THE ROYAL VISIT.

Duke and Duchess of York Arrive in Ireland.

Dublin, Aug. 18.—The Duke and Duchess of York arrived here today on their long expected visit to Ireland. They are the guests of of Earl Cadogan, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and Countess Cadogan, and are being entertained at the vice-regal lodge. The whole city is in a state of feverish excitement, although the officials of the municipality are inclined to hold aloof. The royal pair left Holyhead early this morning on the royal yacht Victoria and Albert, escorted by two warships, and arrived at Kingstown about 11 o'clock.

The railway station was elaborately decorated with flowers, and a special train brought the Duke and Duchess to this city, where they were received on arrival by Lord Frederick Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford, commander of the forces in Ireland, and his staff, the Yorkshire Light Infantry furnishiag the guard of honor. All the troops in Dublin lined the route of the procession from the railway station to Dublin Castle, where the guard of honor was the Connaught Rangers.

On the 25th their Royal Highnesses will leave for a trip to the south of Ireland, visiting the Curragh camp, Kenmare House and the lakes of Killarney.

TELEGRAPH TO KLONDIKE.

Canada's Proposition to the United States.

Washington, Au. 19.—A proposition looking to the establishment of telegraphic communication with the Klondike gold fields has been received through the the British Embassy by this Government from the Canadian authorities. The route suggested by them as the most practicable is that beginning at the head of winter navigation at Lynn Canal, that being the name of the narrow body of water stretching from Juneau to Chilcot Crossing, the mountain range at White's Pass, and thence to Klondike via Fort Selkirk. The Canadians are willing to construct the line from the canal across the range and along the trail through Fort Selkirk to the boundary line, and to maintain a system of dog trains during the winter months for carrying the mails, with stations forty or fifty miles apart. The papers have been referred by Secretary Sherman to the Interior Department, where they are under consideration.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

They are at a Stand Still.

Constantinople, August 18.—The peace negotiations between the ambassadors of the powers and Tewfik Pasha, the Turkish foreign minister, are at a complete standstill. This is due to the refusal of Lord Salisbury to allow a Turkish occupation of Thessaly, pending a partial payment of the indemnity agreed upon. Lord Salisbury's objection is based upon a fear that an occupation thus begun might become permanent.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS.

A Child is a Victim of their Medical Treatment.

Woodsville, Vt., Aug. 18.—Gladys Stickneys, 8 years old, was taken ill with membranous croup several days ago, and her parents, who believe in Christian science, would not summon a physician. They sent to Boston for a Christian scientist, who came on Saturday. The parents watched the child as she lay dying. A few minutes before [illegible] doctor was sent for. Mr. Stickney is a prosperous shopkeeper.

PICNIC AT MARTINVILLE.

Martinville, Aug. 18.—The Sunday School picnic held here yesterday was very successful, in spite of the somewhat unfavorable weather. The attendance was large and all enjoyed a pleasant time. Between occasional showers cake, icecream and lemonade were served by the ladies.

The foot races came off successfully, but the rain spoiled the bicycle contest.

ORLEANS CONGRATULATED.

FRUIT GROWERS AT STANSTEAD.

Last Winter was Disastrous to Fruit.

Stanstead Plain, Que., Aug. 18—The fourth summer meeting of the Pomological and Fruit Growing Society of the Province of Quebec was opened at the Town Hall yesterday. Mr. R. Brodie, Montreal, the President, occupied the chair, and there were also present Mr. W. W. Dunlop, Mayor of Outremont, the Secretary, and the following orators:—J. C. Chapais, St. Denis; E. A. Barnard, Quebec; J. M. Fisk, Abbottsford; Dr. Wood, St. Johns; J. H. Carter, Massawippi; A. Dupuis, St. Roch des Aulnais.

Among the other gentlemen in attendance were Prof. Craig, of the Dominion Experimental Farm, Ottawa; Prof. Waugh, of the Vermont Experimental Station, Vermont; C. P. Newman, Lachine Locks; W. Mead Patterson, Clarenceville; W. Craig, jr., Abbotsford; Gilbert Wintle and R. W. Sheppard, Como, and Hon. Michael Hackett, the local member.

The president, in his opening remarks, gave a short sketch of the history and objects of the society. Meetings had been held at Abbotford, Knowlton, Quebec, Como, Oka, St. John d'Iberville, L'Islet and Howick. They were glad to visit the beautiful village of Stanstead. Mr. Chapais gave an interesting account of the disasterous effects of last winter on the orchards of eastern Quebec. Four fifths of the fruit trees had been killed. The Duchess, one of our hardiest apples was almost a total loss, while some other, like the Golden Russets, and the Mckintosh Red, which were considered more tender, survived. Plums had disappeared almost entirely, except in a few sheltered spots. The only cherries that were saved, and not in very large quantities, was the old French cherry growing on its own roots. Grafted it was killed everywhere. Small fruits suffered very severely, gooseberries coming out the best. Strawberries were all frozen except where, as in his own orchard, they were protected by two feet of straw. The reason for the disaster was the extraordinary weather of last winter.

A PEARL DISCOVERY.

The Excitement over the Klondike is Eclipsed.

Memphis, Tenn., Aug 18—The excitement over the Klondik gold discoveries, which for a time raged here, as in all other parts of the country, has been altogether eclipsed hereabout by the remarkable finds of pearls in apparently inexhaustible numbers in lakes and bayous of western Arkansas.

A few weeks ago a young man named Furlough came down from St. Louis to fish in the Murphy Lake. He had handled pearls in his time and was at once struck by the appearance of these stones. He sent one of them to an expert at St. Louis and waited the verdict.

The positive assurance came back that the stone was a genuine pearl and of excellent quality.

NEWS FROM ANDREE.

Carrier Pigeon Story Confirmed.

Christiana, Aug. 18.—Information received here confirms the story published in despatch from Hammerfest, Norway, saying that one of the searchers for Herr Andree met the sealing vessel Alken, about July 28, and was informed by her captain that one of the crew had shot a carrier pigeon, between North Cape and Seven Islands, on tha north coast of Lapland, bearing a message from the explorer, addressed to the Aftonladt, of Stockolm, as follows: "Eighty-two degrees passed. Good journey northward. Andree."

THE WEATHER PROPHETS.

It has been a pretty safe game for some time now to "dopper" the weather man's predictions.—Indianapolis News.

It appears to be a theory and not a condition that confronts the weather department most of the time.—Chicago Tribune.

In his tendency to lose his head and get excited the weather observer at Chicago seems to partake of the atmosphere around him. He should be provided with a moral barometer that would enable him to steady himself.—Indianapolis Journal.

It is reported from Washington that the weather department expects to forecast for longer periods by the use of kites. This ought to be a decided public gain. With fewer forecasts it is obvious the people cannot be so frequently deceived.—Chicago Tribune.

The weather department at Washington is going to use kites to enable it to predict 16 hours earlier than usual. If the department would use hypnotism to make the weather tally with the predictions, the public would not care for a useless improvement such as 16 hours earlier knowledge.—Chicago News.

POLITICAL QUIPS.

Politicians before election are the original resorters to the faith cure.—Boston Herald.

Some office seekers who think they see consulships coming their way will find that the approaching objects are airships.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

A statesman is a man who indorses us for a job and succeeds in getting us appointed. A politician is a man who is supporting some other fellow for the same job.—Washington Post.

There are still upward of 100,000 applications for office on file at Washington. Thus it appears that even those who went early didn't entirely avoid the rush.—New York Mail and Express.

They are cropping out so fast in southwest Georgia that the drummers, in order to hold their customers, wear white badges displaying the legend, "I am not a candidate for governor."—Atlanta Constitution.

DRESS PARADE.

There has been a wonderful demand for linen of every tint and quality this season.

Batiste laces wrought on a delicate net ground are much used to trim ecru lawns, linen batistes and similar transparent fabrics.

Among the myriad of comfortable things for the summer girl is the improved summer corset of silk net, with soft, elastic gores, simply edged with feather stitching in silk floss.

Short boleros and etons made of cut work and embroidery, lined with thin tinted silk of some becoming color, are considered very smart with any sort of light summer gown.

Many of the newest plain India muslin or flowered organdie muslin dresses have tucked bodices and flounced skirts, with the very fashionable ribbon sash, with long loops and ends at the waist.

Costumes of pure white, from parasol to shoe, are one of the prevailing fashions in summer dress, and they are worn morning, noon and night in all the varying grades of elegance or simplicity.

A handsome imported jacket is made of box cloth, showing a white sailor collar and revers. The model is open fronted and extremely short. The jacket is a pale shade of cream, and is called the Redfern beach jacket.

New and beautiful satin foulards of delicate quality and gay coloring are made into stylish costumes, with pointed bodice and Marie Antoinette fichu of the foulard, with scarf ends that either fall on the skirt front or tie at the back.

Valenciennes lace is used in a very lavish manner upon nearly every article of summer dress. Airy gowns, capes, fancy waists and jackets, skirts, collarettes and lingerie are elaborately decorated with both wide and narrow patterns of this lace.

Belted waists predominate on all dressy gowns for slender, youthful wearers, the greater number having narrow belts of insertion or ribbon, though in some cases ribbon is carried round the waist three or four times, the upper row reaching the bust.—New York Post.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

The santir, a kind of dulcimer, has been used for ages in the Caucasus.

Nearly all islanders are provided with trumpets made of conch shells, the tips being taken off, thus forming a very effective horn.

The yang-kin, or foreign harpsichord, of the Chinese, is a sort of lute with 14 wire strings. It is played with two bamboo slips.

The sona, a Chinese clarinet, is the favorite instrument among the common people, especially at marriage or funeral entertainments. Its scale is from F to G above.

The Arabs have three different kinds of guitars, the one most commonly used resembling in shape the upper half of the rod and disk used by surveyors. It has two strings and is played with a bow.

The negroes of Guatemala have a favorite instrument which they call the marimba. It is a close imitation of the miramba used by the natives of the southeast coast of Africa. There are 28 keys, and the instrument is played with rubber tipped hammers.

In the time of Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 600, and after, the Assyrians had a number of different musical instruments, the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery and dulcimer being specified, and "all kinds of music" mentioned by Daniel in this connection being supposed by some commentators to refer to drums, cymbals, castanets and horns.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

OUR GIRLS.

The man who waits for permission to kiss a woman can usually keep on waiting.—Boston Home Journal.

Whenever there is a big crowd or unusual excitement of any kind you can bet some woman will faint.—Atchison Globe.

A woman is a bundle of intuitions held together with 14 yards of mousseline de sole, 8 feet of baby ribbon and 9 papers of pins.—New York Press.

In the daytime the doorknob of a girl's bedroom is used to open the door with; at night it is used as a nail to hang things on by the armholes.—Exchange.

THE SAME MAN.

James S. Palmer, Recently of Sherbrooke, and Jas. S. Parsons the Defaulter.

A despatch from Hartford, Conn., says: "James S. Parsons, the fugitive president of the Continental Life Insurance Company has returned after ten years, a penniless man, to pay his debt to nature. It is said that he has an incurable disease of the stomach and can live but a short time. He had been living in Canada since the wrecking of the company, but for a year or so intimate friends have known that he was in Massachusetts, latterly in a Boston hospital. He is only 60 years old, but his long exile and disease has wrought sad havoc with his physique. He was hunted out of the United States by the officers of the law, and returns in the hope that he may breathe his last in his own home. It was believed that Parsons' defalcations amounted to between $100,000 and $150,000, though what he had done with the money was a mystery."

We have reason to believe that the James S. Parsons mentioned in the above despatch is in person identical with the James S. Palmer who is well known to Sherbrooke citizens. It will be remembered that Palmer resided here about eight years leaving about a year and a half ago.

He boarded at the Sherbrooke House and was interested first in the tooth pick business which he carried on Water street and later he was in the maple sugar refining business at No. 7 King street.

BOUCHER-JACQUES.

Mr. J. R. Boucher, son of Mr. E. Boucher of Sherbrooke and Miss A. Jacques, daughter of Mr. C. Jacques, Merchant of Garthby, were united in marriage yesterday morning. The ceremony took place in the R. C. church at Garthby, Rev. Mr. Carrier officiating. At the close of the ceremony the party assembled at the house of the bride's father where the wedding breakfast was partaken of. Mr. and Mrs. Boucher left on the 9.30 train for Quebec and other points.

THE HORSE DIDN'T RUN.

Mr. Walter Armitage, while driving home last night, had a narrow escape from a serious accident. He was driving a young and spirited colt, and had, for a vehicle a light road cart. When within a half mile of home, he attempted to rein his horse in while going down a hill and the bit broke. Mr. Armitage expected the horse to run or kick, and spoke to him to prevent it if possible. The horse understood and remained quiet until Mr. Armitage could could grasp its head.

The cheese market was firm today, and there was, if anything, more steam on, for in several instances, a fraction more was made. ## MARI MAGNO.

Wild is the sea and dark when night befalleth,
In unknown tongues breaker to breaker calleth,
With murmurs as of menace and foreboding
Groan the black waves beneath the grim wind's goading.

Yet passing lights may shine with friendly seeming,
And from the pharo's tower long rays are streaming,
And songs of [illegible] Mike to hail
The rising anchor of the speeding sail.

There is another sea which no man knoweth,
Whereon with [illegible] no [illegible] goeth,
Unfathomed, undiscovered and uncharted,
Whence never ship returns of all that started.

Yet where the distance darkens ever dimmer,
Dost thou not far discern a golden glimmer?
And down the fitful night wind, faintly ringing,
Hearest thou not a strange, triumphant singing?

THE CHANGE

ATTRACTS The Multitude.

The hundreds of pedestrians who traverse the brightest side of Wellington street on Saturday nights, seem to have swelled to greater numbers last Saturday night. Of course we don't for a moment fool ourselves to think it was to see the admirable change in the exterior of our store, but we could not help noticing the halt and the surprise, the signs of approval manifested by the crowds as they were passing. "It is a decided improvement," was the general muttering.

PATENT INSECT DESTROYER

Sure Death to all Insects.

Kills bed bugs, cockroaches, flies, mosquitos, ants, carpet moths, cabbage worms, sheep ticks, crickets, fleas on dogs and lice on horses, cattle, house plants, poultry, birds, etc.

Make all the dust you can, it is breathing the dust that kills the insects. It can be used freely without any danger, being non-poisonous to persons and animals. All flies in a room may be killed in thirty minutes, by closing the doors and windows, then, with one of Insect Powder Guns, blow the powder as near the ceiling as possible. A good plan is to use the powder at night and sweep the flies up in the morning before opening doors or windows. It is cheap, clean and easy to use, and a sure death to all insects.

STANSTEAD FAIR.

THE EXHIBITS AND FIRST DAY'S RACES.

Meeting Provincial Fruit Growers Association.

[Special to the Record.]

STANSTEAD, Aug. 18.—The first day of the Stanstead fair passed off successfully. Tuesday was very wet, and prospects for today were not bright the previous evening. Fortunately it cleared off during the night and this morning was bright and clear.

Exhibits from all sections, and both sides of the line, were arriving all day yesterday and up to ten o'clock this morning.

The usual fine display of horses were to be seen, those coming from the Highland Stock Farm, Derby, Vt., being the largest exhibit by any one person. The other leading exhibitors of horses were H. K. Cleveland, Danville, R. A. Smith, Johnville, E. C. Squire, Eaton, M. N. Corey, Kingscroft, and T. C. Fletcher, Barnston.

Mr. James F. Wilson, of East Angus, is here with his ponies.

The exhibit of cattle is much larger than usual, the leading exhibitors being R. Robertson, Compton, J. Turner Routledge, Georgeville, Guy Carr, Compton, Geo. and E. B. Davidson, Fairfax, E. P. Ball, Geo. P. Butters and W. H. Butters, Stanstead, C. C. Coleman, Massawippi, E. B. Pope, Hatley, Hon. F. C. Sayler, Pawtuckett, R. I., D. M. Wilson, Compton and many others.

In poultry the principal exhibitors are F. J. Luce, Milby, E. H. Norris & Son, Newport, and Wm. Patterson, North Coaticook.

The Judges this year were as follows:—Standard Bred Horses, C. A. Chapman, Frelighsburg.

Roadsters. Heavy Draught, saddle, etc., S. E. Winslow, Barton, Vt.; and P. Gooley, Coaticook.

Cattle, Sheriff McIntosh, Sherbrooke; and Geo. Buchanan, Montreal.

Sheep, S. Davis, Derby, Vt.

Swine, S. W. Sargent, Way's Mills.

Poultry, F. B. Wilson, Sherbrooke.

There was a balloon ascension, but owing to some accident, there was not sufficient inflation and it only went up about 150 feet.

The races were closely contested, and notwithstanding the heavy rains of the day before the track was perfectly dry.

The Fruit Growers' Association of the Province of Quebec, held their semi-annual meeting in this village yesterday and to-day. There were 20 delegates present, from all parts of the Province, and successful meetings held. The papers were timely and ably discussed. The delegates spoke of the much better appearance of fruit in this vicinity, to that at their own homes. One gentleman from Howick said that he had an orchard of 500 trees, and would not get 8 barrels of apples off from them, not sufficient for his private use.

GOLD BARS.

SWINDLERS IN CALGARY.

A copy of the Calgary "Daily Herald" received in this city yesterday, contains an account of a clever swidle played upon a banker and a well known citizen of Calgary, by a prospector, Sam Fowler, better known as "Trail Sam," and a Siwash Indian named Pechecko, by which the two gentlemen were buncoed out of nearly $11,200.

Two bars of gold 22½ inches long, 3 inches thick, and weighing 145 lbs, were sold at an assayer's valuation of $19 an ounce, the samples having been taken from the bars by one of the interested buyers. The Indian agreed to take $11,200 for his share.

After the deal was effected and the rascals safely out of the reach of their victims, one of the bars was sent east to the head office of the Molson's bank, where it was accidently discovered to be spurious, the outside only being gold, the inside being copper—worth 11 cents a pound.

Detectives are now on the track of the criminals and, if caught, the trial will be a notable one in the annals of Canadian justice.

The wood-work front of the Kerr block on King street is being repainted.

MUTINY.

INDIAN FRONTIER ALL A BLAZE

Simla, August 18, 4 p. m.—The whole frontier seems to be in flames. This is the startling announcement made here this afternoon. The Afridis are marching through the Khyber Pass under Jamrud, while the Orakzais are advancing by Kurran and are threatening Sala. The 36th regiment of Sikha, which is divided into detachments along the frontier, has been ordered to concentrate at Fort Lockhart. All the ladies except Mrs. Desvoeux, the wife of Major Desvoeux, of the 36th Sikha, have left Samana and have reached Hangu in safety. The Gurrah and Samil Mazazai have combined and threaten Parachenar, in the Kurram valley, which is garrisoned by detachments of Goorhas and Sikha.

The defection of the Afridis is regarded as being especially serious, as they have been loyal during many Indian outbreaks and guarded the Khyber Pass for the British during the Afghan war. They are one of the most powerful tribes on the frontier. About one hundred insurgent tribesmen were killed in the attack made by General Blood, the British commander, yesterday, upon the entrenched positions in the hills of the Swat valley. General Blood brought his field guns into action against the stone entrenchments of the enemy, demolished these works and the insurgent tribesmen fled. About 3,000 of the latter were engaged.

It is believed 10,000 Afridis are threatening Jamrud, but this place is considered proof against attack by any force without artillery. Before venturing to attack Jamrud, the Afridis, it is expected, will try their strength on the smaller forts in Khyber Pass. Additional reinforcements of infantry, cavalry and artillery have been ordered to proceed from Simla to Pishawar today, while troops are being moved forward to replace those sent to the front. The work of mobilization is proceeding smoothly.

A LUCKY FIND.

Tale of a Valuable Watch That Was Lost on an Elevated Railroad.

"This watch in itself is a valuable one," said a New York business man as he took the timepiece from the peculiar looking fob in which he carries it, "but it had an adventure last week that gives it a still greater value to me. The fob is an heirloom, and, as you may see, would be apt to attract attention anywhere.

"One afternoon last week I was going up town on a crowded train on the Sixth avenue elevated. The train was so crowded that I was compelled to stand on a car platform close to the brake wheel. As the train was rounding the curve out of West Third street I took my watch from my pocket, removed it from the fob, and, after noting the time, shoved it back into the fob and returned it, as I thought, to the pocket. Instead of getting it into the pocket, however, it was on the outside, and as I let it go it fell. The guard saw it as it fell and reached out his foot to save it from going between the platforms, but failed, and down it went.

"I got off the train at Eighth street and ran back as fast as I could to the spot where the watch had dropped, having, I may of course say, not the slightest hope that the watch would be anywhere to be seen. When I reached the place, my heart almost jumped out of my throat, for there in the street, conspicuous among its surroundings, lay the fob. I picked it up. It was empty. No watch could I find anywhere.

"'Some one has found it,' was naturally my conclusion, and that was the last I ever expected to hear or see of it.

"But as I walked back toward the Eighth street station I got to thinking about the matter differently. If any one had found the watch, why should he have left the fob? The more I thought of it the more I made up my mind that the watch hadn't been found. I boarded a train at Eighth street and went up town to the railroad headquarters. There I told of the singular thing that had happened to my watch, and the officer in charge told me that after the commission hours were over for the day the track walkers would start from Fifty-ninth street down the line, making their regular inspection of the rails and roadway, and he would instruct them to keep an eye out for the lost watch.

"'But,' said he, smiling, 'I guess you will have to come to the conclusion, after all, that some one else will tell the time by it hereafter if it hasn't been smashed to pieces by the fall.'

"Next day I went to the office. My watch was there. A track walker had discovered it by the light of his torch at midnight lying snugly on one of the girders or braces of the iron roadway beneath the track. The ring was sprung out of its fastening in the stem, and the watch was open. There was a dent on the case at the hinge. In falling the watch had struck in some mysterious way so that it had been forced from the fob, which went on down to the street. Beyond the trifling damage I mentioned the watch was not injured in the slightest. If there ever was a luckier find than that, I never heard of it."—New York Sun.

The last execution for witchcraft in England was in 1716, when a woman and her daughter, aged 9 years, were hanged at Huntingdon for selling their souls to satan. The capital sentence against witchcraft was abolished in 1736. In 1789 a woman was first strangled and then burned for coining, but the law was altered in the following year.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

Bomb Explodes as President Faure leaves for Russia.

Paris, August 18.—The depature of President Faure on his visit to the Czar at St. Petersburg today was marked by a scene of the greatest excitement, accompanied by the circulation of the wildest kind of rumors. After his departure a bomb exploded along the route the President had followed, and though no damage was done, and in spite of the fact that nobody was hurt, the most intense excitement prevailed for a long time afterwards, and it is believed that those who exploded the bomb intended na outrage of a more serious nature. The President received an ovation from the public when he started on his journey to Russia, large crowds of people lining the route from the Elysee Palace to the railroad station, and greeting the President with enthusiastic cries of "Viv la Republique, Vive la Russe, Vive Faure."

Ten minutes after the President's departure, while the crowds were returning along the route, a bomb exploded at the corner of the boulevard Magenta and the Rue Lafayette in front of the restaurant Duval. The report caused a panic in the neighborhood, and all sorts of wild stories were circulated, based on the statements attributed to anarchists that their next effort would be an attempt on the life of President Faure.

A LITTLE COMEDY.

Roger Tinsley, Helen, his daughter; Herbert Torrance and Mary, who is only suggested.

The gray haired man at the desk looks up from the mass of papers before him and turns toward the door. His quick ear has detected the swish of skirts in the passageway. There is but one visitor who is permitted to thus invade his private room unannounced. The door swings in and a young woman enters.

"Ah, Helen," says the gray haired man. "This is an early visit!"

The young woman runs her hand caressingly across his scattered locks and, stooping, kisses him lightly on the forehead.

"Just as glad to see me, aren't you, papa?" she cries.

She is a very beautiful young woman and most bewitchingly gowned and booted and hatted, but there is an expression of discontent on her well bred face that is not pleasant to see.

"And what is the price of this queenly favor?" inquires the gray haired man as he leans back in his chair and looks quizzically at his visitor.

She grows grave in a moment and regards him with a troubled gaze.

"There, there," he says. "Don't worry yourself over it. Speak up. What shall it be? A bracelet, a coupe, a necklace?"

"Papa," she says, "you think I'm a dreadfully selfish little beast, don't you? I am; I know I am. I've just been a nuisance and a bother to you ever since—ever since mamma died. Don't contradict me. Everybody knows it. I'm just a selfish, money spending, proud, little—little pig."

The gray haired man takes the daintily gloved hand that rests upon his desk.

"Why, Helen," he says, "what's this? What's gone wrong? Have I ever denied you anything?"

"No, no, papa," she half sobs. "You've been much too good. You've spoiled me."

"Dear me, child," he slowly murmurs, "how much you are like your dear mother!" He turns his head a little away and puts his hand over his eyes.

"There, there, papa," cries the young woman, and her soft cheek rests against the gray hair. "I didn't mean to distress you. There, there! I am going to make you pay for this visit—oh, such a price! But not now. No, not just now. Cousin Mary is waiting for me in the carriage, and—and after awhile I will come back and tell you what it is. You are good natured now, aren't you, dear? Say that you are good natured."

He smiles and nods like a nodding mandarin, and she kisses him again and darts to the door.

"There!" she breathlessly cries as she pauses on the threshold. "Just hold that expression, sir, if you please. I'll be back in such a little while, dear daddy." And the door closes and she whisks through.

The gray haired man sighs.

"She grows more like her dead mother every day," he says. "But, heavens, how thoroughly she is spoiled—23 years old, a finished coquette, a creature of the wildest and most extravagant whims. And yet she has a heart and a warm place in it, too, for her doting old father. I wonder what came over her this morning. I never saw her quite so hysterical. If she would marry—but, no, she appears to despise every man she meets. She flirts with them and throws them aside like cast off gloves. What a load it would be off my mind if she would find some honest, ambitious young fellow who suited her wayrd fancy! But, no. She turns from them all, and hanged if I blame her. They are a precious poor lot."

He pauses as the door swings open and a boy enters with a card.

"In five minutes send the gentleman in," the gray haired father says, and the boy withdraws.

"Herbert Torrance," reads the gray haired man. "A fine young fellow, straightforward, honest, true. I half wish he was in society. No, I don't; it would spoil him. Wonder what he wants with me."

He busies himself with his papers for a moment or two, and then the door swings open and a well knit young fellow with keen gray eyes enters.

"Ah, Torrance," says the gray haired man, "have a chair. What can I do for you?"

"Thank you, Mr. Tinsley," says the young man, and he draws a chair close to the desk. He seats himself with an embarrassed air.

"Nothing wrong with the brokerage business, I hope?" says the old man kindly.

"No, sir. The business exceeds my expectations," replies the young man. "And yet I could wish it were 50 times its present proportions."

"That's a rather ambitious wish, my boy," says the older man. "Why this display of grasping greed?"

"Because, sir, it might win me a more favorable consideration at your hands."

"And why are you so anxious to win my favorable consideration?"

The young man hesitates.

"You are the man, sir," he slowly answers, "whose good will I value above all others. If I had wealth and position, I might approach you in a far different spirit; but, as I have neither, I"—

"Tut, tut, my boy," says the older man. "Never mind what you haven't got. What do you want? By Jove, you are the second person who has hinted at some mysterious favor within the past half hour." And he smiles at the recollection.

"What I want," says the young man hurriedly, "is an inestimable treasure It is yours to give or to refuse. I feel my own unworthiness, sir, yet I boldly ask this gift at your hands. I—I hope you understand me, sir?"

"I think I do," says the older man kindly. "But really I didn't know that you had ever met."

"It—it wasn't right, sir," says the young man hurriedly. "I met her first at the seaside quite by accident—there was a little accident, in fact, but she said she wouldn't distress you about it. And our acquaintance rapidly ripened. When she came back to town, I met her at various places, sometimes quite by accident and later on by—by appointment. It wasn't right, sir, but I—I was very deeply in love."

"The little minx!" cries the older man. "Why, she never breathed a word of this."

"So she told me, sir, and that—and that makes my present task all the harder."

"Well, never mind that. You are not her dearest friend—and yet I suppose you think you are. Come, are you sure she loves you?"

"I have her word for it, sir. She sent me to you."

"Well, well, and so quiet and demure."

"Wh-what did you say, sir?"

"I say, why didn't Helen tell me?"

"Because she wanted to keep it a secret."

"And she was in it too?"

"Sir?"

"Well, well, she is a good girl and you must make her happy."

The two men shake hands solemnly, the younger man's face beaming with delight. Then Mr. Tinsley rises and goes to the safe that stands in a corner. From it he takes a large envelope.

"She'll not come to you exactly empty handed, Torrance," he says as he looks the contents of the envelope over. "I've put aside from time to time certain securities for her, and I see that they now amount to something like $20,000. Of course when I leave there'll be more."

He puts the envelope in the safe and comes back to his desk.

"She is a very good girl," he continues, "a sweet tempered, dutiful girl. Really, I couldn't think more of her if she were my own child."

"Not your own child?" gasps the young man.

"Certainly not. She is my brother Edward's daughter. When her parents died ten years ago, I took charge of her. I've brought her up like a daughter, but she is my niece. You look surprised."

"I am," replied the young man. "I—I thought she was your daughter."

"She didn't tell you so, did she?"

"Why, I—I think she led me to believe that such was the case."

"Astonishing! And you've been courting her all this time in the belief that she was my daughter. Perhaps—but, no, I won't say it. I believe you are an honorable man. You surely wouldn't wreck her happiness for the sake of the paltry dollars. No, no. I'll—I'll add to that $20,000."

"Sir," say the young man, his face all aflame, "I would marry your—your niece if she didn't have a dollar."

"Spoken like a man," cries the old gentleman. "I'll—I'll double that $20,000!"

The young man stirs uneasily in his chair.

"Wait," says the older man. "I can't understand about this little piece of deception. It isn't a bit like Mary."

"You mean Helen," says the younger man.

"No, Mary."

"Helen."

"Mary."

The young man pushes back his chair a little. He looks dazed.

"She—she never told me her name was Mary," he gasps.

"Who never told you?"

"Helen."

The older man leans back in his chair and shakes his forefinger at Herbert Torrance.

"Will you kindly tell me what Helen has to do with this muddle?" he asks.

"You mean Mary."

"No, Helen."

The young man rises and takes his hat.

"Mr. Tinsley," he says, "I came here to ask the hand of your daughter, and you tell me she is your niece. You even insist that her name is something else. I—I don't know what to think, sir. I fear I've"—his voice trembles, and he stops.

"Hark," murmurs the older man.

A voice comes to them from the passage way—a sweet and limpid voice.

"Oh, is he engaged? Then I'll wait."

"That's—that's her voice," cries Herbert.

"Not—not Mary's voice," gasps the older man.

"No, no; Helen's voice."

The gray haired head drops back against the cushion.

"Helen!" he cries. "Good Lord!"

He stares at the young man as if fascinated

"And Helen loves you?" he gasps.

"She says so," replies Herbert.

"But she threw over an earl!"

"But she didn't love him," says Herbert.

"And I thought all the time it was Mary," murmurs the old man.

"I don't know any Mary," says Herbert

Mr. Tinsley rises and walks toward the door. As he passes Herbert he taps him lightly on the shoulder. A smile breaks across his face.

"Not a word about that $20,000," he whispers.

"Come in, dear," he calls at the doorway.

And Helen enters with much rustling of skirts and a charming blush. She nods shyly to Herbert and puts her arm about her father's neck.

"You know now the price you have to pay?" she murmurs.

"Yes, my dear."

"And I—I can have what I want?"

"Yes, my dear."

She kisses him gently and he stretches out his disengaged hand to the young man.

"You and Herbert must be very good friends," laughs Helen. "He has some excellent qualities. He saved my life last summer."

"You didn't tell me that," says the older man as he looks reproachfully at Herbert.

"I had something much more important on my mind," murmurs the latter.

"There, there," cries Helen, "that wasn't a bit pretty." Then she adds: "Now you must all come to the window. Somebody is out there who knows about Herbert and who is just dying to hear the news."

They follow her to the window. In a carriage drawn up at the curb a gentle faced girl is sitting. To her Helen smiles and pantomimes, and points to Herbert and to her father with many pretty nods. And the gentle faced girl smiles and nods back again.

The older man nudges the younger.

"That's Mary," he whispers.—W. R. Rose in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Stag Hunting at Night.

Wonderfully elaborate open air fetes, often the scene of some mummery or coup de theatre celebrating scenes in connection with venery, were frequent occurrences. Thus Louis XIV more than once held stag hunts at night, and for that purpose the great forest of Chantilly was illuminated with torches, and the hunted stag was forced to pass through avenues lined by several thousand men holding brightly flaring flambeaux in their hands. Several of the princesses of his court were daring riders, and from the letters of one of these royal ladies, a duchess of Orleans, we learn that in four years she was present at the death of over a thousand stags. Her descriptions of the sport are most enthusiastic. "I have had 26 falls, but have hurt myself only once," she says in one of her letters.—"Sports In the Seventeenth Century," by W. A. Baillie-Grohman, in Century.

STREET OF SPIDERS.

CURIOUS DISCOVERIES MADE IN A FLORIDA THICKET.

Immense Webs Woven by Yellow Spiders. A Mysterious Disappearance Explained. A Fruitlike Crab—Tricks of Nature Protect the Defenseless.

Once, in attempting to force my way through the thick bay cedar underbrush of one of the smaller and outer keys of the Florida reef I suddenly broke into an opening which had the appearance of a narrow street or trail. The brush was six or eight feet in height and remarkably thick, and the heat was intolerable. The branches and leaves which were interlaced formed a perfect network and gave shelter to innumerable crabs, which had taken possession of old birds' nests, while under foot the eggs and newly hatched terns almost covered the ground.

Once in the opening or street it was found to be about seven feet across, winding away out of sight, but my way was blocked by several curious obstacles—a succession of webs stretched vertically across the pathway at intervals of five or six feet. They were of extraordinary strength and were thrown out and poised in a marvelous manner. In the center of each of these silken barriers clung a huge yellow spider, so ugly and conspicuous that I stopped before the first doubting the evidence of my eyes, and as I looked the first yellow spider of the series disappeared. There was no doubt about it. At first so striking and gaudy, it slowly faded away, and through the web I could see other yellow spiders beyond, suggesting that it was no illusion.

While I stood wondering in the hot sun the spider solved the mystery by appearing again, first dimly, then like many spiders quivering in the strong light, finally resolving itself into one huge yellow fellow that moved like a pendulum to and fro and then stopped. I touched it gently with a switch I held, whereupon it deliberately began to swing its huge body, imparting to the entire web a vibratory motion which increased in rapidity until the body of the spider began to grow fainter, and in a few moments became invisible. It was all very simple when understood. The spider when alarmed began to swing, gradually increasing the motion until it disappeared or could not be followed by the eye. Thinking the case might be exceptional, I again touched the spider, and again it literally swung itself out of sight.

Crawling beneath the web, I confronted the next spider, which also was yellow or saffron in color, with black, velvetlike markings, hanging in the sun like a great topaz, its web dotted with the remains of many feasts—empty skeletons of insects, bits of pearly fish scales, perhaps dropped by some passing bird, a delicate feather and a motley array of flies and other insect folk. At first the spider paid me scant attention, then I saw a slight convulsive movement of its legs as it imparted the first long swing to its hammocklike web that put this wonderful life saving device, for this it was, in motion. It was the spider's defense and protection from enemies.

Certain birds undoubtedly preyed upon the spiders, and this faculty of mysteriously disappearing had on more than one occasion served it well. I could easily imagine the astonishment of the bird when darting down to seize the plump and showy spider to find that it had slipped away.

There was much in this street of yellow spiders to distract the mind from the intense heat that poured down from the almost vertical sun. In the middle of the path, beyond a turn, grew a clump of cactus, with here and there a ripe fruit rich in the purple of full maturity—a brilliant contrast to the green leaves. As I stood watching the hermit crabs dropping from the bushes and scurrying away over the sand I thought I saw a ripe fruit of the cactus move; then, to my amazement, it passed directly out of sight, not after the fashion of the spiders, but by slipping around one of the big leaves. I almost expected to see the others follow it, but nothing of the kind occurred. I walked along and placed myself in a position to see behind the broad, flat, pear shaped leaf. There was the purple object, now moving cautiously around with the evident intention of keeping itself out of sight, and then I saw that it was a crab, a crab with a purple back the exact tint of the fruit, while its general shape, when the legs were tucked up beneath the body, made the crab a mimic of the cactus fruit, a protective resemblance so perfect that the crab was safe from sharp eyed enemies, and I should have passed it by had it remained quiet, but the phenomenon of moving fruit attracted my attention and led to its discovery.

For some distance I followed this street of spiders, creeping beneath the webs when I could, and everywhere these tricks of nature to protect the defenseless were apparent. The eggs of the gulls simulated the sand in color; the little mantis, which clung to the big cedar, was the exact tint of the leaves and defied detection until accidentally brushed off. Over all life in the secluded spot nature had thrown her protecting mantle of mimicry.—New York Post.
