Local firm gives foreign competition a run for the money

When Bombardier Ltd. introduced Can-Am motorcycles to the North American market in 1973, the company sold 900 bikes. In 1975, 10,000 were sold.

"We're giving Japanese competitors a run for their money in the two-stroke, single-cylinder, cross-country market," said Michel Cloutier, vice-president and general manager of the recreational products division of Bombardier-MLW Ltd., the company recently formed by the merger of Bombardier with MLW-Worthington Ltd.

It is the first time in two decades that a North American company has successfully challenged Japanese motorcycle giants such as Honda, Kawasaki, 20 per cent. Significant sales also have been registered in Australia, South Africa and Jamaica.

Can-Am sales will depend largely on how their bikes fare at the race track. Last summer at the Bonneville Salt Flats in Utah, Can-Am established new world speed records in three classes of bikes, versions of which it offers to consumers.

"Since 1973, we have won gold medals at six-day international trials around the world," said Richard Lague, Can-Am marketing director.

month net income of $804,000 last Oct. 31, compared with a net loss of $2.3 million a year earlier.

"This has had the effect of stabilizing our work force, allowing us to retain the services of our highly-skilled personnel trained over a period of years," Mr. Beaudoin said.

Most of Bombardier's recent financial difficulties were attributed to a declining snowmobile market and the phasing out of some snowmobile manufacturing operations. For several years, snowmobiles had been the mainstay of the company and caused the

Small army assembled to process tax returns

OTTAWA (CP) — While Canadians ponder the intricacies of their 1975 income tax forms, the revenue department has assembled a small army to process the expected 12 million returns. 120,000 last year—which is required by law for all those who earn taxable income.

Virtually all are eventually tracked down and those who ignore demands to file late are prosecuted in

The bulk of the returns are processed by about 8,000 seasonal workers hired for the filing period to back up 700 regular department employees who deal initially with the forms. Most work out of the 10-storey data centre in Ottawa, where returns from most of the country are processed.

For the first time this year, however, returns from the three Prairie provinces and most of the Northwest Territories will be processed in Winnipeg, where about 1,100 employees are working properly and include the necessary receipts. Those lacking appropriate information go to an office which checks by phone or letter with the taxpayer—there were 450,000 last year.

Other employees are working in a renovated aircraft warehouse.

Of course most of the income tax—expected to total more than $21 billion for 1975—was actually collected last year in regular deductions from employee paycheques and periodic payments from self-employed individuals and corporations.

But now the returns must be filed and assessed to determine whether individual taxpayers paid too much or too little.

The deadline for mailing the return is midnight April 30. The department aims at having most returns processed by June 30.

Those returns containing errors are sent to another office, where the source and reason for the error are tracked down through a detailed analysis of the return.

This analysis could

1.2 MILLION IN In fact, about 1.2 million taxpayers already had filed their forms by early this month and the department had processed 354,000 of them.

Department records show that most of early filers are traditionally those whose calculations show the government owes them a refund. Last year about 8.5 million individual taxpayers received refunds totalling $1.7 billion, although this amount also included unemployment insurance and Canada Pension Plan overpayments.

Most taxpayers meet the April 30 deadline, even if it means a late-night rush to the post office.

The 12 million 1975 returns are expected to increase to 15 million by 1980 and to 18 million by 1985.

Plans call for establishing two processing centres in Quebec, a second in Ontario, one in Newfoundland and one in British Columbia.

World Day of Prayer observed

Seven Sherbrooke churches participated in the 1976 World Day of Prayer service held at First Baptist Church on March 5. This service was sponsored by the Women's Inter-Church Council of Canada. The World Day of Prayer is held the first Friday of March each year. Millions of people in over 150 countries and areas unite in the One-ness of Christ.

The service was under the leadership of Mrs. Murray Richardson. The Scriptures were read by: Mrs. H. Heath, St. Paul's; Mrs. Sylvia Brown, St. Andrew's; Mrs. John Hayes, St. Patrick's and Mrs. Eric Fuller, Plymouth-Unity. Three scenes were acted out by: Mrs. C. E. Allan; Mrs. Gordon McCourt and Mrs. Bruce Lothrop, St. Peter's. The readers were: Mrs. J. Wark, Church of the Advent; Mrs. John Hayes, St. Patrick's; Mrs. H. Heath, St. Paul's; Mrs. Eric Fuller, Plymouth-Unity and Mrs. Sylvia Brown, St. Andrew's.

Education For All Of Life was the theme for this service. Guest Speaker, Miss Marjorie Beckwith, a Medical Missionary, home on furlough from Angola Africa was introduced by Mrs. M. Richardson.

In her message, Miss Beckwith said the theme reminded her of King Solomon's advice, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. She stressed her concern for education and social development for our fellowmen in what is known as the third world. Miss Beckwith lived and worked for 12 years among the Chokine people in Angola. Life for them lacked a dimension that even education in the three R's could not give. Their lives are haunted by fears - they believe that illnesses were caused by witchcraft. Fears of diviners who divined over illness and deaths. Often death was due to malaria or other known disease. Education in the traditional schools, in health, domestic arts did not bring results. Interest in these things and willingness to learn came rather as fruits of a new life. They needed to meet the great teacher Jesus Christ who could give this life. This life is received by faith, faith as personal and individual as birth. It was among those who did so that was found an open ear for the teaching that made their lives richer.

liberating them from their old fears of witchcraft. This too was the Education for All of Life that was needed to sustain them through the years of guerrilla warfare, retaliation of terrorism and the more recent civil war.

One young man Miss Beckwith recalled, whose family were all killed, found himself about to face life with new vision because his faith in the Lord enabled him to not harbor bitterness which, he said, "would not harm those who did it but would destroy his own soul."

In closing Miss Beckwith asked that in this age of uncertainties and confusion that we remember the words of Moses found in Deuteronomy. May God give to us the faith and courage to prepare for our children and for the new generation of other lands so that we launch them on the streams of life with the way of salvation and covered with our prayers. This is Education For All Of Life.

Mrs. Dorothy Wright was organist and the choir included representatives from all participating churches.

Mrs. Noel Humphries; Mrs. Russell Harris; Mrs. C. G. Blake and Mrs. Edith Spackman received the ladies at the door and took up the offering which is used to assist Ecumenical projects that communicate the gospel and serve human need. These projects have been selected after a great deal of prayerful consideration to represent the variety of interests and concerns of World Day of Prayer participants.

Following the service a social time was enjoyed in the downstairs Hall during which time refreshments were served. Mrs. H. Leech Jr. convened. Tea was poured by Mrs. J. Wark and Mrs. E. Wheeler. General hostesses were Mrs. Maisie Hopcraft; Mrs. Evelyn Lake; Mrs. Dorothy Mills and Mrs. Guy Martin.

In an article recently, the argument was made that the prime minister has a case for moving directly, through a joint address of the two Houses, to achieve the patriation of the Canadian constitution. The precedents establish no clear guide. In the absence of full and formal agreement, Mr. Trudeau can cite consultation and a large measure of consensus. The objective is generally approved and the amending formula of the Victoria Charter is apparently acceptable to the various governments.

Consensus can be built. Unfortunately, consensus can also be destroyed. One way to destroy it is to invoke the threat of a general election. Mr. Trudeau's first reference to this was in a Quebec speech, which as a whole was highly critical of the Quebec government and was perceived by Mr. Bourassa and his ministers as an attack on themselves. On Tuesday, outside the Commons, the prime minister repeated the suggestion. But these big-stick tactics, when Mr. Trudeau still professes hope of negotiations, simply aren't helpful. Mr. Bourassa has already drawn support from the premier of New Brunswick. He may find a response elsewhere — certainly the Ontario government since John Robarts has consistently tended to react against anything that threatened to drive Quebec into isolation.

Further, an election would be a very poor approach to the constitutional problem. It is surely insulting to voters to suggest that it would test their will "to slough off traces of colonialism." There hasn't been such an issue dividing Canadians in 40 years. In any case, how on earth could a constitutional question be isolated when the interests of voters are, and are likely to be, overwhelmingly economic.

If they rejected the government for reasons having nothing to do with the constitution, would that mean that efforts at patriation would have to be abandoned for another half century? An alternative might be a referendum but Mr. Trudeau is no proponent of a referendum. In any event, although many proposals have been put forward, the premiers have yet to be asked to examine the implications of amendment by referendum.

Although the country in recent years has displayed very little interest in constitutional amendment, the objective of patriation is a worthy one. In pursuing it, the prime minister should be aware of anything that serves to exacerbate relations between governments. The anti-inflation fight demands a large measure of co-operation, which Mr. Trudeau has been receiving from the premiers.

No one has sought to impede him by raising ticklish constitutional issues. For that very reason, they may be the more sensitive to remarks conveying a sense of threat.

This is a poor time for electioneering talk. The prime minister would do much better to confine himself to private exchanges with the premiers and, if necessary, to considered statements in the House of Commons.

Olympic installations board faces controversy

DENVER, Colo. (AP) — The FBI has begun investigating the proposed expansion of a Colorado ski area controlled by Howard (Bo) Callaway.

U.S. Attorney James Treece says the investigation began when an agent relayed to federal prosecutors a report that a bribe might have been paid. A reporter says the report originated with an anonymous telephone call he received.

Callaway took a voluntary leave of absence from his post as President Ford's campaign manager during the weekend after Senator Floyd Haskell (Dem. Colo.) announced that his Senate subcommittee will hold hearings on the resort at Crested Butte, Colo.

The Senate investigation was prompted not by allegations of bribery, but by questions about a meeting last summer in which Callaway, then army secretary, met with Forest Service officials in the Pentagon and asked that the ski area be allowed to expand.

WOULD BE CRIME

The bribery allegations do not mention Callaway's name. But Treece said it was the possibility of bribery that gave the FBI a connection to the case. He said such a bribe would be a federal crime.

The bribery allegations apparently originated with a reporter who said he was told by an anonymous caller that $135,000 had been paid. The alleged recipient, Jimmy Wilkins, Gunnison National Forest supervisor, denied it and said he called for the investigation.

Callaway said he is confident there has been no impropriety. He said he asked to be relieved because he feels Ford's reputation of openness, honesty and integrity makes it "important to go the extra mile."

Like almost all Rocky Mountain ski resorts, Crested Butte operates on public land and its owners pay the government royalties.

The controversy began after the Crested Butte Development Corp., in which Callaway owns the controlling interest, applied to the Forest Service for inclusion of Mount Snodgrass, adjacent to the current area.

No action has been taken on the requested expansion.

The unhealthy cost of drugs

WASHINGTON — The nation's doctors, collectively if not always individually, have a dismaying tendency to put profits ahead of their patients.

The doctors' lobby has joined forces with the pharmaceutical industry, for example, to keep the price of drugs as high as the market will bear.

Lower prices would make it possible for more poor patients to afford the drugs they need. The price at the prescription counter, you see, has little to do with the cost of manufacturing drugs. The pharmaceutical companies simply charge all they can squeeze out of their customers.

The brand-name drugs, which these big companies produce, are usually available at far lower prices under their generic names. A drug like Darvon, for example, can be purchased at half the price if it is identified by its chemical composition rather than its brand name.

Yet most doctors still go on prescribing brand-name drugs. Uncle Sam alone could save $75 million a year if doctors were required to prescribe drugs at the lowest possible price for their Medicare and Medicaid patients.

The prospect of such a huge saving impressed Caspar Weinberger, the budget-conscious former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. In late 1973, he introduced a "Maximum Allowable Costs" program, which would require the government to pay the lowest possible price for drugs.

The program would be administered by a board, which would make price lists available to doctors, pharmacists and consumers across the country. These price sheets would list the comparable prices of brand-name drugs and their generic equivalents. The companies that offered the cheapest drugs, of course, would get the government's business.

This not only would save the taxpayers an annual $75 million, but would probably bring down the price of all drugs. For the

Jack Anderson's

Washington Merry-Go-Round

that the patients must pay for their drugs. Thus, the doctors indirectly benefit from high drug prices.

Cozy Cronies: As a member of the Joint Committee on Defense Production, Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., is supposed to investigate the cozy relationships that have grown up between defense contractors and government officials.

Yet Tower himself has a cozy relationship with Rockwell International's chairman, Al Rockwell, who has contributed to his campaigns. They also served together on the national board of the Kappa Sigma fraternity.

The committee recently held hearings on Rockwell's hunting lodge, where the cozy military-industrial relationships have been nurtured. Tower quickly wound up as the defender instead of the investigator of Rockwell.

Footnote: The Senator acknowledged that he and Rockwell are personal friends. Despite their friendship, Tower said he had fought against Rockwell's B-1 bomber.

Ski Fun: In past columns, we have reported how the Northrop Corporation entertained the Pentagon brass at goose hunts on the Maryland shores and ski trips in the Colorado mountains.

Northrop executive Ward Dennis was busy planning his winter's ski holiday when we broke the story. The publicity apparently has spoiled the fun for the brass hats.

Northrop ordered its executives to stay home, so they aren't available to pick up the bar tabs. The Pentagon bigwigs also liked to gather at the Aspen Alps Club after leaving the ski slopes. They always reserved an elegant apartment, which came to be known as the "passion pit."

It featured a huge slate bathtub, which could accommodate several people at the same time. The "passion pit" has also been closed down.

Says brown bag
lunches a health risk

TORONTO (CP) — People who pack their own lunches to save a few dollars may be courting food poisoning, says a professor of food sciences at University of Guelph.

Prof. Cyril Duitschaever criticized the federal health protection branch and supermarket chains for not warning the public about "brown bag" lunches.

He said the major culprits in food poisoning are such perishable foods as mayonnaise, potato salad, meats or meat salads.

"Chicken, turkey and ham top the list and liver pate and egg are also risky."

"Mayonnaise left out in warm temperatures was found to be the main cause of food poisoning that killed several people on an Italian liner last year."

Mayonnaise was also blamed in the death of four air charter passengers in the Canary Islands in late February.

Prof. Duitschaever said symptoms of food poisoning include headaches, abdominal cramps, vomiting, nausea, fever and diarrhea. They usually develop 12 to 36 hours after eating contaminated food.

VICTIMS UNAWARE

These symptoms can last

up to a week but he said most cases are not reported because people don't realize they've suffered food poisoning.

The longer perishable foods are left out in room temperatures, the quicker bacteria multiply.

He said supermarkets do little to inform shoppers on the possible damages of sandwichmaking and the health protection branch aims too many of its information booklets at institutions.

"It's OK to send me fact sheets but it's the people who make and eat sandwiches who need to know most of all."

Margaret Pope, educational service director for the health protection branch, agreed that her department probably doesn't do enough in the field of food poisoning.

"But it's as much as we can afford on our small budget," she said. The last leaflet sent out by her department on food poisoning was attached to family allowance cheques two years ago.

"But we do our best to publicize these food tips through newspaper articles and TV programs."

Franc floats freely

BRUSSELS (AP) — French Finance Minister Jean-Pierre Fourcade announced Mon. that the franc will again be allowed to float freely on world markets.

The decision was reached at a meeting that began Sunday of finance ministers and governors of central banks from France, West Germany, Denmark, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg.

The decision was effective immediately and Fourcade put no time-limit on the float.

The move cuts France loose from Europe's joint monetary float system known as snake, which limits fluctuations of member-country's currencies to 2.25 per cent. Member-country currencies float as a block against other currencies.

It was the second time France has withdrawn from the joint float in two years.

The franc has been under heavy pressure on currency markets for several days. The Bank of France is estimated to have spent almost $2 billion in the last three weeks to keep the franc above its regulation floor level.

Letter to the Editor

Terms Bill 22
Official
Discrimination

Dear Editor:

P.E. Trudeau has made a speech in Quebec City in which he described Bill 22 as "stupid legislation" and that the Federal Government should act unilaterally to repatriate the Constitution. This is reducing the Canadians of this province and all of Canada to the level of morons, by his understanding.

Bill 22 is ultra vires the power of Bourassa and his secessionist-minded Quebecois masquerading in "Liberal" coats. It sets up two classes of citizens and ushers into our country official discrimination — the "Francisation Certificates" for business.

Our children are to be put through an inquisition before being allowed to learn the official language of Canada. The teachers of the Protestant, English-speaking school system have been meanly declassified (demoted). Immigration offices to be co-manned by "Quebecois" who will inform future citizens that they must be assimilated into Bourassa's empire should they settle in our province.

The C.R.T.C. is to carry out an inquisition into the broadcasting activities of Radio Station CFCF for having allowed Canadians an opportunity to voice their displeasure of Bill 22 and its authors and to object to having the English language expelled from this part of Canada.

Recently our TP4 forms have handed the English language the coup de grace. Taxation without representation! We are to be taxed in French only. What does our bilingualism program cost the Canadians across our country?

I am sending this letter to all the major newspapers in Canada with a copy of this TP4 as well as the advertisement recently placed by the Quebec Association of Protestant School Boards asking for contributions to fight Bill 22 in the courts.

All Canadians and Canadians should be made aware of what is happening to freedom in this province (etat francais?) and to awake before it's too late. Most of us live here in peace in our two languages: Bourassa and Trudeau are dangerous and not to be trusted. Nous n'avons pas de confiance, messieurs!

Let us hope that Joe Clark and other Canadians will stand on guard for Canada, la terre de nos aieux.

Concerned Canadian,

Ireland and the Irish, was the subject of a most interesting lecture given in the Library of Bishop's University last night by the Rev. Canon Fitzgerald of Kingston, Ontario to a crowded audience. Many beautiful views of Old Erin's beauty spots and cities were thrown on the screen including Killarney, the Vale of Avoca, etc., and in a powerful and eloquent manner the lecturer dealt with the country's religious and educational systems, the habits and customs of the people and the great ability that has come from many of the poorer inhabitants. He contrasted the manner in which the teachers in Ireland are upheld by the moral support of the people with the way in which Canadian parents allow their children to criticize their instructors.

Traditional steak, kidney pie

By Aileen Claire
NEA Food Editor

Certain food traditions appear difficult to swallow for those not raised on them. A classic example is steak and kidney pie which many assume is a product of British inspiration. Kidneys have long been a favorite of the French served en flambe and the Dutch used them in soups. Many in the United States make little use of this variety meat which centuries ago was considered a luxury reserved for chiefs and warriors, giving them courage and strength.

STEAK AND KIDNEY PIE
2 small veal kidneys (4 to 5-ounces), fat removed
2 pounds beef top round steak
3 tablespoons cooking oil
1/2 cup chopped onion
1/2 pound mushrooms, sliced
3 tablespoons flour
1 1/4 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon black pepper
1/2 cup beef broth
1/2 cup red table wine
2 tablespoons tomato paste
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Pastry

Cut kidneys in small cubes, cover with cold water and bring to boil. Drain and cool. Cut round steak into one and one-half inch cubes. Brown beef in hot oil. Remove beef. Add onion and mushrooms to skillet and brown lightly. Blend flour, salt and pepper into vegetables. Stir in broth, wine, tomato paste and Worcestershire sauce. Cook until mixture boils. Add kidney and steak cubes. Cover and simmer one and one-half to two hours until tender. Divide mixture into six shallow individual bakers. Cover with pastry, pinching edges to sides of bakers. Cut slits in top. Bake in 425-degree oven 25 to 30 minutes or until pastry is brown. Makes 6 servings.

Pastry: Combine 2 cups flour with 1 teaspoon salt. Cut in two-third cup shortening into flour with pastry blender. Add one-third cup cold water to make stiff dough. Divide pastry into 6 balls. Roll out balls onto floured board.

A simple salad to aid the novice

By Aileen Claire
NEA Food Editor

A simple salad that can be made ahead and holds its flavor and attractiveness for many hours is a blessing to the beginning cook. A gelatin mold salad fits well into party plans for the less experienced hostess since it allows extra time to cope with other dishes. Serve well chilled to give a titillating contrast to hot casseroles.

Ham and Celery Salad
1 package (3 ounces) lemon flavor gelatin
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup boiling water

1/4 cup cold water
3 tablespoons vinegar
1/2 teaspoon grated onion
1 cup finely chopped cooked ham
1 cup finely chopped celery
2 tablespoons finely chopped sweet pickle

Dissolve gelatin and salt in boiling water. Add cold water, vinegar and grated onion. Chill until slightly thickened. Fold in ham, celery and pickle. Pour into 4-cup mold or individual molds. Chill until firm, about 3 hours. Unmold. Serve with crisp lettuce and mayonnaise, if desired. Makes three and one-third cups or 6 servings.

Military jackets top fall styles

By Judy Love

Sweaters are an important part of the fall and winter fashion forecast this year. There are styles to suit everybody — long wrap sweaters in ethnic patterns and homespun yarns, clingy lightweight knits that recall the siren look of the 1920s, and tailored jackets for playing down figure problems.

One popular sweater-jacket has styling details that give it a military look reminiscent of the French gendarmes (police) strolling their beats in Paris. Saddle shoulders, button-cuff sleeves and a fitted waistline make it an impeccable ensemble when teamed with pants or a tailored skirt.

Designed for anyone who has mastered basic knitting techniques, it combines the stockinette stitch in the body with knit stitching on the cuffs, collar and waistline to create texture. Six wooden or tortoiseshell buttons add visual interest.

You'll need a quick-knitting yarn like Bernat's Big Berella Bulky which comes in 4-ounce balls. Directions are for sizes Small (8-10), Medium (12-14), and Large (16-18). It takes 6 balls to knit size Small, 7 for Medium and Large. No. 11 knitting needles and a size K (7mm.) crochet hook will help you get your sweater ready in time for cool weather.

Instructions for sizes Small,

MILITARY-LOOK sweater jacket is styled to wear with pants and skirts to keep fall chills away.

Medium and Large can be ordered by sending 50 cents to Station, Box 503, New York, N.Y. 10019. Ask for leaflet S431 and be sure to enclose your name, address and zip code.

KNIT-KNACKS

We've had a number of letters asking for ideas for using left-over yarn. Also for ideas of projects that Brownie groups and Cub Scout dens can make. Here's an idea for making a useful napkin holder which is fun to do. You will need 5 yards of any hand-knitting yarn, plastic bottle on the order of a liquid detergent bottle, crochet hook, something to punch holes in the plastic bottle (hold puncher, hammer and nail, etc.).

Cut the plastic bottle with scissors so the sides are removed and the front and back remain. Shape the front and back into a high arc (about 4 inches) by cutting the plastic until it is symmetrical. Punch holes into plastic about 1/4 inch apart and about 1/4 inch from the edge of the arc. To make the border tie the yarn to the first hole. Make chains stitch by inserting hook through the next hole, catching the yarn with a crochet hook. Pull it through the hole leaving a large loop. Draw yarn through the loop with hook. Make chain stitch on outside of hole by catching yarn with hook and drawing through loop. Repeat the two chain stitches at each hole until border is finished. Keep knitting. Best, Judy Love.

Ann Landers says: Back-seat driver blues

Anyone who would deliberately run a red light and head into the wrong lane facing oncoming traffic, just to shake up a passenger, has got to be nuts.

Dear Ann Landers: My mother died less than two months ago after being bedridden for nearly a year. A week after my mother's funeral Dad told me she couldn't take care of his sexual needs for a long time and now he has found a woman who is able to give him what he has been missing. He keeps telling me how "great" she is.

This hurts me deeply and I don't know how to let him know. I'm not interested in my father's sex life. It isn't necessary for him to justify what he is doing by complaining to me about my mother's "inadequacy."

I can't bring myself to tell Dad how I feel. I just choke up inside and the words won't come. Will you please help me by printing my letter? He never misses your column. Thank you. - Still Grieving

Dear Friend: Here's your letter - and now why don't you try to help yourself by handing your dad this column and verbalizing your feelings? I know it will be difficult but it could be a giant step toward maturity. Bottled rage can be immensely damaging. God helps those who help themselves.

Dear Ann Landers: I was one of 12 children and I never heard my mother or father or one of my sisters or brothers use a dirty word. I have never used foul language in my life.

I ask you, why does my daughter who holds an executive position have such a filthy mouth? Her teenage children can't utter two sentences in a row without cursing or resorting to gutter language. They don't care who is present.

What can I do about this appalling situation? - Stuff (As They Call Me)

Dear Grandma: Probably nothing but feel sorry for them. Dirty words are counterfeit currency for bankrupt vocabularies. Those poor kids will never know how many doors they have closed on themselves with their filthy talk. What a pity!

There is a big difference between cold and cool. Ann Landers shows you how to play it cool without freezing people out in her booklet, "Teenage Sex - Ten Ways to Cool It." Send 50 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 1400, Elgin, Ill. 60120.

TODAY'S TREASURES

By Jean Barnes

Now that the cost of stamps has once again been increased, we ask that you not include a self-addressed stamped envelope with your requests. Letters to the column will be answered only through the column in this newspaper.

We'd also like to remind you that an appraisal or evaluation of your objects cannot be given in Today's Treasures and urge you to seek local assistance to answer the question, "How much is it worth?"

In a recent article in our local newspaper you discussed a Pat Traeger who dealt in miniatures. If it is possible...I should appreciate having her address. - J.T.N., Mattoon, Ill.

You may write to Ms. Traeger at: My Dollhouse, 2903 E. Douglas, Wichita, Kan., 67211.

I have a coin dated 1788 of Massachusetts and would like to write to someone who might have information about it. Can you give me the name of someone? - B.K.A., Kenilworth, N.J.

You may write to Ted Hammer, 1325 Crowley, Wichita, Kan., 67216. Send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for a personal reply. He is a personal friend of ours and has been a collector and columnist for many years. We're sure he can help you.

Now for a note to those collectors who have deluged us with advice about caning our rocking chair.

WE surrender! We have scheduled the project for late spring — between planting and harvest seasons. And, we plan to let you know if it really is as "simple" as everyone seems to think it is. Bless you for your encouragement.

Polish may erase marks on marble

By Polly Cramer

Polly's Problem

DEAR POLLY — A bottle of roll-on deodorant broke and spilled all over the marble top sink in my bathroom. I cleaned this immediately with a household cleanser but can still see a mark around the entire area where it spilled. Is there anything that will remove this stain? — KAREN.

DEAR KAREN — You said "marble" so I am assuming your sink top is real marble and not a laminated plastic with a marble look. Strong solutions can remove the polish from marble and perhaps the marks that remain are just where polish was removed. If repolishing with a damp cloth dipped in putty powder (buy at a paint or hardware store) does not do the job, rub with a solution of hydrogen peroxide and ammonia applied with a soft cloth. Rinse with clear water, wipe dry and then polish. If the marble was professionally sealed before it was purchased you might apply a marble sealer to the cleaned surface and then a thin coat of wax and buff. — POLLY.

DEAR POLLY — Mrs. R. L. can easily dye pampas grass into beautiful plumes as I have been doing for years. Break off the stems a few feet from the ends of the plumes when they are just starting to open. If you wait until they are completely open they will not be nice and fluffy. I put the stems in cake coloring just after breaking them from the stalks and the colors are drawn up the stems to color the plumes. Sometimes I loosen the leaves a little before dyeing the plumes but be careful as the plumes break easily. — L.B.H.

DEAR POLLY — and Mrs. R.L. — To color pampas grass hang the grass from a line with the bushy part down. Lightly spray the plumes with three or four different colors of spray paint. One coat is usually enough. When they are dry finish with clear spray varnish or hair spray. — BLANCHE.

You will receive a dollar if Polly uses your favorite home-making idea, Pet Peeve, Polly's Problem or solution to a problem. Write Polly in care of this newspaper.

Animal byproducts aid human lives

By Gaynor Maddox

How big is a cow? To measure the value of beef, as well as hogs and sheep, you must calculate the value other than in meat. The by-products of these animals play a vital role in the general condition of man.

Many housewives and users of meat think of bones, fat and sinews as garbage. Not so. Nothing need be wasted. The by-products of our slaughtered cattle population, provides us with such necessities as drugs.

Here is a partial list of some useful by-products from beef, sheep and hogs.

Insulin — used in treatment of diabetes.

Bone material and purified bone meal — used in plastic surgery.

Liver — used in treating pernicious anemia.

Lung — tissue is used to provide heparin, the anticoagulant drug.

Ovaries provide estrogen, used in treating medical problems of the female reproductive organs.

Pancreas used for the control of diabetes.

Chymotrypsin-proteolytic enzyme promotes healing of wounds, lesions, bruises and swelling; also used during cataract eye surgery.

Spinal cord: is a source of cholesterol used in preparation of sex hormone products.

Stomach is the source of rennet which is added to infant's diets to aid digestion.

This list is only partial. There are many more chemicals and drugs derived from the non-meat parts of beef, sheep and pigs.

Research Chemicals: closely associated with pharmaceuticals, various research chemicals obtained from livestock are used to develop new medical treatments, to provide standard measurements for research work, and to permit various research work to be conducted.

Foods: meat includes not only the "red meat" portions of cattle, but also the "variety meats" such as liver, kidneys, brains, tripe, sweetbreads, tongue, ox joints and fries.

By-products of livestock and meat processing are also used in the production of other foods.

Edible animal fats are used in the production and processing of: blend-type shortenings, bakery products, confections, casing products, chewing gum, glycerine and margarine.

Protein concentrates for human use can be processed from various animal by-products.

Animal feeds and concentrates, although not edible by humans, can be produced from livestock processing and are recycled to feed other animals.

One member had brought six more Ditty bags and more were promised. These are in charge of Mildred Roarke and Vivian Moulton to be filled as soon as all have been made.

The date for the annual May Fair was set for May 22. Mrs. Madeline McClary offered to make tickets for the drawing, the first prize an afghan and the second prize rose bushes.

All members were reminded to bring to the April meeting a picture post card of a local scene with a favourite recipe written on the back. These are to be sent to the County to be forwarded to the F.W.I.C. convention in Prince Edward Island.

Mrs. Phyllis Knapp, Citizenship convenor gave a reading "Who's to Blame", this reading asked parents to examine their own way of life and the guidance and upbringing they are giving their children to see if they are not contributing to the unrest and violence of our young people of today.

One guest at the meeting, Mrs. Sterling Parker of Lennoxville, gave a very informative talk on the first beginning of the Women's Institute, their aims and ambitions, and their affiliations with the County and province and with the Federated Institute of Canada and of the World.

After the talk, we had the privilege of welcoming four new members, Mrs. Pemberton, Mrs. Hutchison, Mrs. Sims and Mrs. George Knapp.

Following adjournment, all assembled in the dining room where a buffet lunch was served by the hostesses, Mrs. Heath and Mrs. Madeline McClary.

An Irish thatched cottage in County Clare

Time moves slowly in Irish countryside

DUBLIN — Once you are out of the cities, time moves slowly in Ireland. There are no autoroutes, no beaches on which you lie squeezed up like a sardine, no water floating with suntan oil, no casinos, no night clubs, and no waiters saying "Le service n'est pas compris."

But — there are more miles of paved road per square mile than in any country in Europe outside France; and there is an immense network of small, winding picturesque roads on which motoring is still a pleasure for motoring's sake.

There are almost 2,000 miles of coastline strewn with sandy beaches on which you can get hundreds of yards from another tourist. Often you can have a beach all to yourself, and the beaches are washed by an unpolluted sea.

And instead of depending on casinos and night clubs, the Irish people make their own entertainment in which they invite the visitor to share. Conversation and music are among Ireland's favorite pastimes, and they are to be had every evening in hotels and cottages, dance halls and bars. The singing pub is a national institution. As for the waiter, he will probably be an Irishman, more anxious to please than to collect a tip.

The great variety of accommodation makes it possible to enjoy what Ireland has to offer in unruined comfort. You can live like a lord in one of the many castle hotels. Or you can go the other way and stay at one of the innumerable "bed and breakfast" establishments — private houses offering accommodation, all of which have been vetted by the Irish Tourist Board.

A number of hotels also have self-catering suites, and the eight regional tourism organizations in Ireland produce booklets listing houses and cottages for rent, again all approved by the Tourist Board.

And there are Holiday Homes consisting of complexes of six to eight cottages which can accommodate from four to eight people and which have a number of built-in services. The most notable of these places are Shannon Rent-a-Cottage. These thatched cottages are built and furnished in the traditional style of the last two centuries but equipped with every modern convenience.

roads seem to lead to nowhere; but they all lead to somewhere — a view, an open space, a donkey grazing, a place with a mythological origin, an old man who will pull at his pipe and talk with you for several days about anything from the most abstract to the most concrete. In the end, really, it turns out to be a place you must find for yourself.

(The Irish Tourist Board in Toronto - 7 King Street East, Suite 908 - can provide details on all aspects of holidaying in Ireland, including prices on every kind of accommodation, car rental service and other areas of tourist interest.)

St. Paddy's — A day for fun and blarney

LENNOXVILLE (GA) — A sign in the Army, Navy and Air Force Veteran's Hut in Lennoxville reveals another bit of classic Irish philosophy, it reads - "An Irishman is never drunk as long as he can hold on to one blade of grass and not fall off the face of the earth."

This bit of wisdom possibly has some truth and would seem to indicate that no one over-indulged at the St. Pat's party held at the famous Lennoxville Army and Navy watering hole as not one of the merry-makers fell off the earth last Saturday afternoon. The party moved along at a merry pace and those members Irish and non-Irish enjoyed green beverages and some Irish songs and dances. The music was provided by Margaret Alexander who by the end of the afternoon exhausted her repertoire of Irish ballads and resorted to playing some Polkas and French-Canadian tunes. No one seemed to care, everything sounded like it came from a county Cork pub anyway and the Murphys, O'Connors, Boisverts and McDonalds alike wore their bits of Irish green and danced to the music, all like good sons and daughters of Erin.

One man said "There are only two types of people on this earth, those who are Irish, and those who wish they were."

Symposium on mystical and psychical phenomena held

MONTREAL (CP) — It was a memorable event, whatever you believe.

It was the first Canadian academic symposium on meditation, mystical and psychical experience and non-medical healing, held to a packed house here during the weekend.

Organized by Concordia University's department of religion, the symposium was preceded by five days of films and other presentations on meditation, mysticism and psychic phenomena.

Thirty-four speakers, including some of the most eminent researchers in the fields of comparative religion, medicine, the natural and social sciences, the humanities and, above all, parapsychology, addressed several thousand people.

Most of the audience was forced to watch the auditorium proceedings on closed circuit television in other lecture halls of the downtown, high-rise campus.

The keynote speaker was the father of parapsychology himself, Dr. J. B. Rhine, who, in 1932 was permitted to establish a laboratory at Duke University, North Carolina.

MARKED MILESTONE

That was an event of great symbolic importance: research into the dubious subjects of telepathy and clairvoyance had for the first time been recognised as academically respectable.

But it had taken another 44 years for them to be respectable enough to come out of the dark closet into the bright white light of a late winter in Montreal.

The problem was expressed by Dr. Stanley R. Dean, one of the leading psychiatrists in North America, who spoke on Metapsychiatry: The Interface between Psychiatry and Mysticism.

Dr. Dean, who said he had never had a psychic experience in his life, is a clinical professor at the University of Miami and University of Florida medical schools, and appropriately couched his words in scientific terms.

Dr. Dean's advice to anyone experiencing paranormal experiences was twofold:

—Retain control of behavior: "There's no point in phoning the FBI. This is a personal thing and should not be shared with the public at large."

—Retain contact with the everyday world: "Even if there is another world, one should aim at having the best of both worlds."

SHOWS HEALERS

Dr. Dean has done pioneer research for the American Psychiatric Association on transcultural psychiatry, and showed slides on native healers in Bali and their methods for treating the ill and mentally disturbed.

Nature, he said, has endowed us with a primitive life-preserving mechanism, which operates in a non-scientific way. But these psychic gifts have attenuated through disuse, although they are inherent in all of us.

"The question is whether we might be able to strengthen them, through some kind of exercise."

Slides of the Kirlian process, a method of photographing what appears to be "energy transfers" from the hands of psychic healers to their patients, were presented by Prof. Douglas Dean.

He is an experimental parapsychologist at the Newark College of Engineering and past president of the Parapsychological Association.

But a more graphic film, showing mysterious flickerings emanating from objects, was presented by Dr. Stanley Dean, who said he could not reveal the name of the film-maker because a patent was being applied for the photographic process.

OBSERVER FAINTS

A man in the audience fainted while watching another film during the symposium. Presented by Pearl Harding, it showed operations being performed by the controversial "psychic surgeons" of the Philippines, including two on herself.

Ms. Harding related how she was healed by the surgeons, who operate without instruments, using their fingers to make incisions which leave no scars.

She appeared hale and healthy and the operations appeared authentic.

But Prof. Margot Cardin, who has done extensive research on healers in the Philippines and Hawaii, said some operations are deliberately faked.

"One healer told me all his operations were faked—he could heal just by waving his hands, but the people wanted a show," said Prof. Cardin, president of the Societe de Metaphysique du Quebec.

She said she would not advise people to visit the Philippines for an operation unless local doctors said they could do nothing for them.

World Day of Prayer

in the light of the Word of God and in the face of events in their own countries.

Following the service, the A.C.W. of Christ Church served tea, and a social hour was enjoyed by all.

BRIGHAM — The United Church Women held their World Day of Prayer Service with the Retired Teachers at the Robinson Residence in Cowansville on Friday, March 5 at 2:30 p.m., with a good attendance of members and friends.

The Pres., Mrs. Norma Sherrer, led the service, following the universal program prepared by Christian women of Latin America on the theme, Education - For All of Life. She was assisted by several of the ladies who read passages from the leaflet and led in prayers.

The hymns "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," "Lead On, O King Eternal," "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and "The Day Thou Gavest Lord is ended," were sung with Miss Hill and Miss Atwell presiding at the piano.

A very pleasing part of the afternoon was when Miss Heather Sherrer and her friend Miss Jennifer Hulburt of East Farnham, sang a duet, "God is Love", unaccompanied.

The afternoon was brought to a close by all enjoying a social hour and partaking of delicious refreshments while seated around a table centred by a beautiful floral arrangement.

Mrs. Sherrer, in a few well chosen words, thanked all at the Residence for their gracious hospitality.

BISHOPTON

On Friday, March 5, the World Day of Prayer services were held in the Bishopton United Church, with a very good attendance from the three churches, Anglican, Catholic and United.

The printed program was followed with Mrs. Francois Belisle and Mrs. Ralph Gilbert and leaders and other ladies taking part in the dialogues.

Hymns were sung in French and English and Miss Merrill MacAulay sang a solo "This Day God Gives Me".

The following inspiring talk was given by Mrs. Lillian Gilbert:

"I thought I would like to share with the rest of you, some of my thoughts about the life of Christ here on earth, especially His attitude towards women."

"Many years ago, our minister in Kimberly, B.C., placed books that we could borrow and read, during the lenten season, that he thought might help us. I have always remembered how he smiled when he saw one that I had chosen, and he said: 'Someway I think you will get something out of that,' and I did. The title was, 'I believe, 'The Years Between'." It was only fiction, just an author's idea of what the life of Jesus might have been during the years that we are told practically nothing about Him. It made me realize more fully that He had lived the life of a human, was born of a human woman, grew up with other children, worked as a carpenter, dealt with the public, and shared their joys and BURY — About forty-five people, representing the Roman Catholic, Bury United and St. Paul's Anglican Churches assembled in the St. Paul's Anglican Church for the World Day of Prayer on Friday March 5.

Mrs. Bud Coates played the organ for the English hymns and Sister Flore for the French hymns sung by their choir.

Those taking part in the programme were Mrs. E. Lecours, Mrs. W. Buchanan, Mrs. L. Allison and Mrs. Lillian Edwards, assisted by Rev. Lokhorst and Father Breton.

At the close refreshments were served in the Parish Hall by St. Paul's Guild members, bringing an afternoon of Christian fellowship to a close.

EAST ANGUS — The service for the World Day of Prayer was held at the Cultural Centre, East Angus, on Friday March 5 at 2:00 p.m.

The theme for the service was "Education - for all of life" and it was written by the women of Latin America.

The service began with the Call to Prayer and a reading of Life in Latin America by Mrs. O. Martel.

The leaders for the Anglican, United and Roman Catholic churches were Mrs. L. Bailey, Mrs. L. Wilkins and Miss Mary Palmer respectively.

The Readers were Mrs. S. Clout and Mrs. E. Tincarre. Mrs. W. Coates was in charge of the music.

Mrs. D. Bell Sr., and Mrs. L. Kinnear took up the offering which will be sent to the W.I.C.C. office in Toronto.

The message was given by Mrs. W. Thorneloe who spoke of the challenges facing the christian to-day, and of the need for faith, understanding and re-education for a changing world. The service throughout was of a sombre note, reflecting, as it did, on the many problems facing our world to-day. Those who prepared this service understood their responsibilities as christian women. More of a power struggle now

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — "This no longer is an economics issue—it is a power struggle," said a member of baseball's hierarchy. "We are fighting for our lives."

Chub Feeney, president of the National League, put it more vividly.

"They have taken our swords," he said, "now they want our horses, too."

The players' position was enunciated by the headstrong and controversial Mike Marshall of Los Angeles Dodgers:

"I just want the rights deeded me by Franklin Delano Roosevelt," he said. So goes baseball's dilemma.

Training camps are scheduled. The opening of the 1976 season hangs by a fragile thread. Fans are disillusioned. The game's under-structure is trembling.

LONG FIGHT AHEAD

Even should the owners agree to open spring training—as expected—and the 1976 campaign gets started as scheduled April 8, as promised by commissioner Bowie Kuhn, baseball owners and players are in for a long, hard and bitter struggle.

"The players have taken an immovable position," moaned John Gaherin, the owners' chief negotiator. "You can't bargain with granite."

"The owners are seeing ghosts," says Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Players Association. "They are not conditioned to reality."

Reality is this—after close to 100 years of virtual servitude under the reserve clause, the players wake up one day to find themselves emancipated.

An arbitrator's decision, twice upheld in the courts, says they can play an option year without a contract and then become free agents.

OWNERS IN SHOCK
The ruling has left club owners in a state of shock. They have operated so long under the reserve clause, making a player their untouchable property for life unless traded or sold, that they feel they have been left naked. They say they would face bankruptcy.

"Ninety per cent of our assets are the players themselves," contends Bob Howsam, president and executive officer of Cincinnati Reds. "If we lose our hold on them, we are doomed. We can't possibly survive."

"The courts have given us our freedom," said a bitter Reggie Smith of St. Louis Cardinals. "It's hard for the owners to accept it, especially those notorious for paying low salaries."

If the owners feel powerless at the loss of the cornerstone of their operations, the players find themselves suddenly bulging with new muscle.

This can be a dangerous situation in itself. Some may not know how to handle it.

CLUBS MAY FAIL

In their anxiety to grab what has been denied them in the past, they may be inclined to misuse their newfound power. Excessive demands may break the backs of the owners, forcing failure of franchises.

The sensible players and their negotiator, Miller, realize this and are willing to accept a compromise reserve agreement that both sides can live with.

Most observers believe this would be a six-year total term that a club may hold a player before he can gain his release. The owners are a conglomerate of mixed backgrounds and philosophies, themselves not fully united in purpose.

There are seasoned old baseball men such as Phil Wrigley of Chicago Cubs, Walter O'Malley of the Dodgers and Tom Yawkey of Boston Red Sox.

Other are relatively new—wealthy businessmen in a venture for love of sport as well as for gain. All have one thing in common—they don't want to lose their shirts.

SOME BREAK EVEN

In an age of greater player freedom and escalating salaries reaching into the $200,000 stratosphere, red ink has become a necessary item in some front offices. Other clubs are happy to break even.

In the current stalemate situation, who suffers the greater strain?

The players are getting edgy. To some, such as Cincinnati's Pete Rose, the game is more than a way of life. It is a religion.

"Rose wants to die with his uniform on," quips Brooks Robinson of Baltimore Orioles.

But the longer the deadlock lasts, the more weeks pass without pay checks. For many, it hurts.

The owners, most of them wealthy men, are in a better position to wait it out.

In such an impasse, nobody wins and everybody loses. The biggest loser is the fan, like the little old lady in sneakers who comes down every year to watch the Mets and Cardinals in spring training here.

"It's disgusting," she said. "I'm fed up and going home."

Violence in hockey

BOSTON (AP) — Violence in ice hockey must be controlled, but in the interim, full face masks should be required for all players, says a report by the committee on sports medicine of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

Citing a jump in hockey injuries in the United States last year to 40,000 from 30,000, the committee said injuries to athletes must be prevented without changing the form or appeal of the sport involved.

Dr. John Duff of Danvers, Mass., committee chairman, said sports organizers should look immediately into three major areas—prevention of eye and facial injuries in hockey, protecting youthful baseball pitchers, and insuring that opposing players in youth football be of near equal weight.

Two-thirds of all hockey injuries are to the eye and face, Duff said. His committee reported recently that in Canadian hockey last year, there were 207 eye injuries, eight eyes lost and 10 damaged severely enough to be classified legally blind.

"The ideal face mask has not yet been designed," Duff's committee reported.

wins Bryan 150

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Bobby Unser held off Pancho Carter by less than two car lengths with a last-lap sprint Sunday to win the Bryan 150-mile race for Indianapolis-type cars.

Arlene Hiss, who made history by being the first woman in this type of racing, finished a distant 14th and was black-flagged once for going too slow.

Carter, who took over the Dan Gurney Eagle that Unser vacated last year after a dispute, closed to just inches behind Unser on the start of the final circuit around the one-mile Fastrack International Speedway oval. But Unser, who is driving the Eagle that Carter was fired from last season, jumped ahead by a decisive margin heading onto the backstretch.

Carter picked up lost ground through the final turn, but fell short in the bid to win his first Indianapolis car race.

It was the 23rd victory in this kind of racing for the 42-year-old Unser, a two-time national champ.

JOHNCOCK TAKES THIRD

Gordon Johncock finished third, with pole winner Al Unser, who lost a lap with various tire problems with his revolutionary Cosworth-powered Parnelli DFX. Fifth was Mike Mosley, in his first race since ending a self-imposed retirement last August.

A wave of negative feeling surfaced following the race concerning Mrs. Hiss's participation on the U.S. Auto Club circuit.

"I've talked to a few other drivers, and we're thinking pretty hard about refusing to drive in the next race if she is allowed to compete," said one driver, who asked not to be identified.

"This is a man's business and she has to be measured by a man's standards if she is going to compete," said driver Gary Bettenhausen.

"By those standards, she didn't measure up."

Other drivers said they had complained to USAC officials.

"I would prefer to make no comment at this time," said USAC executive director Dick King, who granted Mrs. Hiss her conditional licence.

Jane Gross, sportswriter

First Lady of the locker room

By Ira Berkow

When Jane Gross was a cub reporter for Sports Illustrated, she would phone her father, Milt Gross, the late, distinguished sports columnist for the New York Post, to seek — sometimes with a little shiver — his comments on what she had written.

She recalls once reading him "a very, very long story" about a female coach. Her father listened quietly. At the end, he said, "I have no idea what that lady looks like, no sense of the space she occupies."

Well, Jane Gross herself is 5 feet tall, weighs 100 pounds and takes up a sparrow's amount of space. However, the slight space she does occupy recently caused some tremors.

She is now a sportswriter for Newsday, the Long Island Newspaper, and, as one of its pro basketball beat reporters, enters men's locker rooms for post-game interviews. She is the first woman to be doing this kind of job. No other working woman in our culture regularly confronts male nudity other than strumpets and nurses.

A New York radio sportscaster, after absorbing his first wide eyeful of Jane Gross in a locker room, warned of a cataclysm. He compared her presence in the sweaty sanctum to the Fall of the Roman Empire. "The first symptoms of moral decay were carnal promiscuity and sexual lassitude," he said.

"How would she like to be interviewed in her bathroom?" A male sportswriter in St. Louis posed his first question in an interview: "You getting your thrills doing this work?"

"I agreed to be interviewed, not to be insulted," Jane said as she rose and left.

She covers the New York Nets regularly, having begun a year ago March. The team took a vote whether to allow her in the locker room. They had just lost a game, and voted No. The coach admitted the timing was unfair. The next day, after winning, they took another vote. It was Yes. It's been yes ever since.

Four other American Basketball Association teams followed, two clubs remain to safeguard the shaky bastion of male chauvinism.

It is startling to view Jane initially. The players now are used to her, and casually undrape as she moves about them. She has short brown hair, grayish tortoise shell glasses that look large on her smooth, fragile-looking face, wears slacks and sweater and writes furiously in her notebook.

She may be looking for a particular athlete, doesn't see him, quickly checks the shower, and then the training room. She is dogged, and, at 28 and with some eight years of journalism experience, is a highly regarded reporter. Her boss, Sandy Padwe, says she is so capable that he would confidently send her to cover anything, from a P.T.A. meeting to a major trial.

The players treat her as a journalist, to the point where center Swen Nater, for example, blamed her reportage for the Nets trading him.

Jane Gross says that she never pushed to get into locker rooms. Before beginning on the beat, she would cover stories and the athletes she wanted to talk to were brought into the corridor. She never minded this.

"I'm not a cause person," she said recently. "I don't carry signs. I don't like to go places where I'm not welcome. And if I were to go into locker rooms and be treated like a freak, then it wouldn't be worth it. I couldn't do my job, and the 15 other people couldn't do theirs."

"The first time I ever went in, I was scared stiff. I kept the players without seeing them in the locker room and getting in places where there were six people around me. But I began to realize what a fellow sportswriter on Newsday had told me — that you really can't get the flavor of the camaraderie they share.

"It is a beautiful thing, this closeness and lack of inhibition after great physical exertion. Most women rarely experience it. And I can see how men — even the most 'liberated' men — genuinely want to keep it sacred. It's so pleasurable, and it's something they've grown up with."

Then she witnesses little scenarios she would never have been able to see in the corridor. "Like Julius Erving's three-year-old-son dashing over to Brian Taylor coming out of the shower and slapping him five. Or Erving making a spontaneous and emotional pep talk after a victory.

"It's no place to be a voyeur. It's sweaty, the jock straps are gray, and I'm on deadline."

For all this, she still is not one of the boys. In the New York Knicks locker room one evening, she was in the group interviewing Spencer Haywood. As she wrote, she had a strange sensation, like someone kissing her neck. She turned. Someone was kissing her neck! It was the Knicks' irrepressible guard Jim Barnett.

"I didn't want to disturb you," he said. "I just wanted to say hello!"

US beat Russians

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The United States, winning five of six sets, beat Russia 29-18 Monday night and captured the first-ever international tennis series between the two countries.

America, led by Billie Jean King and Marty Riessen, won all five matches in the weeklong series played in the United States and Russia, beating the Soviet team, 136-95, in scoring based on World Team Tennis rules.

In women's doubles, the U.S. team of Ms. King and Mona Schallau Guerrant easily downed Russia's Olga Morozova and Marina Koshina 6-2.

The only Russian victory came in men's doubles as Vadym Borisov and Teymuraz Kakuliya, trailing 5-2, won five straight games to beat Sandy Mayer and Vitas Gerulaitis 7-5.

Nicknamed the "Hammers"

LONDON (CP) — They are nicknamed the Hammers. But if Dave (The Hammer) Schultz were to trade his skates for soccer boots, the National Hockey League bruiser would be an unlikely candidate for the lineup of West Ham United.

In good years and bad, the East London club has gratified the game's purists by shunning the defensive, over-physical tactics of other Football League clubs in favor of imaginative, skilful play.

The philosophy paid off when the Hammers defeated Preston 3-2 to win the 1964 Football Association Cup final and went on to take the European Cup Winners' Cup the following year. Then their fortunes waned.

A few weeks after the start of the 1974-5 season, the club was anchored firmly at the bottom of the Football League's 22-team First Division and its admirers were reaching the reluctant conclusion that elegant, attacking soccer was out of date.

Obviously, front-office action was necessary. When it came, it seemed excessively modest.

COACH PROMOTED
Rather than replace Ron Greenwood, the 55-year-old

Sports Brief

EAGLES NAME COACHES

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Duane Putnam and Ken Iman, former National Football League offensive linemen, have been named assistant line coaches with Philadelphia Eagles. Putnam, 47, played 11 years with Cleveland Browns, Dallas Cowboys and Los Angeles Rams. Iman, 37, makes his coaching debut after 14 years with Green Bay and Los Angeles.

manager, the team directors gave coach John Lyall the title of team manager with sole responsibility for the players. Greenwood, retaining the title of manager, was given purely administrative duties.

The change was strikingly successful. By the end of that season, West Ham had climbed up the League table and captured the FA Cup by beating Fulham in the final at Wembley.

Lyall had his own methods. He injected a touch of steel which had been missing. And, capitalizing on the buccaneering inspiration of Billy Bonds, the captain, and the pace and purpose of the fullbacks, John McDowell and Frank Lampard, he made the Hammers a difficult side to score against.

The elegance remained in midfield, where Trevor Brooking won a place in England's national team. But West Ham remained too fragile up front to worry opposition defenders.

It was in remedying this problem that Greenwood, revelling in his new post, showed his astuteness. From Newcastle United he bought Keith Robson, a combative reserve forward, for £45,000 ($90,000) and from Watford, a Third Division club, he obtained Billy Jennings, a lively centre forward, for £100,000. Both went straight to West Ham's first team.

ROOKIE SHINES
There was one signing which at the time attracted little attention. Greenwood persuaded Rochdale, a Fourth Division side, to part with Alan Taylor, an unknown 20-year-old who had scored only two goals in his career.

West Ham found themselves in the sixth round of the FA Cup with a difficult away match against Arsenal, overwhelming favorites to win. Taylor scored two superb goals to put West Ham in the semifinal. He repeated the feat in the semi-final replay against Ipswich, and crowned a remarkable success story by scoring the two goals which defeated Fulham in the final.

In recent years, West Ham has been an outstanding nursery for young players, not only from its immediate area and has encouraged the development of black players.

Notable among the home-grown players is Mervyn Day, aged 19, already the England under-23 goalkeeper. In 1974 he was elected Young Footballer of the Year in a poll organized by the Professional Footballers' Association.

Canadian Junior Women's Curling Championship

Western rinks undefeated

THUNDER BAY, Ont. (CP) — British Columbia, Manitoba and defending champion Saskatchewan were the only remaining undefeated rinks after the third round Monday in the Canadian junior women's curling championship.

Colleen Rudd of Moose Jaw skipped her Saskatchewan foursome to an easy 9-3 triumph over Denise Lavigne of Moncton, N.B., in the afternoon draw and then followed it up with a 10-2 drubbing of Sheryl Keely of Kingston, Ont., in the evening draw.

In the evening game, Rudd threw a double takeout and stay with the final shot of the eighth end to produce a swing of four points. The shot took two counters away from Ontario and left the Saskatchewan crew with a pair.

Vicki Collins of North Vancouver, B.C., kept her rink undefeated by taking an 8-6 triumph over Jill Silverthorne of Calgary in the afternoon session and an 8-5 victory over Diane Ness of Howick, Que., in the evening draw.

HAS TWO WINS

Pattie Vandkerchove of Winnipeg also had a pair of victories Monday to remain tied for top spot, a 14-5 pasting of Catherine Bradbury of Grand Falls, Nfld., and a 11-3 whipping of New Brunswick.

In other afternoon games, Ontario defeated Kathy Myketyk of Halifax-Dartmouth 9-6 and Anne Merklinger of Charlottetown, P.E.I., trounced Quebec 10-3.

In other games in the evening draw, Nova Scotia edged Alberta 8-7 and Prince Edward Island whipped Newfoundland 10-3.

After three rounds, Ontario and Prince Edward Island are tied for second place with two wins and one loss. Alberta and Nova Scotia are next with records of 1-2, followed by New Brunswick, Quebec and Newfoundland, all winless in three starts.

In the afternoon draw today, P.E.I. faces Ontario, New Brunswick meets Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan squares off against B.C., Newfoundland faces Alberta and Quebec tangles with Manitoba.

In the evening draw, Quebec encounters Nova Scotia, B.C. meets Newfoundland, New Brunswick faces P.E.I., Saskatchewan takes on Manitoba and Ontario grapples with Alberta.

Bassett after franchise

SAN DIEGO (AP) — John Bassett, the millionaire Canadian who brought a professional football team to Tennessee, is putting a unique proposal to the National Football League in asking for a franchise.

"We have sold the most season tickets in history for a team that doesn't have anyone to play against," said Bassett as the week-long NFL meetings opened Monday.

A group of seven Memphis boosters also was here pressing for entry into the NFL for the approaching 1976 season.

Bassett, of Toronto, estimated he still has 30 to 40 players from his club in the now defunct World Football League still under contract.

Those contracts will expire at the end of this month unless renewed, he said.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle of the NFL said Bassett will be given an opportunity later in the week to present his bid.

ODDS UNFAVORABLE

However, with both Tampa Bay and Seattle joining the league for play in the coming season, odds appear to be against Bassett and Memphis at this time.

Rozelle alluded to negative aspects of the application when he told newspapermen: "Expansion is a form of dilution. When things are relatively solid, clubs don't look at negatives."

But at this meeting, the negatives include the continuing problems which have gone against the league on the reserve clause, and that of gaining a new contract with the players' association. The league has been without one for two years.

Seattle and Tampa Bay have not yet been stocked from the expansion draft of veteran players, nor has a collegiate draft been held. Birmingham Vulcans, a second NFL franchise seeking an NFL franchise, is not pressing its bid with the fervor of Memphis.

Although Tampa Bay and Seattle will draft 39 veteran players, the Memphis group said it would ask only 26, but was willing to pay the same over-all price for a franchise — $16 million.

"anything to win"

Pete Rose

By Carol Felsenthal

At a time when a professional athlete's most trusted advisor is his lawyer, not his coach, and his greatest concern is next year's contract, not teamwork, the adage that sports brings out the best in a man becomes increasingly difficult to believe. Three recently published books by sports superstars shatter with a vengeance whatever remained of that old cliché.

Pete Rose is the American Dream come true — a kid from the poor side of town who wins fame (two Most Valuable Player awards) and fortune (an annual salary approaching $200,000) by never swerving from his "anything to win" philosophy.

"Charlie Hustle" (Rose's very appropriate nickname) is a diary of his victories, defeats, and reflections during the 1974 season, his 11th with the Cincinnati Reds. The diary is interesting, not because Rose reveals any gossip, backroom deals, or strategies not previously covered on the sports pages, but because he says something about the nature of professional sports. An athlete, Rose believes, like any politician or businessman, is in business to win, and winning means hustling and hardiness.

If winning requires that Rose smash head-on into a shortstop, he's sorry for the inevitable injuries, but it's all in the game. "I'm no little girl out there. I'm supposed to give the fans their money's worth and play hard and try to bust up double plays and shortstops."

Rose points out that players are not the only ones out for blood. For some fans, getting their money's worth means not only seeing a good game, but heckling and sometimes injuring players.

But, although Rose complains about the fact that during a typical game the players must dodge everything from golf balls to 25-pound sacks of flour, he admits that the attacks get his juices flowing.

"I kind of like them."

"Charlie Hustle" can be occasionally repetitive, tedious and simpleminded. But, as a record, from the inside, of one season's training, tensions and competition, it makes interesting reading.

As a young player and a coach, Bob Cousy was a lot like Pete Rose. He shared the same intense and aggressive personality and the same "winning is everything" approach to sports and life.

But for Cousy, also a kid out of the ghetto, the chase after the American Dream ended in a nightmare of near emotional and physical collapse. He quit professional coaching when he realized that "The Killer Instinct" which had led him to super-stardom as a player with the Boston College, and a $100,000 salary as the coach for the Cincinnati Royals was an addiction as deadly as drugs or alcohol. "I'm no longer so proud of the killer instinct... it can do more than blow away an opponent. It can kill the moral sense, the happiness of a family, even the man himself."

Like "Charlie Hustle," "The Killer Instinct" is not a full-fledged autobiography. It is a fascinating series of what must have been excruciatingly painful reflections on his career. It will interest those who are indifferent to sports as well as those who are ardent fans.

Cousy sees his acceptance and limited participation in college recruiting abuses as part of his gradual moral decay. He is first shocked and then resigned to the fact that his fellow coaches are offering potential "blue chip" players everything from new wardrobes to money to women.

At the close of a career in baseball which spanned almost 50 years, it apparently hasn't even occurred to Leo Durocher that there could possibly be any other reason to play baseball except to win — at any cost. The abrasive, often obnoxious, vindictive, and sometimes violent man looks back over a career as a player and coach, still spouting, more vehemently than ever, his conviction that "the team that won't be beaten can't be beaten" and, of course, "Nice Guys Finish Last."

Durocher's monologue, which reads like one long complaint and self-justification, never stops for anything as superfluous as introspection. He charges full steam ahead, reliving old battles and lashing out along the way at everyone from sports-writers to fellow coaches to players.

Baseball fans and particularly nostalgia buffs will love this book. Durocher, after all, was a teammate of Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, and Dizzy Dean and coached Jackie Robinson, Willy Mays, and Joe Pepitone, and he has a load of anecdotes and sometimes vicious gossip to reveal about all of them.

"One-and-one" plan to get...

Baseball Back on Track

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Baseball owners yielded on the controversial "one-and-one" plan in a comprehensive new contract proposal to players Monday and said it was a move designed to get training camps opened and "baseball back on the track."

"We agreed to go along with this although we recognize the problems that it presents to the clubs," said Lee MacPhail, president of the American League.

Even with this concession, it appeared unlikely spring training could start before Thursday, giving players less than three weeks' time to get in shape for the scheduled April 8 regular season start.

Marvin Miller, executive director of the players' association, said his bargaining group would meet with the owners again today and he called a meeting of the players' executive board for Wednesday in Tampa.

The owners attached a request that opening of the camps be contingent on the executive board recommending acceptance of the proposal," Miller said.

The executive board is made up of elected player representatives of the 24 major league teams.

The "one-and-one" plan was a knotty problem that emerged from an arbitrator's decision last December in the case of pitchers Andy Messersmith of Los Angeles Dodgers and Dave McNally of Montreal Expos, granting them free agent status after they had played a year without a contract.

COURTS SUPPORT STAND

The arbitrator's decision, upheld twice in the courts, destroyed the traditional reserve clause which had bound one player to a team for life unless traded, sold or released. And it made it possible for any player, who cannot reach agreement with his team, to play an option year and then gain complete freedom.

Many owners have contended that such an arrangement would bankrupt their baseball franchises since teams invest great sums of money not only in acquiring top players through the draft system but also in developing them in the minor leagues before they reach major league caliber.

Among these have been August Busch of St. Louis Cardinals, who has threatened to sell his team if such a rule were imposed, and Bob Howsam of Cincinnati Reds.

"The players represent 90 per cent of our assets," Howsam said. "If we have no way of holding on to them, then we are dead."

At last a half-dozen other owners have said they believe they could live with the "one-and-one" feeling that most players will remain loyal to their teams.

Most contracts for the 600 players in the majors are for one year, which means that after one year of option, the players would be free.

Baseball men say that about 120 players have not signed. However, their contracts were automatically renewed March 10 with a 20 per cent salary cut if the club wished to do so.

Tom Seaver of New York Mets, the 1975 Cy Young Award winner in the National League, is one player who has not signed. But the club renewed his contract at the same $170,000 he made last year. He is asking for $800,000 in a 10-year contract.

One of the teams to be hardest hit by the plan would be Oakland A's, three-time world champions who have renewed 12 contracts of key players with 20-per-cent cuts.
