A NETWORK THAT COOPERATES, ENRICHES AND SHARES

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE SOCODEVI 2007-2008 ACTIVITY REPORT

The commitment of SOCODEVI member institutions and the outreach of the cooperative and mutual approach are an effective combination for improving the living conditions of communities in developing countries. The essence of SOCODEVI has remained unchanged since its foundation in 1985. Extremely positive, the 2007-2008 activity report is marked by the strength of our network of members at work in our activities around the world. Here are the highlights of our most recent activity report presented during the SOCODEVI Annual General Meeting:

A record contribution!

In 2007-2008, the commitment of our members was quite simply remarkable with 1,200 days of volunteer work invested by our member institutions in our projects and activities. This is a new record for SOCODEVI!

Growing membership, more varied expertise

During the year, SOCODEVI welcomed three new members to its network: the CQCH (Confédération québécoise des coopératives d'habitation), the CQCM (Conseil québécois de la coopération et de la mutualité) and the Italian organization Conzorcio Etimos. The CQCM and Conzorcio Etimos are joining us as auxiliary members.

Direct cooperation with the cooperative and mutualist movement in the South

SOCODEVI's PPCM cooperative and mutualist partnership program provided organizational and technical support for the creation and startup of the Confédération des sociétés coopératives et mutualistes (CSCM) in Senegal. In Honduras, the PPCM consolidates the technical and organizational capacities of the country's various cooperative institutions including the Honduran confederation of cooperatives, the national council for women cooperative workers and the institute for cooperative training.

Consolidation of cooperative enterprises that create wealth

In Vietnam, the Evergrowth dairy cooperative has become the biggest in the country thanks to support from the project to improve the living conditions of rural communities headed by SOCODEVI. Our project in Vietnam reaches 16 communes in Soc Trang province and now directly benefits 5,000 families (25 indirect beneficiaries) who have seen their income increase significantly. In Bolivia, the project to diversify economic activities which includes an initiative to produce, process and commercialize spices now reaches 1,200 families.

Sharing expertise: an effective formula for sustainable economic development

This year in Paraguay, the dairy cooperatives we support have had excellent results. There has been a 25% increase in milk production among the 300 producers receiving technical assistance, technicians have been trained to increase the impact of the project and an effective quality control system has been set up in the six facilities targeted by SOCODEVI.

Thanks to results obtained in Paraguay, CIDA once more demonstrated its confidence in the cutting-edge expertise of the SOCODEVI network with a 7 million dollar project aimed at improving competitiveness of the dairy sector in Ukraine.

DID YOU KNOW THAT...

Since 1985, the network of SOCODEVI member institutions has donated the equivalent of 65 years of volunteer work to our activities in Canada and to projects in some thirty developing countries..

THE STRENGTHENING OF COOPERATIVE ENTREPRENEURSHIP: A DRIVING FORCE FOR THE LOCAL ECONOMY IN GUATEMALA

Support program for the Las Verapaces federation of cooperatives

In Guatemala, in the world's biggest cardamom producing region, the program to develop entrepreneurship of the Las Verapaces federation of cooperatives headed by SOCODEVI has enabled 2,400 families to take charge of marketing their cardamom. In today's global economy controlled by large multinationals, this is a major challenge.

The economic, administrative and financial consolidation of FEDECOVERA and its network of member organizations is the main goal of PRODEF (Program to Develop Entrepreneurship), active in Guatemala since 2002. The main objective of this initiative of the Canadian International Development Agency is the improvement of socio-economic conditions for families involved in this cooperative network.

A cooperative recipe for meeting a colossal challenge

In the current economic context, the positioning of small-scale producers in the international cardamom production chain may seem utopian. However, using modern business strategies and setting up a tracking system from producer to client, PRODEF sought to make FEDECOVERA a major player in the Guatemalan cardamom production chain.

Under PRODEF, the ingredients of the SOCODEVI-style recipe were based on the transfer of knowledge and know-how. This approach focused on improving the productivity and competitiveness of the family businesses while respecting the environment, real-time monitoring of markets and the integration of a modern marketing approach into the methods of FEDECOVERA and its member cooperatives.

Tangible action for sustainable creation of wealth

The strengthening of cooperative organizations and family businesses proved to be a vital lead for PRODEF. The self-sufficiency of the organizations supported was the leverage that was essential for the creation and distribution of local wealth.

To succeed, SOCODEVI counted on the right human resources, competent Canadian and Guatemalan leaders, and took a family business approach in the training programs. PRODEF also encouraged the participation of FEDECOVERA in the largest international food fairs and the development of niche markets by introducing certification systems.

The implementation of annual activity plans, the equitable and transparent redistribution of profits among the producers, the cooperatives and the federation after each harvest and, of course, the development of direct contact (no intermediaries) with foreign clients were also factors in the success of PRODEF. The support of the SOCODEVI network of member institutions for this was crucial.

Today, FEDECOVERA has developed an international clientele in niche markets and, most importantly, the families involved in the program have seen their income increase by 10% to 20% thanks to the added value obtained by controlling marketing. With PRODEF, the producers now have a modern and dynamic entrepreneurial approach and cooperative-type organizations that work for a better future for their families.
