School For Brides-To-Be

THEY'LL BE HANDY BRIDES: At Boston's Franklin Square House, Phyllis Schwartz of Lawrence, Mass. (left photo) gets a lesson in faucet-fixing from John Kooperman so she can surprise her husband-to-be, who's an electrician. Luette Lurvey (right photo) of Bar Harbour, Me., has a similar idea as she learns how to change a fuse under the guidance of William Brown.

Boston.—(NEA)—The graduates of a new-style bride's course in Boston's Franklin Square House for Girls learn some of the most attractive offerings of the matrimonial season.

How many of this year's June brides for instance, will be able to rewire a broken toaster plug? Put a new washer in a leaky faucet? How a set of bookshelves? Paint the inside and outside of a house?

In fact, how many June bridegrooms can do all these things? And how many who can, would prefer to have their wives do them?

You can find some of the answers at Franklin Square House, one of the world's biggest hostels for women. There, young ladies, still wearing the dress-up clothes they wore to dinner, spend their evenings applying wrenches to plumbing fixtures, tearing apart electrical appliances, sawing and hammering at household articles of wood and metal.

They're all residents of the hotel, a block-long eight-story stone building housing social halls, dining rooms, bowling alleys, a gymnasium, infirmary, laundry room, sewing room and roof garden for 900 working women and students, age 17 to 40.

They're probably the most efficient and talented of the estimated half-million women who've made Franklin Square House their home during the past half century.

The majority of the several score girls enrolled in the Bride's Course are engaged to be married, although Miss Olive Wilbur, hostess at Franklin Square, is quick to point out: "They don't have to be on the brink of matrimony in order to take the course."

Most of them couldn't tell an electrical plug from a blown fuse before enrolling. Now, in addition to thorough grounding in repairs by instructors from the hotel's maintenance staff, the young women make furniture for future homes in the workshop.

They learn how to plan and budget nutritious meals in the cooking class. They get pointers on the care of floors and wood-work, the handling of colors and fabrics, in the housekeeping course.

And, in the sole co-ed class, they can invite their fiancés to the jewelry workshop, where, among other articles, wedding rings are produced.

Why do so many engaged girls whose marriage already is assured bother to learn the home jobs which men usually are supposed to do?

Most of the brides-to-be reply: "What if a fuse blows out when my husband's not home? Suppose there's an emergency?"

But one worldly young lady in her teens put it this way: "Why am I taking this course? Simple. To teach my husband things he'll never find out for himself."

Lincoln Field officials made the announcement after the Maryland Jockey Club said at Baltimore that Derby winner Count Turf and Royal Mustang would compete against the first four finishers in the Preakness May 19 in the special $50,000 May 26 race.

Pimlico officials also had hoped that Rube would be entered in the May 26 event. The fourth Derby finisher, Phil D, hurt a leg in the Derby.

Learn Golf From the Stars: 3 Right Or Wrong, Any Change Seems Unnatural, Says Nelson

By BYRON NELSON
Former U.S. Open Champion

Like many good golfers, I developed peculiarities in my game which suit the way I play, but might not prove most effective for others.

Of course, you know that we ourselves don't know actually how we play.

Whenever you make a change it seems unnatural, whether you change from right to wrong or wrong to right. That's why we get into arguments with persons teaching us.

We may be changing from a very bad grip to a perfect one, but until we become used to the grip it doesn't feel natural.

A lot of people say I sway. It has been argued pro and con. I don't know if I do.

I do know that the lower part of my body, from my hips down, sways when I start my swing.

When I stand at the ball, I have a decided amount of weight on my left foot. Not 80 per cent but more than a majority.

When I start the backswing, I can feel the weight transfer to my right foot, giving me the freedom I need for the lateral shift I have.

When I start back, my hips, hands, club and shoulders start at once.

The more you can start everything together, the easier it is to keep everything timed together throughout the swing.

If you start with the clubhead first, everything must follow the clubhead all the way around.

If your body and hands start

Japanese Baseball Fans Adopt American Ways

Tokyo, May 10.—(P)—Japanese baseball fans are learning American ways — a little too well.

In the old days the umpire was about as untouchable as the emperor. Fans and players alike were polite to umpires but —

Only today, Tokyo police warned ball-park soda-pop vendors their concessions will have to go if fans keep on throwing bottles at players — and umpires.

SUGAR RAY ROBINSON TO MEET NAUTHVILLE

Paris, May 10.—(Reuters)—Lew Burston of the International Boxing Club said last night that Sugar Ray Robinson will defend his world middleweight title against Laurent Nauthville of Montreal in Paris this summer.

"Home Run Ball" Still Chanted At Preach Roe

Brooklyn, May 10.—(P)—Preacher Roe is a little miffed about this home-run-ball talk. He's 4-0 for the year but all he hears is "home-run ball."

"Makes me think I'm lucky to be here," he said. "As long as I'm winning I won't worry about the homers. Let them talk all they want."

"They got to beat me with a bat if they do. I walked two against St. Louis the other night and they both scored. That hurt me more than the home run."

The Preach was home-run-ball champ of the league in 1950 with 34 off his southpaw slants. The Brooklyn veteran gave up No. 7 this year to St. Louis' Del Rice Monday night. He led 2-1 with two out and two strikes on the batter when he lost him.

"All you got to do is slip six inches with your control," he said. "You can kiss it goodbye."

"The way I figure every pitch in the strike zone is potentially a home run. You got seven men out there behind you. And they're going to catch a lot more than will fall in. The fellows we got out there (in the outfield) can go get 'em."

Durocher And Lockman Draw Fine For Fracas

New York, May 10.—(P)—Outfielder Whitey Lockman of New York Giants was fined $25 and Manager Leo Durocher $50 by President Ford C. Frick of the National League yesterday for the use of "foul and abusive language" after Lockman was called out on the hidden ball trick in Sunday's game with Cincinnati.

The play, engineered by second baseman Connie Ryan of the Reds, occurred in the 10th and final inning. Durocher was banished from the field during the argument which followed.

Roe changed his style in recent years. The slender lefty used to try to overpower the hitters. He made the change at Pittsburgh with help from Al Lopez, now Cleveland manager.

"Nothing's going to change me again," he said. "As long as I win Home-run-ball record? It looks like I'm going to beat it this year."

Hollywood Turns To Bible Again For Super Films

By JACK QUIGG
Hollywood, —(P)— Hollywood has rediscovered the Bible as one of the great sources of spectacular motion pictures.

The Good Book, virtually untapped since the '20s when "The Ten Commandments," "Ben Hur," "King of Kings" and "The Sign of the Cross" made movie history, has been getting a thorough thumbing.

Leader in the new cycle is the same man who started the first one—Cecil B. DeMille. When the famed director of cinema epics hit the jackpot in 1949 with a gaudy version of the Old Testament story of Samson and Delilah, the race was on.

Now two studios have Bible-based epics ready for release next fall.

One, "Quo Vadis," a story of Christian martyrdom in Nero's Rome, was filmed in Italy at a record cost of $6,500,000. The other is "David and Bathsheba." Other producers plan films about Adam and Eve, Mary Magdalene and Jesus Christ. DeMille, who has brought four Bible stories to the screen, holds no other source combines so many of the elements of drama: love, hate, loyalty, treachery, passion, faith, selfishness and self-sacrifice. He once said: "You can make a film from any 60 pages of the Bible."

In "The Ten Commandments," filmed in 1923 at a cost of $1,400,000, he used 4,000 extras and 6,000 animals. In the climactic scene the Red Sea parted before the Israelites, then closed in on the pursuing army of the Pharaoh. MGM's $4,000,000 "Ben Hur," released in 1926, was no less awesome. Its fabled chariot race is considered by many the most thrilling scene on film.

The big scene in DeMille's 1927 "King of Kings" was Christ's crucifixion. It showed some 6,000 actors winding up a tortuous path to the hill of Golgotha.

"Noah's Ark," a 1928 effort by Darryl Zanuck, is remembered only for its recreation of the flood. DeMille rebuilt ancient Rome for "The Sign of the Cross" in 1933. An added attraction was Claudette Colbert taking a milk bath.

"Samson and Delilah" had Victor Mature slaying a lion with his bare hands and slaughtering an army with the jawbone of an ass. "Quo Vadis" features a scene in Nero's arena with 60 lions

Test New Process To Obtain Bigger Newsprint Supply

London, —(P)— Raw materials which hitherto have gone to waste are to be used to meet Britain's critical shortage of newsprint.

W. J. Curtis-Willson, president of the newspaper society, in making this disclosure at the annual meeting of the organization, said a new process had been developed for the production of pulp for newsprint and other kinds of paper. The new source of supply would become available this summer. He did not disclose details. "It will only be a trickle, but behind the venture are tremendously powerful concerns," Mr. Curtis-Willson said. "And, if as I firmly believe, this trickle of pulp proves that we can make newsprint from raw materials at present untapped, we shall have embarked upon a new era for our newspapers."

He warned that the price of imported newsprint would continue to rise and at $60 (about $180) a ton many of the smaller newspapers would pass out of existence.

"That is what it means unless we come to their rescue," he added.

Referring to world sources of supply, Mr. Curtis-Willson said annual production of newsprint came to about 9,000,000 tons. The United States with a population of some 160,000,000 took two-thirds. The other third was left to the 2,500,000,000 in the rest of the world to share out.

Lord Woolton, chairman of the Conservative party, and principal guest of the society, deplored the current restrictions which had necessitated a drastic cut in the size of British newspapers.

"I do not believe it can be a good thing for the public life of this nation that there should be this severe restriction on the quantity of news now printed," Lord Woolton declared.

"There are some of us, at any rate, who are not very anxious to control you. Some of us think we have had a bellyful of controls."

pitted against a handful of Christians. "David and Bathsheba" shows David killing the giant Goliath with his slingshot and assaulting the walls of Rabbah with his army.

"King of Kings," the most-played film of all time, has been seen by almost a billion people and is still shown 1,500 times yearly, mostly in churches.

DeMille considers religion the greatest theme in the world and the Bible the "greatest dramatic force."

He doesn't hesitate, however, to sugar-coat his message. Some churchmen objected to "Samson" on the grounds it put too much emphasis on the strong man's love affair with Delilah.

DeMille, although his name is synonymous with Bible films, was no pioneer in the field. The movie industry cut its teeth on them.

Hollywood made scores of them in the early 1900s as did studios in France, Italy and Germany. One of the first was "Star of Bethlehem," produced in 1907 by Thomas Edison.

"Quo Vadis," based on a best selling novel, has been made four times. The French did it first in 1902. A 1912 version produced in Italy ran nine reels and was the longest picture made up to that time. The third, also Italian, starred Emil Jannings.

In recent years the non-profit Cathedral Films, Inc., has turned out more than 30 short features based on Bible stories. It reports demand exceeds the supply and some 4,000,000 people see them weekly.

"Mom and Dad are giving me money for my birthday—now I can pay Joe what I borrowed for their anniversary gift!"

U. N. To Move Soon From Lake Success

By MAX HARRELSON
Lake Success, N.Y. —(P)— The Lake Success date-line will disappear in a few days from the world press where it came to be synonymous with the United Nations.

The U.N. has almost finished the task of moving from the sprawling, converted factory building here to its glittering skyscraper headquarters in New York.

The final meetings will be held here May 18 when the commission on the status of women and the statistical commission wind up their spring sessions.

By early June, the last portions of the building will be turned back to the owner, the Sperry Gyroscope Company, to make room for its expanding defence production.

The surrender of the temporary headquarters will mark the end of a dramatic epoch in diplomatic history. Through the improvised but impressive chambers of the U.N. walked many world figures—Molotov, Atee, Vishinsky, Marshall, Gromyko, Malik, Austin, Vandenberg, Connally, Bevin, Bidault, Schuman, Cadozan, Jebb, Romulo, Spaak and Pearson.

The Security Council held more than 500 sessions, saw more than 40 Russian vetoes. The big 60-member committees of the General Assembly transacted most of the Assembly business at Lake Success.

The world organization moved into the Lake Success headquarters August 15, 1946. It began moving its 3,200 employees away from the temporary headquarters into the permanent New York buildings just four years later, in August, 1950.

The only headquarters building completed so far is the 39-storey secretariat skyscraper. The meeting area will be ready by Aug. 1, officials say. The Assembly chamber will be completed by August, 1952.

Between the final meetings at Lake Success and the completion of the meeting area, most meetings will be held at Flushing Meadows in the building which the U.N. has borrowed from New York city for the plenary sessions of the General Assembly.

The 1951 session of the Assembly will be held in Paris.

Royal Question In Belgium Now Dead Issue

By WILLIAM ANDERSON
Brussels, —(P)— With almost fatherly solicitude, more than 8,000,000 Belgians are watching the increasing confidence shown by their youthful Prince Baudouin as he carries out his delicate task of chief of state.

Since Baudouin succeeded his father, King Leopold III, in this capacity eight months ago, Belgium's royal question has slowly ceased to be a point of controversy.

Baudouin was the country's compromise when it split on the return of King Leopold from exile. When a parliamentary vote ended Leopold's exile and brought him back to Belgium August 1, 1950, his opponents paralyzed the country with strikes and riots.

After holding out for 11 days Leopold handed over his powers to Baudouin and went into semi-retirement. Baudouin became a chief of state with the title of Prince Royal.

His ascension was hectic. The tall, slim, bespectacled youth, just turned 19, took the oath in a parliament chamber barely clear of fumes from a smoke bomb thrown by one of the King's supporters.

Baudouin was almost unknown in Belgium. At the age of 13 he had gone into exile with his mother in Germany and Austria. Subsequently he lived in Switzerland.

When he returned with his father from exile, Baudouin knew more about the Swiss Alps than his native Ardennes.

This was remedied by a series of public appearances. These visits need kid glove handling. Belgium is neatly cleft into two language groups—Flemish in the north and French to the south. Bilingual Brussels lies in the middle.

Bickering between Flemish and French has been going on since 1830 when Belgium became a kingdom. It was at its height when Leopold inherited the general Roman Catholic Flanders was pro-Leopold while French-speaking Wallonia was anti-Leopold.

After Baudouin spread his visits outside Brussels, each visit to the Walloons was balanced by a visit to the Flemings. In Wallonia he spoke French—in Flanders Flemish.

Roast Dormouse New Delicacy In Great Britain

By ALVIN STEINKOPF
London, —(P)— The dormouse, according to European legend, didn't like Christopher Columbus and so never emigrated to America.

Consequently, not being personally acquainted, North America thinks of the dormouse as a furry, whiskered creature which lives in crossword puzzles, and was a companion to Alice when she wandered through Wonderland.

"If only that were all that needed to be said about the dormouse!" said an official of the British ministry of agriculture and fisheries.

"But the fact is that the dormouse is a cunning little creature, and is a confounded nuisance," continued the official.

"He eats the apples of Buckinghamshire, and other counties just as handsome, and we had to do it. We had to classify him officially as a pest."

So now, any one at all may go about Britain slaying dormice (there is some debate about the plural) and may even eat them. The dormice of Britain are of the edible branch of the dormouse family, and are to be distinguished from the "dormouse vulgaris," which of course no one would eat.

Since the agriculture ministry has called the dormouse a pest his friends have come to his defence. He is a little fellow something like a squirrel and something bigger than a mouse, and he likes to live in the branches of bushes and trees. He eats chestnuts and walnuts, and lately has developed a fancy for apples and pears.

But even his friends have to admit that maybe there are too

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Avery Davis were Master Donald Mason and sister, Miss Nancy Mason, of Derby Line, Vt., and Mr. and Mrs. Fred May, of Stanstead.

The Farm Forum Group held its annual supper, which was the close of the season's activities, when a delicious supper was held at the home of Mr. E. A. Davis, and which was enjoyed by some thirty guests, after which, five tables played "500" and one, canasta. An enjoyable time was spent. All departed for their homes, hoping to meet again next fall.

Mrs. Roy Aldrich entertained the Heathton W.A. The June meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Avery Davis.

many dormice in Britain and that a number should be eaten.

Casting about for ways to do this, the agriculture ministry discovered an old roman recipe. The dormouse is fattened, then roasted, then dipped in treacle, known as syrup in the western hemisphere, and then gulped down.

How does a dormouse taste? Different from mutton, said the agriculture ministry. It isn't likely, though, that all the dormice in Britain will add much to the meat ration. There are a lot of them but they are little chaps.
