LEO CAPPIELLO ACCOMPLISHES 7 MILE SWIM

Swims From Oney's Camp, Port Lewis, to Red Buoy and to Lighthouse at River Burdette

Four Entrants in Swim Makes Over Half the Swim With Use of Arms Only. 2 Hours 17 Minutes to Make Swim

A swimming record was attained at Port Lewis on Lake St. Francis on Sunday by Leo Cappiello, aged 22, who is a cripple, and has been obliged to use crutches since an infant 7 months old. Leo is the accountant in the office of the Empire Garage, Huntingdon, and is receiving congratulations from his many friends for his successfully swimming across Lake St. Francis.

Leo Cappiello

The swim was planned several days in advance by a number of boys who are camping at Wylie's Point, Port Lewis. The course of the swim was to start from the Camp of C. M. Oney a mile above the Wylie Point. From this point the swimmers were to head towards the red buoy, thence to the lighthouse on land at River Burdette, a distance of 7 miles. Douglas Lunan, Purcell Fortune, Douglas Monroe and Leo Cappiello were the entrants. The swim started as scheduled, Fortune leading the pace, followed by Lunan, Monroe and lastly Cappiello. Cappiello was expected to be in the rear, for he only had the use of his two powerful arms and the partial use of his right leg. The red buoy referred to is about 2 1/2 miles from shore, and during this lap of the swim C. M. Oney picked up Douglas and Purcell Fortune, who were when Monroe reached the buoy he was ready to give up the swim and be hauled into Oney's speed boat. Cappiello continued, not even ceasing to stroke at the buoy but continued for the north shore heading for the River Burdette lighthouse down stream. When near the buoy his right leg became paralyzed from over exertion, so he continued to swim through the use of his two powerful arms. The only nourishment he took was that supplied from a package of throat lozengers and a little sugar carried by his two companions Nigel Bruce and Douglas Fortune who accompanied him with a row-boat. After swimming for two hours and seven-and-a-half minutes he landed at his goal—the lighthouse on the north bank of Lake St. Francis. Given his crutches he got into the Oney boat, tired but happy, to think he had accomplished the swim. Upon arriving at the boys' camp at Wylie's Point he got into his Ford car and came to Huntingdon. To honor the swim he treated his companions to a dinner that evening.

Two Men Hurt in Crossroad Accident at St. Stanislas

What might have proved a much more serious accident occurred at the intersection of the St. Stanislas-St. Louis crossroad and the Laroque side road about eight o'clock Sunday evening when two cars collided there.

One car was coming from St. Louis, the other proceeding towards Valleyfield. A field of corn situated between the cause of the accident, hiding the oncoming cars from view of each other. Occupants of the Canadian car were employed at the Beauharnois Construction Company, two of which were injured. A hurried call to Dr. Brousseau brought him to render medical assistance. He found the two only slightly injured. Occupants of the U. S. car were uninjured.

Both cars were somewhat dinged but not seriously damaged.

Robert Arthur Threshed 1,000 Bushels of Grain

Before going to press this morning we learned of rather an unusual occurrence for this time of year. Mr. Robert Arthur who lives on the River Road has not only completed cutting his grain but already has it threshed. The yield was very good. His crop amounted to close onto 1,000 bushels. This season's very warm weather is responsible for the early and very quick ripening of the grain.

Consolidation of Schools

Editor, The Gleaner:—
The final vote on the much discussed question of Consolidation will be taken on Thursday, and our opponents are working with an energy which may cause to confuse the issue and raise doubts in the minds of some who have not given the matter their close attention.

Let us examine some of their arguments—
First, they state that our taxes will be doubled, but have nothing with which to back up that statement except their constant repetition of it.
The Resolution calls for a payment of $5,000.00 annually for maintenance. We collected during the year ending June 30th, 1931, Property rates of $5,529.92 and arrears of taxes totaling $805.93, a sum of $6,335.85 in all which the ratepayers of St. Malachie paid into the School Board treasury. Next year under Consolidation they would be called upon to raise $5,000 for school maintenance and perhaps $500.00 more to take care of such items as insurance, secretary's salary, advertising, etc. This is $800.00 less than these ratepayers contributed in the past year, and still our friends, the opposites, say that our taxes will be doubled. This statement is absolute bunk and they know it.

Our municipality has lost quite a large district to Howick, but what is left to us will raise sufficient to finance everything at a rate of 5 1/2 mills. Just here we might state that if we are not successful in getting Consolidation for Ormstown, that another large district will move to become annexed to Howick. This is the proper time for Ormstown to reach a sane solution of their school problem. Even our most active opponents admit that Consolidation is coming, why not have it now and hold our Municipality together?

Then we hear the argument advanced that the Department of Education have no money to finance the half cost of the school and we might have to wait years for it. This is more bunk.

The Department advised that their appropriation for this year has been all paid out or promised to municipalities which have Consolidation actually under way but as soon as they enter another financial year they will again have funds available.

Proof that the Educational authorities are anxious to meet us in every possible way is shown by their willingness to assume responsibility for 50% of the $15,000.00 building estimate. What more could we expect from them? I would like to ask these men who are attempting to influence their neighbors by casting doubt on these statements of the Department of Education, just to give us one instance where they have fallen down on their agreements.

The bare statement of these men is not sufficient proof, and the fact that they have advanced no proof is convincing evidence that none exists. We appeal to the ratepayers to turn out on July 30th and give us a good clear cut majority. Ormstown needs a good school. We, as a community can afford to lose no more of our valuation to Howick or elsewhere. Let us apply the famous advertising slogan to the situation: "Eventually, Why not now?"

BOY CRUSHED UNDER TRUCK

Gérard Labonté of Montreal, Killed at Valleyfield Thursday Morning

Gérard Labonté, 12 years of age, of Montreal, was crushed to death under the wheels of a heavy carting motor truck, at the intersection of Ste. Helene and Jacques Cartier streets, Valleyfield, shortly before noon, Thursday. He was the son of Joseph Labonté, now a resident of Montreal, but who was for several years an alderman of Valleyfield.

That afternoon, members of a jury under Dr. Besner, of Valleyfield, coroner of the district, rendered a verdict of accidental death, and exonerated the driver of the vehicle of all blame. The inquest revealed that the lad was riding on a bicycle when the fatality occurred. He was returning from the post office, and was on his way to the home of his uncle, Romeo Goyette, Valleyfield.

The carting truck with trailer attached, was the property of J. A. Legault and was driven by Albert Vallancourt, of Montreal. The vehicle was travelling on Ste. Helene street and turned at Jacques Cartier street, when the carting truck, and the boy was hurled off his machine and rolled beneath the motor truck. One of the rear wheels crushed the lad's skull.

Immediately upon learning of the fatality, Romeo Goyette immediately tried to communicate with the boy's father, but only to be told that unaware of the tragic accident, Joseph Labonté was on his way to Valleyfield to call for his son Gérard and take him home to Montreal.

Conservative Rally Was Well Attended

Hundreds of Conservatives gathered at the Valleyfield City Hall, Friday night, to hear an address by Joseph Froux, notary of Montreal. The subject of the speaker's address was "The End of a Regime." The meeting was held under the auspices of the Association of Young Conservatives of Beauharnois County. J. G. Laurendeau, K.C., and Fortunat Queneville, vice-president of the association, presided jointly. Among those who spoke were Alcide Boissonneau, advocate, Jean Laporte and Joseph Bonhomme, of Montreal.

Service in Honor of B. McNaughton

Letter Dictated on Missionary's Deathbed to Her Family Was Read

Rev. G. Hartwell Officiated

United Church Taxed to Capacity on Sunday Morning

Sunday morning the auditorium of the United Church was taxed to capacity and overflowing with men, women and children from Huntingdon, and many visitors from the surrounding communities. The special occasion was that of a memorial service in honor of Miss Barbara McNaughton, a missionary nurse of the United Church Missionary Hospital at Chungking, China.

It will be recalled that Miss McNaughton met with a fatal accident caused by burns. The Rev. J. H. Miller explained to the massive congregation on Sunday that the burns were brought about through her attempting to seal a can with wax which contained alcohol.

Whilst Miss McNaughton was lying on her death bed she dictated a letter to be sent to the folks at home, and from this letter we quote the following extracts which were read:

"Please tell them I have always longed to die in my work. This morning I was emptying a tin of alcohol and there was some left in the tin. I foolishly tried to seal it up with wax. I have often exhorted others not to do that, but I was tired, and without thinking I was sealing it up with fire near. If it is God's will I go now, I am oh so happy to go; I am oh so happy to go; if I had my life to live over again I would give it to China. It has been my desire to bring to the knowledge of my heavenly Father to China. All that is best in life has come to me and my people through God. Knowing this, and seeing what it is to see people without this knowledge, I have been so happy in having the privilege of doing what I could to let others know and to love the God I love, the God whom to know is life eternal. I long that every one of our nurses should know Him and be willing to give his or her life in loving happy service in bringing others to know Him as their God."

"For my brothers and sisters, aunts and uncles, nieces, nephews, and cousins I thank God that He has given them to me to love; I can never, never tell you what your love has meant to me. I pray God's blessing upon every one of you and your work and look forward to the time, when your work being done, you shall all gather in our Heavenly Home to be forever and ever with God our Father and Jesus Christ our Saviour. Do not mourn for me. Know that my last days (she did not know that her time was mercifully to be so short) I had every care and attention that it is possible to give anyone."

"My friends in the home land, in Huntingdon, Atholstan, Brooklet, the Gore, Deschamps, Ormstown and Valleyfield, my dear, dear friends, young and old, I pray that you all may be daily conscious of God's presence with you. I pray that God may cause a great deepening of spiritual life among you. I pray for those, I pray also for all the dear friends in Clear Water; I was looking forward to seeing my dear little nephews who have come since I left Canada. But I shall see them in the days to come when we meet in Heaven. I pray God's blessing may richly rest upon you all. Barbara G."

That, for this service, Mr. Miller should arrange to have a missionary speaker was most fitting, and in this respect the services of the Rev. Geo. E. Hartwell, D.D., of Toronto, a returned missionary from China, were secured. Dr. Hartwell told of going to the mission field in 1891 and how it was that they spent their entire life work for the Church Mission in China. Dr. Hartwell told of the various trials they endured and how it was that gradual inroads were made, and the Chinese gradually becoming Christianized. He said that it was in 1909 when he was preparing to go on furlough, and a party was being given at his place, that Miss McNaughton made her first appearance. For many years they worked harmoniously together but upon her return to the mission field after her furlough, she located herself in another hospital field. Dr. Hartwell spoke knowingly and feelingly of the loss to the Mission work in China suffered due to this untimely death. He spoke of the deep place she held in the hearts of the people in that far off land in which she had devoted her talented life.

The choir of twenty-four led in the singing of the chosen hymns of Miss McNaughton, viz: "Where Cross the Crowded Way of Life," "Lead Kindly Light Amid the Encircling Gloom," "Asleep in Jesus Blessed Sleep." A very appropriate solo was sung by Mrs. Rees, in her usual sweet and pleasant manner.

The Rev. John Webster, a veteran minister who had been an official in the Conference when Dr. Hartwell entered the ministry was present and spoke a few words at the close of the service, and pronounced the benediction.

The McNaughton family were nearly all present, some having come long distances to be present for this service.

Alfred Plante, 16, Drowned at Ormstown Sunday Afternoon

Alfred Plante, 16 years of age, of Ormstown, lost his life by drowning in the Chateaugay River at Ormstown about 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The body was recovered by one of his companions, but artificial respiration efforts practised by a nurse and doctor who happened to be near the scene of the fatality proved futile. Sunday evening Dr. L. Savage, coroner of the Chateaugay district, disposed of the case with a verdict of accidental death by submersion.

The victim was employed on an Ormstown farm and he was the eldest of a family of eleven children.

Early Sunday afternoon, Plante, accompanied by four boy friends, went to an orchard and ate some apples. Plante ate about ten. Following this the quartette went to the river where three of the youths bathed in the river, opposite the residence of Allan MacDougall.

Plante dived into the water with success twice, but a third dive proved fatal. Jean Paul Daignault, one of the companions, risked his life to save his friend. Daignault managed to swim to the drowning boy. He seized him and carried him in the water for a distance of 16 feet. There was still another 25 feet to reach the shore, when Plante proved too heavy and in spite of his efforts, Daignault was forced to release his hold.

Daignault saw but one alternative and he swam to the opposite side of the shore and quickly procured a rowboat and rushed to the rescue a second time. He succeeded in bringing the body to the shore where a nurse and Dr. E. N. Moore, of Rock-Brun, were waiting. They practised artificial respiration for over thirty minutes but without avail.

The funeral took place in St. Malachie Church on Tuesday morning and was attended by a large gathering of relatives and friends. The sympathy and condolences of the community go out to the parents, brothers and sisters.

The victim, Freddie Laplante, age 16, had spent a few days last week at the Chateaugay river near the home of Allan MacDougall. Due to cramps he was unable to swim in the deep water and before help could be given he succumbed. Sincere sympathy is extended to his family and friends.

Ormstown Village Brotherhood Lawn Social

The lawn social last Friday evening held on the lawn of the Manse, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Paul's United Church was a wonderful success. Favored with beautiful weather conditions a large crowd attended to enjoy the splendid program provided. Mr. J. D. Bryson, president of the Brotherhood Society acted as chairman and his humorous remarks kept the audience heartily interested. Rev. D. N. Coburn, of Prescott, Ont., former pastor of St. Paul's church addressed the gathering and was warmly welcomed by all his old friends. The entire program was of a high order, several violin and piano selections by the Misses McFarlane of Huntingdon, recitations by Beatrice Nussey, songs by Bernice and Bertie McCartney, comic and descriptive sketches by Miss Alice Watt, of Montreal. The pipes by Mr. Macdonald of Gledgery, choruses by members of the Brotherhood and humorous remarks made by Mr. A. W. Lang completed a splendid evening's entertainment. During the evening the booths about the grounds did a flourishing business and added considerably to the funds which amounted to $140.00. Extending from the churches were greeted by Rev. W. T. Payne, Rev. Mr. Greig, of Valleyfield, Rev. Mr. St. Aubin, Montreal. Music was provided during the intermission by Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Rember.

Consolidation Vote.
The Parish School Commission held an adjourned meeting on Saturday evening, July 24th. The chief item of business was the decision to vote again on the question of Consolidating with the Village School Commission. After a short discussion on the matter in which the vote on the matter had been conducted and the fact that the Board had been assured by a lawyer that the vote had not been legally held, that the question of Consolidation be voted on again on Thursday, July 30th.

Garden Club Show.
A splendid display of flowers was held by the members of the Garden Club on Saturday night in Walsh's store window. This display was a variety one in which flowers of any kind were entered. McIntyre; 2, Mrs. J. A. Winter.

Twenty boys belonging to the Boy Scout Association left on Monday to spend the coming week in the broad open spaces of the pleasant summer camp of St. Anicet, Que. The party was in charge of Mr. J. Ralph Cooper. The "Tombo" held on July 23, 24, 25 on St. Malachie Church grounds for the benefit of Parochial works was a grand success. Ideal weather prevailed and huge crowds attended every evening. A complete list of prize winners and the financial results will be given next week.

Bowlers Defeated.
The local bowlers played a league game in Valleyfield on Tuesday evening and were again defeated by the Valleyfield boys. Although three out of four rinks won their games, a defeat was still averted. The Valleyfield boys are playing on the local green to-night and with better weather conditions and on the home green the boys hope for better results.

A Chartered Accountant's Idea of Huntingdon's Town Finances

Long has this paper been advocating that the Town of Huntingdon have its book-keeping system modified, so that at the end of the year a real comprehensive and enlightening financial statement might be presented to the ratepayers. When the new town council was elected last winter it was quite generally felt that having a Chartered Accountant set up a new system of book-keeping for the town would be one of the first attainments as it was a plank in the platforms of some of the Aldermen. It is quite generally known that some of the Aldermen have been giving this matter serious consideration, especially Ald. D. L. Kelly and Ald. W. E. S. McNair, but nothing publicly has been definitely announced.

Very recently a chartered accountant of Montreal in company with a well-known bank accountant visited Huntingdon. Our chartered accountant friend would not care to have his name inscribed as giving a report to the Gleaner on the Town financial statement as he interprets it, as it might be treated as bad etiquette by the chartered accountants' association, and so we take pleasure in passing it on unsigned to our readers and Town Council, for the mutual benefit of all.

After reading through this statement, and the chartered accountants summary, everyone will surely agree that our book-keeping system is in a grave situation and should be modified at once.

Mr. Adam L. Sellar,
President, The Huntingdon Gleaner, Inc.
Huntingdon, Que.

Dear Mr. Sellar:—

With further reference to your letter of July 17th and statement of the Town of Huntingdon, which you submitted. It really is unfair for me to criticize these statements professionally. Undoubtedly the examination of the vouchers made by the present auditor is probably equally as good as a similar examination which might be made by any other party, but the statement itself does not show anything intelligible, other than the bank balance and the bonded indebtedness, for which indebtedness there is no asset whatsoever set up, and this is a grave omission. I have made a further attempt to read the actual condition of affairs in the figures you forwarded.

Examination of the statement shows the following:—

Section General Statement (at the top of second page)—

1. Water rates budgeted	$5,676.20
Arrears water rates	1,337.15	7,213.35
Water rates and arrears collected	5,573.70
Arrears water rates, apparently set up as	$1,738.25
Apparently written off	104.90
Carried forward as an asset of—	1,633.35	7,207.05
Leaving an apparent discrepancy of		$6.30 which is a small item.

2. Assessments levied for municipal taxes and taking into consideration arrears both at the beginning and close of the year, shows an apparent discrepancy of only $1.40.

Business tax balances O.K. and the same with dog tax.

3. Receipts and Expenditures (for purposes of revenue, in an attempt to determine annual revenue as compared with expenditure)—

Arrears of taxes are omitted, as it is considered that one year with another these arrears about balance.
Revenue	$14,399.31
Assessment	138.25
Business Tax	1,239.50
Dog Tax	26.00
Water rates	5,876.20
Fines	(Omitted)

Total estimated revenue—

Expenditures—

Total Expenditures	$30,256.30
Less: Balance in Bank	1,062.81

Net total expenditure for year—

Expenditure for Bonds—

(presume this Capital payment)	$3,206.74
--------------------------------------	------------

Bank of Commerce—

(presume this Capital payment)	8,428.87	11,735.61
--------------------------------------	----------	-----------

Apparent net annual expenditure (for Revenue)—

4. Apparent Surplus, which might be applied to Sinking Fund or other purposes—

You will note it is a sum equal to about 25% of the total expenditure. Included in the expenditure are various sums, of which I am in doubt from the meagre information, as to being Capital or Revenue, and for my estimate I have included them as being Expenditure on account of Revenue. I refer to—

Coupons—	$2,553.55
(which would appear to be coupon interest on Bonds.)
Provincial Treasurer	2,304.45
G. Munro	2,199.96
Beauharnois Electric Company	1,418.24
Provincial Secretary	456.02

Should any of these items be for Capital purposes, then the apparent surplus would be increased by one or other of the amounts.

5. Bank Account—

It would appear as if during the year a loan had been made from the Canadian Bank of Commerce, of $6,786.80, and as if this loan from the Bank had been reduced in the sum of $286.80—leaving the liability admitted, of $6,500.00.

Bank balances at the beginning and end of the year are of course eliminated.

To have a proper check on this account, one should have the liability to the Bank for the year ending December 31, 1929.

You will realize of course, that it does not cost any more to keep the accounts properly than it does to keep them in the manner in which these are set up. Practically the same amount of work is involved. The only difference is in the initial set-up and the names of the accounts. After this has been done the revenues or expenditures are reported according to their classification.

I can quite understand that the citizens of your village are vitally interested in various departments. For example you would be interested in your roads, and would like to know the expenditures made for and on behalf of the main arteries through the town; the secondary roads; expenditures on bridges; permanent sidewalks or temporary walks—the latter laid probably with cement blocks, as is done in many partially improved sections; expenditure for or on account of cement, gravel or sand; whether it might be profitable for the town to have its own sand or gravel pit. In this connection also, you would probably want to know what was expended on road equipment, in the way of machines, loose tools, and the amount expended for keeping your winter roads open. Now that you have the Fire Station, the citizens should know the cost of upkeep of this item, and expenditures for or on behalf of hose reels, hose, ladders, engines, clothing or other items which go to make up this department. The citizens would certainly be interested in the cost of water, which is one of the most important items. You now have your own Filtration Plant, and expenditures probably for chemicals; particularly there will be expenditures for hydrants, pipe lines and perhaps additional reservoirs, sewer mains or settling basins.

From the appearance of the statement I would judge that the Beauharnois Electric Company had control of the lighting contracts, both for the citizens and the town, so it is quite possible then that there may not

Coffee Drunkard Cured

Professor Hermann Schlesinger, the noted physician, reported to the Vienna Society of Physicians at its last sitting the remarkable case of a patient, aged 40, who had become a coffee drunkard. He drank twenty-five pints of coffee a day with milk. The man applied to the professor's clinic to be cured of this strange passion, which, although it did not appear to affect his stomach, was costing him all his income. His father was a drunkard of the usual type and while a boy he contracted such a repulsion for liquor drinking that he took to coffee. He felt the unusual thirst, which he inherited from his father when he was only 7 years of age. At this age he was in the habit of drinking three pints of coffee a day; at 13 he raised it to fifteen pints a day. His yearly consumption of coffee was 900 gallons, for which he used ninety pounds of coffee beans. Professor Schlesinger succeeded in bringing his patient's coffee allowance down to four pints a day.

Modern Manna

An appetizing picnic feast was spread in the open at Mount Dennis, Toronto, with raisin buns, flaky-crust loaves of bread, luscious pies and tarts, and frosted cakes scattered liberally along the roadway. To boys and girls and hungry tramps it were as if manna had fallen from the skies when a horse and wagon belonging to a city bakery staged a run-away down Guestville Avenue, narrowly missing a group of children playing in the street, crossed Lambton Avenue, and crashed into the wall of the building occupied by the Arrow Cleaning Company. The contents of the bakery wagon found swift delivery over the pavement. While the wagon was considerably damaged, the horse escaped injury. The damage to the Arrow Cleaning Company was estimated at $150.

Burglar Snatches Kiss, Leaves

When a "difficulty" arose to foil his holdup attempt, a well dressed young bandit took the "difficulty" in hand, planted a kiss squarely on her lips and bowed gracefully out of the door. The "difficulty" was pretty Miss M. Haglund of Vancouver, B. C. She was awakened when a burglar entered the bedroom she shared with her mother, Mrs. H. Haglund, and Miss J. Harvey. Refusing to tell him where she kept her purse, Miss Haglund rose from bed, flung open the door and ordered the intruder to leave. After hesitating a moment, the man walked to the door, and as he passed Miss Haglund he grasped her firmly in his arms and kissed her.

Dug His Own Grave

Having been unemployed for some time, James Brown, of Rutherglen, got a job in a cemetery, digging a drain. He was working at the bottom of a pit about 20 feet deep which had been dug. Suddenly to the horror of the other men who were engaged at the top of the pit, the walls caved in, and Brown was buried beneath about 10 tons of earth. Several of the other men had narrow escapes from falling into the pit. The work of rescuing Brown was begun immediately, but it was a considerable time before he could be brought out of the pit. Artificial respiration was applied at once, but without success, and it was found that Brown was dead.

One Pupil Each 7 Schools

There are seven schools in Montana which have only one pupil, according to the biennial report of the department of education. There are 33 schools which have only two pupils; 40 with only three; 74 with four, and 123 with five pupils each. The total enrollment this year in Montana's public schools was 120,357, an increase of 2,365 over last year.

A Case of Jealousy

Because she believed her husband, a man of 75, was about to take another wife, a Sephardi woman of Haifa, Palestine, is alleged to have attempted to burn her husband alive. Police, hearing screams from their house, broke the door down and found the man and woman in flames in their bedroom. The woman stated that while examining the bed on which her husband was sleeping she upset the oil lamp on the bed and it caught fire. They both died from effects of the flames.

He Dared and Lost

While chatting in a Berlin cafe, a German named Schoettler dared an English visitor, Charles Manchan, to guess what he had in his attache case. Manchan guessed that it was something to eat but Schoettler, replying that it was something much more interesting, opened the bag. Manchan then put his hand inside—and was bitten by a snake. He fell to the ground unconscious. He was given serum and was expected to recover. Schoettler disappeared.

Drunken Cop Shoots Youth

A policeman, described by his superiors as being intoxicated, shot an 18-year-old youth in a fit of anger at being barred from a speakeasy in Brooklyn. The policeman, Philip P. Fox, was himself shot in the leg and head by a uniformed patrolman who arrested him. Fox's victim, James Godfrey of Brooklyn, tried to persuade Fox to go home instead of entering the speakeasy.

Horse Saves Boy From Bull

Joseph Fehring, 10, of Minonk, Ill. was in Streator Hospital with a crushed leg, but happy to know that his faithful horse, Happy, saved his life. The boy was on his horse driving cattle from the pasture when a bull rushed at them. In the impact of animal bodies the boy's right leg was crushed. The horse balked, throwing him. Then the horse stopped and when he saw the bull start for the boy dashed back and stood over the lad until the bull had gone.

The World's Greatest Invention

An English engineer has invented a "speech-control" for public speakers similar to the electric control used for regulating traffic. His contraption has a green light, with the word GO, which notifies the speaker that he is authorized to proceed. The control allows the speaker to go on for an agreed time, then a white flag is flashed as a warning. When the white light gives place to red the speaker has to sit down.

Soviet to Ban Men's Pockets

A fashion committee, composed of men and girls in the Volodarsky garment factory, Leningrad, is to wipe out the "lazy habit" of Russian men pulling off their trousers over dirty shoes. Cuffless trousers hereafter will fit tightly around the ankle just above the shoe tops. They will be wide at the knees and waist for comfort. The trousers will not be fitted for suspenders, but will be held in place by a belt. Another feature of the new Soviet trousers is that they have no pockets. Each pair of trousers will be provided with two detachable pockets which will be hung from the belt. They may be taken off and washed. The committee holds that men's coat and trouser pockets are nests for germs.

Taste 350 Kinds Vintage

Tasters of wine gathered in London recently for the International Wine-Tasting Conference. It was the first conference of its kind to be held in London, and was attended by delegates from France, Germany and the United States. The wine tasters had before them 350 different wines upon which they drank in judgment before the conference closed. "I think the wine conference is a charming idea," said Judge O. Marfin, the chairman of the U. S. section. "There are still a number of people in the United States who maintain a sincere interest in and affection for wine and wine lore even though it has become somewhat of a vague and spiritual order."

Baby Crook Caught in Act

Detectives rounded up Montreal's youngest criminal—a 7 year old boy who appeared in the Juvenile Court on a charge of stealing auto parts. Recently the sleuths were called to solve the mysterious thefts of odd parts from a number of cars parked in the west end of the city. Lying in ambush, Sergeant-Detectives Daoust and Ford caught the juvenile thief red-handed. Instead of rushing him to a barred cell at headquarters, the detectives marched him home and made a report to his parents, telling them to bring him to the Juvenile Court. Police records show that the boy holds the unenviable record of being the youngest wrongdoer ever arrested in Montreal.

17 Lord's Prayer on Dime

Seventeen Lord's Prayers written on space the size of a dime—it sounds impossible, but Joseph S. A. Bertasso, of Albany, N. Y., lays claim to that distinction. This was accomplished, Bertasso said, only after long practice. First he was able to write only five Lord's Prayers, which the ordinary person even cannot do. Recently, Bertasso said, he wrote a 16,033 word history of the United States on a postcard.

Goat and Bees Together

Heads or tails had to win in a conflict between a goat and a hive of bees at Dalton, Georgia. Billy was the first victim and to get even charged head first on the nearest hive. There was no truce or armistice, it was a battle to the end, of the end, and in the end Billy took the count definitely and finally. The fatalities included four bee hives, eight chickens and one goat; the list of wounded included two persons, one dog, one cat and twenty-five chickens.

Wealth to Cats, Dogs

A will dispute has reached the Austrian high courts. While the state claims that the will of Baroness Franziska von Dittner, in which she left all her wealth, including two palaces, to her cats and dogs, is unlawful, the Vienna Society for the Protection of Animals is supporting the rights of the cats and the dogs. The lower courts have already decided that according to Austrian law animals cannot be made residuary legatees and have, therefore, declared the will to be invalid.

Compel Youth to Disrobe

Driving one's girl friend home while scantily attired is distinctly embarrassing and unconventional, but it happened to Gerald Blood of Gloversville, N. Y. Blood was returning his companion to her home when two bandits stopped his automobile and ordered him to the road. There he was told to discard most of his clothing, after which his funds were taken. Then he was forced into the car and ordered to drive away.

Wife Falls From Auto

Mrs. Gertrude Dorey, 27 years old, of Windsor, Ont., suffered a fractured skull and possible internal injuries at 1:30 a.m. when she fell from an automobile driven by her husband, Wilfrid Dorey, on the Walker Road, Sandwich East Township. Dorey told the police he believes his wife fell asleep and knocked open the door.

To Count Officials' Test

In accordance with instructions from Moscow, the Kokand, Turkestan, soviet council, administered a test to applicants for certain offices. Although in some cases the applicants did not have to know how to read and write, they had to be able to count up to 100. Those who conducted the examination were amazed that only 30 per cent of the applicants could pass the "counting" test.

To Sleep in Catastrophe

John McMullen of Philadelphia sleeps regardless of where he is. Take for instance. Travellers on the Lincoln Highway, near South Langhorne, Pa., found an automobile hanging over a 40-foot drop after it had crashed through a guard rail. Over the wheel McMullen was slumped—asleep. He said he went to sleep before the crash and couldn't get out of his automobile safely afterward, so he just went back to sleep.

Lethal Radiator Kills Grasshoppers

Raymond Johnson of Bloomfield, Nebraska, has decreed death by electrocution for hordes of grasshoppers eating his grain. The farmer has rigged up a finely strung screen on the front of his automobile and charged the wires with an electric current. As he drives through the fields the hoppers swarm against the screen by the hundreds and are killed.

Obituary

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Fraser
On Tuesday evening, July 21, at her home in Fort Covington, N.Y., Mrs. Elizabeth M. Fraser, a beloved and highly esteemed resident, reached the end of her earthly journey, the last part of which had been a lingering illness borne with great Christian cheerfulness and patience.

Mrs. Fraser began to fail in health about the middle of February, and since then has declined steadily until her death. However, she remained clear and active until the last few days.

Mrs. Elizabeth McKenzie Fraser was born November 19, 1862, in Conestoga, N.Y., the daughter of the late John and Ann McKenzie. Early in life, the family moved to Burke where she received her public school education. She was married in 1887 to Rev. William Fraser and the large portion of their life was spent in Champlain, N.Y. After a pastorate of nineteen years there, Mr. Fraser died and Mrs. Fraser and family moved to Fort Covington where they have since made their home.

Always devoted to her church, Mrs. Fraser gave all her efforts outside her home to that organization. She was honorary president of the Champlain Presbyterian Society having served it as president for a number of years. She was devoted to the First Presbyterian Church of Fort Covington. If it be true that we take out of life just what we put into it, each page in her book of life is closely written with kindly deeds. The things she did for others gave her happy memories to treasure. Her cares and trials are all forgotten and death must have seemed like the end of a perfect day when she closed the book without regret.

Surviving are five daughters and two sons: Isabella, who has made her home with her mother; Mrs. Charles Smallman, of Ste. Agnes, Quebec; Lorraine, a supervisor of music in the Rockville Center schools; Alice who is employed in the Citizen's Bank of Freeport, L.I.; Jean, Saranac Lake;

Rev. C. Frederic Fraser, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Oneonta, N.Y. and William A. Fraser, a student in Lafayette College, Easton Pa. Two nieces and a nephew: Miss E. Everett, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. E. W. Thurston, Delhi N.Y. and Mr. C. M. Everett, of Yonkers, N.Y. who made their home with Mrs. Fraser from early youth. Also surviving are nieces, nephews and grand-children.

Funeral service was held from the First Presbyterian church in Ft. Covington on Friday afternoon, Rev. W. C. Taylor, of Mooers officiating. The large attendance and many floral tributes testified to the respect in which a community beheld her. Interment was in the Elmwood cemetery.

A bright young woman novelist wrote to the man of Big Business who was trying so hard to get into "Society," and said: "May I dedicate my latest novel to you?"

The flattered man wired back: "Certainly. Please wire immediately where the dedication is to be held and what shall I wear."

Cultivation and Dry Weather

With the bulk of planting over, cultivation is the big job in the garden now. The objects are threefold, first and probably least important to keep down weeds, second, to improve the physical or mechanical condition of the soil by letting in air and breaking down lumps and thirdly, the most important of all, to conserve moisture during dry weather. Neither vegetables or flowers will do well if they receive a check in growth through lack of moisture. In seasons of protracted drought, of course, it is impossible to prevent a setback unless one is fortunate enough to have a supply of water, but cultivation will help a lot as it prevents evaporation by creating a dust mulch on the surface of the soil. Using a special paper, now being generally distributed, or vegetable refuse like grass clippings, bean and pea pods, carrot tops, etc., also helps to conserve moisture. The application of commercial fertilizer, particularly of mixtures high in Nitrogen, is another factor in fighting dry weather as this tends to keep growth going.

Many a garden, well cultivated and planted with good seed, is a failure simply because the very important job of thinning is neglected. True, this appears to be a back-breaking task and the rows seem almost without end when first approached, but thinning is essential and when tackled the right way is not so arduous. A very sharp and narrow hoe or one of the special triangular hoes will be found invaluable for doing the rough trimming, while an old knife blade will almost finish the work without using the fingers. If we do not do this vegetable rowing together and become stringy, while flowers get spindly and fall over with the first heavy wind or rain. A good general rule with flowers is to allow half as much space each way as a plant is high when fully grown. In rows of vegetables like lettuce, beets and carrots, which are used when very small, require a little distance between plants. Corn should be thinned to about three or four stalks to a hill and the hills require at least eighteen inches each way. If grown in drills, allow about ten inches between plants. Beans must have three or four inches. Beets and carrots should be given about an inch each way to start with and later on remove every other plant for the first crop and keep or remove alternate plants until the row is completely used.

Timely Tips
Do not cut the lawn nearly as frequently in hot weather and do not cut it too short or burn will result. If a hose is available, soak the grass every ten days during dry weather. One soaking is worth a score of daily sprinkles.

It is not too late to make another sowing of beets, beans, Coss lettuce, corn, squash and cucumbers while this is the proper time for planting Lima beans and setting out celery plants, peppers and other hot weather specialties. In those districts of Canada where the season is long, a very complete vegetable garden may still be planted with every chance of success, particularly if a hose and a supply of commercial fertilizer are available.

Care of Gladioli and Other Flowers
The first of the gladioli will be flowering soon. Just before the buds start to open a light application of lime dug in about the plants will add depth to the colour. Keep soil loosened up and water, if at all possible, during hot weather. If the spike is removed when the first blossom opens up it will keep for a week in the house. With this flower, as with all others cut for decorative purposes, it is well to place the bouquet in full light outdoors for an hour or two each day to bring out the color, especially with those flowers which have opened since picking and an inch or two should be removed from the lower part of the stems at the same time. Change the water daily. Gladioli for exhibition purposes should have a hood drawn up over the lower bulbs before cutting to retard development so that all the buds will open as nearly as possible at the same time.

THE BICYCLE FOR TWO
In the olden days of "the bicycle built for two," advertising was a far, far different thing from what it is to-day. Nevertheless, just as the tandem was considered an efficient and rather elite means of travel, so was advertising, even then, conceded to possess decided merit.

Times, thank goodness, have changed! No one, we believe, would prefer the days of the "Floradora Girl" and the bicycle built for two. No businessman would prefer the cumbersome, halting advertising effort of yesterday to the carefully planned, colorful campaigns of to-day.

Advertising now is no longer guess-work, no longer the feeble effort of early years. Its scope is incomparably wider, its preparation calculated and exact. To-day, results from advertising are definitely assured.

Just as you, in your daily life, disregarding antiquated modes, avail yourself of the speedy, efficient transportation at your disposal, so should you, in business, disregarding the less effectual methods of the past, make full use of the science which advertising today has become.

W. L. CARR AT P. E. ISLAND FIELD DAY

Holstein-Friesian Club Held First Field Day at Charlottetown

The first field day of the Prince Edward Island Holstein-Friesian Club was held on July 7th at Bunbury Farm, Charlottetown, the home of J. Walter Jones. It will be remembered that Mr. Jones was the speaker at the very successful Holstein banquet held in the Chateau last Fall. The following account of the Field Day is taken from the Maritime Farmer.

Upwards of four hundred people, Holstein breeders and their friends, found in the pleasant surroundings both instruction and enjoyment. Among the interested visitors from the mainland were Mr. and Mrs. Lorne E. Logan, Manager Lonsdale Farm, Sussex, N.B.; S. A. Logan, Homestead Farm, Amherst, N.S., and W. L. Carr, Huntingdon, Que., Holstein-Friesian Director for that province.

Among the famous animals sold from Bunbury Farm are: Countess Abbecken Hienke, holder of American record for butterfat for cow milked three times daily, reserve All-American in 1925 sold that year for $2500.

Abegweit Pluto was sold as a calf in 1924 for $500. He was repurchased in 1927 for $3,000. A half interest in this bull was sold in 1928 for $2,500 and the other half realized a similar sum in 1929. Sixteen other animals have been sold for $500 each up to $1,200, or a total of $10,150, including Abegweit Dixie Fritz, Junior champion at the Royal; Abegweit Nora, Maritime Lily Pie; Abegweit Klemke Francy; Sally Francy, twice All-American and Abegweit Pluto.

Much interest was evidenced in the 12 year old cow, Jean Pontiac Abbecker, owned by Wilfrid R. Boyver. This grand cow in her eighth yearly record, has produced 24,000 pounds milk, and 800 pounds butterfat annually ever since she was a four year old.

Hon. W. M. Lea, Premier and Minister of Agriculture, in the course of his address, advised the live stock men to feature their business by taking stock and making a survey of the situation and having done so plan means of advancement. World competition necessitates a strict study of business. Improved dairy breeds give returns in excess of mediocre stock. In the selection of livestock type and conformation must be considered as well as production for in this line beauty of form has an intrinsic value. In this respect exhibitions have contributed much to livestock improvement.

W. L. Carr brought greetings from the Canadian Holstein-Friesian Association as well as from the Quebec Holstein-Friesian Club. He congratulated Mr. Jones on his fine herd, which is creating and maintaining such excellent traditions—a tradition that shows an achievement that is difficult to equal—all milking cows with one exception having scored "Gold Medal," which accomplishment more than qualifies Mr. Jones for the "Master Breeder Shield" awarded him by the Association last year.

He also referred to the many excellent animals bred and sold by Bunbury Farm. He advised the breeders present to help multiply the number of good livestock breeders for the good of their marketing opportunities. He decried jealous tendencies and emulated co-operative endeavor. He predicted a successful career as fieldman for Mr. Profit and announced that in future there would be three directors of the Holstein-Friesian Association in the Maritimes.

In conclusion Mr. Carr advised that the present time of depression is not the time to dispose of flocks and herds, rather, it is time when new herds and flocks may be advantageously established. Owners of the best dairy cattle are best able to meet depression, and in this connection he said the Holstein cow is fulfilling a large part.

Bert R. Brown, President of the P. E. I. Ayrshire Breeders' Club was present and extended to the Holstein Club members greetings from his Club.

J. H. Kennedy, Maritime Director of Holstein-Friesian Association, was one of the indefatigable workers that helped materially with Messrs. Jones Shaw and Profit to make the field day a success.

A Scotchman who was not feeling as well as usual called on his family doctor, who looked him over and gave him some pills to be taken at bedtime. A bottle of whiskey was also prescribed for his stomach's sake—a small glass to be taken after each meal.

Four days later Sandy called again on the doctor and said that he was feeling no better.

"Have you taken the medicine exactly as I instructed?" the doctor inquired.

"Well, doctor," said Sandy, "I may be a wee bit behind w' the peels, but I'm about sax weeks ahead w' the whiskey."

Three Fine Buffalo To Greet Visitors Ottawa Exhibition

Govt. Providing Educational Factors For Young and Old.—Notable Band to be Heard.—High Class Entertainment Assured

Three buffalo, a selected pair and their young calf, will greet visitors to the Ottawa exhibition this year, commencing Monday, August 24 and continuing for six days and six nights. These have been secured through the Dominion government, the directors of the exhibition realizing that the attraction would be an educational and interesting feature, as many, both old and young, have never seen a buffalo. This will not be a sideshow attraction, but will be free to the public, a specially constructed wire fence enclosure giving the patrons of the exhibition the best opportunity to see the animals and at the same time affording protection should the powerful animals become restive. The directors also are pleased that the Ontario government again will make a display of live fish, wild animals and game birds. These were shown in Ottawa for the first time and proved one of the most popular of the many attractions.

Livestock and agricultural products, poultry and pets, automobile show, dog show, pure food show, hobby show, child welfare demonstrations, horticultural displays, baby show and scores of other factors will make the exhibition one long to be remembered.

Many will be glad to know that been a succession of triumphant musical appearances. It is the feature band for the Toronto exhibition, and its engagement for Ottawa was made possible only through the desire of the Toronto directors to help the Ottawa exhibition. This band is the most expensive attraction ever booked for the Ottawa exhibition, but no extra charge will be made for the concerts, which will be free to all exhibition patrons.

Another outstanding entertainment feature will be The Sensations of 1931 a big musical and dance revue with a large cast, mostly girls. This is a most elaborate production with Broadway stars, gorgeous costumes, novel scenic effects, bright dances, clever comedy and entrancing music. Eight other stellar vaudeville offerings will complete the grandstand program, claimed to be the best ever assembled for the exhibition.

Music lovers are assured of wonderful programs from Peter A. Cavallo and his band, which will give two concerts each day from the concert band stand. This band consists of 58 musicians, many soloists of distinction, and the seasonal tours have

There is advantage to a great many people in Canada, particularly those living in the cities and towns, in the fall in the cost of living in the last year and a half. Averaged over the whole country, it amounts to 12 per cent, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The greatest drop has been in the cost of foodstuffs, which is more than 25 per cent. Less than at the beginning of 1930. The last few months have seen a considerable decline in the prices of food products. This advantage of the town dweller is obtained, of course, at the disadvantage of the farming population. It is one of the chief reasons for their increasing difficulties. They have some advantage, however, in falling prices for clothing and some other things. There would be a greater decline in the prices of the things they require but, for the high tariff, which keeps prices up. Rents in the cities and towns have shown the least decline as yet. In the last six months, however, there has been some reduction. The lowering of the cost of living means, of course, that the dollar buys more than formerly.

Railways have offered exceptionally low fares this year and, in addition, all highways lead to the Capital. For automobile visitors, ample parking space has been provided inside the grounds.

Any information as to entries for the various departments or as to any branch of the exhibition will be cheerfully given by H. H. McElroy, manager and secretary, Ottawa.

Remunerative Admiration
"We give admiration to one who has great wealth," said H. Ho, the sage of Chinatown. "It costs nothing, and if wealth returns the compliment in its own terms, we may find the bargain profitable."—(Washington Star.)

The "Golden Gate" was so named almost 300 years before gold was discovered in California. This narrow channel into San Francisco bay was named by Sir Francis Drake about 1578.

Eaton's Wanted Another Alpha Churn

Pasteurizing Room in Eaton's Montreal Dairy

Churn Room in Eaton's Montreal Dairy

Eaton's Dairy, situated practically in the heart of Canada's busiest shopping district in Montreal, in order to fill the constantly growing demand for its well known brands of butter, was recently obliged to install a second large churn. Needless to say, it was another Alpha Mogul. This Creamery, one of the finest in the Dominion, is turning out tens of thousands of pounds of butter each week. From soup to nuts it is De Laval equipped. Some of the larger pieces are four motor driven 400 gallons Alpha C Pasteurizers, an Alpha Hydraulic Butter Printer and two Alpha Mogul Churns, to say nothing of De Laval Pumps, Sanitary Fittings and smaller equipment. Their latest purchase was the second Alpha Mogul Churn, installed recently by the side of the first which has been in operation since the Creamery was first started, about three years ago. The rapidly increasing business made the installation of a second large Churn a necessity, and of course it was another Alpha.

Dundee Centre

Norman McPhee, Sr., Died Suddenly. The community were surprised to learn of the sudden and unexpected death of Mr. Norman McPhee, Sr., on Saturday morning at 11 o'clock.

He had been in his usual health and was out in the hay field helping his son with the hay, when he complained of feeling dizzy. His son immediately brought him to the house and he was able to walk in with some assistance, but he suddenly grew worse and passed away, the result of a hemorrhage of the brain.

Mr. McPhee was born in 1854 and was a life long resident of Dundee and will be greatly missed in this community. He was always found to be an industrious individual, a pleasant and cheerful disposition, always looking on the bright side of life and willing to help every one at every opportunity.

The funeral service was held on Monday afternoon at 2 p.m. and was largely attended by relatives and friends, which was a token of esteem in which the deceased was held. The Rev. P. McK. Sampson, of Athelstan conducted the service, his text was "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall we be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22.

He leaves to mourn his loss, his widow, one son, Norman, at home, one daughter, Dora, Mrs. Stuart McGibbon, two brothers, Messrs. John and Stuart McPhee, all of this place and several grandchildren all of whom have the sympathy of the community.

Among those from a distance who attended the funeral were: Mrs. Annie Clark McPhee, Miss Lillias McPhee, Mr. Donald McPhee, the Misses Violet, Annie and Dorothy McPhee, of Vankeek Hill, Ont., Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Cook, Mrs. Cassie McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hastie, Mr. R. Boyd, Mrs. Boyd, Miss Eva Boyd, all of Montreal, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Smith, Mrs. Susan March, Mrs. James Hildreth and Miss Lello Cameron, R.N., all of Malone, N.Y., and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Loney, of Summerside, Ont.

We are sorry to report that Mrs. Elizabeth Moody suffered a slight stroke on Saturday. At the time of writing she is improving slowly. We wish her a speedy recovery.

Valleyfield

Sudden Death of Mr. Thos. McQuail—Funeral services for the late Mr. Thos. McQuail were held on Saturday afternoon, July 25th, at his home in Valleyfield, Rev. J. G. Greig, pastor, United Church, officiating.

The deceased was formerly an employee of the Montreal Cottons for many years as machinist. Residing in Valleyfield for a period of 30 years was widely known and the abundance of flowers received by the family indicated a strong feeling of sympathy towards them in their sad and sudden bereavement. The late Mr. McQuail was a loyal member of the Presbyterian Church.

During the service Mrs. C. L. Roman sang the hymn "Pass me Not O Gentle Saviour." He was laid to rest in the Protestant cemetery in the presence of a large gathering.

Among the many who sent wreaths of flowers were: Officials of Montreal Cottons, the Machine Shop, M. C. C. Institute and Club, Ladies' Aid, United Church, and a number of personal tokens were also sent. The end came with dramatic suddenness. Mr. McQuail, returning from a walk at about 10.30 a.m. retired and died almost immediately. Several small incidents seemed to suggest a premonition of the approaching end.

Present at the funeral were: Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Hobbs and a nephew, from Montreal; Mrs. Snyder, a sister from Lanaster; Mrs. McDiarmid and daughter of Maxville, Ont., and Mrs. Kyte of Cornwall. Three daughters and four sons survive.

"How many are there in your family, madam?" "Just my husband and I." "No children?" "No." "Any dogs or cats?" "No." "Do you have wireless?" "No." "Have you any saxophones, pianolas, ukuleles, or other musical instruments?" "Indeed not. And why all these questions?" "I'm the man who intends to rent the house next door."

"I took it from one of your own bottles—EST. 1843."

"The shopman was aggrieved, but was madam sure she had dialled the right number?" "Why, of course I am," she replied. "I took it from one of your own bottles—EST. 1843."

"I've been trying for hours to telephone you, to get you to send up another bottle of my medicine, and you never answered," she complained. "I know I have one of these dial phones and I sometimes get it wrong, but I couldn't be wrong all the time. I tried dozens of times and couldn't get anybody."

There will be no service in the church here on the two following Sundays or until the return of Rev. J. B. Maclean, D.D., from his vacation.

On Tuesday morning Mr. and Mrs. Fred Tessier attended the funeral of their nephew, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Adelaar Laplante, who was drowned Sunday afternoon while he was bathing in the Chateauguay river at Ormstown.

Matrimonial

Spivey-Greenwood The wedding took place at Huntingdon United Church on Thursday, July 23rd, at half after four o'clock, of Jennie, youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. T. Greenwood of Lancashire, England, to Arthur, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Spivey of Bradford, England. Rev. J. H. Miller officiated.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. Will Stott, wore a gown of white silk lace and georgette, with a veil of fine old lace and brocaded satin shoes to match. She carried a bouquet of white carnations. She was attended by Miss Q. Walker, attired in a gown of honedew georgette, and Miss N. Gott, who wore a gown of maize georgette, both wearing black picture hats and carrying bouquets of sweet peas. The flower girls were the little Misses Helen Swift, niece of the groom, and Miss Muriel Stott, attired in pale pink crepe de chine, each carrying a bouquet of pastel sweet peas. Mr. Fred Spivey, brother of the bridegroom was best man whilst Mr. J. Swift acted as groomsman. Miss E. M. Sellar played the wedding music.

A reception, attended by seventy-five friends and relatives, was held in the Huntingdon Chateau at six o'clock. The happy couple are enjoying a honeymoon trip at different points in Ontario.

"Mummy, I've got stomach-ache," said six-year-old Nellie. "That's because your stomach is empty; you've been without your lunch. You'd feel better if you had something in it."

"That afternoon the minister called and in conversation complained of a severe headache. "That's because it's empty," said Nellie. "You'd feel better if you had something in it."

Mr. and Mrs

"Big Business Girl"

By One of Them

CHAPTER IX

When the affable Mr. Green learned of the situation, he was delighted on a vast scale. He proposed a luncheon place about five blocks from the office, a quiet little restaurant remodeled from a once famous saloon, which was an ideal hide-away. "Almost as quiet as the Lincoln Park Refectory," he told her, with a worldliness which she knew he did not possess.

The big German headwater who met them at the door immediately suggested the second floor. Mac agreed. The booths there were cozy without being too private, and it was evident that this was where the favored ones "in the know" were served with drinks.

"How about a little something first?" said Mr. Green, his black eyes snapping in delight. "She really needed it, but her affirmative was carefully quiet."

They were well into the dessert before they got to talking about the little matter he had been sent to discuss. It had been one thing when they arrived, and while the place thinned out, he had been telling her of his early life as wine merchant in the "back of the yards" district. Then he had worked his way into the job of promoting testimonial banquets given to minor officials, holders and ambitious politicians, where judges and gangsters and politicians all sat down together to a dinner which cost Mr. Green a dollar and forty cents a plate but which cost everybody else ten dollars.

He was very pleased with himself a moment later his leg brushed her knee, which she did not withdraw. He was conscious of her smooth warmth. She had thrown open the coat to her suit, and the long line of her beautiful throat tempted him.

"You are very pretty," he said humbly, his heart jumping into his eyes.

"I am afraid you are something of a flatterer, Mr. Green."

"Please, won't you call me Benny? They all call me Benny."

"You are very pretty," he said humbly, his heart jumping into his eyes.

"I feel so sorry that I did not see Mr. Winters today. He is such a . . ."

"Nice young man," finished Mac. "Tell me, what did you want to see him about? Has the Federation decided to leave Mr. Clayton alone?"

He grinned slowly, carefully watching her eyes. "I had nothing to see him about. But I thought maybe he might want to see me."

"Yes?"

"But I guess not. I guess maybe they don't care what happens any more, no?"

"Not that."

"I want to tell him, maybe, that something was going to happen this week."

Mac was elaborately careless in finishing her coffee. "Why, what do you mean?"

He shrugged. "I have nothing to do with it. I only hear what they say."

"What could happen? You see, I am so new in this business that I do not understand things."

"Let us hear about you," said dapper Mr. Green, changing the subject.

"How do you like the work?"

And she told him all about herself, the fact that the only things that mattered to her were to get ahead in life, to succeed in business. He reached out and patted the hand that lay on the table.

"You are a very remarkable girl, believe me," he said. "I hope you get along."

"Thank you, Mr. . . ."

"Benny. I certainly hope I do." His hand was warm on hers. She left it there.

"Maybe I can help you. Perhaps I tell them that this would not be a good time to let anything happen? Wouldn't that do you some good? What do you say, eh?"

"How do you mean?"

"I will tell my people that maybe a month from now would be a better time."

"A better time for what?"

"To let something happen. Then I can tell your boss that you talked me out of it. And maybe in another month Mr. Clayton will get together with us. So, you see, that saves you people a lot of money and some trouble, and I am glad to help a little girl along."

"Would you do that for me?" exclaimed Mac, squeezing his hand. "That's great! . . . She had done it! She had done it! She had done it!"

"Remember, that's not good business but I do it anyway. You keep it quiet."

"Oh, I will!" She freed her hand and wielded a lipstick until her mouth was properly scarlet. He was fluttered, she could see. "Tell me," she went on, spreading rouge into the corners with her little fingers, "just how they make trouble for those who don't pay."

In a few simple sentences he expounded the racketeer's law, which is essentially the same as the gangster's, that "a Smith and Wesson makes all men equal." Methods such as that were crude, explained Green and not at all in accordance with his idea. But of course he wasn't running the Federation. He felt it was much better to have men stick up a cleaner's branch plant, or retail store, and then pour acid on the clothes they would find in the racks. That was neater, and you weren't apt to be involved in any messy investigation or show-up. The racket was able to keep so many of its men, he explained, because it held the threat of exposure over them if they wanted to quit. New Benny wasn't ever going to get involved like that, no sir. He had never killed anybody and he wasn't ever going to. Not Benny.

Mac said she thought the hoodlums were the only ones who made the big money. He disagreed.

"When you're a hood you've got to be quick on the trigger," he concluded. "Then the first thing you know you've winged somebody. And then it ain't very long till you get rubbed out yourself."

It was very late. "I've never had such an interesting afternoon. I really must go," said Mac, "but I really must go."

"I am glad," simply. "Maybe if I called you up sometime we could go out dancing? And we could talk some more?"

Mac pictured herself in one of her expensive evening gowns, playing up to Green and his friends at one of those night clubs. "Well, you call me up—and we'll see," she said as they rose to go.

He patted her arm in an exploratory manner when he let her out of his car in front of the office. "Good-by," he said. And before he could think of what he wanted to say, she was gone.

There was a note on Mac's desk to see Mr. Clayton as soon as she came in. She wondered nervously if he were angry because she had taken so long for lunch. Patting at her hair with the aid of the mirror in her purse, she hurried into his office.

"How did you come out?" exclaimed Mr. Clayton. "I was very anxious about you when you didn't return for lunch."

"They were all ready to go ahead with some rough stuff right away, but I finally promised not to do anything for at least a month."

"How did you do that? Why, that's great work!" He sprang up from his chair and shook her hand, man fashion. "But I shouldn't have let you go out with him."

"I did not do anything all right," Mac's heart was swelling with joy. This was her moment! That was the kind of thing she had gone into business for!

She felt that this older man before her was finding her good to look upon. A little gleam in his eyes said to her that she was an admiration—and something besides. Mac had never been in love with an older man. Up to this very moment R. J. Clayton had been to her just another middle-aged man rather attractive, who had found that life was now more or less of a stale thing.

Now he seemed to be so close! She shrugged her head away, afraid to look at him . . . afraid to think of him that way, as being human. Like any young person who suddenly finds that older men and women have emotions, too, she was perplexed.

"I meant to ask you yesterday, Miss MacIntyre, if you could come to our home Saturday night for a little dinner party. Just a few of the men from the office, Donovan, Winters, Elstrom. My wife, in fact, is even planning on you. Won't you come?"

"I'd love to," the words rushed out. "I really would."

"Very well, I'll have somebody pick you up seven o'clock dinner."

In another moment he had returned his attention to his work and she was back in her office, wondering how it all had happened.

He likes me, a little voice within her said . . . as the dim avenues of intrigue opened up to an ambitious girl . . . This was her chance. She remembered seeing his wife at the office once. She was just a little red-haired woman who had helped him get started, many years ago. Surely he couldn't find her attractive now. If Mac could handle a campus king or wangle a favor out of a lady dean, she knew she could play with this man without any danger to herself. Clayton had not been an attractive man in his youth, perhaps, but business and affluence had steered him given him a certain reticent charm which is very appealing to women.

It was not until she began tearing evening gowns out of her closet at home, a little later, that she felt a sudden stab of guilt. There lay Johnny's letter on her dressing table, saying he would call as soon as he arrived. He would be here Saturday.

She sat down on her bed and tried to realize what she had done. Made a date for the very night Johnny arrived in Chicago! Johnny's face would be so eager. He would be so successful, now. And his voice over the telephone!

CHAPTER X

It was a few minutes past eight o'clock Saturday morning when a big touring car, with side curtains shielding the back seat from view, slid up to the curb in North Clark Street, a few blocks north of Belmont Avenue. Two stock men alighted; one of them lifted a finger in farewell to the man who was driving and his companion.

as the car rolled slowly away. It was just an ordinary car, you would have said. It bore no license numbers.

The two men walked briskly along the sidewalk, much like two other citizens of Chicago going to work. They were powerful men. The face of one had a faint scar which ran from his nose to a point behind his right ear, evidently a knife cut.

In a minute or so they reached a narrow alley which seemed deserted save for a light delivery truck which stood not far off, its motor panting. The eyes of the scar-faced man came alive with interest. "There she is," he whispered to his confederate.

"Darned if she ain't!"

He paused before stepping out into view. "Take it easy, now, and there won't be any jam."

The other nodded, surveying the street with a photographic stare. A Clark Street car, crowded with office workers, was at the corner of a boy on a bicycle. Up at the corner a postman was collecting mail from a letter box. Farther up, at the curb, stood the car which had dropped them a little while ago.

"Take the right side, now, and I'll go around on the other."

"O. K.," snapped his friend, who had a narrow, aquiline face.

With the grace of cats, they moved up the alley on opposite sides of the truck which bore the sign R. J. Clayton, Inc. Cleaners and Dyers.

It was all over in a minute. One of them seized the driver's wrists in an iron grasp, the other struck him a smart blow on the head with the butt of an automatic. As his body slumped down, they tossed him quickly over the side into the rear of the truck, which was loaded with the first morning delivery. The scar-faced man slid under the wheel. The gears slashed softly, and the car moved away.

"Let's," said the man from the gloom of the back end where he was busy trussing up limp wrists with a piece of cord. "You put him to sleep for fair."

"All set, Jake," agreed the new driver of the truck.

As he swept out from the alley and into Clark Street, he noted that the touring car which had been waiting as had been arranged, now gathered speed and was following them.

He drove not too fast, but as fast as he dared. There was a little traffic. The tires hummed a little, some one seized the driver's wrists in an iron grasp, the other struck him a smart blow on the head with the butt of an automatic.

"They comin' back?"

"No."

"I guess they ain't had their breakfast yet and don't want to do any chasin'."

"By gosh!" cried Jake, who also was watching out the little rear window. "Here they do come."

"Get out west!"

The needle of the speedometer hung for a moment at fifty, then continued to climb. The concrete road led out into the suburb and into the country. The police car was clanging its gong.

Sharper cries from the rear seat indicated that the car was gaining on them. The traffic was very light. They increased their speed.

"Bridge out up here, about three miles more," said the driver. "Got to take a side road."

"We're going along with you," said the man by his side.

Another turn ahead and the driver throttled down from seventy-five to under fifty. They bounced around as the car slid into the gravelled side road. There went that gong again!

"It wasn't the Federation," explained Jake. "It was the International crowd. They had the nerve to call up a few minutes ago and tell us all about it."

"No!"

"Said they were going to do some more, too."

"Oh, Luke, isn't that just too terrible!"

"I think it's all baloney. They've done enough to last them awhile. But doesn't it burn you down, anyway?"

"How do you know where to go?"

"Well," he said, narrowly missing a collision with another car as they sped across an intersection after the traffic lights had changed. "Pinky McFarland was inside the store. One struck a fender and ricocheted off with a high squeal. The others went wide. Another minute and they were out of sight."

"I don't like it, I tell you," said the driver. "Now we gotta duck for sure."

"Well, ain't we goin' to Detroit on Monday, anyway?"

"Don't forget we told Al we'd call up the Clayton plant. Better go over to that drugstore on Western," said Jake. "Let's get it over with."

"And don't, like that, either," protested the driver again.

"Aw, nuts! What's the matter with you—gon' to fall apart?" Scarface was plainly disgusted.

"What time is it?"

"Quarter to nine."

"All right, then," said the driver. "Only shake it up."

It was Scarface who squeezed his bulk into a telephone booth at the drugstore on Western Avenue. He faced the room in such a manner that he could see everything that was happening.

"Hello," he said softly, into the transmitter when he had the operator at the Clayton office. "Lemme talk to Mr. Clayton . . . Come on, com' stall me. I wanta talk to him. He ain't down yet? Well, take a message. I'm speaking for the International Association. We got one of your men and your trucks today and we're going to get more unless Clayton thinks it over . . . Yeah, that's it. Tell him to get in touch with us next week, sure . . . Yeah, and say, sweetheart, if you wanta trace this call, I'm at the Eight Star Pharmacy on Western Avenue—so I'll save you that trouble. Good-by."

He was still chuckling to himself when he joined his confederates.

CHAPTER XI

When Claire MacIntyre entered the general office of the Clayton plant that morning she was almost knocked over her feet by a very excited Luke Winters, who came stumbling down the steps, hat in hand.

"What's the big idea?" she protested. "Getting married this morning?"

He caught her arm. "They burned one of our trucks and Jim Davidson was in it! Got to go and see about it."

"Oh!" she cried weakly.

"They stole it behind a tailor shop upon Clark, drove it out north, soaked it with gas and touched her off."

He continued to move toward the door. She followed him out to the sidewalk.

"Fellow in a car happened to go by just after it started to burn and got Davidson out. He'll live, but he's in pretty bad shape." Luke jumped into his coupe which was standing at the curb.

"I'm going with you," announced Mac, following him into the car. "I'll have to make adjustments on the clothes, anyway."

They roared away.

"You'll have a sweet bunch of complaints," said Luke grimly. "It was the first delivery. Guess it was full up."

"Oh, you're sure that Davidson is all right?"

"Yes. The fellow took him to a hospital. Lucky break for him."

"And here Green promised me they wouldn't do anything."

"It wasn't the Federation," explained Luke. "It was the International crowd. They had the nerve to call up a few minutes ago and tell us all about it."

"No!"

very wary of it because the gasoline tank had not exploded; police kept the crowd from pressing in. There were two empty squad cars, their radios squawking. The odor of burnt rubber was heavy.

"The radios," explained Luke, "are for picking up squad calls that are broadcast."

Mac could see the glowing remnants of clothing scattered in the street. The unfairness of it all made her grip Luke's arm furiously.

"Come on," he said. "Let's get back to the office. Everybody's away playing golf today. R. J. went to Milwaukee last night. You and I are about the only ones around. Lots of work today, kid."

They drove back in glum silence. It was a hectic morning. There were a thousand details to be attended to. About ten thirty her telephone rang.

"Hello," said a male voice, "is this Miss MacIntyre?"

"Speaking," she snapped.

"Well, this is Mr. John J. Goodman. I'd like to see you about some cleaning."

"Johnny!" It was a joyous shout.

"No less."

"Why—I thought you were coming in at two."

"No!"

"Said they were going to do some more, too."

"Oh, Luke, isn't that just too terrible!"

"I think it's all baloney. They've done enough to last them awhile. But doesn't it burn you down, anyway?"

"How do you know where to go?"

"Well," he said, narrowly missing a collision with another car as they sped across an intersection after the traffic lights had changed. "Pinky McFarland was inside the store. One struck a fender and ricocheted off with a high squeal. The others went wide. Another minute and they were out of sight."

"I don't like it, I tell you," said the driver. "Now we gotta duck for sure."

"Well, ain't we goin' to Detroit on Monday, anyway?"

"Don't forget we told Al we'd call up the Clayton plant. Better go over to that drugstore on Western," said Jake. "Let's get it over with."

"And don't, like that, either," protested the driver again.

"Aw, nuts! What's the matter with you—gon' to fall apart?" Scarface was plainly disgusted.

"What time is it?"

"Quarter to nine."

"All right, then," said the driver. "Only shake it up."

It was Scarface who squeezed his bulk into a telephone booth at the drugstore on Western Avenue. He faced the room in such a manner that he could see everything that was happening.

"Hello," he said softly, into the transmitter when he had the operator at the Clayton office. "Lemme talk to Mr. Clayton . . . Come on, com' stall me. I wanta talk to him. He ain't down yet? Well, take a message. I'm speaking for the International Association. We got one of your men and your trucks today and we're going to get more unless Clayton thinks it over . . . Yeah, that's it. Tell him to get in touch with us next week, sure . . . Yeah, and say, sweetheart, if you wanta trace this call, I'm at the Eight Star Pharmacy on Western Avenue—so I'll save you that trouble. Good-by."

He was still chuckling to himself when he joined his confederates.

CHAPTER XI

When Claire MacIntyre entered the general office of the Clayton plant that morning she was almost knocked over her feet by a very excited Luke Winters, who came stumbling down the steps, hat in hand.

"What's the big idea?" she protested. "Getting married this morning?"

He caught her arm. "They burned one of our trucks and Jim Davidson

be a department. In this connection, however, there must of necessity be certain contracts or understandings, both with the Light and Power Company and with the Telephone Company, for the following items—right-of-way, either above ground or below ground; for wires and cables; there would also be right-of-way or expenditures covering poles and cross arms for both services. If the town has a bulk contract, it may be that they own certain transformers, and possibly street lights and wires. Would it not seem as if there should be a charge by way of licenses or otherwise, to these Companies, for this separate and apart from the ordinary assessment. I am presuming that any charge which may have been made, is not buried in the assessment item shown in the General Statement.

Schools and Buildings

Usually in a small town school receipts and expenditures form part of the Town Budget. Apparently in your section this is a separate item, under an entirely different Board.

I should think however, that having erected a Fire Station, there should be made regularly, provision for depreciation and the necessary wear and tear, altogether apart from sundry minor expenditures which might be made to keep the place in good condition.

Revenue and Expenditure

It would seem as if there are but three special taxes imposed—that for dog tax, business tax and amusement tax. Your visitor may find it necessary to exact special taxes, in order to relieve the ordinary taxpayer. In many small towns the Banks bear a special tax, with a minimum of say $100.00. Then there are licenses for taxi, hot-air, telephone, power and light, amusement fairs.

Inventories

It should be rigidly imposed on the Superintendent of a Department, or the Secretary of the Corporation, that there be kept a strict inventory record of all the property owned. This would include land, including its area, with the care and custody of the titles; buildings with the number, size and condition; of the roads and sewers, with their lengths, dimensions and condition; of the equipment used in and for the various departments—Fire, Road, Police, etc.

The actual detail of these latter items might be entrusted to the officer in charge, who would sign the same at least once each year and pass the same to the Secretary, to be incorporated in his records. This would do more than keep a record of the items, it would place the moral responsibility on the department head, for the custody of the material.

Looking into the future, I can quite understand that those interested in the welfare of your community would have in mind the possibility of securing a Community Library or Hospital; perhaps a Municipal Golf Course, as an extra attraction to bring visitors with means, to your village. Some of the younger men might be more interested in a Baseball Park. Undoubtedly you have already considered the subject of industrial sites, and where these sites should remain so as not to impair the value of desirable building locations. You may already have provided for grave pits and sand pits where cheap material could be obtained for the upkeep of your roads and foundations for your buildings, or for improvements.

This is not intended as a lecture or a discourse. I have merely set down a few things which in my opinion are absolutely necessary for the proper conduct and carrying on of the community work.

Huntingdon is ideally situated, not only in respect to its natural environment, but also in respect to its distance from the American border and the distance from the great city of Montreal—near enough to be reached without any trouble, and yet far enough away to retain for a long period its delightful country atmosphere.

"Big Business Girl"

"I am rather mildly interested in seeing you," he said, with elaborate irony. "Fix it up some time, can't you?"
"Please!" She frowned into the mouthpiece. She was much too busy to baby him now. "Why can't I see you this afternoon?"
"That's no good because I've got to tear out to the country with the boys and set up the instruments. This Villa Carlotta is away out on the Rand Road. About two hours with the Loop. We're due to rehearse at seven. I'll be back at four."

"Well, if I left the office at one, couldn't you come over to my house about one thirty? We could have some time then."

"All right, honey," quickly. "I'll be there. I'll feed the boys first and get them started, and then drop off to see you at one thirty."

"Fine. By."

"By."

As she ran up the steps of Uncle Jerry's house she had a feeling that Jerry would be there ahead of her, pacing up and down in the reception hall. Her body trembled delicately in anticipation. The great door resisted her for a moment, then swung slowly open.

"Darling."

"Johnny!" Her lips parted with sudden ecstasy.

Their eyes clung for one sweet instant. He rushed forward to meet her. They were in each other's arms then. There was the lovely moment when they kissed. . . . Long, long kisses.

Into that embrace was concentrated everything she had thought about him, and hoped about him, while he had been gone from her. She felt his heart, hurrying so.

"Johnny," she said wearily into his shoulder. "I'm so glad."

He kissed his words into her hair, her lovely shining hair. His eyes were hot; there was that glow in them she liked to see. Nothing mattered now. Everything was going to be all right—everything. They were together in a lovely, murmurous warmth. . . . His embrace tightened. It was a deep, quiet happiness.

A long while after that she stirred luxuriously in his arms and regarded him with heavy eyes. He was the same sweet old Johnny, still terribly desirable. His kisses lived in her blood. Love is enough, she thought suddenly. Love is enough!

She was tracing with his finger the red arch of her lips. "I was afraid you wouldn't be glad to see me, Sweet Stuff."

"So was I afraid of you."

"Really?"

"I haven't kissed a man since you went away," she murmured.

"And I haven't kissed a girl." She didn't know his eyes just then whether he had, or not. But his kiss came swiftly upon her lips, and she loved it. It was warm and nostalgic.

The fur of her silver fox fur about her neck tickled him. He burrowed deep into it.

"I surely do care for this suit," said Johnny, surveying her with pride. She was all in black and white, with little ruffles of white at her throat.

"How did you get so brown?" she exclaimed in wonder. His face was deeply sunburned.

"Guess I picked it up on the boat coming over."

She could hardly wait to find out what the Continent had done to him. "You look wonderful, Johnny."

"What do you think you look like?" He spoke with his lips on her cheek.

"Honey, you look marvelous!" Then he frowned. "But why does this old cleaning business have to come between us again—and on the very day I come home?"

Tom Skeyhill Considers Dr. Stefansson Greatest Figure in the Lecture World Today

At the Huntingdon Chautauqua held a year ago the great lecturer was Tom Skeyhill, whose address was on "Mussolini and the Black Shirts." This year the outstanding lecturer is Dr. Stefansson, the Arctic explorer. Tom Skeyhill has written the following about this great orator and explorer, who will speak before the Huntingdon audience on Thursday evening.

Stefansson is the greatest figure in the lecture world to-day. He combines as do few others a record of achievement in polar exploration which has made him world famous, with all the powers of a great public speaker.

He is distinctly a lecturer of the new type. I mean by this, that he pays no attention to the fireworks of formal oratory, but instead speaks in a quiet conversational tone, which wins his audience at once and holds them throughout. He always has something that you will remember for the rest of your life. He hates those moth-eaten platitudes and overworked facts which are the stock in trade of so many lecturers. He goes right to the core of his subject at once and what a subject it is—the Arctic. For his audience at least, it is a new Arctic; not a bleak, frozen waste, not a land of perpetual snow and ice, not a land "that God forgot," but a land with a habitable climate which must eventually be civilized and blessed with the life more abundant.

This Stefansson's great contribution to his times. He shows us a new and habitable world up there in the Arctic. He tells us that our old beliefs of "the frozen North" are antiquated and not warranted by the actual facts. He knows. He has spent more winters above the Arctic circle than any other Arctic explorer. He has explored and mapped over one hundred thousand square miles of hitherto unknown polar territory. With Peter he is recognized as one of the two greatest of all polar explorers. Yes, he knows.

So he tells us that our old text books and maps of the Arctic are wrong when they dismiss it as the frozen North. He assures us that the time is not far distant when it will be populated and productive.

More than any other man in the world, he is preparing us for that day, preparing and helping to make it come soon.

Like Magellan, like Columbus, like Captain Cook, he pushes back the frontiers of the unknown and the unexplored and reveals a new world to our astonished eyes.

He is the flaming prophet of this new world in the far North. With long legs and a never tired of telling us that "Northward the Course of Empire Takes Its Way."

With the population of the world increasing at such an alarming rate—it has almost tripled in the past 100 years; with Europe and parts of Asia already overpopulated and the other continents erecting immigration barriers; and, let us not overlook this, with the development of aeronautics and the inevitable girdling of the earth with fast airships, which for a multiplicity of reasons will often use the polar routes, it would be well for all of us to take the time off to read the books and hear the lectures of Vilhjalmur Stefansson, greatest of all living Arctic explorers, and heroic prophet of the new world above the Arctic Circle.

QUAINT RENTAL PAYMENT FOR ENGLISH FREEHOLDERS

The ancient ceremony of rendering quaint-rent services by the city of London took place before the king's remembrancer, Sir G. A. Bonner, at the Law Courts building recently. One of the services is in respect of a piece of land—the location of which cannot today be identified—called "The Moors," near Bridgnorth, Shropshire. The other is by "the tenants and occupiers of a tenement called "The Forge,"—on a piece of land once used by the Knights Templar for their tournaments and now covered by the Law Courts building. The ceremony dates back more than 700 years, when rents were paid in kind instead of in cash. The city solicitor rendered service in respect of "The Moors" by cutting two small bundles of faggots with a hatchet and a bill-hook. Thereafter, he counted out, one by one, six horse shoes and 61 nails in respect of "The Forge."

Result of Special Courses in French

The standing of the students at the end of the course for the training of specialists in French, put on by the Teachers' Training Committee, under the direction of R. E. Raguin, and held in Montreal from June 29 to July 18, have been announced. The awards are based first on teaching ability, as shown by lessons actually taught in each of the three practice classes; secondly, on general knowledge of French, as gauged in the conversation groups; and thirdly, on knowledge of method and phonetics, as revealed in a written examination held on the closing day.

Miss Irene N. Théoret of Valleyfield was awarded a first class certificate. Miss M. J. Watt of Chateaugay Basin and Mr. J. E. Cooper of Howick received second class certificates.

Eight-year-old Boy Killed by Motor Truck

Eight-year-old Rodolphe Loiselle, of Valleyfield, was crushed to death under the wheels of a heavy motor truck at three o'clock yesterday afternoon. The fatality occurred at the intersection of Bissonnette and Market streets, as the child was running across the street. Members of a jury under Dr. A. Besner, coroner of the district, rendered a verdict of accidental death.

The inquest revealed that the vehicle, the property of the City of Valleyfield, was driven by Ovide Guimet, an employee of the city. The boy was playing on the sidewalk when he suddenly dashed into the path of the heavy vehicle. Guimet, according to the testimony of witnesses, was driving very slowly and at a rate of not more than eight miles per hour. Witnesses testified that the driver of the automobile tried his utmost to avoid the accident. One of the wheels of the heavy vehicle, crushed the head of the victim and death was instantaneous.

Valleyfield Bowlers Safely Defend the O'Connor Cup

Thursday evening two rinks of bowlers played in Valleyfield for the O'Connor Cup. The Valleyfield bowlers safely guarded the trophy, trimming the visitors by a 49 to 25 score. The pioneers of the game in Valleyfield displayed many wrinkles to the Huntingdon boys of how to win points; that's the game to learn.
