A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.
HOW OUR GRANDPARENTS LIVED, WORKED AND DRESSED.

Fashions Did Not Change in Those Days so Often as They Do Now—When the Women Really Made Their Own Clothes.
Henry Clay's Jeans Breaches.

The costume of the pioneer belle was not elaborate, and when she left the parental cabin for a home of her own no Saratoga trunks were required for her wardrobe. She wore the larger portion of it. In later years we read that Henry Clay used to drive to Washington city in his family carriage with his wife and daughter, and take their wardrobe with them for a winter's stay at the national capital. Now the luggage of such a party would half fill a baggage car.

In this diversified industry, when one labor saving invention in another off the stage in endless and rapid succession, one can scarcely comprehend the patient, persevering effort required of the pioneer housewife in the discharge of the ordinary duties of the cabin. The lack of costly furniture, handsome carpets, fragile bric-a-brac and expensive hangings did not lessen her care.
She was both mistress and servant, matron and nurse, housekeeper and charwoman, dairymaid and cook. Neatness was not less demanded of her than of the modern housewife, and her split broom and scrub brush found ample service in keeping floor and furniture clean and white.

DIVIDED LABOR.
The labor was pretty well divided between the sexes. "The men," the early writers tell us, "hunted and brought in the meat; they plowed and gathered the corn, grinding it into meal at a hand mill or pounding it into hominy in the mortar, which was occasionally the work of either the joint labor of both." But with these offices the labor of the women was scarcely begun. Custom and necessity united to lay upon her the care of providing for every household need that the rude agriculture of the period did not supply, and in all the multitudinous duties which engaged her skill and energy she labored unaided by labor saving machinery. And so she milked the cows in all weather, while sturdy men and boys watched an operation to effeminate to enlist their services. She churned the butter, carried the tubs to a spring or half mile from the cabin, or caught rain water in troughs and barrels from the eaves for the "washing;" made her own soap; washed, picked, carded and dyed the wool; pulled, broke and hackled the flax; spun the thread and wove the cloth; contrived and made the garments; reared her children, nursed the sick, sympathized with the distressed, and encouraged the disheartened laborer at her side. In all this, and above it all, woman was the tutelary saint of the frontier.

The first cloth made in Kentucky was in 1776, by the wife of William Poague, who that year joined the settlement at Harrodsburg. She brought with her the first spinning wheel ever seen west of the mountains, and she spun thread from the lint of the nettle, which grew abundantly in the new country, and upon a rude loom contrived by her husband she worked it into cloth. This she called linen, but by adding a "filling" spun from buffalo wool she made a cloth she called linsey woolsey. Considerable of such cloth was made here before the introduction of sheep, and before the people began to cultivate flax and hemp.

These are no fancy sketches drawn from a romantic imagination, but true of pioneer life, and the world is not half a century older since much of that described above could be daily witnessed in Kentucky.

A DUEL OVER JEANS.
It befel once in the beginnings of Bohemia that, according to Schafarik ("Slawische Altertumer," II., p. 422), Libussa, queen of that land, found herself compelled by her council to wed. And the wise men, being consulted, declared that he who was to marry the queen would be found by her favorite husband who would lead the way till he found a man eating from an iron table, and kneel to him. So the horse went on, and into a field where a man sat eating a peasant's dinner from a plowshare. This was the farmer Prschemischl. So they covered him with the royal robes and led him to the queen expectant.
But ere going he took his shoes of willow wood and placed them in his bosom, and kept them to remind him ever after of his low origin.

It will, of course, at once strike the reader, as it has struck me, that this is a story that would naturally originate in any country where there are iron plowshares, horses, queens and wooden shoes; and, as Schafarik shrewdly suggests, that it was all "a put up job;" since, of course, Prschemischl was already a lover of the queen, the horse was trained to find him and to kneel before him, and, finally, that the plowshare and wooden shoes were the prepared properties of the little drama. The Seven-League boots and the shoes of Peter Schlemihl, which take one over the world at will, have a variation in a pair recorded in another tale.

There was a beautiful and extremely proud damsel, who refused a young man with every conceivable aggravation of the offence, informing him that when she ran after him, and not before, that he might hope to marry her; and at the same time meeting a poor old woman who begged her for a pair of old shoes. To which the proud princess replied:
"Give her a couple, I'll give thee a pair."
The old woman, who was a witch, grinly uttered, "I'll give thee a pair which—" The rest of the expression was really too unamiable to repeat. Well, the young man and the witch met, and going to the lady's shoemaker, "made him make" a superbly elegant pair of shoes, which were sent to the damsel as a gift. Such a gift! No sooner were they put on than off they started, carrying the princess, maigre elle, over hill and dale. By and by she saw that a man—the man, of course, whom she had refused—was in advance of her. As in the song of the "Cork Leg," "the shoes never stopped," but kept on the pace. And the young man led her to a lonely castle and reasoned with her. And as she had promised to marry him should she ever run after him, and as she had pursued him a whole day, she kept her word. The shoes she sent to the witch filled with gold, and they were wedded, and all went as merry as a thousand grigs in a duck pond.—St. James Gazette.

BURIAL OF THE BOOTS.
SOME SUPERSTITIONS ABOUT DEAD
MEN'S SHOES.

Where a Funeral Is Called a Dead Shoe.
Pretty Little Stories in Which Shoes Are Prominent Characters—How the Queen Moved the Farmer.

The superstition of the burial of the boots probably survives in England. It is about seventeen years since the writer heard from an old gypsy that when another gypsy was "paved," or "earthed," a very good pair of boots was placed by him in the grave. The reason was not given; perhaps it was not known. These customs often survive after the cause is forgotten, simply from some feeling that good or bad luck attends their observance or the neglect of it.

Many years since a writer in an article on shoes in the English Magazine stated that "according to an Aryan tradition, the greatest part of the way from the land of the living to that of death lay through morasses and vast moors overgrown with ferns and thorns.
That the dead might not pass over them barefoot, a pair of shoes was laid with them in the grave."

The shoe was of old in many countries a symbol of life, liberty, or entire personal control. In Ruth we are told that "it was the custom in Israel concerning changing, that a man plucked off his shoe and delivered it to his neighbor." So the bride, who was originally a slave, transferred herself by the symbol of the shoe.

When the Emperor Wladimir made proposals of marriage to the daughter of Ragnald, she replied scornfully that she would not take off her shoes to the son of a slave. Gregory of Tours, in speaking of weddings, says: "The bridegroom, having given a ring to the bride, presents her a shoe."

A CURIOUS CUSTOM.
As regards the Scandinavian hel-shoe, or hell-shoe, Kelley, in his "Indo-European Folk Lore," tells us that a funeral is still called a dead shoe in the Heneberg district; and the writer already cited adds that in a MS. of the Cotton library, containing an account of Cleveland in Yorkshire in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, there is a passage which describes this curious custom. It was quoted by Sir Walter Scott in the notes to "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," and runs thus: "When any dieth certain women sing a song to the dead body, reciting the journey that the party deceased must go; and they are of belief that one in their lives it is good to give a pair of new shoes to a poor man; forasmuch as before this life they are to pass barefoot through a great lande, full of thorns and furze—except by the merytye of the almes offered, and they have redeemed the forfeyte—for at the edge of the lande an oude man shall meet them with the same shoes that were given by the partie when he was lying, and after he hath shodde them dismisseth them to go through thick and thin without scratch or scalle."

This must be a very agreeable reflection to all gentlemen who have bestowed their old boots on gaiters, or ladies who have in like fashion gifted their maids. To be sure, the legend speaks of new shoes; but surely a pair of thirty shilling boots only half worn out is as much as a new pair of half a sovereign cansurers. However, if one is to go "through thick and thin without scratch or scalle," it may be just as well to be on the safe side, and give a good new extra stout pair to the gardener for Christmas. For truly the superstitions are strange things, and no one knows what may be in them!

CUPID IN SHOES.
It befel once in the beginnings of Bohemia
that, according to Schafarik ("Slawische Al-

Mayor Grenier and Mr. Robb City Comptroller, arrived in England yesterday on board the Parisian.

The band of the Victoria rifles will begin their usual summer performances in Dominion square tonight.

The third fire in the course of two weeks in the High school occurred shortly before one o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Anne McEvoy, aged 35, wife of Peter McLaughlan of No. 70, Eleanor Street, an inmate of the Longue Point Asylum, has been missing since the fire.
