A QUESTION OFTEN asked and as easily answered, how Owen McGarvey & Son's business has, and is, daily increasing, till it is now the largest in their lines in the Dominion? They keep every article in the line, from the common chair, at 30c, to the Dining-room, Library, Hall and office Chair, up to $75. Looking Glasses from 50c up to any size, made to order. Chamber suites, 7 pieces, $23 up to $750. Parlor Sets from $45 up to $450, or any style or piece made to order. A large stock of clocks from $1.25 to $25 each. In fact, there is nothing to surpass their stock of Plain and Fancy Furniture, and bedding especially, consisting of every variety of bedding, from the Fibre and Wool Mattress, to the best pure Hair. Their Upholstered Spring Bed is the best yet made. With the acknowledged fact of theirs being the cheapest house in their line, owing to their advantage of purchasing every article in their line for the net cash and in large quantities, enables them to offer inducements to their customers that have secured for their house the above-mentioned increase. By adherence to their old motto, "Quick Sales and Light Profits," they hope to secure a continuance of the public patronage. Large reductions to wholesale customers. Poetry.

Midnight in London.

I don't know what we'll do Jim; the rain's a-coming fast;
I haven't got no money, and it's twelve o'clock or past;
Let's sit down in a doorway, the first as we can see,
We can may be get to sleep there, if the "copper" let's us be.

Here, come a little closer, Jim, you're youngest d'ye see,
And the rain won't get so near you if you shelter behind me;
Put the matches in that corner, lad, and then they won't get wet.
There might be some cove come along as wants to buy one yet.

Does the rain come nigh you there, Jim? It doesn't? That's all right,
I wish we'd had a crust of bread to eat, this cold, wet night;
I don't care much about myself, but I must keep you alive,
And if I can go without at ten, you can't at only five.

D'ye see that star up there, Jim, a shining in the sky?
I wonder what the people does as lives up there so high,
D'ye think our mother went up there to live inside a star?
I wish we could go, too, lad, but it looks so very far.

I'm afraid we'll not get there, Jim: but then, we scarcely know!
Tom, what lived in Seven Dials, died not very long ago,
And he said, when he was dying, that he saw a place all light,
And heard 'em singing, and saw folks all dressed in snowy white.

Do you feel the cold a deal, Jim? your hands are just like lead,
And stiff—why Jim? poor little Jim—ah, what! —he isn't dead?
Oh, Jim, it can't be—nay, he's gone—Jim's seen his last wet day,
And his soul's gone flying upward to the star-light far away.

At Teague Poteet's.

A SKETCH OF THE HOG MOUNTAIN RANGE.

BY JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS.

(From the Century.)

IN TWO PARTS: PART I.

"It's a long pull betwixt this an' Atlanty," he said after awhile; "it is that, certain an' shore, an' I haint smelt of the jug sence I lef' ther'. Pull 'er out Teague—pull 'er out."

The jug was forthcoming.

"Now, then," continued Uncle Jake, removing the corn-cob stopper, "this looks like home, sweet home, ez I may say. It does, certain an' shore. None to jine me? Well, well! Times change an' change, but the jug is company for one. So be it. Ez St. Paul says, cleave nigh unto that which is good. I'm foreswore not to feel londsome teil I go to the gallows. Friends! you uv got my good wishes, one an' all."

"What's a gwine on?" asked Poteet.

"The same," responded Uncle Jake, after swallowing his dram. "Allers the same· Wickedness prevails well nigh unto hit's own jestification. I uv seed sights! You all know the divers besetting wher'by Jackson Ricks wuz took off this season gone—murdered, I may say, in the teeth of the law an' good govunment. Sirs! I sot by an' seed his besetters go scotch-free."

"Ah!"

The exclamation came from Teague Poteet.

"Yes sirs, yes, friends!" continued Uncle Jake, closing his eyes and tilting his chair back. "Even so. Nuther does I boast ez becometh the gibble-minded. They hurried an' skurried me forth an' hence, to mount upon the witness stan' an' relate the deed. No deniance did I make. Ez St. Paul says, sin, taken occasion by the commandment, worked in me all manner of conspicuessence. I told 'em what these here eyes had seed.

"They errayed me before jedge an' jury," Uncle Jake went on, patting the jug affectionately, "an' I bowed my howdies. 'Gentermun friends,' s'I, 'foller me clos't, bekaze I'm a-givin' you but the truth, stupendous though it may be. Ef you thes but name the word,' s'I, 'I'll take an' lay my hand upon the men that done this unrighteousness, for they stan' no furder than yon piller,' s'I. 'Them men,' s'I, 'surroundered the house of Jackson Ricks, gentermun friends, he bein' a member of Friendship Church, an' called 'im forth wi' the ashoreance of Satan an' the intents of evil,' s'I; 'an' ole an' decrippled ez he wuz' they shot im down—them men at yon piller,' s'I, 'ere he could but raise his tremblin' han in supplication; an' the boldest of 'em dast not to face me here an' say nay,' s'I."

"An' they uv cler'd the men what kilt pore Jackson Ricks!" said Teague, rubbin his grizzled chin.

"Ez clean an' ez cle'r ez the pa'm er my hand,'" replied Uncle Jake, with emphasis.

The fiddle in the next room screamed forth a jig, and the tireless feet of the dancers kept time, but there was profound silence among those in the kitchen. Uncle Jake took advantage of this pause to renew his acquaintance with the jug.

Deputy Marshal Woodward knew of the killing of Jackson Ricks; that is to say, he was familiar with the version of the affair which had been depended upon to relieve the revenue officers of the responsibility of downright murder; but he was convinced that the story told by Uncle Jake Norris was nearer the truth.

As the young man rode down the mountain, leaving the fiddle and the dancers to carry the frolic into the gray dawn, he pictured to himself the results of the raid that he would be expected to lead against hog mountain—the rush upon Poteet's the shooting of the old Moonshiner, and the spectacle of the daughter wringing her hands and weeping wildly. He rode down the mountain, and, before the sun rose, he had written and mailed his resignation. In a private note to the marshal, inclosed with this document, he briefly but clearly set forth the fact that, while illicit distilling was as unlawful as ever, the man who loved a Moonshiner's daughter was not a proper instrument to aid in its suppression.

But his letter failed to have the effect he desired, and in a few weeks he received a communication from Atlanta setting forth the fact that a raid had been determined upon.

Meantime, while events were developing, some of the old women of the Hog Mountain Range had begun to manifest a sort of motherly interest in the affairs of Woodward and Sis Poteet. These women, living miles apart on the mountain and its spurs, had a habit of "picking up their work" and spending the day with each other. Upon one occasion it chanced that Mrs. Sue Parmalee and Mrs. Puritha Hightower rode ten miles to visit Mrs. Puss Poteet.

"Don't lay the blame of it onter me, Puss," exclaimed Mrs. Hightower,—her shrill, thin voice in queer contrast with her fat and jovial appearance; "don't lay the blame onter me. Dave, he's bin a-complainin' bekaze they wa'n't no salsody in the house, an' I rid over to Sue's to borry some. Airther I got ther.' Sue sez, se' she: 'Yess us pick up an' go an' light in on Puss,' sez she, 'an' fine out sump'n' nuther that's a-gwine on 'mongst folks,' se' she."

"Yes, lay it all onter me," said Mrs. Parmalee, looking over her spectacles at Mrs. Poteet; "I sez to Purithy, s'I, 'Purithy, yess go down an' see Puss,' s'I; 'maybe we'll git a glimpse er that air new chap with the slick ha'r. Sis'll be a-peggin' out arter awhile,' s'I, 'and ef the new chap's ez purty ez I hear tell, maybe I'll set my cap for 'im,' s'I."

At this fat Mrs. Puritha Hightower was compelled to lean on frail Mrs. Puss Poteet, so heartily did she laugh

"I declar'," she exclaimed, "ef Sue aint a sight! I'm mighty nigh outdone. She's thes bin a-gwine on that a-way all the time, an' I bin that tickled tell a little more an' I'd a drapped on the groun'. How's all?"

"My goodness!" exclaimed Mrs. Poteet "I hope you all know me too well to be a-stan'in' out there makin' excuse. Come right along in, an' take off your things, and ketch your wind'. Sis is home today."

"Well, I'm monstus glad," said Mrs. Hightower. "Sis useter think the world an' all er me when she was a slip of a gal, but I reckon she's took on town ways, haint she? Hit aint nothin' but natchul."

"Sis is proud enough for to hold her head high," Mrs. Parmalee explained, "but she haint a bit stuck up."

"Well, I let you know," exclaimed Mrs. Hightower, untying her bonnett and taking off her shawl, "I let you know, here's what would't be sot back by nothin' if she had Sis's chances. In about the las' word pore maw spoke on 'er dying bed, she called me to 'er an' sez se' she, 'Purithy Emma,' se' she, 'you, hol' your head high; don't you bat your eyes to please none of em,' se' she."

"I reckon in reason I oughter be thankful that Sis aint no wuss," said Mrs. Poteet, walking around with aimless hospitality; "yit that chile's temper is powerful tryin', an' Teague ackshully an' candidly b'leeves she's made out'n pyo' gol'.* I wish I may die if he don't."

After awhile Sis made her appearance, buoyant and blooming. Her eyes sparkled, her cheeks glowed, and her smiles showed beautiful teeth—a most uncommon sight in the mountain, where the girls were in the habit of rubbing snuff or smoking. The visitors greeted her with the effusive constraint and awkwardness that made so large a part of their lives, but after awhile, Mrs. Hightower laid her fat, motherly hand on the girl's shoulder, and looked kindly but keenly into her eyes.

"Ah, honey!" she said, "you haint sp'ilt yit, but you want made to fit thish here hill—that you wa'nt, that you wa'nt!"

Women are not hypocrites. Their little thrills and nerve convulsions are genuine while they last. Fortunately for the women themselves, they do not last, but are succeeded by others of various moods, tenses, and genders. These nerve-convulsions are so genuine and so apt, that they are known as intuitions, and under this name they have achieved importance. Mrs. Hightower, with all her lack of experience, was capable of feeling that Sis Poteet needed the by-no-means insubstantial encouragement that lies in one little note of sympathy, and she was not at all astonished when Sis reponded to her intention by giving her a smart little hug.

Presently Mrs. Parmalee, who had stationed herself near the door, lifted her thin right arm and let it fall upon her lap.

"Well, sir!" she exclaimed, "ef yander aint Sis's bo!"

She ran to the door, saw Woodward coming up the road, and blushed furiously—a feat which Mrs. Hightower and Mrs. Parmalee, with all their experience, had rarely seen performed in that region.

Woodward greeted Mrs. Poteet's visitors with a gentle deference and an easy courtesy that attracted their favor in spite of themselves. Classing him with the "Restercrats," these women took keen and suspicious note of every word he uttered, and every movement he made, holding themselves in readiness to become mortally offended at a curl of the lip or the lifting of an eyebrow; but he was equal to the occasion. He humored their whims and eccentricities to the utmost, and he was so thoroughly sympathetic, so genial, so sunny, and so handsome withal, that he stirred most powerfully the maternal instincts of these weather-beaten bosoms and made them his friends and defenders. He told them wonderful stories of life in the great world that lay far beyond Hog Mountain its spurs and its foot-hills. He lighted their pipes, and even filled them out of his own tobacco-pouch, a proceeding which caused Mrs. Parmalee to remark that she 'would like mannylac* mighty well ef t'wer'nt so mighty weak."

Mrs. Hightower found early opportunity to deliver her verdict in Sis's ear, whereupon the latter gave her a little hug, and whispered: "Oh, I just think he's adorable!" It was very queer, however, that as soon as sis was left to entertain Mr. Woodward (the women making an excuse of helping Puss about dinner), she lost her blushing enthusiasm and became quite cold and reserved. The truth is, Sis had convinced herself some days before that she had the right to be very angry with this young man, and she began her quarrel, as lovely woman generally does, by assuming an air of tremendous unconcern. Her disinterestedness was really provoking

"How did you like Sue Fraley's new bonnet last Sunday?" she asked, with an innocent smile.

"Sue Fraley's new bonnet!" exclaimed Woodward, surprised in the midst of some serious reflection; "why, I didn't know she had a new bonnet."

"Oh, you didn't? You were right opposite. I should think anybody could see she had a new bonnett by the way she tossed her head."

"Well, I didn't notice it, for one. Was it one of these sky-scrapers? I was looking at somebody else."

"Oh!"

Woodward had intended to convey a very delicately veiled compliment, but this young woman's tone rather embarrassed him. He saw in a moment that she was beyond the reach of the playful and ingenious banter which he had contrived to make the basis of their relations.

"Yes," he said, "I was looking at something else. I had other things to think about."

"Well, she did have a new bonnet, with yellow ribbons. She looked handsome. I hear she's going to get married soon."

"I'm glad to hear it. She's none too young," said Woodward.

At another time, Sis would have laughed at the suggestion implied in this remark, but now she only tapped the floor gently with her foot, and locked serious.

"I hope you answered her note," she said presently.

"What note?" he a ked, with some astonishment.

She saw the picture of innocence.

"Oh, I didn't think!" she exclaimed. "I reckon it's a great secret. I mean the note she handed you when she came out of church. It's none of my business."

"Nor of mine, either," said Woodward, with a relieved air. "The note was for Tip Watson."

This statement, which was not only plausible but true, gave a new direction to Sis's anger.

"Well, I don't see how anybody that thinks anything of himself could be a mail-carrier for Sue Fraley," she exclaimed, scornfully; whereupon she flounced out, leaving Woodward in a state of bewilderment.

He had not made love to the girl, principally because her moods were elusive and her methods unique. She was dangerously like other women of his acquaintance, and dangerously unlike them. The principal of the academy in Gullattsville—a scholarly old gentleman from Middle Georgia, who had been driven to teaching by dire necessity—had once loftily informed Woodward that Miss Poteet was superior to her books, and the young man had verified the statement to his own discomfiture. She possessed that feminine gift which is of more importance to a woman in this world than scholarly acquirements—aptitude. Even her frankness—perfectly discreet—charmed and puzzled Woodward; but the most attractive of her traits were such as mark the difference between the bird that sings in the tree, and the bird that sings in the cage—delightful but indescribable.

When Sis Poteet began to question him about Sue Fraley, he thought that she was moved by jealousy gave him a thrill that was new to his experience; but when she flounced angrily out of the room because he had confessed to carrying a note from Miss Fraley to Tip Watson, it occurred to him that he might be mistaken. Indeed, so cunning does masculine cupidity become when it is played upon by a woman that he frightened himself with the suggestion that perhaps, after all, this perfectly original young lady was in love with Tip Watson.

During the rest of the day Woodward had ample time to nurse and develop his new theory, and the more he thought it over, the more plausible it seemed to be. It was a great blow to his vanity; but the more uncomfortable it made him, the more earnestly he clung to it.

Without appearing to avoid him, Sis managed to make the presence of Mrs. Parmalee and Mrs. Hightower an excuse for neglecting him. She entertained these worthy ladies with such eager hospitality that when they aroused themselves to the necessity of going home, they found, to their dismay, that it would be impossible, in the language of Mrs. Poteet, to "git half-way acrost the Pullium's Summit 'fore night 'ud ketch 'em." She was so delighted, apparently, that she became almost hilarious; and her gayety affected all around her except Woodward, who barely managed to conceal his disgust.

After supper, however, Mrs. Poteet and her two guests betook themselves to the kitchen, where they rubbed snuff and smoked their pipes, and gossiped, and related reminiscences of that good time which, with old people, is always in the past. Thus Woodward had ample opportunity to talk with Sis. He endeavored, by the exercise of every art of conversation and manner of which he was master, to place their relations upon the old familiar footing, but he failed most signally. He found it impossible to fathom the gentle dignity with which he was constantly repulsed. In the midst of his perplexity, which would have been either pathetic or ridiculous if it had not been so artfully concealed, he managed for the first time to measure the depth of his love for this exasperating but charming creature whom he had been patronizing. She was no longer amusing; and Woodward, with the savage inconsistency of a man moved by a genuine passion, felt a tragic desire to humble himself before her.

"I'm going home to-morrow, Miss Sis," he said, finally, in sheer desperation.

"Well, you've had a heap of fun—I mean," she added, "that you have had a nice time."

"I have been a fool!" he exclaimed, bitterly. Seeing that she made no response, he continued; "I've been a terrible fool right through. I came here to hunt up blockade whiskey——"

"What!"

Sis's voice was sharp and eager, full of doubt, surprise, and consternation.

Absent-Minded Mr. Bowles.

Bowles was in the habit of daily riding through a country turnpike gate, and one day he presented as usual his two-pence to the gate-keeper. "What is that for, sir?" he asked. "For my horse, of course." "But, sir, you have no horse." "Dear me!" exclaimed the astonished poet, "am I walking?" Mrs. Moore told me that anecdote. She also told me that bowles on one occasion gave her a Bible as a birthday present. She asked him to write her name in it. He did so, inscribing the sacred volume to her as a gift "From the Author."

A Sensible French Workingman.

M. Joffrin, the ultra-Radical representative of the working-classes in the Municipal Council of Paris, showed sound common sense in declining the challenge sent him by M. Crié, a writer on the staff of the Citoyen et Bataille, whom he had offended. "This idiot," writes M. Joffrin, to the Proletaire, "ought to have understood that workingmen do not waste their youth in taking lessons of fencing-masters, and that to fight a duel with a workingman would be to play the part of an assassin." Furthermore, he says that the party to which he belongs, opposed as it is to conventionalities of every sort, has forbidden its members to sacrifice to the most absurd of them all—the duel. He concludes with a formidable threat. "I hope," he says, one day to show the weight of a working mechanic's fist, even though a municipal councillor, on the nose of an imbecile bourgeois.—St. James Gazette.

The Clean Newspaper.

There is a growing feeling, in healthy communities, against journals which make it their special object to minister to a perverted taste by seeking out and serving in a seductive form disgusting and licentious revelations. There is a good reason to believe that the clean newspaper is more highly prized to-day than it was four or five years ago. It is also safe to predict that, as people in all ranks of life who protect their own, at least from contamination, become more conscious of the pernicious influence of a certain class of journals, called enterprising because they are ambitious to serve up dirty scandals, they will be careful to see that the journals they permit to be read in the family circle are the class that never forget the proprieties of life. Already men and women of refinement and healthy morals have had their attention called to the pernicious influence of bad literature, and have made commendable efforts to counteract the same by causing sound literature to be published and sold at popular prices. These efforts are working a silent but sure revolution. The best authors are more generally read to-day than at any previous date. The sickly sentimental story paper, and the wild ranger and pirate story books, are slowly but surely yielding the field to worthier claimants. To the praise of the decent newspaper, it may be said that where it has a place in the family, and has been read for years by young as well as old, it has developed such a healthy tone and such a discriminating taste, that the life nature of the slums has no admirers. Fortunately, the number of such families is increasing in the land, and they increase the journal that devotes itself to sickening revelation of immorality will be compelled to find its supporters solely among those classes who practice vice and crime, or are ambitious to learn to follow such ways.—Selected.

Looking two Ways.

It was a regular northeaster and snowing fast. "Fine snow storm, driver," said a fat man as he deftly swung himself to the front platform of a slowly moving Third Avenue horse car, pulled up his ulster collar, pulled down his sealskin cap, and faced the storm with the enjoyment known only to fat men well clad. The driver was tired and cold and cross.

"Fine snow storm," repeated the fat man cheerfully. "Regular old fashioned snow storm. Makes one think of old times."

"You may call it fine. I call it all-fired unpleasant," said the driver, yanking at the reins as the near horse slipped on the snowy-cobble stones. "Fine fur them as likes it, and hain't got nuthin' to do but t' enjoy it. S'pose ye ask them hosses their o-pinion ov yer fine storm. They seem to be enjoyin' uv it, don't they?"

"It is hard on the animals, that's a fact," said the fat man, his cheerful face lengthening as he watched the steaming horses strain at the load. "I was thinking of the country. Such a snow storm in the country is a fine thing, now isn't it?"

"You ain't no hay seed," said the driver, looking at the fat man.

"But I used to be. Happiest time of my life;" and the cheerful face beamed again.

"How we boys did enjoy such a storm. I can see it all now. The gray clouds hanging low all day, and then afternoon the big flakes beginning to come slowly down. We could see them through the schoolhouse windows, and how uneasy the sight made us feel."

"Not half so uneasy as yer school mam made ye feel, I'll bet."

"And then when school was out," continued the fat man not heeding the interruption, "how we dashed through the storm on our way home, with shouts of happy merriment, tossing the fluffy whiteness into the air, throwing ourselves full length into the fleecy, downy drifts, getting—"

"Gettin' yer face all-fired well washed by the big boys, an' bellerin' like a sick steer when ye got plugged in the ear with a snow ball with a stun into it."

"And then what unusual excitement and unusual hurry there was on the farm. It grew dark early. The cows were driven into their warm stables and stood contentedly in their stanchions, calmly chewing their cuds; and—"

"An' when ye went to milk 'em by the light uv a taller candle stuck into an ole tin lantern punched full o' holes, the one-eyed brindle jest natcherly kicked the pint an' a half o' strippins in yer pail galley west."

The fat man did not seem to heed the interruptions. Perhaps they supplemented his own happy thoughts so completely that he thought they were his own thoughts.

"Yes," he continued, looking ever the horse's ears into the past. "Yes. The barn is redolent with the smell of hay, and the sweet breath of the cattle. The horses stand in their stalls munching their oats—"

"Which the same they is tailins what yer old man couldn't sell, they bein' light weight."

"In the yard the children shout in their innocent glee as the snow comes down. Even the staid old house dog seems to rejoice with them, and jumps and barks, and snaps playfully at the big feathery flakes as they fall softly in the twilight, only ceasing—"

"Only ceasin' to chaw playfully on the leg of a tramp as is sneakin' softly into the barn in the bootiful twilight."

"Within the farm house the lamps are burning brightly. The aged grandfather draws his chair closer to the ample fire-place, and—"

"An' swears that the storm ain't a circumstance to the big storm that cum on the 17th of November, eighteen hundred an' 'leven."

"The farmer's buxom daughters cheerfully prepare the abundant evening meal—"

"Cold pork an' partaters an' pie."

"The farmer and his boys gather round the groaning board, their—"

"Their butes smellin considabul hossy."

"And talk of the storm and of the work for the morrow. It will be just the day to go to the wood lot, says the farmer; and they must not forget to take a load of wood to the poor widow in the valley, and—"

"An' send the parson a cord o' crooked tops, that won't sell, to offset the pew rent, an' so keep solid with th' Almighty."

"And after supper he goes out to the stable and gives his pet bay colt some extra bedding, and—"

"And cusses considerable tryin' to git the last fall burdocks outer his tail."

"The girls go to the window and watch the falling flakes and talk of quiltings and candy pulls and straw rides—"

"Now yer shoutin'," said the driver. "Y've struck yer gal."

"And so the night closes in upon the happy household. The supper dishes are cleared away; the farmer smokes his pipe by the fire; the good mother sits knitting by his side—"

"Blue-stripped mittens fur the boys."

"The children steal off sleepily to bed to dream of the pleasures of the morrow. Without the snow falls steadily. Little drifts gather at the windows, and larger ones around the horse-block and door-steps. One by one the members of the family go to their peaceful beds. The farmer last of all. He covers the fire in the fire-place, winds the clock, and—"

"Turns out the dog an' looks at the weather."

"And then he too, seeks the repose that follows honest labor. And then all is quiet, save the low murmur of the wind through the leafless trees, the soft pelting of the snow on the windows, and —"

"And the hired man in the kitchen chamber a snorin' fit to raise the ruf."

"Driver," said the fat man as he got out at Ninth street. "You appear to have seen something of the country yourself Eh?"

"Me? Do I look like an emigrant? Naw, sur-ee! I'm a dook in disguise, I am. G'long thar, Baby; steady Jim."—New York Sun.

AN ART LOAN EXHIBITION

To the poorer inhabitants of a large city it is no small advantage occasionally to have access to works of art. Surrounded as such a one is by unbeautiful things, his nature cannot expand much without some such aid. In his everyday walk his attention is so continuously absorbed by the busy outside aspect of a life which is too often common and mean that this influence, if unchecked, must needs grow into him, and his nature by long association is gradually brought into harmony with it. But until quite deadened, like a famished man for food his nature longs for some sustenance more suitable to it. The voice of nature is heard in an ardent longing for something better than is supplied; and if the soul is to live, this longing must be gratified. For just as the body is nourished by material food, so is the soul nourished by ideas; and if these ideas are of common quality or scantly supplied, the soul they feed must waste away.

In art, we have the means of awakening the mind of the dullest, and supplying it with a stimulating food. As the wearied one, walking the streets of a great city, chances to gaze into the wondrous depths and distances of an engraving in some shop window, or drinks in the color of a painting—color which seems to sink into the soul like perfume from a flower—his mind gathers nourishment and its faculties are expanded and strengthened. As he leaves the picture he drinks in beauty from many an object where its presence was not before suspected. His mind learns to seek out nourishment and to find it in all things—from the lowly flower to the bit of blue sky, the scudding fleece, or it may be the lead-colored cloud seen above the house tops of the crowded city.

In Sherbrooke, fortunately, we see more of the light-flooded and the star-strewn heavens than this. The rush of life is not so great that our whole attention is absorbed by what is passing around us. But even here the mind shares the common lot of growing indifferent to the wonders around and above us. Some of us have lost the faculty of perceiving these beauties: others again have never acquired it. To awaken both to a sense of beauty, which in other words is a sense of good—for the beautiful includes in it the good—is the noble aim proposed by some gentlemen of taste and discernment among us. Thanks to them, Sherbrooke is not entirely without intellectual resources. By their liberal aid an excellent reading room and the nucleus of a free public library is already established among us, and now a beginning is made to what we hope may prove to be a permanent Art Loan Exhibition. In a window of the reading room there has been exhibited during late weeks a selection of works of art, which must have pleased many a passer by as it has us. Though we confess a strong preferance over all artistic work for the effects produced by the broken line of the etcher, we always turn with pleasure from a fine specimen of the art, a proof before letters, "A Moonlight Scene in Venice," by David Law, a London artist, now on view in the window, to contemplate the color in a very good reproduction of one of Bierstadts paintings that faces it. These two are worthily accompanied by an excellent line engraving and a large mezzotint. It is intended, we believe, to replace these shortly by another selection, which will include a water color by Edson, loaned by Mr. R. D. Morkill, Jr., an etching (proof before letters) by C. A. Platt, a fine photography of a Madonna by Carlo Dolce, a reproduction in color of Perugino's fresco, "The Transfiguration," and a large proof engraving of Doré's picture, "The Early Christian Martyrs," loaned by Mr. R. N. Hall, M. P.

This exhibition is a most praiseworthy experiment. Though it is proposed to change the exhibit every one, two, or three weeks, Sherbrooke doubtless possesses abundant material in the homes of its citizens to carry it on for a long time with credit. And what is of far greater consequence, this will be done with profit inestimable to the multitude who will view the exhibits: and we hope, therefore, that the excellent and considerate example of the present exhibitors will be followed by all others in the city who may possess any treasure of art whose inspection would yield pleasure or profit to their less fortunate co-citizens.

THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN.

The students of McGill College have nobly endeavored to reverse the veto attempted to be put by the students of Kingston on the admission of women into our colleges. At a late meeting held by the undergraduates of McGill it was resolved, with but one dissentient voice, "That this Society will hail with satisfaction any steps that the authorities of the University may take, tending to the admission of women to the privileges of the University."

At a subsequent meeting of the Governors, the subject was taken up, but although the general opinion of the board was strongly in favor of admitting women to the University, action was postponed till the return of Dr. Dawson from Europe, where he is about to proceed for a vacation, and where he will enquire into the working of the co-education of the sexes in those British and Foreign universities where it is in use.

This movement, taken in connection with an attempt that has lately been made to establish a medical college for women in Toronto, seems to presage the early admission of women to our universities, either as co-students with men—or in independent classes. We cannot but think the latter plan would be preferable. In medical studies it cannot be desirable that young women should study in the same class rooms with men. A medical lecturer has to deal with many a subject of a nature that renders it quite unfit to be discussed in a mixed company of men and women. And though the students are engaged in studying professionally a delicate subject, we cannot expect a party of young women, in the presence of men, to listen with equanimity to talk of this nature.

No similar objection, however, applies to the sex of the lecturer. It has been found that where women are admitted to medical study male professors are preferred to female, for the reason, doubtless, that they are more competent. At all events they are generally chosen in preference to women, just as in ladies seminaries male teachers of music and drawing are preferred to female. And the professors themselves seem to have no objection to lecture to classes of young women. Doctors have more delicate duties than that to perform. But in fact female medical students will have at present no choice in the matter. Even if wanted, female professors could not be had. No material for such professors can yet be found in Canada. It would take at least some years to get the students passed through the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in order to qualify them to practice, or, of course, to lecture.

But even when medical education is sufficiently diffused among them to ensure a supply of the professional chairs it is doubtful whether it will not be better still to retain male professors. In the Toronto scheme the projector of the college (Mrs. Trout) proposed that a majority of the chairs should always be filled with women, so soon as a sufficient number could be found competent; but the faculty objected to supply the chairs in the meantime, alleging that were women to be afterwards appointed, an impression would get abroad that the education afforded must be inferior to that of colleges conducted wholly by gentlemen of experience and training. And this seems likely enough. Mrs. Trout's scheme has been therefore dropped, or suspended, and the faculty are taking steps to establish a college on their own responsibility.

It is known that although the Volga is continuously pouring a vast volume of water into the Caspian Sea, that sea is gradually drying up. The skrinkage has been going on for many centuries, and was perhaps one of the chief causes that impelled our Aryan fathers to over-run Europe some four thousand years ago. For the drying up of the sea, by decreasing the rainfall, turned the surrounding country into a desert; and the Aryan shepherds were compelled to seek elsewhere the pasturage needed for their flocks. Before that time the Caspian Sea covered a vast tract in the heart of Central Asia, while another great inland sea existed in the heart of Africa, and it is a curious circumstance that after forty centuries it should be proposed by descendents of the men who were then driven from their home by the drying-up of one of these seas, in some measure to replace both. In Africa the French propose to flood the great Sahara, which was left a desert by the drying up of the great sea that formerly flowed through the heart of the African continent, and although it is not proposed to replace the lost portion of the Caspian we learn from a correspondent of the Times that a scheme is afoot to connect the Mediterranean with the Red Sea by a channel through Palestine.

"It is proposed," says the correspondent, "to make a canal 25 miles in length, from Haifa, in the Bay of Acre, through the plain of Asdraelon to the Valley of the River Jordan. This canal is to be 100 ft. wide and 40 ft. deep. This will bring the Mediterranean into the heart of Palestine. In order that the waters of the Dead Sea may be made to mingle with those of the Red Sea it is proposed to cut a canal 20 miles in length from the head of the Gulf of Akabah to the Dead Sea. If these things were successfully performed, it is expected that an inland sea about 200 miles long, varying in width from three to ten miles, and deep enough to float vessels of the largest size, would extend from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea."

This would replace a sea that once flowed in that district, of which the Dead Sea is the last remaining trace. It would involve the flooding of 300 square miles of Palestine and would convert Jerusalem into a seaport and the Jordan into a canal for British steamers, but the correspondent points out a prophecy of Ezekiel which may reconcile devout men and women to the change if they recognize it as a fulfilment of the prediction that the sea shall come into the desert "and it shall come to pass that the fishers shall stand upon it from En-gedi even unto En-eglaim."

It is encouraging to see woman making a path for herself, first in this direction and then in that, through the thicket that has hitherto hemmed her in on all sides. Elevated above man as she already is in the higher spiritual nature, when she comes to take a more active share in the business of life her nature will become enlarged; and without losing her moral superiority she will acquire by the wider scope of operations gradually opening to her a greater breadth of faculty, which must exercise a powerful influence in forming the future type of man. Great men cannot well spring from frivolity. When woman shall take her due part in the life of the world, she may become the mother of a race of heroes. Only through its women can the world be raised above the degrading pursuits in which it now wastes its time.

There is really no reason why every woman should not learn a profession, or business of some kind, before marriage just as a man dees. She would be lifted immediately out of the condition of a domestic servant—a position which will some day be filled only by such women as are unfit for anything better: just as a man who has not learnt a trade or profession now finds his level in the condition of a servant to laborers. There would be far fewer foolish marriages; and many a young woman, fit to be the mother of heroes, but now lost to the world and condemned to pass her life in domestic drudgery fit only for a born drudge, would then be able to take her due rank, according to her capacity. And the world would be by so much the better.

The opening of our universities to women will further this very much. And already, in many ways, some approach to it may be attained. The employment of women as secretaries and amanuenses is rapidly gaining ground. This is work where steadiness, accuracy and application is needed, and it is found that in many respects a well trained young woman is more reliable than a young man. And if she should afterwards get married the mental training she has undergone will become of great use to her in after life. In this view the acquiring of the art of stenography is one well worthy the attention of young women. Their quick intellects and deft fingers will generally render its acquirement very easy, and the art once thoroughly learned, while the employment it offers is very suitable to their nature, the salaries earned are better and the work is far less fatiguing than teaching.

Merchants' Bank of Canada.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the above institution was held on Wednesday, the President, Mr. Andrew Allan, in the chair.

The Chairman submitted the annual report (a synopsis of which we gave in a former issue) showing the profits of the year to have been $897.113. Of this sum $399.966 has been distributed in dividends, $65,000 carried to Contigent account, and $400,000 to Rest. After a short discussion the report was adopted.

Mr. Hague then proceeded to make some remarks on the business of the year, stating that it had been an anxious one for the most part; the evil that has afflicted our community so seriously in former years, viz., the giving and taking of unreasonable amounts of credit, has again broken out; and it has brought with it, in many quarters, its usual accompaniment of commercial trouble. He deprecated the long credit system and at the same time thought that bankers were often to blame for being good natured and yielding to importunity. He also deprecated the custom of keeping two or three bank accounts, and said that only the strongest firms could afford to run the risk of it. He spoke of the danger of over-trading and over-production. Speaking of an insolvency law he said—"Fortunately we have not had to do with many cases of insolvency of late. But my deliberate conviction is we should have had many more in Canada if traders had had it in their power to procure, by force of law, a discharge of their debts without paying them. There are many and weighty reasons why a law for the equal distribution of insolvent estates is desirable, but a law which gives to any person whatever a discharge without paying his debts is to the last degree undesirable."

"The construction of the Pacific Railway was referred to as of the highest value to every interest in Canada, but especially to the North-West. It is a matter of pride to us, as Canadians, that we are doing so much out of our own resources. It presses rather heavily, it is true, at present. It is making money tight; but it will all be well in the end. Meantime this bank has helped the work on in its initial stages, and in doing this, we have realized a pleasant little sum for ourselves."

It is gratifying to know that the Sherbrooke branch of the bank is meeting with very encouraging success—a result indeed which may be expected from the liberal and wise management that characterises the bank throughout, and of which the shareholders at the meeting fittingly marked their appreciation, by the customary votes of thanks to all concerned, and by unanimously re-electing the entire board of directors to serve for the ensuing year.

Terrible Disaster.

TWO HUNDRED AND TWO CHILDREN SUFFOCATED.

London, June 18.—A terrible calamity, involving the deaths of 202 children, occurred in the town of Sunderland, in the County of Durham, this evening. From details thus far received, it appears an entertainment had beeen given in Victoria Hall, by a conjuror, which was attended almost altogether by children, several thousand being in attendance. The accident occurred at the close of the performance. The body of the Hall had been entirely cleared of its occupants when some 1,200 little ones came crushing down stairs from the gallery. At the top of the first flight of stairs there was a door which opened only 20 inches and thus but one child was permitted to pass through at a time. At this point a white mass of children were pushing forward, some of them fell and were unable to rise owing to the others crowding on. The result was a great number were pushed down, trampled on and suffocated. The scene was terrible and no effort could stop the mad rush of affrighted children. They came on pell mell, though, strangely, without much shouting, and soon two hundred and two of them wes knocked down and suffocated to death by the others trampling upon them. The greatest number of the bodies, which were badly mangled from trampling, laid seven or eight deep. Many victims and others who were not killed, had their clothing torn from their bodies, and this, together with the bleeding bodies of the unfortunates shows the terrible nature of the struggle. The ages of the children known to have been killed, ranged from 4 to 14 years. The excitement in the town when the news of the disaster spread was terrible. Great crowds of people rushed to the scene, until at least 20,000 persons surrounded the Hall. The feeling was so intense that the authorities ordered out the 68th Infantry to preserve order. The work of getting out the bodies of the victims was begun immediately. They were laid out in the hall, and the parents of those killed were admitted for the purpose of identifying the bodies of their children. The most heart rending scenes transpired while the work of identification was in progress. Mothers of the dead children constantly uttered shrieks, and many of them fainted on discovering their little ones.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.—The number for July abounds with most interesting and instructive reading. The Longest Span in the World," by A. V. Abbott, has fourteen illustrations of the Brooklyn Bridge, of which full details are given. Cornelius Mathews contributes "The Poet of Home—John Howard Payne"; this number also contains an unpublished story and poem by Payne. There is a sketch of "Assam," the great Tea Country of India; an article by Mrs. V. T. Polk, "San Antonio and its old Missions"; one by Marc Vallette, of peculiar interest, with illustrations of the "Strange Funeral Rites" in different countries. There are stories and sketches by Oscanyan N. Robinson etc.; several charming poems, and a miscellaney of a varied and pleasing character. The great serial "The Beautiful Countess of Clairvillle" is continued. "Winter Quarters" is the title of the colored frontispiece. Twenty-five cents a copy, $3 a year, postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

Legal Intelligence.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE PLAMONDON.

June, 16th, 1883.

Williams vs Nicholas.—The defentant Nicholas is a trader at the village of Sawyerville, and on the night of the 17th May, 1882, his store was broken into and a quantity of goods stolen. He offered a reward of $100 for information leading to the conviction of the thief.

Wm. B. Williams, the plaintiff, a few days afterwards, got on the track of the thief, and gave information to the defendant, who, however, neglected to prosecute and caused the offer of reward to be torn down.

The plaintiff then informed the High Constable who caused the arrest of the guilty party and he was convicted before the District Magistrate.

The plaintiff thereopon sued for the reward, and the defendant contested the action. The legal question involved in the case was whether an action would lie to recover a reward offered for the conviction of a criminal.

The Court was with the Plaintiff on this point and held that such an action was legal. The plaintiff was also entitled to succeed on all the other questions raised by the pleadings, and judgment went, therefore, in his favor, condemning the defendant to pay the amount sued for with costs. Camirand & Hurd, Attorneys for Plaintiff; J. W. Merry, Attorney for Defendant.

Ross et al vs Doak—Judgment for plaintiffs. Camirand & Hurd, Attorneys for plaintiffs; G. O. Doak, Attorney for Defendant.

Thomas et al, vs Coombie, vs Ames et al.—Ames, Holden & Co claimed by Opposition a certain peddlar's outfit, consisting of a horse, waggon, harness, etc., seized as belonging to Mrs. Fred. Hall, for rent due the plaintiffs, on premises leased the defendants at the village of Lennoxville.

The principal question in the case was whether the plaintiff had any lien on these effects for rent, admitting them to belong to Opposants.

It was denied in the pleadings that Opposants did own this property—but the evidence was against the plaintiffs on this point.

It was established, also, that the defendant Hall was away from home the greater part of the time with these articles—which were only transiently on the premises leased.

Under these circumstances the Court considered that there was no lien for rent and the opposition was therefore maintained with costs. Camirand & Hurd, Attorneys for Opposants; Hall, White & Cate, Attorneys for Plaintiff's.

MORE LAWYERS!—There are twenty applicants for admission to study, and twenty-five for admission to practice, at the bar examination of the Province of Quebec, which will take place on the 11th of July next. Montreal contributes nine of the applicants for admission and eight for practice.

POLITICAL.

A rumor is current that Mr. Nantel, M.P.P., will be given a place by the Goberriment and that the Hon. Mr. Mousseau will present himself in Terrebonne, where he expects opposition.

A Political "Joke."—L'Evenement of Quebec contains the following, under the heading "Fashionable Marriage": "Yesterday, at Ste. Rose, by "Grand Vicaire" Trudel, took place the marriage of Mr. Beaubien and Mr. Mercier. Witnesses, Messrs, Leflamme, Bellerose, &c. The happy peir left left on their wedding tour for Ste. Dorothee. Our best wishes follow them.

ONTARIO PRESS ASSOCIATION.

Their meeting will be held at the St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal, on the 7th of August, and next day the trip will continue to Quebec, where the members are to be the guests of the city and of the Press Association. Next day they proceed to the Saguenay, returning a few days later.

A Dalhousie, N. B., despatch says:—The salmon net fishing, so far this season, is on the whole fair, and the fish are very large. Some of the fishermen have done extraordinarily well. Rod fishing thus far is better than for years past in the rivers falling in the Bay des Chaleurs, and fish along the Gaspe coast are abundant.

Mr. Gladstone is said to be showing unmistakable symptoms of breaking down, and it is asserted that should the radical measures proposed by the advanced section of the Cabinet be carried, he will retire from public life.

N Hall, Esq., M. P., presented Mr. Doyle with a purse of $60, accompanied by well chosen remarks, the sentiments of which were heartily endorsed by those present; Mr. Doyle thanked his friends for their kindness and said he would strive to do his very best so that no discredit would fall upon this portion of the Dominion through him. The occasion was a pleasant one and manifested a feeling of warm interest in our representative who goes to uphold the prestige of our Eastern Townships marksmen among the best in the world. We wish him abundant success

The Owl's Head Mountain House, Lake Memphremagog.

Now that the holiday season is close upon us, we again direct the attention of our readers to the many advantages and attractions offered by this favorite summer resort, to which we referred at large some weeks ago. Under the management of Mr. A. C. Jennings, from 1858 to 1860, the Mountain House was a favorite resort for Sherbrooke people; and subsequently, from 1862 to 1867, one of the present proprietors, Mr. J. G. Elder, was associated with him. This gentlemen (Mr. Elder) now desires to again have the happiness of entertaining, with others, the guests of former years from Sherbrooke, whose entertainment will be his peculiar care and pleasure and whom he respectfully and cordially invites to visit the House. See the proprietors' advertisement in another column.

New Summer Resort.

We beg to direct the attention of any of our readers who may be in search of health, comfort, rest or recreation to the advertisement in another column of the Abenakis House, St. Francois Du Lac P. Q. The water of the Mineral Springs here is highly recommended by medical men for the cure of Rheumatism, nervousness and kindred ailments. The place is pleasantly situated amidst the the beautiful scenery of Yamaska County, and is easy of access by the S. E. R., or by boat; and among the other attractions may be mentioned splendid boating (in season,) pleasant drives, charming scenery, pure air, hot and cold mineral-water baths, post office, telegraph station, daily mail, courteous and obliging attendants good cookery and moderate terms.

Marbleton.

At a meeting of the Directors of Wolfe County Agricultural Society No 1, held on the 16th inst., it was decided to give ten prizes on best cultivated farms this year, instead of five as heretofore, and to hold the fall show of farm stock and produce at Dudswell Centre on Wednesday the 3rd day of October next. A. W. Oughtred, Sec.-Treas.

Cookshire.

We have not been inundated like our neighbours in Ohio but it seems rather on account of our hills and rocks than lack of water, for enough rain has fallen to float a fleet. The farmers have complained with good reason of the difficulty of getting in the crops, and the damage to grain sown in low-lying localities. We had tremendously heavy rain on the 11th and again on the 13th which has done a good deal of damage, washing out the roads and beating down newly sown fields and gardens. Things are very backward, even the grass. Fruit prospects are good and the season is so far advanced we may now hope all danger of frost is over but the nights are unusually cold for June.... A meeting of the Ladies' Missionary Association and Guild was held on the 6th, at Hon. J. H. Pope's, the next meeting of the Guild will be at Mrs. John Learneds, June 20th and the next Missionary and Guild conjointly at Mrs. Trigger's July 4th. The Guild appears to have made a prosperous beginning, the ladies have received a number of orders for articles, clothing, and also sewing enough to furnish employment for several meetings.... Mr. H. Coates has been around among the farmers bargaining for lambs but it is thought that prices will not be as high as last year, but this is uncertain.... On Thursday evening the village was made merry by the sound of wedding bells the eldest son of Mr. H. Osgood was united for life to Miss Laura Bailey.

Hayesville, Ohio, Feb. 11, 1880.
I am glad to say I have tried Hop Bitters, and never took anything that did me so much good. I only took two bottles and I would not take $100 for the good they did me. I recommend them to my patients, and get the best results from their use.

Public Farewell to the Rev. Dr. Duff.

Last evening a large number of members of the Congregational Church, together with many members of the other churches of the city, with their pastors, assembled in Plymouth Chapel to bid public farewell to the Rev. Dr. Duff on the eve of his departure for Europe.

The proceedings were opened by Mr. H. Hubbard, who briefly referred to the retirement of Dr. Duff, the manner in which his resignation had been regretfully acquiesced in by the congregation, and their desire to testify their esteem for their late pastor by some more tangible evidence than its expression, however kindly, in a mere letter. The result of that desire is the present meeting. The Hon. Mr. Robertson who was to preside is unfortunately too ill to be present, and the duty therefore devolved upon him (Mr. Hubbard.) He called on Mr. E. Hargrave to read an address which had been signed by Mr. Robertson on behalf of the congregation.

The address, which we shall give in full next week, was then read by Mr. Hargrave. At an appropriate moment during its lecture Mr. Hubbard handed Dr. Duff a purse which accompanied it and which contained about $450, subscribed within the congregation.

Dr. Duff, who was visibly affected, essayed to speak, but owing to excess of emotion and fatigue he was unable to do so for a few moments. The Rev. Dr. Reid in the meanwhile referred affectingly to his long and friendly intercourse with Dr. Duff, and concluded his address, which was also broken with emotion, by wishing Dr. Duff, not farewell, but goodbye—hoping that God would keep him in the hollow of his hand. Dr. Duff then spoke at some length. He referred to the kindly relations of the other clergymen of the city with him, to his past connection with his own congregation, and to the generous provision afforded him since his resignation three years ago, and he thanked them for the substantial present they now made him, which he cheerfully accepted as a token that their expression of goodwill was not mere sentiment. He concluded by thanking them on behalf of Mrs. Duff and himself for these kindly expressions, with the hope that in the course of a few months he would again have the pleasure of seeing them all; and he called upon the Rev. Mr. Cattanach, whom he had learned to love as a son, to say a few words.

The Rev. Mr. Cattanach, who was also much affected by the solemnity of the occasion, said he had always looked upon Dr. Duff as a father. He had learned not only to love but to trust him, and had on many occasions gone to him for advice and counsel, feeling that whatever he asked Dr. Duff would not send him away empty handed. Mr. Cattanach gave a most eloquent and interesting address which we regret to say want of space prevents our reproducing, and he concluded by wishing Dr. Duff God Speed and many years of health to continue the work he does so well.

Mr. A. Paton made a few practical and very appropriate remarks. He was inclined to look on the bright side of the matter. He thought it was not entirely sad. Dr. Duff, he hoped, would profit physically by again breathing his native air and treading his native heather. He hoped he would receive a right royal welcome from his relatives and friends in the old country, and he was sure if he ever returned among us he would be greeted with a right royal welcome from us also.

The Rev. Mr. Campbell did not, however, feel glad to be present. A feeling of sadness came over him when he thought of losing Dr. Duff, for he had always found him a faithful friend, and he would not say farewell but good bye. We may not meet again here, but we hope to do so in the hereafter.

The business of the evening being concluded, an abundance of refreshment, provided by the ladies, was served, and a very cordial and warm hearted gathering was brought to a close with music, and, by special desire of Dr. Duff, to whom it was a reminiscence of his wedding day, the singing by the assemblage of the second Paraphrase.

SILVER PLATING CO.

Established in the CITY OF SHERBROOKE

McCarthy's Block,

Opposite the City Market.

TABLE WARES of every description replated. Made as good as new at half the cost. Taylor's new improved Metal for Steel done on Table Cutlery. Common Steel Knives and Forks plated with this metal wear equal to the best silver plate, and cost less than half as much. It will not rust or tarnish when laid away, even though the place be damp. It saves the hard labor of scouring, which wears them out in one year more than it costs to have them plated. Boiled cabbage and vinegar, sweet or sour pickles, apples raw or cooked, peppersauce, tomatoes, eggs, preserves, lemon or rhubarb pies do not affect this plating in the least. It makes no difference how long it remains on the knife before being washed, nor will the knife rust if left in an iron sink for any length of time. This plating has been tested in the States in first-class Hotels and Restaurants and hundreds of families with entire satisfaction. It is warranted to wear five years in common use.
N. B.—This work is done by a practical plater of fifteen years' experience, and any work done by this Company that does not prove as represented will be replated free of charge, or the money refunded.

EARS FOR THE MILLION!

Foo Choo's Balsam of Shark's Oil

Positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness Known.

This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARDON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address, at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear What the Deaf Say!

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefitted.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

" Its virtues are UNQUESTIONABLE and its CURATIVE CHARACTER ABSOLUTE, AS THE WRITER CAN PERSONALLY TESTIFY, BOTH FROM EXPERIENCE AND OBSERVATION. Write at once to HAYLOCK & JENNEY, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1.00, and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—Editor of Mercantile Review.

The New Brunswick Crops.

Mr. MacNutt, the editor of the Farmer, has returned from an agricultural tour of Carleton Co. He expressed himself pleased with the condition of the crops in that fertile section, but laments the backward state of spring plowing which he fears will expose the potato crop, especially the late varieties, to the baneful influence of September frosts. Mr. M. was greatly pleased with the forward condition of turnips, beets and asparagus, but deplores the fact that the young ladies of Woodstock insist on bronze and crimson combinations and wear crushed blueberry satin ribbon bows at their throat with small pumpkin-blossoms pompons as pendants. Oats are backward, but Mr. MacNutt is charmed with the style of morning wrappers now worn at Woodstock, which are of blue Eolienne and pinksurah marvellieuxover a pink plastron apron with full ruching at the neck and finished at the waist with a green plaited ruffle. Stockings are striped cross-wise and length-wise and have imitation blue-bottle bugs to match the toilet. The onion yield, Mr. MacNutt fears, will be a total failure.—St. John, N. B., News.

How to Rest and Sleep.

Dr. Sargent discussed recently the question of the importance of rest and sleep for men in training and for students. A distinction should be made, said the lecturer, between rest and what is usually called sleep. Recreation, in the sense of "building anew," is rest. So often a mere change in local condition is better for a man than complete rest or sleep; a change of activity is in itself rest. The Indians when tired of walking rest themselves by running. This principle is to often disregarded by students and by men who are training for any particular object. Boating men many times fail to recognize the importance of general training, but think their whole duties lies in the direct exercise of rowing or in absolute rest. The value of indirect training is not to be overestimated. It is noticeable that men who do not devote themselves exclusively to one branch of training, but aim at a general physical development, often excel in their own specialties men who only train for one branch of athletics. The best examples of such facts, says Dr. Sargent, were to be seen in the superior physical condition of the men now in training for the general excellence prize. The same rule holds good in matters of the intellect. Variety of studies is an excellent thing. A man who devotes himself to only one or two subjects can hardly be said to be worthy of a college degree.

As to the matter of sleeplessless; muscular exertion, if not excessive, induces sleep. Thus it is often a good plan for men troubled with sleeplessness to exercise in the evening before retiring. Men should be warned against the use of drugs to cure sleeplessness. The sleep thereby induced is not genuine sleep. After any violent or unusual exercise a warm bath is to be highly recommended before retiring. The practice of bathing the feet alone is a doubtful one, however. It is, in general, best not to be dependent upon any artificial condition to secure sleep. One should aim for a complete mastery over himself in such matters, so that he can command sleep at will and thus economize time and force. By such a course the usual average of his sleep can be reduced to seven or six and a half hours with safety. The habit of reading one's self to sleep is to be deprecated, since it may become a troublesome one and interfere sadly with serious study. It is doubtful whether the sleep gained before twelve o'clock is of any more value than that afterward. The conditions favorable to sleep then are not so many.—Harvard Herald.

Curious Stories about Animals.

A rooster recently deserted his native barnyard near Warrenton, Va., and went to live in the woods with a lot of wild turkeys. He crows as usual every morning, and thus his master learns where the wild turkeys are, and so is able to have roast turkey as often as he wants it.

Among John C. Long's chickens at Columbia City, Ind., was a hen with a brood of little ones. Her coop had been raised high enough for her to pass in and out by means of a small piece of board. A large owl entered, and the frightened hen and her brood hastily ran out. The hen then flew against the prop, which fell, and made the owl a prisoner.

An Irish setter belonging to C. W. Sproul, of Cartersville, Ga., scented a covey of birds, and came to a dead set right on the track of the Cherokee Railway just as a passenger train was approaching at full speed. Some negroes endeavored to drive the dog away, but the animal was trained never to flush birds, and could not be coaxed or driven from his post, but stood his ground till the engine struck and killed him.

In Georgia an old custom is still in vogue of carrying dogs to church. In the Presbyterian Church in Macon, a ferocious bulldog entered and curled himself up at his mistress's feet. After awhile, as the preacher began to warm up, and his voice rose to an unusually high pitch, the dog started for the minister, but his mistress coaxed him back. In the Methodist Church in Albany, Ga., a pointer dog lay curled up for a nap near the pulpit. As the preacher became emphatic he struck the Bible a resounding whack. The dog jumped up with a yelp that startled the congregation and went galloping away.

Drowning a bear was a feat accomplished by James Humphrey, of Gohoes. While rowing on Long Lake he saw a bear on a small island in the middle of the lake. He thus describes what followed: "I jumped ashore and loaded up with a lot of stones. I had just got back to the boat, when Fred shouted, 'Here he comes.' I gave the bear a fusilade of rocks, but he paid no attention to them, but started for the other shore. We followed, and I peppered him pretty lively with the rocks, and finally drove him back again to the island. He again started for the other side. We headed him back with stones, and went for him. I gave him one that luckily stunned him. Before he recovered I grabbed him by the ears and held his head under water until he was dead. The bear weighed 200 pounds."

Wrecked Manhood.

Victims of excessive indulgence, of youthful indiscretions and pernicious solitary practices, suffering from Premature Decay or old age, Nervous Debility, Lack of Self Confidence, Impaired Memory, Loss of Manly Powers, and kindred symptoms, should send stamp for large illustrated treatise, giving means of certain cure, with numerous testimonials. Address World's Despensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y.

Patrick and Luck had been tarrying long at the native wine of the country—Irish whisky—and Patrick was gloomy and nervous next day as they walked along the street. Presently two cats ran across the pavement before them. Nothing was said for a few moments, when Patrick, in tones of studied unconcern and forced calmness, said, "Did you see that cat?"—Why, yes," answered Lucke, "there were two." Patrick sighed, a grateful, happy sigh. "By jabers!" he exclaimed, "I thought there were two myself, but I was afraid to say so."

Spider Lake and Vicinity.

The following is from a correspondent of the Montreal Witness.

Having just come into the house after spending a very enjoyable hour or more in cruising around the lake and viewing the scenery, which, by the way, seems to me to be more beautiful each succeeding spring, it has just occured to my mind to write a few lines about this place which would, perhaps, be ot some interest, to at least, a few of the many readers of the Witness.

Kake Maccannamack, or better known as Spider Lake, is situated two thirds of a mile on the east side of the head of Lake Megantic. It is a little over three miles long and averages a mile wide. With its numerous bays and with the small island in the centre it is in fact a place "of beauty and a joy forever."

On the east, south and west side the mountains of Maine and New Hampshire seem but a stone's throw away, but in reality are from three to fifteen miles distant from the lake. The cutting through the woods that marks the boundary between the State of Maine and Canada, can be distinctly seen from different parts of the lake. Many on seeing the boundary at a distance and wishing to make a closer inspection, take a walk through the woods—the distance being to the nearest point two and a-half miles. Some parties on returning have made the remark, that there was nothing much to see, excepting a sort of a cutting and an iron post here and there. I have no doubt but those making such a remark expected to see a high fence or a rope to show Uncle Sam that thus far and no further was he to come.

The shores of Spider Lake are dotted on every hand with houses principally belonging to settlers. Dr. Bishop, of Agnes Village, has just completed a very fine summer residence on the south shore of the lake. "Anglers' Retreat" is somewhat hidden from view, owing to a large crop of would be fishing rods growing about the place. The fishing this spring, so far, has been all that could be desired. Parties who were out here last summer on returning this year will find many very great improvements in the place, noticeably among others are the new wharves on Lake Megantic. The steamer "Lena" has received a new dress with a few artistic touches added to it of orange and blue. Regular trips are now made for the accommodation of passengers on the following days: Monday, Thursday and Saturday, leaving the head of the lake at 8 a. m., returning leaving Chaudiere at 4 p. m. The work on making new roads has at last been started. According to the by-law passed by the council at their meeting, the roads on the first five ranges in Ditchfield are to be made passable by 1st September. Each tax payer to make a road or cause it to be made at his own expense in front of his property.

Wages at the several saw mills are a little better this year than last. Lumber has gone up in price.

New settlers are constantly coming in, several from Montreal having arrived lately, and they all seem to be well satisfied with the place.

Though here as well as other bush townships has been spoken against in the columns of the Witness by those who, were they to have paid a visit to the several places spoken of, Ditchfield in particular, would have seen for them selves that though we may not become millionaires here, we have every prospect of making for ourselves and families a comfortable living and a good home. What more do we need than this?

A line or two from Shakespeare and then I have done:

Hath not old customs made this life more sweet
Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods
More free from peril than the envious court?
And this, our life, exempt from public haunts
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running books,
Sermons in stones, and good in everything.

An Addition to the Empire.

The cable brings the interesting information that the Bechuanas, a people occupying a large portion of South Africa, have voluntarily joined their country to the Cape Colony, and that they are now practically subjects of Queen Victoria. The proposition, it is said, was a complete surprise to the Cape authorities and to the Home Government, as the matter had never even been discussed. It was a spontaneous offer from the chiefs of the Bechuanas. They have, it appears, long been worried by their neighbours, the Boers, and, rather than submit to the annoyance any longer, they determined to hand their country over to Great Britain. The Bechuanas, or Betjuans, occupy an extensive territory north of the Orange Free States, and west of the Transvaal. It extends from 23° to 29° east longitude, and from 28° south latitude to beyond the tropic of Capricorn. They are said to be an exceedingly harmless and peacably inclined people, differing in this respect from the majority of the African nations. They are divided into many tribes under chiefs, who exercise a kind of patriarchial authority over them. The chiefs meet in council occasionally to arrange matters of general interest. In fact, it appears to be a confederacy after the style of the Six Nation Indians of this country. There are several towns in the country and innumerable villages. In fact, taking the Bechuanas for all in all, they are probably the most advanced, the most peaceful, and the most prosperous of all the nations of the South African continent. That such a people, owning such a rich and valuable country, should voluntarily and unanimously seek to be annexed to the British Empire, is one of the most singular incidents in history.

ARE YOU GOING TO TRAVEL?

Don't forget a supply of that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is a superior remedy for sea sickness, and a positive cure for all bowel complaints induced by bad water, change of diet or of climate. Whether at home or abroad it should be kept at hand in case of emergency.

At a young ladies' debating club the following question was lately discussed: —Which gives a girl most pleasure—to hear herself praised, or to hear another girl run down. No decision was arrived at.

Singers and Public Speakers should use Downs' Elixir, as it removes hoarseness and increases the power of the voice. 17tf

Farm and Garden.

Heavy Farm Tools.

As a general thing, says a sensible writer, all of our farm tools are too heavy. Generally speaking, the farm waggon that will bear up under a ton weight with ease, is plenty heavy enough for all practical purposes to which a farm waggon should be put. If you want to haul two tons, it is far better and cheaper in the end to make two loads of it. The saving in horse flesh and feed will in a few years amount to enough to buy a new one and have something left for profit. If you are about ordering a new waggon, have it made light and of the best material, and you will never regret it.

The Farmer.

There is a quiet about the life of a farmer, and a hope of a serene old age, that no other business or profession can promise. A professional man is doomed some time to feel his powers are wanting. He is doomed to see younger and stronger men pass him in the race of life. He looks forward to an old age of intellectual mediocrity. He will be last where once he was first. But the farmer goes, as it were, into partnership with trees and flowers —he breathes the sweet air of fields. There is no constant and frightful strain upon his mind. His nights are filled with sleep and rest. He watches his flocks and herds as they feed upon the green hilly slopes. He hears the pleasant rain fall upon the waving corn, and the trees he planted in his south field rustle about him as he plants others for children yet to be.

Thinning Roots.

One can form but an imperfect estimate of the value of a field of roots by knowing the weight of the largest one grown. Very large roots do not mean very large returns; medium-sized roots and more of them is a more paying crop. Other things remaining the same, the size of the roots depends upon the thinning. At this season of the year, when the roots are growing vigorously, they should be thinned so that they shall have a space between them in the rows equal to their own diameter, and no more. It is better for the roots to be ten than fourteen inches apart in the rows. If the thinning be carried beyond this, they grow large and coarse, and will be much less valuable as food than the smaller ones.

A Remedy For Potato Bugs.

The Troy Press tells of a farmer who tried a new remedy for potato bugs with success. He procured a number of boards and placed them here and there among his potatoes, and on these boards were placed raw potatoes sliced. At noon on the first day of the experiment he and his hired men found every piece of potato covered with bugs. The men killed this crop, and at night another crop was killed though not so large, and in a week not a bug could be seen, and his trouble with bugs after this was comparatively small. In the spring, he says, is the best time to attend to bugs, as a spring bug, he understands, breeds from 200 to 300 during the potato season. He thinks it would be a good plan to dip the piece of potato in paris green, as it would save the work of killing the bugs.

Wash For Fruit Trees.

The object in applying a wash to trees is not so much to remove the rough and scaly outer bark as to destroy the parasitic plants and insects which adhere to the surface of the bark, and sap the vitality of the tree by a constant drain upon the circulation current. "One form of wash," says the Western Farmer, "is made by adding one pound of whale-oil soap to three gallons of warm water, stirring well and applying with a stiff broom or brush. The trunk should be rubbed thoroughly and hard, to remove as much as possible of loose bark, that the liquid may reach every part of the surface. Another good wash is a weak lye from wood ashes. A third wash is made by adding two quarts of soft water to one gallon of common soft soap. Place these in a vessel over the fire, and when warm the soap and water are readily combined by stirring, and should be applied in the same manner as the whale-oil application. The best results are obtained by washing the tree about three times during the season, applying the first in March or April, the second in June, and the last in August. The insect—as well as moss—will be effectually removed, leaving the bark in a fine, healthy condition."
