The Title Question.

Nine years ago the House of Commons went on record as being opposed to titles being granted in Canada. It was sent as a suggestion to the King, who in theory is not bound to obey the suggestions of any one but who, in actual practice, depends on the advice of the prime minister of each dominion when he thus honours any one. Mr. Cahan has given notice that he intends discussing the question in the House of Commons once more, and a more or less free discussion of the question is now being held throughout the Dominion.

There are many who take a very decided viewpoint against any titles being granted. Their argument is that this is a democratic country and that success brings the respect of fellow-citizens, therefore, a title does not add anything, while on the other hand, it may lower the recipients in the eyes of many. Another group of people believe that titles should be granted. First because the holders have earned some recognition; secondly, that the bestowal of the honour opens avenues of communication which broaden the viewpoint and tend to develop strong family groupings in Canada. A third group believe that a judicious bestowal of non-hereditary titles can be helpful to all concerned.

The last suggestion is more or less of the middle course and attracts a good deal of support. Frequently there are men who have served Canada well and who deserve some reward from the State. A money grant is out of the question for obvious reasons, while an honour from the King gives both recognition of service and firmly places the recipient in Canadian social life for the balance of his lifetime. Should a favourable decision be made along the third line the stumbling block, and it is a real one, will be that the appointments will be partisan. That cannot be avoided, for the pressure that would be brought on any prime minister, will necessitate that his list be made up of those who give support to his political party. With that goes the inconvenience and danger of having to deal with those whose only claim to the honour is that they have made a great deal of money or have generously supported, in one way or another, the political fortunes of the government in power. That type of individual does not deserve a knighthood, and the granting of a title to him would only lower the prestige of all.

There have been suggestions that a non-political committee should make the selections, but that is contrary to our form of government, and would aggravate instead of improving the situation. We have had our experiences, and have learned our lesson, so unless some good solution can be found most people feel that we have gotten along very well in the past few years, and can continue as we are.

Community Service.

Two plans are underway in the town of Huntingdon just now that deserve general support. One concerns the Huntingdon Academy and the other calls for the construction of a new curling rink.

The place of the Huntingdon Academy is so well established that perhaps nothing need be said about it, yet on the other hand there is the danger, that any institution faces—of going to seed—and for that reason, if for no other, the present plans should be carried out on a broad scale and in such a way that not only will the celebration on the 24th. of May be a success, but also that the local pride in the institution will be increased. We should not only commemorate the fact that the Academy is seventy-five years old; we should plan so that it will grow in importance and value. Educational systems have shown great progress in the last twenty-five years and we should keep Huntingdon Academy well up to the top. The courses of study as prescribed by the provincial authorities are good enough in their way, but they are not good enough for Huntingdon Academy or the district from which it draws its scholars. The Academy must broaden out, and to do that the teachers, and the commissioners must have the support of the people of the county, and the celebration on Victoria Day is the first move in that direction.

There are now signs that the discussions regarding the construction of a new curling rink are bearing fruit. An active survey of the financial situation is being carried on and it is expected that within a few days a definite decision will be arrived at. The plans now being formed call for a larger rink, both for curling purposes, and for club room uses. Perhaps, in a town the size of Huntingdon, the latter is of more importance than the former. At the present time we have no public place where the local citizens both young and old can gather in a social way and be on an equal footing. An athletic club lends itself admirably for such a purpose, and if large comfortable club rooms are provided it will be possible to have a place in which all can take pride and where many will gladly go during the winter months. Subscriptions for the curling rink should not be confined to those who play the Scotch game, but should be made by all who are desirous of having a good club room where they can go at any time and feel that they are entitled to be there because they have contributed towards its construction.

The Quebec Legislature.

The session of the Quebec legislature was comparatively brief. The legislation submitted was not contentious in character, and with no financial worries, the government was able to complete its programme in good time. Legislation concerning the city of Montreal continues to monopolize the attention of the Assembly, and it appears to be impossible to get rid of the annual pilgrimages of the Montreal charter amendours. The Government has tried various plans, but none have been effectual in the larger sense. Probably it is a question that can never be rectified by legislation. It will require an improved local interest in municipal matters. Montreal is a large city, but after reading the newspapers of the past week none of us can say that the municipal election campaign has been marked by broad municipal statesmanship.

The legislature adopted the system of long term credits to farmers, which has its interest to certain districts in the province. The plan calls for loans spread out over a long period of years, the payments to be made annually in a manner which at the end of the thirty-two year term will have wiped off both the principal and the interest. It is a co-operative plan on a large scale, for the intent is that the loans become self-supporting in time, thus permitting both the federal and the Provincial governments to withdraw their capital investments, leaving the administration to the borrowers themselves, who must contribute a small percentage of their loans to the general fund. It has worked out successfully in several countries and should succeed here.

HEALTH SERVICE

Canadian Medical Association

"THE ROAD TO HEALTH IS PAVED WITH GOOD PREVENTION"

Almost everybody thinks that the other man has the easier and the better job. There is a general tendency to ascribe success to luck. In the same way, many communities excuse their failure to secure health for their constituents because of some local difficulties and, at the same time attribute the success of other communities to "just luck".

It is true that every place has its own problems and difficulties. It is equally true that the healthy community has succeeded, not because of luck, but because its members did what was necessary to overcome their local difficulties.

Throughout Canada you will find a great variation as to health conditions between places that may be fairly compared with each other. There is, of course, a reason for this. This reason is not hard to find; it is a simple one. Where the best health work has been done, there health conditions are best, and so on, down the scale, the health of the community corresponds to the health work done by the community.

Every citizen should enquire as to the health standing of his home town or county, and find out how it compares with others, ask these questions of the local or provincial health departments. Every citizen should then ask himself whether or not he and his fellow-citizens are providing the money and other support necessary to enable the health department to pave the health road of the community with sound preventive measures, so that the citizens may travel along in happiness, free from the bumps of disease, the ruts of ill-health, the sudden, unguarded crossings of epidemics and the unprotected precipices of preventable fatal illnesses.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered by letter. Questions as to diagnosis and treatment will not be answered.

St. Mark's Anglican Young People's Association, Valleyfield, presented the sixth of their series of lectures for Lent on March 29th. The speaker being Mr. Walter Hatch, Jr., who very clearly presented this lecture entitled, "A Thousand Miles Up the Nile" to a very good audience. Mr. Walter Hatch, Jr., besides being interested in the A.Y.P.A., is Scout Master for the Valleyfield troop and under his guidance the boys have done all that could be expected of them. The Scouts intend to hold a church parade on April 15th to the Anglican church and a good turnout is expected. On Thursday evening, April 5th at 8:30 p.m. Mr. H. C. Bridout will present the Passion Play. This is said to be a beautiful set of slides and a very large audience is expected. This will then conclude a very interesting as well as educating series of lectures.

Miss Beatrice Curran of Cornwall is home for the Easter vacation.

On Tuesday evening last under the auspices of the Valleyfield Presbyterian Church Musical and Improvement Society, an illustrated lecture was held in the church basement. McAlpine playing suitable strains of music on the melodeon as the various slides were shown. The lecture was both instructive and interesting and the lecturer proved to be one of the best we have heard for some time, interspersing his remarks with the characteristics of the several countries as they appeared. His witticisms regarding the Scotch and Irish people were greeted with peals of laughter and well merited applause. Miss G. O'Neil rendered piano solos which were well received, thus bringing to a close a very enjoyable evening's entertainment.

HUNTINGDON

The making of maple syrup and maple sugar is well known to be a laborious task yet a profitable one. It is just as easy to make a good product as a poor one, but it is far more profitable to market the best grade of syrup and sugar. It has long been proven that if a good product is put up in small attractive packets they sell more readily and at a much better price. To help market the maple products in this form, the C.P.R. are to be congratulated. The C.P.R. forwarded the Huntingdon Women's Institute samples of maple syrup and sugar done up in an attractive form for merchandising. The samples can be seen at the Gleaner office window. It would be well for all our farmers and their wives to take the opportunity of inspecting the samples and follow the recommendations made.

Mr. Graham McGerrigle of Montreal is home for the holidays. Mr. Francis Vanalesti of the Huntingdon Hemp Producers Co. has returned from Lyndhurst, N.J. to his farm at Herdman. Mr. Vanalesti informs us that 40 acres of land will be seeded with hemp, although he had hoped to have 200 acres under cultivation this year. He was anticipating bringing out a number of Italians to work at the trade, but on account of the Italian immigration regulations, he was unsuccessful and will therefore have to resort to Canadian labor. Much interest is being taken in Mr. Vanalesti's efforts by Mr. Hutchinson, Chief of the Fibre Division of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, and by the Canadian National Railways Agricultural Dept. Mr. Hutchinson, we are told intends to follow the cultivation of this crop with a close eye and will be here at seeding time.

Messrs. Pringle, Stark & Co. are now receiving much maple syrup. For the sixth season they are shipping a church in Vancouver 100 gallons of syrup and a quantity of maple sugar. The original order started in a peculiar way, for it so happened that at one time when Mrs. Pringle was visiting in Vancouver, Mr. Pringle mailed her a gallon of syrup. The syrup arrived at an opportune time, for a fall of snow had just fallen. A number of friends were invited in as Mrs. Pringle's guests to a sugaring off. It was such a treat to the Westerners that they have made such into an annual event for one of the churches, the night being called the Pringle, Stark & Co. of Huntingdon night.

It was announced that Miss Annie Rose, a Life Member and former President and Secretary, would address the meeting to be held on May 1st, her subject to be a Travel Talk on Venice.

Through the courtesy of Mr. P. C. Armstrong of the Development Branch of the C.P.R., Mrs. Mary Macmillan of Montreal forwarded to the Institute a display of Maple Syrup products put up in packages suitable for the retail trade. One sample was maple sugar moulded in shape of a maple leaf and attractively boxed. A jar showed maple sugar in grain suitable for cereals, cooking, etc., a packet of maple taffy wrapped separately in waxed paper, a tempting box of very light colored maple cream candies and a small bottle of the pure syrup completed the exhibit.

This very attractive exhibit so kindly loaned by Mrs. Macmillan, may now be seen on display in the Gleaner window. Information will be secured as to where boxes, moulds, recipes, etc., can be secured, and the Secretary, Mrs. W. L. Carr, will be glad to furnish same to anyone desiring to engage in the preparation of these delicacies.

Mrs. Macmillan is giving an exhibition of maple products in Miss MacPhail's room in the Parliament Bldg., Ottawa, on April 16th.

THE NETS OF FATE

"It is that I love you! You may be surprised, but why should you be? You may urge against that plea that this is only our second meeting, but what of that? Love between a man and a woman does not require years for its growth. It is born in a moment, and it is the simple truth that on that night when in the wrecked car you told me to help your aunt first, love for you sprang in my heart, and I have thought of you every day since, and I have been very sure that ultimately Fate would bring us together again."

"Fate has chosen an odd moment for her work," said Jocelyn with a wry smile.

"There could have been no earlier moment, Miss Ambrose. Till an hour ago you would have held yourself bound, would you not? But now you are free to accept my offer, to let my love plead for me. Will you not let it do so? Will you not recognise the divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will?"

For a moment or two the girl was silent, and he flashed her an anxious look. Then she spoke.

"I cannot answer now, Mr. Lancaster. After what has happened this afternoon I feel that it would not be fair to you to do so, and if I were to agree to your wishes immediately I should feel that I was taking advantage of your affection. Any part in a storm, you know, I should be afraid of that feeling—afterwards, and having made a mistake once, I must be very careful lest I do so a second time. Believe me, I feel deeply honoured by your offer. It is a real save for the humiliation I have endured this afternoon; but I feel that I must not—dare not—hurry over my decision. I hope you do not feel hurt—that you understand."

"Yes," he answered slowly. "I understand and I am content to wait. But one privilege I claim, Miss Ambrose, I should like to be allowed to call on you and your aunt."

Jocelyn Ambrose gave vent to a little laugh of amusement.

"You do not know my aunt," she said, "or you would never ask. She would not forgive me if she knew I had denied her the pleasure. She is a hero-worshipper and can find a good word for millionaires."

"Then I shall call to-morrow," he answered cheerfully, and thereafter turned the question to less vital things.

It was the day following, and John Lancaster, having made his bow to Jocelyn's aunt, and having made light of the service he had rendered, was talking to the two ladies, and endeavoring to make himself interesting.

"Did I understand you to say you have been in a previous railway accident?" asked Jocelyn's aunt, in response to something he had said.

"I have been in two previously," he answered with a smile. "One was in America, and like everything American it was on a colossal scale. The wrecked coaches were burned and I can assure you it was a terrible business. It was my experience in that affair that made me take charge on the night of the disaster to the Flying Highlander, that and the knowledge that if somebody takes control and speaks with authority in a moment of stress the worst panic may usually be avoided. There are plenty of men without personal initiative in this world who will do what they are told in trying moments, but who otherwise would run about wringing their hands helplessly."

"It is then that the really strong man proves himself," said the elder of the two ladies.

John Lancaster laughed at the implied compliment.

"Oh, as to that," he said, "when a man has been in tight places it comes natural to do what is necessary, quickly. It is merely instinctive action. On the second occasion there wasn't much need to do anything except pick one's self out of the wreckage."

"Where was that?" asked Jocelyn.

"It was in Africa, up at a place called Umpago, and it happened in the early days of the Uganda Railway. The last coach broke from its couplings as the train climbed an incline, and, running back, toppled over an embankment, which, fortunately, was not very steep. There were half a dozen of us in the coach, and we were all bruised and battered without being seriously injured. The nuisance of it was that the driver of the engine went on in blissful unconsciousness and we had to tramp to Umpago under a blazing sun."

"Umpago!" said Miss Ambrose.

"Jocelyn, isn't that the place where Pat was in the spring?"

"Yes, auntie," answered the girl, and then explained to Lancaster, "Pat is my twin brother."

"Indeed," said the millionaire quickly. "I did not know you had a brother."

Jocelyn laughed. "He pursues vain Fortune with the devotion of a lover, and he thinks that Africa is his hiding-place. That is his photograph on the table at his elbow."

John Lancaster turned to look at the photograph, and as his eyes fell on it a swift gleam of interest shot in them. He picked the portrait up and stared at it deliberately. There was an odd intonation in his gaze which struck Jocelyn, but which she accounted for by Pat's relationship to herself. After a little time the millionaire looked up.

"There is a quite remarkable likeness between your brother and yourself, Miss Jocelyn."

Jocelyn smiled. "That is but natural under the circumstances, Mr. Lancaster."

"Yes," he answered, abruptly. He was thinking of an occasion when the young man in the photograph and himself had encountered each other, and as that remembrance was a very disquieting one, he was trying to assure himself that he was mistaken, that a chance likeness was misleading him. He failed to do so, however. He had not the slightest doubt that he was right, and the remembrance of the circumstances of that meeting filled him with concern. He hid his feelings, however, and with an interest that was apparently merely polite inquired: "Where is he now? In Africa?"

"Oh, no! He came back a fortnight ago, but the day after he went to Paris, and has not yet returned. He appears to be moving back, and we have to send letters to Paris."

Lancaster nodded, and set the photograph back in its place. Although he was puffed in mind, he replied gaily enough.

"That is the way with youth. Movement is the essence of life. The conversation drifted in other channels, and the minutes passed so quickly that when Lancaster rose to go Miss Ambrose, glancing at the clock, was astonished at the time it recorded.

"I hope, Mr. Lancaster, we may see you again, shortly. An acquaintance begun like ours should not be merely a polite one."

The millionaire smiled. "I shall be delighted, but I cannot allow the matter to be one-sided; when you spoke I was wondering if I could persuade you and Miss Jocelyn to dine with me at the Cecil, and then go on to see 'The Mississippi' for Friday, and I should be delighted if you would come."

Miss Ambrose looked at her niece, and Lancaster also looked at her. Their eyes met, and to the girl the man's eyes seemed full of appeal. She remembered all that she owed to him, and she smiled.

"Auntie is devoted to comic opera. Mr. Lancaster. It is the one frivolity she indulges in, and for her sake I think we must accept your invitation."

Lancaster smiled. "Then I shall look for you and live for that evening."

He spoke gaily, but Jocelyn knew that he was in earnest, and even Miss Ambrose caught the undertone of meaning in the words so lightly spoken. When he had gone, she turned to her niece.

"Jocelyn," she said, "that man is in love with you."

ran like an infection through the crowded audience, and in laughter even Jocelyn forgot the glasses levelled at the stage box, which, on their first appearance, had been somewhat of an embarrassment to her.

"Isn't she splendid?" she cried in one of the furrows that the actress's art called forth.

John Lancaster smiled. "Vera Vanity is always splendid, both on the stage and off."

"You know her?" she asked, a little note of surprise in her voice.

"Yes," answered the millionaire frankly. "I have known her these seven years. She is quite an old friend of mine."

Jocelyn was a little chilled. There was a warmth in his tones which she did not like, and when next she spoke there was a note of prejudice in her voice.

"I always thought that one did not count such people as one's friends."

"Many people don't," answered the millionaire carelessly, "in spite of the praise so king countesses from their ranks. But Vera Vanity is the right sort—and I happen to know that four years ago she refused the hand of one of the oldest baronets in England."

"Indeed, did she tell you?"

"She asked my advice."

"And you gave it?"

"Yes, I advised her to follow her heart, which she did, with the result that she is still Miss Vera Vanity of the Musical Comedy stage. That itself, in these days, should be an unimpeachable certificate of character."

Jocelyn turned from the more serious note he had introduced. "She is evidently very popular. Look, the place is crowded."

She waved a hand towards the auditorium, and as she did so allowed her eyes to rove over the sea of faces. Suddenly her gaze was arrested, and riveted itself on a laughing face in the back row of the stalls. She stretched a hand for the opera-glasses, and, adjusting them, directed them at the face which had attracted her eyes. Then she let them fall. She had not been mistaken, the face was that of Dorian Paxton.

The Week At Ottawa

Specially Written for the Huntingdon Gleaner

Before the Members went home for Easter they celebrated the event by two discussions, one on higher statesmanship, the other was a review of the most disgusting election episode in recent Canadian history. In other words, they discussed the British-Egyptian treaty and the Athabaska, Alberta, election of 1925.

Miss Macphail was responsible for the first debate, for she moved a resolution to the effect that the government should set up a department "for the promotion of peace and international understanding". In support of her motion Miss Macphail stated that in the first twenty years of the present century fourteen countries spent 61 billion dollars in preparation for, and carrying on war. According to Miss Macphail out of every dollar spent by the United States 82 cents is for war purposes, and Great Britain spends 14 out of every twenty shillings for the same purpose. As to Canada she was not sure what the exact expenditures were but ventured the estimate of at least 50 cents out of every dollar.

As to the particular aptitude of Canada to assume the post of peace-maker Miss Macphail argued: "Canada's position geographically makes her a country that is important in the history of the world at this moment. Geographically we belong to one continent. Politically we belong to another continent. There is no good reason why we cannot be the interpreter of the one continent to the other. Then, too, the Canadian mind is used to a large framework, Canada is a large, if not too thickly populated, country, and the Canadian mind can move with ease from Halifax to Vancouver, surely with much more ease than the European mind can move over the same distance. That should make it easy for us to give the world a lead in learning to cover mentally a larger space. The international mind is really nothing more than a mind that does not stop at the borders of one's own country, but bridges that gap that lies between one's own country and other countries, and bridges it sympathetically."

Her plan called for an extensive programme of propaganda, lecturers, etc., also a remoulding of Canadian viewpoint for "I do think we have a British superiority complex that must be very offensive to other nations, and cannot be making any contribution to the harmony of the world." Several other speakers followed her and one candidly suggested that he could not foresee how even those speakers could ever agree on a programme, let alone put it into effect. Dr. Manion took strong exception to the arguments that Canada was a warring nation and declared: "No one can charge that Canada is leading the way towards great armaments, for this country, whether under our party or the Liberal party, has simply preserved the nucleus of a defence force. That is a necessity for any self-respecting nation. I think Canada spends on her defence force the lowest amount, per capita, of probably any country in the world."

The Prime Minister in speaking to the motion referred to the progress made by Canada in the last few years, and quoted from British authorities statements to the effect that the Canadian attitude in the 1922 crisis with Turkey had made the outbreak of war with that country impossible at the time. He enlarged on the subject and later on was cross-examined by Mr. Stevens who objected to those events being brought into discussion. Turning to the present difficulties with Egypt the Prime Minister made certain statements, which from the constitutional viewpoint, have an interesting side. At the last Imperial conference it was provided that the Dominions should be consulted when negotiations were commenced with any power opinion in advance. The first test of this came in connection with Egypt, which is independent in form, but which is policed by British forces. An agreement was arrived at between the British Government and the Egyptian authorities, and the form of this agreement was submitted to the Canadian government. The Canadian authorities, deciding that it was not of Canadian concern, objected to being a party to it, and the other Dominion's taking a like view, the formal agreement is between Great Britain and Egypt.

Local Elections
On Thursday the House of Commons discussed at length the now famous Athabaska election case. This election was held in 1925 and was contested by three candidates, a Liberal, a Conservative and a Progressive. The Liberal won but the tactics were disgraceful and in the spring of 1926 the King Government appointed a Judge as a Royal commissioner to investigate. Funds not being available for the purpose there were delays and later on in the year Mr. Justice Clarke undertook the work and he made his report. He found that there was a wide abuse of the powers in the election; that the voters' lists were frequently padded, that polls were opened in the bush and ballots put in the boxes without an elector casting them, etc. The statements presented during the debate on Thursday were to the effect that the Minister of Justice had acted in accordance with the law, and had brought all the records to the attention of the Attorney-General of Alberta, and it was decided that the House should investigate the Act to the side. Mr. Cahane told of his experiences in St. Lawrence and St. George: "I drew the attention of the house to this once before when this matter came up. I pointed out that in the electoral district of St. Lawrence-St. George before my first election I found on the list more than two thousand fictitious names. At the last election at which I was candidate I found more than two thousand fictitious names on the list and at the amend it. In the course of the discussion the Prime Minister stated that when the election of 1926 was on he personally wrote to the Liberal member of 1925 who had profited by the crookedness advising him that the Liberal party would not countenance him as a candidate.

Mr. Cahane Speaks
In the course of the debate several members gave their personal experiences in the past elections, and in particular Mr. Black of the Yukon, Mr. Hocken of Toronto and Messrs. Cahane and Bell of Montreal spoke for the Conservative present time, although I have not counted them, I am sure that coming in from the provincial registration and otherwise there are already on the list which would form the basis of a new revision, many hundreds of fictitious names. We all know that at elections certain gangs of men are hired in the city and men are even imported from outside to do impersonating. We know there are hundreds of impersonations of registered electors. We know that gentlemen who are late going down town after breakfast find that others have voted in their name.

Mr. Heaps: Why have there been no prosecutions in those cases?
Mr. Cahane: Because no individual alone has the funds or the means to prosecute a thousand people. I am not saying whether this is due to the efforts of the Liberal party or of the Conservative party; but in any of our constituencies in Montreal, in the municipal elections, largely in the provincial elections and still more largely in the federal elections, there are impersonations not by the hundred but by the thousand.

Mr. Heaps: Is it not a fact that these men when caught have been let off with neither fine nor imprisonment? Have they not been dealt with in the most lenient fashion?
Mr. Cahane: I think so, but perhaps I have been so much concerned with the conviction of some of them that I may not be able to give an impartial opinion.

In St. Antoine
Mr. Bell was blunt and spoke of the evils of "telegraphing" votes, saying: "I have every reason to believe that my hon. friends opposite are as sincere in this matter as those who sit on this side of the house; but why is it that when a general election takes place we should have gangs of men going around, paid through some mysterious agency, so that an election in the city of Montreal costs thousands of dollars simply on account of our trying to protect ourselves against crooks—because that is the only name that can be applied to them—and to give honest electors an opportunity to register an honest vote. If the ballot is supposed to be what we consider it is, namely, an honest expression of the views of the people regarding the return of an honest government, the Dominion Elections Act must be radically amended."

"When an election is called, what do we experience? The practice has been that on the day of the election certain gangs line up and they telegraph—that is the common expression used in my particular division—from one division to another. They take one particular division in the morning; in the afternoon they come over and raid another. We employ police protection to keep those men away from the polls, but how often do we succeed?"

The Prime Minister made a brief reply and in particular made reference to the comments of Mr. Bell: "Mr. Bell has referred to the last general election. He will recall that the last election was conducted by hon. gentlemen opposite, by his own party, and that they were acting under the Elections Act of 1920. The Elections Act as it is in Canada to-day is the Act which was brought into this house by hon. gentlemen opposite, I think in 1920."

Dr. McGibbon: Was not that act first submitted to the approval of the hon. gentleman?
Mr. Mackenzie King: Not that I am aware of, no. There was a committee of the house which considered the act, but it was a government committee, and the hon. gentleman was a supporter that introduced that act into parliament; and it was passed while they were in office. My hon. friend says that the act needs amendment. I agree with him in that. The act of 1920 made certain provisions which it was hoped would have the effect of remedying some of the abuses that had prevailed at election time; among other features that I recall was a clause that made the returning officers more or less permanent in their positions. But when hon. gentlemen opposite came in for the short time they were in office, a few months, they removed practically every officer and put friends of their own into those positions. So it was under their own act, administered by returning officers whom they themselves appointed, and in an election which they themselves were conducting, that the alleged delinquencies of the act were exposed.

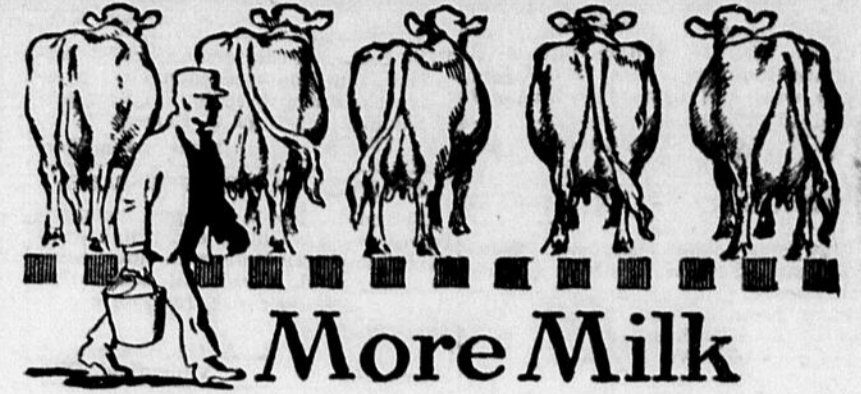

Mr. Bell: I would say that the same charges that I make would refer with equal force to the previous general election. I am not trying to imply that the government is any more responsible for these practices than is our party.
Mr. Mackenzie King: I think my

hon. friend is quite fair in his statement. I agree with the point he has put forward, namely that the Elections Act is capable of direct improvement, and I may say that it is the intention of the government at the next session of parliament to propose improvements in the nature of amendments to the Elections Act. I hope that my hon. friend's objections will be among the number that will then be considered. All I wish to make plain now are the circumstances under which these difficulties that have been mentioned have arisen. Anyone coming into the house during the course of this debate would have imagined as he listened that all the sinners were on the other side of the house and that all the sinners were on this side."

Session Half Over
It now looks to be within the realms of probability for the House of Commons to finish its work before the end of May. The Budget speech, debate, resolutions and legislations have now all been passed, and in some cases the amendments to the laws have been given Royal assent. The Budget is the big topic of debate in a session, and with it out of the way legislative progress is made in the normal order of papers providing for legislation approval of trade treaties with Spain, Portugal, Czechoslovakia, Roumania, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, and Serbia, Croatia, Slovenia. The Minister of National Revenue is wanting to amend his legislation regarding the administration of the revenue collecting acts. Other Ministers have legislative proposals, but none of them appear to be contentious, and most of the fighting, if any, will be over the Estimates.

In the House of Commons various bills have been considered. The most important is that concerning the Sun Life Assurance Company, which was fought in committee and will probably go through a verbal barrage on the floor of the House of Commons. Last year it was passed by the Committee, but withdrawn in the House of Commons when an amendment was offered on the third reading. The Bell Telephone Company has a bill on the programme and it was passed by the Railway committee, but Mr. Church of Toronto now has a notice on the paper to the effect that it should be referred back to the Committee again. The bill provides for an increase of capitalization and the chances are that it will go through without a great deal of discussion. In the Banking Committee a long investigation has been started over the banking system. Last week Governor Harding of the Federal Reserve Bank of the United States was on the witness stand and rather disappointed those who urged that Canada should have a like system, by declaring that in his opinion we now have a system more satisfactory to our needs than the United States plan.

In the Senate
The senate has been faced with the problem of trying to appear to be busy with nothing to do. The senators must wait for legislation to come from the House of Commons and the long budget and address debates held up by the legislative programme so the senators have been discussing Newfoundland, the Great Waterways system, etc. They have killed one bill, the one providing that the newspapers shall publish on their front pages at regular intervals statements showing who owns them, what they owe, and who writes their editorials, etc.

More Milk

An extra inch of milk in the pail means extra dollars to you, over and above your feed bill.

Nearly every cow owner gets that increase with Cow Chow and Bulky-Las.

It costs about a dollar a month more to feed Checkboard Chows, but that difference is more than made up in the first week. The rest of the month you get your extra milk for nothing. Feed out of the Checkboard bag and you will get more milk.

Municipal Service Corporation Limited

Build this Spring!

Your Community Needs It

Birdland has set the example -- To build

Community pride is an outstanding asset. To withhold that pride one must have reasons and justifications. Justifications are most plainly evidenced by material and social progress. Social progress naturally results from the material. The material is a consequence of the fruitful labors of the residents of your community.

Any public enterprise in your locality might be endorsed, if the fact were brought to their attention, by managers of large business concerns in other cities, but it is an issue whether or not they would lend it their financial support. We are told again and again to support those from whom we obtain the most favors and reason tells us that such an education is not necessary. In an election you vote for the candidate who will give you the greater material benefits. Then, is it not logical that you support your home-town merchants. They can supply you with your very needs at once and if not they are only too willing to obtain such. Don't say, "Oh, well, to help them out, I'll trade at home." Remember that YOU are the one who will eventually benefit by it. Where present business concerns prosper the site is more appealing to outside industries; the more industries; the more population; the more population, the more homes bought, the more furnishings and eatables. The advantages of trading at home could be enumerated for pages more but we know you possess enough insight and intelligence to figure out problems for the successive generations.

THANK YOU

Call up your customers by long distance

An occasional call will make it almost impossible for them to stop trading with you.

Do you realize that one of the largest returns you can secure from the expenditure of a small sum is to be had by calling up old customers occasionally by Long Distance?

Friendliness begets friendliness. How can you or I keep away from a merchant who spends his money to show his interest in our affairs? We can't.

The newspaper editor counts on this trait in human nature. He mentions subscribers' names frequently, because he knows they will look for them in his paper.

The merchant who occasionally calls customers by Long Distance is one who can't be overlooked or forgotten.

One of the most interesting lectures of the season was given in St. Andrew's Hall by the Rev. E. J. Hart, D.D., on "The World's Temperance Outlook" under the auspices of the W.C.T.U. The scientific effects were marvellous. While depicting the apparent set-backs and the loss of prohibition in the provinces, it was hoped yet to gain more than had been lost through organizations and education. The temperance work from the Atlantic to Great West and the British Isles was ably presented. He described some of the strange customs of the Eastern people. From Gibraltar the tourists went to Naples and Cairo and thence to India. Splendid descriptions of the great Mohammedan and Hindu centres were given. Japan, New Zealand and Australia were also visited. Rev. W. T. Pritto presided over the meeting and the votes of thanks to the speaker and Mr. Peter Reid for manipulating the slides were given by Mrs. D. Lang. The audience though small in number was appreciative and the collection was given to Dr. Hart for his work.

The monthly meeting of the Royal Temperance Legion was held in St. Andrew's Hall on April 1st, with the President, Miss Jean Jack presiding, with a good attendance of members and two new members were enrolled. Miss Rhoda Macfarlane gave an address on Tobacco. The meeting closed with the Mizpah Benediction.

The regular meeting of the W.M.S. was held at the manse on Wednesday, the President, Mrs. G. Horsnell presiding. During the business session several items were discussed. It was decided to issue Easter Thank-Offering envelopes.
