temporary depression in the States has expended considerable funds for use in this manner, which have been absorbed for short loans at low rates, the probability of their early resort permitting of their diversion for the payments of trade.

THE DEFICIT.

The deficit announced in the revenue is an unfortunate condition of affairs in view of the exigencies and necessities of the country in which to enter upon the great public works contemplated for enlarging the canals and conducting some portion of the Pacific line. A and more wholesome feeling is, however, prevailing all branches of business, and say confidently anticipate that neither the effect of the deficit nor the fiscal legislation to be initiated to provide for it and the needs of the country in the coming year will be calculated to disturb or alarm our commercial or fiscal interests.

BISHOP TACHE ON THE AM-NESTY QUESTION.

To support his argument that the Governor-General's proclamation of 6th December, 1869, was referred to, and a copy of which was sent him on the 17th February, 1870, prior to his mission, had its full force issued by him on his arrival at River, Mr. Taché refers to an interview he had with His Excellency at Nic.

on 13th July, 1870. In this interview the Archbishop expressed the desire to have a new variation of amnesty, when the Governor-General, taking up his proclamation and showed it, said, "Here is my proclamation; it is the whole case." Monsieur Taché, however, insisting on something more explicit, review of the objections raised by some to the extension of the proclamation, His Excellency stated that the Archbishop should put his case in writing. The latter in compliance drew up a memorial, dated Hamilton, 22d July, 1870, addressed to the Governor-General. In

He protests against the accusations imputing him as being concerned in exciting Red River troubles, and protests before and men, that all his participation in them confined to the extreme pain they caused to his efforts to make peace and the desire to his native country indissolubly attached to Dominion. He regrets as much as any the deplorable events that have occurred, avers that no one outside the territory where these occurred can possibly have sufficient information to form an impartial judgment upon them.

Three men," he says, have lost their lives through these troubles. The first was, I should the victim of an accident, since he was led by Parisien, who had not the use of his own. Parisien, himself made prisoner, at first the so-called leader of the band, was killed, or, at least, so it is stated to the point of being left dead, and died in consequence of the horrible treatment he was made to undergo. No specks of the death of these two men; on the contrary some of those who most cruelly plotted to kill the last, pretend to display sympathy in his death, and to bring out the name of the third victim, the unfortunate Scott, who was acquainted with events as much less finished at the death of Scott than at the

Mr. Taché gives it as his opinion that if most guilty and rebellious ought to be punished, the chastisement might well be inflicted on those who have exalted themselves as champions of loyalty, duty and honor. As, however, he does not give the least hint as to who he means, it is impossible to tell what incriminatory statement is worth. As for him, he killed a man, and afterwards applied to have got killed himself, but does this justify the Scott murder? Mr. Taché goes on tion some compensating points in favor of the chiefs of the insurrectionary movement in the Red River. They never he says mean to draw from allegiance to the British Crown; never hauled down the British flag or the Fenian one; and they raised the tempting offers of the Fenians in men and money to join the latter. In conclusion he says on the notice of the Governor-General the success of his mission as peace-maker was powerfully due to the promise of amnesty by him in name of the Canadian and British authorities, and founded on the probability of its being granted. Without this he tion above referred to would not have succeeded. If amnesty is not granted Mr. Gault says he will be looked upon in some quarters as a deceiver of the people, while those who would not believe him capable of such a thing will easily believe that he had been deceived by the Government of Canada. He is so far as to say that he will have been deceived, for it would be impossible for him to have any other construction upon the withdrawal of amnesty after what was said to him at Ottawa. If it is sufficient for the great people of Toronto to hold in-at meetings in order to influence in Red River, Mgr. Taché has no hope in even elementary justice; but he appeals to the Tribunal of our most gracious god."

His comments following the memorial summarized, to which no answer seems to have been given, Archbishop Taché says:

"I will be permitted respectfully to object to St. John Young would, in the circumstances, have been waiting in strict amnesty had not been always in his debt, a thing promised and certain. His grace had confided to us a mission, we had him an account of it, affirming therein he had said ceci is none of his own etc. If this assertion on our part was correct, he had a right to know it, and it has been told to auto pat us in a plain and correct the error we had committed and give the people to whom we had not indicated the true meaning of him who trusted us to speak in his name. The General received our observations and acquiescing in that which we strongly urged his meaning; therefore we are bound to believe that we had interpreted fully."
