

Just how tight the milk market in Montreal is may be understood by what happened to a farmer in the millionaire class. His farm produces 100,000 lbs. of milk a day. He will continue and sell milk for pasteurization. Although he is a director in three distributing concerns this milk could not be placed at present.

Professor J. H. Casey's It is an honour which a All-American Eleven newspaper publishing establishment experiences but once in a lifetime, as we have been this past week, in being picked to play the right tackle position on Professor John H. Casey's All-American Eleven. The idea of the award is taken from football. That game is one of the outstanding in the United States. Every Fall, after the big games are over or nearly over, sports writers over the entire country pool their judgments and the announcement is made of the eleven adjudged best football players in the United States. It's a great honour to both the individual and to the team of which the individual is a member, to have been so chosen. Therefore, with no less degree of pride, do we acclaim the accolade.

We are not merely pleased with the honour, we are thrilled by it. To say or intimate otherwise would be hypocrisy. From a business standpoint it can beget us much attention in the field of national advertising, with the direct possibilities of increased business.

Long years of service has the Gleaner given the community. There was a time when its editorial columns were widely quoted, and even on one occasion its editor was called to give his viewpoints on the floor of the House of Commons. The home town weekly is now coming into its own again. Intelligent people realize that urban residents are too much imbued with mob psychology, and that in times of stress, they cannot be relied upon to be absolutely reasonable. That's when the thoughts turn to country fields, and babbling brooks, the sighing of pine trees, evening breezes, bright sunrises over a shady hill, furrows ploughed straight, and wheat neatly garnered. The thought of the farmer is the thought of the thinker, not the specialist. And it is with which a man is imbued that counts.

For long years we have tried to give our best in good leadership to the community. We have wanted to improve the farming and home interests as much as we could. We would that the town would grow and in our desire we have lent support and encouragement to things that we thought would tend towards that development. Through our mouthpiece, the Gleaner, we have fought battles—tasted the sweetness of victory, and the gall of defeat. During the past few years we have endeavored to improve the general tone of our newspaper and the result is apparent. We are proud that our efforts have been noticed even to an international field. Our front page make-up has greatly improved during the past year, and this and our editorial page contributed largely to the success attained.

As almost a public service we are mindful that the Gleaner is what the readers made it. Country correspondents have contributed largely. Advertisers should feel their share of satisfaction in the honour that their patronage has made possible. The quality of news demanded by the readers and the quantity of it, made that our news department had to use all their abilities to supply what was asked for. We are appreciative of the criticisms of the public in general, and especially of those which were constructive. And last, but not least, to the staff, whose devotedness and good work has played the larger part in the securing of such honour, as to those previously mentioned, we extend sincere thanks.

It would be amiss were we, in such an editorial, not to express our appreciation to Professor Casey. He, as Professor of Journalism at the University of Oklahoma, has achieved outstanding success as a newspaper authority. More so, is he known and loved, for his invaluable aid to weekly newspapers in general. May his work long continue as successful as it has been for the past nine years in the All-American field.

The incipience of such an honour is a challenge for us to continue to produce the best possible. That will be our aim. We realize full well that we have in no degree attained perfection, nor do we ever hope to, but we do know that this award will help us greatly in plugging along the way.

Canada's Possibilities Some time ago we suggested in the Bacon Trade that district farmers find a solution for the surplus milk problem in raising more hogs. Canada's total exports of bacon and ham have increased by more than fifteen million dollars in the past three years. The exports last year totalled almost $19,000,000, and to this amount this Chateauguay Valley district contributed not one iota. We even do not produce enough pork for our own consumption. If this latter declaration is a misstatement of fact it seems strange that any meat we get from local butchers is usually from without.

Unexcelled bacon and other pig products from the farms of the Dominion have captured the fancy of discriminating buyers on a highly competitive market, particularly during the last three years, and such an achievement under the unfavourable economic conditions which have prevailed throughout the world is indeed a feather in the hat of Canadian agriculture. Exports of Canadian bacon and hams to Great Britain during 1934 amounted to almost 120,000,000 pounds with a value of $18,754,113, and the ability of the Dominion to export the product of one million hogs gave impetus to an industry from which Canadian farmers derived an income estimated at between ninety and one hundred million dollars.

The quality of Canada's bacon and pig products has earned a reputation second to none in world markets, especially in the British Isles. This achievement is due, to a large extent, to the policy adopted by the Canadian Department of Agriculture of promoting improved production methods among hog raisers. Such innovations as the introduction of regulations governing the grading, marketing and sale of bacon, the importation of ultra-aristocratic pig stock for breeding purposes as well as an intensive campaign to make producers realize the value of specialized pig production, have been largely responsible for the gratifying results obtained.

Bacon grading is one of the cornerstones of the improvement policy, as it standardizes the quality, grade and appearance of the product exported. The object of bacon grading is to raise the general level of the exported product, to establish a basis of merchandizing Canada's bacon as a national product, and to consolidate the Dominion's position for the future on a highly competitive market.

Clean-Up Days Are Members of the Huntingdon Here Next Week Town Road Committee have announced that Clean-Up days will be observed on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday next. Although the main street has been swept once already this spring this was done before all the snow had gone, and naturally much was left undone. The clean-up days next week call for active participation therein by all townspeople, when rubbish deposited in receptacles by the wayside will be hauled away to the town dump. Undisturbed, winter's accumulation of dirt and debris hides all that is clean and fresh. Washed off and carried off it reveals a panorama little the worse for the wear and tear of the rigorous months.

Spring is here. The grass is starting to turn green. Wildflowers and tulips soon will be in bloom. Every property owner, householder and business man should sense an overpowering duty to fit into the scheme of things. Furthermore, the performance of this duty costs little in time and effort, and nothing in expense. In the performance one must be mindful that it is the details which count. A rusty can mar a yard; a new coat of paint can "make" a house. Undesirable neighbourhoods are known by the cans they keep, desirable ones by the well kept lawns and surroundings they have. Nothing better tells the character of a community and its people than the size of its public dumps.

We, of Huntingdon, Ormstown, Howick, or in whatever community we live, have pride in our town and village. One of the best ways to exemplify it is by improving its general appearance with clean well-painted homes, good surroundings, tidy lawns, and a profusion of flowers and shrubbery.

The Menace "Now that April's here," as the Of the Highways poet says, and the highways have become safe from the vagaries of the elements, and when said highways are crowded with every sort of self-propelling thing from the shining, noiseless well conditioned luxury to the coughing relic and loose-jointed monstrosity of days long gone, which plods along its slow and painful path much to the ruffling of tempers and the muttered anathemas of a suffering throng of drivers, we may be permitted to make a few observations on the human—not forgetting the sub-human—element on the road. One rarely takes up a newspaper in these days without reading the news—unfortunately no longer startling news—of people snuffed out or maimed on the highway or on the street.

There were in Quebec alone last year 7030 accidents. The surprising fact is that the vast number of these accidents occurred under what is called "normal conditions," for whereas 236 occurred through intoxicated drivers, 6994 took place in these so-called "normal conditions," for example 622 accidents resulted from defective brakes, whilst in 6408 cases the brakes were in good condition. Moreover, the greater number happened with mature drivers, those who had five years' experience or over, and significantly, Saturday seemed to be the most hectic day of the week; apparently the day on which drivers were free from ordinary cares and in the ebullient holiday spirit. It is quite apparent from all this that of the toll taken by the "grim reaper," who can now almost dispense with the pictorial scythe since the automobile is here in all its juggernautical power, two things may be said; one is that the large percentage of deaths and maiming is entirely preventable, and the other is that these results were not due to defective mechanism, but to defective judgment, defective temperament, and defective brains.

Quebec province had a very small number of accidents occurring at railway crossings during the past year, this no doubt due to the fact that Quebec law commands a full stop at all railway crossings. This district contributed possibly more than any one other to the number last year, and we have already started this year with the train-truck collision at Howick station somewhat more than a week ago.

Driving a car in these days of tempting roads is a very real test of intelligence and something more than intelligence. One has to measure distances, and make instantaneous decisions. Hand and foot, eye and brain must be co-ordinated in a very decided manner. Moreover, there is no greater test of mentality, as well as of moral qualities than one's use of power. Place opportunity before a man and he reveals himself; good or bad, wise, thoughtful, humane or selfish. The use of power is a very real measure of the man. The use of power and the exercise of judgment will furnish a fair indication of one's dependability. A driver comes let us say, to a level railroad crossing; if he stops, looks and listens he belongs to class A. Class B would include those who look and listen but do not stop, whilst Class C neither stops, looks or listens, but forges on, and often forges into King-dome Come.

Out of the different varieties of that number of which it is said that one is born every minute, we may select a few of the more dangerous of the species when he gets his hand on the wheel of a car.

There is the thoughtless variety. Ordinarily he is a reasonably sane person, but when he starts on his usually inconsequential journey, seconds become of tremendous importance. It really matters little when he reaches his destination; but he tears on to reach nowhere in particular in the least possible time. A few minutes later would have been quite as good, and the roads would have been safe from his aberration.

There is next the reckless variety—a much more dangerous person. The former is a man without judgment, this is a man without balance. The reckless fool never does anything well. His aim is to get through regardless of whether he is doing the thing properly or not, so long as it is done in the least possible time.

There is the vain variety. He feels the exhilaration of power, and when others are with him he has the insatiable desire to show off. He will take all kinds of chances just to demonstrate what a devil-may-care person he is. His hollow exhibition is frequently made to impress the opposite sex, hence the number of women who are the victims of this insanity. The egotistical fool who is devoid not only of a sense of humor, but of ordinary common sense is the kind that rocks the boat or does some other insensate thing to satisfy his vanity.

There is also the selfish variety, who is not infrequently malicious. He will lag along the way and when some person attempts to pass him will speed up, to the danger of traffic in both directions. When any of these meet with their deserved fate there is often an obituary notice of the loss to the community. As far as they are concerned there is no loss whatever but a positive gain. The regrettable thing is that they involve others in their insanity. Let such motorists, if they will, commit hari-kari, or go out by carbon monoxide, or the water route, or by any other way, but let them not endanger the lives of innocent people.

Chronicle News Bits

Twenty Years Lost

A man named Rapozo, who has been in a Portuguese prison for the past 20 years for alleged murder, has been found innocent. Another man who was arrested in Gouveia—a small town in the north of Portugal—on a minor charge, confessed he committed the murder for which Rapozo received a sentence of 28 years in jail. This is the second case which has happened recently in Portugal, where an innocent man has been wrongly sentenced. The Portuguese papers say it is a strong argument against reintroducing capital punishment in the country.

Church To Be Moved

One of the oldest churches in Budapest, and one of the few of the Gothic type to survive the Tartar and Turkish invasions, is to be moved. The transfer of the church to a new site 12 miles away will take a year and cost 800,000 pengos. Before removal the foundations of the church will be encircled by rings of iron, which will secure the rigidity of the building. The walls will be strengthened for the transit, and the arches supported by iron rods. The building will then be rolled up an iron road by machinery. It is believed the ruins of two early Christian churches lie under the parish church, and excavations will be made on the site.

Rug Takes Fire

Eighteen-months-old Frederick James Malby was asleep in his cot at his home in Coventry, Eng., when the hearth rug caught fire. The fire spread to the wicker cot and the child's screams brought in neighbors. They snatched him from the burning cot and hurried him to hospital, but their effort was in vain. He was dead on arrival.

Generous Giant

When Berry Barner, Cleveland, O., restaurant man was buried recently, a special coffin, seven feet long, 49 inches wide and 29 inches high, had to be built, and a double size grave dug, for Barner weighed 594 pounds. There were 14 pallbearers. Barner, who had operated a restaurant for many years, was known to thousands for his generosity, especially to the hungry who came to him for something to eat without the price of a meal.

Dog Walkers

A newly-established line of business in New York is a "dog walking" service. In its advertising, the "Daily Dog Walking Service Company" announces it will send an attendant to walk a dog daily except Sunday for $5 a month. Two walks daily will cost $3 a month, and three walks daily, $12 a month. Well, everything like that helps to increase jobs and enough jobs will kill off this depression.

Suitor Gets Shot

Because John Nardo, Swickley, Pa., did not want William Cavin, 61, "hanging around" his daughter, Marion Nardo, 27, he put up a warning sign which Cavin tore down. Nardo replaced the sign and rigged up an automatic device connected to a pistol trigger causing Cavin to shoot himself fatally when he molested the sign again. Now the court has a tough case to decide.

Fewer Bootblacks

Bootblacks are disappearing from London. Folk seem to be shining their own boots and shoes. In 1914 there were enough customers for 1,000 of these men in red coats, who squat on the pavements and at station exits and tell your character by your feet and not by your face. Today London's bootblacks number 40. They blame the lasting quality of modern boot polish and shoeshine parlors in hotels.

Dog Down Well

At the risk of his own life, a London policeman went down a disused well, 200 feet deep, to save the life of a starving dog. A faint whimpering attracted the attention of passers-by to the well. It was Rex, a Labrador retriever, which had been missing for a week. Police-Sergeant Garrett volunteered to go down the shaft. He was lowered in a chain held by a squad of men. When he reached the bottom he found the dog, exhausted and savage with terror, but he succeeded in putting it in a sack and bringing it safely to the surface.

Stranger Her Son

Calling a gas man to make some repairs in her home, Mrs. David Fraser, Somerville, Mass., thought the looks and voice of the man were so familiar she asked about his past. She discovered he was her own son, Walton, who had left their home in Canso, Nova Scotia, 30 years ago and had not been heard from since.

Accidental Homicide

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owens, United States ambassador to Denmark, stopped off in Greenland, a Danish colony, on her return voyage to America. While there she interviewed the governor, who boasted the absence of crime. There had not been a single murder during his regime, he said, although there was one "accidental homicide." Mrs. Owens wanted to know what in the world accidental homicide could be. "Well, you see," the governor explained obligingly, "there was a Greenlandic, and he had a quarrel with his wife. He pushed her outside and shut the door on her. She caught cold and died. That's accidental homicide."

Tongue Cut out

When Moushan Agich, of the village of Groumina, Yugoslavia, gave evidence against Mouarem Meshich in a court case, Meshich swore he would cut his tongue out for a perjurer. Some time later, Agich's house was entered during the night, and two men crept into his room, cut his tongue out, and escaped. Police found the tongue nailed to the door of the house. Beside it was the inscription: "This is the fate of those who bear false witness."

FROM A STAFF OF SEVEN TO SIX THOUSAND STRONG

From less than a corporal's guard to the equivalent of six regiments—this graphically illustrates the growth of the Bank of Montreal's staff in 117 years.

On the 23rd of August, 1817, the first four employees of the Bank of Montreal were appointed. They were the cashier, an accountant, a paying teller and a second teller. Shortly afterward a discount clerk, a second bookkeeper and a porter were added.

These seven constituted the original staff when the modest establishment on St. Paul Street in Montreal opened its doors on Monday, November 3rd—an establishment which was destined to play a conspicuous and beneficial part in the development of Canada's resources.

Throughout the many decades that have followed, the Bank of Montreal has made increasing effort to provide a banking service always adequate to meet the requirements of Canada's development.

The original staff of seven has grown to 6,300, loyally serving the public through 500 branches extending from sea to sea—and overseas.

SILKEN SPINDLES

By LAURA L. BROOKMAN

Chapter 28

The crowd shuffled out of the movie theatre, stopping to look at posters announcing next week's show, girls peering to catch a glimpse of themselves in the narrow mirror panels at either side of the entrance, to powder noses and dab on rouge, chattering and laughing, young men who spoke in deeper tones, pausing to light cigarettes and jam hats on firmly. There were older people and some children—a nondescript crowd, the usual patrons of the Strand where pictures were exhibited which, six or eight weeks earlier, had been shown in the larger theatres in the more brightly lighted section of the town.

Steve Meyers looked down on Gale as they stepped out on the sidewalk. "Wasn't such a bad picture, was it?" he asked.

"Oh, I liked it. That girl who was 'Kathy' is a new star, isn't she? I've never seen her before. And didn't she look beautiful—"

The words broke off. A couple—a small girl in a bright red hat and rather dowdy fur coat and a tall youth—had just halted before the glass cage where tickets were sold. Gale heard the girl laugh and turning recognized Ruby Griffith before she saw it was Phil beside her. A moment later the two disappeared inside the theatre.

Steve asked "What was that you were saying?"

"About the picture? Oh, I don't know—it doesn't matter anyhow. That was Phil with Ruby Griffith. Did you see them?"

"Yes."

They walked in silence for a few moments. Then Steve said, "I wish you wouldn't worry the way you do about Phil."

"How can I help it? You see the sort of company he seems to prefer—Ruby Griffith and her crowd. You know what they're like. And he comes home at all hours of the night and morning. It's only within the last six months or so that he's been like this."

"Worrying isn't going to do any good."

"No, I don't suppose it will. But what can I do, Steve?"

"Leave him alone. Phil's smart enough to take care of himself. The trouble is you're used to looking out for him. You still think of him as a little boy."

"But he's only 19—"

"That's not so young. It would be a lot better for Phil if you'd give him a chance to stand on his own feet. You do too much for him."

"Maybe you're right."

"Of course I am! You want to do too much for everyone. Gale, you're always forgetting about yourself, trying to do something for someone else."

"But I'm not! I don't do half the things I should."

"I wish you'd let me do them for you."

"Steve—"

"Oh, I'm not going to say anymore. I promised I wouldn't and I'll keep that promise. You said you wouldn't marry anyone now. But there's one thing I want to ask you. When you were away at school—well, you must have known lots of other fellows. Is there anyone else, Gale?"

"You mean—"

"Is there anyone else you're in love with?"

Gale was glad she did not have to meet his eyes. She knew exactly how those blue eyes looked. She turned away, surprised that her heart was beating so rapidly. She wished it wouldn't. Steve was waiting for her to answer and there was only one answer to give. You certainly couldn't count a man you'd met only three or four times and then purely by accident, even though he had said, "I like you, Gale Henderson. I like you a lot." You couldn't count a man you were never going to see again—

away, surprised that her heart was beating so rapidly. She wished it wouldn't. Steve was waiting for her to answer and there was only one answer to give. You certainly couldn't count a man you'd met only three or four times and then purely by accident, even though he had said, "I like you, Gale Henderson. I like you a lot." You couldn't count a man you were never going to see again—

Gale said, "There's no one else, Steve. No one."

He put a hand on her arm, drew her close. His voice had an edge of huskiness. "Then I can go on hoping," he said. "Oh, Gale, if you only knew how I feel about you—"

"You promised," she reminded him. "Yes, I know, I promised."

He began talking about something that had happened at the mill. Five minutes later they had reached Gale's home.

"You'll come in, won't you?" she asked.

"Not tonight. Going to be home tomorrow evening?"

"I think so."

"Then I'll drop around."

They went inside the house. Her father was in the kitchen, fumbling about an open cupboard.

"Hello," he said. "Thought I'd like a little something hot to drink. Is there some tea here somewhere?"

"In that square box," Gale told him. "But sit down—I'll make it for you."

She filled the kettle and put it over the fire to boil, got out cups and saucers and a loaf of bread.

"Where's Steve?" her father asked. "He went on."

Her father watched as Gale cut the bread and placed it on a plate, set out butter and a bottle of milk. "You and Steve haven't been having any arguments, have you?" he asked.

"No."

Tom Henderson studied his daughter's face. She was certainly thinner than she had been. He did not say anything more until the tea was made and Gale had poured out two cups and sat down before one of them. Then he said, "I've been thinking about you this evening, Gale. I wish you didn't have to work the way you do."

"It isn't nonsense. It's too much for you, doing all you do at home and working at the mill besides."

"Father, what in the world put such ideas in your head?"

"My own eyes have done it—seeing you look so tired when night comes and growing thinner. I can't help worrying about you, Gale. You ought to be married and settled in your own home. When your mother was your age—"

"But things are different now!"

"I know. But that doesn't make them any better. I've lived my life and some of these days I'm going to be gone."

"Father, please—"

"It's better to face things calmly. Gale—better to talk about them. I'm not afraid of dying. A man couldn't be who lives as I do, a burden to the ones he loves. No, I'm not afraid to die, but I wish I could know you were going to be happy and safe. I don't worry about Phil; he's a boy and he can take care of himself. You think you can, too, but there's more to life than you realize. I don't like to leave you with no one to look out for you."

Gale hurried to open it. A young man wearing a brown windbreaker jacket and corduroy trousers stood before her. His cap was pulled down over his eyes.

"Special delivery," he said, "for Miss Gale Henderson. Sign here, please." He held a pencil and pad toward her.

HAVEN'T you noticed that your happiest hours occur on days when you feel your best?

Have more of these happy days. You and all your family. Guard health while you have it. Keep on the sunny side of life.

The greatest enemy of health is common constipation. It may cause loss of appetite and energy. Certainly it kills enthusiasm! Yet it can be banished by eating a delicious cereal.

Laboratory tests show Kellogg's All-Bran supplies "bulk" and vitamin B to relieve common constipation. Also iron for the blood.

The "bulk" in All-Bran is much like that in leafy vegetables. How much pleasanter to eat this delicious ready-to-eat cereal than to take patent medicines. Two table-spoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. Chronic cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Easter Sunday was fittingly observed in the Presbyterian Church here, the pastor, Rev. W. Ross preaching an impressive sermon suitable to the occasion and with special music by the choir. At the Sunday School hour a special service was put on by the members of the Mission Band and Sunday Schools, the regular classes being dispensed with for the day.

The concert which was given by the Ormstown Presbyterian choir in the church hall Thursday night was one of the best seen here for some time. Owing to bad roads and counter attractions the crowd was not as large as might have been expected but what was lacking in numbers was more than compensated for by an enthusiastic audience.

The monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid was held at the home of Mrs. Abe Rosevear on Wednesday with a very good attendance in spite of bad condition of the roads. The president, Miss Cain occupied the chair.

Ways and Means

Huntingdon, Que.
April 22nd, 1935
Editor, Huntingdon Gleaner.

Many remedies have been prescribed, numerous suggestions voiced by persons in official capacities, by people holding positions of distinctive and clerical rank and even by the lowly commoner, and a galaxy of ways and means have been launched to uplift and restore a burdened world from the blemishes that appear from every side or angle that it is viewed, and the deep morass into which the nations have fallen. We have had "isms" and new dealism, which is not new, of every description too numerous to tabulate, and practically all to no avail.

Now we have heard recently in your columns of a new league for Canada to lead her to her ultimate destiny. It is named Classocracy, a government controlled by Christian peoples of Christian principles. Theoretically and in the minds of the few who have had occasion to study the principles upon which the league is based, such a state would be practical. Perhaps in the Puritanical age it would be a possibility to organize in the limited civilized territory at that time but we believe not so today—a probability but an impossibility under today's conditions. People who have such objectives in view, planning, reasoning and labouring under such short-lived optimism are treating themselves to a mental illusion. Why? Because of human nature—the mentality, the composite and the make-up of mankind towards such—not only individually but collectively.

In this age the best example of a similar elusive optimism perhaps is Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain. In the early part of his premiership he laboured and strived for peace, amicability and the good-will of the nations—the result is well known. He has stated his accomplishments were almost useless and purpose futile. A section of the declaration of Classocracy referring to mankind well describes this: "Since man's nature is composite . . . Human Society . . . is an organism . . . of differentiated organic classes . . . Canadian democracy on account of its subservience to the economic interests of a minority, on account of the inefficiency of the machinery of political parties, cannot establish an effective nationwide planned economy."

Furthermore Classocracy drafts Christian peoples to form a government. Literally and honestly just how many of us are truly Christian in spirit, this can be visualized in our everyday business life. This could and would entail considerable discussion, which space would not allow.

Lullaby Supper

LITTLE children, tired with play and nearly ready for bed, should have light, nourishing, easily digested foods for their evening meal.

Kellogg's Corn Flakes, eaten before bedtime, help children sleep. Scientific tests conducted in a large university have proven this. Children who had Kellogg's for supper slept 30% more soundly than those who ate heavier foods.

Kellogg's restore energy without overloading small stomachs. They're pleasant, appetizing. Children love their crispness and delicious flavor.

All grocers sell Kellogg's Corn Flakes. Ready to serve from the WAXTITE bag inside the red-and-green package. Economical. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

that in any event he would not be in the government when it went to the people. The suggestion is being broadly made here and there that it would be well for the Conservative party if it were able to win Hon. Harry Stevens back into the hunt fold. The parliamentary demonstration last week when the ex-minister of trade and commerce stated his position in respect to the price spreads report was tangible evidence of his popularity with the rank and file of the Conservative party. Indeed, one frequently hears it said on the Hill that under the leadership of Hon. H. H. Stevens the party would have its best chance of making a good battle out of the forthcoming campaign. A good deal, I should think, depends on what fate has in store for the Prime Minister. If he comes back from London ready to enter the fray, he will probably be able to keep together the conflicting elements in his cabinet; if he resigns as leader, the prospects of Hon. H. H. Stevens will be much brighter. Several Conservative papers have begun to urge a "trapdoor" movement between the crusading minister and the rest of the cabinet.

Reciprocity negotiations do not appear to be making much headway, and there are persistent reports that with a general election in Canada drawing close, the administration at Ottawa would prefer to deal with a party fresh from the people. This will be rather disappointing to those producers and consumers who have been looking forward to mutually advantageous trade agreements in the early future.

Cheaper Gas and Cars?

There may, however, be some relief in other directions. At the present time the Tariff Board is conducting inquiries into the cost of automobiles in Canada and into the duty on refined gasoline. Should their reports be of a nature to justify such action on the part of the government, it is not unlikely that a substantial reduction might be made before the election in the duty on automobiles, as well as on refined gasoline. Motorists across Canada would be pleased at any relief of this kind.

We are to have a Housing Scheme after the Easter vacation. Its exact nature has not been disclosed, but broad hints have been made. The suggestions of the parliamentary committee will assuredly have much weight with the government. Their report, tabled last week, called attention to the fact that there were at least 25,000 new dwellings needed in Canada at once, besides a great deal of repair and rehabilitation. It recommended the creation of a federal body to be called a "Housing Authority" which would have wide powers of inaugurating and directing housing programs across the country, and of making such advances of public funds in assistance as it might be given by the federal treasury.

In order to make the program as extensive as possible, the "Housing Authority" would be able to make arrangements with provinces, municipalities, building societies, private corporations and individuals. It is not intended in any case for the State to give the money. Rather it is suggested that a portion of the financing of the various projects be done by the federal government at the lowest possible rate of interest. The loan and insurance companies are now prepared to make loans on sound propositions, but the difficulty about launching much house-building on such help alone, is due to the fact that the average home-builder, or building corporation, cannot get the rest of the money without paying prohibitive prices. A mortgage company is prepared to loan up to 60 per cent of the cost of a house, or even 65 per cent if the owner is to live in it, but the problem is to get the other 35 or 40 per cent, as the case may be. Where second mortgages can be obtained, the rate too often is 6 1/2 or 7 per cent, and even higher. If a considerable portion of this junior money could be advanced by the federal government at 3 1/2 or 4 per cent, a great many building propositions which have been hanging fire would at once be commenced. Or at least that is the theory upon which the government will almost certainly act.

Not So Hectic As Expected

Looking back over the first three months of the session, it is clear that it failed to live up to advance notices in the matter of sensation. At the same time it was a varied and fairly fruitful period, with a great deal of important legislation approved by our law-makers. Those who expected more political fireworks, on the eve of a general election, may find that the post-Easter session comes up to specifications. A good deal depends on the improvement of the Prime Minister—whether he returns to the House in his old fighting vigor. Between now and May 20th the drama of the government will be busy engaged turning the recommendations of the price-spreads commission into legal form. I cannot help feeling that if any extensive regimentation of industry is proposed, arising out of the repeal of the "Switzerland" law, it will be met in the House from the first part of the "Reform Program" did. The Liberals have no objection to speeding through the house measures which accord with their own political views, but they will probably make a stand against measures which look toward internal trade restriction.

On Friday afternoon the closing exercises by the pupils of the Ormsdown Consolidated High School for Easter took place at the school and was largely attended by visitors and parents which shows the interest and co-operation taken.
