Jubinville to take over BU athletics

By Brian MacIver and John Edwards
LENNOXVILLE

The Record learned yesterday that Bishop's University, who has been without an athletic director since Brian Breckles' departure in September, had tapped CEGEP de Sherbrooke athletic director Jean-Benoit Jubinville to be their new head of athletics.

His hiring was confirmed by an announcement from the school late in the afternoon, with Bishop's confirming Jubinville's start date of Nov. 3.

The news comes as a surprise. After the oddly timed departure of the school's former athletic director, coming as it did at the start of the academic year, football season, and in the middle of a $30 million expansion and renovation of the John H. Price Sports Centre, Bishop's was expected to undergo a long selection process that could have taken up to a year to complete. The process to hire Breckles in 2012 took approximately six months to complete.

However, Jubinville's hiring comes just over a month after Breckles left Bishop's after just two years to return to his family in Ontario, raising the question of whether this decision had not been made earlier.

After seeing his university football playing career ended by a serious neck injury, Jubinville began his coaching career at the Séminaire de Sherbrooke as a football coach, in addition to filling the roles of teacher and co-ordinator of the English department at the local private high school. After leaving the Séminaire and landing the head coaching job for the newly-formed Volontaires football team at the CEGEP de Sherbrooke, as well as a job as a physical education instructor, Jubinville led the team to five Bol d'Or wins in eight seasons as a head coach, notching 73 wins.

Barrette says English will be 'properly represented'

SHERBROOKE

Responding to concerns voiced by the Quebec Community Groups Network, among others, Health Minister Gaëtan Barrette admitted to The Record Tuesday night that the wording of Bill 10 in its current form is vague with regard to the guarantee of English representation on the new integrated health and social service centre boards, known by the French acronym CISSS.

"The bill is not specifically clear on (Anglophone representation) but there is a [section of] the bill that all aspects of a given community have to be taken into consideration in order to choose the correct people on the CISSS board," Barrette said. He asserted that the Ministry of Health and Social Services will stand up for English representation on the boards in regions where there are English communities to warrant it. "That is maybe not clear enough in the wording of the bill, but that is the reason why we have parliamentary commissions. The English community will be properly represented."

Asked if there was an intention to clarify the wording, Barrette said that the wording was vague on purpose so as to allow for differences between different regional needs.

"I thought (the bill) was clear enough," the health minister said.

"We tried not to stigmatize or pinpoint specific groups because when you get into that you might end up with so many different situations and needs that you cannot possibly address them all."

Barrette also repeated the reassurance that regular medical services to the province's Anglophones would be maintained as-is.

Speaking to the concern that only one English group, the QCGN, was officially invited to participate in committee hearings on the bill that start on Monday, the health minister said that he is not closed to input from other sources outside of the commission.

The health minister invited written documents and testimony from any group feeling left out of proceedings and said that he will read, and take into consideration, any such document sent to him.

Michel Litalier to speak at BU for annual ETRC Robin Burns Lecture

The Eastern Townships in the First World War to be featured

Record Staff
LENNOXVILLE

The Eastern Townships Resource Centre invites you to attend the 16th Annual Robin Burns Lecture on Wednesday, Nov. 5 at 7 p.m., in the Cleghorn Common Room of McGreer Hall, on the Bishop's University campus.

On the centenary of the First World War, the Centre has invited author and historian Michel Litalien from the Canadian Forces Museums and Historical Collections of the Department of National Defence.

Michel Litalien was a member of the Canadian Forces for more than 25 years. He is now working with the Directorate of History and Heritage at the Department of National Defence in Ottawa as manager of the Canadian Forces Museums and Historical Collections. His passion for history has earned him a Master's in history from the University of Ottawa and he is newly enrolled in a PhD program at the Université de Montpellier in France.

Litalien has authored 10 books on the military history of Quebec, notably Les Fusiliers de Sherbrooke, 1910-2010 : L'épopée d'une institution des Cantons-de-l'Est which also addresses the history of the region.

When Canada entered the war in August 1914, the Eastern Townships was already well aware of military and defence issues. Because of its particular location, the region had been historically compelled to militarize as it had to be ready at all times to repel a most threatening neighbour who had tried to push its way in a few times.

Around 1880, few were the towns and villages that did not have at least one military unit or sub-unit. Therefore, on the eve of the war, Sherbrooke and its region already had two cavalry brigades, one infantry brigade, artillery units and auxiliary units.

In August 1914, although Minister of Militia and Defence Sam Hughes chose not to mobilize the non-permanent active Militia units for active duty, several of their members quickly volunteered to fight on the European front.

With its two linguistic communities, the region became a very interesting recruitment territory for the Canadian Expeditionary Force and several Montreal battalions even set up recruiting centres directly in the region.

Many Townships citizens distinguished themselves throughout the conflict. For example, rather than merely encourage its citizens to enrol, Lieutenant-colonel George Harold Baker, a federal MP, acted on his beliefs and volunteered in the Canadian Expeditionary Force.

He would also be the only politician to fall in the line of duty. As for the 5th Canadian Mounted Rifles, a unit raised in the region, two of its members received the Victoria Cross, the highest military valour decoration of the British Empire. The instances of bravery from Eastern Townships' citizens on the European front were numerous.

The event is free and all are welcome. Refreshments will be served after the lecture.

Please RSVP to etrc@ubishops.ca or at 819-822-9600, ext. 2647.

"The role of the CHUS will not be changing," the Health Minister said.

CHUS to remain 'as-is' under Bill 10

By Gordon Lambie
SHERBROOKE

According to Gaetan Barrette, Quebec's current Minister of Health and Social Services, the provincial government's proposed health care reform, Bill 10, poses no threat to Anglophone Quebecers, or anyone else for that matter.

The Liberal cabinet member was in Sherbrooke Tuesday evening to meet with the heads of local health and social services establishments and said that he was using the opportunity to dispel myths about the bill and its implications for the future of Quebec's health care system.

"There is not a single hospital that will be changing names; there is not a hospital or physical institution that will be changing missions," Barrette said. "Everything stays; this bill was not made to change the mission of installations. The bill proposes an integration of care and service but integration does not mean a change in mission."

Responding to concerns raised by voices both within and surrounding Sherbrooke's University Hospital, Barrette emphasized that the CHUS' status as a teaching hospital and its suprarregional designation will not be changing.

"The role of the CHUS will not be changing," the Health Minister said. "It is very important for us that the CHUS keep its mission and its designation."

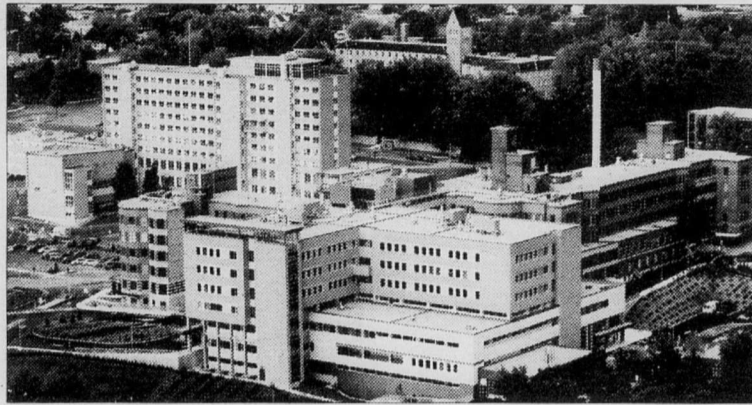

Barrette explained that the whole purpose of the new legislation is to increase access and fluidity of services. He said that the regional health and social services boards (known by the French acronym CISSS) established in the region under Bill 10 would be greatly served by having a university hospital within its ranks.

"The fundamental mission of the CISSS will be to treat everyone equally," the Health Minister said, "from first line care to the teaching level (...). One of the fundamental purposes of the CISSS is to bring services closer to the population."

Barrette explained that he has been travelling throughout the province to meet with the directors general of all health-care facilities facing administrative integration under the bill, and said that after clearing up certain misconceptions, has been met with largely positive reactions.

"We want people to understand what it is that we're trying to do," Barrette said, pointing out that the legislative hearings on the bill start on Monday. "Everyone has been invited to come offer their commentary on the bill (...) and if they are along the same lines as the commentary I have heard so far, things will go well."

Asked if he thought it was at all worrisome that Bill 10 proposes to put nomination of CISSS members completely in the hands of the minister, Barrette explained that the proposed legislation is meant to be only the first step of a broader reform.

"This is a transitional law; Bill 10 is not permanent, it is a temporary measure that will serve to start the restructuring on a good note," Barrette said.

According to the minister, passing of the nominations into the minister's hands in this first step of an effort to make sure that the new regional boards start out made up of all the best candidates for the job.

He pointed out that in many cases of community nomination, some members tend to end up on boards of directors based on their having been a part of the board in the past, and not necessarily based on merit.

Starting with ministry-appointed individuals with a focus on administrative efficiency allows a strong starting point from which nominations can then be passed back to the communities.

"We've already started work on the next bill, but if we didn't have a transitional bill, then we would have to wait four years for reform," Barrette said, explaining that the purpose of this intermediary step is to get the reform ball rolling right away with immediate results.

He insisted that the shift is not about an effort to micro-manage local healthcare.

Before closing, Barrette added that the Eastern Townships region is already largely integrated in the way that the bill is trying to accomplish in the rest of the province. As such, he said, the overall impacts locally will be limited.

"The Estrie has been well served," the health minister said, alluding to good management and strong community ties.

"If there's any place where what we've put on the table is not a revolution, it's here."

Ebola a "learning opportunity"

By Gordon Lambie

In the midst of a growing sense of crisis over the Ebola epidemic in West Africa, Quebec Health Minister Gaetan Barrette says that the average Quebec resident shouldn't be overly concerned.

"The primary risk factor for getting Ebola is going to the affected countries in Africa," Barrette said. "If you haven't gone and you're not in contact with someone who has, you can't contract Ebola, it's not contagious in that way."

While not downplaying the significance of the disease, the health minister said that the most important thing for locals who do fall into that risk group to do is self-monitor and be up front about their health.

Ultimately, he said, what the current crisis provides is an excellent opportunity for Quebec hospitals to run through the hypotheticals of what an Ebola outbreak would look like on home soil and how to deal with it if things were ever to get to that point.

Continuing to say that the risk is very low, Barrette said that all parts of the health care network are running training scenarios, more because of the context than out of great concern of a Quebec outbreak.

Arson hits former detention centre – twice

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

Two fires erupted within 24 hours on the site of the former Relais Saint-François youth detention centre and police have begun an investigation into the fires, which caused at least $50,000 in damages.

According to Fire Department Lieutenant Gilles Pelland, the fires appear to have been acts of vandalism.

"Squatters do not light fires in the places they go to," he said. "These actions are more in the realm of vandalism. This weekend, the first fire was lit in the main building. Residue found on site was piled together and set alight. Since this building is made of concrete, there has been little damage."

The second fire was started around 11:30 p.m. Monday night in a building adjacent to the main facilities. "The fire was lit in the basement. Part of the first floor landing collapsed. The building structure is now in danger of collapsing and will have to be destroyed in the coming days."

Pelland also emphasized the dangers inherent in fires begun where squatters tend to gather.

"There are no smoke detectors or fire alarms in these buildings. People inside can be seriously injured or even die if they do not realize that a fire has been lit. These places are supposed to be uninhabited, but our firefighters are aware of the fact that there can be squatters and pay attention to this fact when they come inside to fight a fire," he said.

The lieutenant pointed out that firefighters occasionally have to go into squatted buildings where fires have been started, mentioning the explosion of a propane tank near a makeshift shelter on Pacific Street in late September or the fire at the old CS Brooks factory on Pacific Street in October 2013 as recent examples.

"There are a few buildings that are used by squatters in Sherbrooke. Our officers know their locations and pay attention during their regular patrols. Steps have been taken with the property owner to barricade the openings properly," added Sherbrooke Police spokesperson Martin Carrier.

The former detention centre is owned by Gestion immobilière Santi, which hopes to build a residential complex on the site.

Excessive speed costs big in Val St-François

Record Staff

A young driver felt the force of the law on Tuesday when he was stopped after travelling at over 165 kilometres per hour on Highway 55 near Ulverton, which has a 100 km/h limit.

An SQ investigator was driving in an unmarked car along Highway 55 near Ulverton when he observed the motorist travelling southbound at high speed. The investigator contacted a marked patrol car to intercept the speeding vehicle.

The driver, a 20-year-old from the Montreal area, received a ticket for $1,160 and 14 demerit points for speeding, in addition to having his license suspended on the spot for a period of seven days.

We are sorry to report that, citing legal considerations, the SQ does not give out the exact speed in excessive speeding cases.

Veteran Canadian actor sets down new roots in the Townships

By Gordon Lambie
LENNOXVILLE

Wade Lynch says that the eight years he spent as artistic director of the Charlottetown festival in P.E.I. were a dream come true after 12 years associated with the theatre festival in various roles. Despite that 20-year run in the same space, however, the Vancouver-born actor, writer, and director says that sometimes one dream needs to end so that another can begin.

At the beginning of 2014 Lynch's partner, Miles Turnbull, took on the role of Vice-Principal Academic at Bishop's University after more than a decade of work in various capacities at the University of P.E.I.

Lynch said that when Turnbull was appointed to the job, which was just as much a dream for his partner as the job at Charlottetown's Confederation Centre had been for him, there seemed no more logical course of action than to move to Sherbrooke.

"After 20 years I realized that I have to work somewhere else," the veteran Canadian actor said, "I'd been looking for a couple of years for the next great adventure, and when this opportunity came up for Miles I thought I might take this chance to reinvent myself as well."

Due to the requirements of his role in P.E.I., Lynch did not end up fully relocating until this past summer, but the actor said that despite his now being technically moved-in to his new home, The scope of the transition has kept him from quite settling in yet.

"Leaving a province and a culture and a language has been a big leap," Lynch explained, pointing out that although there are English theatre projects in Quebec, the majority of the he professional work is in French. "Until my French improves I'm not sure how much work I'm going to get."

While searching for a local agent and working on his language skills, Lynch has continued to take acting work in the rest of the country through his agent in Toronto.

"I'm working and bringing money into the province, I'm just not making any here," the actor said, laughing.

Lynch added however, that despite the contrast of his current project-based schedule with the stable and stationary work in Charlottetown, Canadian actors know that travel is a part of life.

"If you're an actor in Canada, you go where the work is," he said, sharing that the transition is good for his creativity.

Outside of looking for new projects, Lynch has also taken the opportunity to get involved with the local Rotary Club.

"This is something I never expected. It was something that was suggested at my former job at the Confederation Centre; that I join Rotary there because it was a good way to get in touch with key players in the community," the performer recalled. "When I got involved in Rotary I suddenly became aware of all the incredible good they do in the community."

Despite his initial reluctance, Lynch said that he finds the club to be a very selfless organization and a great social activity when it comes to integrating into a new community.

"From the moment I stepped in the door at the first meeting with the Sherbrooke Rotary I've been welcomed in," Lynch continued, "I've cherished going every Tuesday morning, they're such great people, so enthusiastic, and incredibly positive at 7 a.m."

In between jobs and social clubs, Lynch explained that he is using his new-found free time to finish, "the most protracted master's degree in the history of education."

"I kept getting work, which is great for an actor, but it meant putting the schoolwork on hold," the actor said, pointing out that he started work on his master of education degree in 1997, almost 20 years ago. "I've always had teaching in my back pocket. My first degree was a BA in theatre education."

Given his new circumstances, Lynch said that he expected to be finished his degree by next summer, at which point he wants to transition his career to teaching. Aside from the personal interest, Lynch also shared that through his experiences of living with Turnbull, he has had a steady stream of opportunities to recognize and remark at the value of education. Asked if he has intentions to do any work with the drama department at Bishop's, Lynch said that he was slowly getting to know the local community, having met with several of the department's professors. "There's nothing more thrilling than watching young people fall in love with theatre," the actor remarked.

Incubator project for old cop shop revealed

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

The old Sherbrooke police station on Marquette St. is about to get a facelift and a new calling as the City intends to turn the edifice into an innovative business incubator. The City will invest an indexed $225,000 per year through 2017 to support the project.

The proposal was revealed Tuesday and should be approved at the next council meeting. The City will provide free spaces in the building in addition to assuming all related costs, the equivalent of about $33,000 per year.

The executive summary of the project presented to Council says that "the incubator will offer an environment for entrepreneurs and ensure support for those who have not achieved profitability by offering both 'turnkey' administration and business support program at very low cost."

"This is an economic development tool essential to helping young entrepreneurs in their business ventures, says incubator project manager Chloé Legris.

"We're talking about helping innovative businesses that are difficult to bring to market and finance. We have to capture young people with good ideas to create successful businesses, create an environment for entrepreneurs, bring dynamism and interaction, and encourage youth retention."

The project will start out as a pilot project.

"It will be important to develop a model to suit our local peculiarities," Legris says, "We are relatively new to entrepreneurship in Sherbrooke. We have a bilingual city ... It is important that the business community adopts this incubator.

The official opening and the gradual arrival of companies are scheduled for January 2015. About a dozen entrepreneurs have already been identified to participate in the first stage.

The project does not have the unanimous enthusiastic support, however, and several councillors have expressed some concern about there being no assurance that the companies assisted would stay in Sherbrooke.

"Nothing says that these people will stay after receiving our services for three years," said Pierre Tardif.

Annie Godbout, although supportive of the project, said she is uncomfortable with the $1 million financial framework, which she feels is high for a pilot project. She would also have liked to see more participation from other levels of government.

"We have 100 per cent of the burden; I'm not comfortable with this as we have not defined amongst ourselves what our expectations and performance indicators are. It feels like a blank cheque."

Coaticook recreation bridge honours devoted volunteer

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

The Town of Coaticook has officially opened the approximately three-kilometre extension of its bike path and bridge, which now also has a new name.

The bridge was formally named in honour of Robert Boutin at Tuesday's meeting of the municipal council.

Boutin was born on Aug. 20, 1938 in Saint-Evariste in the Beauce and died on Oct. 28, 2008. He was a farmer and was involved volunteer at the Étoile de l'Est Snowmobile Club into his eighties.

He surfaced trails and, along with several other volunteers, proceeded to build the first snowmobile bridge across the Coaticook River and he maintained the cross country ski trails.

The bridge, which can be used in all seasons, is the result of the collaboration and financial participation of the Town of Coaticook, the Coaticook regional county municipality Rural Pact, and the Quebec Federation of Snowmobile Clubs, Eastern Townships sector.

The bike path has been extended into the area of the Park de la rivière thanks to support from the Quebec Ministry of Transport under the "Veloce II" program for the Development of active transportation in urban perimeters.

Through these funds, citizens and tourists now have a new section of bike path, stretching several kilometres to the southeast of the city to the rest of the network on both sides of the river.

Coaticook's newly extended bike path and the Robert Boutin Bridge now connects bike and snowmobile trails on both sides of the Coaticook River.

Help was offered to Ecobeat, city says

Record Staff
SHERBROOKE

Just a day after issuing a heartfelt plea to save the Ecobeat Youth hostel at 146 Wellington St. South, owner Sami Gamoudi is becoming more hopeful of getting help. With an overdue $19,000 bill from Hydro-Sherbrooke hanging over his head, Gamoudi is seeking an agreement that would allow the hostel to spread the payments out while trying to turn itself around.

For its part, the para-municipal organization Commerce Sherbrooke claims to have made efforts to help Ecobeat. "We suggested they contact Pro Gestion Estrie and work on a plan to restructure the entire company," says Philippe Cadieux, head of Commerce Sherbrooke's downtown sector. "The owner of the inn sought help in the month of August. We have never had access to their numbers. Mr. Gamoudi will probably tell you that the time was too short because he had only ten days to provide the necessary paperwork. The truth is that it's been over two months since we asked to have access to their books," he says.

Gamoudi admits he could not produce the necessary documents. "We have two people who already have trouble keeping the accounts. We were asked for a reinvestment plan, but we are not reinvesting. Our investments have been colossal, $1.5 million, half in cash. We are not over-indebted and I'm not going to the city so that I can be sent to the banks."

Cadieux argues that the hostel has already benefited from subsidies.

"We all agree that closing a business makes nobody happy. The concept of the hostel is great. It is a quality product. It has been proven true in other countries, where cities invest heavily in this type of building, which is not the case here. Nevertheless, there is financial assistance available in downtown for interiors and exteriors that can reach $100,000 or 20 per cent of the value of work done. Ecobeat has taken advantage of this and it might have been possible to get a little more of the same if we had had access to their financial statements."

City councillor Serge Paquin (Centre-Sud) says he too is saddened by the financial problems of a company in his ward.

He argues that the hostel could have received grants of $50,000 for the development of its ground floor and $30,000 for the renovation of the facade.

"In terms of vocation, the hostel is very consistent with our view of the city centre and it brings a very good customer to the neighborhood."

"Hydro-Sherbrooke makes agreements with its customers, whether residential, commercial or industrial, when they are facing financial problems. In general, when there is no compliance with the agreement, power is cut off. Hydro-Sherbrooke is not intended to subsidize businesses," Paquin says.

Gamoudi says that an agreement had been reached with Hydro-Sherbrooke, but that it wasn't endorsed by the City of Sherbrooke.

The owner would agree to make payments every month if the debt was spread over a period of one year. The situation with Hydro Sherbrooke led to the departure of five of fifteen tenants who rented a room for the month, for a loss of $2,500 in revenue. Employees also have trouble being paid and half have quit. "Our priority has always been to pay our employees," Gamoudi said.

"A hand was held out, but Commerce Sherbrooke has no power of life and death over a business. If the entrepreneur does not help, we can do nothing," Cadieux harrumphed.

"The City of Sherbrooke did what it could and obviously we want the company to succeed, but it will not be at the expense of taxpayers," concluded Paquin.

EDITORIAL

One can't help but wonder, as well, what results the researchers would have found had they applied their investigative skills to Canada's provinces.

Porn and politics

TIM BELFORD

If you want to know more about the sex lives of our neighbours to the south, and who doesn't, be sure and check out the latest edition of the Archives of Sexual Behaviour.

The ever popular Archives is featuring a report written by a research team from Brock University and the University of Toronto that takes a detailed look at "porn" tendencies in the U.S. and correlates them with social and political preferences. In other words, the researchers wanted to know if voters in the so-called "blue" states were really into blue movies and did the electors in the "red" states have anything to actually be red in the face about.

To do this, the diligent Canadian academics sifted through a mountain of Google search data in all fifty of the states and balanced it all against each state's "religiosity" and "conservatism" as indicated in Gallup polls.

Guess what? As author Cara MacInnis told the National Post, researchers found that the more conservative the state the more likely its citizens were to type the word "sex" into a Google image search. Jumping Jimmy Swaggart, what a surprise.

Admittedly, the research has its shortcomings. It is apparently based on a mere seven search terms including: sex, gay sex, porn, XXX, free porn, gay porn and Google images:sex. Why the authors omitted references to other popular search possibilities such as "home alone," "seeking hugs," or "sweet inflatable you," is not explained.

Nevertheless, the report has garnered quite a bit of criticism from conservatives throughout the U.S., particularly from those resident in states such as Utah and Mississippi both considered "very red" in their social attitudes.

One suggestion from right wing commentators is that the greater interest in "porn" shown by conservative states could actually be skewed by pockets of "sex-obsessed" liberals which, as everyone knows, can be found even in Georgia, Texas and Wyoming. My suggestion is that it really depends upon what came after the word "sex" was entered into the search request.

For example, in Utah, where the Mormon Church holds sway and physical relations are frowned upon before marriage, it is easy to imagine a whole crowd of teenagers sitting around a lap top, entering the word "sex" and then convulsing with embarrassed giggles.

Likewise for Mississippi, given its traditional literacy problems, where 'sex' could have been followed by 'pack' and actually have been a spelling mistake and merely a reference to how much beer Bubba was supposed to bring to the party.

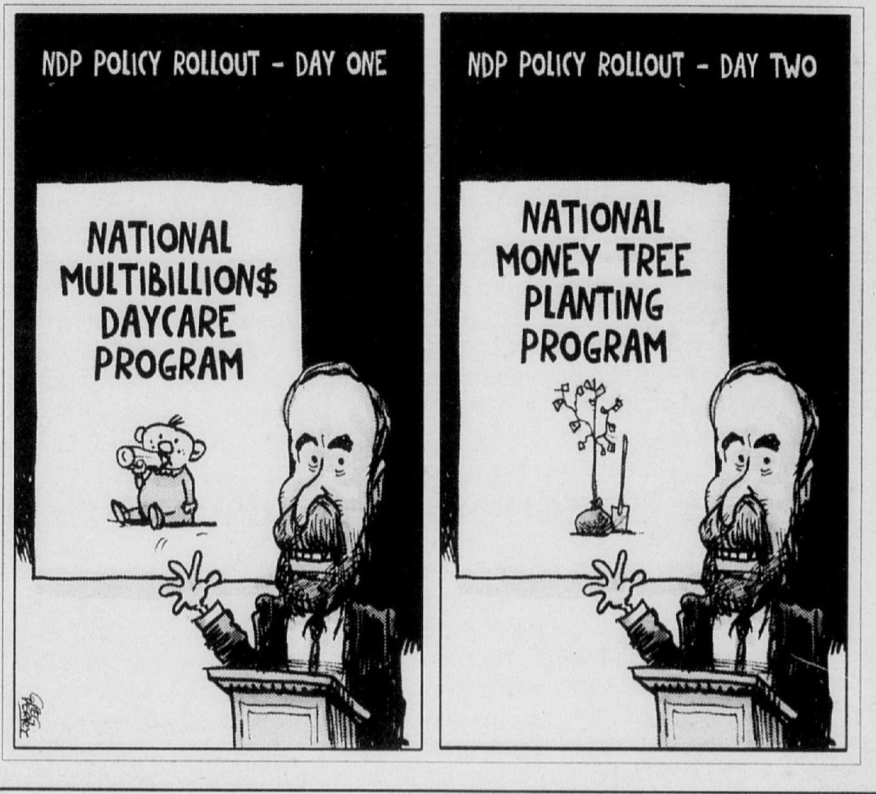

One can't help but wonder, as well, what results the researchers would have found had they applied their investigative skills to Canada's provinces.

Now, the "red-blue" dichotomy as far as provinces go is admittedly not as obvious as the split between the states, but no one would deny the difference in social outlook between, let us say, Quebec and Alberta.

Nor is it inconceivable that political and religious beliefs would affect the use of internet porn in such geographically distant societies as British Columbia and Prince Edward Island.

One can easily imagine a Canadian conservative typing in the word "sex" and hoping to find an explanation from the PMO as to where real Canadians ought to stand on the subject. Likewise, when a liberal-minded citizen entered "sex" in a Google search it is conceivable that they would be merely searching for one of the many shirtless shots of Justin Trudeau. As for a socialist, a category that did not apply in the American survey, it is likely that a search based on the word "sex" would likely be a hunt for a government subsidized dating service.

I am sure that the value of knowing who watches more pornography in the U.S., conservatives or liberals, will eventually be evident. Perhaps next time researchers could look into the equally fascinating question of who eats more porridge.

An open letter to the Minister of Transport

MR. MINISTER,

We, the Coalition of Metropolitan Sherbrooke paratransit users [known as the RUTASM - ed.], would like to follow up on the letter we sent to you on June 30, which was published in Le Soleil, by the way, on July 4.

The response we received from your political advisor on Sept. 26 puzzled us, especially when it refers to "budgetary resources" to emerge "during the fiscal year" and the current assessment of "all programs to meet government objectives."

Let us remember that the financial program for adapted transportation must also "meet" the needs of people with disabilities in order to avoid discrimination. In this regard, we refer to the recent statements from the Quebec Commission on Human Rights and Youth Rights on the ongoing review of programs, which reiterate that the process must take into account Quebec Charter of Rights and freedoms, and not only be an analysis in terms of "economic efficiency or financial opportunity."

Going back to our previous letter and needs expressed therein, we also want to review the reports in various media on the latest survey by the Quebec Urban Transit Association.

This shows that people believe in the importance of public transit, but do not want to contribute more financially. An increase in the gas tax and registration fees for motorists is naturally disliked by Quebec motorists but is demanded by transit companies, which move more people per vehicle and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Unpopular measures? These are not our first choices and the government is not prepared to "offend" a large part of the electorate! Do not both measures still head in the direction of your concerns, Mr. Minister, expressed for sustainable development in Quebec and your agreement to the transfer of funds from the development of roads to that of public transit? Unused funds are tied to unrealized projects for public transport, for better sustainability. Everyone must contribute to reducing greenhouse gases; we are all aware of their impact on global warming.

In terms of adapted transportation, which is also public transit, you must add funds, part of which could come from unused funds and raising the gas tax and registration fees by two per cent does not adequately cover the current development of paratransit connected to a greater integration of disabled people.

The previous government had planned on increasing funding by $6 million over several years. Mr. Minister, you must be kind enough to meet the needs of people with disabilities in Quebec. This is a challenge not to lose the progress that we've made in a number of provinces and countries in gaining recognition for the rights of the disabled.

Thank you for your concern for sustainable transport in Quebec, and thank you for your concern for commuters whose vulnerability requires specific protection measures (Highway Safety Code review) and financing (financial additions for accessibility associated with different disabilities).

FRANCE CROTEAU

And then I lay there awake for another hour. This is what happens when you suffer a near-bread experience.

ROSS MURRAY

The smoke detector went off just before 3 a.m. and I leaped out of bed like it was an Olympic event. If there had been an actual fire, the tumultuous flapping of the blankets would have fed the flames to a frenzy.

"Oh my God!" I cried. Deb claims I flung myself across the bed and nearly head-butted her, but I maintain I hit the floor at the foot of the bed and sped out into the hall.

Remember this discrepancy the next time you hear a so-called "eyewitness account."

So, no, I wasn't calm under pressure, but I didn't panic. No, sir, I didn't, probably because by the time I got to the hallway to rouse the children, the beeping had stopped, and instead of the choking fog of smoke, the floor was filled with the delightful aroma of freshly baked bread.

St. Francis Valley honours its plowmen

By Claudia Villemaire
RICHMOND

With 68 competitors to reward, over a dozen special prizes, a quilt and windsock crafted by the Wintle sisters and door prizes for just about everyone, the annual plowmen's banquet last Friday was an event anticipated by quite a number of people.

President Fraser Smith and secretary-treasurer Larry Cinnamon, with the incalculable support of his soulmate Joyce, had a challenging task of paperwork, listing classes and winners and making sure all trophies and prizes were ready.

With eight teams of horses participating, a large class of antique tractors nearly a dozen various classes, judges Richard Goodhue and Larry Cinnamon had quite a challenge compiling scores.

Smoke defective

Death by toast inhalation - very rare. We had put a loaf on in the bread-maker prior to going to bed, and something in the baking must have triggered the alarm. I went downstairs to check - nothing burning. I scanned the house, sniffed around the basement. Everything was fine. Well, the basement never smells fine. Everything was normal.

I went back to bed. Ten minutes later, it went off again. I re-checked the house. After the third time, another 10 minutes later, I unhooked the detector from the wall and brought it into the bathroom. I was trying to read the tiny print on the back through 3:30 eyes when it went off in my hand.

Good thing I was in the bathroom. I took out the battery and crawled back into bed.

And then I lay there awake for another hour. This is what happens when you suffer a near-bread experience.

The thing is, I really wanted to sleep. It had been a tiring week, and the night before I had gone to bed while my young-adult children and their young-adult cousins partied loudly downstairs. They are all freshmen in the school of drinking, and they were cramming. I put in earplugs after a while. Earplugs do a pretty good job of blocking noise but earplugs can't block the feeling you're wearing earplugs.

So I was tired. We had ended the following day by driving our eldest daughter back to Montreal. As I stood in her apartment hallway, I looked up and saw her smoke detector hanging open - battery-less.

"Replace your battery," I scolded.

This was after I had to squint at the sesame seeds on her counter to make sure they weren't moving. Her house-keeping skills are a work in progress, but the battery was a priority.

With all the late nights and the travel, I should have been able to drift right back to sleep. Instead, I lay there thinking, what if there really had been a fire?

Why, for example, hadn't the at-home children sprung out of their rooms and raced for our pre-designated meeting place, the tree at the end of our driveway?

When I asked the next morning, one child said he had heard the smoke detector, one thought she was dreaming and one asked, "Is that what that was?" They were also two-for-three in recalling the pre-designated tree.

And what about the pets? Would I have to save the pets? There's a conspiracy afoot in the house right now to acquire a puppy in addition to the full-grown dog and four cats we already have. One more puppy would be one more animal to save from the fire. And, being a puppy, it probably started the fire in the first place.

I thought about just how far I would go to rescue those pets. If I died trying to save the cat that keeps me awake at night with its snoring, I would feel pretty silly.

Lying there, I thought about just how fat that snoring cat is. And then I thought that, if the fire were small enough, we could probably use the fat snoring cat like a blanket to smother the flames. It was late; don't tell my wife.

I thought about what else we would try to save from the flames. The traditional photo albums? Or the non-traditional record albums. Hey, I've been carting those things around for 30 years, man! Then I thought of a better question: was there anything we would throw into the fire? Oops, there goes that sweater. It was late; don't tell my wife.

Eventually, I did fall back to sleep, but not before realizing that our smoke detector was now sitting unplugged in the bathroom.

If we die in a fire tonight, I thought, and the inspectors find this, our eldest daughter will be beside herself for us being such total hypocrites.

Parent compared the look-up line to the warning track in baseball.

'Look up' line added to Pat Burns Arena

By Matthew McCully
Special to The Record
STANSTEAD

Pat Burns arena now has one of the few rinks in Canada sporting a meter wide orange look-up line painted on the ice along the boards.

The new line is a safety feature to help warn players with their heads down when they are approaching the boards.

"Are all the rinks doing that for Halloween?" people asked arena manager Marc Parent, when the line was first installed weeks ago.

The timing of the orange line was a coincidence, Parent said, adding that he wanted it in place before the hockey season started.

The look up line is a relatively new phenomenon, originating from Massachusetts man Thomas E. Smith, who suffered severe spinal injuries after hitting the boards head first during a hockey game in 2008.

Parent said over 100 rinks in the US have the line right now, most of them in Massachusetts. "We are one of the first to do it in Canada," Parent said.

"It doesn't affect the game in any way," he said. "It doesn't change the ice quality or the rules. It's just a warning sign."

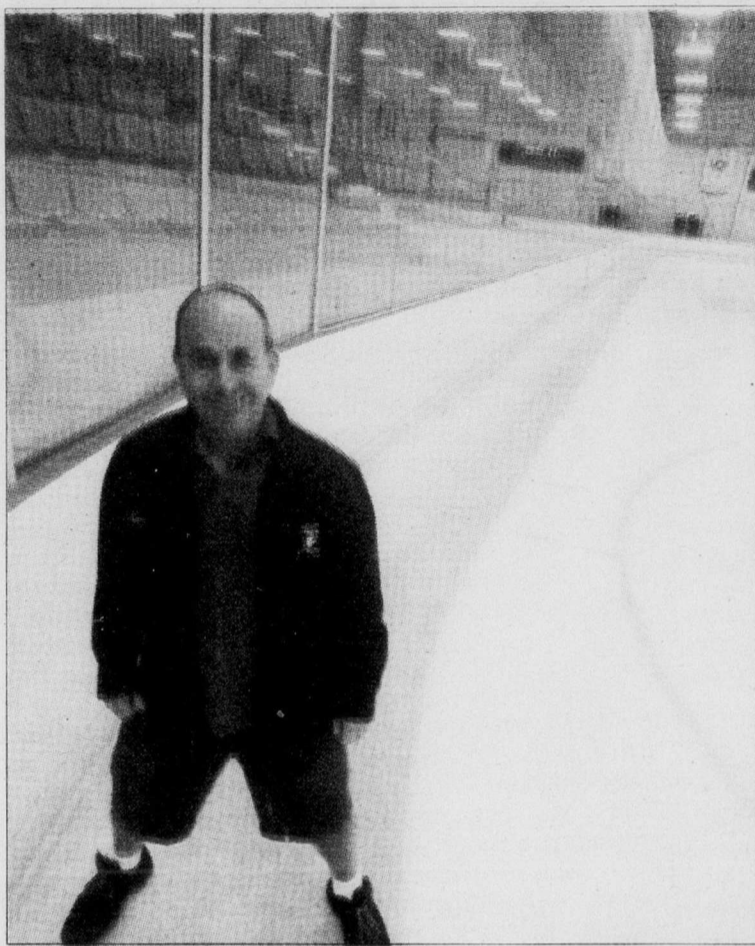

Parent compared the look-up line to the warning track in baseball.

Because players are looking up, they don't realize how close they are to the outer wall, so the ground surface changes from grass to gravel. When players feel the gravel under their feet, they know they are a certain distance from the outer wall of the field.

"It's the same principle," he said, explaining that hockey players often have their heads down looking at the puck on the ice. When they see orange, they know they are near the boards, so they can avoid a collision or maneuver away to avoid being hit.

The total cost to add the line to the ice surface was around $1,600, Parent said.

On a Sunday night just weeks ago, parent and his team used an edger and shaved the ice down to the concrete. The following morning, a painter arrived and used 10 gallons of paint to make the orange line. The ice was then built back up over the paint and evened out. Patrons were back on the rink skating by 6 p.m. on Tuesday.

There are no rules in place right now, and the look-up line is not mandatory for any hockey leagues.

Parent said USA Hockey is currently studying the idea, and he believes in the next year or two more rinks will start using it.

"We said let's be proactive."

James Rioux, co-ordinator of hockey operations at Stanstead College, said their hockey program hasn't officially started yet, so he has yet to hear what the players think of the line.

"Players don't feel the blue line or the red line when they skate over it," he said, adding that he is doubtful the look-up line would be a hindrance to performance.

"I don't expect it's going to change hockey."

"This was a precautionary measure to encourage people to play with respect. If someone can avoid getting hurt because of it, then it's worth it," Rioux said.

"Most churches are selling for one dollar. We only had one offer. We were lucky,"

Church auction-everything must go

By Matthew McCully
Special to The Record
STANSTEAD

The contents of the two Catholic churches recently sold in Rock Island and Beebe will go up for auction on October 25. The sale will take place at the Notre-Dame-de-la-Merci church, starting around 9 a.m.

The churches were sold to business partners Jean Lemieux and Jean-François Cossette at a bargain. Sainte-Thérèse-de-l'Enfant-Jésus sold for $25,000 and Notre-Dame-de-la-Merci for $75,000.

Gérard Grénier, president of the parish committee, with a heavy heart, explained the reason for the sale of the churches and their contents.

"It's not a growing business," he said. Notre-Dame, which can accommodate up to 400, only had between 12 and 15 active parishioners in the last few years.

In June 2013, four regional parishes of Sainte-Ephrem in Fitch Bay, and Sacré-Coeur, Sainte-Thérèse and Notre-Dame were regrouped into one, now known as The Holy Trinity.

Now, only Sainte-Ephrem and Sacré-Coeur still hold services.

Grénier said that once the churches were no longer holding services, they instantly became a financial burden to the parish, and by extension the archdiocese.

The bearer of bad news and mandated to liquidate the assets of the vacated churches, Grénier said it is not a happy task, and he shares the sadness and sense of loss of the other parishioners.

Ten years ago, the parish sold the presbytery beside Notre-Dame. The money from the sale was used for renovations, including a new roof, and an up-graded furnace system.

Even with the building in good condition, Grénier said the base costs for heating and insurance were around $19,000 per year.

"There's no market to sell a church," said Stella Laliberté, one of the five members of the parish committee, adding that there are limits as to what can be done with the building. "You couldn't just open up a strip club," she said.

Because of the costs of the large buildings, and the accessibility issues because of the stairs leading up to the Notre-Dame church, Grénier and Laliberté consider the parish fortunate to have found buyers for the two churches.

"Most churches are selling for one dollar. We only had one offer. We were lucky," Laliberté said.

The auction will be run by Bernard Vanasse, who Grénier claims has experience selling church furniture.

Before the churches were sold, any artifacts sacred to the parish were removed. What remains is a variety of furniture pieces, tables, chairs, dressers and chests from the sacristy, and dozens upon dozens of pews.

The three-person pews, which Laliberté thought would likely sell more easily, measure 58 inches (just under five feet). The six-person pews are close to 10 feet long.

Holy Trinity parish invited a parish from the Windsor area, currently rebuilding a church that burned down two years ago, to see if there was anything they could use. Grénier said that even though construction is still underway, the Windsor parish has already acquired all of the furnishings it will need from church closures in their area.

Two precarious items up for sale are the Casavant organs from Sainte-Thérèse and Notre-Dame.

Often part of the architecture of the buildings, pipe organs can be difficult to remove without damaging, Grénier said.

The auction will take place at 16 Notre-Dame Street West, on Saturday, Oct. 25, starting around 9 a.m.

FRONTIER ANIMAL SOCIETY

Bruno loves people and needs a new (cat-free) home

This week we have chosen to shine the spotlight on Bruno. If the name rings a bell it is likely because Bruno was featured in this column in mid-June. Yes, you read that correctly, mid-June!

Why is he still with us?

Honestly, we really don't know. Well, maybe it has a little something to do with the fact that he cannot live with cats. We know that limits his options somewhat but we also know there are lots of cat-free homes out there.

What makes us particularly sad is that in late August he came so close to finding his forever home. So close that even his bags were neatly packed and he'd cleaned up his kennel in anticipation of his impending departure.

Then we got the call; the family that had been so enamoured by this wonderful dog decided he was just too big to be their second dog.

Yes, Bruno is tall and lanky and admittedly he is a little bigger than a Chihuahua but he isn't crazy big like a Great Dane.

Needless to say we were crushed, especially because Bruno had really seized the moment and impressed us all with how exceptionally well-behaved he is.

He greeted each family member with a friendly tail wag, rolled over for belly rubs, played nicely with the kids and was a perfect gentleman on their walk in the woods.

Deep down we know it wasn't meant to be but the fact remains, Bruno was a star.

So while we've established that Bruno is not a cat lover he is very people friendly and thrives on attention and affection.

He loves belly rubs and though a little too big to be officially labelled a lap dog, he'll do his best to squeeze in. He is a happy and playful dog who loves to run and chase his rubber Kong in the dog park, is good on the leash, enjoys long leisurely walks and as an added bonus he travels really well in the car.

He is also wonderfully calm and is content to just hang out and chill.

Bruno gets along with most of the dogs he meets, although he does seem to do best with females and submissive males.

When out and about, away from the shelter, he pays little attention to other dogs and instead just keeps to himself and enjoys the company of his human companions.

Simply put, he is a great dog who deserves a great home.

Bruno is about 1.5 years old and is a very handsome shepherd mix.

If you haven't done so already, please take a moment to join our Facebook page at www.facebook.com/frontieranimalsociety where we will update Bruno's profile so you can share his story with friends and family.

Our Facebook page is also a great way to keep track of the many animals who are featured in this weekly column.

To find out more about Bruno or to arrange a visit to meet him, please send email frontieranimalsociety@gmail.com or better yet, give our adoption coordinator Brenda a call at 819-876-7747 any day of the week between 8 a.m and 8 p.m.

Stanstead, BCS off to soccer nationals

BCS to host girls tourney, boys teams headed to Bermuda

By Mike Hickey
Special to the Record

The Stanstead College and Bishop's College School senior soccer teams are busy preparing for the Canadian Association of Independent Schools National Championships this weekend.

Lennoxville will be the site for the girls championships will play host to 12 teams vying for a national title.

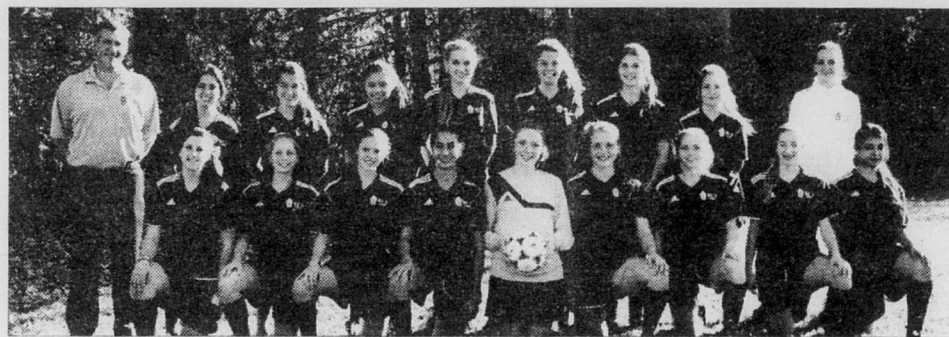

The field is divided into three pools of four teams with round-robin action scheduled for Saturday and Sunday morning. The top two teams in each pool will advance to the championship quarter-finals Sunday afternoon with the semi-finals slated for Monday morning at 10:30 a.m. The two winners advancing to the championship match at 1:30 p.m.

BCS will meet Lower Canada College of Montreal Saturday morning, St. Mildred's Lightbourn School of Oakville, Ont., in the afternoon and then finish round-robin play Sunday morning against Country Day School of King City, Ont. The Spartans will play Pickering (Ont.) College Saturday morning, Bishop Strachan of Toronto in the afternoon and then complete its preliminary games Sunday morning against Sacred Heart School of Montreal.

While the BCS girls will have the comfort of playing on their home fields, the BCS and Stanstead boys team are headed to Bermuda to where the host Saltus Grammar School is located.

The boys tourney will feature six pools of four teams with the top team in each pool advancing to Friday's championship round with the gold medal final slated for Saturday afternoon.

COURTESY BISHOP'S COLLEGE SCHOOL

The BCS senior girls soccer team will host the 2014 CAIS championships this weekend.

BCS will play Holy Trinity School, St. Andrew's College and Selwyn House in round robin play while Stanstead meets Appleby College and Rothesay-Netherwood School on Thursday and wrap up their preliminary round action Friday morning with a contest against the Crescent School.

The nationals will not mark the end of the season for the four teams. Next week they will all participate in the ETIAC championships. Semi-final action takes place Wednesday, while the finals will be held next Thursday.

Jubenville to Bishop's

The former McGill running back, who holds a degree in physical education and a certificate in education in English as a Second Language (ESL), left his head coaching position in 2011 following a difficult knee surgery that left him little time to focus on football. He still remained with the establishment as an instructor.

In 2012, Jubenville joined the Sherbrooke Vert et Or as a football consultant, assisting the coaching staff when needed. In April 2013, he was hired by the Cégep de Sherbrooke as athletic director, where he was in charge of the school's athletic teams as well as its physical activity centre, the CAP.

Jubenville also serves as a member of the board of directors for Excellence Sportive Sherbrooke, an organization that looks to support the region's best athletes and coaches as well as help organizations that are looking to host major sporting events in the region.

An interesting fact to note is that Bishop's Dean of Student Affairs, Jackie Bailey, who oversees the athletic department, is also a member of the group's board.

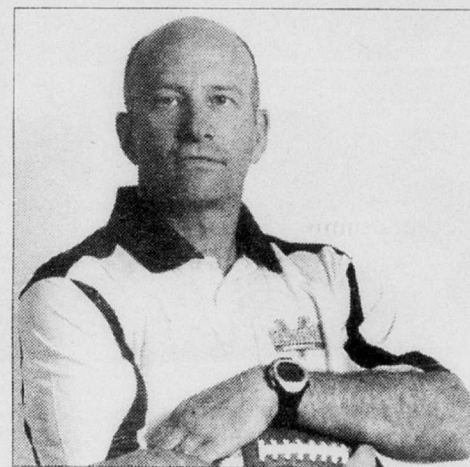

Needless to say, Jubenville will bring a very successful track record to the financially ailing school and department.

With recent government cuts in education, and with the school already on the brink of another negative budget, Bishop's will be looking to their new Sports Centre as a stream of revenue. Among other things, Jubenville will be tasked with increasing memberships and improving the offered recreation programs, as well as ensuring that the construction project remains on schedule and on budget.

On the varsity side, Jubenville takes over a program whose football team had a breakout season in 2013, but has slumped this year, and whose other men's teams have seen recent success, but whose women's sports programs have had difficulty breaking into the win column in recent years.

Over the summer, the department started a strategic review of the athletics program that is still ongoing.

Cross fit or improve your running with True Conditioning's TRX

A RUNNER'S MIND

CHRISTINE BLANCHETTE

Fall's cooler temperatures bring a need to bundle up before heading out into the elements. Despite the conditions, many runners for fitness sake will make every effort to maintain their workout regimen. Indeed, while a southbound thermometer may dampen your spirits to keep motivated, it can be a great opportunity to do some cross training at home or in the gym. Incorporating cross training into your running routine can prevent injuries while strengthening your core. There are myriad options such as cycling, water running, or lifting weights at the gym.

There is also a popular cross training technique that is used by the U.S. Military and professional sports teams to the every day fitness enthusiast, called TRX (Total Resistance eXercise). It was invented by Randy Netrick, a former Navy Seal and Stanford MBA graduate. TRX strengthens the core, conditions your body and is a portable training tool that uses one's body weight to complete exercises such as the side lunge or the hamstring runner, which is performed with raised hips off the floor while the core, including glutes, must be kept tight throughout to ensure proper form.

In a recent interview with TRX True Conditioning studio co-owner Sophie Manfredi, a personal trainer, she talked about her passion for fitness and teaming up with her life partner, Ryan Kitchen who is also a personal fitness expert.

"We opened (our business) at the beginning of February last year. I always wanted to go into personal training, and was working for Lululemon at the time," Manfredi said. "I also have a sports background, being a competitive swimmer. Ryan was already working as a personal trainer and coaching Jujitsu. It was one day we went walking and saw this studio for lease. We went for it, and then I went for my personal training certification."

She adds, "The workouts (should be) as intense as you would like and (at) your own pace. It can be a challenging workout. If you want to do 20 reps it is up to you. It is good for all athletes from golfers, runners to team sports."

I had the opportunity to try one of their classes, and was greeted first by their other family member - Winston the dog. The TRX beginner class left me with a good workout. Throughout the exercises, I had control of how much I could challenge myself basically by changing my body position to add weight or not on each routine from the side lunge to the overhead squat. The benefits of using the TRX is the runner will have a stronger core, and improve coordination. In the class, I tried the side lunge exercise, and I was told it strengthens your inner thighs, hamstrings, quadriceps and glutes. The TRX company website states: "Make your body your machine by turning your body weight into resistance with TRX Suspension Train-

Death

TAYLOR (nee Labonté)

Passed away peacefully after a brief illness, on Tuesday, October 14, 2014 at the Grace Christian Home, Huntingville.

Eleanor, in her 95th year, was the daughter of the late Bernice and Henry Labonté. She leaves to mourn her sons Stanley and Myron (Carol), her grandchildren Erica (Sean), Kelsey, Paul and Tristan. She is predeceased by her brother Murray Labonté and her sister-in-law Kay, sister Anita and brother-in-law Bob, and brother Eastman. She is survived by her sister-in-law Helen Taylor (the late Neil), Jean Pyke (the late Herb), and Fern Kirkby (the late Gordon), along with many nieces and nephews, relatives and friends.

The family would like to extend their sincere thanks and gratitude to the staff at the Grace Christian Home and to close friend Joyce Standish for their considerate care during Eleanor's residency at the home.

Visitation will be Sunday, October 19 at the Cass Funeral Home in Lennoxville, 2 to 4 p.m. The funeral will be held at the United Church of Canada in Cookshire on Monday, October 20 at 2 p.m. Interment will be at the Eaton Cemetery immediately following the funeral service. In lieu of flowers, the family would gratefully acknowledge donations to the Grace Christian Home, 1501 Campbell, Sherbrooke, QC J1M 0C1.

TODAY'S FACT: In 1986, Italian mountaineer Reinhold Messner reached the summit of Lhotse in Nepal, becoming the first climber to ascend all 14 of the world's "eight-thousanders" — mountain peaks more than 8,000 meters (26,000 feet) above sea level.

TODAY'S SPORTS: In 1969, the 8-year-old New York Mets won the World Series over the Baltimore Orioles.

TODAY'S QUOTE: "We are all in the gutter, but some of us are looking at the stars." — Oscar Wilde, "Lady Windermere's Fan"

TODAY'S NUMBER: 9 — countries thought to have nuclear-weapon capabilities in 2014 (the United States, Russia, the United Kingdom, France, China, India, Pakistan, North Korea and Israel).

TODAY'S MOON: Between last quarter moon (Oct. 15) and new moon (Oct. 23).

Card of Thanks

LEARNED - We wish to express our sincere thanks for the kindness and support shown to our family following the recent death of my husband, our father, grandfather and great-grandfather, Douglas Learned. People opened their homes, their hearts and their arms. We were overwhelmed by the generous contribution of food, flowers, sympathy cards, condolence messages, memorial donations, anecdotes and memories. Thank you also to the staff at the Wales Home and the Hotel Dieu (5c) who provided such compassionate care during those final days.

THE LEARNED FAMILY

In Memoriam

BRAZEL, Janice Alden.
In loving memory of a special friend whom God called home October 16, 2010.
*There is always a lonely heartache
And often a silent tear,
And always precious memories
Of the days when you were here.*
Sadly missed and always remembered,

I'm so worried he will go down the same path

Annie's Mailbox

insists on putting a dessert spoon at the top of the dinner

Dear Annie: My grown son is an alcoholic. It has not interfered with his job so far, but it seems to be getting worse. His father drank himself to death, and I'm so worried he will go down the same path. He absolutely won't discuss it.

Last Mother's Day, he promised to give up drinking, but a month later, I saw him guzzle two beers at a family picnic, and I remarked on it. He said he never wanted to speak to me again, and since then, he hasn't.

I'm not getting any younger, and I miss my son. I will be attending Al-Anon meetings, but is there anything else I can do? - Suffering in Illinois

Dear Suffering: We're so sorry your son has chosen not to deal with his alcoholism, but this is not something you can change for him. He must do it himself. You have made a wise decision to attend Al-Anon meetings. This is a wonderful organization for people whose lives are affected by a loved one's drinking. The members there will give you coping strategies and a shoulder to cry on, as well as advice for dealing specifically with your son. We hope he contacts you soon.

Dear Annie: My dearest girlfriend plates when she hosts a formal dinner. She says that's what etiquette demands.

I think a dessert spoon should be served with dessert instead of sitting out on the table during the entire dinner. Who's right? - Etiquette Challenged in Dallas

Dear Dallas: In a formal setting, dessert forks and spoons are brought out with the dessert. For an informal setting, however, it is perfectly OK to place dessert utensils above the plate or with the rest of the forks and spoons (the fork on the left, closest to the plate, and the spoon on the right, closest to the plate, because those will be the last utensils used).

Dear Annie: I usually agree with your advice, but I think you missed the mark with "Disappointed," the frustrated bridesmaid. She said the bride ordered hideous dresses, and when the bridesmaids tried to get her to find another, she didn't like any of them. When "Disappointed" found her own dress, the bride didn't like it. She then offered to drop out of the wedding party. At the rehearsal dinner, the bride announced that she had a new maid of honor because the other one didn't want to give a speech.

When a woman agrees to be a bridesmaid, she agrees to the bride's choice of dress. If they are ugly, no one attending the wedding blames the bridesmaids. "Disappointed" complained that she bought three dresses she could "ill afford." However, one of them was because the bride was trying to please her bridesmaids, and the last one was because "Disappointed" thought she had better taste than the bride. The bride was kind enough to allow her out of the maid-of-honor role, while keeping her in the wedding party.

As for the "lie" that the bride told at the rehearsal dinner? My guess is the bride thought it sounded better than "my best friend is too selfish to honor my choice of bridesmaid dress." Personally, I think "Disappointed" sounds like a bridesmaidzilla. - Should Have Eloped

Dear Should Have: We appreciate your spin on the situation, but brides need to take their attendants' financial situations into consideration when choosing a dress. And a thoughtful bride will ask her bridesmaids to help select the dress to begin with, preventing exactly this type of rancor. As for the lie at the rehearsal dinner, we don't understand why the bride felt it was necessary to make a public announcement altogether, surprising (and embarrassing) her friend. We will say, however, that an apology - on either side - can go a long way toward repairing a friendship. We hope they can do it.
