Hospital numbers hovering around 1,000

Record Staff

There were 1,006 people in hospital with COVID-19 across Quebec on Thursday, a decrease of six from Wednesday's update. The number of people in intensive care across the province also decreased by two, to 23.

Due to a technical issue with Public Health's database, new information on the number of deaths was not available Thursday, nor was there an update about the number of health care workers absent for Covid-related reasons. At last count there had been 15,467 deaths linked to the virus since the start of the pandemic in March of 2020.

In the Eastern Townships the number of hospitalizations went back down to 79. Thursday also marked the first time since March that there was no one with Covid in the region's intensive care wards. There was no update on the number of local Covid-related deaths for the same reason as the lack of provincial data, keeping the regional total at 621.

Black Cat Books looks for new owner

AIDEN WILSON

Janice LaDuke inside Black Cat Books

Special to The Record

Black Cat Books has been a staple in Lennoxville for 24 years, with owner Janice LaDuke at the helm. Alas, all good things must come to an end-for LaDuke, at least. But before she goes, LaDuke wants to pass on the reins by putting the store up for sale, in hopes someone with as much passion as her would see the legacy of the Black Cat live on.

In a Facebook post on June 7, she announced the news that she would like to start a new chapter in life, but assured people that "Black Cat Books is NOT closing and will continue to operate as normal while a new owner is sought."

For a walk down memory lane, LaDuke was kind enough to recount how the shop came to be, off the back of hard work and another store by the name of McRat's.

In 1985, above the hardware store in town, the MacRat's books store opened with LaDuke and Kathy Williams,

Good Reads

Lennoxville Library

Review by Vincent Cuddihy

I recently renewed acquaintance with Susan Hill, one of my favourite mystery writers. Specifically, her two most recent Simon Serrailler stories drew my attention: The Benefit of Hindsight (2020) and A Change of Circumstance (2021).

A well-educated young couple are at home in their house in the country on a rainy night. A knock on the door reveals a soaking couple whose car has broken down a few hundred yards away and who are unable to get a connection on their cell phones. Invited in, they make the required call to their service number and, after a brief tour of the house, they head back out into the rain. A couple of weeks later, the good Samaritans receive in the mailbox a pair of tickets to an opera from their grateful beneficiaries. Imagine the hosts' shock when they return from the show to find their home has been carefully looted, as though the thieves knew exactly what to look for and where to find it.

Simon is the head of the major crimes unit in Lafferton, a medium-sized city in the southwest of England. In spite of advice from his team and his sister Cat, a local GP, Simon chooses to keep news of this robbery under wraps. He thinks that if the thieves believe the police have not made the connection between the distressed visitors and the theft, they may be emboldened to act again and perhaps do something careless that will lead to their arrest. After all, the only real victim of this crime is the insurance company.

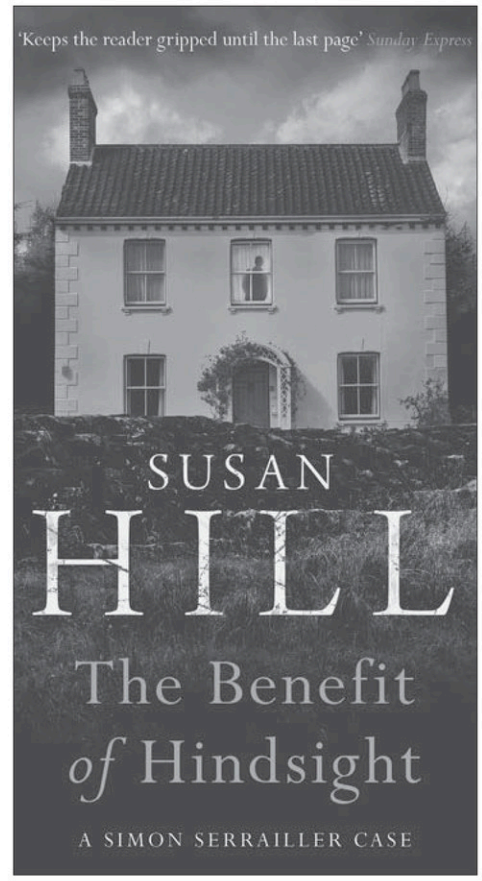

This is a decision that will haunt Simon with the benefit of hindsight. A few weeks later, another robbery occurs with the same methodical precision in the thieves' selection of loot. Only this time the residents appear to have returned unexpectedly early. Both of them have been savagely beaten and inflicted with life-threatening injuries. Not only is Simon's judgement thrown into question, but also his priorities: his determination to catch the culprits has taken precedence over his obligation to warn the public he is supposed to be protecting about the presence of this obviously well-organized gang and their methods.

Dissension within the gang leads more to the undoing of some of them than any special work by the police. But Hill leaves a number of threads dangling at the end of the book. A reader could be forgiven for expecting them to be tied up in the sequel. Some are, some aren't. I found this rather frustrating.

At the end of Benefit of Hindsight, one of the purported burglars has been arrested. But he had an accomplice. No mention is made of any efforts to pursue him, or of whether the arrested man has been successfully prosecuted. On the other hand, Simon's chance encounter with an old girlfriend does get picked up and becomes an important part of A Change of Circumstance.

One important change from earlier books in this series is that these are as much about Cat as about Simon. The writing is still very good, but Hill seems to be more preoccupied with the Serralliers' personal lives than with the crime stories. For instance, when one of the pair who had cased the home is found dead, neither of the victims of the robbery is asked to identify her. Perhaps Hill is trying to show the cracks that are occurring in understaffed police departments. Or perhaps she is trying to show how Simon is losing control of his cases. Either way, it is irritating.

A Change of Circumstance is an even more sinister story than The Benefit of Hindsight. These criminals are selling drugs. Not only are they trying to lure youngsters into addiction to dangerous chemicals; they are also using children as young as eleven to act as couriers in the distribution of the product to existing users. This is a menace that the police have known was coming. Networks like this have been operating in larger cities for several years. These are more webs than gangs, since each level of the operation has little knowledge of the level above that provides the supply and enforces payment.

Hill's best writing is her description of the reaction of a family who have found their fourteen year old daughter hanging from the banister of the front hall stairway. Once again she lets the crime story slide as the police limit their inquiries to the girl's parents. They never speak to her chums at school, even though earlier passages made it clear that some of them were aware that she was in difficulty and had begun to behave abnormally.

I did find these stories gripping, primarily because of the superb quality of the writing. But I do think Hill is trying to do too much, with the result that some important parts of her stories are falling through the cracks.

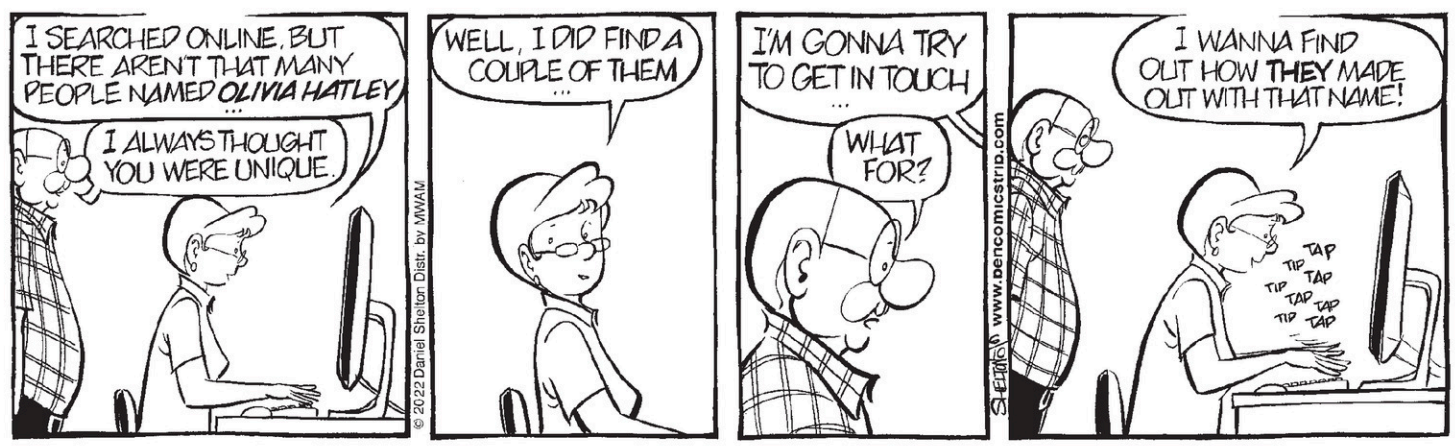

The Benefit of Hindsight is available at the Lennoxville Library.

Dunham residents temporarily host Ukrainian family fleeing war

By Michael Boriero

The past two weeks have been chaotic, stressful and emotional for Tamara Gimazova and her family, after they uprooted their lives in Ukraine to find peace and begin a new life in Canada.

Gimazova found respite in the arms of Dunham residents Michelle Julien, Jonathan Sommer and their 15-year-old son Theo. She contacted Julien through the Facebook group, CANADA - Host Ukrainians / Hébergeons les Ukrainiens, on May 14. The family arrived two days later.

"[Julien] has really helped us. She helps us every day from morning to evening and I don't understand how people do all of this, getting a social insurance number, opening a bank account, finding a job, finding a place to stay or renting an apartment," Gimazova said.

Gimazova was visiting her husband's family in Turkey when Russia invaded Ukraine. She immediately started looking into an escape to Canada. And while she was able to land safe and sound in Montreal, there are still a lot of obstacles to overcome before settling down.

Her husband, Erdem, has already started working as a painter. Their eldest son, Arseniy, a 13-year-old, enrolled at Massey-Vanier High School one week after arriving in the Eastern Townships. And 20-month-old Marat has been keeping busy on Julien's 26-acre property.

"I had discussed it with my husband prior. You know it was something that when the war broke out we both agreed it was something as a family we wanted to do, but the rest was kind of my doing in terms of funding and pursuing," said Julien, noting there is still work to be done.

Gimazova had to leave for Turkey late Wednesday to get a new driver's license. She had lost it during the long and cumbersome journey to Canada. She'll need it if she wants to get around freely without waiting for her husband, or asking Julien for a lift. It'll also be useful for work.

According to Julien, Gimazova has a background in childcare. They have already set up a potential job opportunity at a daycare in Knowlton, she explained in a phone interview on Wednesday. But Gimazova has a temporary work permit, and it excludes jobs in childcare.

The only way around the work permit stipulation is to get a medical examination. So Julien brought Gimazova to Montreal for tests that came out to $710, which she paid out of pocket. If everything goes well, Gimazova could help a depleted childcare workforce, Julien noted.

"The medical is a blood test, chest x-ray, and urine test, so we have a few weeks before the results and after that hopefully she'll be able to work at the daycare in Knowlton," Julien said, adding Gimazova will also be able to get Marat a spot in the daycare, if she lands the job.

While Julien helps Gimazova maneuver a complex system, she noted that the government, both federal and provincial, have been causing more headaches than anything else. Canada announced financial aid for Ukrainian immigrants on June 2, but nothing has come through.

"We have been to the immigration offices, we have made multiple phone calls, we went back to the airport, we've been online, desperately trying to re-do the whole process and running into one wall after the other," Julien said, sharing she hasn't even started the RAMQ applications.

She told The Record that under the federal emergency measures, Gimazova and her family are entitled to $3,000 per adult, and $1,500 per child. However, when the displaced family checked in at the airport, customs agents failed to identify that they were eligible for filling the shelves with second-hand books scavenged from anywhere and everywhere.

When asked why it shut down, LaDuke explained, "it was sort of just pre-internet, so I was working with no internet. I was just using second-hand books, I couldn't search things, I couldn't list things online, and I was a single parent; I couldn't make enough money on that."

After going off to do her master's and working at the Bishop's University library for a time, she was inspired by a friend and encouraged to go at it once again under a new name.

Black Cat's start was similar to that of McRat's, with LaDuke saying, "I collected books, enough to start with, because when we started out we were just second hand, then I quickly began carrying new books by local authors."

She loved going to charity sales for books though, saying "the money I'm spending to buy my stock is going into scholarships. I used to go to a couple of big ones down in the states, and the money I was using to buy stock was being turned around and given to students, which was really satisfying."

Throughout the years LaDuke said the store has had the opportunity to promote and work with countless local authors, and even managed to squeeze book launches into what little room in the store isn't inhabited by literature.

"It's been a tough haul as far as finances go," she mentioned. "People said to forecast. Is this a good business in this area? And it would never have gone, nobody would have recommended to do an English bookstore in Lennoxville! But that's what I wanted."

"It's not a get rich quick scheme at all," LaDuke admitted, "It's not even a get-rich scheme on the slow basis! I've been here 24 years, and when I went from being a reference librarian to here, like phew, I was down below the poverty line; but I love the work, I love the books, I love the people."

LaDuke said she'll miss seeing folks come into the store, having met a huge array of friendly faces over the years, with many becoming much more than just customers for her.

"A lot of my clients have become friends, you know, it's really hard. How will I see these people if I'm not here every day? It's a concern."

On why she wanted someone to take over the business, she said, "It's a viable business now, it's doing better now than it has, and I'd really like to see it continue. I think a lot of people really rely on it, who would rather not shop online."

In the announcement for the sale, LaDuke said, "the ongoing support of the local community has sustained this dream of mine, and now that the shop is for sale, I'm hoping you or someone/s you know might be interested in being the next owner of Black Cat Books, continuing to provide and care for our Eastern Townships readers."

ONE COLUMN, FOUR VOICES

Open to the Spirit

Today's word: Pride

By Revs Mead Baldwin, Rabbi Boris Dolin Lee Ann Hogle, and Rev. Carole Martignacco

1) Our word today, "Pride" can carry many negative connotations. There are quotes like "Pride goeth before a fall". The bible is full of negative verses about pride, like this one from Proverbs, "when pride comes, next come disgrace". Jesus even told some parables against pride. Some hymns warned against pride. "Take up your cross, heed not your shame, nor let your foolish pride rebel". One of the songs I learned once at summer camp was "We are one in the Spirit, we are one in the Lord". Another line was "They'll know we are Christians by our love". It was quite catchy and very singable. One line confused me. It read "we'll crucify our pride". Finally, of the 7 deadly sins, pride is the first one in the list. It sure sounds like pride is something to avoid.

For me pride is not a deadly sin, but an important character trait. When I work with young people I encourage them to be proud of who they are, especially if they are struggling with their identity. I found a better bible verse to memorize, Galatians 6:4 "Each one should test their own actions. Then they can take pride in themselves".

June is Pride month, when we celebrate all sexual identities, and accept that God has created us each to be beautiful in our own way. This is such a radical change from the many, many years of hate and discrimination. I am proud that my denomination has welcomed gay and transgender members, ordained them ministers, and even elected two so far to be Moderators of our denomination. I am so proud to be a part of such a welcoming church. Our church has a beautiful Rainbow sign in front.

I would like to conclude with the real lyrics of that song I remember from camp, before it was changed to be more conservative. I see it as a mission statement.

"We are one in the Spirit, we are one in the Lord, We are one in the Spirit we are one in the Lord, We will guard each one's dignity and save each one's pride. And they'll know we are Christians by our love, by our love, and they'll know we are Christians by our love."

2) The spiritual path talks so much about humility as an important trait when relating to others, yet pride is often seen as a challenge meant to be overcome.

But we have to remember that pride is not the same thing as ego, and when utilized and held with intention, it is a necessary part of our interactions with others. In a world where there are too many who are shut down, hurt, dehumanized and destroyed, pride is in fact one of the most powerful acts of healing that we can bring to the world.

Pride is how we recognize our own self-worth. Far from being a blockage to encountering meaning, pride can be a necessary reminder that our lives are precious and that each of us is irreplaceable. The opposite of pride is not humility, but shame. And to feel shame about who we are, who we love, the way we relate to the world and want to be treated, can do serious damage.

Pride also means we can be thankful and take satisfaction in the inherent beauty and inner strengths of those around us. That we honor our neighbors and our friends, and not only respect but celebrate even those who are most different than us. We speak our truth, but others truths can also make us stronger, as long as they lead to more love and compassion in the world.

Pride shouldn't lift us above someone else, but should help us see a different part of ourselves. By standing with you I'm saying something to both others and myself about who I am.

Rabbi Akiba in the Talmud said, "Beloved are human beings that they are made in the Divine image, but even more love is felt when we know that we are made in the Divine image." We are all beautiful, we are all strong, and we all can work together to make the journey ahead one a bit easier and one that is open to all.

3) This week I attended my daughter's graduation exercises. My heart was full of pride as I reflected on all her hard work and all the obstacles she had to overcome to get to where she is now. Pride is an interesting sentiment. Too much of it puts our ego in the driver's seat. It makes a person arrogant and blind to the gifts of others. Not enough pride lowers our self-esteem and prevents us from fully utilizing all the gifts God has given us.

In order to guard against the excesses of pride a healthy dose of humility goes a long way. For though we may congratulate ourselves on our hard work and perseverance, none of us got to where we are without standing on the shoulders of those who guided, nurtured and physically fed and clothed us. There is no such thing as a self-made individual.

In order to guard against the lack of pride I would suggest that we rid ourselves of the notion that nothing but perfection will do. By definition we are flawed human beings, clay vessels that learn from actually making mistakes. The key to nurturing a sense of self-worth is to realize that the mere fact that we are upright and still here is a testimony to our perseverance despite the hardships endured.

Developing a healthy sense of pride is a balancing act between valuing the unique gifts and talents we have been given and appreciating all those who have helped us along the journey.

4) We so often think of pride in the negative. Since little on, it's rung in my ears, perhaps in yours too, that time-worn maxim: Pride goeth before a fall. To avoid the "sin" of pride, we were trained to embrace the virtue of humility as it's polar opposite.

Yet don't we tell our children, when we want to reinforce positive behaviours or accomplishments, how proud we are of them? My daughters when little were always courting my applause, as later did my students. The littlest ones always calling out, "Look at me!" How often I remember them watching to see if I was watching, catching my eye, glowing with the slightest spark of recognition. A wave or clap or a thumbs up would send them pumping higher on the swing set.

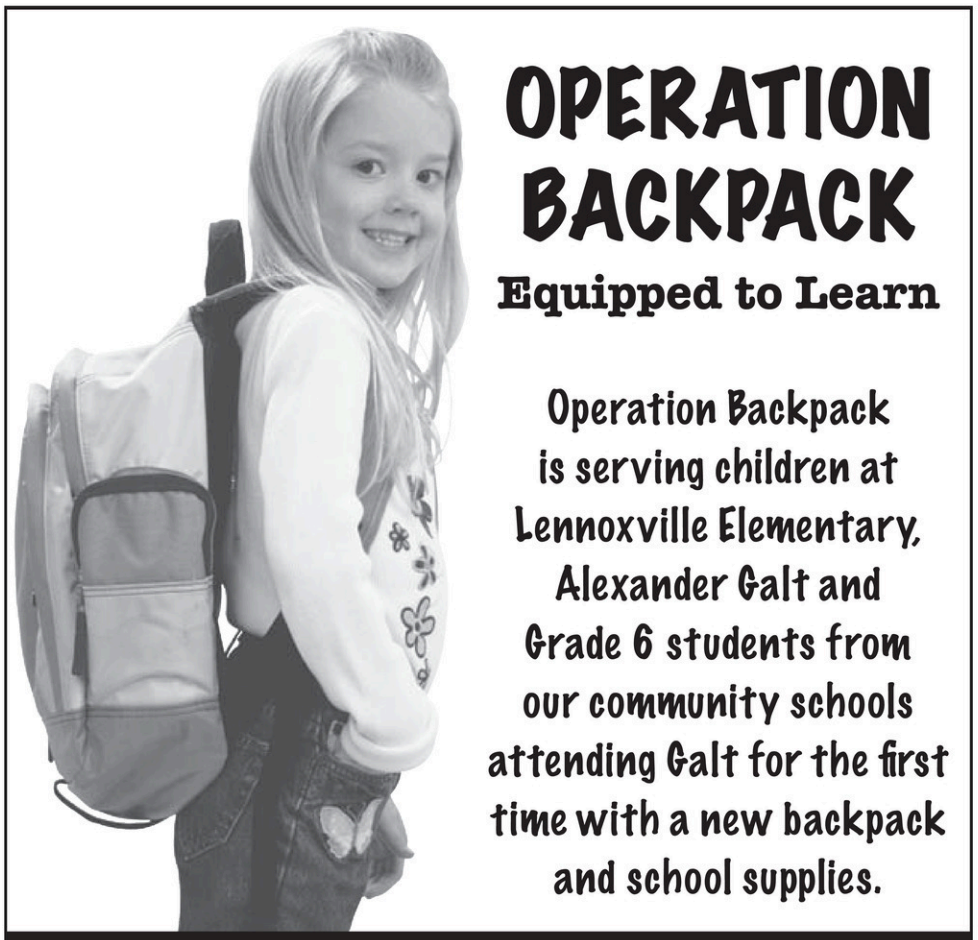

Don't we all thrive on gestures of affirmation? Pride is an awesome power of validation, one of the strongest tools we have for encouraging ourselves and others to work toward being and becoming the best we can be. Withholding that validation has immeasurable negative power, to stifle the sense of well-being and belonging, to confuse and confound the spirit, raising questions about who we are at the core, diminishing our sense of self and confidence.

June is Pride Month, a celebration of gender diversity. In this context, the "sin" of pride is the withholding of it, which causes others to fall into despair or self-doubt. Like any oppression that seeks to control others based on diversity, gender discrimination is a form of shaming and social control that can be debilitating and demoralizing. It sends a cruel message that conformity to some arbitrary norm is the price of belonging. And since we humans are inherently social beings, belonging means everything.

So I see the Pride parades, with their rainbow streamers and outrageous attention-getting antics, as people waving from the sidelines and shouting, "Look at me! This is who I am!" And I take joy in wildly waving back, with thumbs up and loud applause. Yes, I see you! You who are beautiful beyond believing. Your courage to claim who you are as God's chosen and choosing ones, both humbles and inspires me to accept myself as I am in response. I am so proud of all who, despite excruciating odds, demand the right to be who they truly are. And I can't help but imagine God, as the spirit of life itself, is also proud! Happy Pride month to us all!

One word, "pride", and 4 different voices. What does pride mean to you?

Saint-Denis-de-Brompton town council stands by its fire protection agreement

By Michael Boriero

A petition calling for a referendum on the proposed takeover of the Sherbrooke Fire Department in Saint-Denis-de-Brompton garnered 741 signatures, however, it did little to sway Mayor Daniel Veilleux during the municipal council meeting on June 6.

The Comité d'opposition de Saint-Denis-de-Brompton (CoSDDB) tabled the petition on Monday. According to a press release, it took about three weeks to collect all of the signatures, and there could be more out there, but the committee felt it was rushed into taking action.

The CoSDDB claims the petition represents approximately 32 per cent of the adult population. The committee wants transparency from the municipal council, and a thorough consultation forum before making a final decision about the future of the local fire protection service.

In a phone interview on Tuesday, CoSDDB spokesperson Michel Inkel told The Record that the town and Mayor Veilleux have not been forthright with the information that led them to strike a 20-year tentative agreement with Sherbrooke for fire protection and first responder services.

If the agreement is officially adopted by both Sherbrooke and Saint-Denis-de-Brompton, it will come into effect as of Jan. 1, 2023. But the CoSDDB has a hard time understanding why residents weren't consulted beforehand. The committee says it was done in a hurry.

Although a referendum is not legally required, the CoSDDB believes the town is morally required to hold a referendum and provide full transparency to its residents. When asked about how the town reacted to the petition, Inkel said it didn't turn any heads or change opinions.

"Honestly, nothing. There were a lot of questions from residents and ex-firefighters about the project and the municipality gave vague responses," he said, adding the town councillors reiterated that they were elected to make these types of difficult, but necessary, decisions.

There isn't much optimism left in Inkel's tank at this point. He once again asked for the town to make its studies into the fire protection and first responder services available to the public. And again, he was denied the request. But Veilleux noted more information will be out in July.

However, Inkel just wants to see credible, verifiable, and irrefutable data and information to confirm that a merger is the best course of action for the small town. If the studies hold up the way the council talks about them, then every resident will gladly accept the proposal, he said.

"The mayor has made claims in the media that we are spreading misinformation, when really all we are asking is to see the real information on their end," Inkel explained, sharing that he has lost faith in democracy, knowing this will all be agreed upon without giving resident's a voice.

Although Inkel is not a firefighter, he has spoken to several ex-firefighters and first responders in the town. These residents feel as though this decision is "being guided by amateurs," he said. The Record reached out to Veilleux, but the mayor was not willing to do an interview.

The town sent out a press release on Wednesday stating that after numerous interviews regarding the petition and the referendum request, the mayor will no longer be speaking to the media. Any future communication on the subject will be done through a press release.

The Saint-Denis-de-Brompton municipal council has unanimously backed their decision to merge with Sherbrooke. They also stand by their choice to not hold a referendum. The council maintains that a merger is the best option considering the explosion of operating costs.

The council also reiterated its intention to keep residents in the loop. Veilleux noted that a fire protection services merger will not only cut budget costs, but it is also recommended in rural areas. And although he acknowledged the petition, he added it doesn't represent the majority.

Despite all of the jumping through hoops, and hours lost running in circles online and over the phone, Julien told The Record that there have also been a lot of positives since Gimazova, Erdem, Artemiy and Marat touched down in Canada. The family is in good spirits, she said.

The entire community has taken it upon themselves to help the Ukrainian family. People are sending suggestions for homes and rental properties, as well as providing furniture, kitchenware, beds, and dining room sets, Julien explained, they're all working together.

"I think the vibe went from, in the beginning, really stressed and nervous to much more relieved and joyous. I'm reading from other people who are hosting families across Canada with a very similar kind of vibe," said Julien, sharing that the family has finally started to decompress.

The format of a My Take is 150 words - no more, no less - to express an opinion on a different topic each week. This week's topic was drugs.

My Take: By Aiden Wilson

The law of supply and demand has permeated business since its inception, and one that time and time again has proven to be impossible to undermine despite people's best attempts. Fact of the matter is, if people want it, they'll get it, and drugs are no exception. The decriminalization of illegal substances gives the chance for people unfortunate enough to fall victim to demand the chance to rebound from their mistakes; rather than ending their lives by throwing them behind bars. Czechia, the Netherlands, Portugal and Switzerland are all places where the decriminalization of drugs came along with harm reduction programs to help people in need. As a result, diagnoses among people who inject drugs in those countries are low. These examples show that without ways of getting help that won't put them in jail, people are in danger of going on until it's fatal.

My Take: By Michael Boriero

I feel like when some people hear the words "decriminalize drugs" their minds begin to wander. They start to imagine a kind of dank, dark and murky future, like something out of The Batman.

But this isn't legislation that needs to be feared, especially if the country, state, province, or territory committing to decriminalize drugs has fortified its health and safety resources.

I'm not a health expert. And I'm not pretending I understand the ins and outs of the "war on drugs." However, isn't it better to help users, rather than toss them into overcrowded jails?

Decriminalizing drugs might not be a perfect solution. And yes, people will continue to use and abuse their drug of choice. But it will also be done in a controlled and safe environment.

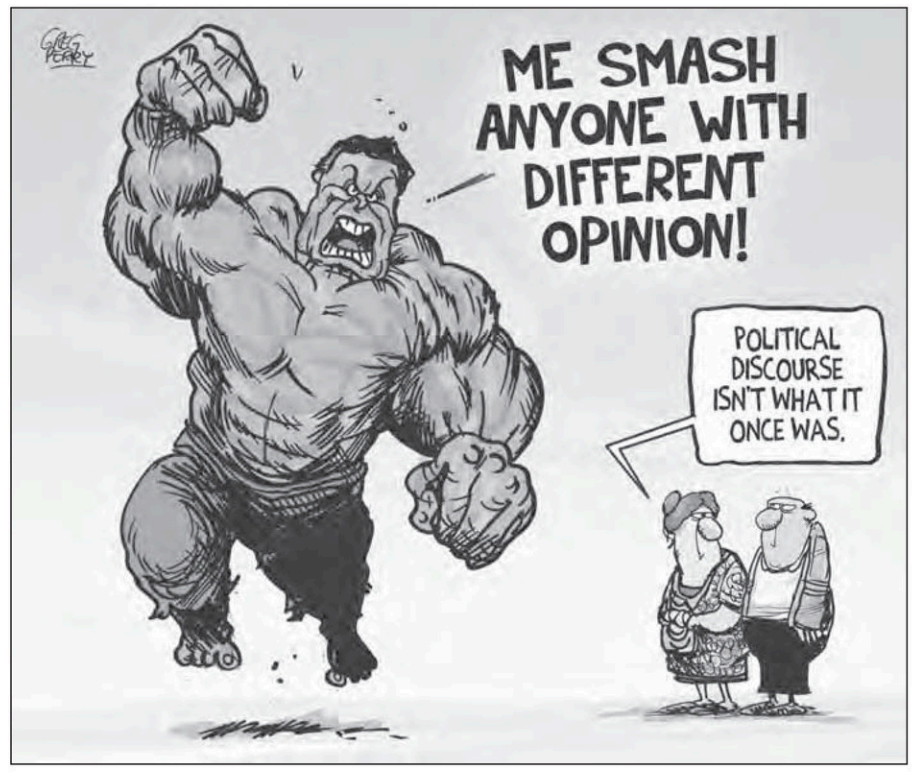

In theory, there should be less overdoses, right? We need to protect each other, not alienate.

My Take: By Cassie MacDonell

I believe approaching personal drug use within a health perspective, rather than as a criminal issue, is more beneficial when it comes to helping people addicted to drugs.

From an addiction standpoint, I never understood the purpose of placing drug possessors in jail, as this will likely do nothing to change opinions about drug use. However, I also don't understand what removing jailtime will do, in terms of rehabilitation, other than possibly helping eliminate stigma. I think that this is a good step, but I believe there should be more accompanying the decriminalization to get people the help they need.

I am no expert, nor can I predict the effects that the decriminalization of drug possession will have on British Columbia. But, I am happy that the government continues to take action to address the drug addiction and overdose problem, and hope this carries on.

My Take: By Gordon Lambie

One of the first things I learned in this job is that if you ask a yes or no question, you're unlikely to get anything other than a yes or no answer.

In journalism that kind of questioning leaves a reporter without much of interest to put into a story. It leaves out the matters of why? and how? that often result in a lot of clarifying details.

I'm not an expert on the law, but it seems to me that the legal system is another place where it's important to know more than just yes or no.

If the answer to, "Is a drug user a criminal?" is always yes, then we miss out on the bigger questions of what is driving drug use in the country, and people who might otherwise benefit from some kind of help end up falling through the cracks.

My Take: By Matthew McCully

The only thing criminal about drug users is the way they are treated by society.

I'm glad BC is taking steps towards decriminalizing drug possession, but it's a day late and a dollar short.

A hell of a lot more needs to be done to support those most vulnerable to addiction and substance abuse.

I used to live in Vancouver. I've seen first-hand the agony on the faces of people living on Skid Row; labouring to walk properly, as though a knee were shoved into their backs; sores all over their faces.

The definition of absolute despair.

And not one of the people living there chose that life for themselves.

It is criminal in the beyond that systemic injustices would strip people of their humanity, then turn around and punish them for latching on to the only means of escape available.

Bring help, not handcuffs.

COLUMNIST | Seriously, how long does it take to prepare an organic apple or banana and maybe a handful of nuts that you can bring with you in a bag to eat later if you won't be home at mealtime?

Dr. Theresa Nicassio equates healthy food choices with better lifestyle

A RUNNER'S MIND

CHRISTINE BLANCHETTE

When it comes to healthy eating for older adults, according to Canada's Food Guide, "Healthy eating can help promote and protect health and well-being, provide energy and essential nutrients to maintain health, prevent or lower the risk of chronic diseases like heart disease, type 2 diabetes, prevent muscle and bone loss to reduce your risk of falling or breaking your bones." The Food Guide also mentions that, "Cooking and eating healthy food does not have to be difficult, time consuming or expensive."

Dr. Theresa Nicassio is a registered psychologist and the author of award-winning cookbook, YUM. She explains in our Q&A that, "it actually can be far easier and less time consuming to prepare your own farm or garden totable meals than eating out." She also shares some healthy food choices for active older adults, along with a recipe.

Q: What are some of the best healthy food choices for active older adults?

A: One of the greatest challenges for many active older adults is remembering to care for the very vessel that makes their amazing lives possible. Taking time and caring for others and attending to multiple responsibilities at work, in your family, and in your community can inadvertently lead to the belief that there is not enough time to prepare beautiful food to nourish your body. And while exercise is an invaluable gift for yourself, it doesn't replace the nourishment of quality unprocessed nutrient-rich 'fuel' that is free of toxic chemicals.

You matter. This mindset shift is important for everyone, but especially when we get older. As we age, our body requires more support to stay vibrant, supple, and strong. Because of this, making food choices that are hydrating and nutritious, like water-dense vegetables and fruits, is a fantastic place to start. Avoiding foods that have been treated with pesticides or other chemicals is important for many reasons, not the least of which is the reduced burden they place on our already overworked body's detoxification system. Nothing beats untampered food straight from the healthiest of chemical-free organic soil.

Q: What are some healthy snack suggestions?

A: For those times when you are out and about and hunger sneaks up on you, it is great to have some easy grab-and-go travel snacks that are delicious and nourishing. If you don't, you are vulnerable to falling prey to the temptation to "grab a bite" on the go. When you do this, the quality of the food you will fuel your body with will more likely be overprocessed, packaged, and have substances that not only don't serve your body, but may also contain contaminants that do more harm than good.

Unfortunately, there is a popular myth that wholesome eating takes too much time. Seriously, how long does it take to prepare an organic apple or banana and maybe a handful of nuts that you can bring with you in a bag to eat later if you won't be home at mealtime? Carrot sticks and cauliflower florets are also easy travel snacks that are wonderful on their own, and even more delicious if you package up a little hummus to dip them in. Cherry tomatoes and grapes are great for snacking and are not only refreshing and full of flavour, but also have a high water content.

Q: What are the health benefits from farm to plate meals?

A: Oh my, I could write a book about that question!

First of all (and this will surprise many of your readers), it actually can be far easier and less time-consuming to prepare your own farm or garden to table meals than eating out. For example, let's say you're craving some pasta. If you have zucchini, you can just spiralize it in less than a minute and then put your favourite topping on it and voila, your nutritious dish is ready!

Another benefit of enjoying fresh whole foods is that you can avoid the additives and endocrine disrupters that are often present in packaged foods or are leached into the food from the packaging itself. When you grow your own food and if you have food allergies and sensitivities like I and so many others do, knowing where your food came from can give you tremendous peace of mind.

But more than anything else, when you grow your own untainted food and support farmers who do the same, you have the opportunity to make a real difference in the world — regenerating the soil, providing a safe haven and food for the pollinators and other beings we share the planet with, contributing to the reduction of global warming, as well as building community with your neighbours as you create beauty and abundance, having a blast and improving your mental health while you do it. Enjoy!

In the spirit of ultra-simple snacks/healthy eating:

Basil-Wrapped Stuffed Dates

This simple and delicious dish can be served as an appetizer or as a dessert. When Alex and I took Lovena Galyide's Raw Food Chef course at her wonderful restaurant, the Indigo Food Café in Vancouver, she taught us this recipe. We loved the surprising experience of the multiple and intense flavour dimensions—and how easy it was to make. I have had fun extending the possibilities for different fillings and encourage you to do the same—let your creativity soar! Thank you, Lovena, for allowing me to include this here.

Makes eight servings

Ingredients:

- 8 large fresh Medjool dates
- savoury fillings of your choice (eg whole cacao beans, nuts, bell pepper slices, soft or hard vegan cheese)
- 8 medium-to-large basil leaves
- 8 toothpicks

Directions:

Slice each date lengthwise, remove the pit and fill with the savoury item of your choice.

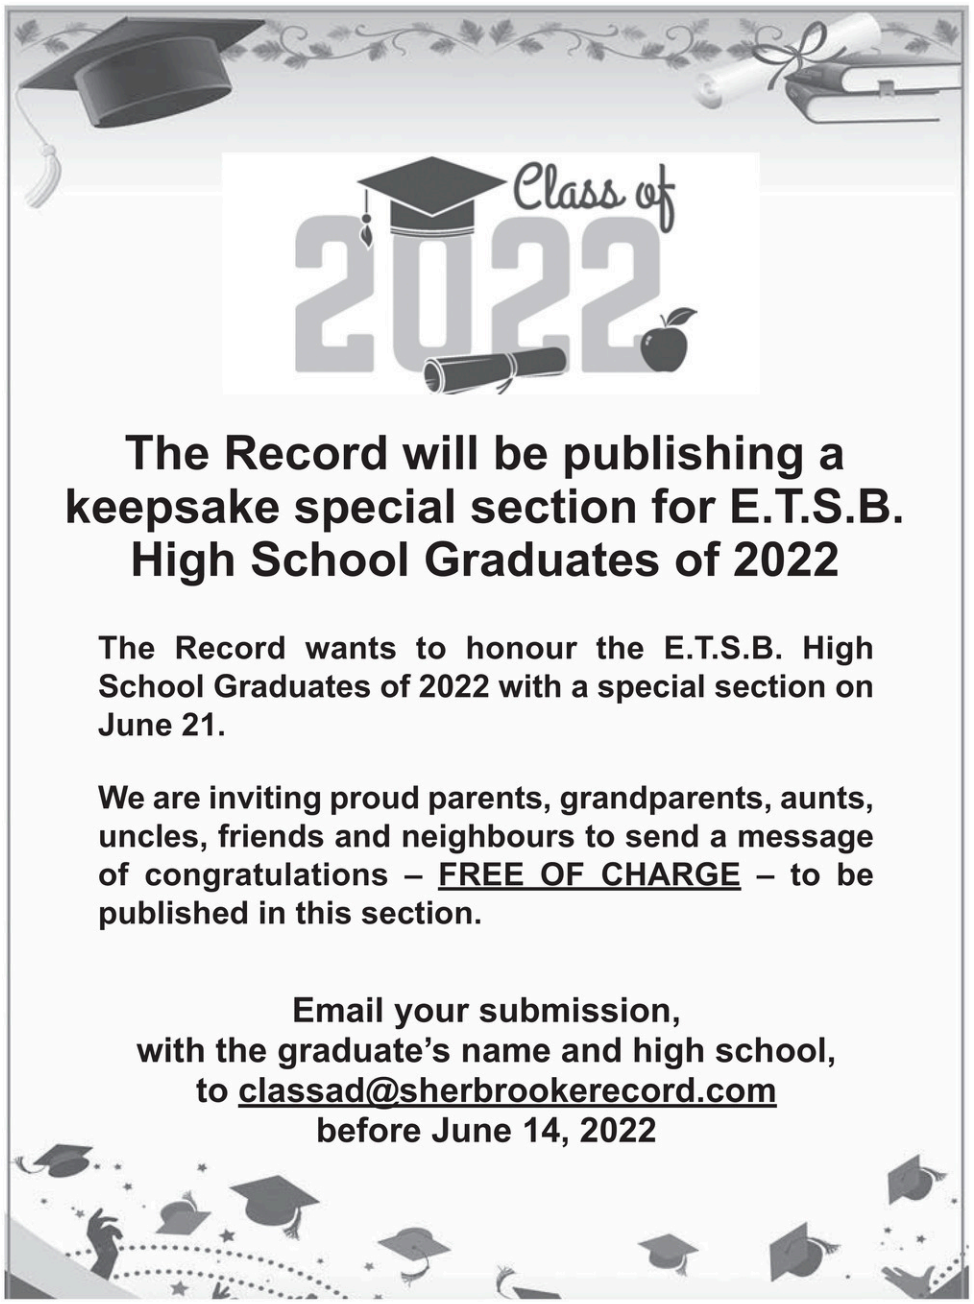

Wrap a basil leaf around each date, securing it with a toothpick.

Serve immediately or chilled.

Pierre Côté on a life shaped by the love of music

COUNTRY CONNECTION

Even if Pierre Côté was not a full-fledged country musician when he started out, he met country musicians along the way who inspired him to develop an interest in the genre.

"I can honestly say now that I am a true fan of country music. I have a genuine love for the musical genre. I truly feel that music and it is in my heart to stay" Côté shared.

Last fall, after being postponed three times due to the pandemic, Côté and his band, The Reel Country Band, took to the stage at The Vieux Clocher in Magog.

"We performed in front of a packed house. Everyone loved it and the owner Bernard-Y. Caza was delighted. We recorded and filmed the whole show to be able to put together a demo" he said in a recent interview.

Côté's reputation as a guitarist is well established. His versatility, his musical knowledge and perfect performances earned him the status of renowned musician in Quebec.

The man's career started a long time ago with a different musical genre. On both sides of his family, there were musicians. His father could also play many instruments and his mother was a talented singer.

Pierre Côté

His parents had a definite musical influence on the young boy. He recalled how there was always music in the house and instruments just waiting to be played.

And then came The Beatles.

Côté was nine years old, and he was fascinated by this music that his sister listened to all the time. Like he said at first he was impressed with the melodies and the vocals.

Later came the appreciation for the lyrics. To this day he stressed that he still loves The Beatles as much as he did back then.

When he was 11, Côté picked up a guitar the family had and tried to play. His father had music books, so young Côté started to look at them to see if he would learn anything at all.

"I was curious and, in no time, I figured out the chord pattern and soon I was able to play and sing a whole number for my parents. I had an understanding on how it worked" he stressed.

From the time he turned 12, his primary interest became the music. He used to stay in the house and practice day in and day out. His time was totally dedicated to guitar.

This led to his first band after a couple years. It was a tribute band to The Beatles of course, rightly named Apple. For Côté, it was his first time on stage playing guitar and singing "Roll Over Bethoven".

"I kept playing with this group till I was 17. Our style and repertoire evolved from The Beatles to Quebec's pop and American pop" he stated.

The young man wanted to pursue music, but his parents insisted for him to have a 'real' trade in case music didn't work. Like many other parents, they wanted their son to be prepared.

"I went on the get a bachelor's degree in electronics to please my parents. After that, I went to McGill to study Jazz. I did the whole program but it took me a little longer because I kept playing music on the side" he explained.

In 1990 came a special year for Côté . He started writing songs and got a job teaching music part-time at CEGEP Marie-Victorin, where he continued to teach until 2018, when he decided to retire and only play music. Around the same time he met singer Bourbon Gautier and Camille Belisle, who both introduced him to country music.

"I started playing music with Bourbon Gauthier and for the next 5 years I went on the road with him. Gauthier was pretty popular when he released his English album, Camel Back Road" he recalled.

He has played with many popular artists in Quebec, such as Roch Voisine, Marie-Denise Pelletier and Jim Corcoran. He went on tour with Sherbrooke's native Corcoran all over Quebec, but also in France and Belgium, at least 10 times. He also worked on many talk shows as part of the house band. He has also worked with many country artists, such as Bobby Haché, Georges Hamel, Pier Beland and later with Louis Bérube and Irvin Blais, Côté has collaborated on a few projects with Carl Marsh in Nashville. In 2005, he met country singer Johanne Provencher and they soon became a couple. Two musicians who have a common passion for country music.

"We also formed a band called Reel Country Band (inspired by one of Johanne's songs). The band includes Magog native Pascal Castonguay on bass and vocals, Francois Fortin now replaced by Daniel Couture on drums, Jean-Guy Grenier on steel guitar, Guy Gagné on fiddle, Johanne on guitar and vocals and me on guitar.

It is much harder to book such a big band, but we can also sometimes play in a smaller version of the band but we try as much as possible to include the whole band" he explained.

They released their first album in March 2020 but with the pandemic, it was a lot harder to promote. They sold a lot more copies than expected but like Côté said, they were lucky because it was played on both Stingray and Sirius.

"Our first album was in English, but now we are in the process of selecting the songs for our next album. This one will be in French. We are looking at a release at the beginning of 2023" explained the musician.

The conversation took us on the fact that many artists turn to country music because the money is there. He agrees that if their love of country is genuine, it is suitable but it is not the case for many of them. Country is positively music from the heart. You need to be touched by it.

As far as he is concerned, Côté said that he will always play music of all genres, because of his fondness of music in general.

Reel Country Band will be performing at The Grande Vallée Country Festival, in Abitibi, on July 29 and at Le Rodéo du Camionneur, where Billy Ray Cyrus is also part of the lineup.

"I will also be on the road partly with Paul Daraiche and partly replacing Irvin Blais' guitarist. I find that I am pretty lucky" he said.

Well I think that talent has a great deal to do with his luck. Côté is a musician who finds his happy place in any musical genre even if Country and Bluegrass are now taking most of the room in his life.

I sure hope you get a chance to hear him perform.

This summer, book an evening at the opera!

Mark your calendars, la Maison d'Opéra et de Concerts de Sherbrooke is preparing a special summer event! On July 8, 2022 at 7:30 p.m., Une soirée à l'opéra (An Evening at the Opera) will offer an anthology of enchanting arias, in solos and duets. This concert will feature Catherine Elvira Chartier and Martin-Michel Boucher, who will perform well-known works that are sure to please. The orchestra of la Maison d'Opéra et de Concerts de Sherbrooke, conducted by Jean-Philippe Dutil, will provide the musical landscape that suits this high-level evening. On the program, works by Bellini, Bizet, Mozart, Offenbach, Puccini, Verdi, Wagner.

This special concert presented at the Saint-Charles-Garnier Church is the prelude to a new project by Pier Carlo Liva, manager of la Maison, who has great ambitions for opera in Sherbrooke... stay tuned!

Catherine Elvira Chartier, soprano. Catherine Elvira Chartier possesses great qualities as a performer and great musicality which make her the most sought-after soprano in the greater Sherbrooke region. She shone in the Cantate en trois lieux by Ingari, premiered in 2013, Le Messie, by Handel, Brahms' Requiem, Dvo àk's Te Deum, the Magnificat by Rutter and other sacred works. In 2016, she created the anthem for the convocation of the Université de Sherbrooke, written for her voice by Robert Ingari. She was the Comtesse in the Noces de Figaro, in a French translation by Eric-Emmanuel Schmitt, and worked with renowned chefs such as Ivars Taurins and Bernard Tétu.

Martin-Michel Boucher, baritone. A lyrical artist with a rich and velvety timbre, he stands out for his great musicality as well as the quality and versatility of his dramatic playing. After a master's degree in singing at the University of Montreal, he enriched his experience by working with many renowned conductors and directors. Active on the Quebec scene, he held more than twenty roles in opera and operetta, some of which have received rave reviews. He launched Vitrail in 2017, an album of sacred arias for voice, organ and oboe, then Un baryton sur Broadway, bringing together the most beautiful arias from musicals, arranged in an original way for orchestra. Next August, Martin-Michel will sing in Gaspésie, his native region: he will give a concert inspired by melodies by Spanish composers adapted for soprano, baritone and guitar.

Tickets on sale at the door, at Saint-Charles-Garnier Church, 3710, rue Charles-Hamel. General admission: $35.00; 25 and under: $15.00; 65 and over: $30.00, 12 and under: free. On sale now on the Maison's website: www.maisondoperaconcerts.com. Information, programming,

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, JUNE 10, 2022

Choose your words wisely. Misinterpretation will stand between you and what you want. Leave nothing to chance or up to others to handle for you. Explore how you feel about your options; take the path that suits you best. Don't feel married to someone's ideas and plans when you have your own to pursue. Balance and integrity will enhance the outcome.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Do the research. A biased opinion will cause uncertainty, leaving you in a vulnerable position. Go over details, rules and regulations, and make sure you have taken care of everything.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Get expert advice before initiating changes or starting something new. Make sure your plans fit your budget. A physical factor will influence how you go about making a transformation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Challenging yourself physically will ease stress. Put your energy into something that matters to you, and you'll find a way to make a difference. Home improvement projects are favored.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – A change will lift your spirits and put you in the mood to get out and have fun with friends or spend a romantic day with someone you love. Worry less about what others think.

Fuss over food

Dear Annie

FRIDAY, JUNE 10, 2022

Dear Annie: I am a high school sophomore, and my close friend of more than 10 years is suffering from an eating disorder. At lunch, it can be challenging for her to eat, but she takes it out on other people by criticizing and making fun of their food. One time, she even told me I was eating an apple wrong.

I know she is projecting her own food insecurities onto other people, but it makes me and everyone else at the table extremely uncomfortable. I've set boundaries several times and told her that it makes me feel bad, especially since I know that many people at our table struggle with body image and eating. She also already has a therapist, so I can't just ask her to get help. I don't want to guilt her, and I want to support her during this hard time, but I need to put myself first because it makes me feel bad about myself. What should I do? – Sick of Scrutiny

Dear Sick of Scrutiny: It sounds like you're already doing all the right things. Try to have another conversation with her – one on one, so you don't embarrass her – and explain why her food comments are so hurtful. If she still doesn't change, it might be time for you to switch tables. After all, lunch should not be the most stressful period of the school day.

Dear Annie: I am a 67-year-old mother and grandma. Due to health reasons, I had to move in with my daughter and her family. My daughter's significant other will go out and get food for everyone in the house but brings back nothing for me. I pay the rent and some of the bills because they can't afford to. I get so frustrated, and I am so tempted to move out, but I know I need help as I can't stand a long time to cook anything. I have trouble walking and must use a cane. I am scared to leave the house because of this. Losing your independence is frightening. Any suggestions? – Lost and Confused

Dear Lost and Confused: What a bizarre thing for your daughter's significant other to exclude you from meals – especially when you're helping to support the place they call home.

At its most innocent, it's an oversight on their part. At its most calculated, it is intentional neglect that might fit into the category of elder abuse. Put together a list of food and other items you'd like to have when it's time to shop and run errands so your preferences and needs are clear. And don't shy away from discussing it with your daughter directly. Surely, this can't be the way she wants you to be treated, and if it flies with her, it might be time to redirect your money from their rent to your own spot at a senior living facility.

Your Birthday

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 2022

Take a cautious approach this year when dealing with joint ventures. Know what you are up against, and don't shy away from going over and above the call of duty to ensure things unfold properly. Your discipline and hard work will keep you out of trouble and discourage others from taking advantage of you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Get everything in order and enjoy the rest of your day. You'll tap into what others are doing if you are observant. Look for faults; you'll find and fix a costly problem. Verify information.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You can have fun without going overboard. Look for common interests and, in order to gain popularity, make plans based on what will please the majority. Keep your costs low. Romance is encouraged.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You'll face opposition if you initiate change without approval. A lack of funds or support will leave you in a vulnerable position. Do the work yourself instead of paying someone to do things.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Put your heart and soul into learning and bringing about worthwhile changes that will benefit everyone. Participate in a group activity geared toward learning something new. Romance is on the rise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) – Discuss what's important before you make a move. Find out who is in favor of your plan and build your strategy around the people willing to donate time and skills to help you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) – Take nothing for granted. A change at home or in a relationship will perplex you. When in doubt, ask questions and find out what you can do to improve things. Additional responsibilities will drag you down.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) – Put more thought and effort into your life. Make home improvements that will improve your day-to-day. An honest assessment of your situation will lead to solutions that please everyone.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Put your attributes to work for you by developing a constructive plan. A change at home will raise issues with an older individual. Look for a way to help people affected by your decisions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) – Do whatever it takes to avoid disagreement. Lengthy discussions will turn into emotional scenes that leave you feeling down and out. Concentrate on something you enjoy doing.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) – Coming up with a good idea and having the fortitude to put your plans in motion will pay off. The changes you make will encourage you to invest time and money into doing things you enjoy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Don't reveal personal information. Handle money, health and contractual matters so they suit your needs and lifestyle. Beware of lavish plans and indulgence. Be honest with yourself and others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You'll gain momentum if you discuss your plans with someone close to you. The changes you implement will enrich your life and help you gain perspective regarding what's possible.

The second point on a deceptive deal

By Phillip Alder

Sun Tzu is believed to have lived from 544 to 496 B.C. In some areas, his "The Art of War" still influences not only warfare but also competitive endeavors including business, culture, politics and sports. Sun Tzu wrote, "A military operation involves deception. Even though you are competent, appear to be incompetent. Though effective, appear to be ineffective."

This deal was used in yesterday's column. Then, South made six spades after taking a safety play in trumps by running dummy's four.

Can you see any way for a defender to distract declarer to his detriment?

In the auction, North's four diamonds was a splinter bid. It showed four or more spades, at least game-going values and a singleton or void in diamonds. Then South, confident that his partner had strength in clubs, used 14-30 Roman Key Card Blackwood. He learned that his partner had one key card (an ace or the spade king), then slightly optimistically jumped to six spades.

West, who disliked leading from a jack, chose the club seven to dummy's king. What might have happened next?

Here was East's chance to deceive declarer. If he had smoothly played the club queen under dummy's king, what would South have thought?

Surely he would have assumed it was a singleton; and if it were, next running the spade four would have been risky. If West could have taken that trick with a singleton honor, he could have given his partner a club ruff. So declarer was highly likely to play a spade to his ace and go down.

Sneaky and clever.
