of God had. These, the speaker looked on as constructive ideas in the world.

The ideas in the minds of men who start wars are destructive. The idea in the mind of the general who sends thousands of soldiers to their death on the battlefield is destructive. Ideas which tend toward destruction are evident in the organizations which are flourishing in Europe at the present time, under the head of Fascism and Communism. The seed for the idea of Communism was sown in the head of Karl Marx. The ideas behind these movements are destructive. They destroy religion and liberty.

Rev. Hatcher urged the young people to harbour only those ideas which were constructive, and to banish ideas which destroy religion, and liberty, and character.

The meeting was held at the home of Mr. Roy McWhinnie. Thirty members were present, while three new members signed the pledge. A social hour was spent after Rev. Hatcher's address and refreshments were served. The meeting closed with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

— COVEY HILL —

Good Program at Covey Hill Church

Postponed Congregational Supper Proved Very Successful Affair

The outcome of the supper given on Tuesday evening, by the Covey Hill Presbyterian congregation refuted the saying that postponed affairs are never successful. The ladies received repeated compliments on the fare provided, and the programme, without being too long, provided an enjoyable variety.

Vocal and instrumental music was supplied by members of the Sutton orchestra, Mrs. John Carson and son Wallace, Mr. Hamill, Messrs. Oswald and Wilmer Mannagh, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Orr, Mr. and Mrs. T. Goundrey, Jean Louden, Evelyn Watt and John Hamill.

A charming shadowgraph pantomime was put on by Mr. E. Robertson and daughter Reta, and Mrs. Reddick, the ballad from which the action was derived being sung by Mr. C. Orr, with Mrs. Orr at the piano. A dialogue: "Reading the news," was well done by Mrs. T. Goundrey and daughter Irene, Mrs. John Carmichael, and Mr. C. Orr. In a second lively dialogue, "The Census-taker," the parts were well taken by the Misses V. G. Semple, Irene McAllister and Lilian Hamill, and Mr. James McAllister.

Mr. Fred Sweet's reading, "How Sandy McPherson saved the settlement," combined strength, humor and pathos, and was given with exactly the correct amount of emphasis.

Mrs. S. Reddick also gave a reading in her enjoyable style, showing the pitfalls of always saying all you think.

Mr. J. J. Craig recited original poems, celebrating a number of actual happenings which had come under his notice.

The help of all who contributed so generously to the evening's success was much appreciated, not forgetting Mr. Harold Palmer who filled the role of chairman in so acceptable a manner.

A week ago, Sunday, another Nova Scotian, Mr. Fraser, took the Presbyterian service, preaching and also singing with good effect. Last Sunday, Mr. Roderick McLeod, a native of Harris, Inverneshire, Scotland, and an Arts student of Glasgow University, filled the pulpit. He is a typical Highlander with gaelic fervour, accent and gestures, having left the Old Country just in time to embark on the Theology course, last month.

An interesting letter has been received from Mr. Wm. Orr, of Hamilton, in which he makes a feeling reference to the death of his aunt, Mrs. Cole, who, he says, had been a mother to him during, and before, the eleven years he lived with her. He also sends a copy of The Gideon, containing an excellent picture of our friend, and an account of the Portland, Ore., convention, at which he was honoured by being appointed a trustee.

Mr. Jas. Bartlett writes that he is engaged in farm work at McCreary, Man.

Mrs. Alice J. Hamill's neighbours miss her since her removal to Havelock for the winter.

Mr. Geo. Jackson and family have taken up their abode with Mr. W. Seed at the latter's home here on the farm, once owned by Mr. Fred. Brown.

Mrs. E. E. Perry has returned home after a visit of a few weeks with relatives and old friends in the Bay State.

Mr. Geo. Hooker, of Ormstown, was the guest at "Cornerstone's" last Friday, and called at Barrington and other points.

The marriage of Mr. Edward Gervais and Miss Emma Hébert was solemnized by Rev. Father Reid at Hemmingford, a wedding luncheon being served by the groom's mother, Howick. Later, a reception was held at the home of Mr. Chas. Robidoux, the bride's uncle.

The W. M. S. will be entertained on Saturday afternoon by Mrs. J. Frier, Convener of the work committee.

PARADE ... NOTES ...

Five Fenian Raid Veterans—a Colour Party—handed over the Colors to the Colour Party in front of the County Building.

* * * * *

Mr. John S. Elder and Mr. Robert Henderson were out in 1866; seventy years ago.

* * * * *

Mr. Jack Wilson went to Trout River and brought down two of the Fenian Raid veterans who had no other way of coming. Certainly his Good Deed for the day.

* * * * *

The Parade passed the Saluting Base in perfect order; nervous voices of the leaders of the Cadet and Scout Parties were near cracking on the command "Eyes Right;" no ramrod could have been stiffer than the little bodies doing their best. They were splendid.

* * * * *

Did you notice that the Great War Vets, the Cadets, and Scouts got into position around the monument just as accurately as the militia—and perhaps—?

* * * * *

The parade went down Chateauguay St., along the Chateauguay river before turning back to the saluting base and Lt-Col. Lemoyne, on Prince Arthur Square. The Chateauguay river took its name from the Seigneury of Chateauguay, granted to Charles L. LeMoyne in 1673. See your Bank of Commerce calendar for some of the details of one of the sons. General Lindsay who made the address on this same square when H.R.H. Prince Arthur presented the Colours was also a relative of Lt.-Col.-Lemoyne.

* * * * *

The Great War Vets looked very snappy in the Berets so thoughtfully supplied by the local Red Cross Society. Major Irving and Capt. Montle lead the two parties.

The Beret constituted a uniform and consequently was not removed at any time except in church. The leaders gave the military salute instead of removing the hat at the saluting base.

* * * * *

At least one Military Cross and three Military Medals were noted among the Mons Stars and Service Medals.

* * * * *

The Armoured Car Unit had nice new great coats. The old soldiers chuckled over the story behind that. The Unit is quite new but did itself proud.

* * * * *

Some of the G. W. Vets wondered if they looked as young as that 20 years ago. Absolutely.

* * * * *

The Public Address System functioned perfectly; how much less restless a crowd is when it can hear everything!

* * * * *

What a two minutes silence! The only sound was the twitter of the few winter birds in the tree tops.

* * * * *

The Road Committee of the Town Council had blocked all the roads, no honking cars or rumbling wagons this year.

* * * * *

The two minutes silence was not a stinted symbolic one, but full measure; and then some.

* * * * *

The Boy Scouts formed a guard of honour for the guests over to the church and then lined the steps till the parade entered.

* * * * *

Men noted how well the church looked; women noted the polished spotlessness. From front door to altar and from roof truss to carpet, everything fairly twinkled.

* * * * *

Two tall figures in the gowns and scarlet hoods of Doctors of Divinity brought up the processional. Rev. Dr. Maclean and Rev. Dr. Miller assisted in the service.

* * * * *

The choir was most excellent and Miss Hampson, the organist and Principal J. B. MacMillan must have felt repaid for their careful preparation. Mr. MacMillan's solo was much appreciated.

Only the old soldiers could fully appreciate the precision of the Colour Party and Lt.-Col. Buchanan. Did you notice the knock of the Colours at the Chancel and that they were crossed three times to keep the King's Colours in their proper places?

* * * * *

Rev. Mr. Hatcher never had, and never deserved, a more attentive audience. The service was a gem.

* * * * *

Mr. Roy, a Fenian Raid Veteran from St. Johns identified himself to the committee and was promptly placed at the table in the Chateau reserved for the Fenian Raid Veterans. What a fine time these fine old fellows had.

* * * * *

Mr. Stanley Popeck handled the piano for the singing during the banquet. All the old favorites were gone over. Those who went over with the Vimy Pilgrimage report that Madamoiselle of Armentieres is now quite elderly; but to the soldiers she is immortal. Dr. J. E. Caza led "Allouette."

* * * * *

Padre Rollit of the A. C. Unit said Grace. He is the fourth generation of clergymen. His Grandfather Canon Rollit was the rector here years ago, as was his uncle, Rev. Mr. Goddard.

* * * * *

Due to the unexpectedly large crowd the Chateau table service took a little time, but was not any slower than at The Windsor in Montreal the same night and practically with the same menu.

* * * * *

A much appreciated touch was the presentation of buttons with the Colours to the guests.

The Armoured car was well inspected before it left. The A. C. Unit left shouting "See you next year."

* * * * *

City Gas Electric supplied lumber for the platforms, while Mr. D. J. O'Connor supplied chairs from his hall.

* * * * *

The Montreal Star was particularly generous in its treatment of the Huntingdon celebration. They sent a local boy, David B. MacFarlane, to report the event, and he was accompanied by Photographer Woods, whose work and that of Kenneth McNair our readers can appreciate in the pictures we reproduce this week. We are also particularly indebted to Mr. T. F. Butler of the Montreal Star for his loaning us our front page cut, and other courtesies. Again, Lord Atholstan has profited by the occasion to show citizens of Huntingdon that he never forgets his home county.

REMEMBRANCE DAY ADDRESS AND PARADE

During the address—Seated to the left are the five Fenian Raid veterans who attended the deposition in St. John's Church, of the Huntingdon Borderers' Colours. They are John S. Elder, Peter Belair, J. C. Bruce, Robert Henderson, and Michel Demers. Others, in order, are Dr. J. C. Shanks, of the Home Guard, County Warden L. E. Blair, Mayor Paul of Elgin, Nursing-Sister MacRae-Clouston, Rev. J. H. Miller, D.D., Rev. J.B. Maclean, D.D., delivering the address, Lt.-Col. LeMoyne, Mayor Gardiner of Dundee, Rev. W. S. Hatcher, Mayor Narcy of St. Anicet, County Secretary James E. Barrett, Capt. H. R. Clouston, M.D., and Mayor Faubert of Huntingdon.

Centre right shows the Huntingdon Boy Scout Troop led by A.S.M. Reg. Daniel, with Colour Bearers Patrol Leaders George Lefebvre and Stuart Oney.

Academy Graduate Appointed Canon

Ascension Rector Honorary Canon of Anglican Cathedral

The appointment of Rev. J. F. Morris, B.A., B.D., rector of the Church of the Ascension, Park avenue, as honorary canon of Christ's Church Cathedral, was announced Monday night by the Right Rev. John Farthing, Bishop of Montreal. Rev. Mr. Morris's appointment fills the vacancy left by the death of Canon E. I. Rexford.

A native of Bristol, in the Ottawa Valley, Mr. Morris began his education at Shawville Academy and Huntingdon Academy where he matriculated. At McGill University he received his B.A. degree in 1911 and completed his theological studies at the General Theological Seminary, New York. His first charge was at Glen Sutton.

In 1917 Mr. Morris became rector of St. Clement's Church, Verdun, replacing Canon Whitley. In 1929 he was named rector of the Church of the Ascension replacing the late Canon Flanagan.

Obituary

The late W. H. Thompson

The death of William Harold Thompson, aged 76, in the Hotel-Dieu Hospital at Valleyfield on Monday afternoon, November 16th, removes from Huntingdon one of its most colourful citizens. For more than ten years Mr. Thompson had resided at the Chateau and until this past summer he had been in the best of health. Commercial travellers and occasional tourists had come to know Mr. Thompson as a personal friend, and they enjoyed many a long and witty chat with him. Some few weeks ago he contracted a severe cold and early last week he was removed to Valleyfield Hospital. Complications had set in and his life was despaired of from the time of admittance. He gradually became worse until he passed away Monday afternoon. His courageous and jovial spirit is exemplified by one of his last remarks before leaving for the hospital that he had made arrangements for some entertainment for the official opening of the Badminton Club, and regretted that he might be unable to fulfill his promise.

The funeral was held to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church this afternoon, and, at his own request, interment followed in Huntingdon Cemetery.

The deceased is survived by a number of brothers and sisters.

Conference of Ministers of Agriculture Is Called

Effort Made to Improve Sales of Farm Products To Britain

A conference of the Ministers of Agriculture of the nine provinces together with the Dominion authorities has been called for December 14th. This is a part of a program to improve Canadian sales of farm products in the United Kingdom, the United States and elsewhere. Hon. J. G. Gardiner has been giving considerable attention to the matter. He spent several weeks in Britain himself after the session. He made certain preliminary observations about the need of studying the British market a little more attentively, and also the desirability of watching Canadian quality and suitability before the cattle, cheese, butter, poultry, bacon, etc. left this side.

Then Mr. Gardiner asked the deputy minister, Dr. Barton, and Dr. J. H. Grisdale, the former deputy minister, to make some inquiries for him along similar lines when they were in Britain. He asked them to report independently on his own suggestions. Later he instructed H. S. Arkell, the former livestock commissioner, to visit the different provinces, and interview livestock organizations and farmer's societies as well as the packers. Mr. Arkell will have his report in the hands of the Minister by the time the Ottawa conference begins.

New Drive for Exports

What the Minister of Agriculture expects all this preparation to lead up to is this: he wants an organization formed in Canada to assist in the exporting of Canadian farm products, to advise farmers what is wanted on the other side, to keep an eye on quality, to watch market changes. It is expected that this body will keep closely in touch with some sort of intelligence service on the other side, which will advise from time to time how the shipments are being received and what can be done to build up the trade still further.

The facts and figures for 1936 show that markets for the products of the Canadian farm are growing steadily, but there is still plenty of scope for enlargement. The cattlemen of the Dominion have been urging upon the Minister of Agriculture the need for further emphasis on this matter. An ample market for Canadian live cattle at somewhat better prices than have been prevailing would be of tremendous value to Canadian farmers in every province.

Profits in Textiles

Some rather sensational evidence has been brought out by the Turgeon royal commission which is investigating the textile industry in Canada. Eyebrows have been lifted here and there at the profits which have been accumulated by some of the companies, especially when they are set in contrast against the wages paid some classes of employees. The "hidden inventory reserve" of Canadian Cottons, Ltd., has also come in for attention. Though the officers of the company claim that everything was done to safeguard the company against undue fluctuations, and that in the long run the reserve all came out in the balance sheet and had taxes paid upon it, this view does not coincide with that of the income tax department. The latter has made a tentative assessment of about $383,000 for unpaid income tax between 1920 and the present. This, apparently, does not include penalties, nor does it include anything for the years 1916-1920.

The angle which will be followed with especial interest across the country is what effect these disclosures will have on the tariff policy of the Mackenzie King government. Substantial slices have already been cut off the Bennett duties on textiles, and so far the action does not seem to have ruined any of the companies. It has enabled the Canadian consumer to enjoy a bit more choice when time came to buy cloths and clothing. But anyone who has brought in a shipment of textiles recently knows that the tariff is still moderately high on most lines. It so happens that these revelations about the textile industry arrive just when the Canadian government is trying to figure out some way of mollifying the British into continuing free entry for Canada's farm products. It would not be surprising if some further reductions in textile duties are offered by Canada in return for maintenance of the Ottawa agreement benefits. Iron and steel, boots and shoes, machinery, are other lines which we may see coming in more readily from Britain after the next budget.

Talk About Defence

We are beginning to hear a lot about defence programs, about orders for aeroplanes, about destroyers. There is not much of an official nature to announce. A great deal of the talk can be dismissed as idle gossip. But an enhanced air force looks like a safe bet.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Cluff and family of Valleyfield, were Sunday guests of her mother, Mrs. Dewick.

Mrs. H. M. Jardine of West Branch, Mich., and Mrs. Robert Harvey and little daughter Louise, of Cobourg, Ont., are guests of their parents, Rev. A. F. and Mrs. Pollock.

SNOOPER'S COMMENTS

By Staff Reporter

The ceremony which marked the celebration of Armistice Day and the deposition of the Huntingdon Borderers' colours in the Anglican Church here last Wednesday was the biggest and most colourful public demonstration that has been held in Huntingdon for the past eleven years. Not since the Centennial celebration of 1925 has so much interest been attached to any single event. Montreal papers (the Star and Gazette) gave it more space in their columns than any other story they ever took from this district.

Although the actual ceremony took only about an hour and a half visitors from a distance were in town till late in the afternoon. The sixty officers and men of the First Armoured Car Regiment from Montreal were entertained at the Chateau after the formalities and it was nearly four o'clock before they returned to headquarters in Montreal.

The armoured tank created a great deal of interest among spectators. It has been said that it is the only tank of its kind in Canada. Certainly there are not more than two like it in the Dominion. The tank, a very harmless looking thing in itself, could be quickly turned into a machine of death. It was fully equipped with two mounted machine guns, one in a swivel turret, at the top and another pointing straight forward. It was covered with iron plate ½ inch thick and weighed 6 tons. It is able to speed along the road at 65 miles an hour.

Our assistant just rushed in with the news that the man driving the tank was named "Garble, or Garbo" or some such name and when the regiment was ready to leave he said, "I tank we go home now." There, we were afraid you wouldn't like it.

It seems that the weatherman has at last decided to turn on the cold weather and when he turns on the cold weather it makes you think of hockey and when you think of hockey you don't know just what to think. Although the rink itself appears to be in pretty good shape nothing has been done about forming a hockey league. The Leach Textiles have decided not to enter a team in the town league and when all the players that are now working at the Textile Mill are taken out of the town league there isn't very much of a league left. Instead of playing town league the woollen mill team expects to get into a league of its own or play exhibition games on Saturday nights.

All kinds of rumours have been floating around the last few days. One of these is that there may be Sunday hockey just as there was Sunday baseball. One thing is certain. There will have to be something done and done pretty soon if there is going to be any hockey here at all this winter.

His Majesties' postmen have not been beating any worn path to this column during the past few weeks. Activity along the mailman's route has been as scarce as activity in hockey circles. Inquiries still come in however, asking why there was no Academy dance this year and the answer is still, "We don't know why! Certainly there should have been."

E. C. writes:—

"Last Friday was the 13th of the month and if that wasn't enough to make any superstitious person quail with fear Friday the 13th also happened to be the day on which the new moon appeared."

We wondered why this stuff sounded so queer this week. It was written last Friday.

Then, there was a letter addressed to Santa Claus which some how found its way to this department, but we won't go into that.

Holstein Breeders Will Assist Calf Club Movement

The annual meeting of the Huntingdon-Ormstown Holstein Breeders' Club which was held in the County Building, on Nov. 14th was fairly well attended. The financial report of the secretary showed the Club finances in a healthy condition. The reports showed that the Club had been of real assistance to the breeders showing stock at the Ormstown Show, and had given $10 for prizes to the Ormstown Calf Club.

It was decided to assist the members of the Hemmingford Calf Club who wished to purchase purebred heifer calves, next spring, under the direction of J. L. Pelletier, agronomist.

The officers elected for the coming year were: A. H. Crutchfield, President; Andrew Elder, 1st Vice-Pres.; Robert Helm, 2nd Vice-Pres.; M. M. McNaughton, Sec'y. Directors: Geo. Collum, W. L. Carr, J. J. Murphy, Sam Cullen, G. C. Boyce, Fred McGregor, Jas. D. Lang, H. T. Cunningham, J. A. Brown.

It was decided that the Club members should support W. L. Carr, as one of the Quebec directors in the Dominion Association.

Mr. B. M. Johnston spent a couple of days the past week in Montreal, and visited his sister, Mrs. M. E. Angell, who is a patient in the General Hospital.

On Wednesday night of last week the members of the Georgetown Bible Class held a party in the Fertile Creek schoolhouse. A large number of young people gathered together and spent the greater part of the evening in playing a number of very well chosen games which seemed to be enjoyed by all, after which all received partners and sat down to a delicious lunch. Music was furnished by the Sutton Bros. from Covey Hill and by Mr. Ralph Logan and Miss Mildred McFarlane. The evening came to a close by all joining hands and singing "For Auld Lang Syne", after which all set out for home, feeling that their evening had been well spent.

To-Morrow's Child

By Julia Ann Moore

Chapter 26

By a curious coincidence, Kate found Val in almost the exact spot she and Hugh had last seen her some four hours before, standing by the window in the hospital reception room. All afternoon she had paced the floor of that big, silent room, at intervals dropping into a chair. She knew she would not be permitted to see Cran today, but always she shut her mind against the awful possibility that she might never see him again—alive.

Kate called gently to Val from the doorway, "It's after six, darling."

Nodding, Val went for her coat and followed Kate out into the corridor where Hugh was talking with the superintendent.

When they reached the apartment, Val asked them to excuse her, went to her room and closed the door.

Hugh had not removed his coat. He turned his hat in his hands. Without looking up, he said, "Pretty blind, weren't we, Kate?"

"About Val and Cran?" Kate said. She shook her head, slowly. "I'm not so sure. It may be simply that she feels she was indirectly responsible. He came here to see her, you know. And he was here in this room with her less than an hour before he was shot." After a moment's silence, she said. "I'm curious about Guy, Hugh. Do you suppose your friend Kellogg would tell me anything if I called him?"

Hugh went to the phone and dialed the district attorney's Long Island home. Mr. Kellog, he was informed, was still at his office. Hugh dialed Kellogg's office. Then:

"Hugh Malcolm, Walter. What's the dope on Guy Williams?" For a full minute he stood listening. At last: "Sounds bad, doesn't it?... Well, thanks. I'll drop in to see you tomorrow. I've thought of one or two things that may fit in the picture... Tonight? Yes, of course. I'm at Kate Hollister's; mind if I bring her along?... All right. We'll be there around nine."

He put the phone down. "Guy and the Cameron girl slipped away in a plane about four o'clock," he said. "Guy chartered the plane to take them to Washington, but they haven't been reported down as yet. Walter thinks Guy discovered they were after him and took the girl along as hostage."

"Leeze...!" Kate stared at him. "But...".

"I told Walter you and I would be at his office at nine. He's to show us the gun that killed Leslie and Bret and put young Scott in the hospital, by the way."

"What do you mean?" His casual tone had not softened the shock of this announcement. "Where did he find it?"

"When you know the answer to that," Hugh replied, "you know all there is to know. He found it ingenuously constructed in the barrel of a pair of binoculars..."

* * * * *

The district attorney abruptly stopped talking, and looked at Hugh, smiling. "I'll ring off before I begin repeating myself. I don't think I've omitted anything."

"But you promised to show us the gun you found in Guy's apartment," Hugh said.

But Kate could not pull her thoughts away from the district attorney's detailed case against Guy—a case, Kellog had said earlier, which would send Guy to the chair "on roller skates"—and now a question she had held back minutes ago came back to her:

"I thought Cran Scott had backed up Guy's story that some one had come along the corridor and shot him?"

Kellog, digging around in a desk drawer, nodded. "That's right—and Scott doesn't know to this minute Williams did the shooting. You understand—" he said, setting two identical pairs of field glasses on the desk—"until we found these in Guy Williams's apartment, we did not get the significance of what Scott told us at the hospital. He said, 'I was lying across the bed, on my side, watching Guy. He was sitting across the room fooling with a pair of binoculars.'"

Hugh took up one pair of the glasses. "Any danger of my killing somebody?" he asked.

"Not with those," Kellog told him. "Those are genuine—the ones Williams let your cousin use, Miss Hollister." He pointed to the second pair: "There's the gun. Nothing in it now. Obviously, Williams owned both pair—perhaps got them from his father's collection. One pair he planted with the stage properties, the other pair he carried in his pocket. When he got ready for the dirty work, he merely exchanged the real glasses for that deadly pair."

Hugh picked up the second pair. "Looks like an ordinary small pistol welded into the binoculars," he said. He put the thing to his eyes and saw the short pistol barrel and the slightly larger cylinder into which it fit. All save the small pistol grip was hidden in the binocular chamber.

"That," said Kellog, "is a twenty-two calibre pistol with a two-inch barrel and a four-inch silencer. We tried it on the police range. If I fired it in this quiet room you could not be sure you'd heard anything. Put a smokeless cartride in there and fire it off in a darkened theater with your bass drum thundering away and...." His spread hands completed his meaning.

"You see," he said, "we made two big mistakes. First, we eliminated Guy Williams as a suspect; not only was he not on the stage but Miss Clarke was sitting with him and would have known, we assumed, if he had done the shooting. And then we got off on the wrong foot by concluding Crawford was shot from backstage. Unquestionably Williams knew that Crawford's fingers touching the window ledge was the cue for the grand storm climax and that Crawford would then wheel away from the window. Williams, holding a bead on Crawford, shot him in that instant that Crawford turned and the stage lights went out... And then we made the same mistake after Gallishaw was killed, assuming the shot had been fired from backstage because Gallishaw was shot in the middle of his forehead. It was not until we found the binocular gun that I realized the importance of Miss Clarke's statement that Gallishaw had been staring up at her a short time before. Actually, I think, Gallishaw was staring at Williams who was sitting just behind Miss Clarke, as you know."

"But why?" Kate asked in a dry little voice. "Why should Bret...?"

From Hugh, Kellog had learned that before Bret's marriage he was engaged to Kate, and he had deliberately omitted this important part of his case against Guy. Now he said, gently:

"You may as well know the truth, Miss Hollister... Bret Gallishaw knew Williams planned to kill Crawford that night when you two sat in the orchestra. Williams, probably in one of his drunken moments, had written Gallishaw and told him what he meant to do and urged him to come to New York and see him do it. I have the letter in there..." putting his hand on a closed box file on his desk. "Gallishaw came to New York that night to see his stepbrother killed, but for some reason he didn't want to be with you when it happened. That's why he told you he had decided to go back to New Manchester—and then, when you left him in front of the theater, slipped back in to see the job done."

All the color had drained out of Kate's face. She made no effort to speak.

"That explains, of course," Kellogg went on, "what Gallishaw meant in our little verbal exchange the night he was killed. I haven't any idea he thought I knew who killed Crawford—but he knew and I think he meant to tell. His interrupted reference to 'Money—' pointed the finger at Williams, a fact that occurred to none of us at the time... Sitting there after I had made him return to his seat, he was so angry and humiliated that he couldn't keep his eyes off Williams sitting in the box. At least that's my theory. Why Guy Williams brought the binocular-gun to the theater that second night, I don't know—unless he and Gallishaw had quarreled since the Crawford killing. But I haven't a doubt Williams knew Gallishaw meant to give him away after that open threat and he decided to kill him, and did. It was his good luck that Gallishaw was looking toward the box. If he had been looking toward the stage, Williams would necessarily have shot him in the side of the head and we would have known immediately the shot had been fired from the box."

Going over the story with Winifred later, Hugh said, "Once you know Guy did it, there's nothing hard to understand about it. We all took Guy for a spoiled, harmless kid. He's spoiled, all right. Spoiled, hot-tempered and used to having his own way. And I imagine he's had very little regard for human life since they found his father and mother shot to death. But he wasn't harmless. No telling what he's done that we'll never hear about."

"After Leslie was killed," Winifred said, quietly, "I was sure you or Guy had done it—both of you had antagonized Leslie by taking me out. He was insanely jealous after we were married."

"As a matter of fact," Hugh said after a thoughtful silence, "I don't think Guy meant to kill Leslie even after he wrote to Bret. He wanted to close the show to hurt me and when burning the theater didn't do it, he decided to scare Leslie off with a threatening note. So he bought his way into my apartment and wrote the note on my typewriter and dropped it in Leslie's dressing room. Walter Kellog got a confession from my janitor that Guy paid him ten dollars and let him stand in the doorway to see that he didn't do anything but use the typewriter... If Leslie hadn't gone on that night, I think he would be alive today. But he went on, scared cold, but too much the trouper to cripple the show."

Hugh was getting into his coat when he happened to see the little picture on Winnifred's desk. He went over and picked it up: "Is this Philippe?" And when Winifred nodded, he said, "This wouldn't be the picture Leslie was looking at it in his dressing room that night?"

She bit her lips, then nodded again. "I knew he had it and I was afraid he meant to turn it over to the papers. He'd threatened to make a public announcement that we were married and had a child, you know—unless I brought Philippe back..." Suddenly she was clinging to Hugh's arms: "What am I going to do, Hugh? I can't go on like this, not knowing where Philippe is. He may be hungry, starving..."

Hugh said, confidently, "We'll find him... soon now." But for the second time, he found himself wondering if the boy was alive.

* * * * *

The police vigil at the Washington airport Christmas afternoon and night went for naught. Kellogg's description of the plane and its occupants was ticked out on police teletypes all over the country, but no word of Guy and Leeze and their pilot came back until Thursday noon. Then the message was laid on the district attorney's desk at almost the very moment that Val, on the opposite side of Manhattan, bent over Cran's bed and nodded a binding affirmative to his halting, whispered question.

CONSTIPATION* MAY LOWER RESISTANCE TO GERMS

Can Be Corrected by Natural Laxative Food

Common constipation is due largely to insufficient "bulk" in meals. It is a condition that should never be treated casually.

Long neglected, it may contribute to a general run-down condition. Your body lacks the strength it needs to fight off infection. You are much more likely to pick up a serious illness.

Guard against common constipation.* Make sure the meals you eat contain plenty of "bulk." Kellogg's ALL-BRAN is a generous source of effective "bulk."

Within the body, the "bulk" in ALL-BRAN absorbs moisture, forms a soft mass, and gently cleanses the system. This delicious cereal also furnishes vitamin B and contains iron.

Two tablespoonfuls daily, with milk or cream, are usually sufficient. Stubborn cases may require ALL-BRAN oftener. If not relieved this way, consult your doctor.

Serve ALL-BRAN in some form each day, either as a cereal, or cooked into muffins, breads, etc. Eat it regularly for regular habits.

Guaranteed by the Kellogg Company. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

The Importance Of Good Light

Although it is many years since Edison developed the carbon filament lamp, the forerunner of the efficient tungsten lamp of today, nevertheless, we should not cease to be grateful to the man whose genius contributed so largely to the comfort and convenience of civilized peoples throughout the world.

From the earliest dawn of time man provided light for himself by means of oil and tallow and still more primitive methods, and it is only within a few decades that we have had the wonderful electric light at our instant command, at the snap of a switch. Science is progressing steadily in its efforts to improve lighting conditions not only in the home but in the factory as well, for the importance of adequate lighting cannot be overestimated.

Actual tests have shown that children who have been forced to study by insufficient light are not only backward in work but in many cases their eyes have been permanently injured. In the office and factory, good lighting results in greater safety to employees, better workmanship, with consequently less rejected goods. Good street lighting increases the safety of night travel immeasurably, reduces the possibility of crime and adds greatly to the appearance of our villages, towns and cities, and as time goes on, it is most probable that safety in night driving will demand the illumination of highway as well.

The ever-increasing speed capabilities of the modern automobile, combined with better constructed highways, is adding to speeds of travel to such an extent that the already appalling number of highway fatalities is bound to increase unless additional safety measures are taken, and well-lighted highways would certainly be a great factor in reducing accidents.

The Restoration Of the Colours

Following the engagement with the Fenians at Trout River in 1870, Colours were presented to the 50th Batt. Huntingdon Borderers by H.R.H. Prince Arthur of Connaught.

For years these were the pride of the Regiment but in time a new generation arose which knew no fear of the border and the 50th Batt. faded out of sight. When the Colours were last carried by the Fenian Raid Veterans it was suggested that they be deposited in church but nothing was done about it.

The story of the actual restoration of the colours goes back to the month of July when they were found in a tattered and torn condition in the County vaults by J. C. Boyd. They were brought down by Mr. Boyd to W. S. Brown, the President of the Huntingdon Board of Trade, requesting him to have that organization look after their restoration. The matter was spoken of to a number of citizens with but little fruitful action. One day Mr. Brown approached the Huntingdon Scoutmaster, M. R. Primeau, suggesting that the Troop take it upon themselves to look after this work and they agreed to render this public service. With the cooperation of the Huntingdon Gleaner, an appeal was made for subscriptions and a sufficient amount was secured to have the work carried out. The flags were returned in August, and the first meeting to decide where to place them was held in September when C. M. Oney was named Chairman, and M. R. Primeau, Secretary. Under this Committee the resting-place for the Colours in St. John's Anglican Church was decided upon. At a further meeting R. E. Cogland was appointed Chairman of the Finance Committee, H. G. Bickford, Treasurer, and Dr. H. R. Clouston, general chairman in charge of the November 11th celebration.

Following is a complete list of donations towards the restoration of the Huntingdon Borderers' Colours: Lord Atholstan, $20.; Dr. J. C. Shanks, Toronto, $5.; Frank A. Shirriff, Toronto, $5; F. A. Blair, New York City, $5.; Coroner Lorenzo Prince, M.D., Montreal, $2.; Mrs. John S. Ross, Athelstan, $2.; H. K. Wright, Montreal, $2.; F. W. Cunningham, New York City, $2.; J. Hamilton Ferns, Montreal, $1.; Mrs. Mary W. Sellar, Huntingdon, $1.; Adam L. Sellar, Huntingdon, $1.; D. M. Rowat, N.P., Montreal, $1.; Mederic-R. Primeau, Huntingdon, $1.; J. H. Buchanan, Minneapolis, $1.; W. S. Brown, Huntingdon, $1.; and Kenneth M. Chalmers, St. Lambert, $1., forming a total of $51.

Local Boy Scout officials originated and carried out the idea of souvenir buttons on which appear a photostat of the Huntingdon Borderers' Colours. They were distributed that day by Huntingdon Academy girls and the proceeds were divided between the Academy Athletic Fund and the Scout Troop. Scout officials had also placed a number of them in the local business places and these were given out that day with purchases as a goodwill offering on the part of the merchants. A number of these buttons were kept for former residents who might care to secure them. To do so send a small contribution to cover mailing charges to the Huntingdon Boy Scouts and souvenirs will be sent by return mail.

The Geese Wax Critical

By Covey Hill Correspondent

The reason why there are so many critics is that the work is easy, requiring neither talent, training, nor practice. Any effort, moral or material, is sufficient foundation whereon to rear a vast critical fabric.

In country parts, the weekly paper, the local correspondent, and the school-teacher are common targets for the critic's shafts, but the clergyman and the road-building programme share his attention.

There is a byroad, worn by American tourists and spring freshets into a succession of rocky humps, which has undergone recent repairs by a teamster, who honest man, strive as he might, could manage but a very few loads of gravel per diem. An observer, watching these lonely loads and the steady stream of cars, remarked facetiously that one load was worn away before the next was deposited. But on closer inspection, he admits that the slow work is also sure, and the road better now than for years past.

There is also a highway—in prospect—running from Somewhere to Anywhere, and it, too, has evoked criticism, even the geese having waxed critical and contentions regarding it. Not long ago a flock of about twenty-five were seen issuing from a farm-yard and parading along this road. The old gander gabbled the remark that he did hope they would alter the road into a highway fifty feet wide, because, said he, our owner is not so good at growing corn as his wife is at raising geese, and the older I get, the harder it is for me to face the winter without my corn. Now if our farmer can only get work on this highway, he may buy corn to feed us geese.

Yes, chimed in a spring goose, and then I shan't be too poor to grace a Christmas dinner-table. She, poor thing, was of that self-sacrificing type of feminity which enjoys martyrdom.

But, objected one of the two mother geese, wouldn't a fifty-foot road be dangerous to cross?

Well, argued one of her sons, it will sound more like seeing life to have it said that one died on a highway and not on a cow-path.

At this point a fierce honk! honk! was heard over head and a flock of several hundred wild geese was seen surveying the land. These new comers, though reported to be Communists were only socialists who, when enraged, saw red. Their honking was the classic language from which the barnyard birds had derived their gabling dialect. Thus the latter could follow the remarks of the wild geese spokesgander who said: "How stupid you domestic geese grow under Fascist rule! You have lost your heads and will lose them again. Odd it is that you civilized birds are executed with the block and axe of mediaeval times, while we barbarians of the species oftenest meet our fate at the hands of a modern firing-squad. Your highway need not be fifty feet wide to bring enough of those tourist enemies of ours, who envy us our mode of travelling, swift, high and dry. As for your farmer and his corn, it will be paid for by hundreds of other farmers whom we have seen across the country, living on roads not only narrow but rough. Apart from this, we have revelled in the beauties of the aurora borealis, and judge that some of all the farmers' money would better be spent in harnessing the electric current to their needs, rather than spending so much on a road for the wealthy stranger.

The two bands of geese disputed at great length, but neither could convince the other. Both decided to petition the government, the tame demanding a fifty-foot road, and signing their names with imported fountain pens, while the wild asked that the road be limited to thirty-six feet, and stuck to their primitive quills. Both essayed to rush a delegation to the capital, but the domestic party, finding themselves early outstripped in the race, confided their mission to a hen-hawk. No ward has been received to date of the reception accorded to either side.

The presentation of the certificates was made by Rev. J. H. Miller, D.D., and Rev. J. H. Woodside. Dr. Miller mentioned the pleasure and privilege of presenting such certificates. The knowledge, he said, imparted to the youths, had enabled them to act promptly and intelligently. Often we don't know, he emphasized, just what act might immortalize our lives, and added the enjoinder that we should always be prepared. Speaking before a group of Scouts, Rev. Mr. Woodside stated that it was hardly necessary to emphasize their motto "Be Prepared." There are those, he said, who are scheming today to take lives, while others meet to honour those who save. He expressed the hope that as the youths acted on that occasion they would similarly in the future. He appreciated, he said, their high sense of service and duty.

The programme closed with hearty cheers led by the chairman for those who took part in the programme, for the boys, for Mrs. Resse, and for the parents of the honoured boys.

Man Kills Himself Digging For Treasure

A mad search for buried treasure that has cost a Cairo Shopkeeper his life is being investigated by the police. The man, Ibrahim Mustapha, dug himself to death.

He had $1,000 hidden away. Two swindlers decided to get hold of the money. They told Mustapha spirits had informed them 29 jars of gold had been buried by a saint under a room in Mustapha's house.

The shopkeeper readily paid the rogues $50 and $75 for repeated purchases of Indian and Chinese incense as offerings to persuade the spirits to reveal the spot where the treasure was buried.

When they had extorted all his money in this way the swindlers told Mustapha the treasure lay under the floor of his sitting-room.

Mustapha started to dig. He dug all day and all night. When the hole was 21 feet deep, he chased the swindlers out of the house as he felt he was nearing the treasure. But he still had weeks of digging before him.

He gradually went mad and threw his wife out of the house. Soon he fell ill as a result of the bad atmosphere underground. Then he sent for his wife and made her promise if he died she would continue to hunt for the gold.

He died a few days later and the wife faithfully carried on digging alone. At last she grew suspicious and informed the police. They are now looking for the two crooks.

Legislature Is Prorogued By Lieutenant - Governor

Number of the Principles Preached by Party Were Put Into Effect

Hon. E. L. Patenaude, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, Thursday prorogued the Quebec Legislature. It was the termination of the first session of the 20th Legislature elected since the province has existed in its present constitutional form. For the first time since 1897 the King's representative found himself surrounded with ministers not of the Liberal party.

Premier Duplessis several times in the House this session has declared that all the ills of years past could not be repaired during an "emergency" session, but the programme on which his party was elected is well in way of being accomplished. A number of the principles preached by the Prime Minister and his friends prior to the August and November elections were put into effect, including repeal of a number of laws to which particular objection had been shown in vain by Mr. Duplessis and his friends in the Taschereau days.

When the inter-provincial conference meets at Ottawa in December, there will be a number of matters taken up which seriously concern the province of Quebec, notably the question of the issue of securities. One of the main bills of the session, from the point of view of financial control, was that to limit issue of bonds by financial corporations beyond the real value of immovables. Two amendments were made, one to permit navigation companies to finance, since their assets are in ships and not in real estate, and the other to give discretionary power to the Government to permit the re-issue of bond flotations which had matured and could be redeemed by other issues. Here the Government restricted its own power too by the stipulation that it could not permit an issue for a larger amount than the issue being replaced.

In the bill of Hon. Martin B. Fisher, Provincial Treasurer, for a recasting of the financial structure of provincial indebtedness, provision is made for conversion. The policy of provincial rural credits was adopted by the Duplessis Government. Under this Act $10,000,000 may be loaned to farmers at such low rates of interest as to indicate that the Government confidently expects to borrow money at about 2½ per cent.

Sir Thomas Chapais, Government leader in the Legislative Council, stated Monday that the Government did not pretend that its Bill to protect people's savings and prevent overcapitalization was a perfect measure, but the Government was willing to amend the Bill from time to time. Two amendments were inserted, and the measure given third reading.

The Bill provides that the issue of debentures, or bonds, shall not be greater than the real value of the immovables. One amendment was made to provide that the boats, ships, wharves, etc., of navigation companies shall be considered as immovables for the purposes of this Act, and power is given also to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to permit a company when reorganizing its capital structure to make an issue of bonds to replace the bonds being retired, always providing that the new issue was not larger than the issue being replaced.

Premier Duplessis cross-examined A. P. B. Williams, Assistant Treasurer of the Province of Quebec, at the meeting of the Public Accounts Committee of the Legislative Assembly, and after much information had been given as regards transactions between the Treasury, represented by Mr. Williams, and L. B. Cordeau, president of the Liquor Commission, the Committee was adjourned sine die, with the statement by the Prime Minister that the committee would not be called upon to sit until next Legislature session.

Friday Williams was dismissed from Government service by the Premier and Arthur Foster, for the past 12 years manager of La Banque Provinciale in Quebec was named in his place.

MacKay Institute Renames Officers

Scope Institution Work is Extended by Addition Of Equipment

Dr. H. S. Birkett continues as honorary president and Mrs. Robert Loring as president of the Mackay Institute for Protestant Deaf Mutes, both being re-elected at its 66th annual meeting held Thursday at Montreal. Elective governors, of which Adam L. Sellar, Huntingdon, is one, directresses and last year's retiring board of management were also reappointed.

Accepting the appointment which last year she had regarded as a "temporary measure," Mrs. Loring, first lady president, and the first member of the family that founded the institution to hold that office in 60 years, referred to the co-operation she had received from both governors and board, particularly the assistance of W. J. Morrice and Dean Sinclair Laird. Dean Laird joined the committee of management during the year, succeeding Prof. John Hughes, of McGill University. Mrs. Loring spoke also of the loss sustained in the deaths of Mrs. G. B. Fraser and Miss Roddick, who for more than 25 years had been such helpful associates.

Presenting the financial report R. Schurman, secretary, said that if all city taxes showed the same increase as the institute's "there should be no deficits at the city hall." Taxes for the year represented nearly 70 per cent. increase over the preceding one, and bills for the year ending June 30, 1937, already totalled over $2,000, making an increase of 400 per cent. within a period of five years.

Expenditures for the year amounted to $31,138.68, showing an average cost per pupil of $53.68, compared with $54.26 last year. Despite difficulties common to all bodies attempting to balance a budget with diminished income, it was gratifying that in no instance in the year was there non-admission of pupils whose parents were unable to pay fees. Out of 58 pupils, Quebec supplied 54, Ontario 2, and New Brunswick 2, there being 32 of this total on a free basis. Revenues from pupils fees amounted to about ten per cent. of the year's expenditure, the balance being met from grants, endowments, and members' contributions. Downward trends in interest rates made it necessary, Mr. Schurman said, to either build up a larger endowment fund or to obtain increased grants.

New Equipment Added

New mechanical equipment in the manual training department had been added and the scope extended during the year to include instruction in drawing to scale, and also in textile designing for pupils in the weaving department. Prof. H. E. Reilley, of McGill had also made examinations of hearing equipment, and it would be necessary soon to replace obsolete instruments with new designs in order to shorten the time required in the training of speech.

Miss Dena Hagen, M.A., of Calgary, whose appointment as a principal, followed the retirement of Miss Hudson, had commenced her term in September.

Other officers elected: Sir Charles Lindsay, W. J. Morrice, Alfred B. Evans, vice-presidents; R. Schurman, C.A., secretary-treasurer; Miss Dow, C. B. Howard, M.P., F. W. Ross, Quebec; Adam L. Sellar, Huntingdon; Mrs. Edward Mackay, Mrs. Walter Molson, Mrs. Percy Cowans, Mrs. G. H. Montgomery, W. S. Richardson, elective governors; Mrs. Geo. Mackay, Mrs. D. M. McGoun, Mrs. Abner Kingman, directresses; Allan Mackay to the board of management. P. S. Ross and Sons were appointed auditors.

Primeau; Entertainment—Miss Norma Lunan, Miss Frances Cahill, Frank Furtato, and Allan Hamilton; House—Mrs. J. W. McGill, Miss Rucie O'Hare, Alfred Reid, and Morris Hunter.

SCHOOL NOTES

Outplayed by two strong city teams the girls' basketball squad lost a 44-23 decision to the girls of the West Hill High School, Montreal, in the latters gym on Saturday morning. The intermediate team, which the girls were supposed to play, was not present when the opening whistle blew and a team was made up of the senior girls who were present. The local girls played one-half of the game against each team. The score for the first game was 24-12, and the second one ended 20-11.

The West Hill teams, entrants in the Montreal City School League, uncovered a flashing brand of basketball to hold a slight edge over the local Academy throughout. The locals rocked the Montreal girls back on their heels with a steady offensive but they seemed unable to check their opponents once they got possession of the ball. The game was played under girls' rules which didn't help the local cause very much, because the girls have been playing most of their matches under boys' ruling. The West Hill girls got many free shots as a result of the fouls committed by the Academy under the new regulations.

Wincna McCallum, Jessie Taylor and Beryl Oliver were very effective for the locals. The game was refereed by Miss Bell of the West Hill school staff.

Academy girls who made the trip were as follows: Beryl Oliver, centre; Winona McCallum, running centre; Audrey Henderson and Annette Hunter, defense;- Joyce Hunter and Jessie Taylor, forward; Margaret Kelly, Vera McLean, and Myrna Wheeler, alternates. The girls were in charge of Miss Jessie Snaden.

The game was played at the same time that the boys' rugby team was playing against the West Hill boys.

— HOWICK —

In a thrilled packed basketball game at Howick, Friday night, a flashy Howick High School team was defeated by a speedy, more experienced Bedford High School squad, to the tune of 9-8.

Valleyfield Pays Tribute To War Dead

Study and Conference Club Has Honour of French Consul's Visit

Valleyfield celebrated worthily the 18th anniversary of the Armistice, last Wednesday, by rendering homage to the Valleyfield soldiers who died during the Great War.

The ceremony began with a parade through the streets of Valleyfield beginning and ending at the City Hall. A Scout resounded "The Last Post" and the crowd gathered in the basement of the Cathedral to hear the speakers for the occasion.

Mgr. J.-D. Nepveu, in his remarks in English, recalled the bravery of those who had given their life during the Great War. One must also, he continued, honour the veterans who were willing to sacrifice their life for their country, civilization, and justice. "I am also very proud to congratulate them here before the whole city so well represented here tonight." At the close of his remarks Mgr. Nepveu urged all those present to keep order in the homes and attend to our own affairs.

The next speaker Gontran Saintonge added two remarks to the day's celebration. One was a note of triumph because it reminded those who participated in the Great War what they had done to uphold justice and freedom. Day of sadness because it reminded all concerned of those who gave their life for their country. Mr. Saintonge also expressed the wish that Valleyfield would have a monument erected in commemoration of those who died for their country. It was not necessary, he said, that it be an expensive one, but that Valleyfield should have a definite place where the citizens of the city might gather once a year to render a final homage to their war dead.

Mayor Billette, in his few short remarks, expressed the pleasure he felt to participate in this manifestation and hoped that a monument which will recall to the future generations the exploits of those who died for their country, be erected in Valleyfield.

Last Sunday the Valleyfield Study and Conference Club had the honor to present to its members and friends the French Consul-General, René Turck.

The meeting took place at the home of Mrs. Gilles Amiot and more than fifty members and friends listened very attentively to the Conference made by the Consul. Mrs. Jacques Malouin introduced the speaker.

Mr. Turck chose as the subject of his conference the work of the famous Paul Claudel. He described the literary style, mysticism and lyricism of Claudel. He quoted Claudel's poetry and prose as being similar. The poetic theory of Claudel reposes on the distinction the writer makes between two uses of the written language. One writes to inform, then one must be clear or one writes to soothe when sympathy is essential. Claudel wrote for enjoyment. Mr. Turck explained that to well understand Claudel it is necessary to read all his works. Claudel's poetry deals with realities and his vocabulary is rich.

Mrs. Amiot in a few short remarks thanked the Consul for coming to Valleyfield and giving such an interesting conference. "It is," she stated, "a singular honor for us to have in our midst a representative of France and it is the first time Valleyfield has had this privilege."

Rev. Father Cloutier of Valleyfield also addressed the gathering.

Could Hardly Rise From Her Chair

Rheumatism Relieved by Kruschen

This woman was such a confirmed sufferer from rheumatism that she thought she would never get relief. But before she had finished one bottle of Kruschen her rheumatism was leaving her. Here is her letter:—

"I had rheumatism so badly that once I got into a chair I found great difficulty in rising again. A friend told me to try Kruschen Salts, but I thought it was a foolish idea, as there seemed to me to be nothing that would relieve rheumatism. My friend gave me two doses to try. I took one dose on Monday and another on Tuesday, and by then my pain had moved to another part of my body. Well, that was a good start, so I bought a bottle and it gave me great joy to find my rheumatism disappearing, and now for a long time I have been free."—(Miss) A.R.

The pains and stiffness of rheumatism are frequently due to deposits of uric acid in the muscles and joints. Kruschen Salts, by helping to stimulate the excretory organs to healthy, regular activity, enables them to expel this uric acid from the system.

NEWS from AROUND the WORLD

The British Government recently sent to Palestine an armed force which checked the Arab raiders who refused to obey the advice of the more peaceable Palestine Arabs. Peace has been established and the Government is now investigating the whole situation with a view to establishing permanent friendly relations between the two elements of the populations.

The country's astonishing prosperity has been produced by the influx of Jewish labour and Jewish capital. Palestine has passed through an agricultural depression but the effects have been substantially alleviated by the country's general prosperity. During this period the price of land and produce advanced as did also the wages of the workers on the plantations and the new works under construction. The emigration of Palestine Arabs has practically ceased while on the other hand Arabs in no inconsiderable numbers are flocking into Palestine from Syria, Transjordan and even Egypt.

The Government was able in 1931 to reduce taxes, to build up a reserve and at the same time to cover the country with a net work of good roads and build the Haifa harbour which is the second biggest in the Mediterranean.

Palestine has been a malarial country but now some 96,000 acres of swamp land have been drained and freed from the plague of fever. A third of the land thus reclaimed is made available to the Arabs.

Since the Balfour declaration the Jews have brought a stream of gold that has divided up into thousands of rivulets and has fertilized the economy of the whole country. In the first instance this was to the benefit of the Jews, but it also profited the Arabs. The Arab landlord with the capital which they acquired from the sale of land have been able to change over from the unprofitable corn growing to the highly profitable orange growing. Despite this it is the land-owning class who make the loudest outcry against the Jewish immigration. They are the main supporters of the Arab nationalistic movement.

The Arab nationalists say the Jewish immigration is changing Palestine from an Arab land into a Jewish one. Twenty years ago the Jews did not amount to 10% of the population of Palestine. Now they are fully 30% and in another decade, if the immigration goes on uninterrupted, they will amount to half the total population. Further they obtain possession of the best land and they have grasped the natural wealth of the country for themselves. The influx of Jewish capital is dissolving the ancient social constitution of the country. The Jews are Europeanizing the country, but the Arabs want Palestine to remain Oriental. Jewish immigration and Jewish prosperity have intensified the authority of British Imperialism in Palestine.

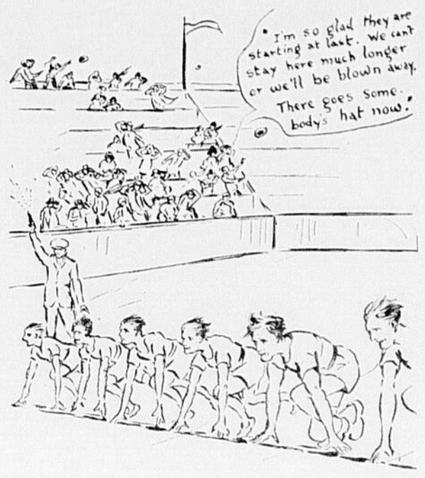
The Jews reply that Palestine and Transjordan have still room for hundreds of thousands of people. The country was dead and Jewish labour and Jewish capital have brought it new life. Not one Arab has become poorer through the Jewish immigration. All have gained by it.

Two or three decades ago Palestine was a country cut off from the world-wide capitalistic stream; it was a half-Bedouin and half-feudal country. For centuries methods of working, social life, religious thoughts have remained unchanged. The Arab village remained economically "the closed household economy." There was no interchange of goods to speak of, no trade for cash. Modern capitalism which came with the Jewish immigration burst this old-time custom.

As a result of the inflow of capital big cities have been erected on the steppe land; harbours, roads, aqueducts, and factories have been built. As a result, it is more profitable for the peasant or the tenant farmer to let the land lie fallow or to merely have the most necessary things done by the women and to work in the town or, to pay hired labour to work the land and seek the higher paid work himself.

The working day in the East begins with dawn and ends at nightfall. This has been changed. The excellently-organized workers brought the eight hour day into the country. At the beginning of last year, the High Commissioner introduced the 48-hour week in the concerns operated by the government and on the railways. Piece by piece the Oriental organization of society is being broken up. In the village the sheik rules over peasants, tenants, labourers, grants loans, distributes the tenant-land, employs the labourers. The whole village owes him a tribute and he is its political master. Now his position of authority is being undermined by Jews of Palestine. The extension of communications, splendid roads, good omnibus services have brought the village quite near the town. The peasants go to the town, work there, learn European conditions of work, get to know the power of organization, organize themselves, strike, win for themselves better labour conditions and the word of the Sheik in the village no longer is absolute law.

In Palestine there are more than 80,000 Arab Christians. They are business people, manual workers, commercial employees, clerks, officials in the government offices, in the railway and Post Offices, teachers, doctors, lawyers, journalists. They participate most in the prosperity caused by the immigration of the Jews. At the same time they hate the Jews as it is precisely in them that they encounter Europe.



The race to be run is to cover a distance of five miles. Such a race demands a lot of stamina. But these men will make it. Why? You will find the answer by studying the illustration.

Answer to last week's puzzle. If you will look closely you will see that the two hills on the left form two distinct profiles. You must turn the picture upside down to see one of them, however.

The Clue of the Missing Chocolates

By HUGH HOME

Part V

So absorbed had Dick become in the occupants of the room that he failed to hear the caution scrape of descending footsteps on the iron fire escape. Suddenly he felt something hard pressed into his back and a hoarse voice growled into his ear.

"Come back from that window and don't make a sound."

With a start Dick turned and found himself looking into the face of a powerful man. With a jerk of his head the man motioned him to descend the fire escape. When they reached the ground, Dick's captor hustled him off to where a car was waiting. Inside the car he was unceremoniously forced to sit down and at a signal from the man the car started off.

They had gone about a block when they started to question him.

"Well, you better come clean. What were you doing up there? What's your name?"

As they fired these questions his captor put his hand in his pocket and drew out a badge.

"You-you're a cop!" Dick gasped in astonishment, a great feeling of relief sweeping over him.

"Of course I'm a cop," growled the man. "What do you think I am—a nurse maid? Now come on, what's your story?"

"All right then," said Dick after a moment's thought, "I'll tell you everything."

The men listened intently, as Dick poured out the whole story, starting from the time they had met Mr. Thiem on board the boat, right up until that night when they had decided to play detective.

At the end of the tale one of the men turned to Dick and said:

"Well, young fellow, you and your friend have cleared up a lot of points that had us stopped. We belong to the narcotic squad of the Mounted Police and we have been watching Thiem and his friends for quite some time.

"We're going to take you to the Chief and after you've seen him we'll pick up some of the boys and go back to the apartment and get your pal."

Ten minutes later Dick and the Mounties stood before the Chief of the narcotic squad. A short heavily built man, he paced the floor as he listened to their story, and when they had finished barked out, jerkily.

"Bill, get some of the boys together, go to this young fellow's house and find those chocolates. We need them for evidence—fingerprints. Then, beat it back to that apartment and round up the gang. We've got them where we want them this time."

PARSLEY'S PARAGRAPHS

ANECDOTES FORECASTS MEMORIES CRITICISMS

By AL. PARSLEY

The farm influence plays a big part in sports, so many of our first line athletes come from small towns and developed their virile minds, their heavily thewed muscles, and their general store of health by all or part time work on the land.

Such great names in baseball as Jerome "Dizzy" Dean, Schoolboy Rowe, to name two standouts among two hundred were raised in small villages out in the great south-west. They hie back to these places in the off-season and spend their life in the open.

And others who are not minded towards agricultural pursuits spend their time hunting and fishing.

But bring things close to home, just figure the great ones of hockey who are out-of-doors men. Eddie Shore, the Cooks, Bill and Bun, Red Dutton, Hooley Smith.

Shore has a big farm or ranch outside of Edmonton. Here he works hard. Though he has several hired men he is a practical farmer himself and by example does more hard work than any of the fellows in his employ.

Shore recently confided to the writer that this hold-out stuff which annually becomes part of the chatter in the Metropolitan press is just so much hooey. He reports late to Boston Bruins because he has to wait until the crops come in.

Naturally he sticks to the farm until his produce is marketed and he has a keen notion for the best prices and the best saleable crops.

It was this way that he went in for barley in a big way last summer. He stayed late in Boston because there was a deal in the air by which he might become part owner of the Boston Hockey Club of the National Hockey League.

When he got back to his farm he found that heavy rains had held up seeding. The elevators were full of wheat anyway and the export market was uncertain.

So Shore thought of barley. After reckoning future markets he went for barley in a big way. There is an ever growing demand for this grain, both domestic and export.

He harvested a big yield of barley, made a very neat profit on the summer's operations, came east and started in for hockey.

Eddie doesn't believe in too much pre-season training. "That stuff is not meant for me", he claims. "I'm in pretty good shape all the year around. When the hockey season starts I want to play hockey." Though he didn't say so directly he hinted that pre-season drills, skating practice, all that sort of stuff is for the city slickers. They live a soft life in the summer. Play a little golf, but most of the time they are behind the wheel of a fast car, joy-riding.

Shore tells of the time a few years ago when he joined Bruins late, was on skates only twice, then went into the first game of the N.H.L. schedule.

In the first game he was in action 45 minutes in the second the full sixty minutes of going. This rather convincingly proves his point.

Hooley Smith was given a farm by a wealthy admirer in Montreal a few years ago. Since Hooley is city bred, from Toronto, his friends laughed uproariously at the idea of "The Hooler" becoming a farmer.

He'll just be one of those dude farmers. He'll turn the place into a sort of summer resort where he will invite his friends for the holidays.

They were wrong. Smith began to study the farm journals. He read up everything he could get his hands on about farming and he has spent his summers there ever since.

Though he owns a flourishing billiard academy on St. Catherine street in Montreal, Hooley always takes a keen interest in his farm. When he gets down there in the summer time he works hard at everything, ploughing, tending stock, mending fences, digging drains, any job in sight so long as it's real hard work that will toughen the muscles.

Come to think this eagerness of athletes of top rank for hard work out-of-doors nearly brought to an abrupt end one very promising career early this fall.

A group of players from Canadiens and Maroons wanted to have a month out-of-doors before the regular training season began. Camp Maupas, up in the Laurentian Mountains, was recommended. This is a resort run on near-Spartan lines by Emile Maupas, veteran wrestler and physical culture expert.

Here went Pit Lepine, Georges Mantha, Howie Morenz, of Canadiens; Gus Marker and Bob Gracie of Maroons. Another in the party was George Brown, up from the amateur ranks, who had been signed to a Canadien contract.

The gang went through their daily routine under Emile Maupas, but itched for further action. Nearby a contractor was digging a foundation for a house. They offered their services free. The contractor, glad of such extra labor at so reasonable a price accepted readily.

While the gang plied pick and shovel with considerable gusto a large pointed stone fell on Brown's foot. So badly was one of his toes crushed, an amputation was found necessary after he had been rushed to Montreal by car.

The toe was clipped off at the first joint. Infection later set in and a full amputation needed. Now however, the foot has healed neatly. Brown has been riding a bicycle, will start skating and expects to join Canadiens in a few days.

Charlie Chipmunk's ADVENTURES

By MARGARET DOUGLAS

Mister Gnome woke up very early one morning in his dear little leaf house and lay and laughed to himself because he was so happy.

Now he had a little Magic Window that turned pink when nice people came to visit him, and when nasty people were coming, it turned black.

This morning it was pink and Mister Gnome jumped up and kissed it and sang the little song:

Little Pink Window,
Come tell me pray.
Who is coming to see me today?
Some one I love—Some one nice.
I must bake some chocolate mice.
Tell me Little Window do?
Tell me quick and tell me true!

The little window just went on smiling all over its pretty pink face while Mister Gnome dressed himself in a big hurry. The little Robins who slept on his roof to keep him warm began to chirp and whistle and the two good witches who lived in a tiny cottage with their black cat and brown sticks, just across the road, popped their heads out of their windows to see what was going on in Leaf House.

Now when Mister Gnome was expecting company he always flung everything out of the house and the witches and their cat laughed when the door flew open and the tables and pots and pans, and spoons and cups and saucers, and Mister Gnome's bed, all came flying out into the garden Higgledy Piggledy.

Was Mister Gnome busy! He scrubbed the floor and cleaned the windows. He beat the carpet and shook the rug and just stopped working now and then to clap his hands and stand on his head, he was so happy.

And all the time, he kept wondering who was coming.

"I must not make crumbs in my nice clean house," he said, so he went into the garden and climbed up a tree to eat his breakfast and all the Robin Red Breasts stood at the foot of the tree with their beaks wide open, and gobbled up the crumbs to keep the garden tidy.

After breakfast Mr. Gnome put everything back into the house and putting on his apron he baked some chocolate mice and pink sugar rabbits, and picked from the candy tree a big basketful of Toffee Apples.

Then he skipped across the road and knocked at the witches' door.

"Come in, come in, dear Mister Gnome," they said. "We know who's coming to your home."

Mister Gnome opened the door and walked in and there were the two good witches sitting by the fire, each with a black cat on her shoulder.

"Tell me who's coming Good Witches," he said politely, "If you please, thank you!"

The witches looked at each other and the cats looked at each other an then the witches spoke at once.

"Wickety Wachet, Sister Sue,
I see one, I see two.
A Tiny thing like a furry ball,
A Woof Woof thing, with no teeth at all.
A darling thing with eyes of blue.
Now guess Mister Gnome, who's coming to you."

Mister Gnome began to dance and sing.

"I know! I know! I'm not so silly. It's Miss Buffles, Charlie, and Big Woof Willie".

The Witches and the cats all nodded their heads and back flew Mister Gnome to his Leaf House and there to meet him at the door was Charlie Chipmunk looking very smart in his new sailor suit.

"The others are hiding," he laughed. "Go and find them good Mister Gnome".

So Mister Gnome ran into the house and looked under the bed and there was Willie Wolf laughing so much that the house was shaking. Mr. Gnome then looked under the table and there was darling Miss Buffles with Princess Priscilla in her arms.

"We've run away from school!" she giggled.

Then they all went into the garden and played games and danced till the dinner was ready.

"I'd like to stay here always," said Charlie. "Let's not go back till tomorrow!"

So that night the three rascals slept in the cosy Leaf House. Fairy Dreams sat on their pillows, while Robins sang sleepy songs. Mr. Gnome and little moon beams ran about the garden all night hiding toys and candles in the bushes and up the trees as a surprise for the little visitors.

THE TAR PUZZLE

Although Tar itself is very sticky, here is a puzzle that should not stick you. Actually there is only one kind of tar. We all know what it is. They put it on roads and they put it on roofs. But if you will take the word TAR add either a letter or two letters or even a syllable or two you get an altogether different meaning. For intance if you add the syllable GET to TAR you get TARGET. This might be termed the TAR that you shoot at. So from this explanation can you figure out from the clues given below the various kind of TAR.

TAR... that keeps things dry.
TAR... that delays.
TAR... that's good to eat.
TAR... that stains.
TAR... that lives in the jungle.

"There was a young man called Rees,
Who went into the water up to his ankles.
'That's prose", he said. "But if the water had been a few inches higher, it would have been poetry."

A BEAUTIFUL JABOT

Here is a very effective jabot in chain crochet. It is quite simple to make. It has a foundation strip of organdie with a flared edging crocheted round. Three semi-circular flares are made and attached across the organdie strip to give the frilly appearance.

Cut a piece of white organdie (double) to measure 7¼x1¾ inches. Machine together, rounding one end. Trim seam, turn inside out, turn in top ends and slip stitch together. Commence one half inch from top, (square end) crochet thread and button stitch round sides and bottom. The button stitch should be about ⅛ of an inch apart and catching only a small piece of material.

HOBBIES

The Adhesive Pencil

Here is another conjurer's trick that has deluded a lot of people and with a little practice you can have a lot of fun out of it.

Hold up your left hand, palm facing the audience and clutching a pencil in a horizontal manner. Now tell your audience that, by straining the muscles very severely you can exert a mysterious adhesive property, once you will add you nearly dislocated your wrist while performing this trick, so to prevent a recurrence you will grip the wrist tightly with the right hand.

This you do in such a way that the thumb is facing the front. Now without apparently altering the grip on the wrist, you revolve the left hand so that the back comes to view with the pencil protruding from either side. The fingers are clutching the pencil. But slowly you straighten them out and bring the left hand thumb round the front of the pencil. In fact none of the fingers are supporting it, now that they are stretched out.

What is it then that keeps the pencil from falling? Why, your adhesive properties whatever that may mean.

Now the explanation is that when you rotated your left hand within the right hand grip, you quickly raised the index finger of the right hand and being turned away from the audience it could not be seen. It is this index finger that supports the pencil.

You may think that the audience would at once notice how this trick is done. Practice it a few times in front of a mirror and then try it before your friends. You will be surprised to find that the onlooker does not notice the absence of the index finger on the wrist.

The Jumping Dime

Here is a little trick that requires a slight knack but nothing more. Take an empty glass, drop a dime into the bottom of it and place a quarter on top. Ask your company if anybody can remove the smaller coin from the glass without touching either of the coins or the glass. Of course your onlookers will not be able to. Bend down to the glass and blow with all your might onto the quarter, but a little to one side. The quarter will spin over and flick the dime into the air. We advise you to practise this trick a little beforehand.

"MOTHER GOOSE" WAS A FRENCH STORY

The nursery rhymes of Mother Goose are simply an accumulation of such verse, written by various persons and at various times.

It seems likely that the name is from French sources, although other sources have been claimed. It is said that there was a Mrs. Goose, mother-in-law of Thomas Fleet, an early Boston publisher, and that he issued the collection under her name. The earliest known edition bears the inscription "Songs for the Nursery, or Mother Goose's Melodies for Children; printed by T. Fleet at his printing house, Pudding Lane, 1719."

That this was the first use of the name Mother Goose has been discredited by various critics, who say Perrault published "Contes de ma mere l'oye" in 1697, by the Satirist Regnier more than a century before. Queen Goosfoot, or Bertha with the great foot or goose foot, appears synonymous with Mother Goose in French tales. The second day of the year is her festival, and was kept as a children's holiday.

Maggie Lee

By Mrs. J. C. Conley

At the beginning of the past century, the Seignory of the counties of Chateauguay, Beauharnois and Huntingdon, now rich and beautiful were universally an uninhabited wilderness, indented only at intervals by the rude shanties of lumbermen. One of the first families that had immigrated thither, and with whom this short history is more intimately connected will now be introduced. Maggie Lee, the flower of the Iroquois, and the heroine of the Chateauguay.

Early in the fall of 1795, Anson Lee, from the frontier of York State, in company with a few others, made an excursion into the Canadian forest in quest of timber. Having followed the Chateauguay river for more than twenty miles, they lighted upon an extensive oakery, on the banks of that stream, which appeared to offer them every facility for lumbering. They erected a shanty, labored all winter and in spring floated their timber to Montreal. The following summer they removed their families to Oakville which name they had given to the place.

The white man was not alone in the forest. The Indian was there also, but his was only a temporary residence. Chiefly during the fall months large groups of the Iroquois Indians of Caughnawaga would flock to the hunting grounds of the "Technedra" that rising portion of country now known as Covey Hill running parallel with York State. Many of them also planted their wigwams upon the banks of the Chateauguay.

The settlers of Oakville soon found themselves initiated into intercourse with the Indians. In general they appeared to be amicably inclined and ever ready to return a favor, for the hospitable treatment they received.

One peculiar propensity of theirs, particularly of the squaws, was an intense fondness for white children. The eldest of Mr. Lee's family was a lovely little girl. She was a particular favorite of the "Iddies" as she termed them, and in return for their fondness, loved them as a child can only do. Oneidia, an old huntress appeared to possess an uncommon love for her.

A PERFECT ENCHANTRESS

She was a perfect enchantress, and by her many attractive presents, and parental tenderness easily ingratiated herself into the innocent affections of the child whom she looked upon as an angel of the skies, and called her by the angelic name of "Oriena". But the parents were not long permitted to enjoy the company of their little angel. One morning she had gone out as usual to play around the shanty, but having strolled into the woods, she suddenly disappeared. The mother soon missed her and tried to find her, but in vain. The forest and the river were thoroughly searched but to no purpose. It was finally believed that she had been carried off by the wolves, or had fallen into the river, and was swept away by the stream.

A few days after, Oneidia appeared at Mr. Lee's shanty, with a beautiful present for her little favorite. On hearing that the child was lost, she threw herself into a paroxism of grief, and howled with a lamentable voice, whilst the tears ran down the furrows of her weather beaten cheeks. Thus how accurately was the real intensity of sorrow imitated by the deceptive counterfeit. How ingeniously had the execution of an unsuspected artifice effected its result, the child was not lost but stolen. Oneidia and her husband had lain in ambush for several days and they had obtained their object. The old squaw had allured her by some attractive bait, to the edge of the woods, and having given her a few drops of the "sasog" she placed her in the canoe that Togo her husband had in readiness, and Maggie Lee, the blue eyed child of the forest was borne down the winding river of Chateauguay.

LIVED WITH THE INDIANS

Our little heroine became an inmate of a miserable dwelling in the Indian village of Caughnawaga. Oneidia having no children of her own, was very attentive to her adopted child. As time passed Maggie Lee became reconciled to her Indian home, yet never forgetting the remembrance of a mother, mixed up with a vague reminiscence of a mysterious past. Many of the Indians had previously seen her, and although all were familiar with the circumstance, so faithful were they to each other, that the fact would ever remain a mystery with them. Oneidia and her husband never forgot to pay an occasional visit to Oakville, neither did they forget to carry a rich present to the parents of their child, which seemed as if they were desirous to repay the living property they had stolen. Oriena, for so she was called, became more assimilated to the aboriginal models, had still the feature of the Anglo-Saxon. Whenever she accompanied Togo or Oneidia to Syrocogo (Huntingdon) or Technedra (Covey Hill), they were very careful to avoid entering Oakville (Ormstown), lest some detective eye should trace the features of her former face. She was uncommonly expert at all sorts of bead and wickerwork at which she labored diligently during summer. Having frequently visited the city, she became active in trading. She was apparantly handsome, and when equipped in full hunting costume, was in reality a squaw of the first magnitude, obtaining the unassuming title of "Flower of the Iroquois". Sagonaska, the chief's eldest son, fell deeply in love with her, and paid his addresses in the most affectionate terms. He had given her many splendid gifts, and expected ere long to enjoy her as his own. But Togo having died, and shortly afterwards Oneidia, their anticipated union was postponed for several months.

WAR OF 1812 STARTS

The hunting season having arrived, Oriena in company with Sagonaska and a large body of Indians and their families departed for the hunting grounds of the Technedra. The bugle has sounded the tidings of war,

The flag of the Union is waving on high,
The voice of the Yankees is heard from afar,
Arouse ye Canadians, to conquer or die.

During this military adventure the Canadians had not been idle. They had formed themselves into a body of militia under command of Captain Lee and Johnson, and took up their headquarters at Oakville, lest a part of the invading army should effect a passage by the Chateauguay. They were shortly afterwards reinforced by two companies of the Voltigeurs commanded by Col. De Salaberry.

Whilst Capt. Purdy and his company were prosecuting their laborious journey through the woods they lighted upon the wigwams of Sagonaska and his company, whilst Oriena and a half-dozen squaws were busily preparing some venison for the hunters on their return. So vast a number of rude warriors, particularly in such a remote place impressed the inmates with terror. Every papoos was out of sight in a twinkling amongst the furs, whilst the old squaws were gambling like a flock of geese on a rainy day.

Oriena could speak pretty good English and addressed them with a rustic air of politeness. The officers very ingeniously tried to gain information respecting their route, and the martial appearance of the country, but Oriena having discovered them to be Yankees, answered them very adroitly. She assured them of having mistaken the proper route, and further that the locality upon which they were entering, was swarming with their enemies, and perfectly impregnable.

ORIENA FOOLS YANKEES

Such intelligence was sufficient to have chilled the ardor of a Hannibal or a Napoleon. Having refreshed themselves, they started in the direction pointed out by Oriena, which if continued in, would led them to the border of their own country. As soon as the Americans had disappeared, Oriena darted through the woods to Oakville, and gave intelligence of the enemy. The 26th of October 1813 dawned upon the world, and with it came the memorable event, viz: the Battle of Chateauguay.

In proportion to the amount of ammunition exhausted at the battle the victims were comparatively few, but the surrounding trees appeared as if having been perforated by an army of wood-peckers.

Rude huts had been immediately constructed, into which the wounded of both armies were placed, and their wounds attended to by the squaws, particularly by Oriena, under whose skillful treatment the majority speedily recovered. She had studied physics in the school of nature, and was enabled to put into practice the medical lessons that Oneidia had given her. One of the number wounded was Capt. Lee and often in his heart did he offer a prayer of gratitude, to his God who had sent so good an angel to minister to the afflicted. She was indeed the good Samaritan of the camp, and for her deeds of heroism and humanity she received the gratitude and applause of all around her. Sagonaska was more proud than ever of his "heroic angel" as he called her and sang the "Sashega" in her praise. During her stay in this temporary hospital she formed an attachment to a young American who had been wounded in the battle, and his gratitude for her kindness gradually ripened into an affection for her. She had also become much attached to the Lee family, particularly Mrs. Lee, who had chiefly remained there, in attendance upon her husband.

HER IDENTITY DISCOVERED

One day whilst Oriena was in the art of dressing the Captain's wound, the child which Mrs. Lee was holding in her arms in playful action, seized the chain suspended from Oriena's neck, and drew from beneath the coverlet of her bosom, the medal that was attached to it. One glance from the eye of Mrs. Lee was sufficient to recognize the stamp, and the familiar name engraven thereon, and a sad remembrance of the past flashed across her mind. It is mine she exclaimed "It is mine, the very one that was upon my child when she was lost. Mr. Lee confirmed the chain and medal to be the identical ones. Oriena as much astonished as the others, endeavored to explain, by telling she had received it from an old squaw with whom she had lived: since her childhood. "And pray what is her name," hastily enquired Mrs. Lee. Oneidia replied Oriena, but she is dead now. "What relation then were you to her interrupted the woman. Not any, I believe answered the girl. Here she tried to relate all she knew of the apparently mysterious events of her early life, and concluded by asserting that she believed from what she had gleaned from the secret whisperings of the squaws, that she was stolen from a white family, but from whom, or where she knew not. Oh! merciful heavens: then you must be my daughter exclaimed the agitated mother.

Allow me for a moment to examine your left arm, and if the indelible mark of my lost child be thereon, it is sufficient of itself to prove that you are my daughter. How changed were the feelings and sympathies of our heroine, when from the mysterious discovery, her living parents had sprung into being. Feelings of hatred to the Indians took possession of her heart. The time had now arrived, that Sagonaska had purposed returning home, to prepare for the happy union and flattered his expectations with the hope that Oriena would be waiting in readiness at the encampment to accompany him on his journey. But ah! how soon, how unexpected were the cherished imaginings of his love disthroned in the temple of his heart, by the cold repulse he received.

SAGONASKA'S LOVE SPURNED

All his affectionate entreaties to regain her heart, were lavished in vain, and poor broken-hearted Sagonaska returned to his cottage, to weep in solitude over the cherished image of his heart.

In a few days Capt. Lee had so far recovered as to be able to return to his former residence at Oakville, and Maggie Lee was again the inmate of her infant home, from which she had been absent for seventeen and a half years.

Sylvester Hamilton the young American of whom we have spoken, having remained several weeks with them, departed to his home promising to revisit Oakville.

Early the following spring Mr. Lee disposed of his property, as he considered himself and family insecure from the Indians, particularly Sagonaska, who he had been informed intended to carry off his daughter by force or take revenge if frustrated.

Sylvester having returned, accompanied them in their journey, to the district of Niagara, and became a settler with them in that locality. A few weeks afterwards Maggie Lee became the wife of Sylvester Hamilton. Of her subsequent history, I know but little. One thing in particular of which I have been informed, is that her name was enrolled in the list of surviving veterans of 1812 who presented their address to the Prince of Wales (the late King Edward VII) on his royal visit to the Western world.

The Jersey cow, Springdale Victor's Priscilla, bred and owned by R. J. Blair, Ormstown, Que., has recently completed two records in the Record of Performance test.

At seven years' of age, in 305 days, she produced 7,296 lbs. of milk, 402 lbs. of butterfat, with an average test of 5.51%, and in 365 days she made a record of 8,049 lbs. of milk, 438 lbs. of fat, testing 5.44%.

Priscilla is a daughter of Springdale Fairy Victor, that has two tested daughters.

TRIES TO PLAY FAIR

Sentenced to prison in Danville, Va., for three years for forgery caused time to hang heavy on the hands of Jake Toler, a negro. On a recent morning, his cell was found empty. On his bunk was a note explaining he had received word his sister was ill. The note stated he would be willing to come back to jail after he had been at home two weeks to visit his sister and gave officers directions for finding him in a certain house in Welch, W. Va., two weeks from that date.

"Do you think you can make a good portrait of my wife?"

"My friend, I can make it so life-like that you'll jump every time you see it."
