PONTIAC - TEMISCAMINGUE, GOING, GOING

Good old Pontiac-Temiscamingue electoral district is doomed no matter what happens on Saturday. This Saturday is the day the maps are to be published which describe the new electoral boundaries to be proposed to Parliament.

Before they become law there will be certain statutory delays. First there are 23 days during which anyone may lodge a complaint against the new lines; then there will be public hearings in various parts of every province where objections may be brought and then a complete report will be made to Parliament where, after due discussion, any ten Members may appeal any redistribution.

Remembering the flag debate and other such measures, and their arduous way through parliament, it is doubtful whether the new electoral lines will be finalized until late next Fall, if even this year at all.

There seem to be two local possibilities at the moment. First there was the preliminary proposal that Temiscamingue and that part of Pontiac north and west of the Litchfield - Clarendon line would be added to Villeneuve and given another name. To this proposal our own Member, the Hon. Paul Martineau, has voiced strong disapproval. Nothing can be gained, and much lost, he feels, by disregarding the traditional and historic County boundaries of Pontiac.

To keep the County of Pontiac together electorally, the next proposal is that whatever is left of Gatineau when certain urban parts of that County are chopped off be added to Pontiac, which would be left intact.

Keeping the Pontiac-Temiscamingue riding as an entity seems to be out of the question and probably all for the best considering the diversity of interests between the two. But if the scheme to split Pontiac down the middle gains any ground, Paul will have the support of every man in the County in his opposition to the move.

Alternately, if Pontiac County is left together and pieces of Gatineau are added, the prospect is much better. Saturday's maps will tell the story to a certain degree.

Meanwhile, Returning Officer Denzil Moodie has the gears ready to turn for an election no matter when it is called. If this happens before the redistribution of electoral boundaries becomes law then the old ones will be used and Pontiac-Temiscamingue will vote together for one last time. If the changes take place before an election is called each prospective Member will face an entirely new prospective constituency.

This prospect alone could easily force an election before Fall. The mere prospect of campaigning in unknown territory should scare the sitting Members (who want to return to Parliament) into an early election.

Those Members who are not planning to campaign another time may take another attitude but the majority will in all likelihood want at least one more session with their old ridings.

Then, with the new map pasted on their office walls, they will commence the earnest study of their new bailiwicks and all the familiar ridings such as Pontiac-Temiscamingue will belong to history.

Watchtower convention

The Bible a safeguard against moral breakdown

792 people at the Carleton Place High School Auditorium on Sunday afternoon heard Mr. Laurier Saumur speak on the subject "The Moral Breakdown—What Can Be Done About It?" As the climax of a three-day convention held by Jehovah's Witnesses of the Ottawa Valley.

The speaker forcefully showed evidences of a complete moral breakdown within our present-day society, not limited in its shocking aspects to sexual immorality but also to lack of business integrity and employee honesty, besides a breakdown in family life. "No generation has had such a desperate need of moral and spiritual strength to meet a crisis as ours does, yet spiritually and morally this generation is one of the weakest," said Mr. Saumur.

He said that adherence to

Christian standards and Bible principles was a safeguard to the individual at the present time and that the establishing of God's kingdom will actually bring an end to the moral breakdown by the removal of the very causes, visible and invisible.

Finally, Saumur urged all present to be an advocate of Bible counsel and then step by step, grow in the knowledge and practice of God's standard with those who love righteousness.

Mr. A. Dmytryshyn, presiding minister of the Shawville congregation; Mr. D. L. Walters, circuit supervisor of Jehovah's Witnesses for Ottawa and the Valley; and Mr. Saumur, all spoke on themes relative to Biblical principles and their application to our present-day life.

Country Notes

By Walker Riley,

Macdonald College, Agricultural Extension

Recently, I pulled together sufficient reasons to justify a trip around the Chateaugay Valley. I planned for twelve calls, and actually made six which were still twice as many as I honestly expected to do. But it turned out there was a lot happening in the Valley that day.

In the first place, it was the day Armand Pinsonneault dispersed his Holstein herd by auction. Mr. Pinsonneault has been very active in purebred Holstein circles, both in the provincial and national organizations, and I understand that it is poor health and lack of help that has forced him to retire.

I don't like dispersal sales. There is something awfully final about them. To sell out is like plunging into an ice-cold lake in slow motion. Once you have jumped off, there is no turning back. You feel the water slowly, terribly slowly, closing over you. You are not sure if it is minutes, hours or a lifetime but you emerge dazed into a world familiar but awfully strange.

We went through two of them. Once, when I came home from overseas and decided with naive courage that my father's herd of Dual-Purpose Short-horns should be replaced with Holsteins, and again twelve years later when I sold that herd to go back to school.

Armand's sale didn't go as well as many expected. The top price $605, was paid by Jean St. Pierre from Grenville for a typey five-year-old cow. The sale average was $324 which was not too bad when you consider the number of young stock included. Three U.S. buyers were on hand, but they took home only two heifers. The herd was on R.O.P., fully accredited and vaccinated.

Another call was at the farm of Turkeys Deluxe, Dewittville, to take pictures of young poults for the Macdonald Farm Journal. I found the owners, Mrs. Dorothy Catto and Miss Winnie Rowles, calmly waiting for a truck to arrive to take their entire flock of breeding turkeys to market right at the peak of their production.

It must have been a painful decision. But the brooder houses were full of poults, more than sufficient for their own use, the incubators loaded with eggs, and the prospects of further sales of poults this spring very poor for their special kind of bird. So perhaps there was really no choice. It's a sign of our changing turkey business.

Mrs. Catto and Miss Rowles specialize in small, well-finished turkeys which they take right through to full maturity at 24 weeks. For these, they have developed an exclusive retail trade in Montreal which uses all the grown birds they can handle.

But most of the remarkable growth of the industry in Quebec has been in turkey broilers—potentially large birds which are killed at a few weeks of age. As Miss Rowles explains it, these producers want poults which "eat very little, grow very large very quickly". In addition, they want them in large batches, three thousand and more at a time.

Turkey production in Quebec has really boomed since the last war. From a standing start, it reached nearly two million birds in 1961. And still that supplies less than half of the province's consumption. Most of this expansion appears to have been in the form of turkey broilers. In Western Canada, two thirds are raised to maturity, I suppose, because of the ready availability of grain.

However, the prairies may not have a real advantage as far as seed is concerned. Dr. Nikolaiczuk, chairman of the Poultry Department at the College, says that eastern-grown corn is proving to be a cheaper source of feed energy than freight-subsidized western wheat. It seems to me that a poultry farm (or a pig farm tied closely to grain corn or barley production would make an unbeatable enterprise.

I found the Sproules—father Douglas and son Harley—hard at it planting canning peas. May 5 is the earliest date they can remember seeding this crop. It will be early in July, then, when the crop goes to the cannery. This field has been underseeded with Brome and alfalfa. I would have expected the new seedlings to smother, but Harley says the practice has been quite successful.

"Wink" Keeler reports that seeding was finished at the Provincial Seed Farm on May 7. That includes some of the seed corn. The cereal trial plots around the country, including the new location in Pontiac County, are finished also.
