BROTHER LOST LIFE IN LAKE

College Teacher Drowned at Beauharnois Just After Eclipse

Coinciding with the termination of the eclipse, Brother Galipeau, a youthful teacher at the St. Clement de Beauharnois College, and member of the order of the Clercs de St. Viateur, lost his life by drowning in Lake St. Louis, Wednesday afternoon. Brother Galipeau was thirty years of age.

It was learned that Brother Galipeau accompanied by two confreres, also professors and members of the same order, had gone bathing in the lake. Brother Galipeau, who was unable to swim, was seen by his companions to fall into a hole of some eight feet of water. The two brothers rushed to his aid, and succeeded in bringing him to the surface and ashore within five minutes after the accident. Dr. Edouard Simon, of Beauharnois, assisted by Omer Bergevin, practised artificial respiration for over an hour, but their endeavors were futile, and the victim was pronounced dead.

Late Brother Galipeau was born at Weedon, Wolfe County, on Nov. 5, 1902. He entered the St. Viateur Seminary, at Joliette, on July 5, 1930, and took his first vows on July 24, 1931. He belonged to the St. Clement de Beauharnois College since July 24, 1931.

MAN DROWNED AT VALLEYFIELD

Victor May, 63, Determined in Attempt to Swim—Proved Fatal

Victor May, a 63-year-old bachelor, rooming at the Jodoin Hotel, Valleyfield, lost his life by drowning in the St. Lawrence River, at Grande Ile, shortly after noon Wednesday. His body was recovered an hour later and artificial respiration proved unavailing. It was removed to the morgue where an inquest was held the following day, by a jury under Dr. A. Besner, of Valleyfield, coroner of the district. A verdict of accidental death was returned.

May went to Grande Ile, near the Valleyfield-Coteau ferry, saying that he intended to dive in the St. Lawrence, and swim to Cabane Noire, a boating-house situated some four or five hundred feet further. He was prevented from doing this by residents, but went on foot along the shore to Cabane Noire. He conversed for a while with Joseph Legault, occupant of one of the cabins, and then went to a second boat-house, where he procured a boat and rowed away. At a spot situated approximately 200 or 300 feet fom the shore, May, who was said to be out of employment, sick and despondent, was seen by witnesses to plunge into the swift current of the river. Halifax Has Modern Ship Repair Facilities

Splendid Record of the Halifax Graving Dock Company Ltd. Now Operated by Halifax Shipyards, Ltd.—Has Modernized Plant on an Extensive Scale—S.S. "Prince David" Reconditioning Well Under Way

Forty-five years in the service of shipping is the record of the drydock at Halifax, Nova Scotia, now operated by the Halifax Shipyards, Ltd. At first glance, it would appear that this is not at all unusual, that it is not a record that calls for comment. But when one considers that in 1887—the year in which construction of this dock commenced—the steamship had not fully come into its own and that the sailing ship was putting up its last strenuous fight for ocean freights, one realizes that, after all, this drydock has a real record of service. Glancing casually at the files of the local newspapers of that year, we find that the waterfront directory on an ordinary day listed three full-rigged ships, two barques, one barquantine, seven brigantines, 120 schooners, and only two steamers. So steam was not by any means the factor then that it is to-day. The marine railway at Dartmouth (on the opposite side of Halifax harbor), then in existence, could accommodate ships as big as 3,000 tons, and many shipping men thought at the time that a drydock was not yet essential.

But there were men of vision in Halifax then, as now. As far back as 1875 a drydock was talked of for the port. Halifax was a naval station, the headquarters for the British North Atlantic Squadron, and the Admiralty wanted a drydock here. So did the city which, furthermore, stipulated that if any were built it must be "big enough to accommodate the largest warship afloat." A company known as the Halifax Graving Dock Company was formed in England with a capital of $1,000,000, and subsidies were promised as follows:

From the City of Halifax—$10,000 a year for 20 years.

From the Dominion Government—$10,000 a year for 20 years.

From the Imperial Government—$10,000 a year for 20 years.

The above subsidies are not in existence now. The English company made a contract for the building of the drydock with S. Pearson & Son, of Westminster, London, the famous engineering firm, who associated with themselves the late S. M. Brookfield, of Halifax, who became the dynamic force of the whole undertaking and who was the managing resident director of the Halifax Graving Dock until it was taken over 12 years ago by the Halifax Shipyards, Ltd.

The first sod for the construction of the drydock was turned in May, 1887, and on September 20, 1889, the Halifax Graving Dock was open for business. The first ship to enter was H.M.S. Canada, a composite steel, iron and wooden corvette of 2,770 tons. The dock, in accordance with the British Admiralty's requirements, was big enough to accommodate H.M.S. Inflexible, then the widest warship in the world. It is an interesting commentary on the drydock business in those days that Uncle Sam was compelled to send his big battleship Indiana to Halifax, as this was the only port on this side of the Atlantic with a drydock big enough to hold her. There was not much room to spare when the Indiana got in, but she managed it without any mishap.

By reason of the position of the port—its proximity to ocean steamship lines makes it a convenient port

Despite the oppressive heat on Thursday, the ladies of the Auxiliary met at the home of Mrs. Stewart McNicol and held their afternoon meeting, Mrs. James Arnold presiding. The members responded to the roll call with some very choice verses from the Bible containing the word "Peace." As Thanksgiving time will be near at hand when the Auxiliary meets again, it was thought in keeping to have "Thanksgiving" contained in the verse which will be given in response to the roll call. In connection with the Temperance part of program, each member stated something which was being done in our community for the advancement of the temperance cause. At next meeting each member will tell the number of young people they have endeavored to persuade to take up the National Temperance Study Course. The work hour was spent in sewing quilt blocks. Quebec's Minor Deficit

For ten years the Province of Quebec has repeatedly announced a surplus at the end of its fiscal year, and this year we hear of the reverse being the caseé The deficit is not a tremendous one, being but $584,728.97 and had the times been normal a surplus would certainly have been announced.

The gross revenues of the Province were reduced $4,689,600.20, therefore it would not have been amiss had the treasury reported a deficit of nigh $5,000,000., but in place the Government curtailed its expenditures in every possible manner so that the deficit registered only $584,-728.97.

The losses were incurred chiefly in the setback of sales of spirituous liquors which is a consummation devoutly to be approved of by the temperance people. Theoretically the Province is financially short, but the people of the Province who did not spend so much money in liquor are just that much better off; so perhaps we should not say our Province is financially in the red for the year just ended.

There was a falling off of $4,000,000 caused by the slackening off of building and the lesser stumpage dues collected from the lumbermen. The recent Imperial Conference provided for improvements to be made in the export lumber trade, so it is but reasonable to look for a recovery within a short time.

The revenue for estates has naturally reduced for the holdings of every man have been reduced in value, consequently the smaller taxes to be collected.

Taxes on foods, amusements and gasoline showed increases. All will endorse the idea increasing the revenue from amusements, and many will frown upon the taxation levied upon food and perhaps gasoline. Yet the government has to have money to operate, therefore we must content ourselves and pay the piper for the present at least or until other avenues of revenue produce greater amounts.

The criticism that has been directed against the Provincial Government on account of unpaid obligations was answered by the Premier who pointed out that many of the works were undertaken, even in the year of trying financial conditions which ran into large figures, but the understanding in many cases was that payment would only be made in the following year. Millions were spent on unemployment relief, consequently great care had to be exercised in administering the finances.

Premier Taschereau paid a high tribute to the Canadian Banks because of the manner they have increased their help to business, and to governments, and municipalities. He characterized them as Canada's best asset.

No Sense of Raising Prices

The expression used by John W. Dafoe, editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, that "There is no sense in raising prices and ending depression if in five or six years we are deep in the mire again," will be broadcast from coast to coast this week and will be commented upon by hundreds of papers. Mr. Dafoe is recognized as one of Canada's greatest newspaper men and an outstanding authority on almost any public question.

On Friday he was the guest speaker at the Canadian National Exhibition Press Day luncheon. Before hundreds of newspaper men he talked on this topic. Mr. Dafoe is a veteran editor and has witnessed seven depressions, and has noted each depression to be worse than its predecessor, and likewise the period of prosperity in between times. No panacea was offered other than he thought some method must be found to break this rhythm, otherwise he doubted if our capitalistic civilization can stand the strain.

Mr. Dafoe credited a good deal of Canada's present hard times to the fact that our population is now more metropolitan than rural. The man on the farm ekes out a living irrespective of the times, although he may not have luxuries as he sometimes wishes whilst the man working in the cities is destitute and is confronted with rents and no employment. Furthermore, there must be no war and no reckless interference with international trade if we are to avoid further depression. The moral wreckage of a depression is greater than that of a war, said Mr. Dafoe.

Here in the Chateauguay Valley we see few men begging from door to door or travelling as hoboes, yet in other parts of our country, especially in Western Canada scores of such men are to be found travelling on practically every freight train or congregating in cities. Our outstanding Canadian journalist believes we are "Passing the buck" in Canada and creating a great problem for generations to come in so fostering an army of wandering hoboes who may ultimately become criminals. The issuing of money as a panacea he believed was lunacy. It is quite evident Mr. Dafoe does not wholly agree with many solutions that are being exercised today and it will be interesting to note what cognizance is taken from his publicly expressed views.

A Tribute to R. J. R. Nelson

R. J. R. Nelson (Bob) is a son of Huntingdon and is looked upon in Halifax as "the man of the Halifax" and responsible for a great deal of the progress that has befallen the Maritime Provinces in recent years. Elsewhere in this issue will be found a lengthy article taken from the "Nautical Gazette." The article tells of the progress and development that has taken place in the Halifax Ship Yards of which Bob Nelson is the General Manager. True to form, it is quite evident the writer of this article got a good deal of his information from Bob Nelson, who refrained from accepting or having any credit for the development credited to himself. From other sources we have gathered that a great deal of this industrial development first developed and was visioned in the mind of our Bob. His vision showed that Canada needed this development, and as a result of his initiative we find him figuring in practically every progressive and aggressive movement in the Maritimes.

The Gleaner is certainly proud of hearing of this son of Huntingdon doing what he has done to date, and we know that he will continue giving a good account of himself, and that what prosperity and development takes place in the commerce of the Maritime province of Nova Scotia, the name Nelson will figure prominently. Nelson proved himself worthy of promotion when first employed by the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co. in Montreal. He was a successful administrator of the finances for the Halifax Relief Fund, after the explosion and disaster of 1917. He was then introduced into the Halifax Ship Yards business because of his success in administering the Relief Finances. He proved his ability to secure good men about him and how to get their worth. Canada needs more such Nelsons, and in the life of Nova Scotia the name Bob Nelson will stand out as prominently as any of its notable statesmen or founders.

A New World

Mr. H. G. Wells says "It is not that man may plan and make a new world for himself; he has to do so or be overwhelmed by his own undisciplined devices and impulses." In those words we find the motive for intelligent thought all over the world groping for light in our social darkness. All kinds of remedies have been suggested but we know "the new world" will be, and should be, of slow growth in our western civilizations. Russia has kept at an ideal. Her impetuosity has caused an untold suffering and is an example to us. It is generally believed that western states will progress to their ideal more slowly and surely.

The belief of the Victorian socialist, that the rich want to keep the poor, poor, does not hold good to-day. Bankers, industrialists, and statesmen were never so anxious for more equal distribution of wealth. The machine age has made it necessary. But how is it to be done? How can our system be revised so that all can be employed and the worker share in the profits. Equal pay for all is not desirable. After immediate personal needs are satisfied the inequalities of men's needs are apparent. The use of intelligence, initiative and creative power varies because the mental equipment of men varies.

Mechanical invention has changed a world of want to a world of plenty. Society finds itself in a dilemma. How can it distribute the abundance it has created? Unemployment continues. In our state is a large number of non-productive people. We feed them, but their purchasing power is nil. Two hundred years ago they would have died. Famine and pestilence would have raged among them. To-day they live. We congratulate ourselves, openly boasting of our generosity, and victory over nature. The job is barely half done. Before us lies a tremendous work. Capital does not need to be forced to distribute profits. It is willing to do so, as soon as leadership and social planning create new financial machinery to distribute wealth.

Fewer Fan Letters

Just before the new postage rates went into effect the post office at Hollywood, Calif., was handling an average of about 885,000 movie fan letters monthly. And this was only 20 per cent of the number received before the depression broke in 1929. Three-cent postage is expected to cut this mail still more. The letters are delivered at the studios where the stars are employed. There clerks separate and tie them into bundles each bearing the name of the star addressed. Actors receive about 40 per cent of these fan letters and actresses 60 per cent. Tom Mix gets more than any other man. Few of the letters actually are read by the movie people but are taken care of and answered by special secretaries. Nearly all stars have discontinued sending pictures free to their admirers. This expense cost Mary Pickford $80,000 in one year.

Informal Battle of Plums

The two fruit dealers shook hands ruefully. "And that," they said, "takes whatever the prize may be." And this is how it all began. The Lindsay, Ont. fruit dealers were staging an informal battle of plums. Both started selling six-quart baskets at 17 cents. One cut the price, and the other undercut him. This kept up till one man was selling them at nine cents. He had one basket left, when he tackled the feminine bargain-hunter. "The basket alone," he said, "is worth six cents." "Really, she said. "I'll take it." She walked over to her automobile, dumped the plums on and about the back seat. "You said this was worth six cents," she said, handing over the empty basket. "Give me the money and take the basket." And with six quarts of plums for three cents, she drove away, leaving two flabbergasted fruit sellers to talk it over.

Pronunciation of "Newfoundland"

Newfoundland wants to be called "His Majesty's Oldest Colony—and Newest Dominion," Hon. F. C. Alderdice, Prime Minister, told a luncheon audience at Ottawa. He was amiably correcting the description of the colony given by the chairman, who styled Newfoundland as the "oldest Dominion." And the Prime Minister of Ancient Colony put the accent on the 'New' and the 'land,' slurring the 'found.'

Santa's Helpers Went on Strike

Thirty-five hundred of Santa Claus' helpers were called upon to stop their doll and toy making. Strangely enough the scene of their now idle workshops is not in the story-book—Location—the frigid clime in the region of the North Pole—but in the dense-populated and now torrid area of Greater New York. The workers, members of the doll workers industrial union, responded to a strike order in an effort to enforce demands of the union for higher wages and better working conditions.

Baby Given New Features

Although his parents are impoverished, Roy Aurentz, 28 months old, of San Francisco, will not meet life with the deformed features with which he was born, nor with the distortion of speech to which he appeared doomed. The child of an American father and a Tahitian mother, Roy was brought here four months ago from Papeete through a fund to which Douglas Fairbanks, while visiting the island, contributed the first $100. A grotesquely divided upper lip and jaw and a cleft palate have been so cleverly mended at the children's hospital here that Roy is now a beautiful child. He is waiting at the hospital under the care of Miss Edna J. Shirpser, director of social service, to return to Tahiti. The mother sent Dr. Albert D. Davis, the attending surgeon, a bright yellow hula shirt in appreciation. She attributed the baby's deformity to prenatal influence. Shortly before Roy's birth, she said, she was spearing fish in a pool when a conger eel, about six feet long, attacked her. Frightened, she ran home and was ill for some time.

Prank Caused Death

James Houston, drowned in Burlington Beach canal July 31, was the victim of a cruel prank, according to evidence before a coroner's jury at Hamilton, Ont. Houston, only a fair swimmer, was thrown into deep water by a youth who wanted to give him a "ducking." Informed that efforts to identify the guilty party had failed, the jury returned a verdict that Houston had been "unlawfully killed by an unknown youth." The practice of pushing people into the water as a joke is not uncommon at the beach,

Speechless Child Found

A man and woman, who a probate judge said should be "publicly horsewhipped," were summoned to appear in court at Gallipolis, Ohio, to explain the pitiful condition of a three-year-old boy, found speechless, half-starved, and naked, in a dark, dingy room of their house. The boy, Loren Hochter, was taken from the couple. Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Hochter, of Addison, and was placed under treatment in the Galli County children's home. Loren, described by officials as not having had a bath for over a year, had wasted away to the weight of a year-old. With proper nourishment and care it was considered likely he would live and probably recover his speech. The boy, Mrs. Hochter said, was the illegitimate child of her husband and was placed in the upstairs room "to keep him out of trouble." He was discovered there in an old wooden bed after other children in the house told neighbors they had "a new baby" at their home.

Owns Ancient Violin

It pays to read the newspapers. Fred Lavergne of Ottawa read a despatch in a paper carried by the Canadian Press from Desio, Italy. It said a man had purchased a violin for 25 cents, later discovering it to be a "Stradivarius," worth $50,000. Fred owned an ancient violin. He immediately made a close examination and was amazed to find the instrument bore the inscription "Antonius Stradivarius-Cremenensis Facebat-Anno 17."

Builds "Modernistic" Tombstone

Carlo Formenti, 75, of Iron Mountain, Michigan, believes in doing a thing yourself if you want it done properly. So he built a tombstone for his grave. From bits of highly colored crockery, colored glass and gay stones. In the center of the top Formenti has placed an alarm clock. He has instructed his children to set the clock at the exact hour and minute of his death.

Prison to Congress

The death of ex-Congressman Caleb Powers, of Kentucky, was reported in brief newspaper despatches the other day. Thirty years ago any news about Caleb Powers was "played up" with glaring headlines. Powers, a Republican, from Kentucky's mountains, was elected secretary of state in 1899, the same year William S. Taylor, Republican, was elected governor. William Goebel, Democratic candidate for governor, filed a contest against Taylor. The Democratic legislature declared Goebel elected. Soon afterward a shot from the office window of the secretary of state killed Goebel walking through the state house grounds. Powers was sentenced to prison for life on circumstantial evidence for the murder of Goebel. He appealed, was found guilty again, and repeated this until four trials were held, when he began his life sentence. Newspapers called it the "American Dreyfus" case. In 1908 Powers was pardoned and to vindicate himself ran for congress. He was elected, and re-elected in 1910.

In an Effort to Save Polly

An attempt to save her pet parrot from death in a blazing automobile cost Mrs. Jessie Tatum, bride of two months, her life. Returning to Oxford, Miss., with her husband, a Lafayette county farmer, from her former home in St. Louis, the automobile burst into flames. The couple leaped to safety but Mrs. Tatum, the husband said, turned back to rescue the parrot and was fatally burned.

Biblical Miracle Discovered

Church archaeologists believe they have found at Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee, the spot where Jesus multiplied five loaves and two fishes to feed a multitude. According to tradition, a church was built at the scene of the miracle, and church ruins have been uncovered by a German priest, Father Evarist Mader, director of the German Oriental institute at Jerusalem. In an article to be published in the Illustrazione Vaticana, a Jesuit, Father Chrysologus Spellucci, announces that the discovery corresponds to all known religious history. Ruins of a basilica were found by Father Mader under seven feet of clay. A large area of fine vividly colored mosaics was well preserved, and six illustrations will be published. The ruins show the basilica, which has three names, was 170 feet long, with a 66-foot transept. Under the altar is a stone supposed to mark the spot of the miracle.

Shop-Window Model Alive

A model in a Chicago dress shop window was so much dressed up that policeman William Fuller was puzzled. What puzzled him more than anything else was the fact that the model held a bag in one hand. "Come out," he commanded, drawing a pistol. Out stepped James Kane, 26, a negro. In the bag, said the officer, there were six dresses and they didn't belong to Kane. He was arrested.

New Word Fangles

In the New York office of Dr. Frank H. Vizetelly, noted lexicographer, are stacks of drawers filled with white cards. Each card bears a word. There are 75,000 of them, waiting admission to the ranks of good usage. Some have been waiting nearly 40 years. As each succeeding new dictionary appears new words are included that have come into sufficiently general use. Dr. Zizetelly's newest dictionary will define "pineapple" no longer as merely a fruit but also as a "bomb" derived from underworld slang. Also one definition of "racket" is "occupation by which money is made by legal means or otherwise." Then there is racketeer—"one who is engaged in bootlegging, beer running or other illegal occupations." Many slang words are included in every new volume and become respectable just because they have come into common use. But the real language of the underworld rarely gets in because it changes too frequently. As soon as the underworld discovers one of its expressions is used outside its ranks and its meaning understood, it is dropped. Later such an expression may find its way into the dictionary, but that is after its use has been discontinued by the criminal element.

Ordered to Eat Pets

Because he spent more money on them than on his wife, and was more affectionate toward them, Nicholas Gimpel was ordered by Judge Dan G. Trude, at Chicago, to sit down and make a meal of his two pet hens and a pair of pet pigeons. The order left Gimpel in tears, for two reasons. First, he has grown attached to them through long years. Second, they've been around so long that he'll probably lose a few teeth at his assignment. Gimpel's wife, Theresa, lives in the same house with him, but has a divorce bill pending, charging cruelty. The order to eat the fowl was entered to clear the way so that Gimpel can be counted upon for support. "Now," added the judge, "you alternate living in the house to avoid trouble. One of you stay there for two months, then move out for the other. Mr. Gimpel, you pay for your wife's room while she's living away." "Judge," said Gimple, "when I eat my chicks the coop will be empty. Can I sleep in it while my wife's got the house?" The judge stated that would be satisfactory, and Gimple thanked him, saying that the familiar scenes about the henhouse would, in some measure, compensate for his impending bereavement.

32 Miles on Stretcher

Borne on a rough wooden stretcher on the shoulders of police and friends over a rough, rain-sodden, 32-mile trail, Charles Ross, 24, stricken with appendicitis, was brought to a waiting motor car on the Cottonwood House highway and rushed to hospital. The youthful Calgary prospector was stricken in the heavy bush-lands and it took 17 hours of hard travel through a pouring rain to carry him to Cottonwood House, 21 miles east of Quesnel, B. C. Ross told friends the pain had abated considerably despite the rough going through the bushy rocklands.

But it Proved True

The Aniores—Joseph, his wife and their six children—were enjoying their first vacation for eight years at Long Branch, N. J., when Aniore met a friend from home. "I hear your house burned down today," the friend said. It sounded like stupid humor to Aniore, but he telephoned home to make sure. The house had indeed burned. Aniore said he had worked all his life to make this home for his family.

Has Scientists Puzzled

So far as man's memory extends, Ireland has been without snakes. Whether or not St. Patrick is the reason for the Emerald isle's immunity, England, Scotland and Wales, but a few miles across the water, have always had at least a fair sized population of these reptiles. The nearest approach to a snake in Ireland is a legless lizard called the lag worm which isn't formidable even in appearance. During recent years there have been many attempts to introduce harmless snakes as an aid to farmers, but the introductions have not been successful. Zoologists are unable to account for the phenomenon.

In Cold Blood

He choked her—

She was dead—there could be no doubt about that.

He had listened to her dying gasp.

Now she was cold—cold as the hand of death.

Yet in his anger he was not convinced. Furiously he kicked her.

To his amazement she gasped, sputtered and began to hum softly.

"Just a little patience is all it takes John," remarked his wife from the rear seat.

. . . FOR THE SAME BABY

This is what Mrs. Albert Bolton, of Toronto, writes: "Our little girl, Margaret Jean, was nursed for the first few months, but this did not satisfy her. I had heard about Eagle Brand and decided to try it. She took to it right away and there has been no trouble since. Her flesh is firm; lovely, straight limbs, good bone development, and she is so contented. Last September she won third prize at the Canadian National Exhibition, against 102 entrants.

Halifax Modern Ship Repair Facilities

of refuge—the services of the Halifax drydock have always been in demand. Down through the years it has functioned quietly but efficiently. Many a steamer developing engine trouble at sea, buckling plates or starting rivets in a gale, finds that Halifax is the nearest port to which she can safely limp. When she crawls into harbor, surveyors often find that the ship cannot put to sea again until necessary and effective repairs have been made in the drydock, and the vessel once more certified as seaworthy. This is but one instance of many emergency cases that annually come to port. Collisions, strandings, ice damage and many other marine casualties bring vessels to this port, requiring the quick and efficient service of the drydock. All these, of course, apart from the regular routine overhaul for ships that operate out of this port.

Though old in years of service, the Halifax drydock has kept fully abreast of the times and is modern in equipment. The Great Explosion of 1917 had wrought havoc with the plant and its surroundings; the machine shop had been destroyed and remained in ruins, while the surrounding railway yards and piers were a mass of debris. The plant was taken over from the Halifax Graving Dock Company on June 24, 1918, by the Halifax Shipyards, Ltd., which firm undertook and carried out an elaborate program of improvements. The new company, as its name implies, planned to make the service of the plant more comprehensive. It acquired a considerable area of adjoining property with the object of constructing a large shipbuilding plant with facilities also for carrying out the most difficult and extensive marine repair work.

As part of its initial work, the new company undertook not only to built what is virtually a completely new plant, but also to reconstruct and improve the Canadian National Railways' property in the district which had been ruined by the explosion. This improvement consisted of excavating material to the extent of 300,000 cubic yards, 60 per cent of which was solid rock; the building of a retaining wall 2,600 feet long and 25 feet high to hold back the city street; the building of an overhead steel bridge with a span of 50 feet in the clear; the relocation of two miles of Canadian National Railways tracks, and the removal of a two-way double track steel girder bridge 106 feet long.

The company's property has a length along the harbor front of approximately 2,300 feet, containing 46 acres, five acres of which were reclaimed by filling in with the material excavated for the improvement of the C.N.R. Improvements on this property were on an extensive scale. Old Pier No. 7, wrecked by the explosion, was rebuilt for use as a temporary fitting-out berth, and has a length of 650 feet. A new pile wharf, 350 feet long, was built east of the drydock, and the plant's old wharf was rebuilt and extended. New and permanent buildings were constructed as follows: Machine shop, plate shop with molding loft above, power house, pump house, office and stores building.

The shipyards proper deserve a special paragraph. They consist of four building ways on pile foundation, 615 feet long by 60 feet wide, equipped with revolving derricks for placing plates in position on new ships. On these berths were built four splendid steamers, the Canadain Mariner and Canadian Explorer, each of 8,100 tons dearweight, and the Canadian Cruiser and Canadian Constructor, each of 10,500 tons deadweight, the two latter craft being the largest ocean-going freighters built in Canada.

In the year 1930 this yard constructed the icebreaker N.B. McLean to the order of the Department of Marine for service in Hudson Straits. The dimensions of this vessel are as follows:

Length, over all	277 feet
Breadth, molded,	60 feet
Depth molded to upper deck	31 feet
Displacements	5,034 tons
I.H.P.	6,500

The propelling machinery consists of two sets of triple-expansion, surface-condensing engines. The Wallsend-Howden system of oil burning was installed and she had a fuel-oil capacity of 1,300 tons, giving her a wide radius of action.

Drydock

To the layman visiting the company's plant the drydock itself is the most interesting feature of all the equipment. It was excavated out of the solid rock, and the sides have been rebuilt with Ashlar and concrete. Its extreme length is 567 feet, floor length 549 feet. An extra 22 feet can be added, if needed, by using caisson gate in outside position, the greatest width being 102 feet, with width at gate 89 feet, and depth 27 feet from keel blocks to high water. While there are now larger docks in this side of the Atlantic, it is a fact that this drydock has never yet been found too small to accommodate any ship requiring service at this port. It is well known that the largest British steamers, freight as well as passenger, arrange for drydocking, for overhaul and usual repair jobs at their home ports in the old country, where many drydock concerns are subsidiaries of the steamship lines. Conceivably, an emergency might arise when the drydock here would be too small, but there has been none such in 45 years.

Dock Gate

The drydock gate is of the ship caisson type. It was built in 1888 by Dunlop ,of Glasgow, and is 100 feet long and 30 feet high. A "sister ship" is still doing service at No. 1 Drydock, Glasgow. The gate has give compartments for buoyancy operation, and, virtually every part having been renewed, it functions as well to-day as when it was first set up and floated out to open the dock for the first ship to enter.

Pump House

Next in point of interest is the pump house, which is a brick building 40 feet by 24 feet with the pumps situated on a level with the deck bottom. When the Halifax Shipyards, Ltd., took over the plant the pumps were steam-driven, but a very efficient electric power plant having been constructed the pumping plant was electrified. The equipment consists of two Canadian Westinghouse motors of 250 h.p. each, driving two 32-inch centrifugal pumps. supplied by Watt, an English concern.

The discharge pipe is 6 feet by 4 feet and empties into the harbor. The dock holds 9,000,000 gallons of water, and the pumps discharge at the rate of 30,000 gallons a minute. On this basis it would take five hours to empty the dock, but with the displacement of the average ship it can be done in about three hours, as compared with 4½ hours in the days when the pumps were steam-driven. The pump house is also equipped with an auxiliary direct 12-inch suction pump operated by a 40 h.p. motor. This pump is used to keep the dock dry when a ship is there.

Power House

Probably the greatest investment in any individual part of the plant is represented in the power house. When the Shipyards first took over the plant, the Nova Scotia Tramways and Power Company was unable to apply its power needs, so the new firm proceeded to establish its own system. A fire-proof, steel and brick building, 140 feet long, 100 feet wide, two stories high, was constructed. Three 1,000-kw. Allis-Chalmers turbines were installed, connected with 962 amperes, 600-volt, three-phase generators. There are five B. & W. boilers, ranging in horse-power from 360 to 600. The plant is capable of generating 4,000 h.p. For three years all the machinery of the Shipyards was operated by electricity furnished by the power house. Since the installation of hydro at Halifax, the company has been buying its power from the Nova Scotia Tramways, and now gets it direct from St. Margaret's Bay at a tension of 13,000 volts to 570 volts, using three 200 K V A Westinghouse transformers. Meanwhile, the power house is kept as a standby plant, one of the boilers being used during the winter for heating purposes. A re-inforced concrete chimney 210 feet high and 10 feet in diameter on the inside at the top eliminates the necessity of mechanical apparatus for forced draft.

The machine shop, erected parallel with the drydock, is a fire-proof, re-inforced concrete building, 280 feet long, 100 feet wide. Its major equipment consists of a 15-ton electric traveling overhead crane; lathes of all sizes up to a 72-inch lathe, 30 feet long with blocks to go up to 120 inches, and a 6-foot planer; also Boring mills, slotters, milling machines, drill presses, etc. This shop with its auxiliaries is equipped to undertake anything in connection with the construction and repair of a steamer, except the actual building of the main engines.

This is a two-story fire-proof steel and brick building 600 feet long, 75 feet wide, 60 feet high, with two electric traveling overhead cranes, capacity 5 tons each. The ground floor contains all the machinery for fabricating steel plates for the erection or repair of ships, among which may be mentioned the Plate rolls, 36 feet long, capable of handling plates 1¼ inches thick; also a mangle roll for plates up to 1¼ inches thick, punching and shearing machines, hydraulic flanging machine, joggling machine, a cold press for bending beams up to 15 inches wide, beveling machine for frames of all sizes. There is also an oil-burning plate furnace 35 feet long, an oil-burning angle furnace 75 feet long with bending slabs and jib cranes to handle heavy forgings. Above this is located the molding loft. In the yard are powerful air compressors which distribute air for tools, etc., through pipe lines at various points on the building ways, shops and drydock. Then there is the pipe shop, equipped to do any pipe work in connection with ships, and the joiner's shop, which does not limit itself to ordinary carpenter work, but is equipped to turn out all kinds of woodwork for ships' furnishings, such as sideboards, settees, wardrobes, tables and other cabinet making.

The offices and stores are in a fire-proof re-inforced concrete and brick building 285 feet long by 50 feet wide, 60 feet of which is four stories high and the remainder three stories; 225 feet of the ground floor and 75 feet of first floor are devoted to stores and compressor plant, the remainder of building is used for offices. Fire protection is supplied by an 8-inch sprinkler system installed throughout all the buildings with a sufficient nmber of hydrants and hose to protect outside work. A 1,000-gallon-a-minute fire underwriter's pump is installed in the power house with direct connections to the 8-inch sprinkler system and to a 40,000-gallon steel tank, which is surmounted on the 75-foot steel tower. Two direct 6-inch water mains connected with the Halifax Municipal Water system supply the plant and sprinkler systems.

The main freight line of railway runs alongside the premises of Halifax Shipyards, and the company has its own locomotives which can haul cars with materials directly from these main lines at the freight yard Richmond, and distribute them at various convenient points on the branch lines which run through the Shipyards and on both sides of the drydock. In addition, there are four locomotive cranes (one of 20-tons capacity), two of which are used in the yard and two at the drydock.

The Halifax Shipyards, Ltd., has increased its facilities and service from year to year in order to meet the demand of shipowners. It has recently added to its shop equipment a nationally known balancing machine, which balances turbine rotors, both statically and dynamically. Its shop is now equipped to perform any turbine work, and has completed several jobs this year.

The Halifax Shipyards also maintain and operate a plant at Dartmouth on the opposite side of the harbor which consists of a marine railway, with four tracks and six cradles capable of handling vessels from 150 to 2,500 tons gross. This plant has its own machine shop, carpenter shop, with up-to-date sawmill and small boiler shop, and is a self-contained unit for all repairs on the size of vessel accommodated. There is also a good wharf at which vessels can be berthed while under repair afloat.

All of which is a brief summary of the equipment that goes to make the plant of the Halifax Shipyards, Ltd., one of the best assets of Halifax, N.S.

The reconditioning of the Canadian National steamer Prince David by the Halifax Shipyards, Ltd., one of the largest conversion jobs of the year, is rapidly nearing completion. The vessel left the graving dock on August 6. The Prince David, which was stranded on a reef off the coast of Bermuda on March 13, was salvaged by the Merritt, Chapman & Scott Corporation and brought to Saint John, N.B., for a survey. The specifications call for reconditioning of the superstructure, refitting of cabins and replacing of certain parts of the machinery.—The Nautical Gazette.

ADVERTISING for the MERCHANT of TO-DAY

Conducted by HAROLD S. EDGAR

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of the Chateauguay Valley with the co-operation of the Huntingdon Gleaner.

Behind the Counter or Behind the Desk

Business on a friendly basis or on a "hard as nails" plan.

There are two ways for a man to conduct a retail business—either on a personal plan—in close touch with his customers—knowing them by name—or on the impersonal plan—sitting behind a desk—issuing orders—knowing his customers only as names on the books, or cash in the till. Successful businesses have been built up on each plan. The same principles govern whether the business be large or small. There concerns with only the proprietor and a couple of assistants, where the atmosphere is just as impersonal as a big Railroad Corporation. There are also big departmental stores, with a hugh staff, that carry the personal touch from the president through to the cash girl.

There should be no question in any one's mind, but that the personal friendly method, when tempered with a reasonable amount of judgment and caution, is the most profitable in the long run, and by far the most satisfactory in other ways.

To some men it is not easy to cultivate a friendly atmosphere—yet the man who cannot put the cares of his business off his shoulders, and wipe the cloud from his face, when he goes to meet his customers, handicaps his business every working day.

If the merchant had to go and ring door-bells, meeting his customers at their own door, he would very soon learn some of the methods of the successful out-door-salesmen in the way of approach and getting into the good graces of the prospect. Because the customer comes to him, he sometimes forgets that the first principle in selling—is to place the customer in a friendly frame-of-mind.

Many people have, as stated, made a success of an impersonal business, not, however, because of that impersonality but in spite of it.

Going into business, a man should take stock of his own personality—his strong points and his weak ones—and decide what type of a store he is going to conduct—whether it be a friendly store with warm heartedness and cordiality running through the whole organization—or a cold blooded business proposition—so much goods for so much money—36 inches to the yard—12 to the dozen—2000 lbs. to the ton and no more.

Do not attempt to run a friendly store, if it is only to be a veneer on the outside—the public will quickly see through sham friendliness. I shop at one store where if the total shows an odd cent, and the change in your hand does not show a copper—the odd cent is knocked off. At another store they will send next door to get change for a $5. bill in order to secure the single cent on the total.

One man builds up a credit of friendship, and people go out of their way to trade with him. The other gets only the trade that is forced his way.

I do not know any better example of friendliness than the gasoline stations that dot the roads and the street corners. Most motorists have a preference first for a brand of gas because of its advertising message in the newspapers—and have also favourite stations handling that gas—and time their needs to stop at the station with the friendly smile.

The friendly store must continue to be friendly, as you can bid goodbye to the customer who gets the icy mitt—when he expects a warm greeting.

Health Service

OF THE

Canadian Medical Association

Edited by

GRANT FLEMING, M.D. — ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

YOUR OUTLOOK

What is your outlook for a long, healthy life? When one considers how dependent human happiness is upon health, it would seem reasonable to expect an intelligent answer to this or other similar questions. Those who answer, with few exceptions, will have to admit that, while they hope to enjoy many healthy years, this hope is not based upon any knowledge which they have of the condition of their bodies.

Most people presume that their body does not require any attention as long as they do not suffer any pain and are able to go about and do their work. Freedom from physical discomfort, together with a capacity for work and play is good practical evidence of a healthy body. Howev. the apparently healthy body of today may not be just as sound as it appears to be.

Disease is generally insidious in its nature. It develops from slight changes which cause little or no disturbance of the body functions, and so there are no definite symptoms. If these early changes are detected, they may be corrected by proper treatment, and so the more serious conditions, which might grow out of them, would be prevented.

In order to keep the body healthy, it is necessary to have some check on it, as otherwise changes may go on which may not be felt until the condition becomes more or less serious.

Tuberculosis does not develop over night. In its very beginnings, while the disease is gaining its foothold, it does not cause any real upset. By the time sympstoms appear and health suffers, the disease is well established.

Life should not be lived in fear of disease. Life should be lived intelligently, which means—amongt other thing—coideration for future health through reasonable attention to the body at all times. A periodic health examination is the best means available to provide the necessary guidance to individual health.

Your outlook for years of health depends chiefly upon yourself. It is your outlook, not that of someone else. If you want to enjoy the happiness tha come wih health, hen give reasonable care o your body. Be informed as to the condition of your body by having health examinations

CANADIAN NATIONAL

They're Imported

"THEY'RE imported," said the glib tongued salesman; "just as good as anything made in this country and a whole lot lower in price. Canadian manufacturers can't make them at the prices you'll be able to retail them at. Your customers want price these days, and here's your chance to give it to them at a profit. Just fill your sales tables with values like these and you'll have the trade of this district flocking to you."

So the merchant bought heavily of cheap foreign merchandise.

"They're imported," said the merchant; "just as good as the kind you have been buying and at half the price. I'm here to save you money." Are they guaranteed?" asked the farmer cautiously. "Certainly," replied the merchant. "We stand back of everything we sell."

So the farmer bought an assortment of cheap imported tools.

"I'm sorry, men," said the manufacturer, "but we've got to put the plant on a three-day week. That cheap imported stuff is cutting down our sales. It hasn't the quality of our goods, but it looks all right, and the merchants are buying it. If it keeps up we may have to close the plant."

So the workmen went home with heavy hearts.

"We'll have to cut expenses, Mother," said the laborer, sadly. "The plant is only running three days a week, and I'm paid by the day." The wife wept softly. "We'll just have to do the best we can, John," she said. "We'll cut down on meat, cream, butter and eggs and go without new clothes. We'll have to give up our plans for the new home, and use our savings to keep the children in school."

So the workman and his family bought only bare necessities.

"You'll have to cancel that order of mine," said the factory worker to the merchant. "I can't build that new home. With the factory running on part time, it will take every cent I earn for living expenses. I guess I'll have to patch up the old place and make it do."

"You'll need tools," said the merchant eagerly, "and I can sell them to you cheap. These are imported; just as good as any and half price."

The workman's eyes blazed. "Imported, are they?" he snarled. "Well, you can keep 'em, and the rest of your goods, too. That's the kind of junk that stopped our plant from running. I'll never buy another nickel's worth from you or your kind."

And he walked out of the store.

"It's no use talking," said the farmer curtly; "I can't buy a new range this year, and I can't paint the house either. Eggs are down to ten cents a dozen; the price of cream is so low it doesn't pay the feed bills; and wheat took another drop this morning."

"And say," he went on, "here's that bunch of cheap tools you sold me last month; they're no good, and you guaranteed 'em. Imported, you said, didn't you? Well, you better import some one to buy 'em. No, I don't want to exchange them. I want my money back. I bought some good Canadian tools in Centerville last week." The farmer stalked out.

"How about another order of those imported items?" queried the glib tongued salesman. "I can sell them to you cheaper than Canadian manufacturers can make them."

The disillusioned merchant looked at him coldly. "I'll give you an order," he snapped. "Yes, I'll give you two orders: Get out and stay out. "Bill," he called to his helper. "Move this junk to the back room. Our customers don't want it at any price. They want jobs and a market for what they produce."

And he opened his ledger and make an entry in red ink.

CAN SURPLUS LETTUCE

With abundant rainfall producing luxuriant gardens all over, housewives are daily packing away dozens of jars of canned vegetables which will give variety to the menu during the winter months. The following method is recommended by experts:

Use Pressure Cooker

Pick over the leaves, discarding the imperfect ones. Wash carefully in several waters. Steam the leaves in a covered vessel until completely wilted. It may not be necessary to add extra water because considerable water will cling to the leaves after washing. Pack boiling hot into jars. Do not pack too solidly. See that there is sufficient liquid to cover. Add one teaspoon salt to each quart jar. Use a pressure cooker and process to 15 pounds of pressure for 65 minutes. Pint jars should be processed for 60 minutes.

To dance or flirt is very wrong. I don't. Wild youths chase women, wine and song. I don't. I kiss no girls, not even one. I don't know how the trick is done. You wouldn't think I'd have much fun. I don't.

Obituary

The Late Mrs. J. Wesley Goodfellow

Early Monday evening the people in Huntingdon were shocked to hear of the sudden death of Mrs. J. Wesley Goodfellow that occurred at her home that afternoon. During the early afternoon Mrs. Goodfellow was in town and talking to a number of people including her pastor, the Rev. J. H. Miller. Upon returning home Mrs. Goodfellow made herself comfortable by sitting in an easy chair on the lawn and was doing some knitting. Mr. Goodfellow was working nearby, and came over to where Mrs. Goodfellow was sitting, he chatted away for a few minutes. Mr. Goodfellow left to continue with his work, when all of a sudden Mrs. Goodfellow remarked to her daughter that she seemed unable to hold her knitting needles and suddenly dropped dead. Miss Goodfellow called to her father who had hardly reached the spot where he was working when he was called.

Mrs. Goodfellow has not been in robust health of late but was enjoying life, and her death has come as a great shock to her family and friends throughout the district. Mrs. Goodfellow previous to her marriage to Mr. Goodfellow was Elizabeth Helena McClenaghan, daughter of George McClenaghan and Margaret Helena Dunsmore, of Ormstown, and was born there in 1873.

Mrs. Goodfellow was identified as an active worker in the W.C.T.U., the Huntingdon United Church Women's Association, Women's Missionary Society and any other working organization within the church.

Those who survive and have the sympathy of the entire community are her husband, Mr. J. Wesley Goodfellow, four sons, Howard, of Sioux Lookout, Ont., Delbert, of Montreal, Charles and Ralph of Huntingdon and two daughters, Misses Bertha and Marjory Goodfellow, of Huntingdon. Mrs. Goodfellow is also survived by three sisters.

The funeral service was conducted this afternoon at the United Church by her pastor the Rev. J. H. Miller. The great array of floral tributes testified to the esteem in which Mrs. Goodfellow was held.

The Late Malcolm McNaughton

On Tuesday evening, August 30th, Mr. Malcolm McNaughton, of Dewittville, passed peacefully away to his eternal rest, after a short illness of about one week. Mr. McNaughton, although getting more feeble as time passed was able to be about until he took his bed from sheer weakness about a week ago.

The late Mr. McNaughton was born on the farm now owned by Mr. John Goodfellow about 85 years ago and was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander McNaughton. Mr. Alex. McNaughton later sold his property to Mr. Joseph Goodfellow and he with his family moved to Dewittville to the farm owned by Mr. DeWitt.

The farm and buildings have been greatly renovated during this time and the farm ranked as one of the prize farms in the county of Huntingdon.

Mr. McNaughton served as Councillor and also as Mayor of Godmanchester. He was one of the Directors of Huntingdon Agricultural Society for many years and he was often called upon to act as judge of farm stock by the various Agricultural Societies of the District.

Mr. McNaughton was an expert plowman in his day. He never failed to attend both County and Township plowing matches and was always a strong competitor and a high winner.

The greater part of his life was spent on his farm in Dewittville, until he sold it to Mr. Malcolm Ruddock a few years ago and retired to his new home.

He was a staunch Presbyterian and for many years was a trustee of St. Andrw's Church, Huntingdon.

The funeral service on Thursday was conducted by Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D., and was largely attended, testifying to the esteem and respect in which Mr. McNaughton has always been held in this community. Interment was made in the Protestant Cemetery, Huntingdon. Messrs. Harry Holiday, James McArthur, Allan Ritchie and William Ruddock acted as pall bearers.

Boating Club News:

The annual marathon paddle, held each year on Labor Day, definitely brought the padling season to a close on Monday afternoon, when 9 tandem canoes left the Chateauuay Boating club at three o'clock to start on the seven mile pull around the Nun's Island. Fortunately the weather was perfect, a bright, sunny day with a very slight breeze blowing and the river and Lake St. Louis as calm as a mill pool, thus making the long paddle much safer and more enjoyable to the spectators. At the very beginning L. Frickie and L. Greenough took the lead, using a long steady stroke which they kept up throughout the race. After 45 minutes had elapsed the first canoe was sighted from the club house, as it rounded the last bend of the island. The same tandem were in the lead. Then started a great deal of honking and cheering as the victors gradually neared the finishing point. Up the river past the bridge they paddled, at last sweeping across the line in 51 minutes—four or five boat lengths ahead of the second tandem. The fillowing are the results: 1, L. Frickie and L. Greenough; 2, M. Reany and C. McGlahhan.

The staff of the LaSalle Coke Co., of Montreal, about 35 in number, spent a most enjoyable evening on the Heights on Wednesday as guests of Miss Winnifred Maxwll at a corn boil and dance. Wednesday also was the celebration of Mr. Wm. Maxwell's 60th birthday. After the evening bowling games, Mrs. Maxwell served refreshments on the greens to all the bowlers in honour of her husband.

The Heights Tennis and Bowling Club held a card party and dance in the Boating Club hall on Friday evening when the trophies and prizes were presented to the fortunate winners for the year's play. An excellent crowd attended.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Cobb expect to be able to move into their new home on the corner of Mountain and Carlyle ave. sometime very soon before returning to their winter home in Montreal.

Tribal Expressions Not Alike for Both Sexes

The difference in the language used by men and women of the same tribe, discussed by Sir James George Frazer, English anthropologist, in his book, "Garnered Sheaves," calls to mind the varied words employed by the Incas of Peru to describe the same object or operation, says the New York Herald Tribune. Spinning, for instance, by a woman was called "buhca," but when a man engaged in this task it was called "buhco."

Before the Inca youths of royal blood were invested with arms, they were tested as to their ability to meet the exigencies of warfare, such as the making of shields, weapons or even sandals, of any material available. Thus they practiced the manufacture of woollen sandal cords by twisting wool with a small stick. This method of twisting was called "milluy," and as the work was for men, women did not use the word.

The minister was shaking hands with a new member of his congregation, a girl fresh from Sweden, and said, cordially: "I would like to know your address, so I can call on you."

"Oh," said the girl innocently, "I haf a man."

CARD OF THANKS

Solon's Wise Laws

Solon, the celebrated Greek reformer, before the Pelopennesian war, aided present day home owners, renters, and the real estate business. The privilege of willing one's holdings as one pleased, now taken for granted, originated with Solon. Before his time no one, not even the wealthy, could dispose of their property as they wished. Estates of all deceased persons went to their families. Plutarch says that the "Archon" esteemed friendship a tie stronger than necessity, and thus allowed every man to dispose of his estate but with some restrictions.

Equality With Other Powers

Berlin, Sept. 1.—A threat by Germany to withdraw from the League of Nations' Disarmament Conference unless her demands for equality with other powers in armaments are met accompanied unofficially today a Reich note to France on the subject. The contents of the note were not divulged, but the views of Gen. Kurt Von Schleicher, Minister of Defense, were generously quoted on all sides. The General is regarded as the mainspring of the Von Papen Government. The Minister's latest pronouncement appeared in the form of an interview published in the Italian newspaper, Resto Del Carlino, at Bologna. Asked what Germany would do if her claim to equality were rejected, the General told the newspaper: "The German Government will no longer participate in the world disarmament conference. It is evident what non-participation means to the existence of the League of Nations. The German Government will then be forced by breaches of promise on the part of the signers of the Versailles Treaty to take her national security problem in her own hands, should international solution prove impossible."

Young Student Wins Marathon

Toronto, Sept. 1.—Fully rested and glad "it's all over," George Blagden, the new king of swimdom, today rested on his laurels. In a gruelling fifteen-mile grind, Blagden yesterday defeated a field of 189 of the world's best natators to win the Canadian National Exhibition's open marathon. And the Memphis, Tenn., law student, who proved somewhat of a surprise, beat the greatest opponent of all, old Lake Ontario. In second place was Gianni Gambi, the "Italian windmill," who threshed his way into that position in a rousing finish. Blagden, Gambi and Isador Spondor, Port Colborne, Ont., who was third, broke the world's record for the time, with Blagden finishing in seven hours, 19 minutes, 52 3-5 seconds. The best previous time for the distance was established by Marvin Nelson, Fort Dodge, Ia., in 1930. On that occasion, Nelson won in seven hours, 43 minutes 36 2-5 seconds. Yesterday, he beat that time himself, but could not do better than finish fourth. George Young, of Toronto, favorite for the race, was nearly drowned when he crashed into a float shortly after the halfway mark had been reached. Young, a favorite to win the event, was in fifth position at the time. Only prompt aid from other swimmers and from nearby boats prevented a tragedy, for Young sank immediately after striking the float and was unconscious when taken from the water.

Beauharnois Power Transfer

Ottawa, September 2.—Another step in the St. Lawrence seaway project will be consummated shortly. Within the next few weeks, ownership of the 14-mile Beauharnois canal between Lake St. Francis and Lake St. Louis, close to Montreal, will be vested in the Dominion of Canada. The subject of discussion at several meetings of cabinet council for some time, the agreement is in final drafting stages, it is learned. Signing of the document on behalf of the Dominion of Canada and the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company will take place at an early date. Well advanced in the process of construction, the canal will have a depth of 27 feet. Throughout, this work and all its appurtenances will meet navigational requirements for the greater St. Lawrence scheme agreed upon in the recent Canada-United States waterways treaty which will be put before Congress and the Canadian Parliament for ratification this fall or early in January. Transfer of the canal to the Dominion will carry into effect part of the terms, conditions and reservations under which the Government has agreed to permit diversion of 53,072 cubic feet per second of water by the Beauharnois concern 20 miles from Montreal. The scheme of the company involves a 500,000 horsepower development.

When a man is sure that his friends never say unkind things about him he can be sure that all his friends are dead.

New World Mark Set

Cleveland Airport, September 3.—Major James H. Doolittle set a new world speed mark of 296.287 miles an hour over the three-kilometre course here today at the national air races. Doolittle's speed was more than 18 miles an hour faster than the previous world mark of 278.481, set in 1924 by Warrant Officer Donnet in France. The former army flier carried a barograph to make his record official. After breaking the record he continued flying the course and flashed past the pylons on the fifth lap at 306 miles an hour. The barograph and timers' official records must be calibrated by the Government Bureau of Standards at Washington, D.C., and then approved by the Federation Aeronautique Internationale, world governing body of competitive aviation events, before the record is made official. While the flier's feat shaded the existing record, he was still far short of the maximum air speed record the British ace, Lieut. G. H. Staniforth, having set a mark of 406.997 miles an hour in a speed plane in 1931 at Lee on Solent, England.

New President of Mexico

Mexico City, September 4.—General Abelardo L. Rodriguez, a powerful military figure for many years, was elected and inaugurated President of Mexico today shortly after Congress had accepted the resignation of Pascual Ortiz Rubio on account of "ill health." In the interval between the acceptance of his resignation and the installation of his successor, retiring President Ortiz Rubio left for the United States on a special train to spend several months at Hot Springs. A joint session of Congress elected General Rodriguez to fill out the unexpired term of his predecessor and a commission was dispatched to bring him to the chamber. Accompanied by most of the retiring cabinet ministers, he entered and took the oath of office while two squadrons of airplanes circled overhead.

Kaye Don Fails to Win Trophy

Detroit, September 5.—The seventh attempt of a challenger to lift the Harmsworth Trophy failed today—as have all others in the last decade—in the disabling of the challenging craft, Miss England III, piloted by Kaye Don. For Gar Wood, veteran defender of the historic bronze plaque, today's heat was merely a workout in Miss America X. After mechanical difficulties had brought Don to a complete stop before he could finish 13 miles of the 35-mile course, Wood coasted along to an uncontested victory. Before Wood had finished his fourth lap of the seven-mile semi-eclipse, Don accepted a tow to his boatwell and was automatically eliminated from further competition this year. Wood's big mahogany-hulled Miss America's average for the 35 nautical miles was only 69.036 statute miles per hour, slower than any other Harmsworth race has been run since 1928.

Take Away That Silver Spoon?

Aren't you trying to protect that young son of yours from the "hard knocks" you experienced as a boy?

Protecting him to the extent that he will be unprepared for any sort of hard work and discouraging situations is a poor policy.

You are directing his course in a way that totally unfits him for the sort of effort he must make to win success in any line.

Not having serious problems to meet as a young man, not having to apply himself closely to any task, he will be averse to doing so in after life.

He is going to seek the soft places.

Going the easiest way may eventually lead to dishonest methods when he comes to crisis, and then comes disgrace.

Your son has a good education, and you are willing to assist him in procuring a position, but that should be all that he can expect from you.

Endowed with good home training, he should be prepared to assume whatever burdens may come and make his own way.

Encouraging him to take easy jobs softens him mentally and physically.

Every boy needs some hardships to develop him.

If you had not had them would you have reached your present position?

Magic and Superstition

Even in this enlightened age there is hardly a corner of the earth where there is not lurking some evidences of the belief of the efficacy of certain charms to accomplish certain purposes. There is to be found the vestiges of magical practices persisting even in the commercial centers of our big cities. When hard-headed business men in the silk industry feel that they must discard a textile design based on peacock feathers because of the superstitions associated with this bird and when skyscrapers, the symbol par excellence of the Twentieth century, commonly omit the number 13 from their floors and room, it seems evident that even in this rational and materialistic day and age the deep-rooted belief in the potency of certain talismen to divert the forces of destiny still has a foothold.

Judge: "What? You are retracting your confession? But you told the court—"

Prisoner: "That's possible, but my lawyer has convinced me now of my innocence!"

Matrimonial

Robertson-McNeil

The marriage of Miss Hazel Jean McNeil, daughter of Mrs. Mary B. McNeil and the late William R. McNeil of Ormstown, to Mr. Harold George Robertson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Robertson, of Riverfield, took place on Saturday morning at 12 o'clock in the Ormstown Presbyterian Church. Quantities of pink asters and gladioli with palms and ferns were arranged at the chancel steps and the altar was adorned with the same flowers. The guest pews were designated with dainty sprays of sweet peas and bridal roses, tied with pink tulle. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Rev. Walter Ross. As the bride entered the church with her grandfather, Mr. John Whiteford, who afterwards gave her in marriage, Mrs. W. Ross, who presided at the organ, played the wedding march from Lohengrin and at the conclusion of the service she played Mendelssohns wedding march. During the signing of the registrar, Miss Helen Ross played a violin solo, "Told at Twilight" by Huerter.

A pleasing feature at the marriage ceremony was the presentation of a Bible to the bridal couple by Mr. Jno. Tinning, clerk of the Session, on the occasion o fthe first marriage solemnized in the beautiful new Presbyterian church.

The bride looked lovely in a tailored gown of Manilla brown triple sheer georgette, trimmed with ivory angel skin, a Lemoine model hat of brown felt, bown suede slippers and carrying a shower boquet of bronze Talisman roses.

Miss Willa B. McNeil attended her sister and wore a gown of garnet ripple crepe with touches of white, a felt hat in matching shade and carried an arm bouquet of cream colored tea roses. Little Olive Robertson, sister of the groom made a dainty little flower girl, in a yellow crepe frock and carrying basket of pom pom marigolds and ferns. Mr. Allan Hooker was best man and the ushers were Mr. Matthew McKell and Whiteford McKell.

The wedding reception was held following the ceremony at the home of the bride's grand-parents, where a variety of the season's blooms were used in decoration. Later Mr. and Mrs. Robertson left on a motor trip to Vermont, the bride's going away costume was an ensemble of brown worn under a top coat of brown diagonol weave tweed with muskrat trimmings. On their return they will reside at Riverfield, Que.

The out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Gilson, Miss Enid Gilson, Mrs. Black, grandmother of the groom of Montreal, Mr. and Mrs. David McNeil and two children, of Warren, Vt.

McCabe-Brunet

The marriage took place very quietly Thursday morning, Septmber 1st, at eight o'clock, in the Basilica, Montreal, His Grace Mgr. Deschamps officiating, of Lucienne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Remi Brunet, of Montreal, to Dr. C. Aberdeen E. McCabe, son of Dr. W. G. McCabe, and of the late Mrs. McCabe, of Valleyfield.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a Vionnet model of tete de negre nocturne velvet, with hat and slippers of the same color, and a silver fox fur, her corsage bouquet being composed of tea roses and lilies of the valley. Both bride and bridegroom were unattended. A small reception for relatives and intimate friends was held following the ceremony at the residence of the bride's parents. Later, Dr. and Mrs. McCabe left for Niagara Falls, Toronto, and the Thousand Islands, the bride travelling in a green tweed ensemble, with hat, shoes, and bag to match. Upon their return they will reside at Valleyfield.

Why Some Personal News Items are not Printed

Too many people think personal items constitute news for a weekly newspaper. The fact is that these items are the last thing to be considered. The Gleaner and the weekly newspapers of the Ontario-Quebec Division of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers' Association have advised all their correspondents not to report, when one neighbour calls upon another; for that is not news, but is pure gossip. We have also asked that they make no mention of visits of persons who live within a few miles of the place where they are visiting, unless the person be very aged and the occasion rare. The Gleaner is noted for its volume of news and its freeness of gossip. Will you assist your district correspondent by supplying them with real news items that will be of interest to all readers.

CHAPTER XII

Every time the telephone rang during the next few days Susan's heart raced like a wild thing. But as the days passed hope died.

"Surely he'll call me just once again to say goodby," she thought. Her moods veered from wild exhilaration to deepest gloom. At one moment she would be certain that she had been right about the kinship of feeling existing between herself and Bob Dunbar that day at the Blackstone. Again she would be as certain she had been completely wrong. The flushes and fevers and chills of first love possessed her. She moved like a person in a dream. Aunt Jessie's sharpest speeches fell on deaf ears these days.

"I declare I don't know what's got into you," her aunt would say, baffled. Susan scarcely heard her. She never went out on the street at lunch hour, never joined the home-going throngs without experiencing a sudden wild hope that she would see the face she sought or hear that deep, remembered voice. This was the thought that colored all her days. It made even the hot tiresome journey back and forth on stifling street cars endurable.

Today—it might be today, she would think! He would telephone and finish what he had started to tell her a week ago. But at last her dream died. That was the morning Susan read in a newspaper gossip column, the name fairly leaping at her from the printed page, that Bob Dunbar had sailed for Europe. She was so white and still that morning that even Pierson, the stolid bookkeeper, glanced at her with something like alarm.

"Guess you ate something that disagreed with you," he remarked.

Susan gave him a look in which envy and contempt were mingled. Fancy being so dull and so fortunate, she thought, as to believe life could be that simple. But the tiresome little man felt an honest sympathy for her, if she had only known it. He was shrewder than she thought and had more delicacy than she gave him credit for.

The long day wore on. "He's gone, he's gone," ticked the clock. "He did not even say goodby to you." Her heart was a lump of solid ice. She went to lunch in a still daze. The men and women in the sandwich shop were shapes in a dream and everywhere, everywhere, boys and girls seemed to walk in pairs. In all that busy mid-summer noonday only Susan Carey was alone.

It was two o'clock. After countless ages it was three. She typed steadily, thinking to dull by unceasing effort the pain that racked her head.

"Oh, I beg your pardon. Did you—did you speak to me before?" The woman standing outside the office gate was cool, poised, elegant. Her ash blond hair was folded back in wings under her smart black hat. Her expression was one of amused disdain.

"Only three or four times," the woman said, her tone suggesting that Susan was not only dull but inattentive.

"This typewriter is so noisy," the girl began to explain in confusion. Instantly she felt she had said the wrong thing. Her caller's expression of remote amusement deepened.

"It's of no consequence," she said crisply. "Mr. Heath's not in, then?"

Susan had risen. In her embarrassment she stammered as a child might. "N-no, he's not. Is there any message I can take?" For answer the woman in black clicked open the gate with accustomed fingers and said fretfully, "I'll wait. He's expecting me." Then, since the girl continued to look surprised, she exclaimed impatiently, "Mrs. Heath."

That was all but she had reduced Susan to the merest pulp. Her manner had been that of the princess who rebukes the loutish servant.

"I'm sorry, I didn't know," the girl said in a low voice. But Mrs. Heath had already ensconced herself in the most comfortable chair in her husband's office and did not trouble to reply.

Pierson came in, ducked his head in the direction of the private room in an obscure gesture of recognition, and disappeared into his favorite haven, the vault. Susan could hope for no assistance from that quarter. She worked on. Jack Waring slammed open the other door and bustled in, whistling a dance tune.

"How's every little—" he began with customary exuberance. The words died on his lips as he caught sight of the still, aristocratic figure in black.

"Ah, Mrs. Heath!" His manner underwent a subtle change. The lady gave him a slow smile but her accents were sweet.

"Nice to see you. It's been ages."

Waring bowed over her hand. Susan could hear the ripple of light laughter. In the tail of her eye she could see the man light a cigaret held in the woman's long white fingers. An emerald, big as a roc's egg, gleamed on one of them.

"Cannes—just like every other place—St. Jean de Luz—home on the Berengaria—" She could hear the cool, disdainful voice trailing on. She wondered what manner of woman this was. Waring's usual gay insouciance was dimmed. He was respectful rather than gay. Susan was ever so slightly amused at this. "She must be what Aunt Jessie calls 'a regular Tartar,' to affect him in that way," observed the young girl to herself.

Presently Ernest Heath entered. Susan had a distinct sense of relief. Now her responsibility ended.

"My dear, I didn't expect you until tomorrow!"

The lady laughed again, not altogether agreeably. She gave the tips of her fingers to her husband and an oblique glance to the younger man.

"Ernest is so amusing. He always wants things to happen according to schedule." And, indeed, Heath seemed annoyed.

"I think you might have wired. I should certainly have met you." He seemed aggrieved. There was an undertone of real contention in their light talk. Susan tried not to listen.

"I always like to give you surprises!" There was an edge to Mrs. Heath's tone. "One never knows—" Her voice trailed off and whether unwittingly or not her gaze strayed to the young girl typing furiously at her desk. Susan heard Heath say with some heat that he disliked surprises intensely. She thought that altogether the meeting was rather odd for a husband and wife who had been separated for months.

After a tactful moment Waring slipped away and Susan was summoned to Pierson's cubbyhole to help him check some figures. She grew absorbed in the task and forgot to notice the hum of voices, now low and rather monotonous, in the private office.

In an interlude Pierson inquired with a jerk of his head, "How d'ye like her ladyship?"

Susan flushed. "She's very attractive."

Pierson drew down his left eyelid in a grotesque wink. "Some boss, she is! I feel sorry for the old man."

Abruptly he adjusted his expression and began monotonously to read figures aloud. Mrs. Heath was leaving.

Susan heard her name called. Her employer, looking mildly flustered, said, "You've not met Mrs. Heath, I believe, Miss Carey."

Mrs. Heath looked into space a fraction of an inch over Susan's head and the travesty of a smile visited her thin, beautifully molded lips. Then she was gone, leaving a drift of expensive, subtle scent behind her.

"Whew! Thank God that's over," muttered the bookkeeper as the hall door slammed. "We won't have another visitation for another six months."

Susan smiled, feeling a sense of kinship with the little man. "O'Connell knew how to handle her." Pierson rambled on, amiably inclined to gossip. "O'Connell had her number. Don't," he warned benevolently, "don't let her get your goat, Miss Carey. You're not married to her like the boss is. Honestly, the poor guy has my sympathy."

Susan told herself that of course she didn't mind if Mrs. Heath treated her like the paper of the wall. Why should she? She didn't know what the rules of etiquette for employers' wives were, but she rather thought a more gracious mood was indicated. Oh, well, what did it matter? One snub more or less in a cold and unfeeling world!

"I'm leaving for the day," Heath said over her shoulder. His pale, ascetic face seemed flushed and annoyed. "If MacWhig calls from New York tell the operator to get my house after four o'clock."

Jack Waring sauntered over to Susan's desk later.

"Ritzed you, eh?" His keen eyes under his sandy thatch were smiling but sympathetic.

Susan shrugged. "I guess so. What does it matter?" But there was a line of bitterness about her young mouth.

"Child, don't you care!" She looked up, surprised, at the earnestness of Waring's usually bantering voice. She avoided him these days, fearing a recurrence of his flirtatious manner. But Waring seemed wholly in earnest. Almost fatherly.

"Thanks," Susan said soberly. She was struck by a new, not altogether unwelcome thought.

What if she should find a friend in this man?

CHAPTER XIII

Aunt Jessie was going away. It was astonishing but true. Her sister who lived in a little town in southern Illinois had undergone a rather serious operation and was convalescing. She wanted Aunt Jessie to come.

"I declare, it doesn't seem right!" Aunt Jessie kept saying over and over. "It seems a pity you couldn't go and stay with the Miltons instead of having Rose come over here. But what with those cousins of theirs visiting from Des Moines I suppose we can't help it." She sighed again, growning, folded her best Philippine nightgown and wrapped her bedroom slippers in tissue paper.

"I don't see why you make such a fuss," Susan said capably, trying to help and not succeeding very well. "You always say yourself that Rose is so sensible, and after all you won't be gone more than two weeks."

Aunt Jessie kept grumbling that it didn't seem right and she declared she was at her wit's end. But she went nevertheless. This was on a Sunday morning. After Susan had seen her aunt off at the dismal old station she came back to a house strangely empty and quiet. She walked through the prim, familiar rooms with the sensation of seeing them for the first time and when Rose came over to join her at a lazy, two o'clock dinner the kitchen rang with the sudden, foolish, irresistible laughter of two young things set free.

They used the best embroidered tablecloth and the thin cups which Susan's great-grandmother brought out with her from "York State." Aunt Jessie would have been scandalized at the idea of this casual employment of her dearest treasures. The tablecloth and china were generally reserved for weddings and funerals but since Susan saw no chance of the one and hoped there might be none for the other she made the most of this golden moment.

It was fun even to wash dishes with Rose. Susan hung, weak with laughter, over a kitchen chair as her friend described with embellishments the peculiarities of the head of her department.

"Stop! Please don't tell me any more!" Susan begged, wiping her eyes. Naturallly Rose, delighted at this tribute to her powers as a mimic, continued the performance. As Susan rinsed out the last clean dish towel she glanced with astonishment at the clock.

"It can't be half past three!" she said, appalled. They discussed the relative merits of a walk to the park or a trolley ride to one of the beaches, but somehow reached no decision. They dawdled out to the back porch, where, in a delicious confusion of Sunday newspapers, cracking taffy wrappers, and the shouts of the children next door, they idled away the afternoon.

That was the beginning of Susan's real holiday. Of course she would have no actual vacation this year since she had only started to work, but it was enough for her at the moment to feel the exquisite importance of being mistress of her own domain.

There came, however, the inevitable day when Rose, always popular and in demand, telephoned that she could not get home for dinner.

"I see. Of course you must go. Have a good time and don't be too late. No, I won't leave the door open. You ring twice and I'll hear you." Susan's tone sounded cheerful but she hung up the receiver with a sense of dismay. The long summer evening stretched out emptily before her.

She stood up to find Jack Waring twinkling at her.

"What's the matter? Somebody stand you up?" he bantered. Susan shook her head.

"The girl who's staying with me while my aunt is away has a date," she explained, hoping her voice didn't sound as forlorn as she felt. The man smiled.

"Come along with me," he said casually. "Some friends of mine are driving out to a place on the Milwaukee Road where they have grand music. I'll take good care of you and get you home early."

Susan hesitated. There was no denying it, the prospect was alluring. In addition, the man's tone and manner were so quietly reassuring, so nearly paternal that she felt rather silly as she demurred.

"Nonsense," Waring said briskly. "You just say 'no' as a matter of form without thinking. I can see that."

His conjecture was so close to the truth that Susan flushed. After all, wasn't it foolish of her to go home alone, eat an uninteresting and solitary supper and moon about waiting for Rose to return, when friendship, gaiety, music and laughter were hers for the stretching out of her hand? Irrationally she wondered if this had been the way Eve felt about the serpent. Then she smiled and shrugged because the metaphor was so farfetched. Jack Waring in his conservative dark suit, perfectly groomed and agreeably friendly, was as little like a serpent as anyone could possibly imagine. She was seized with an uncontrollable impulse. "I'll go," she said. "I'd love to."

He was so businesslike about it all, putting her address down in his small notebook, that Susan banished as idiotic the suspicion that for an instant there had been a flash of triumph in his eyes. He was to call for her at seven. Much as she disliked the idea of the neighbors peering at his long, blue roadster with its shattering horn she insisted on this. For one thing she remembered Aunt Jessie's dictum, "If a man can't call for a girl at her own home then I say there's something wrong. These fly-by-nights who meet boys on street corners will come to no good." It was curious that Susan should think of this and be so insistent about it, because she had heard Aunt Jessie say it so many times and it had always irritated her.

* * *

She rushed homeward, impatient of the many delays. The westbound trolley seemed unusually slow and jerky. The conductor dropped the token she handed him, passengers fumbled their transfers, and at every cross town line there were maddening waits.

Why she was so excited at the prospect of an evening with Waring Susan could not have exactly said. Perhaps it was his reputation as a lady's man, gleaned from hints dropped by Pierson. Perhaps it was the memory of the dozen and one daily telephone calls which he received. Most of the voices were provocatively feminine. Susan could not help hearing Waring's part in some of these conversations. He called all of them "darling." She knew that and was a little contemptuous of it, believing in her young arrogance (and who shall say not rightly?) that the charming English term of endearment should be reserved for the chosen one instead of scattered to the crowd. But ever since the day when the man had shown such sympathetic understanding of her position—the day Mrs. Heath had so unmercifully snubbed her—Susan had come to take a more charitable view of him. After all, she argued, men couldn't all be alike. She began to feel that she had misunderstood Waring Pierson said his wife had given him "a dirty deal." Maybe that was true.

It was at this stage in her reflections that the car, jerking wheezing, and groaning, reached her corner and she was glad to alight, finding the air under the locust trees of her own block much more agreeable than that of the trolley.

In her own room, she wriggled out of her clothes and ran the tub almost to the brim. She was glad Rose had given her those geranium scented bath crystals for her birthday. It was her favorite scent. If everything had irked her on the homeward ride now everything seemed suddenly right. How lucky it was that her flowered chiffon, her only "party" dress worthy of the name, had been returned from the cleaners the day before! How lucky it was she had washed her hair Monday night. How lucky she was to have a natural wave, intensified by the summer heat so that all she had to do was press her fingers into the little ridges to make her head a dark, shining, cap of undulation!

She was ready long before seven o'clock. While she waited she began to feel the agitation of a diver about to take the great plunge. Her mind revolved in busy whirligigs. What if Aunt Jessie should happen in without warning? What if Mrs. McLeod who always watched the goings and comings of the neighborhood from behind her starched curtains should spread the rumor that Susan Carey was becoming "fast?" Susan shuddered. To be "fast" in the little community where she lived was to be quite beyond the pale. Although Chicago is a metropolis, in its neighborhood groups there exists much of the spirit of the average small town.

Susan's reverie was interrupted by the sharp peal of the door bell. She caught up her gloves in a flurry and for the hundredth time wished she had a proper summer evening wrap instead of the wretched old black coat from last season. She opened the door with fingers that shook a little.

There he stood, seeming taller than usual, and, as always, perfectly turned out.

Susan closed the door of the cottage primly behind her. Aunt Jessie had always told her that a lady never receives a gentleman at home alone. Waring smiled suddenly as if he caught the reason for her abrupt gesture.

"I won't bite, you know," he said with mild raillery and Susan went scarlet. It was annoying to be so transparent.

As she ran down the steps with her escort she forget everything in her sudden surprise. There, jauntily perched in the rumble seat, a jaded looking young man at her side, sat Ray Flannery.

"Hello," chirped Ray. "I'm starving. Let's step on it!"

CHAPTER XIV

The "place out on the Wilwaukee Road" proved to be a big old house, set back from the highway and flanked by rows of ancient maples. It was such a house as one of Chicago's meat-barons might have built in the nineties—all curlicues and hybrid ornamentation. Outside it had a sort of remote, Victoria dignity, but inside it was hung with the cheap colors of a temple of jazz.

The colored girl in the coat room accepted Susan's wrap with superb disdain. Susan was terribly nervous. There was something about the atmosphere of the place that disturbed her. Ray, however, seemed perfectly at ease. She demanded hairpins, spilled powder about, and bullied the check girl unmercifully. Delighted with the effect she had produced, Ray ordered Susan to follow her and the two—tall brunet and petite blond—joined their escorts.

At the end of the long room an orchestra thumped out a monotonous jungle dirge. It was strange, sullen music. After a brief consultation of menus Waring asked Susan to dance. The tempo of the music had quickened. There was more life in it now. The saxophone had ceased complaining and seemed to be bleating as merrily as a saxophone can. Susan gave herself up to the moment. It was months since she had danced and then with some awkward boy. Waring's performance had an ease and smoothness of which she had never dreamed. It was like poetry. It was like flying. His arm tightened around her, imperceptibly.

"Good girl," he said in her ear. "I knew you'd dance like this." Susan leaned back a little to read the expression in his eyes.

"You knew?" she questioned. "How?"

"Something about the way you walk—"

She was pleased, though she could not have said why. When the music ended Susan was sorry to return to the table. It was rather like coming back to earth after a trip to Mars. For the first time she had a really good look at Ray's escort. He had been introduced as Mr. Webb. After a moment or two Susan realized who he was, the junior member of the real estate firm in whose office Ray worked. He seemed a vapid, amiable young man. He had red hair and, she discovered, had been recently graduated from Harvard. Susan was not very favorably impressed. Indeed, Mr. Webb (known to his intimates as "Sky") did not seem to have much to offer beyond a ready laugh and a trick of twirling his mustache. The mustache, small as it was, revolted Susan. She found Jack Waring's clean shaven face a likeable contrast.

* * *

Waring was at his best in the role of host. Considerate, agreeable and amusing. If the flask he carried in his pocket was emptied with alarming alacrity as the evening wore on Susan was too inexperienced to notice it. As a matter of course she refused to have her ginger ale "spiked." Waring's urbanity seemed to increase and if Schuyler Webb laughed noisily now and then she put it down to collegiate high spirits and gave it no further thought.

They ate and danced and danced again. Susan had no idea of the time. But as group after group drifted in and the smoke began to hang in clouds over the big room she was conscious of a sense of uneasiness.

"Isn't it terribly late?" she murmured to Waring. They were dancing a waltz and the sensuous strains of the music had made Susan's pulses throb.

"Nonsense!" he laughed at her. "The night's young. We've only started to play. I knew you'd be a wonderful playmate," he whispered. "Only you were so stand-offish I never had a chance to find out." He was holding her closely, too closely, Susan thought, her instinct sharpened and revolted for an instant by the scent of liquor on his breath.

A moment ago he had been a quiet friend—flushed and volublee it is true, but still a friend. Now Waring was becoming a menace, a strange man with a reddened face, a man who had been drinking. Susan could see the little lines around his eyes. All of a sudden she thought of Ab Dunbar, his firm, clean-youthfulness. It was as if a clean, sweet breeze had blown across a stagnant waste. She knew with aching certainty why she had been trapped into this indiscretion. If she could not have the real thing she had been willing to take second best.

"Really, I must go," she pleaded. "Rose—my friend—will be waiting for me. She hasn't a key."

Waring smiled at her a little foolishly. "Be nice!" he muttered in an unsure voice. "Don't spoil everything while the evening's still on the make."

* * *

Uncomfortable but determined, Susan persisted. At last Waring, annoyed, stopped at their table and consulted his watch. The girl gasped at what she saw.

"It's 11.30," she exclaimed. "And it will take a good hour to get home! Whatever shall I do?"

Ray reddened her lips unconcernedly. "Don't crab the party," she said calmly. "It's going good."

Miserable, Susan stared at her.

"Sky" Webb laughed foolishly. "Let's move along, anyhow," he said. "Lot o' riff-raff here. We can go to Tony's. Like Tony's better, anyhow."

What followed was to be a nightmare in Susan's memory forever. The rocketing ride in the car to another noisy scene of hilarity, the band whose unrelenting music seemed never to come to an end, the wild bursts of laughter from the crowd at the next table. White-faced, her eyes ringed in shadows as the night unwound itself, Susan surveyed the scene. If this were pleasure, she'd be glad to take her share of misery."

"I want to go home . . . I want to go home," she wailed in her inmost heart, although outwardly she appeared contained and calm. How blessed, from this vantage, was the thought of the white haven of her narrow room, how marvelously safe the tiny house on the shabby street!

And what would Rose think? She would be frantic!

Susan's head began to ache. A steady, deep throb of pain, it was. She smiled with difficulty and when she danced her feet were no longer light.

What a little fool she had been! Why had she come?

It was one o'clock. It was two. Through it all Ray remained pert, fresh and composed. She drank little. Ray "didn't believe" in it. But the shifting scene did not shock or startle her. Ray was a true child of the pavements. Nothing bothered her except the menace of unpopularity. It was enough to have "a date" for the evening. Where she might go or who her escort might be did not seem greatly to matter. Ray said she "knew how to take care of herself" and Susan, glancing at her, decided that probably she did.

"But I don't belong here," Susan decided. "This isn't what I want Somewhere there must be the things I've dreamed of—flamourou, romantic, places with music and gaiety that aren't cheap. This isn't it!"

* * *

At half past two they departed. In the car Waring tried to put his arm around her but Susan shrank away.

"Don't like me, eh?" His laugh sounded foolish.

She forced a smile to her stiff lips. She must not offend this man.

"Of course, I do. But I'm nervous about your driving. And it's so dark out here."

Ray called, "Don't worry about that. Jack's used to one-arm driving, aren't you?"

"Atta girl. Atta baby!" That was Sky. Sky was almost asleep on Ray's shoulder. Waring's arm remained where it was though. Susan shrank from it. They were on the outskirts of the city now. The little, mushroom houses of the truck gardeners huddled together. They passed a cemetery, the white stones arising up eerily in the gloom.

"Tired, sweets?"

Susan shook her head. The man's fingers gripped her slender arm. "You're a nice kid and I like you but you're only half alive. Come to and enjoy yourself. Don't be a crepe hanger!"

She said, "I'm sorry you think I spoiled everything."

"That's all right." His voice thickened, blurred again. "We'll paint the town some time. You'd be grand if you'd just let yourself go."

Susan scarcely heard him. She was counting the blocks now. Eight—six—four—they were almost home.

"The next corner," she murmured, turning to Waring. Now that the dreadful evening was ended she was almost effusive. To be home, safe and sound, seemed too good to be true!

"Don't bother to get out with me," she said hurriedly. She could see Rose's figure, a mere blur, on the porch. Poor Rose! There would have to be a great deal of explaining.

Before Susan could open the car door and slip away she felt strong arms around her, a mouth pressed to hers.

"Good night, sweet child!" Jack Waring murmured.

Susan tore herself away, shaking in every limb.

Oh, she hated him, she hated him for doing that!

(To Be Continued)

"Pardon me!" said the motorman to the truck driver, "would you mind moving over a little and allow me to pass?" The truck driver promptly pulled to one side.

"Thank you ever so much," added the motorman, with a smile.

"You're quite welcome," responded the truck driver," but you must pardon my seeming carelessness. Really, I had no idea your car weas so near."

"You Won't Be Homesick This Term"

Peggy had such a sinking feeling when the time came to pack her trunk for boarding school again. Then Mother gave her a happy surprise:

"Every Friday night at 8.30," she said, "Dad and I are going to telephone and have a little visit with you. It will be something nice to look forward to all week, won't it?"

So Peggy went back to school feeling quite cheerful and her Mother and Dad feel better too. The weekly telephone visit costs less than a movie and is worth many times that to all of them.

Malone Rotarians and Guests Enjoy Picnic at St. Anicet

Had Delightful Outing at Burchell Camp on St. Lawrence—International Relations Discussed by Armitage Ewing, Montreal, and George A. Hastings, Washington, D.C.

WATER SPORTS ON PROGRAM

No Nation, Nor Community, Nor Man, Can Live to Himself —Same With Foreign Relations as Present Depression Shows, Said Mr. Hastings

One of the most enjoyable outings ever held by the Malone Rotary Club was the picnic at George Burchell's camp on King George's Island, near St. Anicet, Thursday afternoon.

After a day of intense heat the Rotarians and their families and guests arrived at the river and were greeted by the host and hostess and their committee, and by a cool, refreshing breeze. The afternoon on this beautiful island was thoroughly enjoyed.

One hundred and three attended the picnic. All except nine members of the club were present and most of the absentees were ill or out of town.

Swimming and boating were the popular recreations both before and after the meeting. The facilities for both these sports are excellent at the island, which is one of the most attractive places along the river. Horseshoe pitching contests also were a feature. Yacht and speed boat rides were made possible through the kindness of C. M. Oney and A. A. Lunan.

The committee in charge, headed by Mr. Burchell, had made all arrangements for the comfort and pleasure of the party. Long tables had been set in a clearing in the centre of the grove that shades the island. Coffee, corn on cob and other accessories were provided to supplement the basket lunches brought by the picnickers. The whole affair was delightfully informal. There was a surfeit of good things, and the delectable foods from the bulging baskets were passed along until, like McDuff they all cried, "Hold! Enough!"

President F. F. Fisk called the meeting to order. He expressed the appreciation and thanks of the club to Mr. and Mrs. Burchell for their generous hospitality. He called upon George J. Moore to introduce the first speaker, Armitage Ewing, K.C., Montreal.

Mr. Moore, who was born in St. Anicet, mentioned some early recollections, praised the scenic beauty of King George's Island, spoke of the cordial relations existing between the peoples on both sides of the border, and touched upon the high standing of Mr. Ewing as an attorney, as a Rotarian and as counsel to the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Mr. Ewing's Address.

Mr. Ewing brought the greetings and best wishes of the Montreal Rotary Club, mother club of the Malone organization. He spoke of the fine feeling of good will and friendship between the two clubs and of their promotion of better understanding between the people of Canada and United States.

Assigned the subject, "International Relations," Mr. Ewing said he had no choice in the matter but that he was pleased with the subject as he had made a special study of certain matters of international concern particularly in connection with squabbles between Great Britain and United States. He said one of the most fertile fields for work in promotion of international amity is in the revision of text books. The youth of all countries are given a biased description of past differences. The school histories in each country put the home country always in the right and the other country always in the wrong. War is glorified and made popular. It is commercialized. The children are brought up not to know the right or wrong of it.

Mr. Ewing said he had talked with some men who couldn't get over their prejudices against other countries One American he spoke of could not forget that England had done his country "a great wrong." The speaker said he told him it was time to forget the war of 1776, that there were many people in England at that time who were sympathetic with the cause of the Colonies, that the people as a whole should not be blamed for the mistakes of a few leaders, and that if our great-grandfathers had made fools of themselves it was no reason for their descendants at this late date to continue the quarrel.

He said he talked with another man about the Civil War and found him very critical of England's attitude toward the United States during that war. Upon further questioning he found that the stickler in the American's mind was the Alabama case. When asked if he knew that the right or wrong of that matter had never been arbitrated the man said he did not know that. When asked if he knew that the Alabama had been built not by England but by private interests, the man was still further surprised.

Mr. Ewing explained in some detail the developments of the Alabama case to show how a mistaken opinion detrimental to one country can be formed in another country because of lack of impartial information. The Alabama, he said, was built by Lairds for private interests whose identity was never revealed, but who were generally supposed to be connected with the confederacy. Under pretense of a trial ship it slipped out and eventually did serious damage to American shipping. A movement was started to submit the matter to arbitration but this was killed in the U. S. Senate.

In this connection Mr. Ewing read from a statement he had prepared on the subject, as follows:

"In abandoning its contention that as a condition precedent to arbitration, Great Britain must admit liability for the acts of the Alabama, the United States minister had said that England must make important concessions on the question of the submission of the 'Alabama Claims.' These concessions were made and consisted in the fact that not the whole question of Great Britain's liability in law and in fact was to be referred to the tribunal, but it was agreed by Article VI of the treaty that in deciding the matters submitted to the arbitrators, they should be governed by three rules which were agreed upon as rules to be taken as applicable to the case, and by such principles of international law not inconsistent therewith as the arbitrators should determine to have been applicable. The three rules read as follows:

"'A neutral government is bound:

"'1st. To use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, or equipping within its jurisdiction of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended to cruise or to carry on war against a power with which is at peace; and also to use like diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise or carry on war as above, such vessel having been specially adapted in whole or in part within such jurisdiction, to warlike use.

"'2nd. Not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or argumentation or military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men.

"'3rd. To exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters, and, as to all persons within its jurisdiction, to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligations and duties.'

"The article of the treaty then went on to say that the British government could not assent to these rules as a statement of the principles of international law which were in force at the time the 'Alabama Claims' arose, but that in order to evince its desire of strengthening the friendly relations between the two countries and of making satisfactory provisions for the future, it, (the British Government) agreed that the arbitrators should assume, in deciding upon the claims, that Her Majesty's Government had undertaken to act upon the principles set forth in these rules, and that both countries should agree to observe them as between themselves in future and bring them to the knowledge of other maritime powers, and invite them to accede to them."

Under the rules Britain was judged liable and was ordered to pay a certain amount to the United States to settle the claims, Mr. Ewing continued. That the sum was enough is evidenced by the fact that there is still some of it left in the coffers of the United States. Britain did that to promote international friendship, Mr. Ewing declared.

Mr. Ewing again emphasized the importance of impartial text-books to get before the youth of the country the true story and let him see the historical events from the standpoint of each country. Thus the events would be robbed of their power to create hostility between countries and instead there would be developed a sympathetic feeling toward other nations.

Th speaker said we are making progress in this direction, but not fast enough. He mentioned the favorable influences exerted by the fraternal orders, the Boy Scouts, Red Cross and the service clubs, particularly Rotary and Kiwanis, which have a definite aim of promoting international friendship.

George A. Hastings, former administrative assistant to President Hoover, and at present extension director of the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection, was the next speaker. He was introduced by D. N. Callander, who spoke of Mr. Hastings' close relationship to Northern New York, his boyhood in Malone, his interesting career as newspaper man, promoter of philanthropic, public health and educational movements, his editorial writings and college teaching, and his appointment as assistant to President Hoover.

Mr. Hastings' Address

An abstract of Mr. Hastings' remarks follow:

"Interest in international relationships—in peace, disarmament, foreign relations, tariffs, economic policy and the promotion of international good will—is no longer confined to officials and government experts. The average citizen has come to realize that he has a personal stake in the relationships of his country to other nations. The casualty lists of the war were grim evidence that foreign affairs may affect his very life and that of his sons. The recent world-wide dislocation of economic life demonstrated that his pocketbook, too, feels the impact of the interruption of trade and production. Business and industry increasingly take on international aspects.

"There are many viewpoints from which to consider international relations. I wish to approach the broad question from only one—the interest and stake of the average man. The fact that the Malone Rotary Club is devoting today's meeting to this question is a reflection of the growing interest of business and professional men in the subject as affecting their own daily lives.

"Underlying all International agreements, whether to limit armament, secure peace, or foster trade, is the promotion of good will among the individual citizens of the several nations. When discussion of the creation of the League of Nations was at its height, Professor Jacks of Oxford made the penetrating observation that the fundamental need was for a league of peoples, as distinguished from a league of governments. That goes to the heart of the question. International good will, understanding and co-operation come not from parchments, protocols and pacts, but from the hearts and practices of men. Treaties are but the evidence of what men believe and desire. They are the concrete evidences of public opinion. Public opinion is made up of the daily thoughts, decisions, and acts of millions of men and women.

"Agreeing upon the desirability of peace, diminution of armament and promotion of international co-operation, how shall the result be sought practically? Most men agree on the object. Their differences are mainly as to methods. I submit that the question—which is a moral as well as political and economic problem—must come out of the clouds of mere idealism and wishful aspiration and come down to practical methods. Co-operation must be specific, not general; concrete ,not abstract; it must be defined, not vaguely generalized. And each nation and each people must come to the state of mind of being willing to sacrifice something for the common good. Without such sacrifice and without a conviction in the heart of the average man that such sacrifice is necessary, hope for international amity and teamwork is vain.

"International understanding grows not only out of diplomacy and the acts of government, but from the fraternal and social relationships of men, from business, education, and the promotion of the public health and welfare. Disease knows no national boundaries. The protection and training of children is not a narrowly national problem. Education in the real and best sense is international. The outlook of the university is upon the whole world, the past, the present and the future. Colleges are playing an important part through their research, teaching and exchanging of students in fostering the understanding and spirit and supplying the fact basis upon which international unity is built.

"National interests and policies we shall always have, but there are some things within the range of our desires and hopes which transcend nationalism. Peace, security, the opportunity for individual initiative, expression and development, the desire to enjoy, not to waste the products of civilized, socialized life, are the common aspirations of all men. This does not imply that we shall attain the goal of our quest through a shilly shally, superficial political internationalism. Rather shall we gain it through a reasoning, rational, co-operative, unselfish nationalism motivated by a spiritual internationalism.

"The essence of spiritual internationalism is mutual trust and confidence. Confidence is the corner stone of international concord. Nations and people come to trust each other as they observe that other nations and people deserve their trust and confidence. As individuals we trust other individuals because experience has shown us that we have reason to trust them. Nations are aggregations of individuals. An American Rotary Club is meeting in Canada today because of the trust and confidence whish the people on either side of the border have in each other. There is a sound and proven basis for such confidence. The fact that the thousands of miles of boundary between Canada and the United States is without fortifications or physical barriers is due to the spiritual kinship and confidence between the peoples of these nations. The situation is in contrast to the relationships between France and Germany where the road to confidence is long and difficult because of what has happened in the past.

"In a word, the international good will and co-operation for which we strive will come, if and when they come, through three instrumentalities—the desires and acts of peoples, the acts of governments, and the free development of national institutions along the line of the traditions, genius and history of individual nations, but with a spiritual unity which sees peace and amity rising above mere nationalism.

"Let us not blind ourselves to the fact that economic adjustments between nations are a major factor in peace and good-will. The essence of national sovereignity comprises the right to decide who shall and shall not be admitted to citizenship, the right to control trade in the interest of the country's own nationals, the right to determine its own domestic and national policies, and to decide upon means and methods of defense in the light of its own needs and experience. These practical questions of national policy, always complex and frequently troublesome and misunderstood, will eventually be resolved in proportion to the good faith which the nations see each other displaying in the working out of their own peculiar domestic problems and of their relationships to the rest of the world. Conquest of the dragons of distrust, fear, hate and insecurity can come only through the conscious development of mutual confidence on a national and practical basis as well as on a spiritual foundation.

"I am speaking as an individual and citizen and not as an official. I have the profound conviction that the spirit and practice of American public policy offers much ground for hope and progress. We have affirmatively and on our own initiative indicated our willingness to limit armament, to promote peace, to co-operate with other nations in the practical political and international arrangements and treaties necessary to give actual effect to ideals, to refuse to recognize acts of aggression and violation of peace pacts, and to commit ourselves to the policy of international peace and economic soundness. These are acts and policies which in the words of President Hoover, make public opinion tangible and effective.

"A Chinese philosopher has said: 'The way to truth is like a great road. It is not difficult to know. The evil is only that men will not seek it. Do you go home and search for it.'

"There are many significant signs that men are seeking truth expressed in more unselfish relationships between nations and people."—Malone Telegram.

Historic English Mill Yields to Father Time

The relentless hand of time, aided and abetted by the heavy gunfire of modern war, and strengthened by a little final push from the wind, has brought destruction upon one more landmark connected with the early history of the United States.

The old mill at Billericay in Essex, England, from near which the Pilgrims set sail for the new land, has collapsed. Its huge beams of solid oak, which stood the strain and stresses of time and work from the days of Pilgrims down to the outbreak of the World war, have at last found their burden too heavy, and, as the foundations weakened, gave way during a storm.

The old mill was closed during the war, as the location was considered too dangerous for the grinding of the grain of the nearby countryside. Later it fell under suspicion as a rendezvous of German spies and was boarded up. Heavy gunfire was frequent in this section, and the vibrations gradually weakened the old structure.

At a house, close by the mill, was the scene of the meeting of the Pilgrim band just before it set sail for America. Close by, also, another pilgrim, but one bent upon destruction, came to the end of its journey, for one of the large German Zeppelins fell in a field adjacent to the mill.

The construction of the mill was almost entirely of oak, and the huge shaft for the wheel was a tremendous oak trunk. No nails or spikes of any kind were used in the construction.

Soldier's Wife True to Her Duty as "Muzzler"

The late General Edwards, leader of the Twenty-sixth division, vied with General Butler in the gentle art of "speaking out of turn." Edwards, when still a lieutenant, was once banished to the farthest outpost for his indiscreet remarks when Senator Calvin Brice tripped and fell from a stage into a row of decorative plants.

But marriage put an end to this failing, for Mrs. Edwards was an ever-present and astute councillor. On one occasion, after the general had given a lengthy interview to a reporter, Mrs. Edwards demanded bluntly: "Have you received permission from the War department to give out this interview?"

"Why, no," stammered Edwards, blushing like a boy who had been caught stealing jam.

"I'm sorry," said Mrs. Edwards, turning to the reporter, "but you must hold up that story until the War department has okehed it. You see," she added with a smile, "it is the duty of the enemy to muzzle my husband's guns if he is able to do so. It is my duty to muzzle his tongue until the War department allows him to commence firing."—Los Angeles Times.

Unlovely Spots—Man-Made

The desire to make things look nicer, to make for brighter outlook on life generally animates all classes of the community. Everybody feels it, but many are unable to express in the written word their feelings. To some of the members of the Amputations Association of the Great War, who publish monthly a magazine for those who have lost limbs or sight, under the title of "The Fragment," acknowledgment is given for the following contribution:

Every unimproved or unplanted home in Canada can be made more attractive by the judicious use of trees, shrubs, vines, flowers and well-kept grass. The old saying that a home is not a home until it is planted very well emphasizes the necessity and wisdom of planting. Some places have lagged behind in the matter of beautification. Nature has endowed this country with the most beautiful and the greatest variety of natural scenic grandeur to be found anywhere in the universe. The unlovely spots are man-made, and it would seem that the least we can do is to make these man-made places sufficiently attractive that they will, in some measure at least, be in keeping with the great natural beauty to be found throughout this Dominion.

"The progressiveness and thrift of a community or municipality are often reflected in its appearance and the best advertising that any community can do is to present a pleasing appearance to the world—an appearance of progressiveness, thrift and industry, reflected by well-planted and well-kept public and private grounds.

"We are influenced to a greater extent than we realize by our surroundings. Children are particularly sensitive in this regard. Surely a home in and around which flowers are grown is a better place to bring up children than a home where no attention whatever is paid to these friends of the plant kingdom. 'As the twig is bent, so the tree is inclined,' is an old saying and very applicable in connection with the training of children. If children are taught to love flowers and to become familiar with them, their hearts will be filled with love for these things which will leave less room in their hearts and minds for the things that hurt and destroy.

"We frequently meet with the objection that gardens and flowers cost too much or that they take too much time. The truth is that it is not so much a matter of money or time as it is of desire and disposition. If we are disposed to have gardens and flowers and really desire to have attractive home surroundings, we will have them no matter how busy we may be. The cost in any event need only be trifling and the amount spent on the nursery stock necessary to improve the average size home will be one of the finest investments that possibly can be made. It will pay great dividends in satisfaction and will increase the value of the home. Your individual efforts in making your home more attractive will improve your street. If your street is improved, your city or town will be improved, and if your city or town or township is made more beautiful you have helped to make a more beautiful Canada."—Signed James E. Barrett, Assistant.

Strange Old Castle

Glamis Castle Rich in Romantic Associations and Legends

Glamis Castle, immortalized in Shakespeare's "MacBeth," is one of the most interesting places in Scotland. It was the girlhood home of the Duchess of York.

The castle, as seen nowadays, dates mostly from the seventeenth century, but the walls of the tower, 15 feet thick, were built when MacBeth was Thane of Cawdor. Shakespeare took a dramatic liberty when he had MacBeth murder Duncan within these walls, but nevertheless Glamis is rich in romantic associations.

On the authority of Sir Walter Scott, we are told that the castle contains "a secret chamber, the entrance to which, by the law or the custom of the family, must only be known to three persons at once, namely, the Earl, his heir apparent and any third person they may take into their confidence.

Weird stories have been told of some ghastly creature being imprisoned in the secret chamber for centuries, but the mystery has never been cleared up to appease the curiosity of the public.

Boarding Out Proposed For Mental Patients

Over 4,000 Patients in Foster Homes in Erlangen, Germany—Cheaper, and Better for Patients

Canadian mental hospitals contain about 30,000 men and women. Their keep now amounts to over $10,000,000 a year. The yearly increase is about 1,800 patients, which means a further annual cost of more than $500,000, to say nothing of $3,000,000 which must be spent for new hospital buildings.

Merely building more hospitals will not solve this problem. Furthermore, the cost will soon become more than the public can stand. An interesting alternative is being tried at Gheel, Belgium, at Erlangen, Germany, and other European centres.

This method consists of placing patients in foster-homes. At Erlangen, for instance, the experiment was begun 21 years ago. The mental hospital was crowded and there was no money for a new building. So six patients were placed in selected homes in the community. The results were very encouraging. Gradually, as householders lost their fear of mental patients and learned how to care for them, others were boarded out. To-day there are over 4 000 patients in boarding-homes in the vicinity of Erlangen,—about four times as many as there are in the hospital from which the whole scheme is worked.

Patients are given a preliminary period of observation and care in the hospital before they are boarded out. Regular supervision, depending upon the particular needs of the patient, is supplied by trained workers from the hospital. The patients are practically as free as they would be if afflicted with tuberculosis or any other physical disability. There are some drawbacks, of course, but these are more than balanced by the advantages. In the aggregate the system works very well. The cost is about one-fourth less than hospital costs—and the expenses of building new hospitals is also saved.

Here is a fine chance for one of our provinces to take the lead in establishing this very necessary system in Canada.

(Information on any point not covered here will be given in later issues if you will address your questions to "Mental Health," 111 St. George St., Toronto, Ontario.)

Snake Worshippers

Strange Tribe in South Seas Now Almost Vanished

Remnants of a strange tribe of snake worshippers in the highlands of New Georgia, one of the Solomon Islands, are reported by J. H. L. Waterhouse in the British anthropological journal, "Man."

These people are known as the Kazukurus. No white man, says Waterhouse, ever has seen one of their village sites in the rough hill country and very few of them are left, although there is a mixture of their blood in the rest of the New Georgia population.

A Kazukuru altar is an unrooted tree placed in an inverted position so that the roots are uppermost. All sorts of snakes are held sacred. They also are reported to consider the crab a holy animal.

The tribe has been almost wiped out by leprosy. Waterhouse obtained a vocabulary of several hundred Kazukuru words from which it may be possible to trace the racial connections of the almost vanished primitives.

Central Packing

There is no doubt that the reputation of Ontario apples will be greatly enhanced by central packing which ensures uniformity and higher quality. The cold storage plants, which have given a fresh impetus to central packing and exporting, are likely to contribute very considerably to the marketing of berries and tender fruits. Such product can be held in storage for a time and thus the season can be substantially extended. Moreover, by pre-cooling, and shipping in properly refrigerated cars, berries and tender fruits may be landed in satisfactory condition in Winnipeg, or Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.—Farmer's Advocate.

Cheese wrapped in a cloth dampened with vinegar, then covered with a dry cloth, will keep soft a long time.

World's Longest Fence

Australia Has One Over Eleven Hundred Miles in Length.

Australia has the longest fence in the world. It is 1,139 miles in length, and is known as the No. 1 Rabbit Fence of Western Australia. Altogether the rabbit fences of Western Australia remains a menace, for every cost over $1,750,000 to erect. They are constantly patrolled by boundary riders.

There is another great fence separating New South Wales from South Australia. It sometimes happens that great rains fall on the side of the fence where there are no rabbits, while a great drought exists on the other side. Then a vast migration begins.

A vast host, hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of rabbits, are on the move. And that is where the six-foot fence, topped with barbed wire, comes in. Along one side of the fence the ground is alive with racing rodents seeking a way through into the country where not a rabbit is to be seen.

Up and down they rush till the sun kills them. They die in hundreds every minute. Emaciated by a hundred-mile trek, famished for water, the fence balks and the sun kills them. They die at the foot of the fence.

Still others arrive in battalions in divisions, in army corps, as though there was no end to the stream. They die on the top of their dead comrades until there is a swathe of dead rabbits two feet deep and a yard wide, stretching perhaps for fifty miles.

Yet in spite of this terrific death rate, the rabbit population of Australia remains a mance, for every doe gives birth to from four to seven rabbits every nine weeks, and her daughters when they are nine weeks old begin to breed with like regularity. Drought and the great fences keep them from over-running the whole continent.

THE POWER OF A $10 BILL

The other day we read in some publication or other a story we really ought to have clipped for the benefit of our readers. However, we didn't. But here is the gist of it. A village parson saw a nice-looking piece of paper fluttering on the sidewalk. He picked it up and found it to be a $10 bill. He went into a store and bought a $10 article he wanted. The storekeeper went to a friend's store and bought a lawn-mower with the $10. The hardware man bought $10 worth of products from a farmer. The farmer, with ready money in his hand paid a bill he owed. The man who receipted the bill spent the money to good purpose. And so it went for days. Finally the $10 came to a man who had been waiting to see some good money in order to get married. It ended up with the $10 bill coming back to the parson for performing the wedding ceremony. The parson this time decided to put the $10 in the bank. The bank teller found that the $10 bill was counterfeit. Now the point of the story is this. Over $500 worth of goods had changed hands in that community and one man had obtained a wife—all through the circulation of that $10 bill. And nobody lost a cent, even though the bill was counterfeit. Now if a counterfeit $10 bill will do that, think of the power that a real $10 bill exercises, and goes on exercising, once it is put into circulation! Need we press the point?—Massena Observer.

ARM NUMB WITH RHEUMATISM

Woman's Thanks to Kruschen

"I have been suffering from rheumatism for years. At one time I could scarcely walk with pains in my feet. The thumb of my left hand was so stiff I could only bend it with the aid of the right hand. I was afraid to go to bed, as my right hand and arm up to the elbow used to go numb, and the pain was just terrible until I got the circulation going again. I started to take a half-teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast, and believe me I feel a different woman. I tell everyone what I take, and the good it has done me."—(Mrs.) W. A. B.

Kruschen contains six mineral salts which tone up the liver, kidneys and stomach—and keep them working smoothly and efficiently. The reward of this internal cleanliness is a freshened and invigorated bloodstream. Poisonous uric acid is expelled through the natural channels, and the pains of rheumatism cease. And as you continue with Kruschen, your whole being—body and brain—responds to its purifying force.

If you are planning to spend the morning dyeing, first be sure to wear an old dress or apron. Then be certain that all fabrics except those to be dyed are out of the kitchen, such as good linen towels, doilies, etc. Many a time has the dye spoon or stick slipped and caused a splash.

Let us know our Farms.

Farmers residing in Ormstown and Howick are invited to bring us a sample of their farm land so that we may tell them how much lime it needs. This sample should weigh about one pound and be taken from thick arable bed, in a field where the soil is of uniform quality. It is best to take many samples and mix them, then take from the mixture a sample which will represent all the field to its advantage. Farmers may bring as many samples as they please.

We will be in Ormstown, on September the 12th, from 8 a.m. to twelve o'clock, at the Earl Walsh Mill. Also at Howick on the same day from 1.30 p.m. until 6 p.m. at Mr. Arthur Brault's Mill.

Plays by Hemmingford Talent.—

On Saturday evening, Aug. 27th, a very interesting entertainment was given in the Town Hall under the auspices of Trinity Church, the receipts amounting to $35.25. Two one-act Plays by Hemmingford friends were successfully presented. Several choruses were very enjoyably rendered by local talent. Instrumental selections by Mr. Jessup of Toronto were heartily applauded, and Miss Irene McAllister recited in a very pleasing manner. During the course of his remarks from the chair, Rev. Mr. Howard referred to the fact that a most highly esteemed member of Trinity Church, Mrs. L. P. Cole, had that day celebrated her 92nd birthday, and conveyed to her, through members of her family who were present, the hearty congratulations and good wishes of the congregation.

Trinity Church Anniversary.—

As August 27th was the 75th anniversary of Trinity Church, Havelock, a special service was held in the church on Sunday afternoon, August 28th. Rev. Mr. Howard preached a very forceful sermon, urging his hearers to value the work done by their parents and strive to make the church a blessing to the community. Special hymns were sung and the edifice was beautifully decorated with flowers and flags. In connection with this service it was recalled that Mrs. L. P. Cole was the sole surviving member of the congregation who had been present at the opening of the church in 1857, and also that she was the first bride to be wedded within its walls, her marriage having taken place on her eighteenth birthday, which was also the first anniversary of the church's opening. As a slight recognition of the faithful and active part taken by her in the life and work of the church, immediately preceding last Sunday's service a brief but pleasing ceremony was enacted. On her arrival at the church door, Mrs. Cole was received by two of the oldest members, Miss S. Gilmore and Miss McCort, who presented her with a beautiful bouquet and escorted her to her seat.

Presbyterian Church Meetings.—

Preparatory to the communion service last Sunday the concluding masterly effort in a course of sermons on Christ's death was delivered by Rev. Mr. Maitland who treated his lofty theme in a manner at once touching and sublime.

Mr. A. Cascaden of Hemmingford, attended the service in his capacity as elder, and several visitors were present. Beautiful flowers were supplied by Miss Brisbane.

THE MEN BEHIND THE VOTE

You have heard of the man behind the gun,
Who guards the fort of the wave,
And marks him a hero brave.
Whose unerring aim
Saves his land from shame,

But behind the man behind the gun
Stands the country true and right.
And heroes brave
Both on land and wave
Are guarded by her great might.

And we are the men behind the land
That enlists the best of her youth,
And through them we fight
For justice and right,
And stand in defence of the truth.

You have heard of the man behind the bar,
Who, by greed of gain beguiled,
Trails his victim's name
In the slime of shame,
And curses the wife and the child.

But behind the man behind the bar
Is the ballot pure and white,
And the villains vile
Who with drink defile
Are shielded as though in the right.

And we are the men behind the vote
To license the man at the bar,
Making bold to proclaim
That we sanction the shame
Of rum's iniquitous war.

Rev. Norman Plass.

The future is what we hoped the past might have been but wasn't.
