Given the volume of material herein (its Table of Contents - broken down in order of the above list of Acts - below measures 4 pages long, almost making it unwieldy) you are certainly encouraged to open multiple independent Google tabs of this Googlebook and refer through them for use.
You can also perform key-word searches within via the lower left of this Googlebook page.

Canadian Bankruptcy/Insolvency, Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act Law: Provisions, Precedents and Materials
(a.k.a. "Lyndon goes into bankruptcy...")

Foreword

This compilation of materials came as result of my long-standing interest in bankruptcy and the Canadian mechanics of the law related thereto.

I first was introduced to the topic through a Concordia University class "Creditors Rights", in 1992, by David Franklin Ad E., BCL, of the firm Franklin and Franklin. He, as one aspect of his legal career, had become extremely knowledgeable on this environment since that was one of the fields he chose to discipline his practice to. Upon initially reviewing the Acts I quickly noticed that there had been considerable evolution in the statutes however the relative structure remained the same: various cases had happened since 1992, various government initiatives and refinements...

The area of bankruptcy and insolvency has become more complex in Canada in the intervening decades since then due to the nature of legal obligations, financial instruments and structuring a company can enter into with its creditors. And the statute law has tried to keep up.

This compilation consists of the relevant Acts:

The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (w select case)
The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Rules
The Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (w select case)
The Orderly Payment of Debts Regulations[1]
The Ontario Fraudulent Conveyances Act (w/ select case).

and the latest Parliamentary Review of our insolvency laws

I wanted to compile a relevant "internet book" on this subject and here is where this project split from others out there: I purposefully used CANLII.org's database of cases from across the country to, what I call, do a ranking search: I sought to replicate here only those cases that have consider jurisprudential value as indicated as a result of a key-word search in the CANLII.org database. I did this since I suspected that these are the cases that form the back-bone of the application of the Acts/key-words involved and by doing so I would ignore those "exceptions to the rule" and reproduce only those instances where courts have considerably cited case authority for what they have decided (the database allows rank by "most cited"). These are the cases I used so you should understand that these are not all the cases on the topic, but, at 205, I think they represent fairly accurately the foundation issues in the environment today. I did, however, limit my search to only those cases available through CANLII.org.

I also based this compilation on case in effort to acclimatize you to researching case yourself. I could have condensed them down to digests and placed them as mere foot-notes to the provisions they deal with but I wanted you to develop the ability, and patience, to read case yourself. Obviously, I believe that anyone can read case, with practice, to get the most out of it and have refused to paraphrase in my words the important aspects of the cases for purposes of brevity. I'd like you to note that all these cases are in

1 I apologize for not also including the Winding Up and Restructuring Act as well as a provincial Fraudulent Conveyance Act or Personal Property Security Act which are also somewhat relevant to the environment however I wanted to cover, in this first edition, as much meaningful content as possible and the WURA/FCA/PPSA shall be processed in a later edition.

CANLII.org's database and I have merely taken those that rank at the top of their issues but you are certainly encouraged to research yourself.

The key-words I used were:
"bankruptcy and insolvency'
"CCAA"
"secured creditor" "bankruptcy and insolvency"
"proposal" "bankruptcy and insolvency"
"trustee" "bankruptcy and insolvency"
"official receiver" "bankruptcy and insolvency"
"consumer proposal"

I have also reproduced the Superintendent's Directives ("SB Directive") for more refinement of focus and for your convenience. As well, I have included Canada Revenue Agency Internal Operations manuals ("CRA Internal Operations Manuals") on the subjects of: bankruptcy, proposals, receiverships and CCAA proceedings, available for public consultation in any CRA TSO, to allow you to be aware of some ancillary aspects which affect the environment. PLEASE NOTE IN RESPECT OF THESE TWO REGARDS THAT I AM NOT AFFILIATED WITH ANY GOVERNMENT OF CANADA OFFICE.

This is a rather lengthy reproduction of the Acts, the relevant Regs, the Superintendent's Directives, and these first 205 cases; it measures 2900 pages plus. Each case follows the provision in the relevant Act that it considers. Using server speed of the internet it should be quickly accessible. I have assumed that you have a minimal ability to read the provisions in the relevant law yourself - the provisions are the law and you should read acutely to gain its full benefit.

At the beginning of each Division of the relevant Act I have also tried to formulate my own shorter commentary about what the Division is about - paraphrased: you are certainly encouraged to read the relevant provisions within the Division itself to determine finer more pertinent insight. (I will be also adding more as time goes by.)

I must apologize, also, for the "superficiality" of this project. It's basically just a compilation of case coupled with the relevant Acts, in one source though it should give you a foundation upon which to further your own interest through the avenues you choose, which should include purchase of other tomes on the subject.

This project came about as a desire that I had to fill a vacuum I feel exists on the net: the Acts are easily accessible on Justice Canada's web-site, the Superintendent's Directives are easily accessible on that Office's web-site (along with a breadth of other material which I definitely encourage you to extensively refer to), and the case can be easily reviewed on CANLII.org's site, however, by coupling them together I think, hope, I have added some ease for you to learn the topic, my sole objective.

This "nominal" "work" is in recognition of David Franklin Ad. E BCL of the firm Franklin and Franklin who I met at Concordia University as a Business Law professor as well as in Creditors' Rights in my final semester in obtaining my Bachelor of Commerce in Accountancy. David epitomizes the publicly minded lawyer who, I think, through his on-going commitment in giving creditors his best insight, has one of the biggest hearts of an individual I have ever met, given I think, his disdain for, substantively, debtors who have chosen routes to disenfranchise the sincere sentiment granted to them by their creditors. He has written several in-depth books on creditor realization, available through Carswell. He has contributed to his community for more years than anyone can probably count, formally as a lawyer and informally as an outstanding citizen, also to Concordia U. for 45 plus years through his teaching where he has forever encouraged his students to be their best by wittily posing aspects of questions, (preparing them the best he can - which is a lot - for their careers), that in my history, some didn't grasp as they provided answers.

Properly, through David Franklin's practice of law, he obtained his Ad. E. for excellence in the continuous practice, and, continues to teach. If you want to learn creditor law in Canada (with international aspects as well), contact David Franklin, Ad. E. BCL.

I'd also like to thank my extended family.

And of course, law enforcement in Canada/USA who will simply be doing their job attending to a former "client-continent" of mine whose whole "disgusting spectacle" of a life from 1993 to present consisted of succeeding in breaking as many laws as possible: "a career con-guy".

Hope you like.

SENIOR REGISTRAR GOLDBERG

[1] Counsel for Park City Products Ltd.'s trustee in bankruptcy is in possession of a substantial tax refund which is being held in trust pending the disposition of the claims of Canada Safeway Ltd. and TaxSave Consultants Ltd. Both have appealed from the trustee's disallowances of their claims.

Background

[2] Park City Products Ltd. (Park City) manufactured pet food. One of its customers was Canada Safeway Ltd. (Safeway).

[3] Prior to May 1, 1987 The Excise Tax Act provided that manufacturers were liable for payment of federal sales tax (FST). The Excise Tax Act was amended in that after May 1, 1987, the liability for payment of FST moved from the manufacturer, in this case, Park City, to its customers as deemed manufacturers, in this case, Safeway. A manufacturer could continue to be obligated to remit FST under a new Alternative Tax Accounting Method for Retailers/Wholesalers, if an agreement to use this alternate method was made.

[4] Between May 1, 1989 and December 31, 1990 Park City charged Safeway FST on its invoices; and Safeway paid $112,827.10 as a result. Park City remitted that amount to Revenue Canada.

[5] Park City retained TaxSave Consultants Ltd. (TaxSave) to obtain a refund of the tax paid. TaxSave is a business which identifies ways for clients to recover, among other types of taxes, federal sales taxes. Once retained by a client by way of contingency agreement, TaxSave will consult with the relevant taxing authority in an attempt to recover the taxes. If the consultations are unsuccessful, Tax Save may retain counsel to litigate the matter. If TaxSave is unsuccessful in obtaining a refund of tax then the client is not charged for the services provided by TaxSave. However, if TaxSave is successful, then a fee based on a percentage of the amount recovered is payable to TaxSave by the client pursuant to the contingency agreement.

[6] Park City entered into contingency agreements with TaxSave (in 1987 and 1991) to investigate and pursue a refund of FST from the Government of Canada. Under the agreements with TaxSave, Park City agreed to pay TaxSave a fee of fifty percent of any amounts recovered. Funded by TaxSave, Park City applied for a refund of the FST it had paid, claiming that its pet food was exempt from tax pursuant to paragraph 50(5)(k) of The Excise Tax Act. The Minister of National Revenue disallowed the application on the ground that Park City's customers had elected to use the Alternative Tax Accounting Method which would require the seller to remit taxes collected on otherwise exempt sales. Park City appealed. In September, 1993 the Canadian International Trade Tribunal (CITT) allowed the appeal, finding that Park City was entitled to a refund of the FST paid. The tribunal held that there was insufficient evidence to justify the Minister of National Revenue's conclusion that at the time at which the tax in issue had been remitted to Revenue Canada, there was an agreement between Park City and the purchasers of its food to use the Alternative Tax Accounting Method. The Government of Canada appealed this decision.

[7] In April 1999 Park City, by its then receiver, BDO Dunwoody Ltd. made an assignment in bankruptcy.

[8] In November, 1999 the Government of Canada discontinued it appeal of the CITT decision.

[9] In March, 2000, the Government of Canada paid $285,942.49, being the refund, plus interest, to counsel for Park City's trustee in bankruptcy to be held in trust pending the claims made by TaxSave and Canada Safeway regarding the tax refund. These claims were the subject of four motions heard together:

1. a motion by TaxSave appealing the trustee's disallowance of its claim;
2. a motion by Safeway appealing the trustee's disallowance of its claim based on trust;
3. a motion by Safeway extending the time to file an appeal of the trustee's disallowance of its debt claim;
4. a motion by Safeway appealing the trustee's disallowance of its debt claim.

TaxSave's Appeal

[10] TaxSave's employees and consultants spent time and money to pursue the tax refund. TaxSave also retained counsel to represent Park City before the CITT, at a cost to TaxSave of over $42,000.00. As a result of the services provided and paid for by TaxSave, the tax, plus interest, was refunded. TaxSave's claim to fifty percent of the amount refunded was disputed by the trustee. This motion is the appeal from the trustee's decision.

[11] TaxSave claims entitlement to fifty percent of the refund on the basis of the principle in Re Condon, Ex parte James (1974), 9 Ch. App. 609 (C.A.). In that case money obtained by an execution creditor prior to the bankruptcy was paid to the trustee under a mistake of law, following threats by the solicitors for the trustee of proceeding against the creditor if the money was not so paid. The court held that the general rule that relief could not be given for a mistake of law should not be pressed too far, and ordered the money to be repaid by the trustee to the execution creditor. James, L.J. stated at p. 614:

I am of the opinion that a trustee in bankruptcy is an officer of the Court. He has inquisitorial powers given him by the Court, and the Court regards him as its officer, and he is to hold money in his hands upon trust for its equitable distribution among the creditors. The Court, then, finding that he has in his hands money which in equity belongs to some one else, ought to set an example to the world by paying it to the person really entitled to it. In my opinion, the Court of Bankruptcy ought to be as honest as other people.

[12] The principle in Ex parte James is not limited in its application to cases of money paid under mistakes of law. The principle has been applied to give relief in the following cases cited by TaxSave:

1. Re Tyler [1904-07] All E.R. Rep. 181 (C.A.): The court applied Ex Part James to reimburse a bankrupt's widow who had paid the bankrupt's life insurance premiums before and after bankruptcy. The trustee had knowledge that the wife had been paying the premiums during the bankruptcy until the bankrupt's death. The court would not allow its officer, the trustee, "to do a thing which from a moral point of view would be dishonest" (at p. 183), that is, to retain the proceeds of the insurance without reimbursing the widow for the amounts paid by her for premiums.
2. Re Hardy; Price Waterhouse Limited v A.E. LePage Real Estate Services Limited (1984), 51 C.B.R. 21 (N.S.S.C.): The court applied Ex parte James to require a trustee to pay a real estate agent his commission where the agent had, prior to bankruptcy, developed the interest of a prospective purchaser for a property which formed part of the bankrupt's estate. A binding agreement had not been made prior to the bankruptcy. After the bankruptcy the trustee negotiated a sale directly with the purchaser and did not notify the agent of the sale or pay a commission. The court stated that the trustee acted without regard to the efforts and services provided by the agent, and ordered the trustee to pay the agent's commission.
3. Re Giorgio Galleria Ltd. [1995] B.C.J. No. 239 (B.C.S.C.): Ex parte James was applied to protect a bailiff's claim for fees. The bailiff had delivered distrained goods to the trustee, but was unable to come within s. 73(4) of The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (B.I.A.), which otherwise would have protected his claim for fees, because the goods had been the subject of security under the Bank Act (Canada). The court held that since the plaintiff's efforts had enriched the estate by preserving the assets for the trustee, the trustee should pay the bailiff's costs. Humphries, J. stated at p. 5:

A trustee in bankruptcy is an officer of the court and has imposed upon him an obligation to act fairly and justly, and to do what is morally right and honest.

4. Re Stormont Chemicals Ltd. reflex, (1993), 20 C.B.R. (3d) 188 (Ont.G.D.): The court applied Ex parte James to protect a former debtor of the bankrupt business. That debtor had paid the money it owed to the bankrupt company, but, in error, had also paid the same amount of money pursuant to a garnishment order. The trustee disallowed the claim for repayment of the money paid pursuant to the garnishee. The court applied the rule in Ex parte James, stating that to permit the trustee to retain the funds paid pursuant to the garnishee would mean that the bankrupt company would have been paid twice for the same debt, and that there was an element of unfairness in the trustee insisting on retaining those funds.

5. Re Sefel Geophysical Ltd. (1998) 70 C.B.R. 97 (Alta Q.B.): Ex parte James was applied to protect the interests of U.S. creditors of a Canadian company. The Canadian company, in financial difficulty, had proposed a plan of arrangement under the Companies Creditor Arrangement Act (CCAA). It had obtained a stay of proceedings from Canadian creditors and applied for a stay in the U.S. The U.S. court granted a stay against U.S. creditors who had preferred status in the U.S. This was done in the mistaken belief that the U.S. creditors would have similar standing in the Canadian proceedings. The CCAA arrangement failed and the Canadian company was adjudged bankrupt. The court applied *Ex parte Jame*s to give preferred status to the U.S. creditors, because the majority of the assets available for distribution originated in the U.S. and had only become available to the Canadian trustee as a result of the U.S. court's stay, which had been made on the understanding that the U.S. creditors would have preferred status.

[13] TaxSave argues that but for the efforts of TaxSave and the significant costs it incurred in pursuing the FST refund, no refund would have been issued to Park City; and therefore, the estate has been enriched at the expense of TaxSave. It says that by refusing to pay the compensation owed to TaxSave pursuant to the contingency agreements, the trustee is taking advantage of the services provided by TaxSave without paying any compensation whatsoever to TaxSave. As such, it argues, the trustee is acting unfairly, unjustly or immorally in the administration of Park City's estate, contrary to the rule in Ex parte James.

[14] In considering TaxSave's appeal, I begin by agreeing with the trustee that TaxSave does not have any right or remedy in the refund itself. TaxSave is an unsecured creditor. There is nothing in the contingency agreements which purports to assign fifty percent of the refund to TaxSave. The agreements provide that the fee payable by Park City to TaxSave becomes payable "when the refund has been received (by Park City) by way of cheque, credit from suppliers or reduction of accrued taxes or other amounts". This supports the argument that Park City's obligation to TaxSave was that the fee would become payable when a refund or equivalent credit was obtained. The agreements gave TaxSave no security interest in any refund.

[15] In any event, a Crown debt such as a tax refund is not assignable: The Financial Administration Act (Canada) sec. 67.

[16] TaxSave is an unsecured creditor of Park City. TaxSave is entitled to file a proof of claim in the estate for $142,971.24, an amount equal to fifty percent of the refund recovered. The trustee's evidence is that if it does so (and assuming that Safeway is not entitled to recover any moneys therefrom) TaxSave would receive a dividend of approximately $100,000.00. TaxSave's assertion that the trustee wants to provide no compensation to TaxSave whatsoever is inaccurate. The trustee has recognized TaxSave's right to claim as an unsecured creditor, and there is potential for substantial recovery on that basis.

[17] That factor alone distinguishes TaxSave's position from the cases cited by TaxSave in support of its position. In Re Clark [1975] 1 All ER 453, Walton, J. held that in order for the rule in Ex parte James to apply, in most cases the bankrupt must not be in a position to file a proof of claim in a bankruptcy. The reason is that if the claimant can file a proof of claim, the application of the rule in Ex parte James would conflict with the mandatory pari passu division of the bankrupt estate among the creditors as required by the bankruptcy legislation.

[18] The cases referred to by TaxSave in support of its appeal are further distinguishable from the case before me in that, in each of the cases relied on by TaxSave, there were factors other than the existence of specific assets preserved or contributed by the claimant. In Re Tyler and Re Hardy, the court found an element of unfairness in the actions of the trustee. In Re Giorgio, the assets were protected by the bailiff on the eve of bankruptcy. In Stormont, the mistake made in paying the bankrupt's estate twice provided a substantive basis for a constructive trust with regard to the funds. In Sefel, the claimant's situation had been prejudiced by the actions of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

[19] None of these factors exist in the case before me. The fact that the bankrupt estate was enriched as a result of TaxSave's effort and at TaxSave's expense is not enough to justify the application of the rule in Ex parte James. If it were, any supplier of inventory would have protection under that rule. TaxSave cannot use the rule in Ex parte James to elevate an unsecured claim into a secured claim.

[20] For these reasons, I find that the rule in Ex parte James is not applicable. TaxSave's appeal is dismissed.

Canada Safeway's motion to extend the time allowed for the filing of the appeal

[21] The trustee mailed the notice of disallowance of Safeway's proof of claim dated April 30, 1999 to Bruce Taylor, counsel for Safeway, on April 20, 2000. Mr. Taylor received it on April 27, 2000. Safeway's motion to appeal the disallowance was filed on May 26, 2000.

[22] Sec. 135(4) of The B.I.A. provides:

Digitized by Google

A ..... disallowance referred to in subsection (2) is final and conclusive unless, within a thirty day period after service of the notice referred to in subsection (3) or such further time as the court may on application made within that period allow, the person to whom the notice was provided appeals from the trustee's decision to the court in accordance with the General Rules.

[23] The trustee's position is that the notice of appeal was not filed within the requisite thirty day period. The trustee argues that:

1) neither the B.I.A. nor the rules thereunder provide when service made by mail on April 20, 2000 was effective;
2) therefore, pursuant to Rule 3 of the B.I.A. Rules, reference must be made to Manitoba's rules of civil procedure;
3) Manitoba's Queen's Bench Rule 16.06(2) provides that service of a document by mail is effective on the fifth day after the document is mailed;
4) the service of the notice of disallowance on Safeway was therefore effective on April 25, 2000.

Accordingly, the appeal was not filed within the prescribed thirty day period.

[24] Safeway moved for an order extending the time allowed for filing of an appeal of the trustee's disallowance. I find that this motion is not necessary. Rule 113 of the B.I.A. Rules is the specific service rule relating to notices of disallowance. It provides that these documents are to be served, or sent by registered mail or courier, methods which result in an ascertainable and verifiable date of service. It is not necessary to look to either the B.I.A. Rules or to provincial civil procedure rules to determine a deemed or effective date of service when the actual date of the service can be readily determined. Queen's Bench Rule 16.06(2) is therefore not relevant.

[25] The evidence that Mr. Taylor received the notice of disallowance on April 27, 2000 is not disputed. The date of service was April 27, 2000; and the appeal was filed within thirty days thereof.

Safeway's Appeal (Trust Claim)

[26] Safeway asserts that when it paid Park City for pet food between May, 1989 and December, 1990, the remittances for FST were paid to Park City in trust for Revenue Canada, in order to discharge Safeway's liability for the FST. Safeway argues that as a result of the CITT decision and the resulting refund, the purpose or object of the trust failed, giving rise to a resulting trust in Safeway's favour.

[27] A prerequisite to the creation of a trust, whether express or implied, is certainty of intention to create a trust. In this case, the intention to create a trust cannot be discovered from the alleged settlor's oral or written words. Safeway did not place any express trust conditions on the payment of the FST. Safeway asks the court to infer the settlor's intention from Safeway's conduct, and from the context.

[28] Bruce Bowman gave evidence on behalf of Safeway. He has held the position of vice-president, secretary and general counsel of Safeway since May, 1994. In his affidavit, sworn September 25, 2000 Mr. Bowman states:

During the time period of May, 1989 to September, 1990 it was never the intention of Safeway that Park City be the beneficiary of the FST moneys and Park City was merely acting as the trustee of same for payment to Revenue Canada.

This is the extent of Safeway's direct evidence on the issue of intention.

[29] On cross-examination, Mr. Bowman acknowledged that at some time prior to the first invoice (issued in March and paid in May, 1999) it was agreed between Park City and Safeway that tax would be shown and charged on each invoice at the relevant rate in accordance with The Excise Tax Act. Safeway was aware that it could have paid the FST directly to the Government, but was relying on an agreement with Park City that the Alternative Tax Accounting Method would be used.

[30] Upon paying the aggregate sum of $112,827.10 to Park City on account of FST as expressly invoiced, Safeway was of the view that it had discharged its liability for FST; and did not follow up or inquire whether the moneys were in fact paid by Park City to the Government of Canada. The moneys paid by Safeway on account of FST were not segregated in any way. Typically, there would not be a covering letter when the payments were forwarded.

[31] The question for the court is whether this evidence is sufficient to meet Safeway's onus of establishing the requisite certainty of intention to create a trust. My conclusion is that the evidence is consistent with the creation of a contract between Safeway and Park City regarding the payment of FST, but does not meet the onus of establishing an intention to create a trust. Safeway admits that it was relying on an agreement between Safeway and Park City pursuant to the Alternative Tax Accounting Method. The fact that the CITT, in 1993, after the fact, did not find sufficient evidence to support the Minister's position that there was an Alternative Tax Accounting Method in place obligating Park City to the Government of Canada does not go to support Safeway's position regarding its intention to create a trust. Safeway did not give evidence and did not have any input at the CITT hearing.

[32] Looking at Safeway's conduct in the context of the relevant period, i.e. between May, 1989 and December, 1990, I cannot find the requisite certainty of intention to create a trust. I therefore dismiss Safeway's appeal of its property claim.

Safeway's Appeal (Debt Claim)

[33] Safeway's alternative position is that it is entitled to status as a creditor on the basis of a claim for damages. In the statement of claim which Safeway filed in 1995 under CI 95-01-89826, it claims damages on the basis that it was deprived of the use and benefit of the money paid as FST. When the motion was argued, Safeway's counsel argued that Safeway's claim is based upon an implied agreement between Safeway and Park City that any tax refunded to Park City would be remitted to Safeway.

[34] Neither theory of recovery can succeed because Safeway has suffered no loss. Safeway was obligated to pay FST under The Excise Tax Act. Safeway entered into a contract with Park City whereby Safeway would discharge its liability by payment of the FST through the payment to Park City. It does not follow that because Park City secured a refund, that Safeway suffered a loss. The Government of Canada has made no demand to Safeway for payment of FST; and any claim against Safeway that the Government may have had is now statute barred. Safeway has no exposure to liability at this point. Further, Mr. Bowman's evidence is that Safeway took a markup on its sales of the pet food beyond the aggregate of the purchase price and FST. Safeway did not establish that its sales volumes were affected by the FST component of the price it charged its customers.

[35] For these reasons, I am dismissing Safeway's appeal filed May 26, 2000.

The parties were married in 1969 under the regime of separation of property and ceased all cohabitation in 1977. In the course of the marriage respondent went into business with his wife, who at the time had substantial liquid capital, but all their business ventures failed. After the cohabitation ceased appellant became completely destitute, while respondent, after making an assignment of his property in January 1978 and being discharged in 1979, became a shareholder and the prime mover of a transportation company and co-owner of a residence. In June 1981 appellant filed a divorce petition and asked the Superior Court to order respondent to pay her the sum of $55,000 and the sum of $250 a week as alimony. At the hearing of the petition appellant waived "any claim for an alimentary pension, limiting herself to an allowance" of $55,000. When the decree absolute was granted, the Superior Court ordered respondent to pay appellant the sum of $40,000 both as a compensatory allowance and as a lump sum indemnity for re-establishment and maintenance. The Court of Appeal set aside the trial judgment with respect to the corollary relief. This appeal is to determine whether the Court of Appeal erred in finding that the sum awarded by the Superior Court was not justified under art. 559 C.C.Q. and s. 11 of the Divorce Act. However, before answering the main issue, the Court must dispose of certain preliminary issues of a procedural nature which could have an effect on the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal and on that of this Court.

Held: The appeal should be allowed.

(1) Supreme Court of Canada's jurisdiction

Although leave to appeal was granted after the time limit set by this Court had expired, the order granting leave to appeal under s. 18(2) of the Divorce Act was not out of time since the notice of application for leave to appeal was filed within the time limit set. Like most court orders which are reserved, the order granting leave to appeal is retroactive to the date of the application. Section 18(2), which refers to leave to appeal, in fact refers to the date on which the notice of application was filed, being the date on which the leave order is deemed to have been made.

As long as there is no conflict in their application, s. 41(1) of the Supreme Court Act and s. 18(1) of the Divorce Act can confer jurisdiction on this Court and both provisions can be relied on in the same case in order to obtain leave to appeal. Since in this case the leave order makes no distinction between the question of the lump sum and that of the compensatory allowance, this Court is thus free to consider that it duly has before it these two aspects of the appeal under its enabling legislation, and so to examine any issue of mixed law and fact which may have to be disposed of in resolving the dispute.

(2) Court of Appeal's jurisdiction

The filing of the appeal inscription in accordance with the procedure specified in the Divorce Act is valid for all questions disposed of in a divorce decree, including the award of a compensatory allowance. The possibility of incorporating the claim for a compensatory allowance into the divorce proceedings at the trial level is well recognized: the language of art. 559 C.C.Q. cannot be circumvented in this regard. It is entirely natural for the same to be true of the procedure applicable to appeals. It is clearly not appropriate to create a mandatory procedural distinction at the appeal level in dealing with questions which are closely related at trial.

(3) Compensatory allowance and lump sum

In order to be awarded a compensatory allowance a party must establish (1) his or her contribution; (2) the enrichment of his or her spouse's patrimony; (3) the causal link between the two; and (4) the proportion in which the contribution made possible the enrichment. Each of these elements must be evaluated with great flexibility. Further, the enrichment must subsist and must be evaluated at the time of the divorce. Determining the existence and value of the enrichment at the time of the divorce will very much depend on the circumstances. There is no indication in the present case that as a question of fact the trial judge did not find an enrichment that still existed at the time of the divorce. There was evidence in the record on the basis of which the trial judge could conclude there had been a contribution by appellant which resulted in an enrichment of respondent, despite the intervening bankruptcy which occurred in the interval, and the Court of Appeal was wrong to intervene on the question of the compensatory allowance. The court made an initial error in finding that the trial judge had mistakenly applied s. 148(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. The latter referred to s. 148 as a whole. Subsection (2) provides that the legal effect of a discharge order extends only to claims provable in bankruptcy. The trial judge thus correctly held that the order discharging respondent was not a bar to the awarding of a compensatory allowance. A "claim" arising out of art. 559 C.C.Q. is not a claim provable in a proceeding brought pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act. The Court of Appeal made a second error in stating that respondent's bankruptcy and discharge constituted an estoppel ("fin de non-recevoir") to the claim for a compensatory allowance. The term "estoppel" has a well defined legal meaning which cannot be taken to describe the effect produced by the bankruptcy of a defendant spouse on the rights of the other spouse to a compensatory allowance. The court probably regarded respondent's bankruptcy as absolute and irrefutable evidence that no enrichment was still in existence from the matrimonial relationship. A bankruptcy occurring before the action for an allowance is not irrefutable evidence either of the lack of enrichment at the time of the divorce or of the lack of correlation between the contribution prior to the bankruptcy and the assets subsequently found in the defendant's patrimony.

The Court of Appeal was also wrong to intervene on the question of the lump sum. The court concluded that the trial judge had no claim of an alimentary nature before him and quashed the order awarding a lump sum solely on the basis of a waiver alleged by respondent, an allegation based on the ambiguous wording of the minutes of trial. First, the language used in the minutes indicates that appellant waived "any claim for an alimentary pension, limiting herself to an allowance" of $55,000. Clearly, a person does not waive a claim for a lump sum by waiving a claim for an alimentary pension. The word "allowance" must be given its ordinary meaning here and may include a lump sum or a compensatory allowance. With the benefit of the record as a whole, the trial judge considered that he had before him a claim of an alimentary nature. The Court of Appeal, which did not have transcripts available to it and was not in a position to analyse the minutes in light of the record as a whole, should not have intervened.

English version of the judgment of the Court delivered by GONTHIER J. -- This appeal is brought pursuant to s. 41 of the Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. S-19 (now R.S.C., 1985, c. S-26, s. 40(1)), and s. 18 of the Divorce Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. D-8. It raises certain questions as to the rules governing a compensatory allowance, in particular in the event of a bankruptcy and a discharge order prior to any claim for an allowance and the requirement that the enrichment must subsist when proceedings are brought.

The appeal also raises questions regarding the assessment of the facts by the trial judge and the legitimacy of the Court of Appeal's intervention. Because these questions arise in the specific circumstances of this case, before proceeding any further

I should point out that the Court is not called upon to deal with the principal aspects of the ongoing debate regarding the principles that should govern the granting of compensatory allowances, even though this is the first appeal it has heard in the field.

1. Facts and Proceedings

The parties were married in 1969 under the regime of separation of property. After a brief separation followed by a reconciliation in 1971, they finally ceased all cohabitation in 1977. At the time of the marriage the respondent held employment in a local paper mill at a gross salary of $140 a week. In 1972 the respondent gave up his job to go into business with his wife, who at the time had substantial liquid capital, having received $140,000 following the accidental death of her first husband, with whom she had had two children. The appellant had also received $47,000 as a particular legatee of her father, who died in 1973. All the businesses operated by the parties failed. According to the trial judge the appellant is now completely destitute while the respondent, after making an assignment of his property in January 1978 and being discharged in 1979, became the "brain trust" of a successful moving equipment transportation company, and is the co-owner of a residence which is "far from modest though mortgaged".

By a divorce petition dated June 2, 1981 the appellant asked the Superior Court to order her husband to pay her the sum of $55,000 in non-exclusive overall settlement of her alimentary pension, and the sum of $250 a week as alimony. At the hearing of the petition the appellant said that she was abandoning any claim for an "alimentary pension", and was simply asking for an "allowance" of $55,000.

The decree nisi was granted on June 17, 1983. On the following October 7, Laroche J. granted a decree absolute and ordered the respondent to pay the appellant the sum of $40,000, both as repayment of money and as a compensatory allowance and lump sum indemnity for re-establishment and maintenance, the whole without interest. The amount was to be payable in annual instalments of $5,000 commencing on November 1, 1983 with a final instalment of $10,000 on November 1, 1989.

On October 12, 1983 the respondent filed an appeal and subsequently obtained an order staying the provisional execution of the judgment with respect to the corollary relief, except for the obligation connected with the first instalment. No joint record was prepared for the Court of Appeal, which set aside the trial judgment with respect to the corollary relief without having the benefit of consulting the record as a whole.

2. Applicable Legislation

The awarding of a compensatory allowance and a lump sum was based on the following legislation:

-- article 559 of the Civil Code of Quebec:

> 559. The court, in granting a divorce, may order either spouse to pay to the other, as consideration for the latter's contribution, in goods or services, to the enrichment of the patrimony of the former, an allowance payable immediately or by instalments, taking into account, in particular, the advantages of the matrimonial regime and marriage contract.
> The compensatory allowance may be paid, wholly or in part, by the granting of a right of ownership, use or habitation in accordance with articles 458 to 462.

-- sections 11 and 12 of the Divorce Act:

> 11. (1) Upon granting a decree nisi of divorce, the court may, if it thinks it fit and just to do so having regard to the conduct of the parties and the condition, means and other circumstances of each of them, make one or more of the following orders, namely:
> (a)an order requiring the husband to secure or to pay such lump sum or periodic sums as the court thinks reasonable for the maintenance of
> (i)the wife,
> (ii)the children of the marriage, or
> (iii)the wife and the children of the marriage;
> (b)an order requiring the wife to secure or to pay such lump sum or periodic sums as the court thinks reasonable for the maintenance of
> (i)the husband,
> (ii)the children of the marriage, or
> (iii)the husband and the children of the marriage; and
> (c)an order providing for the custody, care and upbringing of the children of the marriage.
> (2) An order made pursuant to this section may be varied from time to time or rescinded by the court that made the order if it thinks it fit and just to do so having regard to the conduct of the parties since the making of the order or any change in the condition, means or other circumstances of either of them.
> 12. Where a court makes an order pursuant to section 10 or 11, it may

(a)direct that any alimony, alimentary pension or maintenance be paid either to the husband or wife, as the case may be, or to a trustee or administrator approved by the court; and

(b)impose such terms, conditions or restrictions as the court thinks fit and just.

3. Judgments Below

Superior Court

Laroche J. did not consider it necessary to discuss in detail in his reasons the various aspects of the two parties' financial venture. From the considerable evidence presented during six days of hearing, he selected and mentioned two points: the state of the respondent's patrimony as indicated by the accounting documents filed and the appellant's right to the money she had to pay as endorser after the respondent's bankruptcy. In the opinion of Laroche J., this is a [TRANSLATION] "financial contribution" which presents no problems in terms of evidence. According to the evidence adduced this financial contribution amounts, with interest, to a total of $32,640.48, which the judge then increased to $40,000 as an allowance for support and re-establishment. Laroche J. explained the purpose of his order as follows:

> [TRANSLATION] The awarding of this sum will be such as to allow [the appellant] to achieve financial independence and to finally terminate relations between the parties, after a "common adventure", both emotional and financial, which is unique of its kind.

As regards the effect of the respondent's bankruptcy and discharge on the appellant's rights, the trial judge explained:

> [TRANSLATION] In law, needless to say, the order discharging the respondent's bankruptcy is not a bar to the awarding of such an amount and the performance of obligations of this kind between the parties, as a consequence of s. 148 of the Bankruptcy Act.

The respondent was accordingly ordered to pay the appellant the sum of $40,000, on the terms I described in the summary of facts.

Court of Appeal, [1985] C.A. 5

Turgeon J.A. -- reasons concurred in by Tyndale J.A.

After reproducing most of the trial judgment in his reasons, Turgeon J.A. noted the reference by the trial judge to s. 148 of the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. B-3. This section provides inter alia that a discharge order does not release the bankrupt from any debt or liability under a maintenance order. The trial judge concluded from this that he could make an award in this case despite the respondent's bankruptcy and discharge. In the opinion of Turgeon J.A., the compensatory allowance is not alimentary in nature as art. 559 C.C.Q. is found in Subsection 1, dealing with the "Settlement of the financial interests of the spouses" and not in Subsection 2, dealing with the "Effects of divorce as to support". The respondent's discharge was thus possible having regard to his potential obligations under art. 559 C.C.Q.

Turgeon J.A. then mentioned what in his opinion must be proven by the plaintiff to obtain a compensatory allowance, at pp. 7-8:

[TRANSLATION]

(1) his or her contribution;
(2) the enrichment of his or her spouse's patrimony;
(3) the causal link between the two;
(4) the proportion in which the contribution made possible the enrichment.

He added, and this passage is important:

> [TRANSLATION] These four conditions must coexist and these four things must exist, or at least subsist, at the time the court grants the divorce. [Emphasis added.

The judge noted that in this case the enrichment no longer existed at the time of the divorce, since the respondent had made an assignment of his property. He concluded, at p. 8:

> [TRANSLATION] In my opinion [the respondent's] bankruptcy and discharge are an estoppel to [the appellant's] claim for a compensatory allowance. The amounts paid by [the appellant] as endorser of certain debts contracted by her husband are a bar to her claim for a compensatory allowance.
> Article 559 C.C.Q. does not alter the rules of suretyship. It does not have the effect of imposing on [the respondent] an obligation from which he has been discharged under the Bankruptcy Act.

With respect, I am of the view that the trial judge made an error of law.

There was accordingly no basis for the compensatory allowance order. In the view of Turgeon J.A., the amount awarded in this regard was $32,640.48, the balance having been awarded as a lump sum (although the entire amount was combined in the conclusions of the trial judgment, this breakdown is indicated in the trial judge's reasons). Turgeon J.A. considered that as the appellant had abandoned her alimentary claim, this second part of the order was therefore also without foundation: the judge's award went beyond what had been sought.

Turgeon J.A. accordingly allowed the appeal and struck out the financial order in the divorce decree, but reserved the appellant's right to claim alimentary support under the law.

McCarthy J.A. -- concurring opinion

I shall simply reproduce the short reasons of McCarthy J.A. (at pp. 8-9):

[TRANSLATION] I have had the advantage of reading the opinion of my colleague Turgeon J.A.

Article 559 C.C.Q. gives the judge granting the divorce discretion, provided there is a "contribution . . . to the enrichment of the patrimony" of the spouse. Since what is involved is "compensation" (not indemnification) for this contribution, I am of the view that the enrichment must subsist at the time of the divorce.

In the present case the enrichment of the husband's patrimony as a result of his wife's contribution was not still in existence when the divorce decree was granted. The judge consequently did not have any discretion under art. 559.

With respect to the lump sum awarded by the judge beyond the provisions of art. 559, I would emphasize that he had no claim of an alimentary nature before him.

Like my colleague I would allow the appeal, with each party paying their own costs.

4. Issues

The appellant submitted the following issues to the Court:

1.Did the Court of Appeal err in finding that the award of the sum of $40,000 was not justified under art. 559 C.C.Q.?

2.Did the Court of Appeal err in finding that the award of the sum of $40,000 was not justified under s. 11 of the Divorce Act?

5. Analysis

Before moving on to the main issues, which I shall deal with in the order suggested by the appellant, I must dispose of certain preliminary issues of a procedural nature which both sides argued could have an effect on the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal and on that of this Court in the case at bar.

A. Preliminary Issues

(a) Jurisdiction of This Court

The respondent maintains that the order granting leave to appeal to this Court under the Divorce Act was made out of time. The relevant provision reads as follows:

18. . . .

(2) Leave to appeal under this section may be granted within thirty days from the pronouncing of the judgment or order being appealed from or within such extended time as the Supreme Court of Canada or a judge thereof may, before the expiration of those thirty days, fix or allow.

In the present case the judgment appealed from was pronounced on November 9, 1984 and the appellant filed a notice of motion for an extension of time on December 6, 1984. This motion was granted the following day and the time was extended to January 21, 1985. The appellant filed her notice of application for leave to appeal on December 27, 1984 and the order of this Court granting leave to appeal was made on January 31 following. As the respondent indicated, the notice of application for leave to appeal was filed within the time limit set by the order extending the time, but leave to appeal was in fact granted after the time fixed by that order had expired. The provision cited above refers quite clearly to the leave to appeal rather than the application to obtain it. The respondent argued that leave must in fact be granted within the time mentioned, which was not the case here.

The result of adopting this interpretation offends common sense. On this reading the time limit at issue would be imposed on this Court, and its length fixed by its own order in cases of an extension. The parties' rights would subsist or be extinguished, depending on whether the leave order was made before or after the time limit fixed, regardless of the diligence exercised by the respective parties. Such a result seems to me to be both unfair and absurd. It will suffice to recall here the remarks made by Dickson J. in Air-Care Ltd. v. United Steel Workers of America, 1974 CanLII 200 (SCC), [1976] 1 S.C.R. 2, at p. 8, regarding the parties' rights in relation to the excessive length of time which an administrative tribunal had allowed to elapse before making its decision:

The right of a party should not be lost or in any way prejudiced as the result of dilatory conduct on the part of a Board over which it has little or no control.

The length of this Court's deliberations in a case depends on a host of factors connected with its internal operation and it is inconceivable that a litigant could be prejudiced by the effect of the law.

The answer to the respondent's questions lies in the retroactivity of an order granting leave to appeal. Like most court orders which are reserved, the order granting leave to appeal is retroactive to the date of the application. It is in this respect similar to an order made from the bench following an oral application, and in the absence of any indication to the contrary it similarly produces its legal effects from the time the application is duly submitted.

I am therefore of the view that the time limits mentioned in the provision refer in fact to the date on which the notice of application was filed, being the date on which the leave order is deemed to have been made. In the case at bar the notice of application for leave to appeal was filed on December 27, 1984, that is nearly a month before the time limit set by this Court expired.

Digitized by Google

The respondent also drew the Court's attention to s. 18(1) of the Divorce Act, which states that an appeal to this Court with leave lies on a question of law:

18. (1) An appeal lies on a question of law to the Supreme Court of Canada with leave of that court from a decision of the court of appeal under section 17.

An appeal authorized under the Supreme Court Act may concern issues of mixed law and fact. Section 41(1) read as follows at that time:

41. (1) Subject to subsection (3), an appeal lies to the Supreme Court from any final or other judgment of the highest court of final resort in a province, or a judge thereof, in which judgment can be had in the particular case sought to be appealed to the Supreme Court, whether or not leave to appeal to the Supreme Court has been refused by any other court, where, with respect to the particular case sought to be appealed, the Supreme Court is of the opinion that any question involved therein is, by reason of its public importance or the importance of any issue of law or any issue of mixed law and fact involved in such question, one that ought to be decided by the Supreme Court or is, for any other reason, of such a nature or significance as to warrant decision by it, and leave to appeal from such judgment is accordingly granted by the Supreme Court.

In the case at bar the application for leave to appeal was based on both Acts and the leave order was granted without specifying the Act, as requested in the application. In the respondent's submission the appeal relating to the application of the Divorce Act must necessarily have been authorized under that Act and, consequently, with respect to the lump sum this Court has jurisdiction only over questions of law raised by the award made.

In my opinion Pelech v. Pelech, 1987 CanLII 57 (SCC), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 801, disposes of this question in the appellant's favour. It was argued in that case that the right to rely on the Divorce Act, which is more specific, in order to seek leave to appeal, precluded the application of the Supreme Court Act, which is more general in its application. This Court rejected the argument and held that both statutes could confer jurisdiction on it as long as there was no conflict in their application (p. 825).

The functional test for the existence of a conflict which appears to have been adopted allows the maximum area of overlap and responds to this Court's concern that the procedural avenues of access to the Court should be kept open. The criteria used to guide this Court in exercising its discretion under each of the provisions are not identical and it is in the interests of justice to see that both avenues can be used. In my view, it should be possible for them both to be relied on in the same case in order to obtain leave to appeal.

In the case at bar, the leave order makes no distinction between the question of the lump sum and that of the compensatory allowance. This Court is thus free to consider that it duly has before it these two aspects of the appeal under its enabling legislation, and so to examine any issue of mixed law and fact which may have to be disposed of in resolving the dispute.

(b) Court of Appeal's Jurisdiction

In this Court the appellant argues that the Court of Appeal never had before it an appeal regarding the conclusions of the trial judgment on the compensatory allowance. The respondent appealed the trial judgment by filing a notice in the office of the Court of Appeal, in accordance with the requirements of the Divorce Act, but no notice of inscription was served on or filed with the office of the Superior Court as required by art. 495 of the Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25. In the appellant's submission, the Court of Appeal went beyond the limits of its jurisdiction to the extent of its intervention regarding the compensatory allowance. The question is therefore whether the filing of the inscription in appeal pursuant to the Divorce Act is valid with respect to the compensatory allowance.

The respondent refers to a dispute in the Court of Appeal concerning the proper procedure in the case of an appeal from a Superior Court judgment disposing both of matters governed by the Divorce Act and matters governed by the Civil Codes. After a period of uncertainty (see Beausel v. Langevin, [1975] C.A. 223; Caisse populaire de Sacré-Coeur, Saguenay v. Dufour, C.A. Québec, No. 200-09-000060-779, March 4, 1981; Droit de la famille--67, reflex, [1985] C.A. 135), the Court of Appeal disposed of this issue in a leading judgment rendered in Droit de la famille--203, reflex, [1985] C.A. 339. Stressing that the compensatory allowance takes the form of corollary relief when it is ordered in a divorce decree, LeBel J.A. held that the procedure set out in the federal Act was applicable to all incidental matters covered in divorce proceedings.

I agree that the filing of the appeal inscription in accordance with the procedure specified in the Divorce Act is valid for all questions disposed of in a divorce decree, including the award of a compensatory allowance. The possibility of incorporating the claim for a compensatory allowance into the divorce proceedings at the trial level is well recognized: the language of art. 559 C.C.Q. cannot be circumvented in this regard. It seems entirely natural for the same to be true of the procedure applicable to appeals. It is clearly not appropriate to create a mandatory procedural distinction at the appeal level in dealing with questions which are closely related at trial.

On the preliminary questions, it can be said that the Court of Appeal and this Court have both been validly presented with the appeal relating to the compensatory allowance as well as to the lump sum ordered under the Divorce Act. For all aspects of the appeal this Court may rule on issues of mixed law and fact, deriving the necessary jurisdiction from its enabling Act.

B. Main Issues

Digitized by Google

The awarding of a compensatory allowance or lump sum rests upon a decision that depends to a large extent on the trial judge's ability to assess the facts. In performing this difficult judicial exercise, there are many factors which the trial judge may legitimately consider as, in relation to both compensatory allowances and lump sums, the legislator has recognized the need for broad discretion by adopting enabling provisions which have an essentially open texture. In such a context, the function of an appellate court is to correct errors of law made at trial in exercising the discretion conferred by law. It goes without saying that assessing the facts is the prerogative of the trial judge and that, unless it can identify such an egregious error in this regard that it indicates an error of legal principle, the Court of Appeal is not justified in intervening.

In this appeal the appellant is essentially challenging the legitimacy of the Court of Appeal's intervention, first on the question of the compensatory allowance and second on that of the lump sum. In view of the considerable volume of evidence adduced at trial and the fact that no joint record was submitted to the Court of Appeal, I think it is advisable to consider the questions raised in the manner proposed by the appellant.

(a) The Compensatory Allowance

Quebec law has long recognized the freedom of matrimonial agreements and the right of spouses to opt for the regime of separation of property. It is well known that a great many flagrant injustices have resulted from this regime: one of the spouses, usually the wife, was often left destitute by a divorce while the other spouse had capitalized throughout the marriage on contributions of money and unpaid labour. From time to time other regimes also produced certain injustices requiring redress. The courts were certainly aware of these injustices, but generally refused to intervene in the absence of legislative authority.

First, the Court of Appeal refused its concurrence to the orders of a compensatory nature made at the time of the divorce as part of the lump sum, because their effect was to retroactively extinguish the effects of a freely made and executed contract. After all, the lump sum is alimentary in nature. From the same concern that agreements freely concluded for the separation of property should be respected, the courts also seldom recognized that a tacit partnership could exist between spouses. The person affected found it hard to establish the existence of a tacit partnership contract existing alongside a written marriage contract, duly concluded before a notary, the terms of which hardly lent themselves to such a possibility. Finally, it was felt that generally the doctrine of unjust enrichment could not be used to mitigate this type of injustice, as the cause of the enrichment was the matrimonial regime or association: Sabourin v. Charlebois, [1982] C.A. 361. It will be noted that the decisions of the Quebec courts have diverged in this respect from the position taken by French courts: Cass. civ. 1st Ch., January 9, 1979, Bull. civ. I, No. 11, p. 8 (R. v. L.); Cass. civ. 1st Ch., May 30, 1979, Bull. civ. I, No. 161, p. 130 (D. v. L.); Cass. civ. 1st Ch., October 26, 1982, Bull. civ. I, No. 302, p. 257 (Perrin v. Chevrier).

This is the context in which the remedy by way of a compensatory allowance was introduced on December 1, 1982. There has in general been little consideration of the general objectives of this legislative innovation. It is clearly intended to mitigate the injustices produced by the implementation of a freely adopted matrimonial regime, by making it possible to compensate a spouse who has enriched the patrimony of the other spouse by his or her contribution of goods or services (see Roger Comtois, "La prestation compensatoire: une mesure d'équité" (1983), 85 R. du N. 367).

The problems arise when it comes to determining how far the discretion conferred on the judge extends. The wording of the article is very broad and in practice it allows the judge to extinguish completely the regime of separation of property chosen by the spouses (see André Cossette, "Le régime de la séparation de biens est-il disparu avec la naissance de la prestation compensatoire?" (1985), 87 R. du N. 456). The legislature has, however, elected to preserve freedom of choice in matrimonial agreements. For this reason, the courts could hardly create a posteriori an obligatory and retroactive judicial partnership of acquests by adopting an overly broad interpretation of the discretion conferred on them. On the other hand, limiting the ordinary meaning of the provision by an excessive deference to freedom of matrimonial agreements would be to ignore the purpose sought by the legislature. Moreover, the latter has recently chosen to limit this freedom considerably by creating a mandatory family patrimony: Act to amend the Civil Code of Québec and other legislation in order to favour economic equality between spouses, S.Q. 1989, c. 55; Civil Code of Quebec, arts. 462.1 et seq.

The courts must therefore seek to correct injustices in accordance with the purpose of the law, without in so doing extinguishing the spouses' freedom of choice in so far as the legislature has chosen to preserve it. It is not an easy exercise and the judgments of the Court of Appeal show that the problems to be encountered are many. The Court of Appeal held in the case at bar that the awarding of a compensatory allowance by the trial judge was vitiated by error.

The elements which a party must establish in order to be awarded an allowance are stated by the Court of Appeal as follows, at pp. 7-8:

(1)his or her contribution;
(2)the enrichment of his or her spouse's patrimony;
(3)the causal link between the two;
(4)the proportion in which the contribution made possible the enrichment.

This statement results from the wording of art. 559 and the natural incorporation of the remedy introduced by it into the general principles of civil law. I do not think there is any need to alter this statement, except to note that there must be great flexibility in evaluating the items it contains.

It seems particularly clear that too much rigidity in applying the burden of proof imposed on the plaintiff with respect to each of these items would result in denying the beneficial effects of the remedy. The Court of Appeal has quite properly pointed out many times in subsequent cases that these items must be viewed as a whole, by an assessment free of calculations made to the nearest dollar (see, for example, M.D. v. P.-H.D., 1988 CanLII 233 (QC CA), [1988] R.L. 139; Droit de la famille--649, [1989] R.D.F. 325; Droit de la famille--688, [1989] R.D.F. 532). The matrimonial context is special in that the keeping of precise, penny-pinching accounts which could eventually be used as evidence in a court is hard to reconcile with the idea generally held of marriage as being a peaceful union. I note that the legislature has recently recognized the special nature of this context in expressly and unequivocally relaxing the rules governing the means of proof in this area: art. 462.15 C.C.Q. immediately follows the new article on the compensatory allowance and states that the co-operating spouse may adduce evidence by any means to prove his contribution to the enrichment of his spouse.

In general, therefore, analysis of the factual and legal aspects of a compensatory allowance situation calls for special flexibility. I think it is quite understandable that it should differ somewhat from that applicable to other areas such as civil liability, where the requirement of a causal link, for example, is relatively strict. It is worth noting in this regard that the traditional concept of causality is not applied in cases of unjust enrichment: Banque canadienne nationale v. St-Germain, [1942] Que. K.B. 496. The plaintiff must certainly show a cause-and-effect relationship between the impoverishing act or the impoverishment on the one hand and the enrichment on the other, but the requirement of this relationship is much less strict than the standards evoked by the notions of causa causans, causa sine qua non or causa proxima: Jean-Louis Baudouin, Les Obligations (3rd ed. 1989), No. 553, at p. 332. In Cie Immobilière Viger Ltée v. Lauréat Giguère Inc., 1976 CanLII 4 (SCC), [1977] 2 S.C.R. 67, stating the conditions on which the de in rem verso action is available, this Court laid down the requirement for a simple "correlation" between the impoverishment and the enrichment. Flexibility is essential and the analysis highly empirical. The very close relationship between the action for unjust enrichment and the action for a compensatory allowance does not have to be restated, and I think that on this point the approach taken for the first generation should apply for the second.

In the case at bar the Court of Appeal suggested that the enrichment did not exist at the time of the divorce. The Court of Appeal's intervention is based first on an alleged error of law concerning the legal effect of a bankruptcy on the possibility of obtaining an allowance. The second error the Court of Appeal claimed to find concerns the continued existence of the enrichment at the time of the divorce.

(i) Effect of the Bankruptcy

The Court of Appeal's treatment of the question of how the bankruptcy affects the rights of the parties in my opinion demonstrates a regrettable confusion which is unfortunately reflected in the arguments of the parties. In fact, the question seems to me to be quite straightforward.

At trial Laroche J. simply said the following about the bankruptcy:

> [TRANSLATION] In law, needless to say, the order discharging the respondent's bankruptcy is not a bar to the awarding of such an amount or to the performance of obligations of this kind between the parties, as a consequence of s. 148 of the Bankruptcy Act.

Section 148 reads as follows:

148. (1) An order of discharge does not release the bankrupt from

(a) any fine or penalty imposed by a court or any debt arising out of a recognizance or bail bond;

(b) any debt or liability for alimony;

(c) any debt or liability under a maintenance or affiliation order or under an agreement for maintenance and support of a spouse or child living apart from the bankrupt;

(d) any debt or liability arising out of fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity;

(e) any debt or liability for obtaining property by false pretences or fraudulent misrepresentation;

(f) liability for the dividend that a creditor would have been entitled to receive on any provable claim not disclosed to the trustee, unless such creditor had notice or knowledge of the bankruptcy and failed to take reasonable action to prove his claim; or

(g) any debt or liability for goods supplied as necessaries of life and the court may make such order for payment thereof as it deems just or expedient.

(2) An order of discharge releases the bankrupt from all other claims provable in bankruptcy. [Emphasis added.]

Like the parties, the Court of Appeal assumed that Laroche J. was referring exclusively to one of the items mentioned in s. 148(1). In the case of the lump sum, which is unquestionably alimentary in nature, Laroche J. could very well have been referring to para. (b) or (c), which unequivocally dispose of the question of bankruptcy; but as regards the compensatory allowance, I find it hard to understand the decision rendered on appeal.

In the opinion of the Court of Appeal, the trial judge was exclusively and necessarily referring to para. (b) or (c), which it found to be an error, correctly pointing out that the compensatory allowance is not alimentary in nature. The appellant then argued in this Court that the judge could easily have been referring instead to para. (d) or (e), as fraud by the respondent was alleged at trial. In my opinion the premises of this debate are mistaken.

Without having to consider what Laroche J. actually had in mind regarding the effect of the bankruptcy on the awarding of a compensatory allowance, it could be said that his reference primarily concerned the rule governing the effect of a discharge contained in subs. (2), rather than any exception or qualification contained in subs. (1), as an error in a judgment is not to be presumed and the fact is that in the case at bar the appellant never had a claim provable in bankruptcy from which the respondent could have been discharged under subs. (2). Under the latter subsection, the sole effect of the discharge of a bankrupt is to block his creditors' claims which were "provable in bankruptcy" at the time of the assignment of property. These claims are defined in s. 2 of the Act as follows:

"claim provable in bankruptcy" or "provable claim" or "claim provable" includes any claim or liability provable in proceedings under this Act by a preferred, secured or unsecured creditor;

The appellant's position as the respondent's wife at the time of the bankruptcy cannot be likened to that of a creditor who can prove his claim in bankruptcy. First, I do not think that a "claim" arising out of art. 559 C.C.Q. can be provable in a proceeding brought pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act. Under art. 559 C.C.Q., the compensatory allowance is awarded at the time of the divorce, which probably excludes the possibility of claiming it in a bankruptcy proceeding. Second, because of the important part played by discretion in the judicial exercise leading to the award of a compensatory allowance, I do not think that considered in the abstract the existence of a contribution by a spouse which caused enrichment of the other spouse confers any right that could be described as a "claim" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act. The judgment awarding a compensatory allowance creates the right. Further, I note that in the case at bar the discharge of the bankrupt was ordered several years before art. 559 C.C.Q. came into effect: I do not see how such a discharge could have any legal effect on the appellant's position with respect to the application of this provision.

The Court of Appeal thus made an error of law in finding that Laroche J. had mistakenly applied s. 148(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. Laroche J. referred to s. 148 as a whole. Subsection (2) provides that the legal effect of a discharge order extends only to claims provable in bankruptcy. It may be said that Laroche J. correctly applied s. 148 in disposing of the parties' arguments, as at no relevant time did the appellant have a claim from which the respondent could be discharged under that section.

The Court of Appeal further stated that the bankruptcy and discharge of the respondent constituted an estoppel ("fin de non-recevoir") to the claim for a compensatory allowance. This is a clear error of law probably resulting from an imprecise use of language. The term "estoppel" has a well defined legal meaning which cannot be taken to describe the effect produced by the bankruptcy of a defendant spouse on the rights of the other spouse to a compensatory allowance. As the respondent suggested at the hearing, the Court of Appeal probably considered the bankruptcy which occurred at the end of the period of cohabitation as irrefutable evidence of insolvency indicating either an absence of enrichment or a breach of the necessary connection between the earlier contributions and the state of the patrimony at the time of the divorce, since the Court of Appeal was of the view that the enrichment must still be in existence at the time of the divorce if an allowance is to be awarded: this is a point that should now be considered.

The appellant first properly noted that the concept of enrichment refers to that of patrimony. Article 559 indeed speaks of "enrichment of the patrimony". The concept of patrimony as a container has a particular identity independent of its content: Louis Baudouin, Le droit civil de la Province de Québec (1953), at p. 354. Patrimony seen as a container is unchanging and its existence is not subject to the fluctuations of any particular thing it may contain at any time as a result of its holder's dealings. In this regard the appellant suggests that the one-time increase in the calculable value of an individual's rights and obligations as the result of a contribution made from outside produces an enrichment which attaches to the patrimony as a container, and this enrichment thereby also becomes unchanging. The enrichment would thus be treated as independent of subsequent fluctuations affecting what is contained in the patrimony, and there would accordingly be no need to speak of the enrichment subsisting at the time of the divorce.

In my view, precisely because of this unchanging and intangible nature of the patrimony which is traditionally regarded as a container, the notion of enrichment must necessarily relate to the content of the patrimony, that is, the calculable value of what it contains. The opposite conclusion would have the unfortunate effect of detaching the analysis of the contribution and the enrichment from factual reality, at the cost of distorting the action for a compensatory allowance by a misunderstanding of its central objective of fairness. Accordingly, it seems perfectly possible to envisage a requirement that the enrichment should still be in existence. The question that really arises is as to the time at which the enrichment must be evaluated.

At first sight, the purpose of the compensatory allowance is to restore the equilibrium between two patrimonies which has been unfairly disrupted by developments in the matrimonial relationship. If one of the spouses has been enriched at the conclusion of the matrimonial relationship by the contribution of the other spouse, the judge will order compensation to the extent that the enrichment was due to the contribution. However, if no residue of the contribution remains in the defendant's patrimony when the matrimonial relationship comes to an end, there is no basis for compensation as the alleged contribution has ultimately produced no enrichment. It thus seems quite natural for the enrichment to be evaluated at the time of the divorce.

The traditionally accepted rules governing the doctrine of unjust enrichment are instructive in this regard. The de in rem verso action has always been limited to the measure of the actual enrichment, and the courts have determined the time of evaluation to be that of the bringing of the action. If the defendant's enrichment no longer exists when the action is brought, the latter must be dismissed without further consideration (see Jean-Louis Baudouin, op. cit., at pp. 323 et seq.) François Goré explains this condition as follows in L'enrichissement aux dépens d'autrui (1949), at p. 64:

> [TRANSLATION] The enrichment which must be considered is that enjoyed by an individual when the action is brought. The function of the theory of unjust enrichment is to restore the equilibrium between two patrimonies which has been unfairly disrupted. For this function to be performed, the disequilibrium must exist at the time the action is brought.

Like the doctrine of unjust enrichment, the compensatory allowance is imbued with a concern for fairness which must be borne in mind in applying it. The idea of an action based on unjust enrichment is meaningless in terms of fairness if the party enriched no longer enjoys the proceeds of the contribution at the time the action is brought. In such a case, it is the order itself which might have the effect of creating an injustice.

Accordingly, in this context the idea of enrichment must include that of a minimum possibility of enjoyment in respect of the proceeds of the contribution. For example, one could at first sight contemplate the existence of an enrichment in respect of a patrimony the absolute calculable value of which is negative at the time of the action; but ordering a compensatory allowance in such a case could have the undesirable consequence of aggravating the defendant's indebtedness when he is not enjoying the proceeds of the contribution in any way. It is for this reason that one cannot speak of enrichment at the time of the action if the defendant does not enjoy the product of the contribution. Determining the existence and value of the enrichment at the time of the action is a delicate matter and will very much depend on the circumstances.

If we take the example of Cie Immobilière Viger Ltée v. Lauréat Giguère Inc., supra, in which the enrichment consisted in the obtaining by Cie Immobilière Viger Ltée of land developed as it wished for the cost of a vacant lot, I think that the subsequent annihilation of the product of the development work by a fortuitous event would have deprived Lauréat Giguère Inc. of any remedy. The enrichment was clearly identifiable because it was directly connected with a material asset in the patrimony. If a contribution in services or money directly increases the value of an identifiable asset, that contribution must be treated as part of the asset in question. The party making the contribution then assumes the risks of deterioration and benefits from any increase in value in respect of the asset in question, to the extent of his contribution. In the case of a compensatory allowance, the classic example is that of a spouse who helps pay for the family residence of which the other spouse is the sole owner: the courts have recognized that the spouse making the contribution will have an action for the additional value of the residence to the extent of the contribution made (see, for example, Droit de la famille--67, supra; Droit de la famille--271, [1986] R.D.F. 49 (C.A.); Droit de la famille--594, 1989 CanLII 304 (QC CA), [1989] R.J.Q. 271 (C.A.)).

A purely economic contribution, on the other hand, will often be difficult to trace and it may prove to be impossible to show that whatever is in the patrimony at the time of the action results from the alleged contribution. This is where the necessary flexibility in analysing the causal connection becomes especially important, as the plaintiff cannot be required to identify each dollar resulting from the contribution in the spouse's patrimony. Demonstration of a simple correlation between the contribution and the state of the patrimony must suffice. If, for example, there has been a negative enrichment, resulting from a loss or expense that was avoided by the making of the contribution, it is apparent that the plaintiff will have difficulty relating his contribution to any identifiable part of the patrimony. The general value of the patrimony, which the defendant enjoys, should then suffice as a basis for a ruling in the plaintiff's favour.

Subject to these qualifications, therefore, I agree with the Court of Appeal in saying that the enrichment must subsist. It must be evaluated at the time of the divorce. It appears, however, that the trial judge never said otherwise. The question therefore remains as to whether the Court of Appeal had grounds for intervening in the determination of the facts on the question of enrichment.

As I mentioned, the Court of Appeal probably regarded the respondent's bankruptcy as absolute and irrefutable evidence that no enrichment was still in existence from the matrimonial relationship. The assignment of property took place after cohabitation had ceased. This is why the Court of Appeal assumed that Laroche J. had not required that the enrichment subsist at the time of the divorce. On the basis of this assumption, the Court of Appeal concluded there had been an error of law in the trial judgment.

With all due respect, in my opinion this was an error by the Court of Appeal as the fact of a bankruptcy occurring before the action for an allowance is not irrefutable evidence either of the lack of enrichment at the time of the divorce or of the lack of correlation between the contribution prior to the bankruptcy and the assets subsequently found in the defendant's patrimony. Although the fact of a bankruptcy occurring at such a time generally tends to suggest the absence of an enrichment or correlation, it could not be regarded as irrefutable evidence thereof as, first, the creditors' meeting still controls the realization of the assets in the patrimony, some items of which it may for various reasons abandon, and second, the possibly fraudulent dealings of the bankrupt may have the effect of indirectly bringing back into his patrimony certain items that were there before.

There is no indication in the case at bar that as a question of fact Laroche J. did not find an enrichment that still existed at the time of the divorce despite the respondent's bankruptcy. The trial judge noted the enrichment of the respondent in his reasons; without tracing its origins, he referred to the body of evidence which it was his function to weigh, evidence which the Court of Appeal did not have the benefit of consulting as there was no joint record.

I note, first, that [TRANSLATION] "fraud" and "subterfuge" by the respondent are alleged in the divorce petition dated June 2, 1981. It is clear that the trial judge must consider the presence of enrichment in awarding a compensatory allowance even if that enrichment results from actions that could be taken as fraudulent in light of the Bankruptcy Act, compliance with which is not his concern.

The record prepared for this Court indicates that in 1975 the respondent obtained trucks with the aid of loans for which the appellant was jointly and severally liable with the respondent. On November 30, 1978, after the assignment of the respondent's property, the trucks were part of the capital stock of a moving company of which the respondent was a shareholder and the prime mover ("brain trust"), while the appellant was still indebted for the balance of the loans, amounting to some $2,500. There is therefore, in my opinion, evidence in the record on the basis of which the trial judge could conclude there had been a contribution by the appellant which resulted in an enrichment of the respondent, despite the intervening bankruptcy. The Court of Appeal apparently did not consider these points, which probably were not brought to its attention.

The Court of Appeal suggests that the compensatory allowance can in no way alter the usual rules governing the obligations arising out of a loan of money. This proposition is correct to the extent that the appellant continued to be civilly bound by her initial undertaking to the lender; but in so far as there is evidence of a present enrichment resulting from a contribution by one spouse, an order for a compensatory allowance can certainly be made whatever the rules resulting from the law of obligations may be. This remedy was created in part to circumvent the judicial requirement regarding the absence of cause in the de in rem verso action; the fact of using a contract, which is governed by the law of obligations, to make a contribution cannot affect the distinct analysis necessary for this remedy. For the parties, the situation is the same as if the appellant had obtained a loan and given the proceeds of that loan to the respondent: this contribution may be regarded as the trucks themselves, of which the respondent now has the enjoyment, and the value of which is still part of his patrimony through the capital stock of the company.

It was therefore possible for the trial judge to conclude, in exercising his power of weighing the facts, that the elements needed to award a compensatory allowance existed. The mention of this factor as part of the justification for the order of $40,000 in the conclusions of the trial judgment was accordingly justified and the Court of Appeal was wrong to intervene.

The other amounts mentioned by the trial judge as a contribution that might require compensation need not be discussed for a very simple reason. The trial judge clearly set the appellant's needs at $40,000 for purposes of awarding the lump sum, and the respondent's means are not at issue. Since part of the needs had already been met by the awarding of a compensatory allowance, the judge set the lump sum at the amount necessary to make up the difference between the amount of the allowance and that of the needs. It follows that these amounts, explained by the trial judge as a compensatory allowance, may in any case be justified under the heading of the lump sum up to an amount of $40,000, so that in any event the conclusions of the judgment would not be altered. In my opinion, the Court of Appeal also wrongly intervened on the question of the lump sum, which must now be considered.

Before moving on to that, I should point out that I am not in any way approving of the procedure used by the trial judge, consisting of making a general order the various bases of which are not dealt with separately in the conclusions. This may create considerable difficulties on appeal, as the awarding of a compensatory allowance and the granting of a lump sum are governed by rules which differ fundamentally in several respects, although the setting of the amount of the former will considerably influence the amount of the latter (see comments by LeBel J.A. in Droit de la famille--1097, [1987] R.D.F. 222 (C.A.)). It thus seems specially desirable that the various types of orders should be dealt with separately, both in the conclusions and in the reasons of a trial judgment.

(b) The Lump Sum

As I just mentioned, the respondent's ability to pay was not questioned any more than were the appellant's needs. The Court of Appeal quashed the order awarding a lump sum solely on the basis of a discontinuance alleged by the respondent. The Court accordingly concluded that Laroche J. had no claim of an alimentary nature before him.

The divorce petition dated June 2, 1981 contains the following conclusions as to corollary relief:

[TRANSLATION] TO ORDER the respondent to pay me the sum of fifty-five thousand dollars ($55,000) by way of non-exclusive lump sum settlement of the alimentary pension, for the reasons stated above;

TO ORDER the respondent to pay me an alimentary pension of two hundred and fifty dollars ($250) a week, payable in advance on Friday of each week at my residence at 10, rue Chapleau, Cap-de-la-Madeleine;

I note that art. 559 C.C.Q. was not yet in effect at this time; it became applicable to the case at bar by a provision stipulating that it would be applicable to cases pending: An Act to establish a new Civil Code and to reform family law, S.Q. 1980, c. 39, s. 70. The lump sum settlement requested at that time thus necessarily refers to the lump sum specified by the Divorce Act. At the hearing the appellant waived part of the conclusions of her petition, as is reported in the minutes of trial for June 15, 1983 as follows:

[TRANSLATION] Proof as to a compensatory allowance requested.

The petitioner stating that she waives any claim for an alimentary pension, limiting herself to an allowance of $55,000 and performance of the gifts made to her under the marriage contract.

The Court of Appeal probably relied on this transcript in arriving at its conclusion that the appellant had waived her "claim of an alimentary nature" (p. 9). Assuming the minutes to be authentic, though they were signed neither by counsel nor by the judge, I do not feel I am able to give them the meaning suggested by the respondent and endorsed by the Court of Appeal.

First, the language used indicates a waiver of "any claim for an alimentary pension"; the respondent is trying to make it say that there was a waiver of "any claim of an alimentary nature", which would include the lump sum. Clearly, a person does not waive a claim for a lump sum by waiving a claim for an alimentary pension. As regards the wording "limiting herself to an allowance of $55,000", I do not think it fair to attribute to the parties an intent to refer exclusively to the compensatory allowance. Article 559 had only been in effect for a few months and there was still some confusion as to the nature of a compensatory allowance as opposed to a lump sum, as is indeed indicated by the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case at bar. I would accordingly tend to give the word "allowance", as used there, its ordinary meaning, which may include either of the two types of order. In any event, no one will dispute the rather ambiguous nature of the minutes, and a waiver must be strictly interpreted in the event of doubt as to its scope: Gingras v. Gagnon, 1975 CanLII 186 (SCC), [1977] 1 S.C.R. 217, at p. 222.

I would also note that the content of the petition relating to corollary relief, the awarding of which was adjourned on consent until the time the decree absolute was granted, was clarified in testimony by the appellant on September 14, 1983. The transcript indicates the following exchange between Laroche J. and the appellant:

BY THE COURT:

Q.Is the fifty-five thousand ($55,000) you just mentioned included in or excluded from the other three earlier amounts?

A.The three amounts are included in that amount.

Q.Are you also including interest in that?

A.Yes, your Honour.

Q.Then your maximum claim is for the whole?

A.Yes.

Q.On any basis?

A.Yes.

Q.It is limited exclusively and totally to fifty-five thousand dollars ($55,000)?

A.Yes, your Honour. [Emphasis added.]

The respondent did not in any way raise the alleged waiver of June 15 as an objection to this, and the parties and the judge considered that there was no objection, until the respondent raised this argument at the appellate level, relying on the unfortunately ambiguous language of the minutes. This document bears no signature that can authenticate it and it therefore certainly cannot be taken as proof of its contents. The record as a whole then becomes particularly relevant in determining the scope of the waiver. With the benefit of the record as a whole, the trial judge considered that he had before him a claim of an alimentary nature, while the Court of Appeal did not have transcripts available to it and was not in a position to analyse the minutes in light of the record as a whole.

For these reasons, I am of the view that the Court of Appeal erred in intervening on the question of the lump sum.

C. The question of Interest

There is no need to dwell at length on the question of the interest claimed in this Court in or on that of the additional indemnity. In October 1983 Laroche J. ordered that the sum of $40,000 be paid in periodic instalments without interest over a six-year period. The penalty specified for failure to pay was that the entire amount would automatically become due. Execution of the judgment in respect of the corollary relief was stayed by the Court of Appeal, except as regards the initial instalment of $5,000.

Under s. 52 of the Supreme Court Act (now s. 50), the appellant is entitled to interest at the legal rate on each of the unpaid instalments indicated in the conclusions of the trial judgment, from the time when they respectively became due. An order to the contrary would not seem to me to be appropriate.

I note that the additional indemnity was not claimed at trial. Taking into account the very special circumstances of this case as a whole, I do not feel it is proper to increase the amount otherwise due by adding such an indemnity.

6. Conclusions

For all these reasons, I must necessarily conclude that the Court of Appeal's intervention in the case at bar was unwarranted. There was no error in the Superior Court's judgment that could affect the validity of its conclusions and so justify a reversal on appeal.

The appeal is accordingly allowed. There will be no award as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

In the Matter of the Bankruptcy
Ricky Steven Dyrland

Memorandum of Decision of the Honourable Madam Justice J.B. Veit

Summary

[1] In Alberta, approximately 20% of bankrupts remain undischarged after their Trustee has been discharged; that percentage has increased markedly in recent years. When a Trustee is subsequently re-appointed, or a new Trustee appointed, to complete the administration of the bankruptcy, one problem that must be addressed is the status of unsecured creditor claimants who have not anchored their claims for limitations purposes by commencing legal proceedings. Specifically, does the passage of more than two years from the discharge of a first Trustee to the re-appointment of that Trustee or the appointment of a new Trustee, coupled with the provisions of Alberta's Limitations Act which imposes a two year limitation period on claims, make all pre-bankruptcy claims in which Statements of Claim have not been filed vulnerable to a limitations defence? To put it another way, since a Trustee must act in the best interests of all valid claimants, must a Trustee contest all claims to which a two year "gap" period applies on the basis of a limitations defence?

[2] The basic issue naturally raises many subsidiary or collateral issues such as, does the mere reciting by the bankrupt of a claim in a statement of affairs constitute an "acknowledgment" of a debt for limitations purposes, and does a Trustee's preliminary distribution to creditors constitute a "part payment" which extends the limitations period and, if so, does the limitations period resume from the date of the payment or from the date when the original Trustee is discharged?

[3] Ricky Dyrland made an assignment into bankruptcy on March 26, 2002. Fenniak & Associates was appointed to be his Trustee. The following unsecured creditors filed proofs of claim in the bankruptcy: Canada Revenue Agency, CRA, in the approximate amount of $140,255.00; Alberta Treasury Branches, ATB, in the approximate amount of $115,059.00; Leduc Motors in the approximate amount of $2,515.00, and Canadian Tire Acceptance in the approximate amount of $575.00. In addition, Alberta Justice - Maintenance Enforcement, filed a claim as a preferred creditor in the approximate amount of $3,555.00. On July 22, 2002, Canada Revenue Agency filed a Notice of Objection to Mr. Dyrland's discharge. On August 7, 2002, Mr. Dyrland's application for discharge was adjourned sine die by Registrar Funduk. Small dividends were paid by the Trustee to unsecured creditors on April 30, 2003, prior to Alberta Justice filing its claim on November 17, 2003. Fenniak was discharged on January 27, 2004.

[4] More than two years after Fenniak's discharge, on March 29, 2006, a new Trustee, Browning Crocker Inc., was appointed to complete the administration of the Dyrland bankruptcy and realize and distribute the property.

[5] In this motion, Mr. Dyrland's current Trustee asks the court for advice and directions concerning the application of Alberta's limitations legislation on bankruptcy claims, ATB asks for a direction to Browning Crocker Inc. that it continue to deal with ATB as a proven creditor with a valid and outstanding claim against the bankrupt's estate, and CRA asks for a declaration that, pursuant to the provisions of s. 222 of the Income Tax Act, its claim against the bankrupt is not statute-barred.

[6] In Alberta, once a Trustee is discharged, if the bankrupt remains undischarged, the statutory stay of proceedings against the bankrupt is lifted. This is the necessary result of: the clear wording of the legislation, legislative history, and policy relating to an uncooperative bankrupt.

[7] The lifting of the statutory stay of proceedings against a bankrupt following the discharge of the Trustee results in the continuation or resumption of the limitations period. That is merely another manifestation of the same policy which results in the lifting of the statutory stay; like the lifting of the statutory stay, the continuation of the limitations periods returns a bankrupt's creditors to the position they were in immediately prior to the imposition of the bankruptcy regime. There is no operational conflict between provincial laws relating to debt obligations and federal bankruptcy law: provincial limitations statutes do not hinder the application of the BIA and do not interfere with the latter's priorities' regime. The continuation or resumption of statutory provincial limitation periods interferes with neither the operation of the bankruptcy law or with the legislative objectives of the BIA, which include the fair and equal treatment of creditors.

[8] The inclusion of a debt in a bankrupt's statement of affairs is not an acknowledgment for limitations purposes: at that stage of proceedings, the bankrupt no longer has the power to "admit" the debt. Indeed, the debtor's Trustee has explicit authority to disallow a claim listed in the statement of affairs.

[9] The receipt of a dividend in a bankruptcy proceeding is a part payment of a debt for limitations purposes. Such a payment restarts the limitation period as of the date on which the trustee is discharged.

[10] Here:

- the claim of the Director of Maintenance Enforcement survives the bankruptcy;
- the claims of ATB are vulnerable to the Trustee's invocation of Alberta's Limitations Act. ATB failed to obtain a "Remedial Order" within the meaning of the provincial limitations legislation in order to keep its claim alive after the discharge of the original Trustee; that claim is therefore statute-barred under provincial law;
- the claims of the creditors who were given notice of this application but did not appear are similarly vulnerable to the Trustee's pleading of the limitations period as a defence to their claims;
- the claim by CRA for income tax debts is not statute-barred: Alberta's Limitations Act does not override s. 222 of the Income Tax Act.

1. Background

a) Factual

[16] Ricky Dyrland made an assignment into bankruptcy on March 26, 2002 and Fenniak & Associates was appointed his Trustee.

[17] The following claimants filed Proofs of Claim in the Bankruptcy:

- Her Majesty the Queen in the Right of Canada as represented by the Minister of National Revenue, claims dated March 26, 2002, October 7, 2002, and October 16, 2006 in the total amount of $140,255.23;
- Alberta Treasury Branches claim dated April 9, 2002, and Alberta Treasury Branches Mastercard claim dated April 12, 2002 in the amounts of $113,871.01 and $1,188.55 respectively;
- Canadian Tire Acceptance Limited claim dated April 8, 2002 in the amount of $574.77;
- Alberta Justice Maintenance Enforcement Program claim in the amount of $3,554.77;

and

- 487244 Alberta Ltd. operating as Leduc Motors / Auto World claim in the amount of $2,515.27.

[18] On July 22, 2002, Canada Revenue Agency filed a Notice of Objection to Mr. Dyrland's discharge. On August 7, 2002, Mr. Dyrland's application for discharge was adjourned sine die by Registrar Funduk. Fenniak made dividend payments to the unsecured creditors on April 30, 2003. Fenniak was discharged as Trustee on January 27, 2004. More than two years later, on March 29, 2006, a new Trustee, Browning Crocker Inc.. was appointed to complete the administration of the Dyrland bankruptcy and realize and distribute the property.

[19] The Claim of the Maintenance Enforcement Program survives the bankruptcy.

[20] The evidence establishes that, according to searches at the Alberta Law Courts, none of the Proofs of Claim filed by the claimants were the subject of a judgment, or even of civil proceedings.

[21] No proceedings were ever taken by any of the claimants to lift the stay in the Bankruptcy.

[22] However, CRA took its own enforcement steps against the bankrupt between March 2004 and January 2006. Although all the Claimants have been given notice of these proceedings, only CRA and ATB have chosen to participate in this application. CRA has filed an affidavit, and ATB has not. No requests for cross-examination on Affidavits were made by the Trustee, CRA or ATB.

[23] The applicants obtained a decision on the motion for advice and directions from the Registrar: Appendix A. While the applicants do not disagree with the Registrar's specific direction concerning the parties to this application, they seek advice, to the extent possible, on the effect of provincial limitations provisions on the "gap" period - i.e. the period between the discharge of one Trustee and the re-appointment of the same Trustee or the appointment of a new Trustee in the same bankruptcy.

[24] Evidence obtained from the Superintendent of Bankruptcy establishes that, in the period from 1900 to the present, the percentage of bankrupts not discharged although their trustee was discharged is 9%. However, in 2006, relative to the discharge of their Trustees, 12.1% of Alberta associated bankrupts were not yet discharged, and in 2007, that percentage increased to 15% and in 2008 to 19.1%.

b) Provincial Limitations Act

[25] For ease of reference, the sections of the statute to which reference is made are set out in Appendix B hereto.

[26] The Alberta Limitations Act establishes a general limitation period of two years from when the claimant knew, or ought to have known, that the injury for which the claimant seeks a remedial order has occurred, that it is attributable to the defendant, and that it warrants bringing a court proceeding: s. 3(1)(a).

[27] The Act also establishes a "sunset clause" of 10 years from the date on which the claim arose, regardless of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff: s. 3(1)(b).

[28] The expiry of the limitations period under the Act is not an automatic bar to proceedings; rather the defendant must raise it as a bar: s. 3(1)(b).

[29] If a person liable in respect of a claim acknowledges the claim, or makes a part payment in respect of that claim before the expiry of the limitation period, the limitation period begins again at the time of the acknowledgment or part payment: s. 8(2).

[30] To be effective, an acknowledgment must be in writing and signed by the debtor: s. 9(1).

[31] The acknowledgement or part payment can be made by or to an agent and it will have the same effect as if it had been made by or to the principal: s. 9(3).

[32] A person has the benefit of an acknowledgment or part payment only if it is made with or to the person, or, with or to a person through whom the person derives a claim, or, "in the course of proceedings or a transaction purporting to be pursuant to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act": s. 9(4).

[33] ALRI's Report on Limitations does not explicitly mention federal bankruptcy legislation. It does, however, emphasize its intention that Alberta limitations legislation should - insofar as it is able - regulate all actions which are commenced in Alberta: see Appendix B. Section 2(3) of the existing statute reflects the recommendations made in s. 2(1) of the Annotated Model Limitations Act found in ALRI's Report No. 55 on Limitations.

[34] In its March 6, 1996 edition, Alberta Hansard reports the discussion in the Legislature concerning Bill 205, the proposed new Limitations Act, which was in fact brought forward as a private Member's bill. I have been unable to find any specific reference in the discussion to section 9(4) of Bill 205, the reference to bankruptcy legislation. On the contrary, in the comments from Mr. Dickson, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, there is the following:

Similarly section 9, section 10. There hasn't been a substantive change to the law in terms of part payment or acknowledgements, but I think it's brought forward in a way that's more intelligible to Albertans, to members of the public who may be reading this.

[35] The applicant has also brought to the court's attention that the recommendations of the Uniform Limitations Act Working Group, of the Civil Section of the Uniform Law Conference of Canada, as discussed at the Group's meeting in St. John's in August 2005, while generally basing its work on the work of the Alberta Law Reform Institute and the new limitations statute in Alberta, has developed a different form of reference to acknowledgments than that found in the current Alberta statute. The Group's proposed Act deals with acknowledgments in s. 11, which reads in part as follows:

11. (1) If a person acknowledges liability in respect of a claim for payment of a liquidated sum, the recovery of personal property, the enforcement of a charge on personal property or relief from enforcement of a charge on personal property, the limitation periods begin anew.

(2) An acknowledgment of liability in respect of a claim for interst is an acknowledgment of liability in respect of a claim for the principal and for interest falling due after the acknowledgment is made.

(10) This section does not apply unless the acknowlegment is made to the person with the claim, the person's agent or an official receiver or trustee acting under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada) before the expiry of the limitation period applicable to the claim.

c) Federal bankruptcy legislation

[36] A statutory stay of proceedings against an insolvent person is instituted automatically upon the filing of a notice of intention by an insolvent person, the filing of a proposal or consumer proposal, or upon bankruptcy: ss 69, 69.1, 69.2, 69.3. For ease of reference, these sections are set out in Appendix D hereto.

[37] The BIA does not specifically address the impact of the re-appointment of a trustee or the appointment of a new trustee, after the initial trustee has been discharged.

[38] So far as I am aware, federal legislation does not require the Trustee, on being discharged when the bankrupt is not discharged, to tell creditors that the stay of proceedings will be lifted upon the discharge and that the creditors are free to pursue their claims against the bankrupt. However, the applicant here - Browning Crocker Inc. - makes it a practice to include such a statement in the footnote to the Statement of Receipts and Disbursements which is files in connection with its application for discharge. However, Browning Crocker was not Mr. Dyrland's first Trustee and no statement concerning the stay of proceedings is found in the first Trustee's Final Statement of Receipts and Disbursements.

2. General principles relating to the relationship between provincial limitations provisions and the federal bankruptcy law

[39] For the purposes of this application, the parties agree, and I agree with them, that the following general principles apply:

- each of the BIA and the Limitations Act is valid legislation within the federal and provincial spheres respectively;
- if a provincial statute - the Limitations Act - comes into conflict with a federal statute - the BIA - then the federal statute prevails over the provincial statute and takes effect according to its tenor: Larue. Any statutory conflict must be analyzed to determine if there is an operational conflict between the federal and provincial legislation. If provincial and federal laws are in operational conflict, and if the federal law is in an area of exclusive federal jurisdiction, the provincial legislation is ultra vires to the extent of the conflict. If the conflict arises in an area of concurrent or overlapping jurisdiction, the provincial legislation remains intra vires, but is inoperative to the extent of the conflict: Husky Oil Operations Ltd.;
- the constitutional authority given to Parliament to deal with all matters arising within the domain of bankruptcy and insolvency enables Parliament to determine, by legislation, the relative priorities of creditors under a bankruptcy or an authorized assignment: Larue;
- provinces cannot create priorities under the BIA by their own legislation: Henfrey Samson Belair Ltd.;
- one of the purposes of the BIA is to provide for the fair distribution of the bankrupt's property amongst the bankrupt's creditors on a pari passu basis: Aevo Co.; and,
- where there is an interpretation of the facts and the law which furthers the basic concept of equality of creditors, as opposed to favouring a particular group of ordinary creditors, the court should lean in the direction of the interpretation which leads to equality of ranking: Re Canadian Tabulating Card Co.

[40] In addition, it is settled law that the stay of proceedings in a bankruptcy has the effect of suspending the operation of a limitation period.

3. In Alberta, once a trustee is discharged, does the statutory stay of proceedings against the bankrupt contained in the BIA come to an end even though the bankrupt is undischarged?

[41] The short answer to the question is: Yes.

[42] Although it is apparently not the law in Manitoba (Morgan), in Alberta, it has been decided that once the trustee in bankruptcy is discharged, but the bankrupt is undischarged, there is no longer a stay under section 69.3(1): Ramjag. A similar result was reached in Saskatchewan (Re Fraser), in Ontario (Re Sherazee), in British Columbia (Thiessen) and by the Quebec Court of Appeal (Fortin).

[43] With respect, I agree with the Registrar's decision in Ramjag, and similar case law including that from the Quebec Court of Appeal, to the effect that the combination of the clear wording of s. 69.3, together with the legislative change that was effected in that section from the previous wording of the predecessor section (which change removed the words requiring leave of the court), together with the policy implications of an uncooperative bankrupt maintaining the benefit of a stay, result in the conclusion that when a trustee has been discharged, if the bankrupt is not discharged, there is no longer any statutory stay of proceedings against the bankrupt.

4. Does the lifting of the stay of proceedings against a bankrupt following the discharge of a trustee result in the resumption or continuation of the limitation period?

[44] The short answer to the question is: Yes.

[45] The objective of limitations legislation is to force timely litigation of disputes. Such legislation protects both debtors and creditors, for example, by allowing a reasonable period of time for the non-litigation resolution of disputes before the admittedly expensive litigation route is engaged. Acknowledgments and part payments, which in some jurisdictions are collectively termed "confirmation", extend the time during which non-litigation routes may be explored.

[46] In Alberta, when federal bankruptcy legislation is not involved, a creditor is not relieved from the obligation of commencing litigation within a limitation period just because the debtor has acknowledged his debt or made a part payment on the debt. In Alberta, a plaintiff/creditor who is faced with a limitations defence cannot successfully claim that merely because the defendant/debtor has acknowledged the debt, the limitations legislation no longer applies: on its face, the legislation only extends the limitation period when an acknowledgment or part payment is made.

[47] I pause to note that, in relation to this application, had Mr. Dyrland not gone into bankruptcy, the mere acknowledgment by Mr. Dyrland of his debt to ATB, or even a part payment by Mr. Dyrland on his debt to ATB, would not have relieved ATB from complying with the Alberta Limitations Act if Mr. Dyrland had subsequently failed to pay off all his debt.

[48] Should this state of the law change because the debtor goes into bankruptcy? No. In order to be fair and predictable, bankruptcy legislation requires Trustees to treat all creditors of a debtor alike by requiring Trustees to ascertain the legitimacy of a bankrupt's purported obligations. Part of that legitimacy is compliance with the applicable limitations legislation.

[49] It is relatively clear that limitations legislation must be taken into account when a bankrupt first invokes the protection of bankruptcy legislation. On an initial bankruptcy proceeding, the bankrupt's Trustee will embark on an assessment of the bankrupt's alleged debts in which the Trustee will, presumably, deny all claims to which limitations defences apply. It would be unfair, for example, for a Trustee to recognize a bankrupt's claim that she owes a piano teacher for lessons which terminated 10 years ago and to treat that claim on an equal footing with the claim of the guitar retailer who sold the debtor a Fender guitar last month.

[50] In the situation here, if ATB had not, within the two years preceding the appointment of the original Trustee, either received an acknowledgment by Mr. Dyrland of his debt or received a part payment from him on his debt, or commenced an action in debt against Mr. Dyrland, ATB would expect that its claim in the Dyrland bankruptcy would be rejected by Mr. Dyrland's Trustee.

[51] Is there a different outcome in the situation where the original Trustee is discharged? No. As has been discussed above, the statutory stay of proceedings against a bankrupt is lifted when the bankrupt's Trustee has been discharged, even though the bankrupt has not been discharged. The statutory stay on litigation, and its collateral suspension of provincial limitations provisions, is at the core of bankruptcy policy: it helps the bankrupt by ensuring that the satisfaction of obligations can be accomplished in a fair manner that will allow the bankrupt's rehabilitation, and it helps the bankrupt's unsecured creditors by ensuring that they will be treated fairly by means of collective action against all of the bankrupt's property. However, when a Trustee is discharged but the bankrupt is not discharged, the statutory stay is lifted. The effect of the lifting of the stay is that each of the creditors is then entitled to take whatever permissible individual action it sees fit to undertake, even though that action may hinder the bankrupt's eventual rehabilitation and even though by that action it may appropriate to itself all or most of the bankrupt's scarce assets, leaving the other unsecured creditors with fewer, or no, assets against which their claims may be enforced. In the situation here, for example, after the statutory stay was lifted, CRA proceeded to undertake collection activity against Mr. Dyrland which resulted in approximately $50,000.00 of Mr. Dyrland's assets going to CRA and not being shared by all creditors.

[52] It is not unfair that the lifting of the stay requires the creditors to resume their limitations vulnerability: they are in no worse position than they were in prior to the recourse to the bankruptcy regime.

[53] ATB argues that because the BIA does not require that a proven creditor "reprove" its claim every 2 years, a "proven creditor" need not seek a Remedial Order under provincial legislation to maintain its claim in the bankruptcy. With respect, I disagree. While it is true that the BIA does not require creditors to re-file their claims when there has been a gap between the discharge of the original Trustee and the re-appointment of that Trustee or the appointment of a new Trustee, it is also true that the BIA does not anticipate or require stasis during the "gap" period. The most obvious example of that legislative intention is, of course, the lifting of the statutory stay. In the Dyrland bankruptcy, for example, between the date when the original Trustee was discharged and the current Trustee appointed, the assets available for distribution to creditors has diminished by approximately $50,000.00 which, in the circumstances here, could be a very material reduction in the bankrupt's estate. Re Drummie, which in my view correctly states that the BIA does not prevent a Trustee from re-assessing claims as the administration of a bankruptcy goes forward, points the way to a correct purposive interpretation of the BIA. When action is taken by a Trustee pursuant to the Act, the Trustee recognizes those claimants who have a currently valid claim under provincial legislation and applies those claims to the assets which currently form part of the bankrupt's estate. There is therefore no operational conflict between the BIA and the provincial limitations statute. Here, the original Trustee made partial payments on claims which had not yet been statute barred from assets which were then available. Similarly, when the current Trustee takes any action in the bankruptcy, he must assure himself that the claims remain valid and he can only distribute the assets which remain. In this way, the legislative authority of both the Legislature and Parliament are respected.

[54] In this context, ATB further argues that an admission (and also presumably a part payment) by a Trustee is "akin to and bears the hallmarks of a court judgment". With respect, I disagree. A debtor's admission of a debt, or part payment of a debt is not "akin to a court judgment": it is merely an admission or a part payment which extends the time to start legal proceedings. The actions of a Trustee are, with respect to acknowledgment and part payment not akin to the actions of a court but akin to the actions of the original debtor: just as the original debtor could have acknowledged the debt, and even repaid some of it, so can the Trustee acknowledge and pay; where the Trustee acknowledges and pays, he is merely doing so as the official who steps into the shoes of the debtor. There is no indication in the BIA that Parliament intended to create a new debt or civil claims regime; clearly, it intended only to make the adjustments to existing provincial civil claims law as were necessary to accomplish the policy objectives of bankruptcy legislation. The bankruptcy legislation can fulfill Parliament's aims and objectives by interfering with provincial civil law only to the extent governed by the statutory stay and collateral suspension of the limitations regime; when the stay is lifted, the limitations regime re-engages. Indeed, since legal proceedings objectively determine whether there is a debt, bringing oneself within the legal regime is an important marker in bankruptcy proceedings where the objective is to have a fair and orderly distribution of the bankrupt's assets amongst creditors.

[55] It is true, of course, that within the bankruptcy regime, provincial limitations periods are suspended, and that the Trustee can decide to allow a claim or, subject to court review, deny a claim. That model would have applied to Mr. Dyrland, and the ATB, had Mr. Dyrland's original Trustee not been discharged. [Of course, as the Abramyk decision makes clear, the bankruptcy regime has no necessary application to s. 178(1) claims, such as the s. 178(1)(c) claim here by the Director of Maintenance Enforcement: the Director can file a proof of claim in this bankruptcy and can benefit from a partial distribution, but can pursue the balance of the support claim after Mr. Dyrland is discharged from bankruptcy. However, because the ATB claim does not benefit from the provisions found in s. 178 of the BIA, the principles in the Abramyk decision do not assist the ATB here.] As the legislative lifting of the stay upon the discharge of the original Trustee demonstrates, the discharge of the original Trustee acts as a partial suspension of the bankruptcy regime. Once the original Trustee is discharged, neither the bankrupt's assets nor the status of the claims against those assets is protected.

[56] The ATB also argues that a resumption of a provincial limitations regime where a bankrupt's Trustee has been discharged but where the bankrupt himself has not been discharged would encourage bankrupts to be uncooperative with their Trustees in an effort to have the Trustees discharged. With respect, I disagree. The effect of the bankrupt's original Trustee being discharged is harmful to the bankrupt and could, indeed, be seen as a punishment to the bankrupt for being uncooperative: the bankrupts assets can be seized and liquidated, and new actions can be started against the bankrupt. However, the discharge of the bankrupt's Trustee does not disadvantage the bankrupts' creditors: if the creditor's claim has been rejected by the Trustee, the creditor has the right to have the denial reviewed by a court. If the creditor's claim has been admitted by the Trustee, or if the Trustee has made a part payment on the claim, or both, the creditor is protected by the provincial limitations legislation by the extension of the time for starting legal action to prove the claim and is further benefited by the bankruptcy legislation which suspends the provincial limitations periods until the discharge of the Trustee, so that the creditor benefits from yet a further extension of the time in which to commence legal proceedings. In the ATB example here, ATB's limitation period was extended for a further two years by the original Trustee's part payment on April 30, 2003 but since the limitation period is suspended while the Trustee was still in office, and since the original Trustee was discharged only on January 27, 2004, ATB had two years from that date to commence legal proceedings. In summary, the debtor cannot "take advantage" of the gap to allow their obligations, or some of them, to evaporate during the "gap" period; on the contrary, during the gap period, the bankrupt loses the protection of the bankruptcy legislation and is again at the mercy of all his creditors.

[57] Nor is it unfair that a trustee in the process of being discharged does not have to advise, or warn, the debtor's unsecured creditors that provincial limitations legislation is resuming. There is no obligation on a Trustee to give any kind of advice to a putative claimant with a view to improving their claim. The claimants are, however, advised by the Trustee of any impending discharge; that is sufficient to put the creditors on notice that the full provincial civil law regime is back in operation.

[58] In summary with respect to ATB's arguments against the resumption of the limitations periods, there is no operational conflict between provincial limitations law and federal bankruptcy law. On the contrary, the two systems are well able to work in concert.

[59] The conclusion that the provincial statutory limitations period continues following the discharge of the trustee if the bankrupt has not been discharged raises consideration of two policy issues which also must be considered.

(a) Given the purpose of the BIA to ensure fair and equal treatment of creditors, should a provincial statute such as the Limitations Act be permitted to operate prior to the discharge of the bankrupt, where to do so favours the recovery of certain unsecured creditors over others?

[60] The short answer to the question is: because the Limitations Act treats all unsecured creditors alike and requires all of them to comply with its requirements, that Act promotes the same objective as does the BIA, i.e. the fair and equal treatment of creditors and is not in policy conflict with the bankruptcy legislation.

[61] Indeed, if a creditor who chose not to incur the cost of commencing an action to meet provincial limitations legislation could obtain all of the same advantages as the creditor who did go to that expense, the BIA would not be treating all creditors alike.

(b) Should the Limitations Act be held to be inapplicable to situations where its operation would alter the priorities contemplated by the BIA?

[62] The short answer to the question is: since the Limitations Act does not alter any priorities contemplated by the BIA, it should continue to be applied.

[63] There is nothing in the BIA to suggest that the validity of claims against a bankrupt should be assessed by any standard other than the standard imposed by provincial civil law. So long as that law is applied consistently, there is no alteration of the priorities established by Parliament in the BIA.

5. Does the inclusion of a debt in a bankrupt's statement of affairs constitute an acknowledgement for the purposes of a limitation period?

[64] The short answer to the question is: No.

[65] Browning Crocker Inc. submits, and I accept, that the listing of a claim in the statement of affairs does not act as an acknowledgment of the debt for the purposes of the Limitations Act.

[66] Indeed, a decision to that effect had been made under the previous statute: Fekete.

[67] The only Alberta case to which I have been referred which considers whether the new provisions as found in s. 9(4) of the Limitations Act change the previous interpretation is Johnson. I agree with the conclusion of O'Ferrall Prov. Ct. J. in that case that "a part payment made n the course of bankruptcy proceedings has the same effect as a part payment made directly by the person liable in respect of the claim". The Johnson court did not have to consider when the limitation period restarts as a result of a part payment in a bankruptcy setting. Although the situation of part payment does not arise on the facts of this case, in my view, where there has been a part payment, the limitation period re-starts when the trustee is discharged; I agree with the applicant's contention that the implicit finding in the Fekete decision is that the limitation period resumes once the trustee has been discharged.

[68] The conclusion in Johnson about the effect of an acknowledgment of a claim in the statement of affairs is, however, just as much a statement of obiter as is my view that a part payment operates to restart the limitation period once the trustee has been discharged. With respect, for the reasons which follow, I disagree with the conclusions concerning the validity of the acknowledgment in a statement of affairs.

[69] My analysis of the status of an acknowledgement of a debt or claim in a statement of affairs must begin with the Ackerman decision where the Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench held that although a listing in the statement of affairs satisfied the requirement that an acknowledgment must be in writing and signed by the maker or his agent, in the circumstances there, the acknowledgment had not satisfied the statutory requirement that the acknowledgment be given to a person entitled to receive the same. Section 9(4) of Alberta's Limitation Act removes the requirement that the acknowledgment be made to the creditor or his/her agent in situations where the acknowledgment is made in the course of proceedings under the BIA. For that reason, the Ackerman decision might be thought of as authority for holding that the statement of affairs would constitute an effective acknowledgment for limitations purposes in Alberta.

[70] However, as the Supreme Court of Canada held in Ryan, an "acknowledgment" requires an admission, or acknowledgment of liability; it requires more than acknowledgment of the mere fact that someone has asserted a claim. The Supreme Court relies, in part, on an older English decision, Surrendra, which appears to continue to be good law, having recently been referred to with approval by the English House of Lords in Bradford & Bingley. Indeed, the very proposition that an acknowledgment must be an admission is reflected in s. 8(3) of Alberta's Limitations Act, i.e. that a "claim may be acknowledged only by an admission of the person liable in respect of it that the sum claimed is due and unpaid". (Emphasis added).

[71] The uniqueness of the bankruptcy situation in this context is that the bankrupt is no longer the "person liable in respect of it": once an assignment in bankruptcy is made, the bankrupt gives up their ability to acknowledge liability since all the bankrupt's property becomes vested in the trustee. Indeed, the law is clear that a trustee is able to disallow a claim that has been listed by a bankrupt in his/her statement of affairs.

[72] In summary, a listing of a claim in a statement of affairs is not an acknowledgment of a claim for the purposes of limitations.

6. With respect to claims that survive a bankruptcy, does the receipt of a dividend in a bankruptcy proceeding constitute a part payment for the purposes of a limitation period?

[73] The short answer to the question is: Yes.

Digitized by Google

[74] In Alberta, s. 8(2) of the Limitations Act provides that "if a person liable in respect of a claim . . . makes a part payment in respect of the claim before the expiration of the limitation period applicable to the claim, the operation of the limitation period begins again at the time of the . . . part payment".

(i) Does the payment of a dividend in a bankruptcy proceeding restart the limitation period on the trustee's discharge or on the payment of the dividend?

[75] The short answer to the question is: From the date of the trustee's discharge.

[76] Browning Crocker Inc. argues, and I accept, that the limitation period begins or resumes only upon the discharge of the trustee, not upon the part payment. This result, which is consistent with the implicit finding in the Fekete decision, is required because the part payment does not affect the automatic stay of proceedings which itself suspends the operation of the provincial limitations period. That suspension remains in effect until the Trustee's discharge.

7. What is the status of the ATB claim?

[77] For the purposes of this application, ATB concedes that two years had passed since it knew that an injury for which ATB could have sought a remedial order had occurred, that the injury was attributable to the bankrupt Dyrland, and that the injury warranted bringing a proceeding.

[78] However, ATB argues that it was not required, pursuant to the provisions of Alberta's Limitations Act, to crystallize, perfect or maintain its claim. For ease of reference, the provisions of that Act relating to remedial orders and the usual and the final provincial limitation periods are reproduced here:

1 In this Act,

(i) "Remedial Order" means a judgment or an Order made by a Court in a civil proceeding requiring a Defendant to comply with a duty or to pay damages for the violation of a right, but excludes

(i) a declaration of rights and duties, legal relations or personal status,

(ii) the enforcement of a Remedial Order,

(iii) judicial review of the decision, act or omission of a person, board, commission, tribunal or other body in the exercise of a power conferred by statute or regulation, or

(iv) a Writ of Habeas Corpus.

3(1) Subject to section 11, if a claimant does not seek a remedial order within

(a) 2 years after the date on which the claimant first knew, or in the circumstances ought to have known,

(i) that the injury for which the claimant seeks a remedial order had occurred,

(ii) that the injury was attributable to conduct of the defendant, and

(iii) that the injury, assuming liability on the part of the defendant, warrants bringing a proceeding,

(b) 10 years after the claim arose,

whichever period expires first, the defendant, on pleading this Act as a defence, is entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the claim.

[79] ATB argues that nothing in the BIA requires a proven creditor to further maintain its claim: for example, the Act does not require a creditor to reprove its claim every two years or to reprove its claim upon the reappointment of a previously discharged trustee. I agree. However, that analysis applies only to a matter that remains within the bankruptcy framework; the crux of the situation here is that the discharge of the trustee removes ATB's claim from the bankruptcy framework and places it back within the provincial framework of the collection of debts in which limitation rules apply. In the circumstances here, ATB received a part payment from the original trustee. That part payment restarted the limitation period for ATB. As indicated above, the limitation legislation was, however, suspended while there was a statutory stay applied pursuant to the bankruptcy legislation. However, as soon as the statutory stay was lifted, i.e. when the original trustee was discharged on January 27, 2004, the limitations period started again. Since, as it acknowledged, ATB knew that it could obtain a remedial order but did not do so, its claim is vulnerable to being contested by the debtor's current Trustee based on a limitations defence.

[80] ATB alleges that to invoke provincial legislation in the specific context here creates an operational conflict between provincial and federal legislation, in which case the federal legislation prevails. With respect, I disagree. Bankruptcy legislation does not create a priorities regime amongst unsecured creditors based upon mere filing of a claim. Rather, since bankruptcy legislation does not create a parallel civil claims universe, it presupposes that unsecured claims filed in the bankruptcy will be assessed as to validity according to provincial law. For example, Trustee who was faced with a money claim for discrimination would presumably deny the claim based on Canadian law which establishes that discrimination comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of human rights commissions. A Trustee must assess every claim made against the bankrupt's estate in light of the law that applies to that claim. Provincial limitations law is part of the law that applies to each claim. A Trustee can re-assess its position relative to a claim as new circumstances arise: a claim for a Fender guitar may appear perfectly valid until the Trustee uncovers a receipt for the purchase price signed and sealed by the vendor. Similarly, a claim which initially is valid, including compliance with limitations legislation, can become invalid if it fails to maintain validity through compliance with provincial law.

8. What is the status of the CRA claim?

[81] In addition to the information set out in the Background section above, the following facts should be noted in connection with CRA's claim:

- based on Alberta case law, including discussed above, after Mr. Dyrland's original Trustee was discharged, CRA concluded that the statutory stay on collection action was lifted, and commenced action to collect Mr. Dyrland's tax debt;
- CRA's collection action included various T1 transfers, 22 wage garnishments and one garnishment of $23,000.00 held on behalf of Mr. Dyrland by a law firm;
- in total, CRA collected a little over $50,000.00 through these various collection techniques;
- the final collection action undertaken by CRA occurred on January 31, 2006;
- Mr. Dyrland did not, prior to March 4, 2004, obtain a declaration that his tax debts were "statute barred".

[82] The limitations period covering CRA is contained in s. 222 of the Income Tax Act; the limitations contained in Alberta's Limitations Act cannot over-ride the federal Act: Markevich.

[83] Pursuant to s. 222, CRA can enforce tax debts that were prescribed prior to March 4, 2004: Gibson, Collins.

[84] In the result, CRA's claim is not statute barred. The limitations period on the CRA claim would normally expire on January 30, 2016, but will be extended by the number of days that Mr. Dyrland remains in bankruptcy and will be further extended if CRA is able to take collection action again either because the trustee has been discharged again or if CRA obtains leave under s. 69.4 of the BIA to initiate such action.

Appendix A
April 23, 2008
I wish to thank counsel for their excellent briefs and their candid argument in relation to this matter. Having reviewed the authorities and considered the argument presented, it is plain to me that the Limitations Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. L-12 does not have any application given the facts and circumstances of this bankruptcy. I agree with counsel representing Canada Revenue Agency that the limitations applicable to their claim arise under the Income Tax Act and therefore also have no application.
Accordingly, the Trustee may distribute funds in accordance with the provisions of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act except that the creditors Alberta Treasury Branches and Canada Revenue Agency shall each be entitled to $1,000.00 in costs to be paid in priority to the claims of the general creditors.

ss. 3, 8, 9
Limitation periods
3(1) Subject to section 11, if a claimant does not seek a remedial order within whichever period expires first, the defendant, on pleading this Act as a defence, is entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the claim.

(2) The limitation period provided by subsection (1)(a) begins
(a) against a successor owner of a claim when either a predecessor owner or the successor owner of the claim first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a),
(b) against a principal when either
(i) the principal first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a), or

and
(c) against a personal representative of a deceased person as a successor owner of a claim, at the earliest of the following times:
(i) when the deceased owner first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a), if the deceased owner acquired the knowledge more than 2 years before the deceased owner's death;
(ii) when the representative was appointed, if the representative had the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a) at that time;
(iii) when the representative first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a), if the representative acquired the knowledge after being appointed.
(3) For the purposes of subsection (1)(b),

(c) a claim based on a demand obligation arises when a default in performance occurs after a demand for performance is made;
(d) a claim in respect of a proceeding under the Fatal Accidents Act arises when the conduct that causes the death, on which the claim is based, occurs;
(e) a claim for contribution arises when the claimant for contribution is made a defendant in respect of, or incurs a liability through the settlement of, a claim seeking to impose a liability on which the claim for contribution can be based, whichever first occurs;
(f) a claim for a remedial order for the recovery of possession of real property arises when the claimant is dispossessed of the real property.
(4) The limitation period provided by subsection (1)(a) does not apply where a claimant seeks a remedial order for possession of real property, including a remedial order under section 69 of the Law of Property Act.
(5) Under this section,
(a) the claimant has the burden of proving that a remedial order was sought within the limitation period provided by subsection (1)(a), and

(b) the defendant has the burden of proving that a remedial order was not sought within the limitation period provided by subsection (1)(b).
(6) The re-entry of a claimant to real property in order to recover possession of that real property is effective only if it occurs prior to the end of the 10-year limitation period provided by subsection (1)(b).
(7) If a person in possession of real property has given to the person entitled to possession of the real property an acknowledgment in writing of that person's title to the real property prior to the expiry of the 10-year limitation period provided by subsection (1)(b),

Digitized by Google

(a) possession of the real property by the person who has given the acknowledgment is deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to have been possession by the person to whom the acknowledgment was given, and
(b) the right of the person to whom the acknowledgment was given, or of a successor in title to that person, to take proceedings to recover possession of the real property is deemed to have arisen at the time at which the acknowledgment, or the last of the acknowledgments if there was more than one, was given.
(8) If the right to recover possession of real property first accrued to a predecessor in title of the claimant from whom the claimant acquired the title as a donee, proceedings to recover possession of the real property may not be taken by the claimant except within 10 years after the right accrued to that predecessor.

Acknowledgment and part payment
8(1) In this section, "claim" means a claim for the recovery, through the realization of a security interest or otherwise, of an accrued liquidated pecuniary sum, including, but not limited to a principal debt, rents, income and a share of estate property, and interest on any of them.
(2) Subject to subsections (3) and (4) and section 9, if a person liable in respect of a claim acknowledges the claim, or makes a part payment in respect of the claim, before the expiration of the limitation period applicable to the claim, the operation of the limitation period begins again at the time of the acknowledgment or part payment.
(3) A claim may be acknowledged only by an admission of the person liable in respect of it that the sum claimed is due and unpaid, but an acknowledgment is effective
(a) whether or not a promise to pay can be implied from it, and
(b) whether or not it is accompanied with a refusal to pay.
(4) When a claim is for the recovery of both a primary sum and interest on it, an acknowledgment of either obligation, or a part payment in respect of either obligation, is an acknowledgment of, or a part payment in respect of, the other obligation.
1996 cL-15.1 s8
Persons affected by exceptions for agreement, acknowledgment and part payment
9(1) An agreement and an acknowledgment must be in writing and signed by the person adversely affected.
(2) An agreement made by or with an agent has the same effect as if made by or with the principal.
(3) An acknowledgment or a part payment made by or to an agent has the same effect as if it were made by or to the principal.
(4) A person has the benefit of an agreement, an acknowledgment or a part payment only if it is made
(a) with or to the person,
(b) with or to a person through whom the person derives a claim, or
(c) in the course of proceedings or a transaction purporting to be pursuant to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada).
(5) A person is bound by an agreement, an acknowledgment or a part payment only if
(a) the person is a maker of it, or
(b) the person is liable in respect of a claim
(i) as a successor of a maker, or
(ii) through the acquisition of an interest in property from or through a maker who was liable in respect of the claim.

Appendix C

Extracts from Alberta Institute of Law Research and Reform, Limitations, Report for Discussion No. 4, at pp. 175-177

(a) Federal law

3.10 In Canada, by way of example, actions for divorce, actions with respect to patents, copyrights and trade marks, and maritime law actions arise under substantive federal law. Some areas of law are subject to exclusive federal jurisdiction. Although Parliament can subject claims in these areas to applicable provincial limitations law, the extent to which it has done this is sometimes uncertain. In other areas of law there may be dual legislative jurisdiction, with federal jurisdiction paramount. Federal legislation on a subject would preempt that subject area. However, the extent to which federal legislation on a subject actually occupies an entire subject area, and hence preempts provincial legislation, is sometimes uncertain.

3.11 We want to make it certain that any claim which arose under substantive federal law, and which is brought before an Alberta court, is subject to the new Alberta Act to the extent that the Act can be made applicable to it. Our reason is that we want to insure that a claim which is not in fact subject to limitation provisions under federal law is not left in a limitations hiatus because Alberta failed to assert a legislative power which it had.

3.12 It may be that a provision applying the new Alberta Act to a claim not otherwise excluded "to the extent that the claim is subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the Province" would be sufficient. Literally, such a provision would include a claim arising under substantive federal law. We think, however, that an express inclusive reference to any claim arising under federal law is preferable.

(b) Federal courts

3.13 Similarly, we want to make it certain that any claim which arose within Alberta, and which is brought before a federal court, is subject to the new Alberta Act to the extent that the Act can be made applicable to it. For this purpose the crucial point is that the claim arose in Alberta; it makes no difference whether the claim arose under federal substantive law or Alberta substantive law, or whether the claim is brought before a federal court in Alberta or somewhere else in Canada. Again, we want to insure that a claim which arose in Alberta and which is brought before a federal court will not be in a limitations void because neither jurisdiction applied limitation provisions to it.

3.14 It seems clear that Parliament has granted a province legislative power to apply its limitations law to a claim in this situation, for subsection 38(1) of the Federal Court Act provides:

38.(1) Except as expressly provided by any other Act, the law relating to prescription and the limitation of actions in force in any province between subject and subject apply to any proceedings in the Court in respect of any cause of action arising in such province. . . .

It may be that this subsection does apply Alberta limitations law to the claims we are considering, and that no express application provision in the new Alberta Act is needed. However, this is a technical field of law, and a court might hold that Alberta limitations law applies in this situation only if Alberta legislation makes it applicable. We prefer to avoid any possible uncertainty on this issue.

(5) Subject to sections 79 and 127 to 135 and subsection 248(1), the filing of a proposal under subsection 62(1) does not prevent a secured creditor to whom the proposal has not been made in respect of a particular security from realizing or otherwise dealing with that security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed.
Where secured creditors vote against proposal
(6) Subject to sections 79 and 127 to 135 and subsection 248(1), where secured creditors holding a particular class of secured claim vote for the refusal of a proposal, a secured creditor holding a secured claim of that class may henceforth realize or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed.

Secured creditors
(2) Subject to sections 79 and 127 to 135 and subsection 248(1), the bankruptcy of a debtor does not prevent a secured creditor from realizing or otherwise dealing with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed, unless the court otherwise orders, but in so ordering the court shall not postpone the right of the secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security, except as follows:

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

Bankruptcy and Insolvency — Provable claims — Contingent claims — Corporation filing for insolvency protection — Province issuing environmental protection orders against corporation and seeking declaration that orders not "claims" under Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"), and not subject to claims procedure order — Whether environmental protection orders are monetary claims that can be compromised in corporate restructuring under CCAA — Whether CCAA is ultra vires or constitutionally inapplicable by permitting court to determine whether environmental order is a monetary claim.

A was involved in industrial activity in Newfoundland and Labrador (the "Province"). In a period of general financial distress, it ended its last operation there, filed for insolvency protection in the United States and obtained a stay of proceedings under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"). The Province subsequently issued five orders under the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2, requiring A to submit remediation action plans for five industrial sites it had occupied, three of which had been expropriated by the Province, and to complete the remediation actions. The Province also brought a motion for a declaration that a claims procedure order issued under the CCAA in relation to A's proposed reorganization did not bar the Province from enforcing the environmental protection orders. The Province argued that the environmental protection orders were not "claims" under the CCAA and therefore could not be stayed and subject to a claims procedure order. It further argued that Parliament lacked the constitutional competence under its power to make laws in relation to bankruptcy and insolvency to stay orders that were validly made in the exercise of a provincial power. A contested the motion, arguing that the orders were monetary in nature and hence fell within the definition of the word "claim" in the claims procedure order. The CCAA court dismissed the Province's motion. The Court of Appeal denied the Province leave to appeal.

Held (McLachlin C.J. and LeBel J. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ.: Not all orders issued by regulatory bodies are monetary in nature and thus provable claims in an insolvency proceeding, but some may be, even if the amounts involved are not quantified at the outset of the proceedings. In the environmental context, the CCAA court must determine whether there are sufficient facts indicating the existence of an environmental duty that will ripen into a financial liability owed to the regulatory body that issued the order. In such a case, the relevant question is not simply whether the body has formally exercised its power to claim a debt. A CCAA court does not assess claims or orders on the basis of form alone. If the order is not framed in monetary terms, the CCAA court must determine, in light of the factual matrix and the applicable statutory framework, whether it is a claim that will be subject to the claims process.

There are three requirements orders must meet in order to be considered claims that may be subject to the insolvency process in a case such as the one at bar. First, there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor. In this case, the first criterion was met because the Province had identified itself as a creditor by resorting to environmental protection enforcement mechanisms. Second, the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred as of a specific time. This requirement was also met since the environmental damage had occurred before the time of the CCAA proceedings. Third, it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation. The present case turns on this third requirement, and the question is whether orders that are not expressed in monetary terms can be translated into such terms.

A claim may be asserted in insolvency proceedings even if it is contingent on an event that has not yet occurred. The criterion used by courts to determine whether a contingent claim will be included in the insolvency process is whether the event that has not yet occurred is too remote or speculative. In the context of an environmental protection order, this means that there must be sufficient indications that the regulatory body that triggered the enforcement mechanism will ultimately perform remediation work and assert a monetary claim. If there is sufficient certainty in this regard, the court will conclude that the order can be subject to the insolvency process.

Certain indicators can guide the CCAA court in this assessment, including whether the activities are ongoing, whether the debtor is in control of the property, and whether the debtor has the means to comply with the order. The court may also consider the effect that requiring the debtor to comply with the order would have on the insolvency process. The analysis is grounded in the facts of each case. In this case, the CCAA court's assessment of the facts, particularly its finding that the orders were the first step towards performance of the remediation work by the Province, leads to no conclusion other than that it was sufficiently certain that the Province would perform remediation work and therefore fall within the definition of a creditor with a monetary claim.

Subjecting such orders to the claims process does not extinguish the debtor's environmental obligations any more than subjecting any creditor's claim to that process extinguishes the debtor's obligation to pay a debt. It merely ensures that the Province's claim will be paid in accordance with insolvency legislation. Full compliance with orders that are found to be monetary in nature would shift the costs of remediation to third party creditors and replace the polluter-pay principle with a "third-party-pay" principle. Moreover, to subject environmental protection orders to the claims process is not to invite corporations to restructure in order to rid themselves of their environmental liabilities. Reorganization made necessary by insolvency is hardly ever a deliberate choice, and when the risks corporations engage in materialize, the dire costs are borne by almost all stakeholders.

Because the provisions on the assessment of claims in insolvency matters relate directly to Parliament's jurisdiction, the ancillary powers doctrine is not relevant to this case. The interjurisdictional immunity doctrine is also inapplicable, because a finding that a claim of an environmental creditor is monetary in nature does not interfere in any way with the creditor's activities; its claim is simply subject to the insolvency process.

Per McLachlin C.J. (dissenting): Remediation orders made under a province's environmental protection legislation impose ongoing regulatory obligations on the corporation required to clean up the pollution. They may only be reduced to monetary claims which can be compromised under CCAA proceedings in narrow circumstances where a province has done the remediation work, or where it is "sufficiently certain" that it will do the work. This last situation is regulated by the provisions of the CCAA for contingent or future claims. The test is whether there is a likelihood approaching certainty that the province will do the work. "Likelihood approaching certainty" recognizes that the government's decision is discretionary and may be influenced by competing political and social considerations, which are not normally subject to judicial consideration. Insofar as this determination touches on the division of powers, I am in substantial agreement with Deschamps J.

Apart from the orders related to the work done or tendered for on the Buchans property, the orders for remediation in this case are not claims that can be compromised. The CCAA maintains the fundamental distinction between regulatory obligations under the general law aimed at the protection of the public and monetary claims that can be compromised in CCAA restructuring or bankruptcy. The CCAA judge never asked himself the critical question of whether it was "sufficiently certain" that the Province would do the work itself. His failure to consider that question requires this Court to answer it in his stead. There is nothing on the record to support the view that the Province will move to remediate the properties. It has not been shown that the contamination poses immediate health risks which must be addressed without delay. It has not been shown that the Province has taken any steps to do any work. And it has not been shown that the Province has set aside or even contemplated setting aside money for this work. The Province retained a number of options, including leaving the sites contaminated, or calling on Abitibi to remediate following its emergence from restructuring. There is nothing in the record that makes it more probable, much less establishes "sufficient certainty", that the Province will opt to do the work itself.

Per LeBel J. (dissenting): The test proposed by the Chief Justice according to which the evidence must show that there is a "likelihood approaching certainty" that the Province would remediate the contamination itself is not the established test for determining where and how a contingent claim can be liquidated in bankruptcy and insolvency law. The test of "sufficient certainty" described by Deschamps J. best reflects how both the common law and the civil law view and deal with contingent claims. Applying that test, the appeal should be allowed on the basis that there is no evidence that the Province intends to perform the remedial work itself.

[1] DESCHAMPS J. — The question in this appeal is whether orders issued by a regulatory body with respect to environmental remediation work can be treated as monetary claims under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA").

[2] Regulatory bodies may become involved in reorganization proceedings when they order the debtor to comply with statutory rules. As a matter of principle, reorganization does not amount to a licence to disregard rules. Yet there are circumstances in which valid and enforceable orders will be subject to an arrangement under the CCAA. One such circumstance is where a regulatory body makes an environmental order that explicitly asserts a monetary claim.

[3] In other circumstances, it is less clear whether an order can be treated as a monetary claim. The appellant and a number of interveners posit that an order issued by an environmental body is not a claim under the CCAA if the order does not require the debtor to make a payment. I agree that not all orders issued by regulatory bodies are monetary in nature and thus provable claims in an insolvency proceeding, but some may be, even if the amounts involved are not quantified at the outset of the proceeding. In the environmental context, the CCAA court must determine whether there are sufficient facts indicating the existence of an environmental duty that will ripen into a financial liability owed to the regulatory body that issued the order. In such a case, the relevant question is not simply whether the body has formally exercised its power to claim a debt. A CCAA court does not assess claims — or orders — on the basis of form alone. If the order is not framed in monetary terms, the court must determine, in light of the factual matrix and the applicable statutory framework, whether it is a claim that will be subject to the claims process.

[4] The case at bar concerns contamination that occurred, prior to the CCAA proceedings, on property that is largely no longer under the debtor's possession and control. The CCAA court found on the facts of this case that the orders issued by Her Majesty the Queen in right of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador ("Province") were simply a first step towards remediating the contaminated property and asserting a claim for the resulting costs. In the words of the CCAA court, "the intended, practical and realistic effect of the EPA Orders was to establish a basis for the Province to recover amounts of money to be eventually used for the remediation of the properties in question" (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1, at para. 211). As a result, the CCAA court found that the orders were clearly monetary in nature. I see no error of law and no reason to interfere with this finding of fact. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

I. Facts and Procedural History

[5] For over 100 years, AbitibiBowater Inc. and its affiliated or predecessor companies (together, "Abitibi") were involved in industrial activity in Newfoundland and Labrador. In 2008, Abitibi announced the closure of a mill that was its last operation in that province.

[6] Within two weeks of the announcement, the Province passed the Abitibi-Consolidated Rights and Assets Act, S.N.L. 2008, c. A-1.01 ("Abitibi Act"), which immediately transferred most of Abitibi's property in Newfoundland and Labrador to the Province and denied Abitibi any legal remedy for this expropriation.

[7] The closure of its mill in Newfoundland and Labrador was one of many decisions Abitibi made in a period of general financial distress affecting its activities both in the United States and in Canada. It filed for insolvency protection in the United States on April 16, 2009. It also sought a stay of proceedings under the CCAA in the Superior Court of Quebec, as its Canadian head office was located in Montréal. The CCAA stay was ordered on April 17, 2009.

[8] In the same month, Abitibi also filed a notice of intent to submit a claim to arbitration under NAFTA (the North American Free Trade Agreement Between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America, Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2) for losses resulting from the Abitibi Act, which, according to Abitibi, exceeded $300 million.

[9] On November 12, 2009, the Province's Minister of Environment and Conservation ("Minister") issued five orders (the "EPA Orders") under s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2 ("EPA"). The EPA Orders required Abitibi to submit remediation action plans to the Minister for five industrial sites, three of which had been expropriated, and to complete the approved remediation actions. The CCAA judge estimated the cost of implementing these plans to be from "the mid-to-high eight figures" to "several times higher" (para. 81).

[10] On the day it issued the EPA Orders, the Province brought a motion for a declaration that a claims procedure order issued under the CCAA in relation to Abitibi's proposed reorganization did not bar the Province from enforcing the EPA Orders. The Province argued — and still argues — that non-monetary statutory obligations are not "claims" under the CCAA and hence cannot be stayed and be subject to a claims procedure order. It further submits that Parliament lacks the constitutional competence under its power to make laws in relation to bankruptcy and insolvency to stay orders that are validly made in the exercise of a provincial power.

[11] Abitibi contested the motion and sought a declaration that the EPA Orders were stayed and that they were subject to the claims procedure order. It argued that the EPA Orders were monetary in nature and hence fell within the definition of the word "claim" in the claims procedure order.

[12] Gascon J. of the Quebec Superior Court, sitting as a CCAA court, dismissed the Province's motion. He found that he had the authority to characterize the orders as "claims" if the underlying regulatory obligations "remain[ed], in a particular fact pattern, truly financial and monetary in nature" (para. 148). He declared that the EPA Orders were stayed by the initial stay order and were not subject to the exception found in that order. He also declared that the filing by the Province of any claim based on the EPA Orders was subject to the claims procedure order, and reserved to the Province the right to request an extension of time to assert a claim under the claims procedure order and to Abitibi the right to contest such a request.

[13] In the Court of Appeal, Chamberland J.A. denied the Province leave to appeal (2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57). In his view, the appeal had no reasonable chance of success, because Gascon J. had found as a fact that the EPA Orders were financial or monetary in nature. Chamberland J.A. also found that no constitutional issue arose, given that the Superior Court judge had merely characterized the orders in the context of the restructuring process; the judgment did not "'immunise' Abitibi from compliance with the EPA Orders" (para. 33). Finally, he noted that Gascon J. had reserved the Province's right to request an extension of time to file a claim in the CCAA process.

II. Positions of the Parties

[14] The Province argues that the CCAA court erred in interpreting the relevant CCAA provisions in a way that nullified the EPA, and that the interpretation is inconsistent with both the ancillary powers doctrine and the doctrine of interjurisdictional immunity. The Province further submits that, in any event, the EPA Orders are not "claims" within the meaning of the CCAA. It takes the position that "any plan of compromise and arrangement that Abitibi might submit for court approval must make provision for compliance with the EPA Orders" (A.F., at para. 32).

[15] Abitibi contends that the factual record does not provide a basis for applying the constitutional doctrines. It relies on the CCAA court's findings of fact, particularly the finding that the Province's intent was to establish the basis for a monetary claim. Abitibi submits that the true issue is whether a province that has a monetary claim against an insolvent company can obtain a preference against other unsecured creditors by exercising its regulatory power.

III. Constitutional Questions

[16] At the Province's request, the Chief Justice stated the following constitutional questions:

1. Is the definition of "claim" in s. 2(1) of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada or constitutionally inapplicable to the extent this definition includes statutory duties to which the debtor is subject pursuant to s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2?

2. Is s. 11 of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada or constitutionally inapplicable to the extent this section gives courts jurisdiction to bar or extinguish statutory duties to which the debtor is subject pursuant to s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2?

3. Is s. 11 of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada or constitutionally inapplicable to the extent this section gives courts jurisdiction to review the exercise of ministerial discretion under s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2?

[17] I note that the question whether a CCAA court has constitutional jurisdiction to stay a provincial order that is not a monetary claim does not arise here, because the stay order in this case did not affect non-monetary orders. However, the question may arise in other cases. In 2007, Parliament expressly gave CCAA courts the power to stay regulatory orders that are not monetary claims by amending the CCAA to include the current version of s. 11.1(3) (An Act to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, the Wage Earner Protection Program Act and chapter 47 of the Statutes of Canada, 2005, S.C. 2007, c. 36, s. 65) (the "2007 amendments"). Thus, future cases may give courts the opportunity to consider the question raised by the Province in an appropriate factual context. The only constitutional question that needs to be answered in this case concerns the jurisdiction of a CCAA court to determine whether an environmental order that is not framed in monetary terms is in fact a monetary claim.

[18] Processing creditors' claims against an insolvent debtor in an equitable and orderly manner is at the heart of insolvency legislation, which falls under a head of power attributed to Parliament. Rules concerning the assessment of creditors' claims, such as the determination of whether a creditor has a monetary claim, relate directly to the equitable and orderly treatment of creditors in an insolvency process. There is no need to perform a detailed analysis of the pith and substance of the provisions on the assessment of claims in insolvency matters to conclude that the federal legislation governing the characterization of an order as a monetary claim is valid. Because the provisions relate directly to Parliament's jurisdiction, the ancillary powers doctrine is not relevant to this case. I also find that the interjurisdictional immunity doctrine is not applicable. A finding that a claim of an environmental creditor is monetary in nature does not interfere in any way with the creditor's activities. Its claim is simply subjected to the insolvency process.

[19] What the Province is actually arguing is that courts should consider the form of an order rather than its substance. I see no reason why the Province's choice of order should not be scrutinized to determine whether the form chosen is consistent with the order's true purpose as revealed by the Province's own actions. If the Province's actions indicate that, in substance, it is asserting a provable claim within the meaning of federal legislation, then that claim can be subjected to the insolvency process. Environmental claims do not have a higher priority than is provided for in the CCAA. Considering substance over form prevents a regulatory body from artificially creating a priority higher than the one conferred on the claim by federal legislation. This Court recognized long ago that a province cannot disturb the priority scheme established by the federal insolvency legislation (Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453). Environmental claims are given a specific, and limited, priority under the CCAA. To exempt orders which are in fact monetary claims from the CCAA proceedings would amount to conferring upon provinces a priority higher than the one provided for in the CCAA.

IV. Claims Under the CCAA

[20] Several provisions of the CCAA have been amended since Abitibi filed for insolvency protection. Except where otherwise indicated, the provisions I refer to are those that were in force when the stay was ordered.

[21] One of the central features of the CCAA scheme is the single proceeding model, which ensures that most claims against a debtor are entertained in a single forum. Under this model, the court can stay the enforcement of most claims against the debtor's assets in order to maintain the status quo during negotiations with the creditors. When such negotiations are successful, the creditors typically accept less than the full amounts of their claims. Claims have not necessarily accrued or been liquidated at the outset of the insolvency proceeding, and they sometimes have to be assessed in order to determine the monetary value that will be subject to compromise.

[22] Section 12 of the CCAA establishes the basic rules for ascertaining whether an order is a claim that may be subjected to the insolvency process:

> 12. (1) [Definition of "claim"] For the purposes of this Act, "claim" means any indebtedness, liability or obligation of any kind that, if unsecured, would be a debt provable in bankruptcy within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.
> (2) [Determination of amount of claim] For the purposes of this Act, the amount represented by a claim of any secured or unsecured creditor shall be determined as follows:
> (a) the amount of an unsecured claim shall be the amount
> (iii) in the case of any other company, proof of which might be made under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, but if the amount so provable is not admitted by the company, the amount shall be determined by the court on summary application by the company or by the creditor; . . .

[23] Section 12 of the CCAA refers to the rules of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"). Section 2 of the BIA defines a claim provable in bankruptcy:

> "claim provable in bankruptcy", "provable claim" or "claim provable" includes any claim or liability provable in proceedings under this Act by a creditor;

[24] This definition is completed by s. 121(1) of the BIA:

> 121. (1) All debts and liabilities, present or future, to which the bankrupt is subject on the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt or to which the bankrupt may become subject before the bankrupt's discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt shall be deemed to be claims provable in proceedings under this Act.

[25] Sections 121(2) and 135(1.1) of the BIA offer additional guidance for the determination of whether an order is a provable claim:

> 121. . . .

Digitized by Google

(2) The determination whether a contingent or unliquidated claim is a provable claim and the valuation of such a claim shall be made in accordance with section 135.

135. . . .

(1.1) The trustee shall determine whether any contingent claim or unliquidated claim is a provable claim, and, if a provable claim, the trustee shall value it, and the claim is thereafter, subject to this section, deemed a proved claim to the amount of its valuation.

[26] These provisions highlight three requirements that are relevant to the case at bar. First, there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor. Second, the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred before the debtor becomes bankrupt. Third, it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation. I will examine each of these requirements in turn.

[27] The BIA's definition of a provable claim, which is incorporated by reference into the CCAA, requires the identification of a creditor. Environmental statutes generally provide for the creation of regulatory bodies that are empowered to enforce the obligations the statutes impose. Most environmental regulatory bodies can be creditors in respect of monetary or non-monetary obligations imposed by the relevant statutes. At this first stage of determining whether the regulatory body is a creditor, the question whether the obligation can be translated into monetary terms is not yet relevant. This issue will be broached later. The only determination that has to be made at this point is whether the regulatory body has exercised its enforcement power against a debtor. When it does so, it identifies itself as a creditor, and the requirement of this stage of the analysis is satisfied.

[28] The enquiry into the second requirement is based on s. 121(1) of the BIA, which imposes a time limit on claims. A claim must be founded on an obligation that was "incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt". Because the date when environmental damage occurs is often difficult to ascertain, s. 11.8(9) of the CCAA provides more temporal flexibility for environmental claims:

(9) A claim against a debtor company for costs of remedying any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting real property of the company shall be a claim under this Act, whether the condition arose or the damage occurred before or after the date on which proceedings under this Act were commenced.

[29] The creditor's claim will be exempt from the single proceeding requirement if the debtor's corresponding obligation has not arisen as of the time limit for inclusion in the insolvency process. This could apply, for example, to a debtor's statutory obligations relating to polluting activities that continue after the reorganization, because in such cases, the damage continues to be sustained after the reorganization has been completed.

[30] With respect to the third requirement, that it be possible to attach a monetary value to the obligation, the question is whether orders that are not expressed in monetary terms can be translated into such terms. I note that when a regulatory body claims an amount that is owed at the relevant date, that is, when it frames its order in monetary terms, the court does not need to make this determination, because what is being claimed is an "indebtedness" and therefore clearly falls within the meaning of "claim" as defined in s. 12(1) of the CCAA.

[31] However, orders, which are used to address various types of environmental challenges, may come in many forms, including stop, control, preventative, and clean-up orders (D. Saxe, "Trustees' and Receivers' Environmental Liability Update" (1998), 49 C.B.R. (3d) 138, at p. 141). When considering an order that is not framed in monetary terms, courts must look at its substance and apply the rules for the assessment of claims.

[32] Parliament recognized that regulatory bodies sometimes have to perform remediation work (see House of Commons, Evidence of the Standing Committee on Industry, No. 16, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., June 11, 1996). When one does so, its claim with respect to remediation costs is subject to the insolvency process, but the claim is secured by a charge on the contaminated real property and certain other related property and benefits from a priority (s. 11.8(8) CCAA). Thus, Parliament struck a balance between the public's interest in enforcing environmental regulations and the interest of third-party creditors in being treated equitably.

[33] If Parliament had intended that the debtor always satisfy all remediation costs, it would have granted the Crown a priority with respect to the totality of the debtor's assets. In light of the legislative history and the purpose of the reorganization process, the fact that the Crown's priority under s. 11.8(8) of the CCAA is limited to the contaminated property and certain related property leads me to conclude that to exempt environmental orders would be inconsistent with the insolvency legislation. As deferential as courts may be to regulatory bodies' actions, they must apply the general rules.

[34] Unlike in proceedings governed by the common law or the civil law, a claim may be asserted in insolvency proceedings even if it is contingent on an event that has not yet occurred (for the common law, see Canada v. McLarty, 2008 SCC 26, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 79, at paras. 17-18; for the civil law, see arts. 1497, 1508 and 1513 of the Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64). Thus, the broad definition of "claim" in the BIA includes contingent and future claims that would be unenforceable at common law or in the civil law. As for unliquidated claims, a CCAA court has the same power to assess their amounts as would a court hearing a case in a common law or civil law context.

[35] The reason the BIA and the CCAA include a broad range of claims is to ensure fairness between creditors and finality in the insolvency proceeding for the debtor. In a corporate liquidation process, it is more equitable to allow as many creditors as possible to participate in the process and share in the liquidation proceeds. This makes it possible to include creditors whose claims have not yet matured when the corporate debtor files for bankruptcy, and thus avert a situation in which they would be faced with an inactive debtor that cannot satisfy a judgment. The rationale is slightly different in the context of a corporate proposal or reorganization. In such cases, the broad approach serves not only to ensure fairness between creditors, but also to allow the debtor to make as fresh a start as possible after a proposal or an arrangement is approved.

[36] The criterion used by courts to determine whether a contingent claim will be included in the insolvency process is whether the event that has not yet occurred is too remote or speculative (Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75). In the context of an environmental order, this means that there must be sufficient indications that the regulatory body that triggered the enforcement mechanism will ultimately perform remediation work and assert a monetary claim to have its costs reimbursed. If there is sufficient certainty in this regard, the court will conclude that the order can be subjected to the insolvency process.

[37] The exercise by the CCAA court of its jurisdiction to determine whether an order is a provable claim entails a certain scrutiny of the regulatory body's actions. This scrutiny is in some ways similar to judicial review. There is a distinction, however, and it lies in the object of the assessment that the CCAA court must make. The CCAA court does not review the regulatory body's exercise of discretion. Rather, it inquires into whether the facts indicate that the conditions for inclusion in the claims process are met. For example, if activities at issue are ongoing, the CCAA court may well conclude that the order cannot be included in the insolvency process because the activities and resulting damages will continue after the reorganization is completed and hence exceed the time limit for a claim. If, on the other hand, the regulatory body, having no realistic alternative but to perform the remediation work itself, simply delays framing the order as a claim in order to improve its position in relation to other creditors, the CCAA court may conclude that this course of action is inconsistent with the insolvency scheme and decide that the order has to be subject to the claims process. Similarly, if the property is not under the debtor's control and the debtor does not, and realistically will not, have the means to perform the remediation work, the CCAA court may conclude that it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will have to perform the work.

[38] Certain indicators can thus be identified from the text and the context of the provisions to guide the CCAA court in determining whether an order is a provable claim, including whether the activities are ongoing, whether the debtor is in control of the property, and whether the debtor has the means to comply with the order. The CCAA court may also consider the effect that requiring the debtor to comply with the order would have on the insolvency process. Since the appropriate analysis is grounded in the facts of each case, these indicators need not all apply, and others may also be relevant.

[39] Having highlighted three requirements for finding a claim to be provable in a CCAA process that need to be considered in the case at bar, I must now discuss certain policy arguments raised by the Province and some of the interveners.

[40] These parties argue that treating a regulatory order as a claim in an insolvency proceeding extinguishes the debtor's environmental obligations, thereby undermining the polluter-pay principle discussed by this Court in Imperial Oil Ltd. v. Quebec (Minister of the Environment), 2003 SCC 58, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 624, at para. 24. This objection demonstrates a misunderstanding of the nature of insolvency proceedings. Subjecting an order to the claims process does not extinguish the debtor's environmental obligations any more than subjecting any creditor's claim to that process extinguishes the debtor's obligation to pay its debts. It merely ensures that the creditor's claim will be paid in accordance with insolvency legislation. Moreover, full compliance with orders that are found to be monetary in nature would shift the costs of remediation to third-party creditors, including involuntary creditors, such as those whose claims lie in tort or in the law of extra-contractual liability. In the insolvency context, the Province's position would result not only in a super-priority, but in the acceptance of a "third-party-pay" principle in place of the polluter-pay principle.

[41] Nor does subjecting the orders to the insolvency process amount to issuing a licence to pollute, since insolvency proceedings do not concern the debtor's future conduct. A debtor that is reorganized must comply with all environmental regulations going forward in the same way as any other person. To quote the colourful analogy of two American scholars, "Debtors in bankruptcy have — and should have — no greater license to pollute in violation of a statute than they have to sell cocaine in violation of a statute" (D. G. Baird and T. H. Jackson, "Comment: Kovacs and Toxic Wastes in Bankruptcy" (1984), 36 Stan. L. Rev. 1199, at p. 1200).

[42] Furthermore, corporations may engage in activities that carry risks. No matter what risks are at issue, reorganization made necessary by insolvency is hardly ever a deliberate choice. When the risks materialize, the dire costs are borne by almost all stakeholders. To subject orders to the claims process is not to invite corporations to restructure in order to rid themselves of their environmental liabilities.

[43] And the power to determine whether an order is a provable claim does not mean that the court will necessarily conclude that the order before it will be subject to the CCAA process. In fact, the CCAA court in the case at bar recognized that orders relating to the environment may or may not be considered provable claims. It stayed only those orders that were monetary in nature.

[44] The Province also argues that courts have in the past held that environmental orders cannot be interpreted as claims when the regulatory body has not yet exercised its power to assert a claim framed in monetary terms. The Province relies in particular on Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45 (C.A.), and its progeny. In Panamericana, the Alberta Court of Appeal held that a receiver was personally liable for work under a remediation order and that the order was not a claim in insolvency proceedings. The court found that the duty to undertake remediation work is owed to the public at large until the regulator exercises its power to assert a monetary claim.

[45] The first answer to the Province's argument is that courts have never shied away from putting substance ahead of form. They can determine whether the order is in substance monetary.

[46] The second answer is that the provisions relating to the assessment of claims, particularly those governing contingent claims, contemplate instances in which the quantum is not yet established when the claims are filed. Whether, in the regulatory context, an obligation always entails the existence of a correlative right has been discussed by a number of scholars. Various theories of rights have been put forward (see W. N. Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied in Judicial Reasoning (new ed. 2001); D. N. MacCormick, "Rights in Legislation", in P. M. S. Hacker and J. Raz, eds., Law, Morality, and Society: Essays in Honour of H. L. A. Hart (1977), 189). However, because the Province issued the orders in this case, it would be recognized as a creditor in respect of a right no matter which of these theories was applied. As interesting as the discussion may be, therefore, I do not need to consider which theory should prevail. The real question is not to whom the obligation is owed, as this question is answered by the statute, which determines who can require that it be discharged. Rather, the question is whether it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will perform the remediation work and, as a result, have a monetary claim.

[47] The third answer to the Province's argument is that insolvency legislation has evolved considerably over the two decades since Panamericana. At the time of Panamericana, none of the provisions relating to environmental liabilities were in force. Indeed, some of those provisions were enacted very soon after, and seemingly in response to, that case. In 1992, Parliament shielded trustees from the very liability imposed on the receiver in Panamericana (An Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, S.C. 1992, c. 27, s. 9, amending s. 14 of the BIA). The 1997 amendments provided additional protection to trustees and monitors (An Act to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act and the Income Tax Act, S.C. 1997, c. 12). The 2007 amendments made it clear that a CCAA court has the power to determine that a regulatory order may be a claim and also provided criteria for staying regulatory orders (s. 65, amending the CCAA to include the current version of s. 11.1). The purpose of these amendments was to balance the creditor's need for fairness against the debtor's need to make a fresh start.

[48] Whether the regulatory body has a contingent claim is a determination that must be grounded in the facts of each case. Generally, a regulatory body has discretion under environmental legislation to decide how best to ensure that regulatory obligations are met. Although the court should take care to avoid interfering with that discretion, the action of a regulatory body is nevertheless subject to scrutiny in insolvency proceedings.

V. Application

[49] I now turn to the application of the principles discussed above to the case at bar. This case does not turn on whether the Province is the creditor of an obligation or whether damage had occurred as of the relevant date. Those requirements are easily satisfied, since the Province had identified itself as a creditor by resorting to EPA enforcement mechanisms and since the damage had occurred before the time of the CCAA proceedings. Rather, the issue centres on the third requirement: that the orders meet the criterion for admission as a pecuniary claim. The claim was contingent to the extent that the Province had not yet formally exercised its power to ask for the payment of money. The question is whether it was sufficiently certain that the orders would eventually result in a monetary claim. To the CCAA judge, there was no doubt that the answer was yes.

[50] The Province's exercise of its legislative powers in enacting the Abitibi Act created a unique set of facts that led to the orders being issued. The seizure of Abitibi's assets by the Province, the cancellation of all outstanding water and hydroelectric contracts between Abitibi and the Province, the cancellation of pending legal proceedings by Abitibi in which it sought the reimbursement of several hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the denial of any compensation for the seized assets and of legal redress are inescapable background facts in the judge's review of the EPA Orders.

[51] The CCAA judge did not elaborate on whether it was sufficiently certain that the Minister would perform the remediation work and therefore make a monetary claim. However, most of his findings clearly rest on a positive answer to this question. For example, his finding that "[i]n all likelihood, the pith and substance of the EPA Orders is an attempt by the Province to lay the groundwork for monetary claims against Abitibi, to be used most probably as an offset in connection with Abitibi's own NAFTA claims for compensation" (para. 178), is necessarily based on the premise that the Province would most likely perform the remediation work. Indeed, since monetary claims must, both at common law and in civil law, be mutual for set-off or compensation to operate, the Province had to have incurred costs in doing the work in order to have a claim that could be set off against Abitibi's claims.

[52] That the judge relied on an implicit finding that the Province would most likely perform the work and make a claim to offset its costs is also shown by the confirmation he found in the declaration by the Premier that the Province was attempting to assess the cost of doing remediation work Abitibi had allegedly left undone and that in the Province's assessment, "at this point in time, there would not be a net payment to Abitibi" (para. 181).

[53] The CCAA judge's reasons not only rest on an implicit finding that the Province would most likely perform the work, but refer explicitly to facts that support this finding. To reach his conclusion that the EPA Orders were monetary in nature, the CCAA judge relied on the fact that Abitibi's operations were funded through debtor-in-possession financing and its access to funds was limited to ongoing operations. Given that the EPA Orders targeted sites that were, for the most part, no longer in Abitibi's possession, this meant that Abitibi had no means to perform the remediation work during the reorganization process.

[54] In addition, because Abitibi lacked funds and no longer controlled the properties, the timetable set by the Province in the EPA Orders suggested that the Province never truly intended that Abitibi was to perform the remediation work required by the orders. The timetable was also unrealistic. For example, the orders were issued on November 12, 2009 and set a deadline of January 15, 2010 to perform a particular act, but the evidence revealed that compliance with this requirement would have taken close to a year.

[55] Furthermore, the judge relied on the fact that Abitibi was not simply designated a "person responsible" under the EPA, but was intentionally targeted by the Province. The finding that the Province had targeted Abitibi was drawn not only from the timing of the EPA Orders, but also from the fact that Abitibi was the only person designated in them, whereas others also appeared to be responsible — in some cases, primarily responsible — for the contamination. For example, Abitibi was ordered to do remediation work on a site it had surrendered more than 50 years before the orders were issued; the expert report upon which the orders were based made no distinction between Abitibi's activities on the property, on which its source of power had been horse power, and subsequent activities by others who had used fuel-powered vehicles there. In the judge's opinion, this finding of fact went to the Province's intent to establish a basis for performing the work itself and asserting a claim against Abitibi.

[56] These reasons — and others — led the CCAA judge to conclude that the Province had not expected Abitibi to perform the remediation work and that the "intended, practical and realistic effect of the EPA Orders was to establish a basis for the Province to recover amounts of money to be eventually used for the remediation of the properties in question" (para. 211). He found that the Province appeared to have in fact taken some steps to liquidate the claims arising out of the EPA Orders.

[57] In the end, the judge found that there was definitely a claim that "might" be filed, and that it was not left to "the subjective choice of the creditor to hold the claim in its pocket for tactical reasons" (para. 227). In his words, the situation did not involve a "detached regulator or public enforcer issuing [an] order for the public good" (para. 175), and it was "the hat of a creditor that best fi[t] the Province, not that of a disinterested regulator" (para. 176).

[58] In sum, although the analytical framework used by Gascon J. was driven by the facts of the case, he reviewed all the legal principles and facts that needed to be considered in order to make the determination in the case at bar. He did at times rely on indicators that are unique and that do not appear in the analytical framework I propose above, but he did so because of the exceptional facts of this case. Yet, had he formulated the question in the same way as I have, his conclusion, based on his objective findings of fact, would have been the same. Earmarking money may be a strong indicator that a province will perform remediation work, and actually commencing the work is the first step towards the creation of a debt, but these are not the only considerations that can lead to a finding that a creditor has a monetary claim. The CCAA judge's assessment of the facts, particularly his finding that the EPA Orders were the first step towards performance of the remediation work by the Province, leads to no conclusion other than that it was sufficiently certain that the Province would perform remediation work and therefore fall within the definition of a creditor with a monetary claim.

VI. Conclusion

[59] In sum, I agree with the Chief Justice that, as a general proposition, an environmental order issued by a regulatory body can be treated as a contingent claim, and that such a claim can be included in the claims process if it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will make a monetary claim against the debtor. Our difference of views lies mainly in the applicable threshold for including contingent claims and in our understanding of the CCAA judge's findings of fact.

[60] With respect to the law, the Chief Justice would craft a standard specific to the context of environmental orders by requiring a "likelihood approaching certainty" that the regulatory body will perform the remediation work. She finds that this threshold is justified because "remediation may cost a great deal of money" (para. 86). I acknowledge that remediating pollution is often costly, but I am of the view that Parliament has borne this consideration in mind in enacting provisions specific to environmental claims. Moreover, I recall that in this case, the Premier announced that the remediation work would be performed at no net cost to the Province. It was clear to him that the Abitibi Act would make it possible to offset all the related costs.

[61] Thus, I prefer to take the approach generally taken for all contingent claims. In my view, the CCAA court is entitled to take all relevant facts into consideration in making the relevant determination. Under this approach, the contingency to be assessed in a case such as this is whether it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will perform remediation work and be in a position to assert a monetary claim.

[62] Finally, the Chief Justice would review the CCAA court's findings of fact. I would instead defer to them. On those findings, applying any legal standard, be it the one proposed by the Chief Justice or the one I propose, the Province's claim is monetary in nature and its motion for a declaration exempting the EPA Orders from the claims procedure order was properly dismissed.

[63] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

The following are the reasons delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE (DISSENTING) —

1. Overview

[64] The issue in this case is whether orders made under the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2 ("EPA"), by the Newfoundland and Labrador Minister of Environment and Conservation ("Minister") requiring a polluter to clean up sites (the "EPA Orders") are monetary claims that can be compromised in corporate restructuring under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"). If they are not claims that can be compromised in restructuring, the Abitibi respondents ("Abitibi") will still have a legal obligation to clean up the sites following their emergence from restructuring. If they are such claims, Abitibi will have emerged from restructuring free of the obligation, able to recommence business without remediating the properties it polluted, the cost of which will fall on the Newfoundland and Labrador public.

[65] Remediation orders made under a province's environmental protection legislation impose ongoing regulatory obligations on the corporation required to clean up the pollution. They are not monetary claims. In narrow circumstances, specified by the CCAA, these ongoing regulatory obligations may be reduced to monetary claims, which can be compromised under CCAA proceedings. This occurs where a province has done the work, or where it is "sufficiently certain" that it will do the work. In these circumstances, the regulatory obligation would be extinguished and the province would have a monetary claim for the cost of remediation in the CCAA proceedings. Otherwise, the regulatory obligation survives the restructuring.

[66] In my view, the orders for remediation in this case, with a minor exception, are not claims that can be compromised in restructuring. On one of the properties, the Minister did emergency remedial work and put other work out to tender. These costs can be claimed in the CCAA proceedings. However, with respect to the other properties, on the evidence before us, the Minister has neither done the clean-up work, nor is it sufficiently certain that he or she will do so. The Province of Newfoundland and Labrador ("Province") retained a number of options, including requiring Abitibi to perform the remediation if it successfully emerged from the CCAA restructuring.

[67] I would therefore allow the appeal and grant the Province the declaration it seeks that Abitibi is still subject to its obligations under the EPA following its emergence from restructuring, except for work done or tendered for on the Buchans site.

2. The Proceedings Below

[68] The CCAA judge took the view that the Province issued the EPA Orders, not in order to make Abitibi remediate, but as part of a money grab. He therefore concluded that the orders were monetary and financial in nature and should be considered claims that could be compromised under the CCAA (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1). The Quebec Court of Appeal denied leave to appeal on the ground that this "factual" conclusion could not be disturbed (2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57).

Digitized by Google

[69] The CCAA judge's stark view that an EPA obligation can be considered a monetary claim capable of being compromised simply because (as he saw it) the Province's motive was money, is no longer pressed. Whether an EPA order is a claim under the CCAA depends on whether it meets the requirements for a claim under that statute. That is the only issue to be resolved. Insofar as this determination touches on the division of powers, I am in substantial agreement with my colleague Deschamps J., at paras. 18-19.

3. The Distinction Between Regulatory Obligations and Claims Under the CCAA

[70] Orders to clean up polluted property under provincial environmental protection legislation are regulatory orders. They remain in effect until the property has been cleaned up or the matter otherwise resolved.

[71] It is not unusual for corporations seeking to restructure under the CCAA to be subject to a variety of ongoing regulatory orders arising from statutory schemes governing matters like employment, energy conservation and the environment. The corporation remains subject to these obligations as it continues to carry on business during the restructuring period, and remains subject to them when it emerges from restructuring unless they have been compromised or liquidated.

[72] The CCAA, like the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"), draws a fundamental distinction between ongoing regulatory obligations owed to the public, which generally survive the restructuring, and monetary claims that can be compromised.

[73] This distinction is also recognized in the jurisprudence, which has held that regulatory duties owed to the public are not "claims" under the BIA, nor, by extension, under the CCAA. In Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45, the Alberta Court of Appeal held that a receiver in bankruptcy must comply with an order from the Energy Resources Conservation Board to comply with well abandonment requirements. Writing for the court, Laycraft C.J.A. said the question was whether the Bankruptcy Act "requires that the assets in the estate of an insolvent well licensee should be distributed to creditors leaving behind the duties respecting environmental safety . . . as a charge to the public" (para. 29). He answered the question in the negative:

> The duty is owed as a public duty by all the citizens of the community to their fellow citizens. When the citizen subject to the order complies, the result is not the recovery of money by the peace officer or public authority, or of a judgment for money, nor is that the object of the whole process. Rather, it is simply the enforcement of the general law. The enforcing authority does not become a "creditor" of the citizen on whom the duty is imposed. [Emphasis added; para. 33.]

[75] Recent amendments to the CCAA confirm this distinction. Section 11.1(2) now explicitly provides that, except to the extent a regulator is enforcing a payment obligation, a general stay does not affect a regulatory body's authority in relation to a corporation going through restructuring. The CCAA court may only stay specific actions or suits brought by a regulatory body, and only if such action is necessary for a viable compromise to be reached and it would not be contrary to the public interest to make such an order (s. 11.1(3)).

[76] Abitibi argues that another amendment to the CCAA, s. 11.8(9), treats ongoing regulatory duties owed to the public as claims, and erases the distinction between the two types of obligation: see General Chemical Canada Ltd., Re, 2007 ONCA 600, 228 O.A.C. 385, per Goudge J.A., relying on s. 14.06(8) of the BIA (the equivalent of s. 11.8(9) of the CCAA). With respect, this reads too much into the provision. Section 11.8(9) of the CCAA refers only to the situation where a government has performed remediation, and provides that the costs of the remediation become a claim in the restructuring process even where the environmental damage arose after CCAA proceedings have begun. As stated in Strathcona (County) v. PriceWaterhouseCoopers Inc., 2005 ABQB 559, 47 Alta. L.R. (4th) 138, per Burrows J., the section "does not convert a statutorily imposed obligation owed to the public at large into a liability owed to the public body charged with enforcing it" (para. 42).

4. When Does a Regulatory Obligation Become a Claim Under the CCAA?

[77] This brings us to the heart of the question before us: When does a regulatory obligation imposed on a corporation under environmental protection legislation become a "claim" provable and compromisable under the CCAA?

[78] Regulatory obligations are, as a general proposition, not compromisable claims. Only financial or monetary claims provable by a "creditor" fall within the definition of "claim" under the CCAA. A "creditor" is defined as "a person having a claim": s. 2, BIA. Thus, the identification of a "creditor" hangs on the existence of a "claim". Section 12(1) of the CCAA defines "claim" as "any indebtedness, liability or obligation . . . that . . . would be a debt provable in bankruptcy", which is accepted as confined to obligations of a financial or monetary nature.

[79] The CCAA does not depart from the proposition that a claim must be financial or monetary. However, it contains a scheme to deal with disputes over whether an obligation is a monetary obligation as opposed to some other kind of obligation.

[80] Such a dispute may arise with respect to environmental obligations of the corporation. The CCAA recognizes three situations that may arise when a corporation enters restructuring.

[81] The first situation is where the remedial work has not been done (and there is no "sufficient certainty" that the work will be done, unlike the third situation described below). In this situation, the government cannot claim the cost of remediation: see s. 102(3) of the EPA. The obligation of compliance falls in principle on the monitor who takes over the corporation's assets and operations. If the monitor remediates the property, he can claim the costs as costs of administration. If he does not wish to do so, he may obtain a court order staying the remediation obligation or abandon the property: s. 11.8(5) CCAA (in which case costs of remediation shall not rank as costs of administration: s. 11.8(7)). In this situation, the obligation cannot be compromised.

[82] The second situation is where the government that has issued the environmental protection order moves to clean up the pollution, as the legislation entitles it to do. In this situation, the government has a claim for the cost of remediation that is compromisable in the CCAA proceedings. This is because the government, by moving to clean up the pollution, has changed the outstanding regulatory obligation owed to the public into a financial or monetary obligation owed by the corporation to the government. Section 11.8(9), already discussed, makes it clear that this applies to damage after the CCAA proceedings commenced, which might otherwise not be claimable as a matter of timing.

[83] A third situation may arise: the government has not yet performed the remediation at the time of restructuring, but there is "sufficient certainty" that it will do so. This situation is regulated by the provisions of the CCAA for contingent or future claims. Under the CCAA, a debt or liability that is contingent on a future event may be compromised.

[84] It is clear that a mere possibility that work will be done does not suffice to make a regulatory obligation a contingent claim under the CCAA. Rather, there must be "sufficient certainty" that the obligation will be converted into a financial or monetary claim to permit this. The impact of the obligation on the insolvency process is irrelevant to the analysis of contingency. The future liabilities must not be "so remote and speculative in nature that they could not properly be considered contingent claims": Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75, at para. 4.

[85] Where environmental obligations are concerned, courts to date have relied on a high degree of probability verging on certainty that the government will in fact step in and remediate the property. In Anvil Range Mining Corp., Re (2001), 25 C.B.R. (4th) 1 (Ont. S.C.J.), Farley J. concluded that a contingent claim was established where the money had already been earmarked in the budget for the remediation project. He observed that "there appears to be every likelihood to a certainty that every dollar in the budget for the year ending March 31, 2002 earmarked for reclamation will be spent" (para. 15 (emphasis added)). Similarly, in Shirley (Re), Kennedy J. relied on the fact that the Ontario Minister of the Environment had already entered the property at issue and commenced remediation activities to conclude that "[a]ny doubt about the resolve of the [Ministry's] intent to realize upon its authority ended when it began to incur expense from operations" (p. 110).

[86] There is good reason why "sufficient certainty" should be interpreted as requiring "likelihood approaching certainty" when the issue is whether ongoing environmental obligations owed to the public should be converted to contingent claims that can be expunged or compromised in the restructuring process. Courts should not overlook the obstacles governments may encounter in deciding to remediate environmental damage a corporation has caused. To begin with, the government's decision is discretionary and may be influenced by any number of competing political and social considerations. Furthermore, remediation may cost a great deal of money. For example, in this case, the CCAA court found that at a minimum the remediation would cost in the "mid-to-high eight figures", and could indeed cost several times that (para. 81). In concrete terms, the remediation at issue in this case may be expected to meet or exceed the entire budget of the Minister ($65 million) for 2009. Not only would this be a massive expenditure, but it would also likely require the specific approval of the legislature and thereby be subject to political uncertainties. To assess these factors and determine whether all this will occur would embroil the CCAA judge in social, economic and political considerations — matters which are not normally subject to judicial consideration: R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45, at para. 74. It is small wonder, then, that courts assessing whether it is "sufficiently certain" that a government will clean up pollution created by a corporation have insisted on proof of likelihood approaching certainty.

[87] In this case, as will be seen, apart from the Buchans property, the record is devoid of any evidence capable of establishing that it is "sufficiently certain" that the Province will itself remediate the properties. Even on a more relaxed standard than the one adopted in similar cases to date, the evidence in this case would fail to establish that remediation is "sufficiently certain".

5. The Result in This Case

[88] Five different sites are at issue in this case. The question in each case is whether the Minister has already remediated the property (making it to that extent an actual claim), or if not, whether it is "sufficiently certain" that he or she will remediate the property, permitting it to be considered a contingent claim.

[89] The Buchans site posed immediate risks to human health as a consequence of high levels of lead and other contaminants in the soil, groundwater, surface water and sediment. There was a risk that the wind would disperse the contamination, posing a threat to the surrounding population. Lead has been found in residential areas of Buchans and adults tested in the town had elevated levels of lead in their blood. In addition, a structurally unsound dam at the Buchans site raised the risk of contaminating silt entering the Exploits and Buchans rivers.

[90] The Minister quickly moved to address the immediate concern of the unsound dam and put out a request for tenders for other measures that required immediate action at the Buchans site. Money expended is clearly a claim under the CCAA. I am also of the view that the work for which the request for tenders was put out meets the "sufficiently certain" standard and constitutes a contingent claim.

[91] Beyond this, it has not been shown that it is "sufficiently certain" that the Province will do the remediation work to permit Abitibi's ongoing regulatory obligations under the EPA Orders to be considered contingent debts. The same applies to the other properties, on which no work has been done and no requests for tender to do the work initiated.

[92] Far from being "sufficiently certain", there is simply nothing on the record to support the view that the Province will move to remediate the remaining properties. It has not been shown that the contamination poses immediate health risks, which must be addressed without delay. It has not been shown that the Province has taken any steps to do any work. And it has not been shown that the Province has set aside or even contemplated setting aside money for this work. Abitibi relies on a statement by the then-Premier in discussing the possibility that the Province would be obliged to compensate Abitibi for expropriation of some of the properties, to the effect that "there would not be a net payment to Abitibi": R.F., at para. 12. Apart from the fact that the Premier was not purporting to state government policy, the statement simply does not say that the Province would do the remediation. The Premier may have simply been suggesting that outstanding environmental liabilities made the properties worth little or nothing, obviating any net payment to Abitibi.

[93] My colleague Deschamps J. concludes that the findings of the CCAA court establish that it was "sufficiently certain" that the Province would remediate the land, converting Abitibi's regulatory obligations under the EPA Orders to contingent claims that can be compromised under the CCAA. With respect, I find myself unable to agree.

[94] The CCAA judge never asked himself the critical question of whether it was "sufficiently certain" that the Province would do the work itself. Essentially, he proceeded on the basis that the EPA Orders had not been put forward in a sincere effort to obtain remediation, but were simply a money grab. The CCAA judge buttressed his view that the Province's regulatory orders were not sincere by opining that the orders were unenforceable (which if true would not prevent new EPA orders) and by suggesting that the Province did not want to assert a contingent claim, since this might attract a counterclaim by Abitibi for the expropriation of the properties (something that may be impossible due to Abitibi's decision to take the expropriation issue to NAFTA (the North American Free Trade Agreement Between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America, Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2), excluding Canadian courts). In any event, it is clear that the CCAA judge, on the reasoning he adopted, never considered the question of whether it was "sufficiently certain" that the Province would remediate the properties. It follows that the CCAA judge's conclusions cannot support the view that the outstanding obligations are contingent claims under the CCAA.

[95] My colleague concludes:

> [The CCAA judge] did at times rely on indicators that are unique and that do not appear in the analytical framework I propose above, but he did so because of the exceptional facts of this case. Yet, had he formulated the question in the same way as I have, his conclusion, based on his objective findings of fact, would have been the same. . . . The CCAA judge's assessment of the facts . . . leads to no conclusion other than that it was sufficiently certain that the Province would perform remediation work and therefore fall within the definition of a creditor with a monetary claim. [Emphasis added; para. 58.]

[96] I must respectfully confess to a less sanguine view. First, I find myself unable to decide the case on what I think the CCAA judge would have done had he gotten the law right and considered the central question. In my view, his failure to consider that question requires this Court to answer it in his stead on the record before us: Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, at para. 35. But more to the point, I see no objective facts that support, much less compel, the conclusion that it is "sufficiently certain" that the Province will move to itself remediate any or all of the pollution Abitibi caused. The mood of the regulator in issuing remediation orders, be it disinterested or otherwise, has no bearing on the likelihood that the Province will undertake such a massive project itself. The Province has options. It could, to be sure, opt to do the work. Or it could await the result of Abitibi's restructuring and call on it to remediate once it resumed operations. It could even choose to leave the sites contaminated. There is nothing in the record that makes the first option more probable than the others, much less establishes "sufficient certainty" that the Province will itself clean up the pollution, converting it to a debt.

[97] I would allow the appeal and issue a declaration that Abitibi's remediation obligations under the EPA Orders do not constitute claims compromisable under the CCAA, except for work done or tendered for on the Buchans site.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE REASONS DELIVERED BY

[98] LEBEL J. (dissenting) — I have read the reasons of the Chief Justice and Deschamps J. They agree that a court overseeing a proposed arrangement under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"), cannot relieve debtors of their regulatory obligations. The only regulatory orders that can be subject to compromise are those which are monetary in nature. My colleagues also accept that contingent environmental claims can be liquidated and compromised if it is established that the regulatory body would remediate the environmental contamination itself, and hence turn the regulatory order into a monetary claim.

[99] At this point, my colleagues disagree on the proper evidentiary test with respect to whether the government would remediate the contamination. In the Chief Justice's opinion, the evidence must show that there is a "likelihood approaching certainty" that the province would remediate the contamination itself (para. 86). In my respectful opinion, this is not the established test for determining where and how a contingent claim can be liquidated in bankruptcy and insolvency law. The test of "sufficient certainty" described by Deschamps J., which does not look very different from the general civil standard of probability, better reflects how both the common law and the civil law view and deal with contingent claims. On the basis of the test Deschamps J. proposes, I must agree with the Chief Justice and would allow the appeal.

[100] First, no matter how I read the CCAA court's judgment (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1), I find no support for a conclusion that it is consistent with the principle that the CCAA does not apply to purely regulatory obligations, or that the court had evidence that would satisfy the test of "sufficient certainty" that the province of Newfoundland and Labrador ("Province") would perform the remedial work itself.

[101] In my view, the CCAA court was concerned that the arrangement would fail if the Abitibi respondents ("Abitibi") were not released from their regulatory obligations in respect of pollution. The CCAA court wanted to eliminate the uncertainty that would have clouded the reorganized corporations' future. Moreover, its decision appears to have been driven by an opinion that the Province had acted in bad faith in its dealings with Abitibi both during and after the termination of its operations in the Province. I agree with the Chief Justice that there is no evidence that the Province intends to perform the remedial work itself. In the absence of any other evidence, an offhand comment made in the legislature by a member of the government hardly satisfies the "sufficient certainty" test. Even if the evidentiary test proposed by my colleague Deschamps J. is applied, this Court can legitimately disregard the CCAA court's finding as the Chief Justice proposes, since it did not rest on a sufficient factual foundation.

[102] For these reasons, I would concur with the disposition proposed by the Chief Justice.

Date: 1962-06-11

In The Bankruptcy of Gingras Automobile Ltée.
Les Produits de Caoutchouc Marquis Inc. (Petitioner) Appellant;
André Trottier (Trustee) Respondent.
1962: February 22; 1962: June 11.
Present: Taschereau, Fauteux, Abbott, Judson and Ritchie JJ.
ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, APPEAL SIDE, PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Bankruptcy—Landlord and tenant—Claim for arrears of rent and for costs of repairs—Whether landlord a secured creditor—Whether both claims preferred—The Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 14, ss. 95, 100, 105—Civil Code, arts. 1619, 1624, 1628, 1994, 2005.

The petitioner, as landlord of the premises occupied by the bankrupt, filed with the trustee a preferred claim in respect of three months arrears of rent due by the bankrupt and also in respect of costs of certain repairs for which the bankrupt was liable under the terms of the lease. The trustee allowed the amount claimed for arrears of rent as a preferred claim, but refused to consider the claim for repairs as a preferred claim. The trial judge held that the petitioner was entitled to rank by preference for both claims. That judgment was reversed by the Court of Queen's Bench and the decision of the trustee was restored. The petitioner obtained leave to appeal to this Court. The petitioner contended that s. 95 of The Bankruptcy Act dealt merely with the order in which a landlord was entitled to be collocated by preference, and that the extent of that preference under the provincial law was preserved by s. 105.

Held: Only the claim for arrears of rent was entitled to priority.

Subject to priority of ranking under s. 95 of The Bankruptcy Act, by virtue of s. 105 the nature and extent of the landlord's claim for rent or damages and any other rights he may have arising out of the contract of lease are determined by the law of the province in which the leased premises are situated. However, in the event of bankruptcy; the right of the landlord to be collocated and paid by preference, and the extent of that preference, are clearly provided for in s. 95. That preference ranks sixth in order of priority and is limited as provided for by s. 95. Furthermore, by the combined effect of ss. 95, 100 and 105, the landlord is entitled to rank only as an unsecured creditor for any balance to which he may be entitled under provincial law.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, Appeal Side, Province of Quebec1, reversing a judgment of Mitchell J. Appeal dismissed.

A. Denis, Q.C., for the petitioner, appellant.
J. P. Bergeron, Q.C., and P. E. Blain, for the trustee, respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

ABBOTT J.:—Appellant is a creditor of Gingras Automobile Ltée, a bankrupt, and respondent is the trustee of the estate of the said bankrupt. At the date of the receiving order a valid lease existed between the debtor and appellant covering premises occupied by the debtor and with respect to which three months' arrears of rent amounting to $1,800 were outstanding. In addition, appellant was entitled to claim from the debtor a sum of $1,398.22 representing the cost of certain repairs for which the debtor was liable under the terms of its lease. Appellant's total claim against the debtor amounted therefore to $3,198.22, for which it filed a claim with respondent, alleging that it was entitled to be paid its entire claim by preference.

It is conceded that at the date of the receiving order sufficient moveable property was located upon the leased premises to secure payment of the full amount claimed.

The trustee allowed the amount claimed for arrears of rent as a preferred claim but disallowed the balance. On appeal to the Superior Court that decision was reversed and appellant held entitled to rank by preference for the whole amount of its claim. On appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench2, that judgment was reversed and the decision of the trustee restored. The present appeal, by leave, is from that judgment.

The facts are not in dispute and the sole questions in issue on this appeal are ones of law. Under the provincial law, appellant was entitled to be paid a sum of $3,198.22 and payment of that claim was secured by privilege on the moveable property located on the leased premises: arts. 1619 et seq. and 2005 of the Civil Code. That privilege consisted in the right to seize and sell such moveable property and to be paid by preference out of the proceeds: Faribault, Traité de Droit civil, t. 2, p. 112. In the event of competing claims, under the law of Quebec the landlord's privilege ranks eighth in order of preference: art. 1994 of the Civil Code.

The legal question in issue here is, to what extent if any the provincial law has been abrogated by the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 14.

In 1949 all existing bankruptcy legislation was repealed and a new Bankruptcy Act enacted, 13 Geo. VI, c. 7, now R.S.C. 1952, c. 14. The previously existing statute was completely re-cast and many important changes made including changes in the preferential right of the landlord.

The present Act, like its predecessor acts, provides that subject to the Act all debts proved in bankruptcy shall be paid pari passu. To that rule of absolute equality, certain exceptions are made including those provided for by s. 95. The exclusive authority given to Parliament by s. 91(21) of the British North America Act to deal with all matters arising within the domain of bankruptcy and insolvency, enables Parliament to determine the relative priorities of creditors under a bankruptcy: *Royal Bank v. Larue*3. To the extent that such priorities may be in conflict with provincial law, the federal statute must prevail. In his argument before us Mr. Denis did not of course challenge that proposition. He contended, however, that s. 95 of the Act dealt merely with the order in which a landlord was entitled to be collocated by preference, and that the extent of that preference under the provincial law was preserved by s. 105. With deference I am unable to agree with that submission. The relevant portions of s. 95 and s. 105 are as follows:

> 95. (1) Subject to the rights of secured creditors, the proceeds realized from the property of a bankrupt Shall be applied in priority of payment as follows: ...
> (f) the landlord for arrears of rent for a period of three months next preceding the bankruptcy and accelerated rent for a period not exceeding three months following the bankruptcy if entitled thereto Under the lease, but the total amount so payable shall not exceed the realization from the property on the premises under lease, and any payment made on account of accelerated rent shall be credited against the amount payable by the trustee for occupation rent:...
> (3) A creditor whose rights are restricted by this section is entitled to rank as an unsecured creditor for any balance of claim due to him.
> 105. Except as to priority of ranking as provided by section ninety-five, and subject to the provisions of subsection four of section forty-two, the rights of landlords shall be determined according to the laws of the province in which the leased premises are situate.

"Secured creditor" is defined by s. 2(r) as follows:

> "secured creditor" means a person holding a mortgage, hypothec, pledge, charge, lien or privilege on or against the property of the debtor or any part thereof as security for a debt due or accruing due to him from the debtor, or a person whose claim is based upon, or secured by, a negotiable instrument held as collateral security and upon which the debtor is only indirectly or secondarily liable; ...

The interpretation and effect of these sections were considered by the Court of Appeal of Saskatchewan in *Canadian Credit Men's Trust Association Ltd. v. Carman Block Ltd.*4.

In my respectful opinion, Gordon J.A. accurately stated the law when he said at p. 162:

> With every deference I do not think a landlord with a claim for arrears of rent falls within the definition of a "secured creditor". He has no lien on the property seized but must give it up to the trustee and file his claim in the usual way. He has no security to value within the provisions of ss. 87-92 of The Bankruptcy Act. Further, I do not think that any such inference should be drawn in the face of the explicit directions contained in s. 95 of the Act. So far as I can see the Act deprives the landlord of his right of lien and merely uses the value of the property seized as a gauge to fix the amount for which he is allowed a preferred claim but does not make him a "secured creditor".

Subject to priority of ranking under s. 95 (and to s. 42(4) which has no relevance here) in virtue of s. 105 the nature and extent of the landlord's claim for rent or damages and any other, rights he may have arising out of the contract of lease are determined by the law of the province in which the leased premises are situated.

In my opinion however, in the event of bankruptcy, the right of the landlord to be collocated and paid by preference, and the extent of that preference, are clearly provided for in s. 95. Shortly stated, such preference ranks sixth in order of priority. It is limited to three months' arrears of rent prior to the bankruptcy and to accelerated rent for a period not exceeding three months following the bankruptcy. Any amount payable by preference is limited to the amount realized from property on the lease premises, and any payment on account of accelerated rent must be credited against any amount due by the Trustee for occupation rent.

I am further of opinion that by the combined effect of ss. 95, 100 and 105 of the Act the landlord is entitled to rank only as an unsecured creditor for any balance to which he may be entitled under provincial law.

The appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Where appropriate, instructions should be provided with each proof of claim form that explain in detail how to complete the proof of claim. A suggested format for the instructions is attached as Appendix A.

Acceptability of proof of claim also be considered when dealing with the acceptability of a proof of claim.

Review of proofs of claim

7. The chair, at the first meeting of creditors, has the power to admit or reject a proof of claim for the purpose of voting. Prior to the time appointed for the meeting, the trustee shall review all proofs of claim and advise the chair if they are acceptable for the purpose of voting at a meeting of creditors. Often, proofs of claim are filed just prior to the time appointed for the meeting. In this circumstance, it is recommended that the chair open the meeting and then adjourn it for a brief time for the purpose of reviewing the proofs of claim. A person who has filed a proof of claim after the time appointed for the meeting shall not be permitted to vote at that meeting.

Establishing a quorum at the first meeting of creditors

8. (1) The establishment of the quorum is governed by section 106 of the Act. When applying this section, the term "creditor" does not refer to the number of creditors appearing on the Statement of Affairs. The quorum is established by considering the number of creditors who are present in person or represented by a proxyholder (or by voting letter in a proposal) and have filed and proven their claim in proper form with the trustee before the time appointed for the meeting.

pour déterminer la recevabilité des preuves de réclamation.

Examen des preuves de réclamation

7. À la première assemblée des créanciers, le président est habilité, aux fins du vote, à admettre ou à rejeter une preuve de réclamation. Avant le moment fixé pour l'assemblée, le syndic doit examiner les preuves de réclamation et indiquer au président si elles sont recevables pour les fins du vote à l'assemblée des créanciers. Les preuves de réclamation sont souvent déposées immédiatement avant le moment fixé pour l'assemblée. En l'occurrence, il est recommandé que le président appelle l'assemblée à l'ordre et l'ajourne pour quelque temps pour permettre l'examen des preuves de réclamation alors reçues. Toute personne qui dépose une preuve de réclamation après le moment fixé pour l'assemblée n'aura pas le droit de voter à cette assemblée.

Établissement du quorum à la première assemblée des créanciers

8.(1) La constitution d'un quorum est régie par l'article 106 de la Loi. Pour les fins d'application de cet article, le mot « créancier » ne fait pas référence au nombre de créanciers figurant sur le bilan. Le quorum est fixé en fonction du nombre de créanciers qui sont présents en personne ou représentés par un fondé de pouvoir (ou par formulaire de votation dans une proposition) et qui ont déposé et prouvé leur réclamation en règle auprès du syndic, avant le moment fixé pour l'assemblée.

(2) Where a voting letter is filed in a proposal, supported by a proven claim, the letter is to be considered as if the creditor were present and is to be voted in accordance with the direction contained therein. A quorum under section 106 of the Act can be established in this manner.

(2) Lorsqu'un formulaire de votation est déposé dans une proposition, avec une réclamation prouvée en bonne et due forme, le formulaire doit être considéré au même titre que si le créancier était présent et être utilisé aux fins qui y sont prescrites. Supreme Court of British Columbia
Royal Bank of Canada v. Cal Glass Ltd.
Date: 1979-12-10
J. B. Molson and R. R. C. Twining, for plaintiff.
R. F. Hungerford, for defendant Cal Glass Ltd.
D. P. Baron, for defendant by counterclaim, Coopers & Lybrand Limited.
(Vancouver No. C785210)

[1] 10th December 1979. FAWCUS J.:— This is an action for a declaration that a debenture held by the plaintiff with respect to the assets of the defendant Cal Glass Ltd. ("Cal Glass") is valid and for the usual order for, inter alia, an accounting as to the amount due and owing from Cal Glass to the plaintiff.

[2] Cal Glass pleads that the debenture is invalid and that, in any event, the appointment by the plaintiff of a receiver-manager (the defendant by counterclaim, Coopers & Lybrand Limited), purportedly pursuant to the terms of the debenture, is also invalid. Cal Glass seeks by way of counterclaim damages against both the plaintiff and the receiver-manager.

[3] Cal Glass carried on the business of a boat builder in the municipality of Richmond, British Columbia, for a number of years, initially under the name "California Fibreglass Ltd.". It changed its name to "Cal Glass" in 1977.

[4] At all material times, the plaintiff was Cal Glass' banker. In 1977 Cal Glass established an operating line of credit with the plaintiff of $375,000. By way of security for this line of credit, the plaintiff obtained the usual s. 88 [of the Bank Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. B-1] bank security on Cal Glass' inventory, a general assignment of book accounts and personal guarantees from a Mr. Piccolo, Cal Glass' president, and from Mr. Piccolo's wife.

[5] Early in 1978 Mr. Piccolo, on behalf of Cal Glass, discussed with a Mr. Tommasini, the plaintiff's Richmond branch manager, the question of increasing the line of credit by $50,000 to $425,000. Mr. Tommasini approved this additional line of credit provided that Cal Glass would execute a debenture covering its assets, in favour of the plaintiff. Mr. Piccolo agreed to this, and the debenture was eventually executed in April 1978. During the discussions with Mr. Tommasini, Mr. Piccolo indicated to him that Cal Glass would reduce its indebtedness to the plaintiff to $100,000 by July or August 1978. Although shortly after the execution of the debenture the indebtedness was reduced to $300,000, during the summer it was back to the limit of $425,000. This caused Mr. Tommasini some concern, and that fact, together with several other factors with respect to the business of Cal Glass to which I shall refer later, resulted in his decision to recommend to the plaintiff that a receiver-manager be appointed. On 23rd August 1978 Mr. Tommasini, on behalf of the plaintiff, attended at Cal Glass' business premises in Richmond and gave to Mr. Piccolo a written demand for payment of all moneys due to the plaintiff. The moneys were not paid. Shortly thereafter a Mr. Linsley, a partner of Coopers & Lybrand Limited, arrived with his staff and took over the management of Cal Glass' business.

[6] The attack by Cal Glass on the debenture and on the appointment of the receiver-manager is made on the following grounds:

1. The debenture is void for lack of consideration in that all funds advanced to Cal Glass by the plaintiff were advanced prior to the execution of the debenture.
2. There was a collateral oral agreement between Cal Glass and the plaintiff that, if Cal Glass executed the debenture, then the plaintiff would not make any demand for payment so long as Cal Glass made the required monthly interest payments. Cal Glass says it did make such payments and that by demanding payment the plaintiff has breached a fundamental term of the collateral oral agreement.
3. It was a further term of the collateral oral agreement that, if Cal Glass executed the debenture, then the plaintiff would, on request, allow Cal Glass to grant a debenture on certain of its assets to the Federal Business Development Bank (the "F.B.D.B."), which would rank in priority over the plaintiff's debenture. Cal Glass says it did arrange financing with the F.B.D.B. in an amount of $100,000; that it then requested the priority agreement from the plaintiff, but the plaintiff refused to give it. Cal Glass says this also is a fundamental breach of the oral agreement.
4. The purported appointment of the receiver-manager was made prior to any demand for payment by the plaintiff and the appointment is therefore invalid.
5. By the express terms of the debenture, Cal Glass was not required to repay the loan, despite any demand for payment, until the debenture had been presented to it. Cal Glass says the debenture was never presented to it and that therefore the demand for payment is invalid.
6. It was an implied term of the debenture that, following a demand by the plaintiff for payment, Cal Glass would have a reasonable period of time within which to make such payment and that the plaintiff did not give Cal Glass reasonable time to make payment. Therefore, says Cal Glass, the plaintiff has not made a demand pursuant to the terms of the debenture and Cal Glass is therefore not in default.

[7] By its amended statement of claim the plaintiff alleges that, aside from the failure of Cal Glass to make payment following the demand for payment by the plaintiff, Cal Glass committed various other acts of default under the terms of the debenture and that the moneys secured thereby have therefore become immediately payable and the security constituted by the debenture enforceable as at 23rd August 1978. Among other acts of default, the plaintiff alleges that Cal Glass was insolvent as at 23rd August 1978.

1. Was the debenture void for lack of consideration?

[8] Mr. Hungerford, counsel for Cal Glass, submits that there was no consideration for the debenture because, although the plaintiff increased the authorized line of credit from $375,000 to $425,000, the additional sum of $50,000 had already been loaned by the plaintiff to Cal Glass, in the sense that Cal Glass was in an overdraft position to at least that amount. But to me it is clear from Mr. Tommasini's evidence that the plaintiff was not prepared to permit Cal Glass to continue with a $50,000 overdraft position or perhaps any overdraft position over and above the authorized line of credit of $375,000 unless Cal Glass agreed to execute a debenture. Refusal by Cal Glass to agree would have meant, according to Mr. Tommasini, whose evidence I accept, that cheques drawn on Cal Glass' account which would result in an overdraft position would not be honoured. I therefore agree with the submission of Mr. Molson, counsel for the plaintiff, that the increase in the authorized line of credit was valid consideration for the debenture.

2. Did the plaintiff agree not to "call the loan" provided that Cal Glass maintained the required monthly interest payments?

[9] The evidence establishes that the required monthly interest payments were made by Cal Glass. Deciding whether there was an agreement that if this was done, then the plaintiff would not demand payment of the loan secured by the debenture, necessitates, unfortunately, an expression of preference of the evidence of either Mr. Tommasini or Mr. Piccolo. That is to say, they are in direct conflict on this issue. Mr. Tommasini denies that any such agreement was made by the plaintiff, either through him or otherwise.

[10] At trial, Mr. Piccolo said that Mr. Tommasini had agreed that the loan would not be called if the interest payments were made. He confirmed this on cross-examination. However, on further cross-examination a portion of his examination for discovery was put to him, namely:

> "Q. In any event, to get back to the question, was there ever a time when Mr. Tommasini said, as long as you make the monthly interest payments as required by clause 2 of the debenture, the Royal Bank will not make demand for payment under the debenture? He never said anything to that effect, did he? A. I don't believe it was the interest in there but he just told me on numerous occasions that he would not call my note."

This answer was also confirmed later in his cross-examination at trial, wherein Mr. Piccolo said the following: "The evidence [I am giving at trial] is true. He [Mr. Tommasini] definitely said he would not call the note". It will be noted that again in this answer Mr. Piccolo did not include any reference to an agreement as to interest.

[11] Because of the conflicting evidence of Mr. Piccolo as given at trial and at his examination for discovery, and because his final answer on cross-examination at trial did not include any reference to interest, I find his evidence quite unsatisfactory. I therefore reject his evidence on this point and I accept Mr. Tommasini's evidence. I find that there was no such agreement made by the plaintiff, either through Mr. Tommasini or otherwise, that the loan would not be called provided that Cal Glass maintained the monthly interest payments.

3. Did the plaintiff agree to permit a debenture in the amount of $100,000 to F.B.D.B. to rank in priority over its debenture, and if so, is the plaintiff in breach of this agreement?

[12] The evidence of Mr. Tommasini clearly establishes that he informed Mr. Piccolo in early 1978 that the plaintiff would give priority to the F.B.D.B. for a debenture in the amount of $100,000 on certain fixed assets. Mr. Tommasini said he also confirmed this with Mr. Piccolo in April 1978 when Mr. Piccolo signed the debenture. However, Mr. Tommasini also testified that he told Mr. Piccolo at that time that "... if things are the way they are, based on your financial position, that if the F.B.D.B. was to request facilities we will give you priority". Mr. Tommasini said that, during the following several months and up to a meeting between Mr. Tommasini and Mr. Piccolo on 18th August 1978, he was generally satisfied with Cal Glass' operations. In August, however, he said some cheques were returned "N.S.F." and also that in the month of July third-party notices had been issued by the federal excise branch. As to the latter, he said he spoke to Mr. Piccolo, who said that he would take care of them.

[13] On 18th August 1978 Mr. Piccolo, together with his general manager, Mr. Van Ess, met with Mr. Tommasini. Mr. Tommasini testified, and I accept his evidence, that Mr. Piccolo said Cal Glass needed an additional $100,000 from the plaintiff as well as $100,000 from the F.B.D.B. and that he, Piccolo, intended to contribute $50,000. Mr. Tommasini said he told Mr. Piccolo there was no possibility that the plaintiff could assist Cal Glass further and pointed out to him that Cal Glass was already overdrawn. Mr. Tommasini said that, on mentioning the third-party notices, Mr. Piccolo said that Cal Glass was invoicing boats through Farrell Boats, another operation of Cal Glass', in order to avoid third-party demands. This obviously caused Mr. Tommasini great concern.

[14] Although they did discuss what additional security Mr. Piccolo might be able to provide, nothing came of this and in the result Mr. Tommasini told Mr. Piccolo, in effect, that because of the changed circumstances the plaintiff would not now agree to any priority for any debenture to the F.B.D.B.

[15] Mr. Hungerford says this refusal to give the priority was a breach of the oral agreement made earlier in the year with Mr. Tommasini. He submits that the debenture in favour of the plaintiff would not have been executed by Cal Glass but for the plaintiff's agreement to give such priority. It is, of course, implicit in this submission that Mr. Tommasini, on behalf of the plaintiff, agreed to give such priority at any time in the future regardless of the then existing circumstances and that, in effect, any change for the worse in the financial position of Cal Glass was irrelevant.

[16] Mr. Molson submits that, while it is true that the plaintiff agreed to give such priority to the F.B.D.B., such agreement was based on the then existing financial position of the defendant, that is, in early 1978. He says that position had obviously changed for the worse by the time of the meeting on 18th August 1978 and that Mr. Tommasini's worst fears were confirmed at that meeting. He submits that there was clearly an implied term that if Cal Glass' financial position did not improve, or certainly if it worsened, then the plaintiff would not be bound to give any priority to a debenture executed in favour of the F.B.D.B.

[17] I am quite satisfied from Mr. Tommasini's evidence on this point, which I accept and to which I have already referred, that he told Mr. Piccolo early in 1978, in effect, that if Cal Glass' financial position remained the same, then the priority agreement would be given any time in the future. There was, therefore, an implied term of the agreement, in my view, that if Cal Glass' financial position worsened, then the plaintiff would no longer be under any obligation to give such priority. I find as a fact that Cal Glass' financial position had worsened, as evidenced by the third-party demands issued during the summer of 1978, and as further evidenced by Mr. Piccolo stating at his meeting with Mr. Tommasini on 18th August that he was invoicing boats to a "third party" in order to avoid these demands. I therefore find that, as at 18th August 1978, the plaintiff was under no obligation to grant any priority agreement with respect to a debenture to the F.B.D.B.

4. Was the receiver-manager appointed prior to a demand for payment being made and, if so, does this invalidate the appointment?

[18] On 23rd August Mr. Tommasini, after consulting with the plaintiff's solicitors, obtained from them a duly executed form of appointment of Coopers & Lybrand Limited as receiver-manager and a letter addressed to Cal Glass, demanding payment of the loan. He then attended at Mr. Linsley's office, gave to him a copy of the executed appointment and arranged that he, Tommasini, would go to Cal Glass' business premises and serve the demand and Mr. Linsley would then follow.

[19] Mr. Tommasini then attended at Cal Glass' premises and handed the demand for payment to Mr. Piccolo. No payment was made. A short time later, Mr. Linsley and his assistants arrived and took over Cal Glass' operation as receiver-manager.

[20] Mr. Tommasini did agree on cross-examination that the appointment of the receiver-manager was not delivered to Mr. Linsley subject to any conditions, but he added that he was under the impression that the appointment did not take effect until it was delivered by Mr. Linsley to Cal Glass.

[21] Mr. Linsley testified that his instructions were to follow Mr. Tommasini to the defendant's premises and that, if the loan had not been paid, then he and his staff would take over as receiver-manager. He said he attended at the premises, met with Mr. Piccolo and, on confirming that payment had not been made, he then exercised his purported authority as receiver-manager and took over the business.

[22] This evidence makes it clear to me that the intention of the plaintiff, through Mr. Tommasini, was that Mr. Linsley would not take over as receiver-manager unless the loan remained unpaid following the demand. Does the fact that the executed appointment of the receiver-manager preceded the presentation of the demand for payment and failure to pay invalidate the appointment? I think not. In my view, there is nothing to prevent such an appointment being prepared, dated, executed and left until it is required — that is, until a demand for payment of the loan has been made and not met: vide Cripps (R.A.) & Son v. Wickenden; Cripps (Pharmaceuticals) v. Wickenden, [1973] 2 All E.R. 606.

5. Should the debenture have been presented to Cal Glass at the time demand for payment of the loan was made?

[23] At the time Mr. Tommasini made demand for payment, the debenture was not presented. That is to say, neither the original nor a copy of the debenture was handed to him. Obviously, on the evidence, Mr. Tommasini had not thought of this.

[24] The relevant paragraph of the debenture reads as follows:

> "1. CAL GLASS LTD., A British Columbia Company having its registered office at 2480 Shell Road, Richmond, British Columbia (hereinafter called the 'Company') will ON DEMAND pay to THE ROYAL BANK OF CANADA (hereinafter called the 'Bank') on presentation of this Debenture the sum of FOUR HUNDRED TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND ($425,000) DOLLARS in lawful money of Canada."

As I follow Mr. Molson's submission, he says that presentation is unnecessary in spite of the express wording of the debenture and, even if it is necessary, such presentation can be made validly at the time payment of the loan is made.

[25] Mr. Hungerford submits that the debenture clearly calls for a presentment of the debenture at the time the demand is made. I agree. That is to say, in my view the plaintiff has agreed, in effect, that payment need not be made until presentment of the debenture is first made, together with the demand. The words of Lord Blanesburgh in Hunter v. Hunter, [1936] A.C. 222 at 253 (H.L.), are, I think, apposite:

> "The condition in this instance [to demand payment] was a very small protection to the appellant. So much the stricter was the Bank's duty to fulfil it. Here, however, on the part of the Bank's officials the duty was either neglected or forgotten."

[26] I therefore find that the plaintiff failed to follow the express procedure stipulated in para. 1 of the debenture with the result that the demand, as made under that paragraph is, in my view, invalid.

6. Was the plaintiff nevertheless entitled under the terms of the debenture to appoint a receiver-manager?

[27] The plaintiff submits that Cal Glass was, in any event, in breach of several of the conditions referred to in the debenture and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to appoint a receiver-manager under the debenture. Inter alia, the plaintiff alleges that Cal Glass was insolvent at the time of the appointment. In this respect, the relevant parts of the debenture read as follows:

> "CONDITIONS REFERRED TO IN THE WITHIN DEBENTURE
> "5. The principal, interest and other monies hereby secured shall become immediately payable and the security hereby constituted shall become enforceable in each and every of the following events: ...
> "(c) if the Company becomes insolvent ...".

[28] Mr. Linsley was called by the plaintiff on this point. He is a chartered accountant of extensive experience and has eminent qualifications. He is a licensed trustee in bankruptcy and has been a partner of Coopers & Lybrand Limited for approximately 20 years. His written reports were filed as part of Ex. 35. Exhibit 35, tab 5, is Mr. Linsley's first written report. In it he expresses the view, which he confirmed at the trial, that the following definitions adequately define a condition of insolvency as it is generally viewed in Canada today, namely:

> "The Bankruptcy Act [R.S.C. 1970, c. B-3, s. 2] defines an insolvent person as:—
> " '... a person who is not bankrupt and who resides or carries on business in Canada, whose liabilities to creditors provable as claims under this Act amount to one thousand dollars, and
> " '(a) who is for any reason unable to meet his obligations as they generally become due, or
> " '(b) who has ceased paying his current obligations in the ordinary course of business as they generally become due, or

Digitized by Google

" '(c) the aggregate of whose property is not, at a fair valuation, sufficient, or, if disposed of at a fairly conducted sale under legal process, would not be sufficient to enable payment of all his obligations, due and accruing due".

"The Proposed Bankruptcy Act 1978 (Bill S-11) offers a comparable definition as follows:—

" 'A person is insolvent where:

" '(a) the property of the person, if it were realized at a fair value, would be insufficient to pay all his certain and liquidated debts whether or not the debts are due; or

" '(b) the person has ceased to pay his certain and liquidated debts generally as they become due.

"In my opinion the aforementioned definitions adequately define a condition of insolvency as it is generally viewed in Canada to-day."

[29] Mr. Linsley then goes on to say in his report that Cal Glass had ceased paying its current obligations in the ordinary course of business as they generally became due prior to the date of the appointment of the receiver-manager, namely, 23rd August 1978, and that more specifically Cal Glass did or failed to do the following:

"Cal Glass Ltd. ceased paying current obligations in the ordinary course of business as they generally became due prior to August 23, 1978 and more specifically the company:—

"(a) did not remit portions of Federal Sales Tax owing for the months of March and April 1978 and all of the amounts owing for Federal Sales Tax for May and June 1978. The total Federal Sales Tax owing as at August 23, 1978 was determined to be approximately $135,000.

"(b) did not remit payroll Income Tax, Unemployment Insurance and Canada Pension Plan deductions and contributions for the months of June and July 1978. The total of such amounts owing as at August 23, 1978 was approximately $45,000.

"(c) did not remit portions of Social Services Tax for the period January 1, 1975 to August 23, 1978 as required by the Social Services Tax Act. The total amount of Social Services Tax owing as at August 23, 1978 was approximately $17,000.

"(d) exceeded its $425,000 level of credit with its bankers.

"(e) failed to make payment to the majority of its trade suppliers as required by the terms of credit extended by the suppliers."

[30] Mr. Linsley's opinion was not given lightly. That is to say, among other things, he caused thorough financial statements for Cal Glass to be prepared. Insofar as he was concerned, the inability of Cal Glass to meet its current obligations in the ordinary course of business was due to a serious lack of working capital. Other evidence called by the plaintiff supported Mr. Linsley's opinion as to the difficulties which Cal Glass was encountering in attempting to meet its current obligations and, in particular, the evidence supported his opinions as expressed in paras, (a) to (e) inclusive above. I need only refer to the evidence of Mr. Van Ess, which I accept, that from the months of May to August 1978 Cal Glass had trouble paying its bills and that the situation was critical by August 1978.

[31] Mr. E. G. Robinson, a chartered accountant, was called on behalf of Cal Glass. Although he does not have Mr. Linsley's extensive experience, he has been a chartered accountant for some seven years and is a licensed trustee. He has some experience in the insolvency field and in receivership work. I thought Mr. Robinson gave his evidence in a very straightforward manner. However, the difficulty, if I may say so, which he faced was in having to rely on Mr. Piccolo's statements and information in preparing his financial statements for Cal Glass and as a basis for his opinion that Cal Glass was not insolvent as at 23rd August 1978. In this respect, I quote from his written report, Ex. 35, tab 1:

"II Ceasing to Pay Current Obligations

"I am informed of the following by Mr. Piccolo:

"(i) That Cal Glass Ltd. had arrangements with the majority of its general creditors that their accounts would generally be paid beyond the time technically specified as the net term applying to invoices from such creditors.

"(ii) That said arrangements were the practice generally applied by the company from time to time in dealing with its creditors and were accepted by such creditors.

"(iii) That during the months of July and August 1978 (up to August 23, 1978) there had been no significant change in the company's practice of dealing generally with its creditors and it was continuing to pay its general creditors in accordance with its past practice.

"(iv) That the company normally operated with liabilities to trade creditors in the range of $400,000 to $600,000; that in March 1978 these liabilities amounted to approximately $525,000 and that as at August 23, 1978 the liabilities to trade creditors had been reduced to approximately $375,000.

Digitized by Google

"(v) That Cal Glass Ltd. was in the final stages of negotiation for the provision of $100,000 in term financing from the Federal Business Development Bank to be utilized to make payment on the accounts of the current creditors and to allow the company to replenish its inventories of raw materials and supplies.

"Based on the foregoing information it is my opinion that Cal Glass Ltd. had not ceased to pay its current obligations as they generally came due in the ordinary course of business."

[32] Mr. Piccolo, in his evidence, also expressed the view that Cal Glass was not insolvent because, among other reasons, it had arrangements with its creditors and with the federal excise branch. However, Mr. Piccolo's evidence with respect to the arrangements allegedly made with the federal excise branch with respect to its third-party demands was refuted by a Mr. Reiter, who is the head of collections for that branch. Mr. Reiter testified that such demands were outstanding in July and August 1978. He said that Mr. Piccolo met with the regional director and himself on 15th August in order to discuss the situation. He said an agreement was reached that the demands would be withdrawn provided that a payment of $20,000 was made by Cal Glass in the following few days. However, neither this amount nor any amount was paid, and Mr. Reiter said that the demands were therefore not withdrawn.

[33] With respect to the alleged arrangements with Cal Glass' creditors; in my view, it is clear from Ex. 40, which is an analysis of Cal Glass' accounts payable as at 31st March 1978 and 23rd August 1978, that the situation was seriously worsening with respect to payments, late or otherwise, to the various trade creditors. In his second report, Ex. 35, tab 6, Mr. Linsley, in commenting on the report and analysis done by Mr. Robinson, had the following to say with respect to the alleged arrangements with the creditors:

"It has been suggested that arrangements with creditors for payment beyond their normal terms would cure a condition of insolvency caused by failure to pay current obligations as they generally became due in the ordinary course of business. I disagree since I do not believe that payment arrangements thrust on creditors can be regarded as paying current obligations as they generally become due. Indeed such arrangements, if they existed, might be considered to be further evidence of insolvency."

[34] With respect to the working capital position of Cal Glass; as I have said, Mr. Linsley found it seriously deficient. In his view, a cash injection of some $500,000 was required. Mr. Robinson disagreed with this opinion, but on cross-examination eventually agreed that a sum of approximately $250,000 was required.

[35] I have no hesitation whatsoever in accepting Mr. Linsley's opinion that Cal Glass was insolvent as at 23rd August 1978, in that it had ceased to meet its current obligations in the ordinary course of business as they generally became due.

[36] I might also mention that Mr. Linsley was also of the opinion that Cal Glass was insolvent under the second head, that is, that the aggregate property of Cal Glass "at a fair valuation, ... or, if disposed of at a fairly conducted sale under legal process" was less than book value. Put in another way, in his opinion the fair value of Cal Glass' assets was less than its liabilities. Again, in my view, Mr. Linsley's opinion was based on what I would term a careful preparation, by the employees of Coopers & Lybrand Limited under the direction of Mr. Linsley, of financial statements for Cal Glass, the contents of which were based in part on an examination of the assets of Cal Glass, including a full inventory count and valuation thereof by reference to the company's records.

[37] Again there was a substantial difference of opinion between Mr. Robinson and Mr. Linsley under this head. Based on a review of the financial statements prepared by Coopers & Lybrand Limited and based on information provided to him by Mr. Piccolo, it was Mr. Robinson's opinion that Cal Glass' assets "at a fair and realizable value on a going-concern basis exceeded its liabilities due or accruing due". Mr. Robinson in his report in this respect, Ex. 35, tab 1, was careful to point out that the financial statements of Cal Glass "have not been audited or verified to the books and records of the company". Neither Mr. Robinson nor anyone under his direction examined the records of Cal Glass or conducted any inventory check or valuation by reference to the company's records. As I have said, in this repect he relied on Mr. Piccolo.

[38] Again, I reject Mr. Piccolo's evidence where it conflicts with that of the evidence of the employees of Coopers & Lybrand Limited who, under Mr. Linsley's direction, valued the company's assets and ascertained its liabilities. I therefore accept Mr. Linsley's opinion that Cal Glass was insolvent as at 23rd August 1978, as well as under the second head, namely, for the reason that the fair value of its assets was less than its liabilities.

7. Was the plaintiff required to give Cal Glass reasonable time to pay the loan and, if so, was a reasonable time given?

[39] Mr. Molson submitted that, where a breach of condition 5(c) occurs, then no demand for payment need be made by the plaintiff and therefore that no time, reasonable or otherwise, need be given. However, I agree with the submission of Mr. Hungerford that regardless of the nature of the breach, a demand for payment must always be made. That being so, in my view, a reasonable time must then be given to the borrower to meet the demand: Ronald Elwyn Lister Ltd. v. Dunlop Can. Ltd. (1978), 19 O.R. (2d) 380, 4 B.L.R. 1, 85 D.L.R. was reversed 8 B.L.R. 133, 32 C.B.R. (N.S.) 4 (C.A.); I should note here that the question of the presentation of the debenture does not arise with respect to the breach with which I am now dealing under condition 5(c).

[40] Mr. Hungerford submits that the plaintiff did not give Cal Glass reasonable time to meet the demand for payment and that the demand is therefore invalid and that the appointment of the receiver-manager is likewise invalid. He points to the evidence that a substantial sum of money, namely, $425,000, was the subject of the demand; that Mr. Tommasini arrived after banking hours, namely, at or shortly after 4:00 p.m.; and that only a nominal time, namely, approximately 30 minutes, was given to Cal Glass to meet the demand before the arrival of the receiver-manager. Mr. Hungerford cited Mister Broadloom Corpn. (1968) Ltd. v. Bank of Montreal (1979), 32 C.B.R. (N.S.) 241, 7 B.L.R. 222 (Ont. S.C.). In dealing with the question of reasonable time, Linden J. stated, and I agree, that the following factors should be considered [C.B.R. p. 253]:

> "Thus a reasonable time must always be allowed, but, in assessing what length of time is reasonable in a particular fact situation various factors must be analyzed: (1) the amount of the loan; (2) the risk to the creditor of losing his money or the security; (3) the length of the relationship between the debtor and the creditor; (4) the character and reputation of the debtor; (5) the potential ability to raise the money required in a short period; (6) the circumstances surrounding the demand for payment; and (7) any other relevant factors."

I therefore apply these factors to the circumstances in the case at bar. In this respect, the grounds for the concern of Mr. Tommasini with respect to Cal Glass' business operation must be considered. I accept his evidence that, at the meeting with Mr. Piccolo on 18th August, not only did Mr. Piccolo inform him that boats were being invoiced to Farrell Boats in order to avoid third-party demands but Mr. Piccolo also stated that if Mr. Tommasini did not accede to the request for further financing and the priority agreement with F.B.D.B. then, in Mr. Piccolo's words, the plaintiff "owned a boat company". Furthermore, the evidence of Mr. Tommasini and Mr. Van Ess, which I accept, is that immediately prior to 23rd August, namely, on the weekend following the meeting of 18th August, Mr. Piccolo had made preparations to remove certain assets of Cal Glass from its premises. Although I accept Mr. Piccolo's evidence that these assets were not of substantial value, nevertheless, the concern from Mr. Tommasini's point of view was understandably real. I must also consider the evidence, and I so find, that Mr. Piccolo did not ask either Mr. Tommasini or Mr. Linsley or any of Mr. Linsley's representatives for time to meet the demand, nor did he indicate that he would be able to raise the money, that is, to re-finance. In fact, according to Mr. Linsley, whose evidence I accept, Mr. Piccolo told him that he had no source of funds. I appreciate that it would be more difficult for a company to re-finance after a receiver-manager has taken over (and Mr. Linsley agreed with this proposition), but nevertheless, in view of the then financial position of Cal Glass, the ability or potential ability of Cal Glass to re-finance to the extent of paying out the plaintiff was improbable, to say the least.

[41] Applying the factors referred to above, and after considering all of the circumstances in the case at bar, I am of the view that the plaintiff acted reasonably and that, in particular, under the circumstances, it was reasonable for the plaintiff to give Cal Glass only a nominal amount of time to meet the demand.

[42] The plaintiff's action is therefore allowed with costs and the counterclaim is dismissed with costs.

[43] I shall leave it to counsel to settle the terms of the order. If there is any difficulty in this respect, the matter may be spoken to further.

[44] Judgment accordingly.

on appeal from the court of appeal for quebec

Bankruptcy and insolvency -- Courts -- Jurisdiction -- Trustee presenting petition to Quebec Superior Court sitting in bankruptcy seeking to "recuperate" assets held by company with office in British Columbia -- Company bringing motion to transfer petition to British Columbia -- Whether Superior Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over petition -- Whether Superior Court erred in exercising discretion against making transfer order -- Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-1, s. 187(7).

The appellant is a company incorporated under the laws of Delaware, offering venture capital services from its office in British Columbia. In 1996, a deal involving the financing of an African gold mine was struck between the appellant and Eagle, a company with offices in Quebec. The parties reduced their agreement to a series of documents, each of which contained a clause stating that the agreement was to be governed by the laws of British Columbia. In September 1997, Eagle was adjudged bankrupt by the Quebec Superior Court sitting in bankruptcy and the respondent firm was appointed trustee in bankruptcy. In January 1999, the respondent trustee presented a petition seeking to "recuperate" the assets of Eagle, including the monetary value of numerous shares held or controlled by the appellant. The appellant then brought a motion to transfer the petition "to the Supreme Court of British Columbia, Bankruptcy Division of Vancouver". The appellant's motion was dismissed. The Court of Appeal unanimously upheld that decision.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

The bankruptcy petition was properly filed in the Quebec Superior Court sitting in bankruptcy. A creditor is required to file a bankruptcy petition in the court having jurisdiction in the judicial district of the locality of the debtor. Eagle carried on business in Quebec and its only connection to British Columbia was that the agreements between itself and the appellant referred to the law of that province. Nothing in the evidence suggested that the bankruptcy court in Quebec lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the petition or personal jurisdiction over Eagle when it made the receiving order. The bankruptcy court thereby acquired jurisdiction to deal with matters affecting the bankrupt estate arising in British Columbia. The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act establishes a nationwide scheme for the adjudication of bankruptcy claims. Section 188(1) ensures that orders made by the bankruptcy court sitting in one province can and will be enforced across the country.

The bankruptcy court does not lack subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute because it is a contract case. While a trustee's claim in relation to a "stranger to the bankruptcy" or lacking the "complexion of a matter in bankruptcy" should be brought in the ordinary civil courts, if the contractual dispute properly relates to the subject matter of the bankruptcy proceedings, the fact it also has a property and civil rights aspect does not in any way impair the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction. Here, far from being a "stranger" to the bankruptcy, the appellant is potentially the most significant player in the role of either creditor or debtor, as the case may be. Further, while the bankruptcy court does not have the general jurisdiction of a civil court to award damages in breach of contract cases, the trustee's claim is not properly characterized as a claim in damages but as a claim to specific property of the bankrupt which is being wrongfully withheld by the appellant.

The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act prima facie establishes one command centre or "single control" for all proceedings related to the bankruptcy. "Single control" is not necessarily inconsistent with transferring particular disputes elsewhere, but a creditor (or debtor) who wishes to fragment the proceedings, and who cannot claim to be a "stranger to the bankruptcy", has the burden of demonstrating "sufficient cause" under s. 187(7) to send the trustee scurrying to multiple jurisdictions. The motions judge was entitled to conclude that the facts of this case do not show "sufficient cause" to require the transfer to British Columbia.

Digitized by Google

The relevant agreements to which the appellant and Eagle were parties contained choice of law, not choice of forum provisions, and the Quebec courts are perfectly able to apply the law of British Columbia. Furthermore, arts. 3148 and 3135 of the Civil Code of Québec would only apply in bankruptcy court "[i]n cases not provided for in the Act or . . . Rules". Since s. 187(7) of the Act specifically provides that a transfer will not be ordered unless there is satisfactory proof that a proceeding will be "more economically administered" in another division or district or "for other sufficient cause", these particular provisions of the Code can have no application. Where, unlike in this case, a defendant has the benefit of a choice of forum clause, such a clause ought to be taken into careful consideration by a motions judge under s. 187(7) but it is not binding.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal, [2000] R.J.Q. 392, [2000] Q.J. No. 417 (QL), dismissing the appellant's appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court, [1999] R.J.Q. 1497. Appeal dismissed.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

1 BINNIE J. -- The long arm of the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy reached out to the appellant in Vancouver, British Columbia, in respect of a claim for shares and warrants and other debts allegedly due to the bankrupt which the trustee in bankruptcy values in excess of $4.5 million. The appellant protested that the dispute, which involves the financing of an African gold mine, has nothing to do with Quebec. It argues that the claim of the respondent trustee in bankruptcy is an ordinary civil claim that rests entirely on agreements that are to be interpreted according to the laws of British Columbia. For this and other reasons of convenience and efficiency, the appellant says, the claim ought to proceed in British Columbia. The bankruptcy court and the Quebec Court of Appeal rejected these submissions and, in my view, the further appeal to this Court ought also to be dismissed.

I. Facts

2 The appellant Azco Mining Inc. ("Azco"), a company incorporated under the laws of Delaware, offered venture capital services from its office in Vancouver, British Columbia. In 1996 it was introduced to Eagle River International Limited and Eagle River Exchange and Financial Services Inc. (hereinafter collectively referred to as "Eagle"), with offices in Gatineau, Quebec. Eagle was in the process of trying to develop promising gold mining properties in a 500 square mile area of Mali, West Africa. A deal was struck whereby Eagle would continue to use its expertise to bring the mines to production through subsidiary companies in Mali, and Azco would provide the financing. The parties reduced their agreement to a series of documents, each of which contained what the appellant contends is a choice of forum clause and the respondent argues is no more than a choice of law clause, as follows:

> June 7, 1996 financing agreement
> 28. The agreement shall be governed by the law of British Columbia.
> June 12, 1996 management services agreement
> 13. Arbitration: The Parties hereto agree that all questions or matters in dispute with respect to this Agreement shall be submitted to arbitration pursuant to the terms hereof.
> 20. Applicable Law: The situs of this Agreement is Vancouver, British Columbia, and, for all purposes this Agreement, will be governed exclusively by and construed and enforced in accordance with the laws prevailing in the Province of British Columbia.

3 In addition, Azco relies on the terms of the debenture entered into by Azco with Eagle's subsidiary company in Mali (called West African Gold & Exploration S.A.), as follows:

> West African Gold & Exploration S.A. Debenture dated August 9, 1996
> 17. [The] situs of this Debenture is Vancouver, British Columbia, and for all purposes this Debenture will be governed exclusively by and construed and enforced in accordance with the laws prevailing in the Province of British Columbia. In addition, the Company hereby expressly acknowledges and agrees to forthwith execute any and all documentation which may be necessary in order to ensure both the enforceability of this Debenture and the valid registration thereof as against the Mortgaged Property under the laws prevailing in each of the Province of British Columbia and the Republic of Mali and, in addition, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, to attorn, if required, to any courts of competent jurisdiction in the Province of British Columbia in order to either administer or interpret this Debenture in accordance with the laws prevailing in the Province of British Columbia.

4 It was envisaged that if the project were successful Azco would ultimately own a majority interest in what the trustee describes as a joint venture holding company, Sanou Mining Corporation ("Sanou"). Eagle was to be a minority partner.

5 During the period of May 16, 1996 and May 1, 1997, Azco paid Eagle a total of US$3,844,858. For each payment, Eagle executed a promissory note, undertaking to repay Azco if it failed to fulfill its contractual obligations.

6 On September 12, 1997, Eagle was adjudged bankrupt. The respondent firm was appointed trustee in bankruptcy. Despite Eagle's bankruptcy, the Mali project proceeded and, according to Azco, it is still underway. The trustee says that the appellant now controls the holding company Sanou and continues to withhold, wrongfully, the 3.5 million shares and 4 million warrants to which Eagle was (and is) entitled.

7 On January 18, 1999, the respondent trustee presented a petition to the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy ("the bankruptcy court") seeking to "recuperate the assets" of Eagle, including the monetary value of what it considers the wrongfully withheld property of the debtor, namely 125,000 shares of Azco itself and 3.5 million shares and 4 million warrants of Sanou. The respondent trustee values the Azco shares at CAN$337,500 and the Sanou interest at US$1,875,000. In addition the trustee advances some monetary claims for a variety of alleged debts.

8 On February 24, 1999, the appellant brought a motion to transfer the petition "to the Supreme Court of British Columbia, Bankruptcy Division of Vancouver". In support of its motion, the appellant stated that "it is a certainty that Azco will file a counterclaim for an amount in excess of $5,000,000 Cdn., based principally" on the financing agreements to recover about US$3.85 million in the payments to Eagle mentioned above which, as stated, were secured by promissory notes. The contractual arrangement, says Azco, was that if certain conditions in the agreements were not met, the advances would be treated as a demand loan. Azco says the conditions were not met and that it is entitled to immediate repayment of all advances. Azco submitted that "[t]he Superior Court of the Bankruptcy Division of Hull does not have jurisdiction to hear this contractual claim against Azco". Its position, as stated, was that the file should be transferred to the Bankruptcy Division of Vancouver.

9 Azco's Vice-President of Finance, Ryan Modesto, who lives in the United States, testified in support of the motion that Azco is a creditor in the bankruptcy:

Q. So is it Azco Mining's position that it is the creditor in that bankruptcy of Eagle River?
A. Yes, it is.
Q. For what amount?
A. For three million eight hundred forty-four thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight dollars ($3,844,858) plus accrued interest.
Q. That's U.S. currency?
A. That is U.S. currency.
Q. And you refer to interest. Are you referring to the interest referred to in the promissory note?
A. Exactly.

10 Azco's motion was dismissed by Isabelle J. of the Quebec Superior Court on May 6, 1999. That decision was upheld by the Quebec Court of Appeal on February 21, 2000.

II. Judicial History

A. Quebec Superior Court, [1999] R.J.Q. 1497

11 Isabelle J. held that the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy had jurisdiction to deal with the respondent's petition. The relevant provisions of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (the "Act"), were clear and there was no need to refer to the Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64, or the Quebec Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25.

12 Azco had not argued that the bankrupt's affairs could be more efficiently administered in British Columbia but rather that there were other "sufficient" reasons for transferring the proceeding to that province, including, in particular, certain clauses in the agreement (reproduced above) that Azco said required the dispute to be tried in British Columbia. Isabelle J. ruled that these clauses had to do with choice of law rather than choice of forum and in any event lacked an "imperative" character.

13 Isabelle J. accepted that he could transfer the proceeding to the Vancouver division of the Supreme Court of British Columbia sitting in Bankruptcy under s. 187(7) of the Act. There was no need to turn to the specific rules governing forum non conveniens set out in art. 3135 of the Civil Code of Québec. Having regard to all the circumstances, however, Isabelle J. did not think a transfer of proceedings would be justified. The legislator bestowed on the trustee the power to manage the affairs of the bankrupt in the most practical and economical manner possible. Vancouver may be convenient for the appellant, but the interests of all the creditors prevailed over the convenience of only one creditor. Accordingly, the appellant's motion was dismissed.

B. Quebec Court of Appeal, [2000] R.J.Q. 392

14 A unanimous Court of Appeal dismissed Azco's appeal. Robert J.A., concurred in by Proulx and Rousseau-Houle JJ.A., agreed that the Quebec Superior Court had jurisdiction over Eagle's bankruptcy, noting that the company was carrying on business in Quebec when the bankruptcy proceedings were initiated. The petition against Azco was authorized by s. 30(1)(d) of the Act which empowers a trustee to bring legal proceedings relating to the property of the bankrupt with the permission of the inspectors.

15 Robert J.A. agreed with the motions judge that it would be most efficient and equitable to have a single court oversee the administration of the bankrupt estate despite the fact that a centralized bankruptcy might present certain difficulties and inconveniences for parties residing in provinces far from the bankruptcy forum. However, like Isabelle J., he noted that the courts retain some discretion under s. 187(7) to transfer a case to another division where there is proof that the bankrupt's estate would be administered more economically or where some other sufficient reason exists. In the present case, Robert J.A. found that Azco had not demonstrated it would be more economical to proceed before the bankruptcy court in British Columbia. As to other circumstances, Robert J.A. ruled that the contractual terms that Azco characterized as choice of forum clauses did not bind the trustee in bankruptcy, who represented and acted for the benefit of all creditors. The clauses in question were not exclusive jurisdiction clauses but even if they were, the Act is a law of public order and its provisions must be rigorously applied given the consequences for the rights of both debtors and creditors.

III. Relevant Statutory Provisions

2. (1) In this Act,

"locality of a debtor" means the principal place

(a) where the debtor has carried on business during the year immediately preceding his bankruptcy,

(b) where the debtor has resided during the year immediately preceding his bankruptcy, or

(c) in cases not coming within paragraph (a) or (b), where the greater portion of the property of the debtor is situated;

30. (1) The trustee may, with the permission of the inspectors, do all or any of the following things:

(d) bring, institute or defend any action or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the bankrupt;

43. . . .

(5) The petition shall be filed in the court having jurisdiction in the judicial district of the locality of the debtor.

72. (1) The provisions of this Act shall not be deemed to abrogate or supersede the substantive provisions of any other law or statute relating to property and civil rights that are not in conflict with this Act, and the trustee is entitled to avail himself of all rights and remedies provided by that law or statute as supplementary to and in addition to the rights and remedies provided by this Act.

183. (1) The following courts are invested with such jurisdiction at law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original, auxiliary and ancillary jurisdiction in bankruptcy and in other proceedings authorized by this Act during their respective terms, as they are now, or may be hereafter, held, and in vacation and in chambers:

(b) in the Province of Quebec, the Superior Court;

(c) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Supreme Court;

187. . . .

(7) The court, on satisfactory proof that the affairs of the bankrupt can be more economically administered within another bankruptcy district or division, or for other sufficient cause, may by order transfer any proceedings under this Act that are pending before it to another bankruptcy district or division.

188. (1) An order made by the court under this Act shall be enforced in the courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy elsewhere in Canada in the same manner in all respects as if the order had been made by the court hereby required to enforce it.

(2) All courts and the officers of all courts shall severally act in aid of and be auxiliary to each other in all matters of bankruptcy, and an order of one court seeking aid, with a request to another court, shall be deemed sufficient to enable the latter court to exercise, in regard to the matters directed by the order, such jurisdiction as either the court that made the request or the court to which the request is made could exercise in regard to similar matters within its jurisdiction.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency General Rules, C.R.C., c. 368 (am. SOR/98-240)

3. In cases not provided for in the Act or these Rules, the courts shall apply, within their respective jurisdictions, their ordinary procedure to the extent that that procedure is not inconsistent with the Act or these Rules.

Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64

3135. Even though a Québec authority has jurisdiction to hear a dispute, it may exceptionally and on an application by a party, decline jurisdiction if it considers that the authorities of another country are in a better position to decide.

3148. In personal actions of a patrimonial nature, a Québec authority has jurisdiction where

(5) the defendant submits to its jurisdiction.

However, a Québec authority has no jurisdiction where the parties, by agreement, have chosen to submit all existing or future disputes between themselves relating to a specified legal relationship to a foreign authority or to an arbitrator, unless the defendant submits to the jurisdiction of the Québec authority.

IV. Analysis

17 Parliament has conferred on the bankruptcy court the capacity and authority to exercise "original, auxiliary and ancillary jurisdiction in bankruptcy and in other proceedings authorized by this Act" (s. 183(1)). On the face of it, the intent of this provision is to confer on the bankruptcy court powers and duties co-extensive with Parliament's jurisdiction over "Bankruptcy" under s. 91(21) of the Constitution Act, 1867 except insofar as that jurisdiction has been limited or specifically assigned elsewhere by Parliament itself.

18 While the appellant's motion simply asked that the dispute be transferred to the Vancouver Division of the Supreme Court of British Columbia sitting in Bankruptcy (thereby appearing to concede that the dispute is properly dealt with as a bankruptcy matter), its motion also contended that the trustee's claims are "exclusively contractual" (para. 6) and that the "Superior Court of the Bankruptcy Division of Hull does not have jurisdiction to hear this contractual claim against Azco" (para. 20). Moreover, much of its oral argument suggested that the dispute ought to be tried in the ordinary civil courts. In addition the appellant takes the position that Quebec is not the convenient forum to deal with this dispute, and that the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy lacks a sufficiently long arm to require Azco to take its witnesses east to litigate. The proper forum, it says, is British Columbia because there is no substantial connection at all between this case and the Province of Quebec.

19 It is convenient to address the legal issues raised by the appellant in the following order:

1. Was the bankruptcy petition properly filed in the Hull Division of the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy?
2. If so, did that court thereby acquire jurisdiction to deal with matters affecting the bankrupt estate arising in British Columbia?
3. If so, are contract claims nevertheless excluded from federal bankruptcy jurisdiction?
4. If not, does this particular contract claim come within the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction?
5. Even if fully clothed with jurisdiction to hear this case, should the bankruptcy court in Hull nevertheless have transferred the file to the court exercising counterpart bankruptcy jurisdiction in Vancouver?

1. Was the Bankruptcy Petition Properly Filed in the Hull Division of the Quebec Superior Court Sitting in Bankruptcy?

20 Parliament decided to utilize the superior courts of the provinces and territories to exercise bankruptcy jurisdiction (s. 183). It has long been established that, with respect to matters coming within the enumerated heads of s. 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, "the Parliament of Canada may give jurisdiction to provincial courts and regulate proceedings in such courts to the fullest extent": Attorney-General for Alberta v. Atlas Lumber Co., [1941] S.C.R. 87, per Rinfret J., at p. 100. The courts mentioned in s. 183 retain their character as superior courts of inherent jurisdiction, but will be referred to here, perhaps with some imprecision of language, as the bankruptcy courts.

21 A creditor who wishes to obtain a receiving order against a debtor is required to file a bankruptcy petition "in the court having jurisdiction in the judicial district of the locality of the debtor" (s. 43(5)).

22 The "locality of the debtor" is defined under s. 2(1) as the "principal place"

(a) where the debtor has carried on business during the year immediately preceding his bankruptcy,

(b) where the debtor has resided during the year immediately preceding his bankruptcy, or

(c) in cases not coming within paragraph (a) or (b), where the greater portion of the property of the debtor is situated;

23 Section 43(5) expresses a rule of jurisdiction that apportions among the courts named in s. 183(1) judicial power over the adjudication of bankruptcy petitions. The evidence was that Eagle carried on business in Quebec even though it had not obtained a licence to do so. The agreements between Azco and Eagle (and the promissory notes on which Azco's counterclaim is based) recite that Eagle has an office at 212 Labrosse Boulevard, Gatineau, Quebec. The same address appears on its corporate letterhead. Azco's Vice-President of Finance testified that his meetings with respect to the financing were held at that office. There is no suggestion that Eagle vacated the premises prior to its bankruptcy, or that it had any other offices in Canada.

24 It appears that Eagle's only connection to British Columbia is that the agreements mentioned above refer to the law of that province. It is clear that s. 43(5) would not have permitted the filing of the bankruptcy petition in British Columbia on such a ground. Nothing in the evidence, in my view, suggests that the bankruptcy court in Hull lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the petition and personal jurisdiction over Eagle when it made the receiving order on September 12, 1997.

2. Did the Bankruptcy Court Thereby Acquire Jurisdiction to Deal With Matters Affecting the Bankrupt Estate Arising in British Columbia?

25 The Act establishes a nationwide scheme for the adjudication of bankruptcy claims. As Rinfret J. pointed out in Boily v. McNulty, [1928] S.C.R. 182, at p. 186: [TRANSLATION] "This is a federal statute that concerns the whole country, and it considers territory from that point of view". The national implementation of bankruptcy decisions rendered by a court within a particular province is achieved through the cooperative network of superior courts of the provinces and territories under s. 188: In re Mount Royal Lumber & Flooring Co. (1926), 8 C.B.R. 240 (Que. C.A.), per Rivard J.A., at p. 246, [TRANSLATION] "The Bankruptcy Act is federal and the orders of the Quebec Superior Court sitting as a bankruptcy court under that Act are enforceable in Ontario". (Trustee of) v. Retail, Wholesale Canada, Local 1015 (1996), 39 C.B.R. (3d) 311 (N.S.C.A.), at p. 314, and Kansa General International Insurance Co. (Liquidation de), [1998] R.J.Q. 1380 (C.A.), at p. 1389.

26 The trustees will often (and perhaps increasingly) have to deal with debtors and creditors residing in different parts of the country. They cannot do that efficiently, to borrow the phrase of Idington J. in Stewart v. LePage (1916), 53 S.C.R. 337, at p. 345, "if everyone is to be at liberty to interfere and pursue his own notions of his rights of litigation". Stewart dealt with the winding up of a federally incorporated trust company in British Columbia. As a result of the winding up, a client in Prince Edward Island instituted a proceeding in the superior court of that province for a declaration that certain moneys held by the bankrupt trust company were held in trust and that the bankrupt trust company should be removed as trustee. This Court held that the dispute, despite its strong connection to Prince Edward Island, could not be brought before the court of that province without leave of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. Anglin J. commented at p. 349:

> No doubt some inconvenience will be involved in such exceptional cases as this where the winding-up of the company is conducted in a province of the Dominion far distant from that in which persons interested as creditors or claimants may reside. But Parliament probably thought it necessary in the interest of prudent and economical winding-up that the court charged with that duty should have control not only of the assets and property found in the hands or possession of the company in liquidation, but also of all litigation in which it might be involved. The great balance of convenience is probably in favour of such single control though it may work hardship in some few cases.

27 Stewart was, as stated, a winding-up case, but the legislative policy in favour of "single control" applies as well to bankruptcy. There is the same public interest in the expeditious, efficient and economical clean-up of the aftermath of a financial collapse. Section 188(1) ensures that orders made by a bankruptcy court sitting in one province can and will be enforced across the country.

28 I have concluded that the jurisdiction of the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy was properly invoked by the petitioning creditors in this case but counsel for the appellant company says that his client, with its office in British Columbia, is not within its reach. The argument, in part, is that whatever the power of Parliament to confer national jurisdiction on a provincial superior court, that court is nevertheless provincially constituted, and for service of process its long arm statute must be complied with. The factual record does not show precisely how service of the trustee's petition was effected on the appellant, but if the appellant had any concerns regarding the proprieties of service of the petition to initiate proceedings against it, such concerns were waived when Azco did not raise them in its motion brought in Hull. A good deal of time was occupied on the appeal with arguments about how a Quebec court could acquire in personam jurisdiction over a corporation resident in British Columbia, and whether the Quebec rules for service ex juris applied. The argument that the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy cannot exercise in personam jurisdiction over creditors in another province under the Act is rejected for the reasons of national jurisdiction already mentioned. Any objections regarding service of process are answered by the fact that Azco not only appeared in Quebec but invoked the jurisdiction of the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy to transfer the proceedings pursuant to s. 187(7) of the Act to the bankruptcy court sitting in Vancouver. Any remaining issue with respect to in personam jurisdiction was thereby waived.

29 Azco did not, of course, waive its objection to jurisdiction over the subject matter of this particular dispute. That was a major point in its motion. I turn now to that issue.

3. Are Contract Claims Nevertheless Excluded From Federal Bankruptcy Jurisdiction?

30 The appellant's motion, as stated, argued that the trustee's claims against it are "exclusively contractual in nature" (para. 6) and that "[t]he Superior Court of the Bankruptcy Division of Hull does not have jurisdiction to hear this contractual claim against Azco" (para. 20). The theory underlying these contentions seems to be that contract claims relate to "Property and Civil Rights" within the meaning of s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act, 1867 and on that account lie outside the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. At para. 42 of its factum, for example, the appellant argues:

> [TRANSLATION] Contrary to what the Court of Appeal affirms, the trustee's claim is therefore purely contractual in nature, under the civil law. It is not a remedy specifically provided for under the BIA such as the application to have preferential payments declared void (see sections 91 to 100 BIA). The mere fact that the plaintiff is a trustee does not alter the nature of the claim and does not turn it into a bankruptcy dispute.

31 Most bankruptcy issues, of course, present a property and civil rights aspect. It is true, however, that some of the decided cases which deny jurisdiction to the bankruptcy court do so on grounds that have a constitutional flavour, e.g., In re Morris Lofsky (1947), 28 C.B.R. 164 (Ont. C.A.), per Roach J.A., at p. 167; Sigurdson v. Fidelity Insurance Co. (1980), 35 C.B.R. (N.S.) 75 (B.C.C.A.), at p. 102; Re Holley (1986), 54 O.R. (2d) 225 (C.A.); In re Ireland (1962), 5 C.B.R. (N.S.) 91 (Que. Sup. Ct.), per Bernier J., at p. 94, and Falvo Enterprises Ltd. v. Price Waterhouse Ltd. (1981), 34 O.R. (2d) 336 (H.C.).

32 It is therefore necessary to come to an understanding of what is included in the subject matter of "Bankruptcy" within the meaning of s. 91(21) of the Constitution Act, 1867.

33 In In re The Moratorium Act (Sask.), [1956] S.C.R. 31, it was stated by Rand J., at p. 46, that:

> Bankruptcy is a well understood procedure by which an insolvent debtor's property is coercively brought under a judicial administration in the interests primarily of the creditors.

34 The core concept of coercive administration appeared early in our bankruptcy jurisprudence. In Union St. Jacques de Montreal v. Bélisle (1874), L.R. 6 P.C. 31, Lord Selborne, speaking at p. 36 of general laws governing bankruptcy and insolvency, said: "The words describe in their known legal sense provisions made by law for the administration of the estates of persons who may become bankrupt or insolvent, according to rules and definitions prescribed by law, including of course the conditions in which that law is to be brought into operation, the manner in which it is to be brought into operation, and the effect of its operation".

35 More helpful still was Lord Selborne L.C.'s description of bankruptcy in the context of the English Act in Ellis v. Silber (1872), L.R. 8 Ch. App. 83, at p. 86:

> That which is to be done in bankruptcy is the administration in bankruptcy. The debtor and the creditors, as the parties to the administration in bankruptcy, are subject to that jurisdiction. The trustees or assignees, as the persons intrusted with that administration, are subject to that jurisdiction. The assets which come to their hands and the mode of administering them are subject to that jurisdiction; and there may be, and I believe are, some special classes of transactions which, under special clauses of the Acts of Parliament, may be specially dealt with as regards third parties. But the general proposition, that whenever the assignees or trustees in bankruptcy or the trustees under such deeds as these have a demand at law or in equity as against a stranger to the bankruptcy, then that demand is to be prosecuted in the Court of Bankruptcy, appears to me to be a proposition entirely without the warrant of anything in the Acts of Parliament, and wholly unsupported by any trace or vestige whatever of authority. [Emphasis added.]

36 Despite the fact that England is a unitary state without the constitutional limitations imposed by our division of powers, the courts in Canada have generally hewn ever since 1874 to the basic dividing line between disputes related to the administration of the bankrupt estate and disputes with "strangers to the bankruptcy". The principle is that if the dispute relates to a matter that is outside even a generous interpretation of the administration of the bankruptcy, or if the remedy is not one contemplated by the Act, the trustee must seek relief in the ordinary civil courts. Thus in the Quebec case of Re Ireland, supra, the trustee brought proceedings to determine who had the right to proceeds of insurance policies taken out by the trustee on properties of the bankrupt estate. Bernier J. concluded that the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy lacked jurisdiction over the subject matter of the dispute. The controversy raised purely civil law questions and nothing in the Act conferred on the bankruptcy court a special jurisdiction to entertain these matters. Similar arguments prevailed in Cry-O-Beef Ltd./Cri-O-Bœuf Ltée (Trustees of) v. Caisse Populaire de Black-Lake (1987), 66 C.B.R. (N.S.) 19 (Que. C.A.); In re Martin (1953), 33 C.B.R. 163 (Ont. S.C.), at p. 169; In re Reynolds (1928), 10 C.B.R. 127 (Ont. S.C.), at p. 131; Re Galaxy Interiors Ltd. (1971), 15 C.B.R. (N.S.) 143 (Ont. S.C.); Mancini (Trustee of) v. Falconi (1987), 65 C.B.R. 246 (Ont. S.C.), and Re Morris Lofsky, supra, at p. 169.

37 The Quebec Court of Appeal has perhaps led the argument for a more expansive interpretation of what disputes properly come under the bankruptcy umbrella and can therefore properly be litigated in the bankruptcy court: Geoffrion v. Barnett, [1970] C.A. 273; Arctic Gardens inc. (Syndic de), [1990] R.J.Q. 6; and Excavations Sanoduc inc. v. Morency, [1991] R.D.J. 423. See also the dissenting judgment of LeBel J.A., as he then was, in Cry-O-Beef Ltd./Cri-O-Bœuf Ltée, supra, and In re Atlas Lumber Co. v. Grier and Sons Ltd. (1922), 3 C.B.R. 226 (Que. Sup. Ct.); but the push is not confined to Quebec: In re Maple Leaf Fruit Co. (1949), 30 C.B.R. 23 (N.S.S.C.); Re Westam Developments Ltd. (1967), 10 C.B.R. (N.S.) 61 (B.C.C.A.), at p. 65; Re M. B. Greer & Co. (1953), 33 C.B.R. 69 (Ont. S.C.), at p. 70; Re M.P. Industrial Mills Ltd. (1972), 17 C.B.R. 226 (Man. Q.B.).

38 It seems to me that the decided cases recognize that the word "Bankruptcy" in s. 91(21) of the Constitution Act, 1867 must be given a broad scope if it is to accomplish its purpose. Anything less would unnecessarily complicate and undermine the economical and expeditious winding up of the bankrupt's affairs. Creation of a national jurisdiction in bankruptcy would be of little utility if its exercise were continually frustrated by a pinched and narrow construction of the constitutional head of power. The broad scope of authority conferred on Parliament has been passed along to the bankruptcy court in s. 183(1) of the Act, which confers a correspondingly broad jurisdiction.

39 There are limits, of course. If the trustee's claim is in relation to a stranger to the bankruptcy, i.e. "persons or matters outside of [the] Act" (Re Reynolds, supra, at p. 129) or lacks the "complexion of a matter in bankruptcy" (Re Morris Lofsky, supra, at p. 169) it should be brought in the ordinary civil courts and not the bankruptcy court. However, claims for specific property may clearly be advanced in the bankruptcy courts (Re Galaxy Interiors, supra, and Sigurdson, supra), as can claims for relief specifically granted by the Act (Re Ireland, supra, and Re Atlas Lumber, supra). That said, it is sometimes difficult to discern the particular "golden thread" running through the cases. L. W. Houlden and G. B. Morawetz observe:

> There has been a great deal of litigation on this issue, and the cases are not always easy to reconcile. The difficulty flows from the division of constitutional powers in Canada, bankruptcy and insolvency being a federal power, and property and civil rights and the administration of justice being provincial powers.
> (Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada (3rd ed. (looseleaf)), at I§4)

40 The short answer to the "property and civil rights" argument, however, is that the appellant poses the wrong question. The issue is whether the contractual dispute between it and the respondent trustee properly relates to the bankruptcy. If so, the fact it also has a property and civil rights aspect does not in any way impair the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction.

4. Does This Particular Contract Claim Come Within the Bankruptcy Court's Jurisdiction?

41 In this case, the respondent trustee, with the permission of the inspectors, is instituting a "legal proceeding" in the bankruptcy court under s. 30(1)(d) "relating to the property of the bankrupt". In addition to the Azco and Sanou shares, the trustee says the definition of "property" in s. 2 includes "things in action" which, it is argued, includes the trustee's monetary claims.

42 As to the shares and warrants, the trustee alleges in para. 108 of its petition that Azco is "acknowledged to be the nominal owner of 100% of Sanou Mining Corporation" which owns West African Gold & Exploration S.A., which in turn runs the mining concessions in Mali. The allegation, in effect, is that Azco holds the Sanou shares and warrants that rightfully belong to the bankrupt estate and is in a position to transfer them to the trustee if required to do so by the bankruptcy court.

43 As discussed above, it cannot plausibly be argued that the bankruptcy court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute because it is a contract case. The objection, more narrowly defined, is whether the bankruptcy court lacks jurisdiction because (i) the appellant is properly considered a "stranger to the bankruptcy", or (ii) the bankruptcy court cannot award the remedy which the trustee seeks.

(i) Is the Appellant a "Stranger to the Bankruptcy"?

44 If a potential defendant is a "stranger" to the bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court may have no subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute (because it is not part of the bankruptcy) even though the "stranger" resides within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

45 At the time of the trustee's petition, the appellant had filed no proof of claim in the bankruptcy. It seems to have adopted a "come and get me approach", that is to say, it would file a claim only if claimed against by the trustee. Eventually the trustee did claim against it by way of the January 18, 1999 petition and the appellant did give notice of its counterclaim in its February 24, 1999 motion, including the fact it held promissory notes for US$3,844,858 signed by the bankrupt, payable on demand, constituting potential obligations now inherited by the trustee.

46 In a decision released concurrently, Holt Cargo Systems Inc. v. ABC Containerline N.V. (Trustees of), [2001] 3 S.C.R. 907, 2001 SCC 90, we uphold a decision of the Federal Court of Canada to dispose of the claims of maritime lienholders against a ship whose owner was adjudged bankrupt after the ship was arrested but before the in rem action had proceeded to judgment. We concluded that the Federal Court did not lose subject matter jurisdiction by virtue of the subsequent bankruptcy of the shipowner. We held that the Federal Court could have stayed its proceedings in deference to the bankruptcy court but was not, in the circumstances, obliged to do so.

47 The issue here is somewhat different. The appellant is resisting a claim by the trustee in bankruptcy and threatening to bring a counterclaim against the bankrupt estate based on the same set of commercial agreements. The appellant sought only to have the proceedings transferred to a different division of the bankruptcy court within Canada.

48 In Re Morris Lofsky, supra, the Ontario Court of Appeal dealt with a case where the trustee sought a declaration that the transfer of an automobile from the bankrupt to his wife was fraudulent and void as against the trustee and that it formed part of the property of the bankrupt. The wife resisted the claim on the ground that the automobile never belonged to the bankrupt (even though it was registered in his name). Roach J.A., at p. 169, found the wife was a stranger to the bankruptcy:

> In my opinion, it must be concluded that the issue between the trustee and the appellant is not a matter in bankruptcy and that it is purely a matter of property and civil rights. It has none of the elements that would bring it within the former. No question as between debtor and creditor here arises in the distribution of a bankrupt estate. The appellant does not claim title to the automobile through the bankrupt. Indeed she says that the bankrupt never had title and that she was always the owner. I cannot think of any aspect of the issue that gives it the complexion of a matter in bankruptcy unless perhaps this, that the bankrupt pending the bankruptcy caused the new motor vehicle permit to be issued in her name. That does not make the issue one in bankruptcy when the sole question is who, as between the bankrupt and the appellant, was always the true owner.

See also Re Reynolds, supra, at p. 131.

49 On the record before us, however, the appellant takes the position that it is the largest creditor of the bankrupt estate and that it will "with certainty" counterclaim in answer to the trustee's petition. The trustee, for its part, regards the appellant as the biggest debtor of the bankrupt estate. Far from being a "stranger" to the bankruptcy, Azco is potentially the most significant player in the role of either creditor or debtor, as the case may be.

(ii) Does the Bankruptcy Court Have Jurisdiction to Grant the Remedy Sought by the Trustee?

50 It is well established that the bankruptcy court does not have the general jurisdiction of a civil court to award damages in breach of contract cases. It is restricted to the jurisdiction and remedies contemplated by the Act. In Sigurdson, supra, the trustee in bankruptcy sued two former directors of the bankrupt for fraud in the Supreme Court of British Columbia. During the course of its reasons on another point, the Court of Appeal remarked that if the trustee had sued in the bankruptcy court "he would have been in the wrong court" as "[h]e must use the ordinary civil courts to sue for damages" (p. 102). See also Re Ireland, supra.

51 In my view, however, the trustee's claim here is not properly characterized as a simple claim in damages, even though the trustee has attempted to place a monetary value on the shares which it says belong to the bankrupt estate but which the appellant, it says, wrongfully withholds. I do not think the bankruptcy court is precluded from considering an order that substitutes money for the claimed property in circumstances where the claimed property cannot be delivered up. The bulk of the trustee's claim, it will be recalled, is for 125,000 shares of Azco itself, plus 3.5 million shares of Sanou and 4 million warrants of Sanou, which the trustee says is wholly controlled by the appellant. The trustee's petition states in para. 65:

> The Debtor/Company is also entitled to receive 3,500,000 shares of Sanou and 4,000,000 warrants of said Sanou, as per the terms of the Agreement, the whole as it has been acknowledged by the Respondent itself in their annual report to United States Securities and Exchange commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1997, filed as Exhibit R-24;

52 As to the Azco shares, the trustee states in para. 101 of its petition that it claims "125,000 shares of Azco Mining Corporation which had a value at 2.70$ Cdn dollars per share".

53 Equally significantly, the appellant acknowledges that the gist of the action against it is the delivery up of the shares. It says at para. 25 of its factum:

> [TRANSLATION] It seems that the trustee's claim is a real action rather than a personal one since the trustee is primarily seeking the rights to 125,000 shares of Azco and 3,500,000 shares and 4,000,000 warrants of Sanou (see in particular paragraphs 95, 98, 99 and 102 of the trustee's petition).

54 The parties therefore seem to agree, despite some obfuscating language in the trustee's petition, that the bulk of the trustee's claim is properly characterized as a claim to specific property of the bankrupt which is being wrongfully withheld by the appellant. As such, the trustee is entitled to claim the shares and warrants (s. 17(1)) and, with the permission of the inspectors (which it obtained) to bring a legal proceeding in relation thereto in the bankruptcy court (s. 30(1)(d)). The trustee, relying on these statutory provisions and remedies, clearly brings its claim within the Act. See Re Galaxy Interiors, supra, per Houlden J., at p. 144; Mancini, supra, per Catzman J., at pp. 250-51; Re Atlas Lumber, supra, per Rinfret J., at p. 234.

55 It will be for the bankruptcy court in Hull to scrutinize the petition when the facts are known and the parties' positions on the issues are clarified to determine whether any particular element of the trustee's multiple claims falls outside its jurisdiction. For present purposes, it is sufficient to hold that the bulk of the trustee's claim is cognizable in bankruptcy for the reasons previously discussed. On the present state of the record (this being a preliminary motion), we can go no further.

5. Even if Fully Clothed with Jurisdiction to Hear This Case, Should the Bankruptcy Court in Hull Nevertheless Have Transferred the File to the Court Exercising Counterpart Bankruptcy Jurisdiction in Vancouver?

56 If persuaded that the affairs of the bankrupt could be (i) more economically administered in another bankruptcy district or division or (ii) for "other sufficient cause", the bankruptcy court is authorized to transfer "any proceedings" pending before it to the other bankruptcy district or division (s. 187(7)).

57 Section 187(7) provides a method for transferring proceedings between the various bankruptcy courts in Canada. As discussed below, it raises different issues than the specific international situation dealt with in Holt Cargo Systems, supra, released concurrently.

58 The motions judge exercised his discretion against making a transfer order in this case. The appellant must therefore show an error of law or principle or failure to take into consideration a major element in the determination of the case: Harelkin v. University of Regina, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 561, at p. 588. The scope of this discretion in bankruptcy cases was recognized in Re Lions D'Or Ltée (1965), 8 C.B.R. (N.S.) 171 (Que. Sup. Ct.), and Re M. Pollack Ltée (1979), 30 C.B.R. (N.S.) 256 (Que. Sup. Ct.).

59 The appellant says the courts below erred in both law and principle. They erred in law, it argues, because art. 3148 of the Civil Code of Québec required the bankruptcy court to decline jurisdiction in light of the "choice of forum" clauses, and they erred in principle because there is no substantial connection between the dispute and the Province of Quebec. In this regard, it relies on Bourque Consumer Electronics Inc. (Syndic de), J.E. 91-1040 (Sup. Ct.), and Amchem Products Inc. v. British Columbia (Workers' Compensation Board), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 897.

(i) Choice of Forum Clause

60 The appellant's point is that the applicable rules are found in the Civil Code of Québec, and in particular art. 3148 which provides in part that:

> . . . a Québec authority has no jurisdiction where the parties, by agreement, have chosen to submit all existing or future disputes between themselves relating to a specified legal relationship to a foreign authority or to an arbitrator, unless the defendant submits to the jurisdiction of the Québec authority.

61 The choice of forum objection fails, with respect, both on the facts and on the law. In terms of facts, the only relevant agreements are those to which Eagle was a party. Clause 28 in the June 7, 1996 financing agreement and clause 20 of the management services agreement are both no more than choice of law provisions. The Quebec courts are perfectly able to apply the law of British Columbia. The import of clause 17 of the West African Gold& Exploration S.A. debenture of August 9, 1996 is more obscure, but as Azco is not a party to the debenture and therefore cannot be sued upon it, its terms are irrelevant.

62 As to the legal issue, the question is whether arts. 3148 or 3135 of the Civil Code of Québec have any application to this proceeding at all. These provisions will only apply in bankruptcy court "[i]n cases not provided for in the Act or these Rules" (Bankruptcy and Insolvency General Rules, s. 3). The fact is that s. 187(7) specifically provides that a transfer will be ordered only where there is satisfactory proof that a proceeding will be "more economically administered" in another division or district, which the appellant did not allege, or "for other sufficient cause". The appellant argues that such general words need to be "supplemented" by the more specific provisions of the Civil Code of Québec. But this is incorrect. Resort is to be had to the provincial rules only "[i]n cases not provided for". Here, provision has been made. The door is therefore not open to these particular provisions of the Civil Code of Québec. This interpretation of s. 3 is not only inevitable, it is desirable. The Civil Code of Québec applies across a vast range of subjects. When s. 187(7) speaks of "sufficient cause", it does so in the specific context of bankruptcy.

63 Leaving aside, then, the inapplicable directives of the Civil Code of Québec, the question is whether a choice of forum clause would amount to "sufficient cause" for the purpose of s. 187(7) to the extent that it would be an error of law for the motions judge to have declined to give it effect in the circumstances of this case. In my view a choice of forum clause (where there really is one) ought to be taken into careful consideration by a motions judge but it is not binding: J.-G. Castel, Canadian Conflict of Laws (4th ed. 1997), at pp. 262-63. See Sarabia v. "Oceanic Mindoro" (The) (1996), 26 B.C.L.R. (3d) 143 (C.A.), per Huddart J.A., at p. 153 (leave to appeal refused, [1997] 2 S.C.R. xiv); Volkswagen Canada Inc. v. Auto Haus Frohlich Ltd., [1986] 1 W.W.R. 380 (Alta. C.A.), per Kerans J.A., at p. 381; Ash v. Lloyd's Corp. (1991), 6 O.R. (3d) 235 (Gen. Div.), aff'd (1992), 9 O.R. (3d) 755 (C.A.) (leave to appeal refused, [1992] 3 S.C.R. v); Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Co. v. Pre Print Inc. (1996), 131 D.L.R. (4th) 471 (N.S.C.A.).

(ii) Public Policy Considerations

64 It could be argued that the public policy favouring a "single control" of bankruptcy proceedings and opposition to their fragmentation demands that a choice of forum clause receive lesser effect in bankruptcy than in the context of ordinary commercial litigation: Industrial Packaging Products Co. v. Fort Pitt Packaging International, Inc., 161 A.2d 19 (Pa. 1960); In re Treco, 239 B.R. 36 (S.D.N.Y. 1999), aff'd 240 F.3d 148 (2d Cir. 2001).

65 In Re Moratorium Act, supra, Rand J. discussed important "public policy" objectives of bankruptcy legislation, at p. 46:

> To this proceeding not only a personal stigma may attach but restrictions on freedom in future business activity may result. The relief to the debtor consists in the cancellation of debts which, otherwise, might effectually prevent him from rehabilitating himself economically and socially.

See also Industrial Acceptance Corp. v. Lalonde, [1952] 2 S.C.R. 109, at p. 120.

66 In his treatise on bankruptcy, Professor Albert Bohémier states on the purpose of the Act:

> [TRANSLATION] The purpose of the Bankruptcy Act is to protect the debtor, his or her creditors and the public interest. These objectives have always been present but to varying degrees. It can be stated with certainty that the more a society promotes credit and therefore debt, the more the legislation will tend to give priority to alleviating the lot of honest and hapless debtors. A scheme based on debt must include a > self-regulating system so that defaulting debtors may eventually be reintegrated into the system and become productive elements once again.

> (Faillite et insolvabilité (1992), vol. 1, at p. 48)

67 The implementation of these public policies might be expected to take priority over private "choice of forum" agreements where the two come into conflict, as indeed Robert J.A. concluded in the Quebec Court of Appeal. A similar position is expressed in I. F. Fletcher, Insolvency in Private International Law (1999), at p. 47, fn. 73:

> [P]rivate contractual arrangements between parties cannot prevail over the exercise of bankruptcy jurisdiction, which belongs to the realm of public policy, serving a wider spread of interests including, ultimately, those of society at large.

In the United States, however, there is a competing body of judicial opinion that a trustee in bankruptcy who sues on an agreement containing a forum selection clause should, as a general rule, be bound by that clause to the same extent as the parties thereto: see Coastal Steel Corp. v. Tilghman Wheelabrator Ltd., 709 F.2d 190 (3d Cir. 1983); In re Diaz Contracting, Inc., 817 F.2d 1047 (3d Cir. 1987), and Hays and Co. v. Merrill Lynch, 885 F.2d 1149 (3d Cir. 1989).

68 In my view, for the reasons previously mentioned, the choice of forum clause would be a significant factor under s. 187(7) but not, in the context of the public policies expressed in the Act, a controlling factor.

69 In light of my conclusion that the appellant does not have the benefit of a "choice of forum" clause, I need not undertake the exercise of considering whether in this case there is any conflict between private choice and public interest, and if so, how "choice of forum" considerations should be balanced in this case against Amchem, supra, and public interest factors within the framework of s. 187(7) of the Act.

70 The bottom line is that the appellant is unable to show that the motions judge committed any error of law in declining to transfer the proceeding to Vancouver.

(iii) Error of Principle

71 The appellant, relying on Amchem, supra, argues that this dispute has its most real and substantial connection to British Columbia, and that the motions judge erred in principle in ignoring relevant factors in coming to the opposite conclusion.

72 Again, with respect, I do not think this position is sustainable on the law or the facts.

73 In the first place, as stated, the Amchem approach has to be applied here with full regard to the context of Canadian bankruptcy legislation. This appeal involves the allocation of a particular bankruptcy matter within a single national bankruptcy scheme created by the Act. As shown in Holt Cargo Systems, supra, consideration of the allocation of a matter having different aspects (e.g. maritime law and bankruptcy law), as between Canadian courts and foreign courts operating under quite different legislative or other schemes, may raise different problems.

74 Secondly, Amchem and its progeny involved private litigation. Here, as explained in Holt Cargo Systems, supra, there is the important public interest aspect mentioned above. The Court looks not only at the Amchem factors, but must strive to give effect to Parliament's intent to create an economical and efficient national system for the administration of bankrupt estates, as evidenced in the Act.

75 It is in the public interest to facilitate the speedy resolution of the fallout from a financial collapse. This, as noted in Holt Cargo Systems was not present in the Amchem fact situation. In fact, there are stronger policy considerations here than in Holt Cargo Systems. That case dealt with a choice between a maritime law action in Halifax for the determination of claims of secured creditors that had already proceeded to default judgment and, as an alternative, the exercise of jurisdiction by the Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy acting at the behest of the bankruptcy court in Belgium in a matter that was still in its early stages of organization. In those circumstances the Federal Court of Canada declined to stay the maritime law action, and its exercise of discretion was upheld by the Federal Court of Appeal and by this Court.

76 In the present case, we are confronted with a federal statute that prima facie establishes one command centre or "single control" (Stewart, supra, at p. 349) for all proceedings related to the bankruptcy (s. 183(1)). Single control is not necessarily inconsistent with transferring particular disputes elsewhere, but a creditor (or debtor) who wishes to fragment the proceedings, and who cannot claim to be a "stranger to the bankruptcy", has the burden of demonstrating "sufficient cause" to send the trustee scurrying to multiple jurisdictions. Parliament was of the view that a substantial connection sufficient to ground bankruptcy proceedings in a particular district or division is provided by proof of facts within the statutory definition of "locality of a debtor" in s. 2(1). The trustee in that locality is mandated to "recuperate" the assets, and related proceedings are to be controlled by the bankruptcy court of that jurisdiction. The Act is concerned with the economy of winding up the bankrupt estate, even at the price of inflicting additional cost on its creditors and debtors.

77 The "balancing test" advocated by the appellant based on the Amchem factors and general principles of private international law fails to take these important public policies into account. The Quebec Superior Court sitting in Bankruptcy is, in a very real sense, sitting as a national court.

78 Finally, in point of fact, even if the principles of private international law did apply without modification for the bankruptcy context, it is difficult to discern any connection at all between the dispute and Vancouver except that Eagle signed some agreements with a choice of law clause directed to the laws of that jurisdiction. The links between the appellant and Vancouver are not particularly strong. It has, amongst other offices, a Vancouver address, but the bulk of the activities at issue here occurred outside British Columbia. Its key employee, Mr. Ryan Modesto, resides in the United States. The management services agreement of June 12, 1996 recites that Azco's corporate office is in Arizona. Azco's press release of September 17, 1996, announcing this project to the world, was issued in Arizona. Moreover there is no juridical advantage to the appellant in proceeding under the same bankruptcy regime in Vancouver as in Hull. In either case, the law of British Columbia may be applied. Vancouver may be marginally more convenient for the appellant and some of its witnesses, but that is all that can be said for it. The trustee, for its part, complains that if the appeal succeeds, it would, on the same reasoning, be required to bring other actions (unrelated to Azco) in Chicoutimi, Toronto, Halifax, Winnipeg, Charlottetown and Calgary. The trial judge has much factual support for his decision to retain the case in Hull.

79 I do not wish to be taken, however, as squeezing the life out of s. 187(7). While the facts in this case do not show "sufficient cause" to make the transfer to British Columbia, other cases may arise of course where the transfer is justifiable. Even in Stewart, supra, which established the "single control" paradigm, Anglin J. went out of his way to say that the case probably should have been heard in P.E.I. The claimants' problem in that case is that they failed to seek leave from the court in British Columbia before launching their case in P.E.I. Just before the "single control" passage previously cited, Anglin J. says (at p. 349):

> I decline to assume that upon its being shewn to the Supreme Court of British Columbia that the questions as to the existence of the trust alleged by the plaintiffs and the earmarking of certain property held by the liquidator as trust assets can be best inquired into in Prince Edward Island -- as from what is now before us would seem to be the case -- an order of transfer will not be made, preceded or accompanied by the necessary leave under section 22.

And Brodeur J. said this (at p. 352):

> In this case it looks to me as if the ends of justice would be better served by having the question raised in this proceeding disposed of by the courts of Prince Edward Island. However, it was the duty of the respondents to have the leave of the court of British Columbia which they did not secure.

80 The point is that it was up to Azco to demonstrate "sufficient cause" on the facts of this case, and it failed to do so.

V. Conclusion

81 I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Court of Appeal for British Columbia

LANGRET INVESTMENTS S.A. and THE BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA
v.
JOHN JOSEPH McDONNELL

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF MADAM JUSTICE ROWLES:

1 This is an appeal from an order dated 11 April 1995, dismissing an application to amend a Petition for a Receiving Order, brought under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (the "BIA").

2 The application to amend, which was brought before the Petition was set for hearing, sought to add two further allegations regarding the "locality of a debtor", as that term is defined in s. 2 of the BIA.

3 The central issue is whether, by reason of Rule 4 of the Bankruptcy Rules, the practice of the court in civil actions applies to the Appellants' motion to amend their Petition.

Background

4 The Appellants are the Bank of Nova Scotia (the "Bank") and Langret Investments S.A. ("Langret"). The Bank obtained a judgment against the Respondent, John Joseph McDonnell ("McDonnell"), for $83,727.98 on 31 July 1992. On 16 May 1994, Langret obtained a judgment against McDonnell and Irefra Investments Ltd. ("Irefra") for $2,390,409.67. The judgments have not been paid.

5 A petition was filed by the Appellants on 28 October 1994, seeking an order that McDonnell and Irefra be adjudged bankrupt and that a receiving order be made in respect of their property.

6 Section 43 of the BIA allows a creditor to bring a petition for a receiving order against the property of a debtor:

43. (1) Subject to this section, one or more creditors may file in court a petition for a receiving order against a debtor if, and if it is alleged in the petition that,

(a)the debt or debts owing to the petitioning creditor or creditors amount to one thousand dollars; and

(b)the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy within six months next preceding the filing of the petition.

(3) The petition shall be verified by affidavit of the petitioner or by someone duly authorized on his behalf having personal knowledge of the facts alleged in the petition.

(5) The petition shall be filed in the court having jurisdiction in the judicial district of the locality of the debtor.

Digitized by Google

(6) At the hearing of the petition, the court shall require proof of the facts alleged in the petition and of the service of the petition, and, if satisfied with the proof, may make a receiving order.

(7) Where the court is not satisfied with the proof of the facts alleged in the petition or of the service of the petition, or is satisfied by the debtor that he is able to pay his debts, or that for other sufficient cause no order ought to be made, it shall dismiss the petition.

(10) Where the debtor appears at the hearing of the petition and denies the truth of the facts alleged in the petition, the court may, instead of dismissing the petition, stay all proceedings on the petition on such terms as it may see fit to impose on the petitioner as to costs or on the debtor to prevent alienation of his property and for such time as may be required for trial of the issue relating to the disputed facts.

7 By s. 2 of the BIA, "locality of a debtor" means the principal place:

(a) where the debtor has carried on business during the year immediately preceding his bankruptcy,

(b) where the debtor has resided during the year immediately preceding his bankruptcy, or

(c) in cases not coming within paragraph (a) or (b), where the greater portion of the property of the debtor is situated.

8 Paragraph 1 of the Petition alleged:

1. That the said John Joseph McDonnell has principally resided at 1677 Somerset Crescent, Vancouver, British Columbia, V6M 1S3, in the year immediately preceding the filing of the Petition and is within the jurisdiction of this Court."

9 The Respondent filed a Notice of Dispute on 12 December 1994, which reads, in part:

TAKE NOTICE that John Joseph McDonnell ("McDonnell") intends to dispute the Petition for a Receiving Order herein, on the following grounds:

1. With respect to paragraph 1 of the Petition, McDonnell does not principally reside in Vancouver, British Columbia. McDonnell's family residence is Wellfield House, Oughterard, County Galway, Ireland. McDonnell holds an Irish passport.

10 The Appellants filed an application on 3 March 1995, seeking to amend the Petition to add the following allegations after the first paragraph:

2. That the Judicial District of Vancouver is the principal place in which [McDonnell] has carried on business during the year immediately preceding his bankruptcy.
3. In the alternative, that the Judicial District of Vancouver is the principal place where the greater part of the property of [McDonnell] is situated.

11 Before the chambers judge the Appellants argued that their application to amend the Petition to add further allegations as to the locality of the debtor was not a matter provided for in the BIA or the Bankruptcy Rules and therefore, by reason of Rule 4, the practice of the court in civil actions must be applied.

12 Rule 4 provides:

4. The practice of the court in civil actions or matters, including the practice in chambers, shall, in cases not provided for by the Act or these Rules, and so far as it is applicable and not inconsistent with the Act or these Rules, apply to all proceedings under the Act or these Rules.

13 The Respondent argued that the penal nature of the BIA requires that creditors who seek to take advantage of the legislation must strictly comply with it and consequently matters of substance in a bankruptcy petition cannot be amended.

14 The learned chambers judge decided that the question of whether the amendments should be allowed fell "to be determined on the basis of the jurisprudence relating to bankruptcy and the statutory provisions of the Act and Rules". The chambers judge concluded that in bankruptcy proceedings, a strict test should be applied to determine if an amendment should be allowed because of the penal nature of the BIA, and held that an amendment should not be allowed if it relates to substance rather than form, or if it potentially prejudices the respondent.

Grounds of Appeal

15 The grounds of appeal are these:

1. The Learned Chambers Judge erred in refusing to allow the amendments sought by the Appellants on the grounds that the Bankruptcy & Insolvency Act is penal in nature.
2. The Learned Chambers Judge erred in refusing to allow the said amendments on the grounds that s. 187(9) of the Bankruptcy & Insolvency Act does not allow substantive amendments, and the amendments sought by the Appellants are substantive in nature.

Digitized by Google

3. The Learned Chambers Judge erred in refusing to allow the said amendments on the grounds that they would potentially prejudice the Respondent.

Ground One

16 On the first ground, the Appellants argue that the procedural strictness that once applied to bankruptcy proceedings because of their penal nature is now outdated, and referred to the decision of this Court in Markovina v. Coopers & Lybrand Ltd. 1991 CanLII 2027 (BC CA), (1991), 57 B.C.L.R. (2d) 192 (C.A.).

17 In that case, which appears not to have been drawn to the attention of the chambers judge, the debtor claimed that he was entitled, as of right, to succeed in his application to set aside a receiving order made under the BIA because of two admitted defects in the material that supported the grant of the order. One of the defects was the absence of part of the date in the jurat of the affidavit of service. The chambers judge refused to accede to the debtor's argument that he was entitled to have the receiving order set aside as of right and instead directed that an inquiry be held. The debtor's appeal was unsuccessful.

18 As to the debtor's submissions regarding the defect in the affidavit of service entitling him to have the order set aside as of right, Hutcheon J.A. said at pp. 196-197:

> A number of cases were relied upon by Mr. Prince for the proposition that a bankruptcy proceeding is in the nature of a criminal matter and accordingly there must be strict compliance. For example, in Ex parte Coates; Re. Skeleton (1877), 5 Ch.D. 979 (C.A.), Chief Justice Bacon stated at p. 980:
> > It is the very gist and essence of the Bankruptcy Act that creditors who claim the benefit of these severe and almost criminal provisions of the law cannot have that benefit unless they strictly comply with the terms of the Act.
> Much has changed in the practice of criminal law since 1877 when the slightest defect made an indictment a nullity. The words of Mr. Justice Dickson in R. v. Sault Ste. Marie (City), 1978 CanLII 11 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299 at 1307 ... are most apt:
> > That age has passed. Parliament has made it abundantly clear in those sections of the Criminal Code having to do with the form of indictments and informations that the punctilio of an earlier age is no longer to bind us. We must look for substance and not petty formalities.
> If that is so in criminal matters I would not expect that to be less so in "almost criminal" matters....

19 The present provisions of the Criminal Code amply demonstrate that a strict approach to amendments is no longer required in criminal proceedings. Section 601 of the Criminal Code confers a broad power to amend an indictment, including one which is defective in substance. When such broad powers of amendment are permitted in true criminal matters, I would not expect the bankruptcy statute, although still considered "penal in nature", to require a more restrictive approach to amendments than the Criminal Code.

20 In light of the observations made by Hutcheon J.A. in Markovina, supra, with which I respectfully agree, I have concluded that the penal nature of the bankruptcy legislation is not determinative of whether amendments to a petition for a receiving order may be granted.

21 I would add that there are cases which lend direct support to the proposition that a bankruptcy petition may be amended on a substantive matter. In Re Barton Realty Company Limited (1963), 5 C.B.R. (N.S.) 109 (Ont. S.C.), the petitioner was allowed to amend a petition to add additional alleged acts of bankruptcy. In that case it appears that the amendments were sought before the petition was heard.

22 In Re F.G. Wright& Co. (1937), 19 C.B.R. 49 (Man. K.B.), a debtor company brought a motion to set aside a receiving order made by the Registrar. The alleged act of bankruptcy was that the debtor company exhibited to a meeting of its creditors a statement which showed that it was insolvent. On appeal from the Registrar's order, Taylor J. held that the statement, which had not been submitted to or approved by the company, should not have been used as a foundation for the petition. There was also evidence given of another act of bankruptcy but it had not been alleged in the petition. The order made by the Registrar was set aside but leave was given to the creditor, upon payment of the costs, to amend his petition and to proceed again through the regular channels before the Registrar.

Ground Two

23 On the second ground, the Appellants submit that the chambers judge erred in refusing to allow the amendments sought on the ground that s. 187(9) of the BIA does not allow substantive amendments.

24 Section 187(9) of the BIA provides:

> 187(9) No proceeding in bankruptcy shall be invalidated by any formal defect or by any irregularity, unless the court before which an objection is made to the proceeding is of opinion that substantial injustice has been caused by the defect or irregularity and that the injustice cannot be remedied by any order of that court.

25 In regard to s. 187(9) the chambers judge held:

Digitized by Google

Section 187(9) of the Act ... permits the Court to excuse "formal defects" and "irregularities" but it does not empower the Court to grant relief where a matter of substance is involved: Re Roosenboom (1973), 18 C.B.R. (N.S.) 180 at 181 (Ont. S.C.). The distinction between allegations of substance, i.e., those necessary to establish the bankruptcy, and those which are a matter of form, must be decided on the circumstances arising in each case: Re Little (1924), 5 C.B.R. 244 at 247 (Ont.S.C.).

26 Counsel were in agreement that proof of the "locality of the debtor" is fundamental to the jurisdiction of the court to grant a receiving order but they differed on whether the court was able to allow amendments to a petition going to the question of jurisdiction.

27 The Respondent's position is that s. 187(9) empowers the court to make amendments to a bankruptcy petition, but only to the extent of curing formal defects and irregularities where matters of substance are not involved. The arguments put forward to support that position largely mirror the Respondent's submissions on the first ground that the penal nature of the BIA would exclude amendments of a substantive nature.

28 The Appellants' contend that the chambers judge used s. 187(9) to defeat the motion to amend, whereas the section was intended to cure problems, not defeat them. While Appellants' counsel doubted that s. 187(9) of the BIA enables the court to make amendments, he argued that if it did, the section would be inapplicable in any event where the application is brought to amend a petition before the petition is heard. In support of that submission, counsel pointed out that s. 187(9) provides that "[n]o proceeding in bankruptcy shall be invalidated by any formal defect or by any irregularity". There is no possibility, he argued, that a "proceeding in bankruptcy" would be "invalidated" at an application to amend a bankruptcy petition.

29 I agree that there is nothing in the wording of s. 187(9) to suggest that it would apply to an application to amend a petition brought before the petition is heard.

Rule 4 of the Bankruptcy Rules

30 The Appellants' main argument is that Rule 4 of the Bankruptcy Rules, which directs the court to follow the provincial civil practice in certain circumstances, governs the practice to be followed on the Appellants' application to amend their Petition.

31 Under Rule 4, the court is required to follow the civil practice of the court in cases not provided for under the BIA or the Bankruptcy Rules where there is an applicable practice of the court in civil matters, including the practice in chambers, and the applicable civil practice is not inconsistent with the BIA or the Bankruptcy Rules.

32 The BIA and Bankruptcy Rules are silent on the procedure to be followed if an amendment to a petition is sought prior to the hearing of the petition. I have already concluded that s. 187(9) is inapplicable and the same holds true for Rule 110, as Respondent's counsel conceded.

33 Rule 4 does not require that the applicable civil practice be consistent with the BIA or the Bankruptcy Rules; it requires that the civil practice be "not inconsistent" with the bankruptcy legislation. In other words, a civil practice need not further or promote the objectives of the bankruptcy legislation to apply and the civil practice will apply provided it does not undermine those objectives.

34 Rule 24(1) of the Rules of Court in British Columbia allows a party to amend an originating process or pleading. Amendments are allowed unless prejudice can be demonstrated by the opposite party or the amendment will be useless. The rationale for allowing amendments is to enable the real issues to be determined. The practice followed in civil matters when amendments are sought fulfils the fundamental objective of the civil rules which is to ensure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every proceeding on the merits. See McLachlin and Taylor, British Columbia Practice (2nd Ed.) pp. 24-1 to 24-2-10, and the decision of this Court in Chavez v. Sundance Cruises Corp. (1993), 15 C.P.C. (3d) 305, 309-10.

35 The principles embodied in the civil practice of the court which allows for amendments of originating process and pleadings are "not inconsistent" with the objectives of the bankruptcy legislation and, in my view, that is so regardless of the fact that the legislation is viewed as penal in nature.

36 Two provisions of the bankruptcy legislation were referred to in argument and require comment.

37 Rule 67(3) of the Bankruptcy Rules provides:

Rule 67(3) Every petition shall be clearly written and, after a petition has been issued by the court, no alteration, interlineation or erasure shall be made therein without leave of the court.

To the extent that Rule 24 of the Rules of Court permits amendments without leave of the court, the Rule would be inapplicable because of Rule 67(3) of the Bankruptcy Rules.

38 Section 43(3) of the BIA provides that the petition shall be verified by affidavit of the petitioner or someone duly authorized on his behalf having personal knowledge of the facts alleged in the petition. If an application to amend a petition is brought, the allegations sought to be added would have to be verified by affidavit in order to comply with the requirement of s. 43(3) of the BIA. The fact that the BIA has such a requirement does not make the civil practice inapplicable.

39 Goertz (Trustee of) v. Goertz, 1994 CanLII 4872 (SK QB), [1994] 8 W.W.R. 250, 26 C.B.R. (3d) 222 (Sask. Q.B.), rev'd. in part on other grounds (11 Dec. 1995), 1911 (Sask. C.A.), supports the conclusion that when applications to amend a petition for a receiving order are not dealt with in the bankruptcy legislation or its rules, the civil practice of the court applies, as provided in Rule 4.

Prejudice to the Respondent

40 The third ground of appeal concerns the question of prejudice to the Respondent if the amendments to the Petition were allowed. The Appellants contend that the chambers judge erred in refusing to allow the amendments on the ground that the amendments would "potentially" prejudice the Respondent. In her reasons, the chambers judge observed that the proposed amendments "potentially prejudice" McDonnell and that prejudice "could arise" if the application were allowed.

41 The Appellants' argument on this ground follows, in part, from their earlier submissions, which I have accepted, that the penal nature of the bankruptcy legislation does not exclude amendments being made, even on matters of substance, before the petition is set for hearing.

42 The Appellants argue that under the civil practice of the court, "potential" prejudice will not suffice to defeat a motion to amend. In the Appellants' submission, unless a respondent to an application to amend pleadings can demonstrate that the amendment would give rise to prejudice that cannot be compensated by costs, an amendment will not be refused.

43 I agree with Appellants' counsel that to refuse an amendment because it is "potentially" prejudicial is unduly onerous and does not accord with the civil practice. If "potential prejudice" were the test applied on an application to amend an originating process or pleadings, an application could be defeated on technical grounds without regard to the effect it might have on the ultimate determination of the proceedings. Almost any amendment can be regarded as being "potentially" prejudicial to a respondent.

44 The civil practice was recently followed in bankruptcy proceedings when an amendment was sought in Re RCL Operators Ltd. reflex, (1993), 18 C.B.R. (3d) 222, (N.B.Q.B.), aff'd. (28 Sept. 1994), No. 181/93 CA, No. 182/93 CA, No. 186/93 CA (N.B.C.A.). After referring to Rule 4 of the Rules, Jones J. said, at p. 227:

> I take it from this that in specific matters of practice not enumerated in the Bankruptcy Act or Rules one may have regard to general Rules of practice and in this connection take notice of the decision of the New Brunswick Court of Appeal ... adopting the statement of Lord Esher from Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (1886), 16 Q.B.D. 556 (C.A.) as to the general rule to amendments as follows:
> "The rule of conduct of the Court in such a case is that, however negligent or careless may have been the first omission, and however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed, if it can be made without injustice to the other side. There is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs: but, if the amendment will put them into such a position that they must be injured, it ought not to be made."

45 In Re RCL Operators, supra, Jones J. decided that amendments to a bankruptcy petition ought to be refused if the amendments would put the respondent in a position where he or she "must be injured".

46 In the case at bar, the Respondent presented no evidence of actual prejudice and from an examination of the material there does not appear to be any basis for drawing an inference that there was prejudice to the Respondent which could not be compensated by costs. The only argument put forward by the Respondent on appeal was that prejudice should be presumed.

47 The Appellants filed affidavit material with their application to amend to show that there was evidence to support, at least by inference, the additional allegations they wished to make as to the locality of the debtor, as that term is defined in the BIA. The affidavits filed were adequate to comply with the requirement found in s. 43(3) of the BIA, set out above, that there be verification by affidavit of the facts alleged.

48 The chambers judge made reference to the additional allegations the Appellants' wished to add to their Petition in the following way:

> Unlike pleadings in a statement of claim in a civil action, the allegations in a petition for a receiving order must be specific and supported. Section 43(3) of the Act requires the petition to be verified by the "affidavit of the petitioner or by someone duly authorized on his behalf having personal knowledge of the facts alleged in the petition." While the petitioners filed some material in support of the alternative allegations that McDonnell's principal place of business was Vancouver at the material time and that most of his property is here, it appears that they wish to allege all three bases of locality because they are not sufficiently confident to rely upon any single one of them.

Digitized by Google

49 Section 43(6) of the BIA provides that at the hearing of the petition, the court shall require proof of the facts alleged in the petition. Whether the evidence before the court proves the facts alleged in the petition has to be determined, not at the time the application for an amendment is heard, but at the time the petition is heard.

50 The application to amend cannot be defeated on the basis that the Appellants wished to allege more than one "locality of the debtor", as defined in s. 2 of the BIA. One allegation, if proved, does not exclude another also being proved.

51 Whether an allegation respecting the locality of the debtor is established by the evidence is a matter to be determined by the judge hearing the petition, not the chambers judge hearing a motion to amend.

52 As to the reason the proposed amendments could potentially prejudice the Respondent, the chambers judge said:

> Further, the proposed amendments potentially prejudice McDonnell. The date of the filing of the petition sets the date of the bankruptcy. Important issues, including those relating to priorities, arise from the date of the bankruptcy. Substantial prejudice could arise if that date preceded the amendment fixing the locality of the debtor which is one of the essential elements in the petition.

53 With deference, granting the amendments sought could not have the effect of altering the date of the bankruptcy. Allegations of the "locality of the debtor", as that term is defined under the BIA, relate to the point in time the Petition is filed. The Appellants are not seeking to add new allegations as to the "locality of the debtor" that were non-existent at the date the Petition was issued.

54 In my opinion, the application to amend should have been dealt with on the basis of the civil practice of the court, as provided by Rule 4 of the Bankruptcy Rules, and the amendments sought by the Appellants should have been granted.

Conclusion

55 For the reasons stated, I would allow the appeal, set aside the order dismissing the application, and substitute an order allowing the amendments sought by the Appellants.

On appeal from the judgment of Justice Alvin Rosenberg dated June 2, 1997.

AUSTIN J.A.:

[1] The Toronto-Dominion Bank ("the Bank") appeals from the decision of Rosenberg J. made June 2, 1997, that Coopers & Lybrand Limited (the "Receiver") should have paid to the Corporation of the City of Hamilton (the "City") the municipal taxes on the property of Usarco Limited ("Usarco") and Frank Levy ("Levy") in receivership as they accrued due.

[2] From the Bank's perspective, the issue is whether the claim of a fully secured creditor ranks ahead of a municipality's claim for realty taxes on a receivership. The City's position is that it had priority and that the Receiver was wrong in not paying the taxes as they accrued due. Rosenberg J. agreed with the City's position and ordered the Bank to refund the money received during the receivership to the Receiver. The Receiver was also ordered to pay to the City all the money it had realized with the exception of its fees and disbursements, including all the money refunded to it by the Bank. Rosenberg J.'s reasons are reported at 1997 CanLII 12417 (ON SC), (1997), 50 C.B.R. (3d) 127 and at 40 M.P.L.R. (2d) 293 (Ont. Gen. Div). I agree with his reasons and his conclusion. My reasons follow.

[3] The matters in issue involve the duty of a court-appointed receiver and the interpretation of certain sections of the Municipal Act R.S.O. 1990 c. M.45 (the "Act"), insofar as they bear on the issue of priority. The facts are set out fully in the reasons of Rosenberg J. A summary will suffice for the purposes of the appeal.

[4] Levy was a principal of Usarco. Usarco was a scrap metal dealer and processor for over 40 years. It operated on five properties in Hamilton, Ontario, some registered in its name and others in the name of Levy. All or some of these lands were believed to be highly contaminated because of the operations carried out on them.

[5] Levy and Usarco had been dealing with the Bank for about 40 years. In 1989, Usarco's business was failing and Usarco owed the Bank about $18,000,000. As security for Usarco's obligations the Bank held, among other security, a registered general security agreement dated December 22, 1987, charging all of Usarco's property, a registered $3,000,000 demand debenture charging all of Usarco's property, a registered general assignment of book debts, mortgages on 371 Wellington Street North and 735 Strathearne Avenue and guarantees of Usarco's debts to the Bank provided by Levy, secured by mortgages upon 363 Wellington Street, 675 Strathearne Avenue and 725 Strathearne Avenue, all in Hamilton.

[6] The Receiver was appointed by the order of Borins J. on October 11, 1990. The Receiver was not to go into possession or to manage or continue the business because of the contamination. The Receiver's function was "to sell, lease, transfer or otherwise dispose of" the assets. Those assets consisted of the five properties and the buildings, contents and equipment on them. The Receiver was granted the power and authority but not the obligation to make payments to persons having prior mortgages, charges or encumbrances upon the assets and to pay any debts, charges or expenses of Usarco and Levy considered "necessary and desirable for the purposes of carrying out this Order." Usarco and Levy remained the owners of the assets. Any tenants were to pay rents and arrears to the Receiver, but the Receiver was not obligated to fulfil any of the obligations of Usarco or Levy as landlords. No proceedings were to be taken or continued against the Receiver without leave of the court.

[7] The Receiver actively carried on the receivership from the date of the order until 1996. By that time some of the property had been sold to Archibald Leach ("Leach") and the receivership had been discontinued with respect to the balance of the assets in light of the fact that they were unsaleable. The Receiver and the Bank were in the process of winding up the receivership when the City brought a motion seeking to recover municipal realty taxes.

[8] During the receivership the Receiver dealt with the Ministry of Labour respecting claims of former employees, the Ministry of the Environment respecting contamination of the premises and the City with respect to the removal of chemicals from the lands in question into the city at large. The Receiver also dealt with Dofasco with respect to a part of the premises leased to Dofasco.

[9] During the receivership, the Receiver recorded receipts of $3,606,611.48 and disbursements of $2,561,238.30. Among the receipts was a payment by Dofasco of $115,245.23 in February 1993, for the years 1990, 1991 and 1992 in accordance with a lease requirement that the tenant's share of the municipal realty taxes be paid to the landlord.

[10] Included in the disbursements made by the Receiver were the following:

Security	$267,638.39
Utilities	$120,687.06
Legal Fees	$110,756.34
Telephone	$ 4,408.66
Receiver's Fees	$467,374.52
Ministry of Labour	$509,557.14

The $115,245.23 paid by Dofasco to the Receiver on account of taxes was not paid over to the City.

[11] As is the custom, the Receiver's activities were periodically reported to the court. These reports, some lengthy and detailed, were dated March 13 and July 14, 1992, November 15 and December 3, 1993, February 11 and August 10, 1994, September 28, 1995, and March 15 and October 30, 1996. They were presented to the court on or about their respective dates, each accompanied by a notice of motion requesting a particular order or orders, as for instance for the approval of a sale.

[12] Although Dofasco's payment to the Receiver on account of taxes was made in February 1993, it does not appear in the lists of disbursements in the reports until October 1996. Presumably it was included under "Rental of Premises" in the earlier reports. No explanation for this accounting was provided. There is no reference to the payment of municipal realty taxes in any of the lists of disbursements in the reports.

[13] As of October 11, 1990, $186,002.93 was owing on account of such taxes. Nothing was paid on that account by the Receiver. As a consequence, by January 15, 1997, $2,588,159 was owing for taxes, penalties and interest. No issue was raised with respect to the amounts of these debts.

[14] The evidence before the court does not indicate when it was decided not to pay these taxes nor by whom or why. Borden & Elliot were the Receiver's solicitors. In June, 1992 they provided the Receiver with an opinion letter as to the Bank's priority over all other claims. "Unregistered Rights and Liens" were expressly excluded from that opinion. The letter dealt with municipal realty taxes at length. They were described as constituting a "special lien against the land in priority to all other claims except claims by the Crown". It was pointed out that notice of the lien did not require registration. As to s. 384 of the Act, which deals with leases, the letter stated that "[t]his provision takes effect upon the tenant receiving written notice from the "collector" or the treasurer of the municipality" and would not apply otherwise.

[15] The only reflection of this opinion letter in the reports to the court is in the Report dated July 14, 1992, paragraph 8 of which states that:

> The Receiver has obtained an opinion from Messrs. Borden & Elliot that, subject to certain qualifications, the Security held by the Bank charges the Proceeds in priority to the claims of third parties.

[16] That Report proposed that from its excess receipts, the Receiver should pay to the Bank $900,000 subject to agreement by the Bank to refund to the Receiver as much as might later be revealed to be required to satisfy the costs of the Receivership or a claim ranking in priority to the security held by the Bank. There was no indication in that Report that substantial municipal taxes were owing and were not being paid. Nor is there any indication that any consideration was given to the propriety or otherwise of non-payment of municipal taxes or to the question whether the court should be advised of such non-payment and direction sought.

[17] In the first Report dated March 13, 1992, it was noted that a cash offer of $525,000 which had been made for the land and equipment "was withdrawn upon the offeror learning of the property taxes payable in respect of the Wellington Street property".

[18] In the same Report, there is a reference to the Receiver being required to pay the Minister of Labour a sum in excess of $500,000 on account of wages, vacation pay, termination pay and severance pay of former employees. An order to this effect was made by Farley J. on August 2, 1991.

[19] The Receiver's statement of receipts and disbursements to September 30, 1993, includes the following disbursements:

Pension Plan	$509,557.14
Receiver's Fees	$387,965.95
Security Charges	$253,201.10
Utilities	$120,687.06

There is no mention of municipal taxes.

[20] The Report of November 15, 1993, indicated that under the agreement with Leach the purchaser would be responsible for the settlement of all property taxes and that, based on information supplied by the City, the property tax arrears were approximately $260,000. The same report indicated a net excess of receipts over disbursements of $1,322,988.64, $900,000 of which had already been remitted to the Bank.

[21] In dealing with the sale to Leach, the Report of December 3, 1993, states that the agreement is "conditional upon Leach making an arrangement with the City of Hamilton with respect to outstanding tax arrears".

[22] The motion which accompanied the Report of December 3, 1993, was made on notice to the City. This was the first notice the City had of the receivership or of any of the proceedings before the court. The City was not given notice because of tax arrears owing to the City, but because the City claimed the Receiver was responsible for certain costs incurred when chemicals from the property were spread within the City and a "state of emergency" was declared. The Receiver's response was to send the City a copy of the original receiving order referring:

> in particular to paragraphs 1 and 2 of that Order which directs the Receiver not to and deems the Receiver not to have possession, management or control of Usarco's property

[23] The Receiver's next Report was dated February 11, 1994. It noted that the Receiver's motion in respect of the partial termination of the receivership had been adjourned in December 1993, as a consequence of concerns raised by the Ministry of the Environment. These concerns were resolved through the sale by the Receiver of certain of Usarco's equipment for $25,000 and the application of that sum to environmental assessment of the Wellington Street property. In paragraphs 8 and 13 of this Report the Receiver refers to the Bank as "the only secured creditor of Usarco". The result of the Receiver's motion for approval of the Report of February 11, 1994, was an order of Farley J. dated February 18, 1994, reducing the receivership by deleting the unsold properties from it. The receivership was continued with respect to the lands still in the process of being sold to Leach.

[24] The Report of March 15, 1996, advised that the sale to Leach had been completed. The Receiver's statement of receipts and disbursements showed that it expected a net receipt of $375,000 from the sale to Leach after commissions and expenses. Leach was responsible for and had assumed the tax arrears on the property purchased. He had not paid the taxes as of the date of the hearing before Rosenberg J. Leach provided a limited indemnity to the Receiver and the Bank in respect of any claims that might be brought against them in regard to realty taxes.

[25] The Bank's position is that there was a contest as to entitlement from the outset and that the Receiver's duty in the circumstances was to recognize this, to refrain from paying the municipal taxes and to wait until the court determined priorities, if necessary. The Bank argues that this approach is supported by the original order of October 11, 1990, which authorizes and empowers the Receiver to pay bills, including encumbrances, but does not order the Receiver to do so. The City's position is that the Receiver should have paid the municipal taxes as they became due. Had the Receiver done so, the total amount paid to the City would have been approximately $1,260,000, leaving about $600,000 available for distribution to the Bank.

[26] In his decision, after setting out the facts, Rosenberg J. dealt with the issues as follows:

> Without criticizing the Receiver or Mr. MacNaughton as counsel for the Bank and sometimes counsel for the Receiver, the receivership has been conducted as if it were a private receivership by the Receiver for the Bank rather than a court appointed receiver. Even the indemnity from Leach with regard to the realty taxes is given both to the Receiver and the Bank. Mr. MacNaughton on behalf of the Bank argued that the position is analogous to a second mortgagee serving notice on tenants to attorn the rents to the > second mortgagee. The funds that the second mortgagee thus realizes can be applied on account of the second mortgage until such time as the first mortgagee takes steps to protect its position. This analogy does not apply to the present situation. The City is prevented from taking any steps because of the order of this court. Even more significant is the duty owed by the Receiver to represent all of the creditors (at para 31).

[27] After reference to the law, Rosenberg J., at paras 33, 36-40, continued as follows:

> At the time of the appointment of the Receiver the total tax arrears were approximately $186,000. Those tax arrears have increased and the latest statement shows the total tax arrears to be $2,588,000. In my view the Receiver would not be acting in a meticulously correct manner if during the term of receivership the Receiver realized some $1,900,000 while paying nothing on account of taxes and allowing tax arrears to accumulate and increase in the amount of some $2,500,000. The Receiver has not even paid on account of realty taxes the amount paid to the Receiver under the leases as contribution to realty taxes.
> One other factor that makes this application unusual but reflects on the equities between the parties is the concern about the environment. The Bank and the Receiver were careful to make certain that the order of Borins J. did not make either the Bank or the Receiver subject to the strict requirements that might be ordered by the Ministry of the Environment with regard to cleaning up any pollution of the property. These requirements can be most onerous. It was prudent of the Bank and the Receiver to have the appointment in the nature of a liquidator and not as an occupier or owner. However if the City attempted to sell and if a purchaser were unable to be found the city would become the owner and subject to those onerous requirements. This is particularly relevant in the present case since it is already known from the Receiver's reports that there are no purchasers that have been located and likely none that can be located for the properties in question. It is also known that there maybe serious environmental problems with the properties.
> The Municipal Act R.S.O. 1990, c.M.45, section 400 gives the City recourse to chattels owned by the taxpayer and similarly other sections of the Act allow the City to collect rentals.
> It is not necessary for the Receiver to proceed under these sections of the Municipal Act on behalf of the City because the Court has already given the Receiver all rights to dispose of the chattels and to collect the rents. Accordingly it is not appropriate to deprive the City of the rights to proceeds of the sale of the chattels or the collection of rents on the ground that it could have taken steps to collect them and has not.
> For all of the foregoing reasons and in the peculiar circumstances of this case, it is appropriate that the net proceeds realized by the Receiver (especially in this case since they are less than the taxes that accrued during the receivership) should be paid to the City. Accordingly the Bank will pay back to the Receiver the sum of $900,000 paid to it together with interest at the prime bank rate from the time of receipt to the time of repayment to the Receiver and all of the net funds realized by the Receiver shall be paid to the City on account of taxes. The City shall also be entitled to its costs of these proceedings against the Bank after assessment thereof on a party and party basis.
> I wish to make it abundantly clear that in so deciding I am not criticising the actions of the Receiver or Mr. MacNaughton. The situation is an unusual one and neither the Receiver nor Mr. MacNaughton could be expected to predict that the City was entitled to priority for all monies realized.

[28] I turn now to consider the law. As I do so, it is useful to repeat what was said at the outset of these reasons, namely that from the perspective of the appellant Bank, the issue in this appeal is whether the claim of a secured creditor on a receivership ranks ahead of a claim for municipal realty taxes. From the perspective of the respondent City, on the other hand, the issue is whether, during a receivership, the receiver is bound to pay such taxes as they become due.

[29] A useful place to start (as Rosenberg J. did) is with the statement of Laycraft C.J.A. in Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios, S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. 1991 ABCA 336 (CanLII), (1991), 81 D.L.R. (4th) 280 at 292, 293 and 294; Supplementary Reasons at 86 D.L.R. (4th) 567 leave to appeal refused 86 D.L.R. (4th) viii. > A further factor affecting the obligation of a court-appointed receiver is the receiver's status as an officer of the court; the standard required because of that status is one of meticulous correctness. In Alta. Treasury Branches v. Invictus Fin. Corp. 1986 CanLII 1601 (AB QB), (1986), 42 Alta. L.R. (2d) 181, 68 A.R. 207 (Q.B.) Stratton J. (as he then was) said that the Receiver's obligations "reach further than merely acting honestly". He quoted with approval the statement of Wilson J. in Fotti v. 777 Management Inc. reflex, (1981), 2 P.P.S.A.C. 32 at p. 37, [1981] 5 W.W.R. 48, 9 Man. R. (2d) 142 (Q.B.):

> The same concern for proper conduct by the court's appointed officer may be seen in the judgment of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in *Canadian Commercial Bank v. > > The bank now seeks to benefit from that default and the receiver supports its position. That position is untenable. While it may not be improper for a private debtor to withhold payment of a debt due and owing, whether deliberately or by neglect or oversight, and thereby benefit from an intervening limitation period, the same is not true of a receiver, for he is an officer of the court. The receiver's action is the action of the court and the court will not permit or approve any action on the part of its officer which has the effect of changing the rights of competing creditors, whether deliberately or by default. [Italics in the original; underlining added.]

[30] Reference may usefully be made to Bennett on Receiverships, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1999), at 180-181 (footnotes omitted):

> A court-appointed receiver represents neither the security holder nor the debtor. As an officer of the court, the receiver is not an agent but a principal entrusted to discharge the powers granted to the receiver bona fide. Accordingly, the receiver has a fiduciary duty to comply with such powers provided in the order and to act honestly and in the best interests of all interested parties including the debtor. The receiver's primary duty is to account for the assets under the receiver's control and in the receiver's possession. This duty is owed to the court and to all persons having an interest in the debtor's assets, including the debtor and shareholders where the debtor is a corporation. As a court officer, the receiver is put in to discharge the duties prescribed in the order or in any subsequent order and is afforded protection on any motion for advice and directions. The receiver has a duty to make candid and full disclosure to the court including disclosing not only facts favourable to pending applications, but also facts that are unfavourable.
> . . .

> In setting the standard of care, the court-appointed receiver must act with meticulous correctness, but not to a standard of perfection. As a fiduciary, the receiver owes a duty to make full disclosure of information to all interested persons. ... The court-appointed receiver owes no duty to any individual creditor who may attempt to interfere in the receivership. [Emphasis added.]

[31] Perhaps of limited significance here is the duty of a court-appointed receiver to the debtor and its shareholders. It would normally be a matter of some concern to a debtor and shareholders if the conduct of a receiver included the non-payment of taxes and the incurring of penalties and interest, thereby reducing the recovery or the chance of recovery of the owner. Barring extraordinary circumstances, such events should be fully disclosed to the court and the advice and instruction of the court sought.

[32] The priority of a municipality with respect to municipal taxes is set out in the Act., Section 382 deals with realty, s. 384 deals with tenants and s. 400 with personalty. The relevant parts of those sections read as follows:

> 382. The taxes due upon any land with costs may be recovered with interest as a debt due to the municipality from the owner or tenant originally assessed therefor and from any subsequent owner of the whole or any part thereof, saving that person's recourse against any other person, and are a special lien on the land in priority to every claim, privilege, lien or encumbrance of every person except the Crown, and the lien and its priority are not lost or impaired by any neglect, omission or error of the municipality or of any agent, or officer, or by want of registration. [Emphasis added.]

[33] Courts have long recognized the importance of taxation to society. In Re Decker's Delicatessen (1924), 56 O.L.R. 140 (S.C.), Fisher J., in the course of interpreting the predecessor to s. 382 of the Act, made the following observation at 142:

> Governments and municipalities must secure revenue, otherwise they could not function; money must be secured, and taxation is the method adopted to secure it; and transactions between individuals must, therefore, unless excepted by statute, be subordinated to that of the Government or municipality.

[34] Also on the subject of priority, he said at the same page:

> It also seems to me that banks, loan companies, and persons engaged in the lending of money must have in mind, when valuing the security upon which they make a loan, to provide for taxes due to Dominion and Provincial Governments, or to a municipality, as being a prior charge or encumbrance in the event of insolvency.

[35] More recently, MacPherson J. in Royal Bank of Canada v. Lawton Development Inc. (1994), 19 M.P.L.R. (2d) 170 (Ont. Gen. Div.) noted at 176 that s. 382 of the Act and its related provisions deserved of broad construction. As he explained:

> In recent years, Canadian courts have recognized that taxes serve important social purposes and are, therefore, entitled to judicial respect provided they are imposed in a clear fashion by a proper legislative body.

MacPherson J. also commented on the importance of property taxes at p. 175:

> It seems obvious that if a taxpayer owes a $1,000 municipal tax on January 1, 1994, and does not pay it, then the municipality is deprived of the use of that money. It will not have the money, to which it is legally entitled and on which it has counted, available to support the education, recreation, housing, social support and other programmes which it is required to provide. . . .

[36] Inherent in the Bank's appeal is the proposition that the Receiver had no duty to keep current and to pay the arrears of property taxes owed by Usarco and Levy out of the proceeds of the receivership. In my view, this proposition is wrong. It fails to recognize the principles enunciated in Re Decker's Delicatessen, supra. Further, it has been specifically rejected in numerous cases.

[37] In Royal Bank v. Lawton Development Inc., supra, a court-appointed receiver sought the court's advice regarding the payment of certain moneys owed to the municipality. While the receiver did not question that it had an obligation to pay the accrued property taxes, it did question its obligation to pay, inter alia, the penalties, interest and costs assessed by the municipality. MacPherson J. specifically endorsed the receiver's recognition of its obligation to pay the accrued property taxes at p. 173 as follows:

> The Royal Bank does not challenge the priority of the municipal tax over its security, almost certainly because of the clear language of s. 382 of the Municipal Act. . .

MacPherson J. continued at pp. 174-175:

> ... the status and recovery of [a municipal] tax are governed by s. 382 ... [The provisions of s. 382] make it clear that a tax due upon land ... has priority over all other forms of security, except security held by the Crown. This conclusion has been reached by several judges of the Ontario courts in cases raising the relationship between a variety of municipal taxes and many different encumbrances held by private parties ... It follows that the security held by the Royal Bank in the instant case does not take priority over the money owed to the City of Toronto . . .

In the end, MacPherson J. had little difficulty deciding that the priority granted to the City of Toronto under s. 382 of the Act extended to interest, penalties and certain costs.

[38] In Hamilton Wentworth Credit Union Ltd. v. Courtcliffe Parks Ltd. (1995), 28 M.P.L.R. (2d) 59 (Ont. Gen. Div.) Blair J. observed that the receiver had not made tax payments to the municipality on an ongoing basis, nor had it made any arrangements specifically providing for such payment. In contrast, however, the receiver had made other payments, including legal fees, receivership fees and utilities. When the municipality proposed selling the property pursuant to its powers under the Municipal Tax Sales Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.60, it appeared there would be insufficient proceeds to pay both the property tax arrears and the receiver's own fees and disbursements. In denying the receiver priority over the municipality, Blair J. noted at p. 63:

> It is the failure [by the receiver] to keep taxes current that has led to the present predicament.

Blair J. also stated at pp. 72-73:

> Accordingly, I am of the opinion that the statutory scheme enacted through the Municipal Act and the Municipal Tax Sales Act for the imposition and collection of municipal property taxes precludes an order granting a receiver and manager priority over the Municipality for the receiver and manager's fees and disbursements, regardless of whether those fees and disbursements were incurred for the necessary preservation or improvement and realization of the property on behalf of all creditors.
> While this approach denies a receiver and manager a "super priority" with respect to municipal property taxes, it does not, in my view, alter what has traditionally been the case – and the understanding in the industry – concerning the payment of such taxes. Such taxes have traditionally been considered to be part of the "necessary costs of preservation" to be paid by a receiver and manager.

[39] The City's claim with respect to realty is quite straightforward. Section 382 puts the City's claim ahead of all others except the Crown. As stated by Sherstobitoff J.A. in Canadian Commercial Bank, supra at p. 251, "the Court will not permit or approve any action on the part of its officer [the receiver] which has the effect of changing the rights of competing creditors . . . " This is precisely what the City says has happened. I agree with Sherstobitoff J.A. that the court will not permit such conduct. The same result is dictated by consideration for other interested parties. Levy and Ursaco should not be prejudiced by the City's claim increasing because of the accretion of penalties and interest.

[40] Usarco leased part of the lands in question to Dofasco. This arrangement was continued following the Receiver's appointment. Under the lease Dofasco was responsible for taxes on that land. Dofasco paid $115,245.23 in taxes for the years 1990, 1991 and 1992 to the Receiver on or about February 15, 1993. Counsel for the Bank conceded during oral argument that this amount should have been paid over to the City on account of taxes. No similar concession was made by counsel for the Receiver.

[41] In my respectful view, that amount should have been paid to the City on account of taxes in February 1993. It is my understanding that Dofasco remained liable for the taxes on the "leased lands" which were subsequently sold to Leach. To the extent that Dofasco has paid further amounts to the Receiver on account of taxes, such amounts should have been and must now be paid over to the City.

[42] Personalty is dealt with under s. 400 of the Act. The Bank advances many reasons why the City has no entitlement to personalty or its proceeds. First, the Bank argues in its factum that the "goods and chattels" the City was entitled to pursuant to s. 400(1) did not include such items as Usarco's receivables, rent and like matters. I understood this argument respecting receivables was withdrawn during oral argument.

[43] The Bank then argued that the City was further limited to applying the proceeds of the sale of personalty on a particular lot to the realty taxes on that lot. It was then argued that the City's lien respecting chattels did not arise until after distraint, and since the City never distrained any personalty, it had no lien in that regard and therefore no priority. Finally, in dealing with s. 400(11), which applies where personal property liable to seizure for taxes is in the hands of certain named persons, it was argued that as the Receiver was not one of such named persons, no relief was available to the City under s. 400(11).

[44] The City's position is that s. 400(1)(a) accords the City the right to distrain against the goods and chattels of Usarco and Levy situated anywhere in the county and that s. 400(1)(d) gives the City the right to distrain against any goods and chattels situated on the subject property, i.e. on the property on which municipal taxes remain unpaid.

[45] The City also argues that "chattels" is one of the widest words known in law in its relation to personal property (Re Goverde, [1972] 2 O.R. 506 (H.C.J.)), therefore it encompasses all personal property including:

> . . . choses in action such as money in a bank account, stocks, bonds, the right to receive money under a contract (e.g. rents under release) and debts (e.g. accounts receivable).

[46] As a result, the City submits that in the instant case the meaning of "chattels" in s. 400(1) includes all of the assets realized upon by the Receiver and the proceeds thereof. Having regard to the concession by counsel for the Bank in the course of oral argument and his choosing not to argue further as to the meaning of "chattels", no specific ruling is required in this regard.

[47] In view of the fact that s. 400(1)(a) refers to goods and chattels situated anywhere in the county and s. 400(1)(d) refers to any goods and chattels on the particular land on which taxes are unpaid, it does not seem to me that the City is limited by any geographic argument.

[48] The real argument with respect to personalty is whether s. 400(11) applies to the Receiver in this case. The relevant language of that section is set out earlier in these reasons. The Bank argues that the section has no application because a court-appointed receiver or a receiver of any kind is not included in the list of persons to whom the subsection applies. Only asheriff, bailiff of any court, assignee, liquidator, trustee or authorized trustee in bankruptcy are listed in s. 400(11). The City's position is that the Receiver is a "trustee" within the meaning of s. 400(11).

[49] In my view, the purpose of s. 400(11) is to provide a municipality clear and simple means to assert its priority in circumstances where personalty otherwise available to be seized for taxes, has come under the control of some other person and has been or is in the process of being realized for the purpose of paying a debt or debts owed to that other person or his or her principal. In my opinion a receiver in these circumstances has no personal interest in the fund, apart from its fees and is therefore a trustee as well as a receiver. As such the Receiver comes within the ambit of the s. 400(11).

[50] The jurisprudence on this point is mixed. In Royal Bank of Canada v. 238842 Alberta Ltd. (1985), 57 C.B.R. (N.S.) 242 (Sask. C.A.) the contest was between a debenture holder and a municipality claiming for business taxes and water and electric charges. The receiver, whose appointment by the debenture holder had been affirmed by the court, was directed to pay into court the proceeds of his sales of the debtor's assets. Section 384 of the Saskatchewan Urban Municipality Act, R.S.S. 978, c. U-10 was identical to our s. 400(11) for the purposes of these proceedings. At 247 and 248 Wakeling J.A. speaking for the majority said:

> The section [s. 384] certainly seems to be applicable in this instance as personal property was under seizure or attachment, the property was liable to seizure for taxes (s. 379), it had been converted into cash, was held by a trustee and was undistributed when the required notice was given by the city. In such circumstances, the priority provisions underlined above are to be applied and were so applied by Noble J. in the judgment from which this appeal is taken.
> The result is supported by the Ontario decision of Re Decker's Delicatessen ... in which an almost identical section was interpreted to give priority to Ontario Hydro for electric rates which were acknowledged to be the equivalent of a municipal tax, rate or assessment.

[51] The reasons of the court do not reveal any discussion apart from the foregoing as to whether the receiver in that case was a "trustee" within the meaning of s. 384.

[52] In Alberta Treasury Branches v. Invictus Financial Corporation Ltd. 1986 CanLII 1601 (AB QB), (1986), 42 Alta. L.R. (2d) 181, aff'd 1986 ABCA 178 (CanLII), (1986), 47 Alta. L.R. (2d) 94 (C.A.) a court appointed receiver-manager sought direction as to the priority of claims as amongst a Workers' Compensation Board claim for employer contributions, claims of two municipalities for business taxes incurred both before and after the appointment of the receiver and the claim of a debenture holder under its debenture. Stratton J. of the Court of Queen's Bench decided that the Workers' Compensation Board ranked first because of the language of its legislation. One of the claiming municipalities was Lloydminster, which is partly in Alberta and partly in Saskatchewan, and as a consequence is governed by a charter. Section 330 of the charter is for our purposes identical to Ontario s. 400(11). At 189 and 190 Stratton J. said:

> Upon deciding that the Decker's Delicatessen and Mowbrey Stout [Royal Bank v. 238842 Alberta Ltd.] cases apply to the case at bar, it must then be determined whether, in the present case, the receiver-manager falls within any of the categories listed in s. 330 of the charter. "Receiver" is not expressly mentioned in that section.
> I am of the view that a court-appointed receiver-manager would fit within the term of "trustee." A court-appointed receiver-manager is a fiduciary. His obligations reach further than merely acting honestly and in good faith. Wilson J. of the Manitoba Court of Queen's bench indicated in Fotti v. 777 Mgmt. Inc. ... that a receiver-manager appointed under a court order is:
> > ... an officer of the court and in his discharge of that office he may not, in the name of the court, lend his power to defeat the proper claims of those on whose behalf those powers are exercised. Clothed as he is with the mantle of this court, his duties are to be approached not as the mere agent of the debenture holder, but as trustee for all parties interested in the fund of which he stands possessed.
> The scope of the priority created by s. 330 of the charter is clearly limited to personal property and to the proceeds of personal property. [Emphasis added.]

[53] Thus Royal Bank v. 238842 Alberta Ltd., supra, Alberta Treasury Branches v. Invictus Financial, supra, and Fotti v. 777 Mgmt. Inc., supra, all equate a receiver with a trustee for the purposes of s. 400 (11). Bennett on Receiverships, supra, cites the Alberta Treasury Branches v. Invictus Financial, supra, as authority for the statement that "[a] court-appointed receiver is a trustee and fiduciary" (at p. 180, footnote 93).

[54] Royal Bank of Canada v. Sherkston Beaches Ltd. (1988), 70 C.B.R. (N.S.) 197 (Ont. Sup. Ct.) stands for the contrary position. This case involved a claim by a municipality for business taxes assessed against Sherkston Beaches Limited. Sherkston Beaches Limited owned and operated a recreational park and camping facility within the limits of the municipality. Royal Bank was its major creditor and on its application a receiver was appointed by the court. The operation was sold to another company but the proceeds were not sufficient to pay both the business taxes assessed and the amount owing to the bank. With respect to the application or otherwise of s. 400(11) O'Driscoll J. at 202 and 205-207, said the following:

> V. ISSUES
> A. Is the court-appointed receiver a "trustee or authorized trustee in bankruptcy" under the provisions of s. 387(11) [now s. 400 (11)] of the Municipal Act?

> > I disagree with this contention also. The whole phrase must be read together, "or of any trustee or authorized trustee in bankruptcy," both referring, I think to a case of bankruptcy; and I cannot bring myself to believe, what Mr. Herapath's argument implies, that a trustee for a mortgagee claiming or being in possession of chattel property, is in a worse position than the mortgagee himself would have been had he taken possession of the mortgaged property.

My conclusions

1. The following quotations are found in the majority judgment in the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Royal Bank v. 238842 Alta., Ltd., supra:

Page 246:

> The section then goes on to indicate that the only interest which is protected from the city's remedy by distress is that of a vendor with a subsisting lien for the purchase price (s. 379(2)).

Pages 247-48:

> In the result, the provisions of s. 379 set up a different but very extensive system of priorities which are sweeping in nature, covering by specific mention the right to distrain against property other than that of the taxpayer and exempting only the claim of an unpaid vendor...
> The section certainly seems to be applicable in this instance as personal property was under seizure or attachment, the property was liable to seizure for taxes (s. 379), it had been converted into cash, was held by a trustee and was undistributed when the required notice was given by the city. In such circumstances, the priority provisions underlined above are to be applied and were so applied by Noble J. in the judgment from which this appeal is taken.
> The result is supported by the Ontario decision of Re Decker's Delicatessen [supra] in which an almost identical section was interpreted to give priority to Ontario Hydro for electric rates which were acknowledged to be the equivalent of a municipal tax, rate or assessment.

2. It will be observed that:

(a) The Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Royal Bank v. 238842, supra, did not consider the question: Was the personal property "liable to seizure for taxes"?

(b) The Saskatchewan Court of Appeal did not deal with the question whether a court-appointed receiver falls within the phrase "trustee" in the legislation comparable to s. 387(11) of the Municipal Act.

(c) In Re Decker's Delicatessen, supra, Fisher J. was sitting as a bankruptcy judge and had to decide whether the priorities set out in s. 387(11) of the Municipal Act of Ontario should take precedence or whether a priority in the Landlord and Tenant Act of Ontario should take precedence.

Fisher J. held (headnote [O.L.R.]):

... [that] the trustee of the bankrupt estate is bound to pay, out of the proceeds of the personal property of the debtor liable to seizure for taxes and rent, rates payable by the debtor to Hydro-Electric Power Commission, in priority to the claim of the landlord for rent.

(d) The case before me does not involve a bankrupt estate nor does it involve two competing statutes each setting out a priority.

(e) In my view, Re Decker's is not analogous to the case before me.

(f) The Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Royal Bank v. 238842 Alta. Ltd., supra, dealt with a statute which gave wide powers to municipalities regarding distress for arrears of business taxes – powers much wider that the Ontario statute.

If and insofar as the decision of the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal is in conflict with the Ontario decisions, I decline to follow it.

[55] I am not certain what weight should be given to Royal Bank of Canada v. Sherkston Beaches Limited et al. First, it deals with business taxes rather than realty taxes and the powers of a municipality with respect to collecting realty taxes and business taxes are not co-extensive. In addition, the motions judge found that the goods in question were not "liable to seizure" because the bank's secured claim exceeded the value of the goods and accordingly Sherkston Beaches Ltd.had no interest or equity in the goods. As well, the decision of the Alberta Court of Appeal in Alberta Treasury Branches v. Invictus Financial, supra, does not appear to have been drawn to the attention of the motions judge.

[56] If the motions judge's conclusion was based upon the Official Referee's opinion, then with respect, I would draw a distinction between the example referred to by the Official Referee, namely a person not appointed by the court, and the situation in the instant case. That same distinction was drawn by Sherstobitoff J.A. in Canadian Commercial Bank, supra, when he pointed out the difference between a "private debtor" and an "officer of the court". It may well be that, in the instant case, had the Bank itself taken and sold the personalty, it would have been in a stronger position than the Receiver. The Receiver was bound, by its appointment, to act on behalf of all interested parties, including Usarco, Levy and the City. Had the Bank taken possession, by itself or by a private receiver it could have looked to its own interests alone. I disagree with what appears to have been the opinion of the Official Referee in this regard.

[57] In Royal Bank of Canada v. Niagara Falls (City) reflex, (1992), 7 O.R. (3d) 147 (Gen. Div.) Steele J. dealt with the lawfulness of a seizure for business taxes. After deciding the case in favour of the municipality, Steele J. said at 151:

> I do not think that s. 400(11) has any application. The private receiver appointed by the bank is not one of those persons referred to therein. In this regard, I agree with the conclusion in Royal Bank of Canada v. Sherkston Beaches Ltd. reflex, (1988), 64 O.R. (2d) 126, 49 D.L.R. (4th) 460 (H.C.J.), at p. 130 O.R., p. 464 D.L.R. I would distinguish the decision in the Sherkston Beaches case from the present one in that, in that case, no seizure had taken place. [Emphasis added.]

[58] I agree with Steele J. that s. 400(11) had no application to the circumstances of that case. His remarks with respect to the decision in Royal Bank of Canada v. Sherkston Beaches Ltd. et al, supra, were accordingly obiter. It does not appear from the reasons of Steele J. that the decision in Alberta Treasury Branches v. Invictus Financial, supra, was drawn to his attention.

[59] Having regard to the purpose of s. 400(11) as set out earlier and to the circumstances under which the court-appointed Receiver dealt with the properties in question, including both realty and personalty, I conclude that the Receiver in the instant case was a "trustee" within the meaning of s. 400(11). It is conceded that the requirement for notice in s. 400(11) was met. Accordingly the Bank's arguments with respect to priority with respect to the proceeds from the sale of personalty must be rejected.

[60] I should note that in reaching this conclusion, in addition to the authorities discussed above, I have considered the following:

> The Assessment Amendment Act, S.O. 1917 c.45, s.10 (the original of what is now s. 400(11) of the Municipal Act R.S.O. 1990, c.M-45).

> The Suburban Area Development Act, S.O. 1922, c.77, s.24 (which amended the Assessment Act by adding the words "or trustee or authorized trustee in bankruptcy").

> 808757 Ontario Inc. (Receiver of) (Re.) 1994 CanLII 7466 (ON SC), (1994), 26 C.B.R. (3d) 75 (Ont. Gen. Div.).
> Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Barley Mow Inn Inc. 1996 CanLII 1437 (BC CA), (1996), 41 C.B.R. (3d) 251 (B.C. C.A.)

[61] The Bank has an alternative or additional argument. It submits that the Bank is entitled to any and all of the money recovered by virtue of its security, while the City is more limited in that it can only apply the money recovered by the disposition of realty and personalty owned by Usarco to the taxes owing by Usarco. Simply put, the money recovered from the sale of Levy's property cannot be applied to tax arrears on Usarco's property.

[62] This submission was not made by the Bank at the hearing below nor does it appear in its factum. Counsel for the Bank first advised counsel for the City of the argument at 8:30 a.m. on October 11, 2000, the day the appeal was to be argued. The court was advised of this submission when the case was called for argument, at which time counsel for the Bank sought to introduce a chart to illustrate this point. The City's position was that the court should not hear the argument because it was not raised before and notice was not given until that day. As the court anticipated that the hearing might run over into the following day, it decided to accept the chart and hear the argument without any commitment on the court's part to deal with the argument. Counsel for the City would be at liberty, if so advised, to file written submissions on the matter. He did so the following day.

[63] The first two paragraphs of those submissions are as follows:

> 1. The Bank now raises, for the first time in these proceedings, the distinction between assets and property owned by the two Defendants, Usarco Limited ("Usarco") and Usarco's President, Director and majority shareholder Frank Levy ("Levy"). The Bank says that the assets of Usarco cannot be used to pay the realty tax arrears of Levy, and vice versa, and as a result, at most the City is entitled to recover $645,823.01 in respect of Usarco realty tax arrears and $276,980.32 in respect of Levy realty tax arrears.
> 2. This is wrong, it is submitted, in three ways:
> (a) it ignores the treatment of the Usarco and Levy properties and assets as one by the Receiver during the course of the receivership, as set out in more detail below and as evidenced in the attached documents from the Appeal Books;
> (b) it ignores the strong evidence that Usarco was a tenant on the Levy properties; and
> (c) even if the Appellant is correct in its submission, it fails to allocate to the Levy realty tax arrears the $541,800.00 the Receiver realized in respect of Usarco's inventory which was situated on Levy property (363 Wellington St. N.) and the $729,802.43 the Receiver realized in respect of Usarco's Accounts Receivable which were situated at Usarco's head office on Levy property (363 Wellington St. N.), as it should pursuant to s. 400(1)(d)(ii) of the Municipal Act.

[64] I agree with those submissions. Arguments (a) and (b) run together. All the properties were used by Usarco or for Usarco's purposes. There was no indication that Levy's involvement in or ownership of the properties was personal. The Receiver treated the properties as a single pool of Usarco assets and the only reference to Levy was to identify which parcels were being talked about. Usarco assets were used for the benefit of "Levy" lands. When lands were sold, there was no apportionment of the price between the part in Levy's name and the part in Usarco's name.

[65] Whether in retrospect the Receiver acted properly in treating this as a single receivership rather than as two, the fact remains that it did. To achieve the allocation now asserted by the Bank would require, at the least, consideration of a reaccounting to reflect separate ownerships. In my view it is neither timely nor appropriate to consider such a suggestion. The allocation argument must therefore be rejected.

[66] In paragraph 25, I set out the position taken by counsel for the Bank on the appeal. This position was that the issue between the Bank and the City was a question of priorities and that the Receiver was correct in not paying any taxes during the receivership. Instead, the proper position was to protect, preserve and realize the assets and leave priorities to be worked out at the end. The Bank claimed that nothing had been lost and no one had been injured by the Receiver following such a course.

[67] In my respectful view, that position is quite wrong and totally untenable. It overlooks the Receiver's normal duty to pay the taxes as part of preserving the property. The deliberate accretion of penalties and interest discriminated amongst interested parties, favouring the Bank at the expense of all others, including the City and the owners. There may well be receiverships where an uneven hand is appropriate. Such a position, however, should not be adopted unilaterally or at the suggestion or request of the petitioning creditors, but only upon direction from the court upon complete disclosure and on notice to parties who may be affected.

[68] The appeal of the Bank must therefore be dismissed with costs. The Receiver submitted its rights to the court and took no significant part in the argument. Its costs may be addressed by letter if so advised.

HALLETT, J.A.:

This is an appeal from a decision of Saunders J. in which he dismissed the City of Dartmouth's application under Civil Procedure Rule 25 for an order for judgment against Barclays Bank for outstanding taxes owing to the City of Dartmouth by CNC Machining Limited (CNC) in the amount of $25,498.89. Barclays Bank held mortgage security on the machinery and equipment of CNC. On default the Bank went into possession of CNC's assets. Shortly after Barclays Bank went into possession CNC made an assignment in bankruptcy pursuant to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, as amended. The City of Dartmouth sued Barclays Bank for payment of CNC's outstanding taxes which had been levied on the machinery and equipment. The action was based on the provisions of s. 118 of the Assessment Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 23 as amended, which provides:

> "118 (1) No personal property shall be taken possession of by the holder of any bill of sale, chattel mortgage, instalment payment contract, hire purchase agreement, transfer or mortgage thereof, or any lien thereon, nor except as provided in this Act, shall the same be seized or levied upon, under or by virtue of any warrant, execution or attachment, or other process, nor shall the same be distrained for rent, nor shall the same be sold under any order of any court, until the holder or the person, at whose instance or suit the warrant, execution, attachment or other process issued or order of sale was granted, pays all rates and taxes rated and levied against the owner or person in possession thereof.
> (2) Any sheriff, constable, bailiff or other officer having process to levy upon such property shall, before selling the same, pay to the treasurer such rates and taxes and the amount paid to any municipality for rates or taxes may be added to the amount claimed under such process.
> (3) The assignee, mortgagee or person holding a lien on such property, or the sheriff, constable, bailiff or officer who takes possession thereof, shall be personally liable to the municipality for the amount of the rates and taxes rated and levied against the owner or person in possession thereof for the then current taxation year, and may be sued therefor by the municipality as for an ordinary debt.
> (4) Such property shall be liable to be levied upon, seized, taken and sold under warrant to pay such rates and taxes, together with costs, charges and expenses."

Saunders J. Found that s. 118 of the Assessment Act was rendered inoperative upon the bankruptcy of CNC by reason of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act which, in his opinion, altered the scheme of distribution provided for in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. He concluded that once the voluntary assignment in bankruptcy had been made the Bankruptcy Act exclusively determined the status, priority and ranking of creditors. Pursuant to s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act the municipal taxes would rank fifth in priority among preferred creditors and after payment of the secured creditors. Therefore, he found that the City could not claim against Barclays Bank (as mortgagee in possession of CNC's assets) pursuant to s. 118 of the Assessment Act. He was of the opinion that these provisions of the Assessment Act were not within the sphere of legislative competency of a province.

As required by Rule 25, the matter went before Justice Saunders upon an agreed statement of facts. I will summarize the relevant facts in a chronological order:

(i) CNC carried on business in Dartmouth from and prior to January 1st, 1991 until February 11th, 1992;

(ii) Barclays Bank held a fixed and floating charge debenture charging the machinery and equipment of CNC;

(iii) on February 11th, 1992, CNC was in default. Pursuant to the terms of the debenture, Barclays Bank appointed Deloitte & Touche Inc. receiver and manager of the property and assets of CNC;

(iv) on the instructions of Barclays Bank, Deloitte & Touche took possession of the assets and undertaking of CNC;

(v) at the time Deloitte & Touche took possession of the assets, CNC owed rates and taxes to the City of Dartmouth for the current year in the amount of $25,498.89. This tax was with respect to the ownership of the machinery and equipment mortgaged to Barclays Bank and which Deloitte & Touche took possession of on February 11th, 1992;

(vi) on February 12th, 1992, Deloitte & Touche wrote the City of Dartmouth seeking particulars as to the amount of taxes outstanding. These particulars were provided to Deloitte & Touche;

(vii) Deloitte & Touche, as receiver and manager, advertised the assets of CNC for sale by tender. Five tenders were submitted by the closing date but none were acceptable to Barclays Bank;

(viii) on April 28th, 1992, CNC made a voluntary assignment in bankruptcy pursuant to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. Deloitte & Touche was named the trustee in bankruptcy. Its appointment was subsequently confirmed at the first meeting of creditors of the estate of CNC in bankruptcy;

(ix) between the months of April and July, 1992, discussions were held between M&M Manufacturing Limited, a business enterprise in Dartmouth, Deloitte & Touche and Barclays Bank, concerning the sale of the assets of CNC. M&M Manufacturing was willing to purchase the assets but required financing in the form of a long term lease option. Barclays Bank, on the other hand, wanted to sell the machinery and equipment outright. In order to conclude the transaction Barclays contacted Kes Pacific Leasing Inc., an equipment financing company. Kes Pacific agreed with Barclays Bank to purchase the assets of CNC, including those in respect of which CNC was rated for machinery and equipment tax. The agreed purchase price was $400,000. It had been arranged that Kes Pacific would lease the equipment to M&M;

(x) on the 26th of May, 1992, the City of Dartmouth commenced an action against Barclays Bank and Deloitte& Touche claiming that Deloitte & Touche as agent, and at the instigation of Barclays Bank took possession of the assets and undertaking of CNC and sold the assets. The City of Dartmouth claimed that Deloitte & Touche and/or Barclays thereby became personally responsible to the City of Dartmouth for CNC taxes pursuant to the provisions of s. 118 of the Assessment Act;

(xi) on the 9th day of June, 1992, the defendants filed a defence stating that Barclays Bank was a secured creditor of CNC, as defined in s. 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, and pleaded the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act as a full defence to the City of Dartmouth's claim;

(xii) on August 4th, 1992, Deloitte & Touche as trustee in bankruptcy of CNC executed a bill of sale transferring the assets of CNC, including those in respect of which CNC was rated for machinery and equipment tax transferring said assets to Kes Pacific for the nominal consideration of $1.00;

(xiii) on the same date Barclays Bank gave a letter to Kes Pacific acknowledging the receipt of $399,500 from Kes Pacific representing the amount required to release its security interest in CNC's machinery and equipment. Barclays Bank also confirmed that $500 was paid by Kes Pacific to Deloitte & Touche, trustee in bankruptcy for the estate of CNC;

(xiv) on the 13th day of January, 1995, the City of Dartmouth applied to the Supreme Court for an order pursuant to Civil Procedure Rule 25 for an order for judgment in favour of the City of Dartmouth against both Barclays Bank and Deloitte & Touche for the amount claimed in the statement of claim;

(xv) the application was heard by Justice Saunders in special Chambers on March 7th, 1995, and by a decision released on March 27th, 1995, Justice Saunders dismissed the application of the City of Dartmouth and awarded costs to the defendants;

(xvi) by notice of appeal filed on the 25th of April, 1995, the City of Dartmouth asserts that the learned Chambers judge erred in law in finding that s. 118 of the Assessment Act was rendered inoperative by the Bankruptcy Act and the assignment in bankruptcy of CNC made pursuant to the said Act. The City of Dartmouth asked this Court to award judgment in favour of the City of Dartmouth against Barclays Bank and Deloitte & Touche or one of them in the amount of $25,670.30 plus pre-judgment interest and costs;

(xvii) on the hearing of the appeal counsel agreed: (a) that the amount owing to the City of Dartmouth for the current year was $25,498.89 and this was the amount being claimed by the City of Dartmouth; (b) that should judgment be awarded to the City of Dartmouth that the pre-judgment interest would be at the rate of 7% and run from February 11th, 1992; and, (c) that the machinery and equipment that was mortgaged to Barclays Bank and subsequently sold to Kes Pacific were all the assets of CNC.

Section 136 of the Bankruptcy Act is relevant; it provides:

> "136. (1) Subject to the rights of secured creditors, the proceeds realized from the property of a bankrupt shall be applied in priority of payments as follows:
> . . . . .
> (e) municipal taxes assessed or levied against the bankrupt, within the two years immediately preceding his bankruptcy, that do not constitute a preferential lien or charge against the real property of the bankrupt, but not exceeding the value of the interest of the bankrupt in the property in respect of which the taxes were imposed as declared by the trustee;
> (j) in the case of a bankrupt who became bankrupt before the prescribed date, claims of the Crown not mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (i), in right of Canada or any province, rateably notwithstanding any statutory preference to the contrary."

The appellant's counsel characterizes the issue raised on this appeal as follows:

Digitized by Google

> "Is the personal liability of Barclays, as imposed upon it by s. 118 of the Assessment Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 23, rendered inapplicable by the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (now the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act), and the assignment into bankruptcy of CNC Machining Limited made thereunder?"

Before deciding whether s. 118 is rendered inapplicable, it is necessary to determine what it means. The Section has been recognized in several decisions of the courts of this Province as being difficult to interpret (FBDB v. Halifax (City of) (1982), 56 N.S.R. (2d) 139 at p. 144; Matheson v. Calkin, et al. (1931), 3 M.P.R. 9).

Mellish J., writing for the Supreme Court en banc, in Matheson v. Calkin, decided that it was not necessary for the bailiff who sold personal property distrained on by the landlord for arrears of rent to have paid the taxes owing to the town prior to selling the personal property distrained upon. Mellish J. directed his attention to the object of the legislation. He stated at p. 14:

> "The object of the legislation is primarily to secure the payment of taxes and with that end in view to empower the town, if so advised, to sell any goods for taxes in the hands of any person exercising by possession any claim thereto, to make such person liable for the current year's taxes, and in the event of such person selling the same to make taxes a first charge on the proceeds. The provisions of the Act are not very clearly expressed, but they do not in my opinion make such a sale as has taken place here, void or illegal as between the landlord and tenant."

Paton, J. concurred in the disposition of the appeal in that case and stated at p. 14:

> ""The proper interpretation of the sections of the statute quoted in the judgment of my brother Mellish is very difficult. This is due in some cases to the indefiniteness of the words and expressions used, and in other cases to the use of the same words and expressions with apparently different and inconsistent meanings. A logical analysis of the meaning of the Act in its application to this action is impossible. On the whole, I think we should give the Act an interpretation which brings about the result arrived at by Mellish, J."

Mellish, J. concluded that the section should not receive a technical interpretation.

In my opinion s. 118(1) of the Assessment Act clearly describes four events that give rise to a requirement that a person, other than the owner of the personal property, pay the rates and taxes rated and levied against the owner or person in possession of the personal property in question. The first of these events is when a mortgagee takes possession of personal property of the taxpayer. When this happens the mortgagee is required, pursuant to s. 118(1), to pay the taxes on the said personal property that is taken possession of pursuant to the terms of the mortgage.

By reason of the provisions of s. 118(3), the mortgagee, who takes possession, is personally liable to the municipality for the taxes owing for the current year and may be sued therefore by the municipality as for an ordinary debt.

It was on the basis of the provisions in s. 118(1) and (3) that the City of Dartmouth sued Barclays Bank. Barclays Bank had taken possession of the machinery and equipment of CNC by the appointment of Deloitte & Touche as receiver and the requirement to pay was, therefore, triggered on February 11, 1992, when Deloitte & Touche, on behalf of Barclays Bank, went into possession.

I see the issue in the case as being whether or not those provisions of the Assessment Act are rendered inapplicable or inoperative by reason of the subsequent assignment in bankruptcy of CNC. The answer to this question turns on the objects of the federal/provincial legislation and, in particular, the interpretation of s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act which provides for a scheme of distribution of the proceeds realized from the sale of the bankrupt's property and what effect applying s. 118 of the Assessment Act has on the scheme of distribution.

The Trial Judge's Decision

After reviewing the facts the learned Chambers judge stated the issue before him as follows:

> "Is Barclays and/or Deloitte required to pay the taxes owed by CNC to Dartmouth for the 1991/1992 taxation year? The analysis of that issue necessitates an inquiry whether s. 118 of the Assessment Act directly or indirectly overrides the scheme of distribution set out in the Bankruptcy Act."

Justice Saunders accepted the argument of counsel for Barclays Bank which he reproduced in his judgment as follows:

> "Under the Bankruptcy Act, the secured creditor is entitled to sell all assets over which it has security and there are two alternative positions with respect to the proceeds of the sale:
> first, the proceeds can be less than the amount owed to the secured creditor, in which case the secured creditor retains all proceeds of sale and files as an unsecured creditor with the trustee in bankruptcy for the deficiency;
> secondly, the proceeds of distribution totally retire the secured creditors debt and costs of realization, in which case the surplus is remitted to the trustee in bankruptcy for the > general benefit of all creditors and to be distributed in accordance with the terms and provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, notably Section 136(1).

Digitized by Google

> If, however, the position advanced by the City of Dartmouth is adopted the following results: the proceeds of realization by Barclays Bank of Canada would, in effect, be used first to retire the debt of the bankrupt to the City of Dartmouth for machinery and equipment and business occupancy taxes and second to be applied to reduce the debt of the bankrupt to Barclays Bank. In the situation where there is a surplus, the City of Dartmouth would not have to file a proof of claim with the Trustee, since their debt was the first to be retrieved.
> If, as the Plaintiff claims, Section 118 of the Assessment Act applies in the event of a bankruptcy, then the province will be viewed as a secured creditor and its position will be elevated from the rank of tenth (j) or fifth (e) to the rank of first in the scheme of distribution. The Defendant submits that such an interpretation is ultra vires the province since it attempts to usurp the Federal scheme."

The learned Chambers judge considered four decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada on the subject of provincial legislation that appears to be in conflict with the Federal bankruptcy legislation which have become known as the "quartet". He concluded his decision as follows:

> "I can come to no other conclusion but that the application of s. 118 of the Nova Scotia Assessment Act in these circumstances is to alter the scheme of distribution under the Bankruptcy Act. Although the Assessment Act may determine priorities prior to bankruptcy, once CNC made a voluntary assignment into bankruptcy, the Bankruptcy Act exclusively determined the status, priority and ranking of creditors. To permit the plaintiff's application would be to subvert the scheme of distribution under the Bankruptcy Act. That is not within the sphere of legislative competence of a province.
> In the result, s. 118 of the Assessment Act was rendered inoperative, upon the bankruptcy of CNC, by the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act.
> The plaintiff's application is dismissed with costs to the defendants."

Review of the Relevant Law

Subsequent to the trial judge's decision which was rendered on March 27th, 1995, the Supreme Court of Canada on October 19th, 1995, filed its decision in Workers' Compensation Board v. Husky Oil Operations Limited indexed as Husky Oil Operations Limited v. M.N.R., 1995 CanLII 69 (SCC), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453; 128 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (S.C.C.). The issue before the Supreme Court of Canada involved consideration of the applicability of provincial workers' compensation legislation to s. 136(1)(h) of the Bankruptcy Act. In that case Husky Oil contracted with Metal Fabricating and Construction Limited respecting the construction of a heavy oil upgrader owned by Husky Oil in Saskatchewan. The contractor had not paid the required contributions to the Workers' Compensation Fund. On March 2nd, 1992, the Workers' Compensation Board advised the contractor that $208,850.50 was due and payable. Soon thereafter the Bank of Montreal obtained an assignment of book debts from the contractor. On March 16th the Board was advised that the contractor had ceased operations. The Board then sought payment from Husky Oil, the principal of the defaulting contractor, pursuant to s. 133(1) of the of the Workers' Compensation Act which, in such circumstances, allows the Board to obtain the required contributions from the principal. Pursuant to s. 133(3) of the Act the principal could set off the amount paid to the Board from what it owed to the contractor. At that time Husky Oil owed the contractor approximately $800,000. On March 19, 1992, subsequent to the Board having sought payment from Husky Oil, the contractor made an assignment in bankruptcy (Iacobucci J., paragraph 95).

Under s. 136(1)(h) of the Bankruptcy Act, a claim by the Workers' Compensation Board would rank 8th in priority to payment from the proceeds of realization by the trustee on the sale of the bankrupt's assets after the claims of secured creditors were paid.

Husky Oil applied to the trial judge to determine whether it should make the payments required by s. 133(1) to the Compensation Board. The trial judge held that the Provincial legislation was inapplicable as, if applied, it would alter the scheme of distribution in the federal bankruptcy legislation. The Saskatchewan Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal on the basis that s. 133(1) and (3) of the Workers' Compensation Act were ultra vires as they applied to bankruptcy. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Court split five to four. The majority dismissed the appeal.

Gonthier, J., writing for the majority, found that the debt deemed against Husky Oil by s. 133(1) of the Workers' Compensation Act working in tandem with the set-off allowed the principal against the bankrupt contractor under s. 133(3) of the Act, diminished the bankrupt's estate. The net effect of this is that the contractor's liability is discharged out of its own property and not from the property of the principal. The effect of this was also to secure the claim of the Board against the assets of the bankrupt contractor and allow recovery by the Board ahead of the priority assigned to such an entity by Parliament under s. 136(1)(h) of the Bankruptcy Act. The majority was of the opinion that there was a clear conflict between the provincial and federal legislation because the provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act re-ordered federal priorities for claims by third parties such as the Compensation Board against the bankrupt even though the federal bankruptcy legislation allows for the operation of the law of set-off as between Husky Oil and the contractor. The majority concluded that s. 133 should be read down as inapplicable to the exclusive federal sphere of bankruptcy even though it was legislation of general application that had not been enacted with the intention to interfere with the Bankruptcy Act.

Iacobucci J., writing for the minority, held that s. 133(1) of the Workers' Compensation Act did not affect the property of the bankrupt; it simply allows the Compensation Board to recover from Husky Oil, a non-bankrupt third party. The minority held that the provisions were not enacted for the purpose of improving the ranking of the Compensation Board in bankruptcy proceedings and that the section was not in operational conflict with federal bankruptcy law. The minority were of the opinion that s. 133(1) could stand independent from s. 133(3). Although s.133(3) allowed Husky Oil to take from the bankrupt's property by asserting a set-off, the operation of the law of set-off has been preserved by s. 97(3) of the Bankruptcy Act. The minority held that any interference with the bankruptcy scheme does not result in the clear conflict required to trigger the paramountcy doctrine; a mere effect on a federal sphere of legislative power is not sufficient to invalidate legislation.

Gonthier J., writing for the majority, did a thorough review of the purposes of the federal bankruptcy legislation and a review of the decisions of the Supreme Court in Re Bourgault reflex, (1979), 105 D.L.R. (3d) 270, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 35 sub nom. Deputy Minister of Revenue v. Rainville; Deloitte Haskins& Sells Ltd. v. Alberta (Workers' Compensation Board) 1985 CanLII 82 (SCC), (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 577, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 785; Federal Business Development Bank v. Québec (Commission de la Santé et de la Sécurité du Travail 1988 CanLII 105 (SCC), (1988), 50 D.L.R. (4th) 577, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 1061; and British Columbia v. Henfrey Samson Belair Limited 1989 CanLII 43 (SCC), (1989), 59 D.L.R. (4th) 726, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 24 (the so-called "quartet").

> ".....my overview of the quartet hopefully indicated, the goal of maintaining a nationally homogeneous system of bankruptcy priorities has properly been a constant concern of this court. Were the situation otherwise, "Canada [would] have a balkanized bankruptcy regime which [would] diminish the significance of the exclusivity of federal jurisdiction over bankruptcy and insolvency. ... Otherwise there could be a different scheme in every jurisdiction; ten different bankruptcy regimes would make ordinary commercial affairs extremely complex, unwieldy and costly, not only for Canadians but also for our international trading partners" (Roman and Sweatman, supra, at pp. 80, 104). This is a prospect which this court has been acutely mindful of in the past, and its vigilance has ensured the continuing vitality of our nation's bankruptcy legislation. In my view, its past vigilance commends itself to the present and, barring an amendment to s. 91(21) of the Constitution Act, 1867, also to the future.
> In this regard, I agree with Iacobucci J., at para. 147, that a bankruptcy priority is a category, and also that provincial law may result in the content of such categories being different from province to province. However, provincial law does not and cannot define the content of bankruptcy priorities or categories without limitation. Indeed, crucial limitation is imposed by the order of priorities in the Bankruptcy Act itself. Thus, while individual provinces can define and rank categories such as "secured creditor" and "trust" as they each have their own purposes, those provincial laws which enter into conflict with the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act are simply without application in bankruptcy. Such, indeed, was this court's unequivocal holding in Re Bourgault, Deloitte Haskins, and F.B.D.B. with respect to "secured creditors" and in Henfrey Samson with respect to "trusts":'

The essence of the majority's decision in Husky Oil is contained in paragraph 49 where Justice Gonthier stated:

> "Furthermore, when s. 133(1) and (3) operate in tandem as intended by this legislation, the principal's right to withhold and be indemnified from moneys owing to the contractor in the event that the principal is deemed responsible for the contractor's liability means that the principal will ultimately not be responsible for that liability. Instead, the debt to the Board is effectively discharged with property of the contractor when the principal exercises its right of set-off. Differently put, when s. 133(1) and (3) operate together, the principal is no worse off after having acted as the contractor's surety. The principal's estate or, to use civil law terminology, its patrimony remains entirely unaffected even after discharging its "personal" liability to the Board. As a result of the principal's right of set-off against moneys owing to the contractor, it is the contractor's estate or patrimony which is diminished to the extent of the assessments owing to the > Board. The reality of this scheme, then, is that the contractor discharges its own liability to the Board, mediated through the legally compelled agency of the principal."

Digitized by Google

Justice Gonthier concluded that the combined effect of ss. 133(1) and (3) was to secure the claim of the Compensation Board against the assets of the contractor. In short, the bankrupt's estate, available for distribution to preferred creditors pursuant to s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act, (after the claims of secured creditors are satisfied) is diminished by the application of ss. 133(1) and 133(3) of the Saskatchewan Workers' Compensation Act. The effect of the provincial legislation is to secure the Board's claim against the bankrupt estate ahead of its priority ranking under s. 136 of the Bankruptcy Act. In paragraph 68 Gonthier J. stated:

> "We have consistently held that the deference to provincial law in the Bankruptcy Act does not extend to the reordering of claims against the estate. At that point, provincial law simply ceases to apply for intruding into an exclusive federal sphere. Such, then, must also be the fate of the impugned legislation in this appeal."

Of significance to the issue before us are the comments of Justice Gonthier at paragraph 77 of his opinion where he stated:

> "At this point, I should perhaps stress that nothing I have said detracts from a province's authority to impose liability on a third party for a bankrupt's debt. What a province cannot do, however, is create a statutory security device which has the effect of reordering the priorities of distribution of the assets in the bankrupt's estate. In such a case, what is otherwise valid provincial legislation is simply without application upon the occurrence of bankruptcy."

He went on in paragraph 79 to again emphasize that his decision rested on the operation in tandem of the provisions of s. 133(1) and 133(3) of the Workers' Compensation Act. He stated:

> "In the foregoing, I have proceeded on the basis that s. 133(1) operates in tandem with s. 133(3), that is, that the principal has moneys owing to the contractor which it can use as a basis for set-off when the Board deems it liable for the contractor's assessment. Where a principal has such moneys owing, it was clearly the legislature's intention that such a right to set-off be exercised in order that the contractor ultimately be responsible for its own assessment. In this sense, where both s. 133(1) and (3) potentially apply on the facts of a given case, it was clearly the legislature's intention that the right to set-off be exercised. As a result, in such a case s. 133 is inapplicable in toto against the bankruptcy."

Counsel for the City of Dartmouth puts considerable reliance on the statement made by Justice Gonthier in paragraph 80 to support his argument that s. 118 of the Assessment Act should be allowed to operate in the case we have under appeal. Justice Gonthier stated:

> "(80) However, there may be instances where the principal does not hold or retain any moneys owing to the contractor. While the court did not have the benefit of extensive submissions on this point, I believe it is quite plausible to conclude that the principal can then claim from the estate as a preferred creditor under s. 136(1)(h), since its claim is comprehended with "indebtedness of the bankrupt under any Workmen's Compensation Act". This would appear to be permissible because on its plain wording s. 136(1)(h) specifies only the nature of the claim and not the identity of the claimant. As a result, if only s. 133(1) applies, the Board has not secured its claim against the estate but recovers only from the principal. The scheme of distribution of assets in the estate is thereby unaffected. In such a case, there is no constitutional reason why full effect should not be given to provincial law within its legitimate sphere of operation. I would therefore only read down s. 133 to the extent that in application it enters into conflict with the scheme of distribution in the Bankruptcy Act. Where s. 133(1) alone is engaged in a given case, the Board's claim against the principal continues to be fully applicable." (Emphasis added)

I will return to the considerations raised by the foregoing statement.

In paragraph 87 Gonthier J. felt it appropriate to summarize his view on the proper constitutional analysis where federal and provincial legislation potentially conflict. He stated:

> "In view of Iacobucci J. 's statement that "[provincial] [l]egislation that is intra vires is permitted to have an incidental and ancillary effect on a federal sphere" [at para. 162], I think it appropriate in concluding to summarize my view as to the proper constitutional analysis where federal and provincial legislation potentially conflict. One must first determine whether the laws are respectively valid federal or provincial legislation. If so, the actual operation of the laws must be examined to determine whether they are in operational conflict, that is, inconsistent or incapable of being fully complied with in a given situation. If they are in operational conflict, the federal legislation prevails and the provincial legislation is without > effect to the extent of this conflict. If the operational conflict is in a field of exclusive federal jurisdiction, the provincial legislation will be inapplicable as being ultra vires to that extent. If the conflict is in an area of concurrent or overlapping jurisdictions, the provincial legislation will remain intra vires but be inoperative. To the extent that there is operational conflict, there is no room for an incidental or ancillary effect of provincial legislation. If, on the other hand, there is no operational conflict, then both laws continue to operate and both continue to have effect to the extent that operational conflict does not arise. Short of operational conflict, provincial law may validly have an effect on bankruptcy, as I have indeed acknowledged in observing that there is no bankruptcy "bottom line" without provincial law (at para. 30). In the present case, I have found clear operational conflict in that s. 133(1) and (3) in their operation together entail a reordering or subverting of the federal order of priorities under the Bankruptcy Act. Such an intrusion into an exclusive federal sphere necessarily goes far beyond an incidental and ancillary effect. I believe this proposition runs thorough my reasons."

What emerges from Gonthier J.'s analysis of the quartet is the recognition by the Supreme Court of Canada of six propositions or principles to be considered by a court when dealing with potential conflicts between provincial and federal legislation where s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act is engaged (Husky Oil, paras. 39 and 40).

Those principles are as follows:

> "(1) provinces cannot create priorities between creditors or change the scheme of distribution on bankruptcy under s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act;
> (2) while provincial legislation may validly affect priorities in a non-bankruptcy situation, once bankruptcy has occurred section 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act determines the status and priority of the claims specifically dealt with in that section;
> (3) if the provinces could create their own priorities or affect priorities under the Bankruptcy Act this would invite a different scheme of distribution on bankruptcy from province to province, an unacceptable situation; and
> (4) the definition of terms such as "secured creditor", if defined under the Bankruptcy Act, must be interpreted in bankruptcy cases as defined by the federal Parliament, not the provincial legislatures. Provinces cannot affect how such terms are defined for purposes of the Bankruptcy Act.
> (5) in determining the relationship between provincial legislation and the Bankruptcy Act, the form of the provincial interest created must not be allowed to triumph over its substance. The provinces are not entitled to do indirectly what they are prohibited from doing directly;
> (6) there need not be any provincial intention to intrude into the exclusive federal sphere of bankruptcy and to conflict with the order of priorities of the Bankruptcy Act in order to render the provincial law inapplicable. It is sufficient that the effect of provincial legislation is to do so."

Appellant's Submission

The appellant submits that the ratio decidendi of the majority decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Husky Oil is the rejection of what was labelled the "bottom line approach" in that case (See paragraphs 29 and 30). I disagree. I would refer to Gonthier J.'s statement in paragraph 31:

> "However, even rejecting the simplistic "bottom line" approach, I do not agree that the quartet stands for the sole proposition that the provinces cannot "jump the queue". In my opinion, the quartet embodies a consistent and general philosophy as to the purposes of the federal system of bankruptcy and its relation to provincial property arrangements. That philosophy cannot be captured in the pithy but limited proposition that the provinces cannot "jump the queue".

Counsel for the City of Dartmouth argues that the learned trial judge applied the "bottom line approach" which was described by Gonthier J. in paragraph 29 as being an approach which posits that "any time provincial law affects the final result of a bankruptcy, the province is improperly attempting to alter the priorities of distribution".

The essence of the appellant's submission is that one must look to the facts of the particular case and if the effect of applying s. 118 of the Assessment Act on the facts of the case does not diminish the estate of the bankrupt then s. 118 does no more than impose a liability on a secured creditor as a cost of realization of its security. He argues s. 118 makes no attempt to affect the property of the bankrupt nor does it attempt to give a secured creditor, Barclays Bank, recovery rights with respect to the bankrupt property whether through setoff or otherwise.

I will deal with these submissions in setting out the reasons why I am of the opinion that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

Analysis of Issues raised on this Appeal

The provincial legislation in issue in three of the so-called quartet cases was different in a fundamental aspect from the facts of the case we have before us. In these cases the issue of s. 136(1) priorities affected by the conflicting provincial legislation related to provincial legislation securing a claim (of the nature identified in s. 136(1)) against the bankrupt's property thus giving that claimant security and, thus, priority against the property that otherwise would be available for distribution pursuant to the order of priority established in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. In British Columbia v. Henfrey Samson Belair Ltd. 1989 CanLII 43 (SCC), (1989), 59 D.L.R. (4th) 726, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 24, 75 C.B.R. (N.S.) 1, the provincial legislature created a deemed statutory trust with respect to monies held by the bankrupt that had been collected as provincial sales tax. The majority of the Court held that it was not a valid trust. McLachlin J., writing for the majority, concluded that the reality of the property interest created by the provincial legislation ought to govern over the form, and as a result the province's claim failed.

In Husky Oil the provincial legislation did not directly create a charge on the bankrupt's property; it made a third party personally liable. That is the situation that exists in the case before us. Furthermore, in Husky Oil and in the case we have under consideration the personal liability of the third parties had been triggered before the assignment in bankruptcy. There is no clear indication in Husky Oil if there were surplus funds from realization of the bankrupt property after payment of the secured claims. However, in paragraph 96 there is an indication that there would not have been any funds available to the Board as a preferred creditor if s. 133 of the Workers' Compensation Act was inapplicable. Therefore, on the facts of Husky Oil, as in the case we have under consideration, there would not have been any money for the preferred creditor in question unless effect were given to the provincial legislation in issue.

In Husky Oil, if effect were given to s. 131(1) and (3) of the Workers' Compensation Act the property of the bankrupt available for distribution to the other preferred creditors would have been diminished and, therefore, the order of priorities under s. 136(1) altered.

In each of the cases on which the Supreme Court of Canada ruled, it was held that if the provincial legislation were given effect it would diminish the amounts realized from the bankrupt's property and, thus, diminish the amounts available for payment of preferred and unsecured creditors. However, the provincial legislation under which the City of Dartmouth claims Barclays Bank is liable for CNC's taxes does not expressly involve a priority claim to the bankrupt's property that but for the priority would have been available for the preferred or unsecured creditors but a personal claim against a mortgagee who went into possession.

The question arises as to whether or not the provincial legislation we have under consideration can be given effect without affecting the scheme of distribution under s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. If the City's claim against Barclays Bank is enforceable there would not appear to be a diminishment of the bankrupt's property available for distribution to the preferred creditors pursuant to s. 136(1) of the Act as on the facts of this case there is nothing to distribute after payment of the secured creditor Barclays Bank.

"The quartet" and Husky Oil decisions all involved situations where the application of the provincial legislation would clearly have had the effect of diminishing the proceeds from the realization of the bankrupt's property and thus effect the distribution envisaged under. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. The majority decision in Husky Oil in paragraph 80 concedes that provincial legislation designed to secure payment of money owing to a provincial entity may be allowed to operate if the application of the provincial legislation does not effect the scheme of distribution provided for in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act.

The minority in Husky Oil would have allowed s. 133(1) and (3) of the Workers' Compensation Act to operate despite the bankruptcy of the contractor. The minority concluded at p. 71:

> "In terms of constitutional analysis, the simple fact that a provincial undertaking may have an effect upon a bankruptcy does not necessarily mean that such an undertaking is to be nullified under paramountcy analysis. Further, the fact that the Board might be able to recover more money as a result of s. 133 does not mean that this provision is in operational conflict with the Bankruptcy Act. Operational conflict means that compliance with the provincial statute means offending the federal one. But the two pieces of legislation involved here are complementary."

With respect to the proper approach to questions of paramountcy between federal and provincial legislation, Iacobucci J. stated at paragraph 122:

> "In the case at bar, the courts below did not demonstrate the appropriate level of judicial restraint in their application of paramountcy doctrine. In my view, courts should carefully look for co-existence, not strive to find conflict."

Digitized by Google

After reviewing the so-called quartet decisions Justice Iacobucci directed his attention to the consequences of these decisions and made further comments on the proper approach when dealing with potential conflicting general provincial legislation and federal legislation respecting bankruptcy; he stated at paragraph 141:

> " ....The quartet stands for the position that only those provincial laws which directly improve the priority of a claim upon the actual property of the bankrupt over that accorded by the Bankruptcy Act are inoperative. This accords with the facts of the cases in the quartet. In each case, the provincial governments endeavoured to change the priorities of preferred creditors in s. 136(1) by elevating a lower ranked claim to a higher rank. In Re Bourgault and Belair, the province attempted to "queue jump" claims of the Crown ranked last by s. 136(1)(j) by declaring such debts to be "privileges" (Re Bourgault) or deeming them to be "trust money" and hence outside the distribution scheme (Belair). In Deloitte, the province attempted to elevate its claim through a proposed security interest and, finally, in F.B.D.B., the province once again endeavoured to use the mechanism of a privilege/lien." {Emphasis added}

And further at paragraph 149:

> "I conclude that within the context of the bankruptcy process judicial authority and common sense militate in favour of a guarded approach to invalidation under the paramountcy doctrine. When this analysis is applied to the case at bar, it obliges the respondents, in order to prevail, to demonstrate that s. 133 of the impugned provincial Act actually reorders the federally established priority scheme with regard to the property of the bankrupt Metal Fab by directly creating interests therein. I now turn to this issue." {Emphasis added}

Most significantly for the matters we have under consideration, he stated at paragraph 161:

> "In sum, s. 136(1)(h) encompasses a claim against the property of the bankrupt. The Board's claim under s. 133(1) targets a solvent principal. The two provisions are co-extensive, not mutually exclusive. Use of s. 133(1) does not displace s. 136(1)(h); it complements it."

If one were to apply the persuasive reasoning of the minority decision, the City of Dartmouth's claim would prevail on the facts of this case as s. 118 of the Assessment Act is valid provincial legislation enacted pursuant to s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act, 1867 and does not directly create an interest in the bankrupt's property in favour of the City of Dartmouth. As such, it should be given effect if it is not in operational conflict with federal bankruptcy legislation which would be paramount pursuant to the provisions of s. 91(21) of the Constitution Act, 1867. By applying s. 118(1) and (3) of the Assessment Act so as to require Barclays Bank to pay the City of Dartmouth $25,498.89, does not diminish the proceeds from the realization on the bankrupt's property by the trustee that would be available for distribution to the preferred creditors pursuant to s.136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act as there was nothing left to be diminished; the assets having sold for an amount that is only sufficient, if that, to pay the secured claim of Barclays Bank and something towards the trustee's fees.

On such an analysis the liability of the mortgagee, Barclays Bank, in relation to obligations created by the provincial legislation ought not to be extinguished by the mere fact that subsequent to the liability being created (when the mortgagee went into possession on February 11th, 1992) the mortgagor made an assignment in bankruptcy. The mortgagee is still subject to the laws of the province that may affect the mortgagee's remedies when realizing on the security for the loan. So long as the operational effect of this provincial law does not diminish the bankrupt's property available for distribution pursuant to s. 136(1) of the Act, the provincial legislation ought to be allowed to operate. Whether s. 118 of the Assessment Act can be invoked by a municipality in any given bankruptcy would on this analysis turn on the facts of the particular case.

Such a conclusion would be consistent with the views expressed by Gonthier J. in paragraph 80 of the Husky Oil decision and would certainly accord with the views of the minority.

However, I should state that in a different factual situation than that before us, s. 118(1) and (3) of the Assessment Act could not be given operational effect as this would offend the principles enunciated in Husky Oil. For example, in a bankruptcy in which there was a secured debt of $400,000 and the assets of the bankrupt realized $450,000, giving effect to s. 118(1) and (3) of the Assessment Act would require the mortgagee, who had gone into possession as Barclays Bank had, in this case, to pay a current year's taxes owing by the bankrupt to the municipality in which it did business. Pursuant to the standard form of debenture (as was provided for in Barclays debenture form) the mortgagee could add this sum (say $25,000) to its secured claim. The trustee in bankruptcy would have paid out $425,000 leaving only $25,000 available for the other creditors pursuant to s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act rather than $50,000 had s. 118(1) of the Assessment Act not been applied. Under such circumstances the pool of money available to s. 136 creditors would be reduced from $50,000 to $25,000. Such a situation would clearly fall within the principles developed by the majority decision in Husky Oil in that the proceeds of realization of the bankrupt property would be diminished by the application of s. 118 of the Assessment Act and would have the effect of reordering the priorities provided for in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act as the municipal taxes would be paid out of the bankrupt's property prior to payments to the preferred creditors with a superior ranking under s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. Under such circumstances s. 118 could not be applied as it would be in operational conflict with s. 136 of the Bankruptcy Act. Therefore, under such circumstances a municipality could not rank as a creditor of the bankrupt other than as provided for in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act.

Conclusion

I will briefly review the relevant facts:

(i) Barclays Bank went into possession of CNC's property as mortgagee following a default in payment of a mortgage on CNC's personal property;

(ii) there was a subsequent bankruptcy of CNC;

(iii) Section 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act provides for a scheme of distribution from the proceeds of realization of the bankrupt's property subject to the rights of secured creditors;

(iv) the City of Dartmouth does not claim a security interest in any of the bankrupt's property and is not a secured creditor within the meaning of that term in the Bankruptcy Act;

(v) there was no evidence in the agreed statement of facts as to the exact amount that was owing to Barclays Bank by CNC on the date the receiver went into possession - February 11th, 1992. However, the trustee, who has a duty to all the creditors, was apparently satisfied that at least $399,500 was owing to Barclays Bank under the Debenture as that amount was paid for the release of its security;

(vi) we know that the trustee was paid $500.00 and that it is reasonable to infer that his fees would be more that this amount. We also know that the trustee's fees are the second priority for payment under s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act;

(vii) if Barclays Bank is held personally liable to pay to the City CNC's outstanding taxes on personal property by the application of s. 118(1) and (3) of the Assessment Act, it can pursuant to Clause 3.5(b) of the Debenture add the amount paid to the debt secured by the Debenture and thus bring the indebtedness back up to $399,500;

(viii) there are no funds available for preferred creditors from the sale of the bankrupt's property other than the $500 generated from the sale of the assets of CNC to Kes Pacific.

The fundamental difference between the majority and minority decisions in Husky Oil is that Gonthier J.'s decision is rooted in what he correctly perceives as a constant theme of the Supreme Court of Canada to have a consistent application of bankruptcy law from province to province and that any provincial legislation that creates a "statutory security device" which has the effect of re-ordering the priorities of creditors specifically mentioned in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act has no application once a debtor has gone into bankruptcy. And in assessing whether the legislation has the effect of creating a "statutory security device", substance must govern over form. The court must look to the effect of the provincial legislation on the scheme of distribution of a bankrupt property as provided in the Bankruptcy Act.

The minority's opinion is founded on an approach that requires the courts, when dealing with these problems, to attempt to reach a resolution that would allow the provincial legislation to operate rather than to strive to find conflict. Inherent in the minority view is that if the provincial legislation does not directly create an interest in the bankrupt's property because the legislation creates a claim against a third party, the provincial legislation does not diminish the bankrupt's property and can therefore co-exist with the Bankruptcy Act. In such circumstances the legislation should be given operational effect as it will not interfere with the order of priorities for distribution of the proceeds of the realization on the property of the bankrupt as provided for in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act.

In concluding that the appeal ought to be dismissed I have obviously been guided by the six propositions or principles adopted by the majority in Husky Oil. But I would note that in paragraph 80 Gonthier J. seems to concur with the minority that if the preferred creditors' claim is not secured against the bankrupt's property but recoverable from a third party the scheme of distribution of assets of the bankrupt is unaffected and full effect should be given to the provincial legislation. It is this aspect of the majority decision that forms the foundation of the appellant's argument before us and creates the dilemma in resolving this appeal.

In Husky Oil, the Bank of Montreal, as the principal secured creditor, was in a similar, although not identical position, to that of Barclays Bank. Both would lose their secured position to the extent of the preferred creditors' claims if the provincial legislation were given operative effect.

One of the prime purposes of the Bankruptcy Act is to provided a regime whereby the creditors of the bankrupt will pursue their claims by collective action through the trustee so that the assets of the bankrupt can be realized and distributed on an equitable basis subject to the priorities of preferred creditors and the rights of secured creditors. The Bankruptcy Act allows secured creditors to realize on their security as if there was not a bankruptcy (Husky Oil, paragraph 9).

Creditors holding security, such as a mortgage on real or personal property, are subject to a variety of provincial laws that have the effect of diminishing the amount realized on a sale of the secured property. One such device is s. 118 of the Assessment Act which provides that if a taxpayer has outstanding taxes owing to the Municipality on personal property and the mortgagee goes into possession, the mortgagee is liable to pay those taxes. Should the mere fact that the debtor has gone into bankruptcy make that provincial law inapplicable? The majority decision in Husky Oil seems to answer yes to that question.
Although there seems to be a mixed message created by paragraph 80 of the majority decision, I would note that the comments of Gonthier J. in that paragraph were clearly obiter dicta and seem to run contrary to the general theme of the judgment.
Iacobucci J. stated that he found the concepts developed in the majority judgment with respect to tests to be applied in resolving conflicts between provincial legislation that infringe upon the federal bankruptcy field to be "somewhat confusing".
The situations in Husky Oil and in this appeal are significantly similar in three respects: (i) the provincial legislation in issue does not in its form create a charge against property of the bankrupt; (ii) the personal liability of the third parties arose before the bankruptcy; and (iii) giving operational effect to the provincial legislation on the facts would not have diminished the funds available for the preferred creditors under s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act as there would not have been a surplus after payment of the secured creditors.

In addition to the similarity of the facts, what is persuasive in resolving the issues in the appeal we have under consideration is that the majority decision in Husky Oil reaffirms the principles upon which the decisions in the quartet were founded. We must be guided by the majority decision in Husky Oil and, in particular, the six propositions spelled out in that decision as representing the current law relating to the issue before us.
With these propositions in mind one is driven to the conclusion that s. 118 of the Assessment Act has the combined effect of diminishing the security of the mortgagee and re-ordering the priorities of preferred creditors to payment as established by s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. This is so because Barclays Bank as mortgagee holds the first fixed charge against the machinery and equipment of the bankrupt. Under s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act the right of a municipality to have outstanding taxes on personal property of the bankrupt paid by the trustee in bankruptcy is subject to both the rights of the secured creditors and to those preferred creditors ranking ahead of the municipality under s. 136(1). The majority decision in Husky Oil makes it clear that in considering such statutory security devices substance must govern over form. Although the liability of Barclays Bank under s. 118(1) is personal the substantive effect of applying s. 118(1) is to give the City of Dartmouth what amounts to a secured claim against the machinery and equipment ranking ahead of, not only other higher ranked preferred creditors under s. 136(1), but also ahead of Barclays Bank, a secured creditor. This is so because, in effect, the City of Dartmouth's claim will be paid out of the realization of the sale of the bankrupt's property that secured the claim of Barclays Bank. Gonthier J.'s use of the term "statutory security device" must be considered in combination with his statement that the substance of the legislation in question governs over its form. Therefore the term includes, not only statutory provisions which create a lien against property of the bankrupt, but also provisions that have such an effect. Section 118(1) is such a statutory security device as the personal liability of the mortgagee who goes into possession will, in effect, be covered by the proceeds of the realization of the bankrupt property by the mortgagee. Furthermore, the effect of applying s. 118 of the Assessment Act is to re-order the priorities of preferred creditors to realize from the sale of the bankrupt property as provided for in s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act. Based on the majority decision in Husky Oil, the fact that there would not be any funds available for the preferred creditors in any event does not appear to be a relevant consideration in determining the applicability of the provincial legislation following a bankruptcy. Therefore, applying the majority decision in Husky Oil and the propositions therein recognized, s. 118 of the Assessment Act is inapplicable following the assignment in bankruptcy by CNC as it is in conflict with the federal bankruptcy legislation. If s. 118 of the Assessment Act were to be applied by this court in these circumstances the decision would be contrary to each of the six propositions recognized by the majority decision in Husky Oil.
The fact that a secured creditor can improve his position by causing a debtor to be put into bankruptcy is a price that was acceptable to the Supreme Court of Canada in FBDB v. Quebec to accomplish the end of having uniform bankruptcy laws from coast to coast in Canada. In that case Lamer J. stated:

> " Once the bankruptcy has occurred, the federal statute applies to all creditors of the debtor.
> It is true that such a solution may encourage secured creditors to bring about the bankruptcy of their debtor in order to improve their title. On the other hand, this solution has obvious advantages. As soon as > a the bankruptcy occurs the Bankruptcy Act will be applied: the mere fact that a creditor is mentioned in s. 107 of the Bankruptcy Act suffices for such creditor to be ranked as a preferred creditor and in the position indicated in that provision. As provincial statutes cannot affect the priorities created by the federal statute, consistency in the order of priority in bankruptcy situations is ensured from one province to another."

Accordingly, I would dismiss the appeal and order the City of Dartmouth to pay to Barclays Bank the costs with respect to the hearing before Justice Saunders and the appeal to this Court in the total amount of $4,000 plus disbursements to be taxed.

THE FACTS

The parties

[2] This appeal arises out of the bankruptcy of two companies, Everingham Brothers Limited and 764388 Ontario Limited. 764388 Ontario Limited operated as Royal Spas and I will refer to it as Royal Spas in these reasons. Everingham owned commercial premises at 5 Tilbury Court in Brampton. Everingham was a manufacturer of stainless steel cookware and therefore it had various presses and dies as well as inventory on the premises. Royal Spas leased space in the Tilbury property where it carried on the manufacture and distribution of hot tubs and whirlpool spas. It too had equipment and inventory on the premises. Everingham and Royal Spas were controlled by Nicholas Bulut and his family. Nicholas Bulut was the president of both companies.

[3] The respondent Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada holds the first mortgage granted by Everingham on the Tilbury property. The original loan secured by the mortgage was $2,250,000 and the mortgage was registered against the Tilbury property in January 1992.

[4] Nicholas Bulut became a secured creditor of Everingham under the following circumstances. In 1991, Everingham granted a security interest to the Royal Bank to secure a loan for $568,000. The financing statement was registered in accordance with the Personal Property Security Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. P. 10 in November 1991. Bulut purchased the Royal Bank interest in the security on November 25, 1996 and the Bank assigned the security to Bulut. On November 26, 1996, a financing change statement was registered under the PPSA. On June 30, 1995, Everingham granted a security interest to Bulut to secure a revolving line of credit to be advanced by Bulut. This security was registered on April 2, 1997. At that time the line of credit stood at approximately $100,000. There is no suggestion that Bulut did not advance the funds for which the security interests were granted in either case. Thus, by April 1997 Bulut was a secured creditor of Everingham in the amount of approximately $650,000.

[5] The other appellant in this case is 1238157 Ontario Inc. ("123. Inc."). It became a secured creditor of Royal Spas under the following circumstances. In April 1995, Royal Spas granted a security interest to Nicholas Bulut to secure a $2,000,000 revolving line of credit. In April 1997, that line of credit stood at just under $1,300,000. On May 14, 1997, Bulut registered his security interest in accordance with the PPSA. On May 23, 1997, Bulut assigned his security interest to 123 Inc. and a financing change statement was registered a year later on March 24, 1998. 123 Inc. is controlled by the Bulut family and Nicholas Bulut's son is a director of that company. On June 26, 1995, Royal Spas granted a general security agreement to National Bank of Canada to secure a $250,000 loan. A financing statement was registered in accordance with the PPSA. On May 16, 1997, 123 Inc. purchased the National Bank's interest and the general security agreement was assigned to it. A financing change statement was registered on May 20, 1997. Thus, by May 1997, 123 Inc. was a secured creditor of Royal Spas for approximately $1,500,000.

The court proceedings

[6] In January 1996, Everingham went into default under the mortgage to Sun Life. On April 2, 1997, Dyson J. granted possession of the Tilbury property and leave to issue a writ of possession to Sun Life. Sun Life took possession on April 25, 1997 and changed the locks. At this point, Sun Life did not have any security interest in the personal property of the bankrupts. The core of the dispute in this appeal centres on the attempts by Everingham and Royal Spas to recover possession of their chattels in the Tilbury property. To further complicate matters, on May 2, 1997, a bailiff acting on behalf of the City of Brampton levied distraint upon Everingham's personal property for arrears in the payment of business taxes of approximately $80,000.

[7] Shortly after Sun Life took possession, Everingham and Royal Spas brought a motion for an order for recovery of their personal property. On May 9, 1997, Thomas J. made an order that on or before May 15, 1997, Everingham and Royal Spas pay $35,000 into court on account of occupation costs, costs of security guards and utilities. In the meantime, they were to have access to the premises from 6:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Monday to Friday of each week. They were also entitled to use the packaging machines. Everingham and Royal Spas were to be responsible for the cost of security guards, utilities and occupation costs in an amount to be determined by Thomas J. The $35,000 was paid in accordance with this order.

[8] From this time on, there was a continuing dispute between Sun Life and Everingham and Royal Spas about access to the property. One difficulty was that the City of Brampton claimed to have a secured interest in the personal property of Everingham and it and another creditor, Aristech Chemical International Limited, obtained court orders enjoining Everingham and Royal Spas from in any way dealing with Everingham's personal property. Further, it appears relatively clear that Everingham and Royal Spas were not particularly interested in vacating the premises. Rather, Everingham hoped to reach a settlement with Sun Life. Several agreements were reached but never carried out by Everingham.

[9] A critical order in the appeal is the order made by MacKenzie J. on June 4, 1997, in response to a further motion by Everingham and Royal Spas for an order to permit recovery of their personal property. Nicholas Bulut swore an affidavit in support of this motion. In effect, Everingham and Royal Spas sought an extension of time to realize on their inventory and remove their personal property. The order of June 4, 1997 included the following provisions:

1. The occupancy costs (consisting of rent and security services) was fixed at $1,305 per day from and including April 25, 1997.
2. The $35,000 paid into court was to be paid out to Sun Life on account of the occupancy costs.
3. The shortfall of $17,200 as of June 4, 1997 was to be paid by June 16, 1997. Thereafter, the occupancy costs were to be paid on a weekly basis.
4. Everingham and Royal Spas were to have to August 1, 1997 to remove their equipment, inventory and trade chattels subject to the following:

(a) any sale that may take place by Aristech pursuant to MacKenzie J.'s order of the same date;

(b) provided that Everingham an Royal Spas make the payments referred to in para. (3.).

[10] The fifth paragraph of the order is the most important. It purported to create a charging order and was in the following terms:

5. THIS COURT ORDERS that if the Plaintiffs [Everingham and Royal Spas] fail to make the payment referred to in paragraph 3 of the Order the Defendant [Sun Life] shall be at liberty to exercise its right under the writ of possession herein and that any arrears in payment of occupancy costs shall be a charge on the said equipment, inventory and trade chattels in the same manner and to the same extent as a landlord's distress subject to any rulings as to the entitlement and priorities of the parties on the motion contemplated under paragraph 9 of my Order of even date in Court File No. 87-CV-428-CM, with liability for the occupancy costs on the proceeds of sale by Aristech only from June 4, 1997 to the date of vacant possession. [Emphasis added.]

[11] While Everingham and Royal Spas paid the shortfall of $17,200 they did not pay any of the occupancy costs thereafter. They were also not able to remove their equipment and inventory from the premises.

[12] On September 17, 1997, Everingham filed a Notice of Intention to file a proposal with the official receiver pursuant to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B.-3. On October 3, 1997, on motion by Sun Life, MacKenzie J. lifted the stay of proceedings under the BIA to allow Sun Life to sell Everingham's assets if the occupancy costs were not paid by Everingham by October 17, 1997. MacKenzie J.'s order contains the following:

THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Sun Life has a charge on the assets of Everingham in the possession of Sun Life on the Premises (the "Assets") and that Sun Life shall be entitled to distrain against the Assets in accordance with the terms of the Occupation Order for the amounts payable to it as occupancy costs accruing at the rate of $1,305.00 per day from June 4, 1997 to the date when Sun Life receives vacant possession of the Property and to, subject to the provisions of this Order, proceed to sell such portion of the Assets as described hereinafter. [Emphasis added.]

[13] Everingham failed to file a proposal and therefore became bankrupt on October 17, 1997 (effective September 17, 1997).

[14] On October 23, 1997, Bulut, as security holder of Everingham, and 123 Inc., as security holder of Royal Spas, served notice on Sun Life that they intended to exercise their security interest over the collateral and chattels of Everingham and Royal Spas in accordance with the PPSA. Sun Life served its own notice refusing to recognize these security interests and objected to Bulut and 123 Inc. (the appellants) realizing on their security. Ultimately, the assets of Everingham and Royal Spas were sold by an interim receiver and the proceeds now stand in court to the credit of these proceedings.

[15] Royal Spas made a voluntary assignment in bankruptcy on March 31, 1998.

[16] On April 8, 1998, Bulut and 123 Inc. brought a motion for a declaration that their security interests had priority over the occupancy costs payable to Sun Life in accordance with the charging order of June 4, 1997. MacKenzie J. heard the motion and issued orders on May 14, 1998 in respect of Everingham and June 3, 1998 in respect of Royal Spas. It is these orders that are subject to this appeal.

The orders under appeal

[17] The orders made by MacKenzie J. may be summarized as follows:

i. Sun Life is a "secured creditor" within the meaning of the BIA.

Digitized by Google

ii. The charge on the assets of Everingham and Royal Spas respecting the occupancy costs created by the order of June 4, 1997 constitutes a "lien" within the meaning of the PPSA, which lien is enforceable "in the same manner and to the same extent as a landlord's distress".
iii. Sun Life, as a secured creditor and lien holder, is outside the priorities regimes stipulated under the BIA and the PPSA.
iv. Sun Life has the right to enforce its lien rights for its occupancy costs in priority to the security interests of Bulut and 123 Co. in the assets of Everingham and Royal Spas respectively.
v. The sale of the assets of Everingham and Royal Spas was to proceed forthwith.

[18] MacKenzie J. gave the following reasons for these orders. In his reasons in relation to Everingham he held that the charge created by the June 4, 1997 order made Sun Life a secured creditor, applying Re Sara (1985), 56 C.B.R. 283 (Ont. H.C.J.). He held that the charging order also gave Sun Life a lien "by operation of law". (Since the parties are agreed that the Personal Property Security Act does not apply to determine the priorities, I need not decide whether this is a correct characterization of the charging order.) Further, by reason of the order of October 3, 1997, Sun Life "in enforcing its rights has the status of a landlord distraining, either actually or constructively". As to the question of priorities among the secured creditors, MacKenzie J. held as follows:
Since Sun Life is outside the ambit of both the BIA and the PPSA regimes in terms of priorities, Sun Life has priority over Bulut in satisfying the charge or lien in its favour with respect to occupancy costs.

[19] MacKenzie J. held, however, that there were no grounds for piercing the corporate veil "to impose personal liability on Bulut".
[20] In supplementary reasons on May 28, 1998, MacKenzie J. held that,
[t]he charge and lien created under the June 4th, 1997 order for occupancy costs refers to a landlord's distress right only for purposes of describing the means of enforcement; it does not state nor could it reasonably imply that the charge or lien created could only apply to the costs of the means of enforcement...

[21] In his reasons on June 3, 1998 in relation to Royal Spas, MacKenzie J. dealt with other arguments from the appellants concerning the question of priorities. He rejected the argument that the first-in-time rule should apply to the secured creditors, relying upon the decision of this court in Leavere v. Port Colborne (City) 1995 CanLII 715 (ON CA), (1995), 22 O.R. (3d) 44. He reasoned that Sun Life was "in possession" of the chattels of Royal Spas and the order of June 4, 1997 authorized Sun Life to "enforce its lien by means analogous to a landlord's right of distress upon chattels".
[22] MacKenzie J. also held in the June 3, 1998 reasons that, even if Sun Life did not have priority, he would have granted it an order that the appellants could only realize on their security interests upon paying all of the occupancy costs outstanding under the June 4, 1997 order. He reasoned as follows:

> The basis for such alternative relief is that it would be just and equitable for 123 Co. and N. Bulut to pay such costs since the evidence establishes a continuing and concerted course of action between and among Mr. N. Bulut, Mr. S. Bulut and their respective corporations, including 123 Co. herein, in delaying the payment of occupancy costs relating to personal property of Royal Spas and Everingham in respect of which Messrs. Bulut and their respective corporations now claim an interest as secured parties, and which personal property Sun Life has effectively warehoused for one year at a cost of $1,305.00 per day. In my view, it would be a just, in the sense of fair or equitable, term that the said Messrs. Bulut and their respective corporations in their capacities as secured parties of Everingham and Royal Spas should pay to Sun Life the occupancy costs for this collateral prior to their having any rights in and to the same vis-€-vis any security interest holders or claimants other than Sun Life.

THE POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

[23] For the purposes of this appeal, the appellants concede that Sun Life is a secured creditor and that accordingly the priorities are to be determined outside the scheme of the BIA.1 Similarly, as indicated, the parties conceded that the PPSA does not apply. They also concede that it is possible for a judge to make a charging order giving the person a priority over other secured creditors.2 However, they submit that the charging order of June 4, 1997 did not give Sun Life such a priority and that accordingly the normal rule of priorities of secured creditors applies. That rule is simply that priorities are based on the "first in time" and the security interests of Bulut and 123 Inc. were prior in time to the June 4, 1997 charging order. Finally, in the absence of a finding of fraud or some other reason to pierce the corporate veil, the appellants submit that there were no grounds in equity for giving the respondent priority over the appellants.

[24] The respondent supports the motion judge's order principally on the basis of equity. It submits that the motions judge had an inherent equitable jurisdiction to do justice between the parties. Sun Life had been thrust into the position of unwilling creditor, required to warehouse and protect the goods of the bankrupts for the benefit of the creditors. It suggests that there is an analogy to a solicitor's lien, which can take priority in some circumstances over the claims of secured creditors. In support of its position, counsel for the respondent carefully reviewed the facts to demonstrate that Mr. Bulut, as the directing mind of the bankrupts, had no real intention of causing the bankrupts to remove their property from the premises. Rather, he was attempting to force Sun Life into an improvident settlement of its claim on the mortgage.

Digitized by Google

[25] The reasons of the motions judge raise two issues. First, did the charging order of June 4, 1997 give Sun Life a priority at law over secured creditors? Second, if not, did the motions judge have an equitable jurisdiction to, in effect, give Sun Life a priority over the claims of the secured creditors that were related to the bankrupts? The phrase "related to" is mine, but as I understand his reasons the motions judge would have denied a priority to the appellants because of the conduct of Mr. Bulut and his son in causing the bankrupts not to pay the occupancy costs.

Issue One: The position at law

[26] In his reasons of May 14, 1998, the motions judge held that:

> Since Sun Life is outside the ambit of both the BIA and the PPSA regimes in terms of priorities, Sun Life has priority over Bulut in satisfying the charge or lien in its favour with respect to occupancy costs.

[27] The motions judge did not otherwise explain why the respondent's charge should take priority over the claims of other secured creditors. In his reasons of June 3, 1998, the motions judge expanded on his initial reasons. He rejected the applicability of the first-in-time rule and relied upon this court's reasons in Leavere v. Port Colborne (City). In my view, Leavere does not support the motions judge's holding. The issue in that case was whether a municipality distraining on a taxpayer's chattels for arrears of business taxes is entitled to those chattels as against a creditor of the taxpayer with a registered perfected security interest in those chattels. Galligan J.A., writing for the court, held that the PPSA did not apply because of s. 4 of that Act, which provides that the Act does not apply to a lien given by statute or rule of law. He then noted at pp. 48-9 that at common law priorities are determined in accordance with the chronological order of the encumbrances. The creditors in Leavere relied upon this rule since their security interests were registered before the exercise of the right of distress by the municipality created the lien upon the taxpayer's chattels. Galligan J.A. adopted the following statement of the common-law rule from Spence on Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery (1850), vol. 2, at p. 727:

> It has already been stated that the general rule, though not without exceptions as will presently appear, is, that statutes, judgments and recognizances, at law and in equity, and equitable charges of every kind, in equity, all rank according to their dates: therefore, in the absence of particular circumstances, the successive periods of their execution or attainment constitute the order in which they will be directed to be satisfied.

[28] However, Galligan J.A. held at p. 52 that it has always been recognized that this common-law rule could be displaced by the provisions of a statute and this was the effect of s. 400(2)(c)(ii) of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M.45. That provision gave the municipality the right to levy unpaid taxes by distress upon any goods and chattels in the possession of the taxpayer where title to the goods and chattels is claimed, "by way of mortgage or otherwise". The security interests claimed by the creditors in that case were so similar to mortgages that they could be included in the word "otherwise". Galligan J.A. found that the legislature had clearly intended that the municipalities were entitled to levy by distress upon chattels in the possession of a person taxed although the chattels were subject to security agreements. At p. 53, he held that it would "amount to an absurdity if the statute authorized distress upon chattels covered by security agreements but did not intend as well that the lien created by the exercise of the right of distress was to have priority over the security agreement".

[29] In my view, the decision in Leavere supports the position of the appellants in this case with respect to the effect only of the June 4th order. There is no statutory exception to prevent the ordinary rule from applying – that secured interests of all kinds rank according to their dates. In this case, the appellants' perfected security interests all preceded the charging order of June 4, 1997.

[30] The motions judge, however, relied upon Leavere by analogy. He referred to the following excerpt from the reasons at p. 53 and held that by substituting "rule of law" [being the June 4th charging order] for "statute" or "statutory", the same result could be achieved. The passage referred to by the motions judge is as follows:

> The municipalities' liens arose when the municipalities took possession of the chattels in exercise of their statutory power to distrain. Because the statute authorizes distress upon chattels subject to security agreements I am constrained to conclude that the lien which arises upon the exercise of that right must take priority over the security agreements. It would, in my view, amount to an absurdity if the statute authorized distress upon chattels covered by security agreements but did not intend as well that the lien created by the exercise of the right of distress was to have priority over the security agreement. The power to distrain upon chattels subject to security agreements would be rendered nugatory if the security agreements were not required to rank behind the liens which had arisen by rule of law.

[31] The difficulty with the analogy is that, while the legislature by express language clearly intended that the municipality have the right to distrain upon chattels subject to security agreements, the wording of the June 4th order does not expressly give that right. For convenience, I repeat the relevant part of the charging order:

> ... any arrears in payment of occupancy costs shall be a charge on the said equipment, inventory and trade chattels in the same manner and to the same extent as a landlord's distress ...

[32] While the order makes the arrears a charge on the assets of the [now] bankrupts and provides as means for realizing on the charge, "in the same manner and to the same extent as a landlord's distress", it did not expressly give the order priority over the secured interests of the appellants who, it should be pointed out, were not parties to the June 4, 1997 proceedings. My interpretation of the order is bolstered by the supplementary reasons of the motions judge on May 28, 1998 where he held:

The charge and lien created under the June 4th, 1997 order for occupancy costs refers to a landlord's distress right only for purposes of describing the means of enforcement; it does not state nor could it reasonably imply that the charge or lien created could only apply to the costs of the means of enforcement...

[33] Even if the use of the phrase, "in the same manner and to the same extent as a landlord's distress" was intended to describe the priority of the charging order, it cannot give the respondent a priority over the perfected security interests of the appellants. In Commercial Credit Corp. Ltd. v. Harry D. Shields Ltd. et al. (1981), 32 O.R. (2d) 703 (C.A.) affirming (1980), 29 O.R. (2d) 106 (Ont. H.C.J.), this court held that through the combined operation of the common law and s. 31(2) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 236 [now Commercial Tenancies Act R.S.O. 1990, c. L.7, s. 31(2)] a landlord could levy distress on goods found on the demised premises including goods subject to a chattel mortgage. However, this priority arises not simply because the landlord has a right of distress, but depends upon the landlord taking possession of the chattels pursuant to its right of distress.

[34] However, on October 3, 1997, after Everingham filed its Notice of Intention to file a proposal with the official receiver pursuant to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, MacKenzie J. made a further order lifting the automatic stay of proceedings in favour of Sun Life. This order included the paragraph set out above which I repeat for convenience:

THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that Sun Life has a charge on the assets of Everingham in the possession of Sun Life on the Premises (the "Assets") and that Sun Life shall be entitled to distrain against the Assets in accordance with the terms of the Occupation Order for the amounts payable to it as occupancy costs accruing at the rate of $1,305.00 per day from June 4, 1997 to the date when Sun Life receives vacant possession of the Property and to, subject to the provisions of this Order, proceed to sell such portion of the Assets as described hereinafter. [Emphasis added.]

[35] In my view, the only reasonable interpretation of this order is that Sun Life was deemed to have taken possession of the assets of Everingham pursuant to its right of distress. Everingham appealed this order but the appeal was dismissed by the Registrar of this court for failure to perfect.3 The order of October 3rd therefore stands and whether or not it was based on a correct interpretation of the June 4th order, it gave Sun Life priority over Bulut. I would therefore dismiss Bulut's appeal.

[36] The appeal of 123 Inc. stands in a different position. It was not affected by the order of October 3rd, which related only to the assets of Everingham. 123 Inc.'s security was on the assets of Royal Spas.

Issue Two: The position in equity

[37] In view of my conclusion on the first issue, this part of the analysis only directly concerns the dispute between 123 Inc. as secured creditor of Royal Spas and Sun Life's claim to a charge on the assets of Royal Spas. In his reasons of May 14, 1998, dealing only with Everingham, the motions judge held that there were not sufficient grounds to pierce the corporate veil to impose personal liability on Bulut. In his reasons of June 3, 1998, dealing with Royal Spas, the motions judge did not make any such comment in respect of Mr. Bulut or his son as regards 123 Inc. On the other hand, there is nothing to distinguish the two cases. I did not understand the respondent to argue that the order of June 3, 1998 could be upheld on the basis that the motions judge had pierced the corporate veil to, in effect, make 123 Inc. or its principals responsible for the debts incurred by Royal Spas under the charging order.

[38] The issue then is whether the order of June 3rd can be supported on the basis of an equitable jurisdiction. MacKenzie J. held that Bulut and 123 Inc. could not realize on their security interests until they had paid the occupancy costs under the June 4, 1997 charging order. For convenience, I repeat his reasons for that disposition:

> The basis for such alternative relief is that it would be just and equitable for 123 Co. and N. Bulut to pay such costs since the evidence establishes a continuing and concerted course of action between and among Mr. N. Bulut, Mr. S. Bulut and their respective corporations, including 123 Co. herein, in delaying the payment of occupancy costs relating to personal property of Royal Spas and Everingham in respect of which Messrs. Bulut and their respective corporations now claim an interest as secured parties, and which personal property Sun Life has effectively warehoused for one year at a cost of $1,305.00 per day. In my view, it would be a just, in the sense of fair or equitable, term that the said Messrs. Bulut and their respective corporations in their capacities as secured parties of Everingham and Royal Spas should pay to Sun Life the occupancy costs for this collateral prior to their having any rights in and to the same vis-€-vis any security interest holders or claimants other than Sun Life. [Emphasis added.]

[39] The financial affairs of Everingham and Royal Spas were complex. In addition to the security interests of the appellants, various other creditors sought to establish that they had secured interests. In particular, the City of Brampton claimed that it was a secured creditor after it exercised its right of distress on the goods of Everingham for business taxes. That dispute did not involve Royal Spas, so far as I can tell. However, it seems to have been a factor that prevented Sun Life from exercising its rights under the charging order. On September 24, 1997, MacKenzie J. held that Brampton was not a secured creditor. Brampton appealed that decision to this court and the appeal was dismissed in reasons reported at (1999), 43

O.R. (3d) 594.
[40] With respect to Royal Spas, on July 2, 1997, Manton J. made an order prohibiting Bulut and related persons from entering the premises for any purpose or from obstructing any liquidation or sale of the machinery and equipment of Royal Spas.
[41] Thus, because of various legal proceedings and court orders, Sun Life, which was simply seeking vacant possession of the premises, became the custodian of the appellants' property. The motions judge considered it fair and equitable that 123 Inc. and Bulut, rather than any of the other parties, bear the burden of Sun Life's costs for preserving the appellants' property. If the motions judge had the jurisdiction to make that determination, he is entitled to deference from this court: Regina v. City of Barrie et al., Ex parte Bernick, [1970] 1 O.R. 200 (C.A.) at 206.
[42] In I. H. Jacob, "The Inherent Jurisdiction of the Court" (1970), 23 Curr. Legal Probs. 23 at p. 51, the author described the inherent jurisdiction of the court as that reserve or fund of powers, "which the court may draw upon as necessary whenever it is just or equitable to do so, and in particular to ensure the observance of the due process of law, to prevent improper vexation or oppression, to do justice between the parties and to secure a fair trial between them".4 Aside from such general statements about a court of equity's right to do justice between the parties, we were referred to no case that would justify the order made by the judge in this case.
[43] Counsel for Sun Life sought to analogize its position to that of a solicitor who is entitled to an order charging funds that have been recovered or preserved by the action of the solicitors. In Budinsky v. The Breakers East Inc. (1993), 15 O.R. (3d) 198 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)) at 206-9, Ground J. held that the charging order should rank ahead of the other secured creditor, although the latter's security preceded the charging order of the solicitors. Ground J. fully reviewed the authorities, including the decision of Romer J. in Scholey v. Peck, [1893] 1 Ch. 709 where at p. 711 he explained the rationale for giving the solicitor priority over the secured creditor:

> Here undoubtedly the property was preserved by the action brought by these solicitors on behalf of the Plaintiff, and but for the proceedings taken by them the mortgagee would have lost her security. In my judgment the case is governed by the principle of Greer v. Young [(1883), 24 Ch. D. 545]. I hold, therefore, that the solicitors are entitled to the charge for which they ask, not only against the Plaintiff, but also against the mortgagee, who is taking the benefit of the action, over whose mortgage they must have priority. [Emphasis added.]

[44] In my view, this is not an apt analogy. This is not a case where, but for the actions of Sun Life, 123 Inc. would have lost its security. As mortgagee in possession of the realty, Sun Life had certain rights. On April 2, 1997, Dyson J. granted Sun Life possession of the Tilbury property and leave to issue a writ of possession. The writ was issued and Sun Life took possession and changed the locks.
[45] In any event, on May 9, 1997 the first of two orders was made requiring Everingham and Royal Spas to pay occupancy costs. In the second order, of June 4, 1997, MacKenzie J. ordered Everingham and Royal Spas to pay $1,305 per day in occupancy costs "to and including the date of vacant possession". These costs were to be paid on a weekly basis. They were also required to pay the arrears to that date. Those arrears were paid on June 19, 1997.

[46] The order also provided that Everingham and Royal Spas had until August 1, 1997 to remove their equipment, inventory and trade chattels from the premises. However, pursuant to the order if Everingham and Royal Spas failed to make the arrears payment or the weekly payments, Sun Life was "at liberty to exercise its right under the writ of possession". Finally, the order provided that the occupancy costs were a charge on the equipment, inventory and trade chattels in the same manner and to the same extent "as a landlord's distress". None of the weekly payments were made and Sun Life could therefore have taken steps to obtain vacant possession or, at the very least, exercise its right of distress and sell the goods, presumably in accordance with s. 53 of the Commercial Tenancies Act. It did not do so. Instead, it entered into negotiations with the mortgagor in an attempt to reach some solution. This was its choice. It seems to me that the problem with Sun Life's position is captured in an excerpt from its counsel's affidavit where he says:

Sun Life never wished the occupancy costs claim to keep escalating; however, it could not, without giving up possession of the assets, and therefore, giving up its security without payment, cap the amount owing pursuant to the June 4 and October 3 Orders.

[47] At least under the June 4th order, Sun Life had the right to attempt to collect the occupancy charges by exercising its rights under the writ of possession. That would have capped the occupancy charges and it could have done so a week after June 19, 1997, when Everingham and Royal Spas failed to pay that week's costs. Alternatively, it could stand by and let the occupancy costs accrue knowing that the occupancy costs were a charge on the assets. The risk it ran in pursuing that course of action was that, if there was not sufficient value in the assets to cover both the secured claims and the occupancy charges, under the first-in-time rule, it would not recover the occupancy charges. This was a matter within Sun Life's control. The matter is different from the case where a solicitor is given a charging order over property that would not have otherwise been available. The solicitors are given priority because, without their action, the property would not be available to the creditors. Sun Life has not preserved assets that would not have been available. The assets were available.

[48] My concern with the motions judge's equitable remedy is that it is based on nothing more than his assessment that "it would be a just, in the sense of fair or equitable" result. No doubt, in cases where parties are in a relationship of, or akin to, trust, a certain degree of generality or uncertainty is necessary and is tolerable. See Soulos v. Korkontzilas, 1997 CanLII 346 (SCC), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 217 at 236-37. Sun Life, Everingham and Royal Spas were not in such a relationship, nor was Sun Life in a vulnerable position. In my view, this degree of uncertainty is not to be encouraged in matters associated with bankruptcy and insolvency.

[49] The result reached by the motions judge resembles the doctrine of equitable subordination. In Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. v. Canadian Commercial Bank, 1992 CanLII 49 (SCC), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 558 at 609, Iacobucci J. left open the question of whether such a doctrine should be recognized in Canada. This court has similarly left the matter open in Olympia & York Developments Ltd. v. Royal Trust Co. reflex, (1993), 14 O.R. (3d) 1.

[50] In Canada Deposit Insurance Corp., Iacobucci J. held that assuming Canadian courts have the power in insolvency matters to subordinate otherwise valid claims to those of other creditors on equitable grounds relating to the conduct of these creditors inter se, there were insufficient grounds to justify the exercise of the power in that case. He referred to the requirements for a successful claim of equitable subordination as developed in the United States as follows at p. 609:

> the claimant must have engaged in some type of inequitable conduct; > the misconduct must have resulted in injury to the creditors of the bankrupt or conferred an unfair advantage on the claimant; and > equitable subordination of the claim must not be inconsistent with the provisions of the bankruptcy statute.

[51] It should be borne in mind that the motions judge did not "pierce the corporate veil", nor did he find that the security interest held by 123 Inc. was not bona fide. Thus, the "claimant" for the purposes of the doctrine is 123 Inc. It did not engage in any kind of inequitable conduct, nor did its conduct result in injury to Sun Life.

[52] In P. V. Baker & P. St. J. Langan, Snell's Equity, 29th ed. (1990), at p. 57 the authors describe the circumstances in which persons may lose a prima facie claim to which they would otherwise be entitled under the first-in-time rule:

> A person with a prima facie claim to priority for his interest may lose it through his own misconduct. The owner of a legal interest may be postponed to a subsequent equitable interest owing to his fraud, or by estoppel, or through his gross negligence; and the owner of a prior equitable interest may be postponed if his conduct is inequitable. [Emphasis added.]

[53] The motions judge made no finding of fraud against 123 Inc., nor was there any evidence of estoppel or gross negligence that would disentitle 123 Inc. from asserting its prior secured interest.

DISPOSITION

[54] Accordingly, I would dismiss Mr. Bulut's appeal. I would allow the appeal by 1238157 Ontario Inc., set aside paragraph 4 of the order of MacKenzie J. dated June 3, 1998 and in its place provide that the rights of Sun Life are subject to the security interest of 1238157 Ontario Inc. The appellants were represented by the same counsel in this court. Accordingly, I would make no order for costs in this court. 1238157 Ontario Inc. is entitled to its costs before MacKenzie J.

(signed) "M. Rosenberg J.A."

MACPHERSON J.A.:

[55] I have had the benefit of reading the reasons prepared by Rosenberg J.A. I agree with his summary of the facts and the positions of the parties and with his statement of the issues.

[56] Rosenberg J.A. would dismiss Nicholas Bulut's appeal, essentially on grounds of res judicata. I agree with his proposed disposition but would dismiss Mr. Bulut's appeal on the merits.

[57] Rosenberg J.A. would allow 1238157 Ontario Inc.'s appeal. With respect, I disagree.

[58] I will attempt to set out, in brief fashion, my reasons for the above conclusions. Essentially, I agree with the reasons and conclusions of MacKenzie J. in the two decisions which are the subject of these appeals.

[59] There is a good deal in the legal analysis in my colleague Rosenberg J.A.'s judgment with which I agree. In order to move quickly to the crucial point of difference, I will record in summary form the points on which I agree with Rosenberg J.A.'s analysis.

[60] First, the appellant Nicholas Bulut ("Bulut") is a secured creditor of Everingham Brothers Ltd. ("Everingham"). Bulut registered his security under the Personal Property Security Act ("PPSA") on April 2, 1997.

[61] Second, the appellant 1238157 Ontario Inc. ("123 Co.") is a secured creditor of 764388 Ontario Ltd. carrying on business as Royal Spas ("Royal Spas"). Through a variety of transactions with Bulut and the National Bank of Canada, 123 Co. held a registered security interest in Royal Spas by May 23, 1997.

[62] Third, there is nothing to suggest that Bulut's and 123 Co.'s security interests in Everingham and Royal Spas are not legitimate.

[63] Fourth, Bulut and his family controlled Everingham, Royal Spas and 123 Co. at all times relevant to this appeal. Royal Spas leased space at Everingham's premises in Brampton.

[64] Fifth, the respondent Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada ("Sun Life") held a first mortgage on Everingham's property at 5 Tilbury Court in Brampton. The mortgage was registered in January 1992 and secured an original loan of $2,250,000. Everingham defaulted on the mortgage in January 1996. Sun Life took possession on April 25, 1997 and changed the locks. At this juncture, Sun Life had no security interest in the personal property at Everingham's premises.

[65] Sixth, as expressed by Rosenberg J.A., "a critical order in the appeal is the order made by MacKenzie J. on June 4, 1997." Moreover, "the fifth paragraph of the Order is the most important" because it purported to create a charging order over personal property in favour of Sun Life and against both Everingham and Royal Spas. The relevant portion of paragraph 5 of the Order is:

5. THIS COURT ORDERS ... that any arrears in payment of occupancy costs shall be a charge on the said equipment, inventory and trade chattels in the same manner and to the same extent as a landlord's distress...

[66] Seventh, as can be seen from the relevant dates set out above, Bulut's and 123 Co.'s security interests under the PPSA arose before Sun Life's security interest created by court order (April 20 and May 23 versus June 4, 1997).
[67] Eighth, for reasons explained by Rosenberg J.A. and MacKenzie J., neither the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA") nor the PPSA resolves the question of whose security interests have priority.
[68] I turn now to where my analysis diverges from that of Rosenberg J.A.
[69] After MacKenzie J. made his order on June 4, 1997, the financial situations at Everingham and Royal Spas became increasingly gloomy. Everingham became bankrupt on October 17, 1997. Royal Spas followed suit on March 31, 1998.
[70] The question then arose: which security interest had priority, Sun Life's or Bulut's and 123 Co.'s ? On April 1, 1998, Bulut and 123 Co. brought a motion for a declaration that their security interests had priority over Sun Life's. On April 2, 1998, Sun Life brought a 'mirror' motion seeking a declaration in its favour.
[71] MacKenzie J. heard the motions and decided in favour of Sun Life. His reasons on the Sun Life-Bulut priority question (May 14, 1998) were sparse: "Since Sun Life is outside the ambit of both the BIA and the PPSA regimes in terms of priorities, Sun Life has priority over Bulut in satisfying the charge or lien in its favour with respect to occupancy costs."
[72] However, the motions judge provided more elaborate reasons when he analyzed the Sun Life-123 Co. priority question (June 3, 1998). In these reasons, he found in favour of Sun Life on two bases – first, reasoning by analogy from this court's decision in Leavere v. City of Port Colborne 1995 CanLII 715 (ON CA), (1995), 22 O.R. (3d) 44; second, applying equitable principles to require 123 Co. (and, by parity of reasoning, Bulut) to pay occupancy costs before collecting under its (their) security interest(s). In broad terms, and acknowledging that there is an overlap between the two reasons, I would describe the motions judge's first reason as dealing with how Sun Life could be given priority, and his second reason as explaining why Sun Life should be given priority.
[73] On the question of 'how', the starting point, as the motions judge recognized, was that the priorities regimes in the BIA and PPSA did not apply. Accordingly, the priorities issue had to be resolved by the application of common law principles.
[74] Prima facie, the common law principle that applies to priorities between secured interests is the 'first in time' rule: see McLaren, Secured Transactions in Personal Property in Canada, 2nd ed., looseleaf (Scarborough: Carswell, 1989) at p. 5-202.
[75] However, the 'first in time' rule is not an absolute rule. It can be overridden by statute: see McLaren, Secured Transactions in Personal Property in Canada, at p. 5-202. An example is s. 400 (2)(c)(ii) of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. M. 45, which allows municipalities to distrain upon the chattels of persons who have not paid municipal taxes even though the chattels are subject to security interests which arose before the tax liability: see Leavere v. Port Colborne (City), supra.

[76] A second line of exception to the 'first in time' rule is provided by equity. In Spence on the Equitable Jurisdiction of the Courts of Chancery, the author identified the 'first in time' rule as "the general rule"(Vol. II, at p. 727). However, he stated that the rule was qualified by the notion of 'the better equity' and that "the circumstance of priority of time alone does not give a better equity" (Vol. II, at p. 737).

[77] In Snell's Principles of Equity, 29th ed. by P.V. Baker and P. St. J. Langan (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1990) the authors explain (at p. 57) the circumstances in which the holder of a prima facie priority can lose it:

> A person with a prima facie claim to priority for his interest may lose it through his own misconduct. The owner of a legal interest may be postponed to a subsequent equitable interest owing to his fraud, or by estoppel, or through gross negligence; and the owner of a prior equitable interest may be postponed if his conduct is inequitable.

[78] The motions judge recognized the 'first in time' rule. However, he determined that Sun Life had a better equity. The mechanism he chose to give effect to this determination was reasoning by analogy from this court's decision in Leavere v. Port Colborne (City). He said that what the statute did in Leavere he could do by "rule of law" – i.e. by judicial application of common law and equitable principles – in this litigation. Since the priority issue had to be determined outside the framework of the BIA and the PPSA, I can find no fault in the motions judge's approach.

[79] Turning to the question of 'why' Sun Life's interest was entitled to be given priority over Bulut's and 123's interests, the motions judge provided a clear reason:

> [T]he evidence establishes a continuing and concerted course of action between and among Mr. N. Bulut, Mr. S. Bulut and their respective corporations, including 123 Co. herein, in delaying the payment of occupancy costs relating to personal property of Royal Spas and Everingham in respect of which Messrs. Bulut and their respective corporations now claim an interest as second parties, and which personal property Sun Life has effectively warehoused for one year at a cost of $1,305.00 per day.

[80] In my view, the motions judge's reasons for applying equitable principles to give Sun Life priority over Bulut and 123 Co. are sound. The record before the motions judge amply supports his analysis and conclusion. I will mention just a few of the factors that, in my view, suggest that the motions judge was correct.

[81] First, the Bulut family were the principals and directing minds of Everingham, Royal Spas and 123 Co. One does not need to pierce corporate veils to agree with the motions judge's description of "Mr. N. Bulut, Mr. S. Bulut and their respective corporations."

Digitized by Google

[82] Second, Everingham had a huge mortgage from Sun Life. It defaulted on this mortgage in January 1996. Bulut acquired the major part of his security interest in Everingham (approximately $550,000 of a total interest of $650,000) after Everingham's default on the mortgage. Similarly, 123 Co. acquired its security interest in Royal Spas (approximately $1,500,000) in May 1997. Royal Spas was a tenant of Everingham. It is obvious that Bulut and 123 Co. acquired their security interests with full knowledge that Everingham and Royal Spas were in serious financial trouble, especially vis-€-vis Sun Life.

[83] Third, Sun Life's security interest in the personal property at Everingham's premises was obtained in a court proceeding launched by Everingham and Royal Spas in which they sought to obtain their personal property (i.e. equipment and inventory) from Everingham's premises. On May 1, 1997, Nicholas Bulut, the President of both Everingham and Royal Spas, swore an affidavit in support of the motion. At the time Bulut was a secured creditor of both Everingham and Royal Spas. In his affidavit, Bulut spoke on behalf of Everingham and Royal Spas. However, importantly, he also spoke explicitly in his capacity as holder of security interests in the personal property of Everingham and Royal Spas. Bulut stated:

15. ... The items of personal property are owned by Everingham and Royal Spas and Everingham and Royal Spas are lawfully entitled to possession of such property. The items of personal property belonging to these corporations are themselves secured under a General Security Agreement. I, Nicholas Bulut, hold the security interest in these items of personal property belonging to Everingham and Royal Spas. I am content, Royal Spas is content and Everingham5 is content if the items of personal property simply are released to all three of us and we can sort out our respective interests in the personal property.

[84] In other words, Bulut was openly representing not only Everingham and Royal Spas, but also himself in his capacity as holder of security interests in the personal property of Everingham and Royal Spas. He was seeking relief from the court in both of these capacities.

[85] Fourth, the motions judge provided Everingham, Royal Spas and Bulut with the relief they sought, provided Everingham and Royal Spas paid occupancy costs of $1,305 per day from April 25, 1997 to the date on which the personal property was removed. This order was not appealed. Yet, almost immediately, the companies stopped making occupancy cost payments. Further, the companies made no serious efforts to remove their personal property. In short, the companies and Bulut (explicitly) and 123 Co. (by strong and fair inference) sought relief from the court, obtained it, did not appeal the court order – and then promptly ignored it.

[86] For these reasons, I agree with the motions judge that Bulut's and 123 Co.'s conduct disentitles them to obtain a priority over Sun Life. In the language of Snell's Principles of Equity, supra, their misconduct estops them from claiming a priority.

[87] I conclude with a final observation. It is true, as Rosenberg J.A. notes, that the motions judge's orders resemble the doctrine of equitable subordination and that the Supreme Court of Canada and this court have expressly left open the question of whether this doctrine should be introduced into Canadian law: see Canadian Deposit Insurance Corp. v. Canadian Commercial Bank, 1992 CanLII 49 (SCC), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 558; and Olympia & York Developments Ltd. v. Royal Trust Co. reflex, (1993), 14 O.R. (3d) 1 (C.A.).

[88] There is a crucial difference between those cases and this appeal. In those cases, the issue before the courts was whether the doctrine of equitable subordination should be introduced into statutory regimes for determining priorities between creditors. There is, as the courts recognized, a serious issue as to whether courts should modify explicit priorities created by statute, even if the modification arose through the application of equitable principles.

[89] The situation in the present appeal is entirely different. No statutory regime, including the BIA and the PPSA, determines the priority issue as between Sun Life and Bulut and 123 Co. That issue must be determined under common law principles. In that context, there is nothing wrong with a motions judge doing what common law judges have done for centuries, namely considering common law and equitable principles together in an attempt to reach a fair result. That is what the motions judge did on these motions.

DISPOSITION

[90] For the above reasons, I would dismiss the appeals. I would award the respondent its costs of the appeal.

3 With the consent of the trustee, Bulut brought an application for an extension of time to perfect the appeal. That application was dismissed.

4 In MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, 1995 CanLII 57 (SCC), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725 at para. 29, Lamer C.J.C. described this as the "seminal article on the core or inherent jurisdiction of superior courts".

5 123 Co. is not mentioned in this paragraph. That is because on May 1, 1997, when Bulut swore his affidavit, Bulut held the security interest in the personal property of both Everingham and Royal Spas. On May 23, he assigned his security interest in Royal Spas to 123 Co., another family company. In my view, it is no stretch to infer that what Bulut said qua secured creditor on May 1 could be imputed to 123 Co. three weeks later.

Subject: General Transitional Directive

The Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy (OSB) has amended several Directives as a result of two initiatives. The first initiative is a comprehensive legislative and regulatory reform package that requires corresponding amendments to Directives in order to be consistent with the enabling legislation and regulation. The second initiative is the modernizing of the Superintendent's Directives.

Legislative Reform

In 2005, a comprehensive insolvency reform package was introduced in Parliament to modernize the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (BIA) and the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (CCAA), as well as to create the legislative framework for the Wage Earner Protection Program (WEPP). The Bill received Royal Assent on November 25, 2005, thereby becoming Chapter 47 of the Statutes of Canada, 2005 (Chapter 47). Certain technical amendments were made to Chapter 47 before it could be brought into force. These technical amendments were contained in Bill C-62, Act to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, the Wage Earner Protection

Objet : Instruction générale de transition

Le Bureau du surintendant des faillites (BSF) a effectué des changements à plusieurs instructions suite à deux initiatives. La première concerne un programme complet de réformes législatives et réglementaires qui nécessite des modifications correspondantes aux instructions afin de s'assurer qu'elles sont conformes à la législation habilitante et au règlement connexe. La seconde se rapporte à la modernisation des instructions du surintendant.

Réforme législative

En 2005, une refonte complète des règles sur l'insolvabilité a été présentée au Parlement en vue de moderniser la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité (LFI) et la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies (LACC), ainsi que de créer un cadre législatif pour le Programme de protection des salariés (PPS). Le projet de loi a reçu la sanction royale le 25 novembre 2005, devenant ainsi le chapitre 47 des Lois du Canada (2005) (« chapitre 47 »). Certaines modifications de forme devaient être apportées au chapitre 47 avant qu'il n'entre en vigueur. Ces modifications de forme sont prévues par le projet de loi C-62, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, la Loi sur le Programme de protection des salariés, et le chapitre 47 des Lois du Canada (2005). Le projet de loi C-62 a été déposé à la Chambre des communes le 12 juin 2007, et il a franchi les étapes des trois lectures à la Chambre des communes les 13 et 14 juin 2007 et celle de la première lecture au Sénat le 14 juin 2007. En raison de la prorogation du Parlement en septembre 2007, ce projet de loi est mort au Feuilleton. Les documents de réforme de la faillite ont été déposés de nouveau au cours de la séance suivante du Parlement à titre de projet de loi C-12 le jeudi 25 octobre 2007, dans le cadre d'une motion approuvée par tous les partis. Le projet de loi a franchi les étapes des trois lectures à la Chambre des communes le 29 octobre 2007, puis a reçu la sanction royale le 14 décembre 2007, devenant ainsi le chapitre 36 des Lois du Canada (2007). Suite à la réforme législative, les Règles générales sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité (« les Règles ») ont été modifiées et certaines ont été créées.

Program Act and chapter 47 of the Statutes of Canada, 2005. On June 12, 2007, Bill C-62 was introduced in the House of Commons and passed all three readings in the House of Commons on June 13 and 14, 2007, receiving first reading in the Senate on June 14, 2007. However, Parliament was prorogued in September 2007 and this bill died on the order paper. The amendments were reintroduced in the next session of Parliament as Bill C-12 on Thursday, October 25, 2007, on a motion that was approved by all parties. The Bill passed all three readings in the House of Commons on October 29, 2007, and received Royal Assent on December 14, 2007, thereby becoming Chapter 36 of the Statutes of Canada, 2007. As a result of the legislative reform, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency General Rules (Rules) were amended and new Rules were also created.

Therefore, in order to give effect to the new provisions in the BIA and to the Rules, several Directives have been amended or revoked to ensure that they are consistent with the enabling legislation and regulation.

Ainsi, afin de donner effet aux nouvelles dispositions de la LFI et aux Règles, plusieurs instructions ont été modifiées ou révoquées afin de s'assurer qu'elles sont conformes à la législation habilitante et au règlement connexe.

Modernization of the Directives

Several Directives were amended in order to streamline some of the administrative steps in an insolvency file with a view to eliminating unnecessary administrative requirements and information obligations, while maintaining the integrity of the insolvency system. In fact, the OSB has made a number of amendments to Directives issued before November 30, 1992, and reissued on July 23, 1993, pursuant to the authority of paragraph 5(4)(c) of the BIA. These modifications modernize the Directives.

Modernisation des instructions

Plusieurs instructions ont été modifiées pour rationaliser quelques étapes administratives dans les dossiers d'insolvabilité, afin d'éliminer les exigences administratives et les obligations inutiles en matière d'information tout en assurant l'intégrité du système d'insolvabilité. En effet, le BSF a apporté des modifications à plusieurs instructions émises avant le 30 novembre 1992 et émises de nouveau le 23 juillet 1993 conformément à l'autorité conférée en vertu de l'alinéa 5(4)c) correct references to sections of the BIA, and ensure a certain standardization, coherency and uniformity throughout. These Directives were also renumbered in order to avoid any source of confusion when referring to Directives issued prior to 1992 and after 1992. In this manner, the amendments to these Directives will enhance their practical application.

Please note that no amendments were made to Directive No. 12R Administrative Agreements with Trustees and Receivers, and Directive No. 16R Preparation of the Statement of Affairs as they will be revised in their entirety at a later date. These Directives have not been renumbered and are not being reissued at this point.

Please find attached a copy of the General Transitional Directive. Appendix A lists the Directives that are hereby being reissued along with their new reference number. Appendix B lists the Directives that are hereby revoked.

Coming into Force

The General Transitional Directive comes into force on September 18, 2009.

Loi qui s'appliquent sont les paragraphes 6(2), (3) et (4), les articles 25, 26, 27 et 66.26, les alinéas 155g) et 14.01(1)e) et les règles 65, 67, 101, 103, 128 et 129 de la Loi.

Principles

3. Section 25 of the Act imposes a duty on a trustee to deposit forthwith in a trust account all moneys received for an estate. The trust account shall be held at a bank, provided that federal or provincial law guarantees deposits of that institution, and that such law protects depositors from the loss of money on deposit with that institution.[1]

Principes

3. En vertu de l'article 25 de la Loi, un syndic est tenu de déposer sans délai dans un compte en fiducie tous les fonds reçus pour le compte d'un actif. Le compte en fiducie est ouvert dans une banque, pourvu qu'une loi fédérale ou provinciale garantisse les dépôts effectués dans cette institution et protège les déposants contre la perte de leurs dépôts dans cette institution[1].

Subsection 25(1.3) of the Act also dictates that, except for paying dividends and charges incidental to administering the estate, a trustee shall not withdraw any funds from the trust account of an estate without the permission, in writing, of the inspectors or, on application, the Court.

Le paragraphe 25(1.3) de la Loi prescrit également qu'un syndic ne peut effectuer aucun retrait sur le compte en fiducie d'un actif sans la permission écrite des inspecteurs ou, sur demande, du tribunal, sauf en cas de paiement de dividendes ou de frais se rapportant à l'administration de l'actif.

When withdrawing funds from the trust account of an estate, the trustee must comply with the rules governing fees and disbursements drawn in summary administration bankruptcies and consumer proposals.

En effectuant un retrait sur le compte en fiducie d'un actif, le syndic doit se conformer aux règles régissant les honoraires et débours perçus dans les faillites d'administration sommaire ou les propositions de consommateur.

[1] To be eligible for deposit insurance protection, deposits must be payable in Canada, in Canadian currency. If estate funds are situated abroad, a trustee, with the Superintendent's permission, may deposit such funds in a financial institution, which is similar to a bank, in that country, as per subsection 25(1.2) of the Act.

[1] Pour être couverts par l'assurance-dépôts, les dépôts doivent être payables au Canada en fonds canadiens. Si les fonds de l'actif se trouvent à l'étranger, un syndic, sur autorisation du surintendant, peut, en vertu du paragraphe 25(1.2) de la Loi, déposer de tels fonds dans une institution semblable à une banque dans ce pays.

Trust account funds are to be kept intact and not commingled with non-estate funds and in the case of consolidated trust accounts, not commingled with estates of administration types other than that type for which the account was approved.

Les fonds de compte en fiducie doivent être conservés de façon distincte et ne doivent pas être confondus avec des fonds qui ne sont pas des fonds de l'actif; dans le cas d'un compte consolidé en fiducie, ils ne doivent pas être confondus avec des fonds d'actif faisant l'objet d'un autre genre d'administration que celui pour lequel le compte a été approuvé.

De tels certificats doivent être garantis contre les pertes et ne doivent pas être utilisés dans les cas où les frais de service et les coûts afférents excèdent les intérêts qui auraient été générés si les fonds étaient restés dans le compte en fiducie d'un actif. Trial Division, Tremblay-Lamer J."Montréal, March 20; Ottawa, May 2, 1996.
Bankruptcy " Delegation of powers under Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, s. 14.01(2) to investigate conduct of trustee " No jurisdiction in delegate tribunal to deal with Charter and Bill of Rights challenges to validity of Act, ss. 14.01 and 14.02.
Constitutional law " Charter of Rights " Enforcement " Delegation of powers under Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, s. 14.01(2) to investigate conduct of trustee " Delegate tribunal lacking jurisdiction under Charter, s. 24, Constitution Act, s. 52 to deal with challenges to validity of Act, ss. 14.01 and 14.02 " Review of case law on powers of administrative tribunals to consider Charter issues " No jurisdiction in delegate tribunal to deal with questions of law.
Bill of Rights " Delegation of powers under Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, s. 14.01(2) to investigate conduct of trustee " No jurisdiction in delegate tribunal to deal with questions of law " Corporate applicant, trustee in bankruptcy, cannot invoke Bill of Rights, s. 2(e) as latter protecting rights whereas, for corporation applicant, trustee licence privilege.
In 1993, following an audit of the applicants' operations, the Superintendent of Bankruptcy delegated to a three-member tribunal his powers under subsection 14.02 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act to investigate into the applicants' conduct and determine whether their licence as a trustee in bankruptcy should be cancelled. The tribunal's mandate was to examine the report, hear the applicants, establish the rules of procedure that would apply, hold a hearing and cause the proceedings to be recorded, examine the evidence and arguments, give written reasons for its decision and, if need be, appoint another or other trustees to deal with the estates that had been under the applicants' administration. The applicants moved that the tribunal declare that it lacked jurisdiction to proceed under sections 14.01 and 14.02 on the grounds that those sections were unconstitutional as in violation of section 7 of the Charter; that those sections were of no force or effect as inconsistent with paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights; that the investigation process provided for in sections 14.01 and 14.02 was in violation of the natural justice requirement of impartiality. The tribunal held that it lacked jurisdiction to determine the constitutional validity of those sections. These were applications to review that decision. The respondents presented a motion to strike the declarations as premature.
The issues were: (1) whether the applications were premature, the tribunal's decision being interlocutory; (2) whether the tribunal erred in concluding that it lacked jurisdiction to declare sections 14.01 and 14.02 unconstitutional; (3) whether the sections were of no force and effect as inconsistent with paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights.
Held, the applications should be dismissed.
(1) Since the application was directed against the very existence of the tribunal, there was a special reason justifying judicial review at this stage of the proceedings: this was a final decision disposing of a fundamental question before the tribunal: Mahabir v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration).
(2) It was not a matter of the application of the Charter but of section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982. In the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Cuddy Chicks Ltd. v. Ontario (Labour Relations Board), La Forest J. declared that an administrative tribunal does not have to meet the definition of court of competent jurisdiction in order to have the necessary authority to subject its enabling statute to Charter scrutiny. The issue is whether in the enabling statute, Parliament expressly or impliedly conferred on the tribunal the obligation to examine questions of law. An examination of the statutory provisions herein leads to the conclusion that the tribunal, through the Superintendent or his delegates, did not have the power to dispose of legal questions. Instead, Parliament provided for an informal hearing process in which the Superintendent is not bound by the rules of evidence. Matters are to be dealt with as the circumstances and a consideration of fairness permit. Nothing in these provisions indicates an intention to give the panel responsibility to decide questions of law. Furthermore, Parliament did not deem it advisable to grant the panel certain powers of investigation under the Inquiries Act.
(3) Since only the corporate applicant applied for declaratory relief and served the notice of constitutional questions required by section 57 of the Federal Court Act, the alleged violation of paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights was examined only in so far as it was concerned.

Even though the corporate applicant was a "person" within the meaning of paragraph 2(e), since a trustee licence, for a corporate applicant, is a privilege and not a right, and since paragraph 2(e) protects rights and not privileges, the corporate applicant could not rely on that paragraph.

APPLICATIONS for judicial review of the decision of three delegates of the powers of investigation and hearing vested in the Superintendent of Bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act holding that they did not have jurisdiction to find sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act to be unconstitutional, or jurisdiction to declare those sections to be inoperative and contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights. The following is the English version of the reasons for order rendered by Tremblay-Lamer J.: There are two applications for judicial review before the Court in which the applicants are seeking to have set aside the decision of Marc Lamarre, Brian Doyle and Uwe Manski, in their capacity as delegates of the powers of investigation and hearing vested in the Superintendent of Bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act[1] (the Act), holding that they did not have jurisdiction to find sections 14.01 [as enacted by S.C. 1992, c. 27, s. 9] and 14.02 [as enacted idem] of the Act to be unconstitutional, or jurisdiction to declare those sections to be inoperative and contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights[2] (the Bill of Rights).

THE FACTS

Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer has held a licence as a trustee in bankruptcy since 1980. The applicant Sydney Pfeiffer has also held such a licence since 1974. He is the president of the firm Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer, which administers more than 1600 estates and whose personnel consists of two trustees and eighty employees. The intervenor Guylaine Houle, who also holds a licence as a trustee in bankruptcy, is a shareholder and director of Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer.

During December 1991 and January 1992, the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, with the assistance of the personnel under his direction and control, conducted an audit of the activities of the applicants, and in April 1992 the applicants received a report prepared by Andy J. Blitzer, C.A.

On December 11, 1992, Mr. Pfeiffer received a letter from Marc Mayrand, Deputy Superintendent of Bankruptcy (Operations), to which was attached a draft report recommending that the Superintendent cancel the applicants' trustee licence. The report noted flaws in the administration of some estates which violated the Act, the regulations, the guidelines and the policies. More specifically, the report pointed to the following anomalies:

(a) investing consolidated estate funds in trust companies and treasury bills;

(b) registering certificates of deposit of consolidated funds not in trust for estates;

(c) under-allocating interest to estate files;

(d) withdrawing final fees without recognizing the interim draw already taken;

(e) withdrawing fees in excess of the fees taxed;

(f) delegating signing authority on checks [sic] to an unauthorized person.

On April 28, 1993, the solicitor for Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer wrote a letter to the office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy setting out a list of reasons why Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer should retain its trustee licence.

On June 16, 1993, Marc Mayrand signed a report similar to the draft that had been submitted to the parties earlier, recommending nonetheless that the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, George F. Redling, cancel the applicants' trustee licence.

On December 31, 1993, the Superintendent of Bankruptcy informed the parties that under subsection 14.01(2) of the Act, he had delegated his powers and functions as Superintendent to a panel composed of Marc Lamarre, a retired judge, as

Chairman of the panel, and Brian Doyle and Uwe Manski, both trustees in bankruptcy. Accordingly, the Superintendent issued a delegation instrument authorizing the panel to act in accordance with the powers conferred by the Act. The panel's specific mandate is described in the delegation instrument as follows:

1. considering the report in respect of the trustee received by the Superintendent from the Deputy;
2. affording the trustee the opportunity to be heard required by subsection 14.02(1) of the BIA in respect of the Deputy's report and notice of intention to exercise the powers set out in paragraphs 14.01(1)(a) to (c) of the BIA in relation to the trustee's licence;
3. determining, in conformity with the provisions of paragraphs 14.02(2)(b) and (c) and in consultation with the trustee and the Deputy or their respective counsel, the procedural rules that shall apply in the course of affording the trustee the opportunity to be heard;
4. conducting, under the presidency of the chairman, the hearing at which the trustee is given the opportunity to be heard;
5. causing, for the purposes of paragraph 14.02(2)(d) of the BIA, a stenographic, electronic or other record to be taken of the proceedings at which the trustee is given the opportunity to be heard;
6. considering the evidence and submissions of the trustee and the Deputy;
7. deciding whether, on the balance of the evidence before the panel, the recommendation of the Deputy in respect of the license of the trustee should be accepted, varied or rejected, and, in accordance with subsection 14.02(4) of the BIA, to give the decision and the reasons for the decision of the panel in writing to the trustee and to the Deputy within ninety days after the conclusion of the hearing; and,
8. where the panel accepts or varies the recommendation of the Deputy and decides to exercise the power to suspend or cancel the license of the trustee, directing, after hearing representations from the trustee and the Deputy, another or other trustees to deal, in the manner directed by the panel, with the property in the estates that were, immediately prior to the cancellation or suspension of the licence, under the administration of the trustee.

On June 3, 1994, the applicants filed a "Motion for declaration of lack of jurisdiction" with the panel. They were arguing, primarily, that:

" sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act are unconstitutional, in that they violate section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms .[3]

" sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act are inoperative because they are inconsistent with paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights.

" the process of investigation and hearing established by sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act violate the impartiality requirements imposed by the principles of natural justice.

Accordingly, they asked the panel to declare that it was not competent to proceed, having regard to the invalidity of sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act.

On September 1, 1995, the panel rendered its decision in which it concluded that it did not have jurisdiction to determine the constitutionality of the sections in question. It concluded as follows:

The tribunal and/or the Superintendent does not have and has never had the power in its enabling statute to review the constitutionality of its duties and the powers conferred on it by the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. No such power, whether express or implied, is found anywhere in the Act.

We have no jurisdiction to determine constitutional questions, or to made declarations that only the superior courts may make, or to determine the constitutional validity of the enabling statute under which our mandate was given to us.

For the foregoing reasons, the two motions by the applicants Sydney H. Pfeiffer and Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer Inc. are denied. [sic]

That decision is the subject of this judicial review. However, on November 9, 1995, the respondents filed a motion to strike out the two originating notices of motion. On the consent of the parties, Mr. Justice Teitelbaum ordered that the motion be heard at the hearing on the merits. At the time of the hearing before me, the respondents chose not to argue that motion at any length, although it remains in the record. I shall therefore deal with it first.

THE ISSUES

1. Are these originating notices of motion premature, in that the decision of the panel is interlocutory, and should they accordingly be struck out?
2. Did the panel err in concluding that it did not have jurisdiction to declare that sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act are unconstitutional and inoperative?
3. Are sections 14.01 and 14.02 inoperative in that they are inconsistent with paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights?

THE LEGISLATION

Sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act provide:

14.01 (1) The Superintendent, after making or causing to be made an investigation into the conduct of a trustee, may, where it is in the public interest to do so,

(a) cancel the licence of a trustee;
(b) suspend the licence of a trustee; or
(c) place such conditions or limitations on the licence of a trustee as the Superintendent considers appropriate.
(2) The Superintendent may delegate by written instrument, on such terms and conditions as are therein specified, any or all of the Superintendent's powers, duties and functions under paragraphs 1(a) to (c) or section 14.01 or 14.03.
(3) Where the Superintendent delegates in accordance with subsection (2), the Superintendent or the delegate shall
(a) where there is a delegation in relation to trustees generally, give written notice of the delegation to all trustees; and
(b) whether or not paragraph (a) applies, give written notice of the delegation of a power to any trustee who may be affected by the exercise of that power, either before the power is exercised or at the time the power is exercised.
14.02 (1) Where the Superintendent intends to exercise any of the powers set out in paragraphs 14.01(1)(a) to (c), the Superintendent shall send the trustee written notice of the powers that the Superintendent intends to exercise and the reasons therefor and afford the trustee a reasonable opportunity for a hearing.
(2) At a hearing referred to in subsection (1), the Superintendent
(a) has the power to administer oaths;
(b) is not bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence in conducting the hearing;
(c) shall deal with the matters set out in the notice of the hearing as informally and expeditiously as the circumstances and a consideration of fairness permit; and
(d) shall cause a summary of any oral evidence to be made in writing.
(3) The notice referred to in subsection (1) and, where applicable, the summary of oral evidence referred to paragraph 2(d), together with such documentary evidence as the Superintendent receives in evidence, form the record of the hearing.
(4) The decision of the Superintendent after a hearing referred to in subsection (1), together with the reasons therefor, shall be given in writing to the trustee not later than ninety days after the conclusion of the hearing and may, where the Superintendent considers it in the public interest to do so, be made public after the decision has been given to the trustee.
(5) A decision of the Superintendent given pursuant to subsection (4) is deemed to be a decision of a federal board, commission or other tribunal that may be reviewed and set aside pursuant to the Federal Court Act.

1. Preliminary motion to strike out the originating notices of motion

The Attorney General submitted that the application for judicial review brought by the applicants from the decision of the panel is premature because that decision was in fact an interlocutory decision. The respondent relied on the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal in Szczecka v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration),[4] in which Mr. Justice Létourneau held that as a general rule, time should not be spent on reviewing interlocutory decisions, except in special circumstances. According to the respondent, the Court has jurisdiction to dismiss the originating notices of motion under its general power, as governed by section 5 of the Federal Court Act.[5]

The applicants argued, for their part, that it was not premature to raise the issue of bias before the panel. It is settled law that bias on the part of a tribunal must be raised without delay. For example, in Santé c. Québec (Procureur général),[6] the Court held that failure to raise the issue of bias at the first opportunity amounted to waiver of that ground for challenging the jurisdiction of the tribunal.

In my opinion, there is an initial procedural problem, since the Federal Court Rules [C.R.C., c. 663] make no provision for dismissing a motion.[7] Although the Attorney General cited section 5, it is used only in exceptional cases. In the instant case, the decision relates to the jurisdiction of the administrative tribunal to determine constitutional questions or make declaratory judgments. The tribunal held that it did not have jurisdiction to determine such a question. The same situation arose in Laflamme v. Canada (Superintendent of Bankruptcy),[8] and the Court decided the issue immediately on an application for judicial review.

In Cyanamid Agricultural de Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Canada (Commissioner of Patents),[9] Mr. Justice Mahoney held that under Rule 5, judicial review could be permitted in interlocutory cases on the question of jurisdiction, at page 4 (QL):

. . . where the motion itself is apt to be time consuming and where there is, as here, a clear question of jurisdiction which may determine the entire matter, common sense dictates, and Rule 5 permits, that the Court deal with the preliminary objection in advance.

As well, it appears that judicial review of a decision of a tribunal relating to a question of jurisdiction may avoid the costs of a hearing on the merits. In Anti-dumping Act (In re) and in re Danmor Shoe Co. Ltd.,[10] the Federal Court of Appeal held:

In my view, the object of sections 18 and 28 of the Federal Court Act is to provide a speedy and effective judicial supervision of the work of federal boards, commissions and other tribunals with a minimum of interference with the work of those tribunals. Applying section 11 of the Interpretation Act, with that object in mind, to the question raised by these section 28 applications, it must be recognized that the lack of a right to have the Court review the position taken by a tribunal as to its jurisdiction or as to some procedural matter, at an early stage in a hearing, may well result, in some cases, in expensive hearings being abortive. On the other hand, a right, vested in a party who is reluctant to have the tribunal finish its job, to have the Court review separately each position taken, or ruling made, by a tribunal in the course of a long hearing would, in effect, be a right vested in such party to frustrate the work of the tribunal. [Emphasis mine.]

In my opinion, since this issue involves an attack on the very existence of the tribunal, there is a special reason permitting judicial review at this stage of the proceedings.[11] As the Court held in Mahabir v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration),[12] "it is a final decision that disposes of a substantive question before the tribunal".

Accordingly, the motion to strike is dismissed.

2. Power of the tribunal to examine questions relating to the Charter and the Bill of Rights

The applicants and the intervenor submitted that the role played by the Minister's delegates is comparable to that played by an administrative tribunal in that they exercise judicial or quasi-judicial power.[13] The guiding principles that apply in this area are set out in three decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada: Douglas/Kwantlen Faculty Assn. v. Douglas College;[14] Cuddy Chicks Ltd. v. Ontario (Labour Relations Board);[15] and Tétreault-Gadoury v. Canada (Employment and Immigration Commission).[16] These decisions hold that an administrative tribunal may have jurisdiction to determine constitutionality, either by virtue of the power conferred by subsection 24(1) of the Charter or by virtue of a tribunal's duty to apply the Constitution in carrying out the mandate assigned to it by statute and under section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982 [Schedule B, Canada Act 1982, 1982, c. 11 (U.K.) [R.S.C., 1985, Appendix II, No. 44]]. In the instant case, the applicants suggested that in the absence of specific enabling provisions in the Act itself, the Minister's delegates very probably do not have the powers set out in section 24 of the Charter. However, it has been recognized that the power to apply the Constitution under section 52 of the Constitutional Act, 1982 may devolve to a tribunal, either expressly or by implication. In the case at bar, it is clear that the Minister's delegates must apply and interpret at least the Act in order to determine whether the applicants have violated its provisions. Inter alia, since it is alleged that the applicants acted improperly in the management of their trust accounts, the Minister's delegates will surely have to determine how section 25 [as am. by S.C. 1992, c. 27, s. 10] of the Act is to be interpreted.

For his part, the Attorney General submitted that the Superintendent is neither a tribunal nor a court of competent jurisdiction for the purpose of determining the constitutionality of sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act under section 24 of the Charter and section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982 and in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada.[17] The respondents argued that the question was settled by the decision in Laflamme[18] and there was nothing substantially different in the situation now before the Court.

In short, we must examine the trilogy of decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada in Douglas College, Cuddy Chicks and Tétreault-Gadoury with respect to the jurisdiction of administrative tribunals to determine Charter questions. The issue in the case at bar is not the application of subsection 24(1) of the Charter, which allows a court of competent jurisdiction to grant a remedy. Rather, we shall have to consider the application of section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which provides:

52. (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

With respect to the application of this section by an administrative tribunal, the principle set out in Douglas College is that an administrative tribunal which is given the power to interpret any statute also has the power to determine whether the statute is constitutional. The decision in Cuddy Chicks established that a tribunal whose task it is to determine questions of law may also apply the Charter.

Mr. Justice La Forest summarized the situation as follows in Cuddy Chicks, at pages 14-15:

An administrative tribunal need not meet the definition of a court of competent jurisdiction in s. 24(1) of the Charter in order to have the necessary authority to subject its enabling statute to Charter scrutiny. In the present case, the relevant inquiry is not whether the tribunal is a "court" [within the meaning of subsection 24(1) of the Charter] but whether the legislature intended to confer on the tribunal the power to interpret and apply the Charter .

The legislature expressly, and without reservation, conferred authority on the Board to decide points of law. In addition, the Act confers powers on the Board to determine questions of law and fact relating to its own jurisdiction. Section 124, for example, gives it authority to decide if a matter is arbitrable. The issue, then, is whether this authority with respect to questions of law can encompass the question of whether a law violates the Charter. It is clear to me that a Charter issue must constitute a question of law; indeed, the Charter is part of the supreme law of Canada. This comports with the view expressed in Douglas College that the statutory authority of the arbitrator in that case to interpret any "Act" must include the authority to interpret the Charter .

In Tétreault-Gadoury,[19] the Supreme Court of Canada held that the powers of an administrative tribunal to determine questions of law and to interpret any law could derive not only from an express power but also from an implied power. This statement of the law was reiterated in Canada (Attorney General) v. Gill,[20] in which the Court stated, at page 20:

Recent Supreme Court of Canada decisions have confirmed that where an administrative tribunal has an express authority to interpret and apply statutes[21] or where it has been expressly authorized to determine questions of law[22] it may apply the Charter to determine the validity of laws it is applying. In Tétreault-Gadoury v. Canada (Employment and Immigration Commission)[23] the Court also held that such power may be implied even though not expressly granted.

In Laflamme,[24] the provisions of the Act were similar to those with which we are concerned in the case at bar. Mr. Justice Noël was of the opinion that the legislative grant of authority must give the tribunal not only the power to interpret its enabling legislation, but also jurisdiction over the subject-matter resulting from reliance on the Charter and the remedy sought. In that case, the Court held that those powers must be found in the enabling statute and be among the powers that Parliament intended to confer on it.

While I have reached the same conclusion as Mr. Justice Noël, I shall not follow the same route as my colleague did. In my view, this is the approach that must be taken when the issue is whether the tribunal in question is a court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of subsection 24(1) of the Charter. This analysis is not required when the issue is the power of an administrative tribunal to examine the constitutionality of its enabling statute under section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

In Weber v. Ontario Hydro,[25] and more recently in Mooring v. Canada (National Parole Board),[26] the Supreme Court applied the "three-pronged test" required by subsection 24(1), that is, that a tribunal will be a court of competent jurisdiction only if it has jurisdiction over the parties, the subject-matter of the proceedings and the remedy sought. These tests had long since been established, in Mills v. The Queen ,[27] for the purpose of determining whether a tribunal is a court of competent jurisdiction.

In addition, in Cuddy Chicks, Mr. Justice La Forest himself acknowledged that this analytical framework, that is, that there must be jurisdiction over the whole of the matter before the tribunal, reflects the prerequisites for a tribunal to be a court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of subsection 24(1) of the Charter, but that an administrative tribunal need not meet the definition of a court of competent jurisdiction in order to have the necessary authority to subject its enabling statute to Charter scrutiny.[28]

Despite what he said in Cuddy Chicks and his intention of analysing the case from the standpoint of section 52, Mr. Justice La Forest continued his analysis by applying the three-pronged test, as if the issue was whether it was a court of competent jurisdiction under subsection 24(1). This is the same type of analysis as was done by Mr. Justice Noël in Laflamme.[29]

In the instant case, I do not believe that it is necessary to analyze the question from this standpoint, since, as Mr. Justice La Forest stated, the tribunal need not meet the definition of a court of competent jurisdiction. In the case at bar, no remedy is sought. Rather, the parties are seeking a declaration that certain provisions of the Act are inoperative since they are contrary to the Charter.[30] In Mahabir v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration),[31] the Federal Court of Appeal held:

Rather subsection 24(1) gives a remedial power, and subsection 52(1) a declaratory power, to be exercised in disposing of matters properly before the Court.

In my opinion, we must determine whether Parliament gave the tribunal, in its enabling statute, expressly or by implication, a duty to examine questions of law. This is the approach taken by the Trial Division in Canada (Attorney General) v. Gill,[32] and by me in Canada (Attorney General) v. Racette-Villeneuve.[33]

What are the powers of the Superintendent or his delegates? The Superintendent has the power to suspend or cancel the licence of a trustee or place such conditions on the licence as he considers appropriate where it is in the public interest to do so, after affording the trustee an opportunity for a hearing.

Of course, in order to do that, he must apply his enabling statute. In my opinion, however, that is not sufficient for us to conclude that he has the power to determine questions of law. As Mr. Justice Noël stated in Laflamme,[34] all administrative tribunals may apply their enabling statute. We must analyse the statutory provision, the object of the provision and the general scheme of the Act in order to determine whether Parliament intended to give the tribunal the power to decide questions of law.

In the case at bar, after examining the statutory provisions, I conclude that the panel, through the Superintendent or his delegates, did not have the power to determine questions of law.

Quite the contrary; Parliament has provided an informal process for hearings, and specified that the Superintendent is not bound by the rules of evidence. Matters must be dealt with as the circumstances and a consideration of fairness permit. There is nothing in these provisions to indicate any intention to give the panel responsibility for determining questions of law. In addition, Parliament did not deem it advisable to grant the panel certain powers of investigation under the Inquiries

Act,[35] which powers the Trial Division took into account in Canada (Attorney General) v. Gill[36] in concluding that the tribunal had declaratory power.

In Racette-Villeneuve,[37] in which I held that the Entitlement Board had jurisdiction to determine Charter questions, several statutory provisions in the enabling legislation implicitly gave the Entitlement Board the power to rule on questions of law. For example, the enabling statute provided that the Board had to provide the applicant with a summary of the law applicable to the applicant's case and the Board's interpretation thereof, to hold hearings in camera if it considered that this would not be contrary to the public interest (such a finding necessarily involves points of law) and to determine the legal duty to maintain. In addition, the act granted it certain powers under the Inquiries Act.[38]

I was compelled to conclude from that analysis that the panel could determine questions of law. This is not the case here. I have been unable to find any provision that indicates that Parliament intended to assign any such responsibility to it. The panel therefore did not err in determining that it did not have the power to decide the constitutional questions submitted.

The applicant Sydney Pfeiffer did not apply for a declaration, as he could have under subsection 18(3) [as am. by S.C. 1990, c. 8, s. 4] of the Federal Court Act.[39] He therefore did not serve the notice of constitutional question required by section 57 [as am. idem, s. 19] of the Federal Court Act. Accordingly, this Court cannot consider the question of whether the statutory provisions violate his rights under section 7 of the Charter and paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights. It has been settled since Tétreault-Gadoury[40] that in a judicial review the Court is limited to "overseeing and controlling the legality"[41] of administrative decisions and has no "jurisdiction to make a final determination of the constitutional question"[42] where the administrative tribunal does not itself have jurisdiction over constitutional questions.

The applicant Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer has asked for a declaration that sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act are inoperative and contrary to the Bill of Rights. Accordingly, the corporate applicant served the constitutional notice required by section 57 of the Federal Court Act.[43] The Bill of Rights will be examined only in so far as that application was made by the corporate applicant.

Of course, Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer could not have argued that the provisions of the Act violate its rights under section 7 of the Charter. The wording of section 7 provides that "everyone" has the right to protection of life, liberty and security of the person. In Irwin Toy Ltd. v. Quebec (Attorney General) ,[44] the Supreme Court of Canada held that the expression "everyone" excluded corporations and included only human beings. As well, in Dywidag Systems International, Canada Ltd. v. Zutphen Brothers Construction Ltd. ,[45] the Court again held that a corporation could not be deprived of the right to life, liberty or security of the person, and accordingly that it could not rely on section 7 of the Charter.

3. Are the provisions of the Act inoperative in that they are contrary to paragraph 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights?

Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer contended that the provisions of the Act are inoperative as contrary to paragraph 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights provides:

2. [Construction of law] Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of the Parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared, and in particular, no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to

(e) deprive a person of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations.

The first issue here is the scope of the expression "person" which is found in paragraph 2(e). In New Brunswick Broadcasting Co., Limited v. Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission,[46] the Federal Court of Appeal, commenting on paragraph 2(e), stated:

In this section the word "person" is used in contexts which suggest that it is concerned with natural persons but I see no compelling reason why the word should not be interpreted as referring as well to corporations wherever the subject-matter of a provision in which it is found can have application to corporations. Paragraph 2(e) is, in my view, such a provision.

It is therefore possible, in the case at bar, for the corporation to rely on paragraph 2(e). Accordingly, we must consider whether, in the instant case, the Act deprives the corporation of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of its rights and obligations.

In MacBain v. Lederman,[47] the Federal Court of Appeal set out the tests that must be met before it can be found that paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights has been violated, at pages 877-878:

. . . Firstly, it must be shown that a party's "rights and obligations" fall to be determined by a federal tribunal; and, secondly , it must be established that the party concerned was not afforded a "fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice".

The decision in Singh et al. v. Minister of Employment and Immigration[48] gave renewed scope to the Canadian Bill of Rights. Madam Justice Wilson acknowledged that the dichotomy between privileges and rights had played a role in narrowing the scope of the Bill of Rights, and that the analysis that derived from that dichotomy could not apply in relation to the Charter. She therefore turned to the Charter for her analysis of the issue in Singh.

However, Mr. Justice Beetz chose to interpret the Immigration Act, 1976 [S.C. 1976-77, c. 52] having regard to the Bill of Rights. With respect to the first criterion to be met, in relation to the definition of "rights and obligations", he stated, at page 228:

Be that as it may, it seems clear to me that the ambit of s. 2(e) is broader than the list of rights enumerated in s. 1 which are designated as "human rights and fundamental freedoms" whereas in s. 2(e), what is protected by the right to a fair hearing is the determination of one's "rights and obligations", whatever they are and whenever the determination process is one which comes under the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. It is true that the first part of s. 2 refers to "the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared", but s. 2(e) does protect a right which is fundamental, namely "the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice" for the determination of one's rights and obligations, fundamental or not. It is my view that . . . the right guaranteed by s. 2(e) is in no way qualified by the "due process" concept mentioned in s. 1(a).

Mr. Justice Beetz concluded that the process of determining refugee claims involved the determination of rights and obligations. However, he added:

It follows also that this case is distinguishable from cases where a mere privilege was refused or revoked, such as Prata v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, 1975 CanLII 7 (SCC), [1976] 1 S.C.R. 376, and Mitchell v. The Queen, 1975 CanLII 167 (SCC), [1976] 2 S.C.R. 570.[49]

Most importantly, Mr. Justice Beetz concluded that the "rights" referred to in paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights included rights that went beyond the fundamental rights usually recognized under the concept of "natural justice" or "procedural fairness". However, a case must nonetheless involve the determination of a person's "rights", and a mere privilege will not be protected by paragraph 2(e).

The question is therefore whether the revocation of a licence to carry on one's business meets the definition of the determination of a right.

There is a body of case law that recognizes that the practice of a profession may constitute a right, and that this right may be protected by either section 7 of the Charter[50] or section 23 of the Quebec Charter [Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12].[51] It could be argued that this characterization is appropriate, by analogy, in the context of our analysis of paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights. I do not believe so. As we saw earlier, Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer alone has brought an application under paragraph 2(e). A corporation, unlike an individual, cannot claim to be practising a profession. The interests of the corporation in the case at bar are purely economic, and accordingly obtaining a licence can result in nothing more, in my opinion, than a privilege.

A "licence" is defined in the Petit Larousse illustré , 1985 as follows:

[translation] Permission granted by the public authorities to practise certain professions, and to import or export various products; authorization to exploit a patent.

Stroud's Judicial Dictionary of Words and Phrases[52] defines a licence as follows:

When one finds the word "licence" used in a statute the presumption is that it is intended to designate a purely personal privilege.

It is quite common for it to be necessary to obtain a licence in order to operate a business. For example, the individual in question in Joys v. M.N.R.[53] had a commercial fishing licence. The Federal Court of Appeal held that the issuance of a licence was a function of the Minister's discretion, and added, at page 164:

It is clear law that a fishing licence is a privilege granted by the Minister and in the renewal of which the licence holder has no vested right.

In New Brunswick Broadcasting Co., Limited v. Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission,[54] the CRTC had limited the renewal of broadcasting licences to the company in question. The Court of Appeal acknowledged that the broadcasting company had a licence at the time a direction concerning renewal was issued, and held, with respect to the application of paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights, at page 429:

The appellant had, however, no vested or other property right to have its licences renewed or to have the authority of the Commission maintained either until the disposition of its application or for the future.

Having regard to these decisions, it would be difficult for me to conclude that the revocation of the applicants' licence meets the definition of a "right". In the circumstances, since this was merely a privilege, Pfeiffer & Pfeiffer does not satisfy the first element of the test developed in MacBain and accordingly cannot rely on paragraph 2(e) of the Bill of Rights.

For these reasons, the applications for judicial review are dismissed.

This was an application for judicial review of the Deputy Superintendent of Bankruptcy's decision to seize records administered by the applicants and entrust them to a guardian until the completion of the investigation and disciplinary hearing into the applicants' conduct and administration. Louis Drolet was a trustee in bankruptcy against whom the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy in Québec had received numerous complaints of professional misconduct. While an investigation and disciplinary proceedings were pending, Drolet proposed the creation of a new corporate trustee, Groupe G. Tremblay Syndics Inc., with Mr. Tremblay. He agreed that his licence would be suspended for one year. The proposal was accepted, but was not yet approved by the Superintendent when records were transferred to Groupe G. Tremblay. A subsequent audit revealed deficiencies in the manner in which some of the records had been handled, but these were not disclosed to Mr. Daviault, the Superintendent's delegate to decide the fate of Drolet's trustee licence, who subsequently ratified the 1994 agreement. On April 6, 1995 a disciplinary committee was formed to investigate Groupe G. Tremblay's administration and activities. As well, the RCMP began investigating the administration and activities of Mr. Drolet, Mr. Tremblay and Groupe G. Tremblay. On August 31 search warrants issued authorizing the seizure of 18 of Groupe G. Tremblay's records. The same day the applicants received a letter informing them of the Deputy Superintendent's decision to issue a direction to protect all the estates administered by Groupe G. Tremblay until the completion of the investigation and to entrust the estate records to a guardian. The direction was issued under paragraphs 14.03(1)(b) and (2)(b) which provide that where there is an investigation pursuant to paragraph 5(3)(e), the Superintendent may direct any person to take the necessary steps to preserve the records of estates.

The issues were: (1) whether the Deputy Superintendent's decision was a decision within Federal Court Act, section 18.1; (2) whether he had gone beyond the inherent limitations of the discretion conferred on him by section 14.03; (3) whether he had exercised that discretion for improper purposes, in bad faith or in an arbitrary, unfair or unreasonable manner; (4) whether he was required to comply with the rules of natural justice; (5) whether the seizure infringed the applicants' Charter, section 7 rights by depriving them of their liberty in a manner not in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice; (6) whether section 14.03 was contrary to Charter, section 7 because it was too vague; (7) whether the taking of possession was a seizure within Charter, section 8; (8) whether section 14.03 contravened the Charter, section 8 right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure and, if so, whether this infringement was saved by section 1; and (9) what was the appropriate remedy.

Held, the applications should be allowed in part. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, paragraph 14.03(1)(b) is declared of no force or effect to the extent that it authorizes the taking of conservatory measures in the nature of a "seizure" where there are no reasonable grounds to believe that the measures will make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates. They were, in the instant case, reasonable grounds for the conservatory measures taken.

(1) The Deputy Superintendent's decision was a decision within the meaning of Federal Court Act, section 18.1. It had a final effect on the applicants' rights, because the seized records were administered by a representative of the Superintendent and could not, in all likelihood, be returned to them until the end of the disciplinary process. Moreover in most instances the administration of the seized records would probably be complete by the time the disciplinary process ended.
(2) The Deputy Superintendent did not exceed his jurisdiction in exercising his discretion. Given the seriousness of the alleged irregularities, the seizure was intended to ensure that debtors and creditors did not suffer any harm pending completion of the investigation. The sole purpose of the conservatory measures was to preserve estate records. Because of their fiduciary role, trustees must be as transparent as possible in administering the records entrusted to them. They manage the property of others for the benefit of all creditors. Once the relationship of trust had disintegrated, the Deputy Superintendent had no choice but to take possession of all the records. It was impossible to select certain records that the applicants could have continued to handle without jeopardizing the administration of property belonging to others. Such a decision was not unreasonable.
The power to "preserve" estates set out in section 14.03 was not used to "recover" estate records. The alleged actions endangered estates under the administration and control of the trustees, and conservatory measures were taken to prevent the occurrence of further misconduct.
The conservatory measures direction did not rescind Mr. Daviault's decision. While Mr. Daviault's decision concerned Mr. Drolet's conduct the seizure was necessitated by the misconduct of Mr. Tremblay and the corporate trustee that he headed. The events on which the two decisions were based occurred at two different times.
(3) The applicants will have an opportunity for a hearing as part of the disciplinary proceedings and they can raise all their defences during that hearing. In the meantime it was the Superintendent's duty to act quickly to protect estates. The applicants were given numerous opportunities to provide explanations of the misconduct alleged against them, but neglected to do so. They had only their own carelessness to blame.
(4) Federal Court Act, subsection 18.1(4) authorizes the Court to review findings of fact that are not supported by the evidence or that an assessment of the evidence as a whole shows to be unreasonable. The evidence showed that the Deputy Superintendent had evidence of serious misconduct in their administration. In light of this evidence and the seriousness of the misconduct noted in various reports, the Deputy Superintendent's decision to take conservatory measures to protect the estates administered by the applicants was reasonable.
(5) Charter, section 7 guarantees the right not to be deprived of life, liberty or security of the person except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. Only the right to liberty could have been at issue herein. While the right to liberty includes the right to practice a profession, the issue did not arise herein because the conservatory measures ordered by the Superintendent did not affect the existence or validity of the applicants' trustee licence.
(6) The doctrine of vagueness is applicable under Charter, section 7 only if the sanction provided for in the provision may deprive someone of life, liberty or security of the person. The measures provided for in section 14.03 do not affect the right to practice a profession. In any event, paragraph 5(3)(e) and section 14.03 provide "sufficient guidance for legal debate". Although the Superintendent has the discretion to decide what conservatory measures are needed in each situation, the circumstances in which such measures may be taken and the goal to be achieved, namely preserving the records of estates, are specified. The doctrine of vagueness was inapplicable.
(7) Charter, section 8 provides that everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure. The essence of a seizure under section 8 is the taking of a thing from a person by a public authority without that person's consent. The taking of possession on September 1, 1995 was a "seizure" within the meaning given to that term in section 8. For a true waiver, the person purporting to consent must be possessed of the requisite informational foundation. The applicant Tremblay felt that he had no choice; he simply submitted to the requirements of the representatives of the Office of the Superintendent who appeared at his place of business accompanied by bailiffs. Moreover, they had been preceded that day by RCMP officers, who had search warrants issued by a justice of the peace. As Mr. Tremblay saw it, the search conducted by the representatives of the Office of the Superintendent came within the scope of the police operation of the same morning. He did not consent freely and voluntarily to the seizure thereby waiving the guarantee conferred on the applicants by section 8.
(8) The purpose of the set of provisions including sections 14.01, 14.02 and 14.03 is the supervision of trustees' administration and conduct. Parliament's primary aim was to protect third parties, whether debtors or creditors. Such rules were necessary because trustees act as fiduciaries and as such are responsible for administering property owned by others. The documents administered by trustees are, according to law, public documents. The expectation of privacy associated with documents produced in the course of operating a regulated business, is lower than the expectation of privacy associated with documents that are strictly personal and private. The balance to be struck between society's interests and the applicants' expectation of privacy, which in the circumstances was low, did not require a strict application of the criteria established by the Supreme Court of Canada in Hunter et al. v. Southam Inc. to determine whether a search and seizure was reasonable. It is necessary to strike a balance between the reasonable expectation of privacy and the seriousness of the intrusion resulting from the search or seizure. The reasonable grounds requirement will not be applicable when the case involves checks and inspections that a person in a regulated activity must expect or when it would be unjustified given the low degree of intrusion. Since this case involved a search of private premises that was not conducted as part of a regulatory inspection, the degree of intrusion was greater than it would be in a case involving a request for the production of documents. When conservatory measures involve a search or seizure within the meaning of Charter section 8, those measures cannot be taken unless there are reasonable grounds to believe that they will make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates. In so far as it authorizes conservatory measures in the nature of a "seizure" where there are no reasonable grounds to believe that the measures will make it possible to "preserve" the records of an estate, paragraph 14.03(1)(b) infringes the guarantee set out in Charter, section 8. That infringement was not saved by section 1, no evidence having been adduced in this regard.

(9) The appropriate remedy was to "read down" paragraph 14.03(1)(b) so that the conservatory measures in the nature of a "seizure" are not authorized unless the Superintendent or his delegate has reasonable grounds to believe that they will make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates. Reading down satisfied Parliament's legitimate concerns for effective law enforcement without offending the reasonable seizure requirement under Charter, section 8. Judicial review was available after the fact to verify the existence of reasonable grounds and that provides an adequate guarantee against an abuse of the statutory power. In the case at bar, the Deputy Superintendent had reasonable grounds to believe that the conservatory measures would make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates. There was evidence of very serious misconduct which called for effective and prompt action to protect the estates of third parties.

APPLICATIONS for judicial review of the Deputy Superintendent of Bankruptcy's decision to seize records administered by the applicants and entrust them to a guardian until completion of an investigation and disciplinary hearing. Applications allowed only in so far as Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, paragraph 14.03(1)(b) was declared of no force and effect to the extent that it authorizes the taking of conservatory measures in the nature of a "seizure" where there are no reasonable grounds to believe that the measures will make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates.

Tremblay-Lamer J.:

INTRODUCTION

This case raises the issue of whether section 14.03 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act[1] (BIA) is constitutional. That section authorizes the Superintendent, in certain expressly stated circumstances, to take the necessary steps to preserve the records of estates.

In the fall of 1995, in the exercise of that power, the Deputy Superintendent took possession of records administered by the applicants and entrusted them to a guardian until the completion of the investigation and disciplinary hearing into the applicants' conduct and administration.

These applications for judicial review relate to that taking of possession.

THE FACTS

Louis Drolet is one of the applicants in application for judicial review No. T-1918-95. He began working as a trustee with Gingsberg, Gingras & Associés, a corporate trustee, on February 2, 1990. From 1991 to 1993, numerous complaints were made against him, primarily to the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy in Québec. He was alleged to have committed improper acts in administering estate records, which is what led to the end of his association with Gingsberg, Gingras & Associés.

At that time, Ginette Trahan was the Official Receiver and Assistant Superintendent for the district of Québec. After receiving the complaints about Mr. Drolet's activities, she informed Marc Mayrand, the Deputy Superintendent (Policy, Programs and Standards). In view of the seriousness of the improper acts alleged against Mr. Drolet, the Deputy Superintendent announced that a disciplinary committee would be formed.

While the committee was considering his case, Mr. Drolet contacted the Deputy Superintendent to tell him of a plan to create a new corporate trustee. He submitted the proposal in order to settle the dispute associated with his disciplinary case. Mr. Drolet and Mr. Tremblay planned to work together for Groupe G. Tremblay Syndics Inc. (Groupe G. Tremblay). Mr. Drolet agreed to transfer all the records he had handled while working for Gingsberg, Gingras & Associés to the newly formed corporate trustee. Mr. Tremblay was to do the same with his own records. Mr. Drolet further agreed that his licence as a trustee in bankruptcy would be suspended for a period of one year, from September 1, 1994 to September 1, 1995.

In September 1994, the proposal was finally accepted. An agreement was entered into with respect thereto by Mr. Drolet, Mr. Tremblay, the Deputy Superintendent and Gingsberg, Gingras & Associés. Although Mr. Tremblay had been audited in 1992, the Deputy Superintendent said he was satisfied that Mr. Tremblay was competent. To be fully executory, however, the agreement had to be approved by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, Georges Redling (the Superintendent). To this end, the Deputy Superintendent filed a report with the Office of the Superintendent recommending that the agreement be ratified. On receiving the report and the recommendation, the Superintendent, under sections 14.01 [as enacted idem] and 14.02 [as enacted idem] of the BIA, delegated his powers, duties and functions in dealing with the matter to François Daviault, who was to hear the parties and render a decision on the trustee licence of the applicant Mr. Drolet.

Although, to become executory, the agreement had to be ratified subsequently by the Superintendent, or in this case his delegate, it was nevertheless applied as soon as it was concluded. Thus, records began to be transferred to Groupe G. Tremblay in the fall of 1994. From that time on, the records administered by Groupe G. Tremblay were as follows: (1) records on which Mr. Drolet had worked while with Gingsberg, Gingras & Associés; (2) new records of Groupe G. Tremblay; (3) Québec records handled pursuant to Mr. Tremblay's personal licence; and (4) Montréal records handled pursuant to Mr. Tremblay's personal licence.

In October 1994, the Assistant Superintendent for the district of Québec, Ms. Trahan, decided to audit the Québec records handled pursuant to Mr. Tremblay's personal licence. Laurent Lachance, an auditor, was assigned to do the work. In spite of the deficiencies reported by the auditor, the Assistant Superintendent and the Deputy Superintendent decided not to say anything to Mr. Daviault, the delegate, before he rendered his decision.

By mid-March 1995, the new Assistant Superintendent for the district of Québec, Denis Gilbert, had already informed the Deputy Superintendent that numerous complaints had been filed against the corporate trustee Groupe G. Tremblay. The complaints referred not only to administrative deficiencies, such as slowness in issuing certificates of discharge, but also to much more serious misconduct.

On March 27, 1995, Mr. Daviault rendered his decision, at the end of which he ratified the September 1994 agreement.

On April 6, 1995, the Deputy Superintendent called a special meeting, at which, relying on paragraph 5(3)(e) of the BIA, he announced the formation of a committee to investigate Mr. Tremblay's administration of estates. The committee was also given the more general mandate to investigate Groupe G. Tremblay's administration and activities. It was in that context that the Office of the Superintendent first contacted François A. Gouin, a trustee. Subsequently, in May 1995, at a conference of the Canadian Insolvency Association, the Deputy Superintendent approached Mr. Gouin personally to discuss the same mandate.

As well, in the weeks following the decision of the delegate, Mr. Daviault, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) began a number of investigations into the administration and activities of Mr. Drolet, Mr. Tremblay and Groupe G. Tremblay. Some of those investigations were initiated after the issuance of investigation mandates by the Office of the Superintendent.[2] The rest were begun at the initiative of the RCMP itself, which was acting in response to complaints it had received from debtors and creditors involved in the records managed by the applicants.

Throughout August 1995, the auditor, Mr. Lachance, audited Groupe G. Tremblay's records. The investigation corroborated the information that had already been gathered, which showed that serious offences had been committed.

On August 28, 1995, the auditor submitted his report on Groupe G. Tremblay's administration to his superiors. The report recounted all the disturbing facts that he had noted in the audit, namely: misappropriation of funds, estates that had not been realized or had been realized at a very low price, misrepresentations to the courts and the Official Receiver and the preparation of false statutory documents.

On August 31, 1995, RCMP officers submitted a number of informations to Judge Choquette of the Court of Quebec, Penal Division, in order to obtain search warrants. Judge Choquette issued the warrants the same day. He authorized the officers to seize eighteen (18) of Groupe G. Tremblay's records.[3] The search took place the next morning.

The same day, the applicants received a letter prepared by the Deputy Superintendent informing them of the decision he had made, based on a progress report (by the auditor, Mr. Lachance), to issue a direction to protect all the estates administered by Groupe G. Tremblay until the completion of the investigation under way. Notices that conservatory measures had been directed were sent the same day to, inter alia, trustees in bankruptcy in the Québec region, financial institutions with which Groupe G. Tremblay did business, Bell Canada and Canada Post. The recipients of the notices were told that the estate records formerly administered by Groupe G. Tremblay would now be administered by François A. Gouin, trustee.

The direction for conservatory measures was issued by Deputy Superintendent Mayrand under paragraphs 14.03(1)(b) and 14.03(2)(b) of the BIA, which provide that where an investigation is being made pursuant to paragraph 5(3)(e) of the BIA, the Superintendent may direct any person to take the necessary steps to preserve the records of estates.

The Deputy Superintendent has admitted that he thought the BIA did not require him to obtain judicial authorization before taking possession of the records. Given the seriousness of the alleged misconduct and the search conducted that morning by the RCMP officers, he considered it reasonable to take possession of all of Groupe G. Tremblay's records.

(4) A person who complies with a direction given pursuant to subsection (1) is not liable for any act done by the person only to comply with the direction.
ISSUES
Administrative law issues:
1. Did the Deputy Superintendent exceed his jurisdiction by going beyond the inherent limitations of the discretion conferred on him by section 14.03 of the BIA?
2. Did he exercise that discretion for improper purposes, in bad faith or in an arbitrary, unfair or unreasonable manner?
3. Was he required to comply with the rules of natural justice?
Charter [Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, being Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, Schedule B, Canada Act 1982, 1982, c. 11 (U.K.) [R.S.C., 1985, Appendix II, No. 44]] issues:
1. Did the taking of possession on September 1, 1995 infringe section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by depriving the applicants Drolet and Tremblay of their liberty in a manner not in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice?
2. Is section 14.03 of the BIA contrary to section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms because it is too vague?
3. Was the taking of possession on September 1, 1995 a search or seizure within the meaning of section 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?
4. Was the taking of possession on September 1, 1995 an unreasonable seizure and hence constitutionally prohibited by section 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?
5. Is section 14.03 of the BIA contrary to the guarantee set out in section 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms? If so, is this infringement saved by section 1?
A. PRELIMINARY ISSUE
The respondents began by arguing that the "direction for conservatory measures" issued by the Deputy Superintendent on September 1, 1995 was not a decision within the meaning given to that term in section 18 of the Federal Court Act .[4] In the respondents' submission, it was not a measure that had a final effect on the applicants' rights and was binding on the parties.
The rule being relied on in this regard was formulated by the Federal Court of Appeal in Szczecka v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration).[5] In that case, the Court, per Létourneau J.A., held that unless there are special circumstances, there should not be any immediate judicial review of an interlocutory decision. The decisions in respect of which judicial review is available are those that make a final ruling on the merits of a case.
In my view, the Deputy Superintendent's decision was not an interlocutory decision within the meaning that the courts have given that term. It was not a decision made in the course of an action by an administrative tribunal. It was a decision that had a final effect on the applicants' rights, because the seized records were administered by a representative of the Superintendent and could not, in all likelihood, be returned to them until the end of the disciplinary process. Moreover, in most instances, the administration of the seized records will probably be complete by the time the disciplinary process ends. For these reasons, it seems to me that the Szczecka[6] rule is not applicable to this case.

B. ADMINISTRATIVE LAW ISSUES

1. Excess of jurisdiction

The applicants submitted that the decision to initiate an investigation into a trustee's administration (paragraph 5(3)(e) BIA) and the decision to issue a direction for conservatory measures (paragraphs 14.03(1)(b) and 14.03(2)(b) BIA) are decisions that fall within the Superintendent's discretion. The courts have consistently held that a discretion is never absolute. In the case at bar, the Deputy Superintendent's decision to issue a direction for conservatory measures was contrary to the three legal limitations on any discretion.

According to the applicants, the Deputy Superintendent exercised his discretion for improper purposes, because his decision was intended not to preserve estate records but rather to permanently and irrevocably prevent the applicant Mr. Drolet from working as a trustee. If the Superintendent's objective was really to preserve estate records, why did he take possession of all the records administered by Groupe G. Tremblay, without exception?

The applicants further submitted that a direction for conservatory measures can be issued only to preserve future estate records. The "preservation power" set out in section 14.03 of the BIA can, by definition, be exercised only to prevent an imminent, future threat to an estate. In so far as an act has already been done, it is no longer a question of "preserving" estate records, but rather of "recovering" estates because of past actions or misconduct.

Moreover, the applicants argued that his decision was made in bad faith. Not only did the Deputy Superintendent, without reason, deem it appropriate to take greater exceptional measures than had even been taken before, but he applied those measures in an excessive manner.

Finally, the applicants submitted that the Superintendent's decision was unfair, arbitrary and discriminatory. While he claimed to have made it on the basis of the "progress" report prepared by the auditor, Mr. Lachance, the evidence showed that his actions had in fact been planned for a long time.

As for the respondents, they argued that since the Deputy Superintendent simply applied the principles found in paragraph 5(3)(e) and section 14.03 of the BIA, he in no way exceeded his jurisdiction. The Deputy Superintendent exercised his discretion in an appropriate manner, that is, within the limits set out in the BIA.

I agree with the applicants that the statutory discretion exercised by the Superintendent is not absolute. The courts have held on numerous occasions that every discretion is subject to certain general legal limitations.[7] For example, it is established that a discretion cannot be used for improper purposes that are contrary to the applicable legislation. Furthermore, a discretion cannot be exercised in bad faith or in an arbitrary, unfair or unreasonable manner.

As noted by Lamer J. (as he then was) in Slaight Communications:[8]

Parliament cannot have intended to authorize such an unreasonable use of the discretion conferred by it. A discretion is never absolute, regardless of the terms in which it is conferred. This is a long-established principle. H. W. R. Wade, in his text titled Administrative Law (4th ed. 1977), says the following at pp. 336-37:

For more than three centuries it has been accepted that discretionary power conferred upon public authorities is not absolute, even within its apparent boundaries, but is subject to general legal limitations. These limitations are expressed in a variety of different ways, as by saying that discretion must be exercised reasonably and in good faith, that relevant considerations only must be taken into account, that there must be no malversation of any kind, or that the decision must not be arbitrary or capricious. (Emphasis added.)

What is the situation in the case at bar? Did the Deputy Superintendent disregard the general legal limitations to which he was subject in exercising his discretion? I do not think so.

Section 14.03 authorizes the Superintendent to take conservatory measures for the protection of bankruptcy estates. Given the seriousness of the irregularities alleged against the applicants, the taking of possession was intended to ensure that debtors and creditors did not suffer any harm pending the completion of the investigation under way.

In these circumstances, I cannot conclude that the conservatory measures ordered by the Deputy Superintendent had any purpose other than preserving estate records.

As for the argument that he should not have taken possession of all the records, when the situation had become urgent, I have difficulty seeing how he could have sorted through them and decided which records he could have left to be administered by the applicants. It must be recalled that what was at issue was their ability to fulfil their responsibilities as trustees with integrity. Because of their fiduciary role, trustees must be as transparent as possible in administering the records entrusted to them. They manage the property of others for the benefit of all creditors, and this is true for each record of a bankruptcy. Once the relationship of trust had broken down, the Deputy Superintendent had no choice but to take possession of all the records. Given the seriousness of the alleged misconduct, it seemed impossible to him to select certain records that the applicants could have continued to handle without jeopardizing the administration of property belonging to others. I cannot conclude that such a decision was unreasonable.

As for the conservatory measures involving Bell Canada and Canada Post, since they were cancelled a few days after they were taken, this Court no longer has to consider their validity and thus determine whether taking them was consistent with the power conferred by the BIA.

Moreover, I do not accept the argument that the power "to preserve" estates set out in section 14.03 was used in this case to "recover" estate records. The alleged actions endangered estates under the administration and control of the trustees, and it was precisely to prevent the occurrence of further misconduct that the conservatory measures were taken.

The applicants also submitted that, for all practical purposes, the direction for conservatory measures of September 1, 1995 rescinded the decision of the delegate, Mr. Daviault. According to the applicants, by ordering that possession be taken of all of Groupe G. Tremblay's records, the Deputy Superintendent made it impossible to implement Mr. Daviault's decision. By taking possession of the records, the Deputy Superintendent prevented the applicant Mr. Drolet from resuming his activities as a trustee in bankruptcy as planned. It should be recalled that the suspension of Mr. Drolet's licence was to end on September 1, 1995. The decision of the delegate, Mr. Daviault, was binding on Deputy Superintendent Mayrand. The applicants argued that because the Deputy Superintendent disregarded that decision, his exercise of the power to issue a direction for conservatory measures was unlawful.

In my view, this argument carries no weight. The decision of the delegate, Mr. Daviault, and that made by the Deputy Superintendent on September 1, 1995 related to two different matters. While Mr. Daviault's decision concerned Mr. Drolet's conduct when he worked for Gingsberg, Gingras & Associés, the taking of possession on September 1, 1995 was made necessary by the misconduct of Mr. Tremblay and the corporate trustee that he headed, namely Groupe G. Tremblay. The events on which these two decisions were based occurred at two different times.

2. The principles of natural justice

The applicants criticized the Deputy Superintendent for not giving them any notice before ordering the conservatory measures. They were never able to learn what misconduct the auditor was alleging they had committed, nor were they aware of the possible consequences thereof. They had no meaningful opportunity to respond to the auditor's allegations.

The respondents argued that the principles of natural justice are flexible and that, in the case at bar, those principles did not require that the applicants be given advance notice of the possible consequences. The applicants will have a hearing as part of the disciplinary proceedings and can raise their defences at that time.

I want to begin by noting that the Office of the Superintendent gave these trustees a number of opportunities to explain the shortcomings in their administration.[9] They neglected to respond, and they have only themselves to blame if they feel that they were not heard.

The courts have long recognized that the rules of natural justice and the duty of fairness are variable standards. As Sopinka J. has said, their content will depend on the circumstances of the case, the statutory provisions and the nature of the matter to be decided.[10]

In the case at bar, the applicable statutory provisions authorize the taking of conservatory measures to protect the public interest involved. It was imperative in such circumstances for the Superintendent to act quickly.

In this regard, I consider it appropriate to refer to the following passage from the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Homex Realty and Devel-opment Co. Ltd. v. Corporation of the Village of Wyoming:[11]

There are instances where the omission of the prerequisite notice is not supplied by the courts, as, for example, where the statute in question, by its very nature and by the legislative framework there adopted by the Legislature, must be read as precluding the requirement of prior notice. The Ontario Court of Appeal, for example, in Bishop v. Ontario Securities Commission ([1964] 1 O.R. 17), so construed s. 19 of The Securities Act, R.S.O. 1960, c. 363. Roach J.A., in speaking for the Court, stated:

The whole purpose of the Act might be defeated if the chairman could make an order or ruling under that section only on notice to the person or company affected and after a hearing. Many days might elapse between the giving of the notice to the persons or company sought to be affected and the conclusion of the hearing during which time those persons or that company if dishonest and disreputable could continue to prey upon the public and plunder and fleece many people. For that reason it was essential to the purpose of the Act that the chairman should be empowered to act promptly and without notice to the person or company sought to be affected. The chairman's first duty is to the public and in empowering him to discharge that duty the Legislature has by appropriate legislation at the same time protected the person or company affected by the order by giving to him on [sic] it at their election the right to have the order reviewed by the Commission. (at p. 23) [Emphasis added.]

Similarly, in Bunn,[12] the Court held that the public interest involved was pressing and required that the Law Society act promptly. The Court ruled that the object of the provisions in issue would be frustrated if it were impossible to take action until after notice had been given and a full hearing held. Hanssen J. stated the following:[13]

Digitized by Google

The legislation seeks to strike a balance between the rights of an individual member and the public interest. However, it recognizes, on the question of whether to suspend or not, the interest of the individual lawyer must be subordinate to the public interest. The object of s. 50(1)(a) is to protect the public interest. In many cases, that object would be frustrated if the action contemplated in that section could only take place after notice and a hearing.

In the instant case, the applicants will have an opportunity for a hearing as part of the disciplinary proceedings, and they can raise all their defences during that hearing. In the meantime, it was the Superintendent's duty to act quickly to protect estates.

Finally, as noted above, the evidence shows that the applicants were given numerous opportunities to provide explanations of the misconduct alleged against them. They neglected to do so. They have nothing to complain of now but their own carelessness.

3. Erroneous finding of fact made in a perverse or capricious manner

Subsection 18.1(4) of the Federal Court Act[14] authorizes the Court to review findings of fact that are not supported by the evidence or that an assessment of the evidence as a whole shows to be unreasonable.

The evidence shows that Mr. Mayrand had evidence of serious misconduct in their administration. That evidence was from a number of sources, and more specifically:

[translation] (i) the first report of the auditor, Laurent Lachance, dated May 13, 1995, concerning the records administered by the applicant Gilles M. Tremblay;

(ii) the report of the Official Receiver, Sylvie Laperrière, dated June 14, 1995;

(iii) the second report of the auditor, Laurent Lachance, dated August 28, 1995;

(iv) the reports on the RCMP investigations;

(v) the judgments of the Superior Court"Bankruptcy Division, which were sent to him by the judges and other interested persons;

(vi) the informations prepared by the RCMP, which led to the issuance of search warrants on August 31, 1995;

(vii) the many complaints that were constantly being filed at the Superintendent's offices in Québec, Montréal and Ottawa;

" transcript, examination of Marc Mayrand, January 31, 1996, p. 145 et seq.

The reports submitted were subjected to a strict internal verification process to determine their accuracy. The alleged acts raised serious doubts about the trustees' integrity. Contrary to what the applicants argued, the reports submitted were not interpreted in a discretionary or arbitrary manner.

In light of this evidence and the seriousness of the misconduct noted in the reports, Mr. Mayrand's decision to take effective conservatory measures to protect the estates administered by the applicants was reasonable.

In conclusion, I have found no reason to intervene as far as the administrative law issues are concerned. Although I imagine that the Deputy Superintendent could have taken less drastic conservatory measures, it is a clearly established rule that a superior court should not interfere with the exercise of a discretion by an administrative agency merely because the court might not have reached the same decision. This rule of curial deference has been stated many times by the Supreme Court, inter alia in Maple Lodge Farms Ltd.,[15] in which McIntyre J. summarized the principle as follows:

Where the statutory discretion has been exercised in good faith and, where required, in accordance with the principles of natural justice, and where reliance has not been placed upon considerations irrelevant or extraneous to the statutory purpose, the courts should not interfere.

That is the case here. It is therefore not appropriate to vary the Deputy Superintendent's decision.

C. CHARTER ISSUES

1. Section 7 of the Charter

(a) The right to liberty and the principles of fundamental justice

Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms reads as follows:

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Since Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act,[16] it has been accepted that section 7 does not guarantee the right to life, liberty and security per se. Section 7 guarantees that subjects of law to whom the section is applicable will not be deprived of their life, liberty or security except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. Thus, in determining the scope of section 7, it is necessary to define both the right to life, liberty and security and the principles of fundamental justice.

For the purposes of these proceedings, attention should be focused specifically on the right to liberty.

The applicants argued that the right to liberty includes the right to practice a profession and that the cancellation of a professional licence must be seen as infringing the right to liberty. Canadian courts seem to be divided on this subject at the present time. A number of decisions have found that the right to liberty includes the right to practice a profession.[17]

In my opinion, this issue does not arise in the case at bar, because the conservatory measures ordered by the Superintendent did not affect the existence or validity of the applicants' trustee licence. The issue can still be raised on judicial review of any disciplinary proceeding that cancels their licence without giving them an opportunity to assert their rights.

(b) The doctrine of vagueness

It was in R. v. Morgentaler[18] that the Supreme Court of Canada first associated the defect of vagueness with the principles of fundamental justice.[19] In that case, Dickson C.J. held that the impugned legislative provision violated the principles of fundamental justice because of its "failure to provide an adequate standard for therapeutic abortion committees".[20] Subsequently, in the Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.),[21] Lamer J. (as he then was), with whom a majority of judges concurred, expressed his views in terms similar to those used by Dickson C.J. in Morgentaler.[22]

It is clear that the doctrine of vagueness does not require Parliament and the provincial legislatures to enact legislation that provides absolute certainty. The courts are responsible for interpreting legislation. A legislative provision establishing a sanction that may deprive a person of life, liberty or security must not be unacceptably vague. The test to be applied was established by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Nova Scotia Pharmaceutical Society.[23] A legislative provision becomes unac-ceptably vague when it "does not provide an adequate basis for legal debate".[24]

The applicants argued that paragraph 5(3)(e) and section 14.03 of the BIA are so vague as to infringe section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (the Charter). An investigation under paragraph 5(3)(e) is all that is required for the seizure power set out in section 14.03 to be exercised. Under section 14.03, the Superintendent may direct any person to take such steps as the Superintendent may deem necessary to preserve the records of estates. In the applicants' submission, these are vague terms that confer an unlimited discretion on the Superintendent. The wording of paragraph 5(3)(e) and section 14.03 is so vague that it becomes impossible for a court to interpret it as limiting the Superintendent's discretion in any way. Nor do these provisions give individuals any reasonable notice of the circumstances in which the legislation applies or the types of consequences that result from violating it.

The respondents argued only that, in light of the context of section 14.03 of the BIA, the issue of its vagueness simply does not arise because what is involved is perfectly clear. The Superintendent is made responsible for supervising trustees' administration. The wording of paragraph 5(3)(e) and section 14.03 is not so vague as to justify a finding by me that they cannot provide guidance for legal debate.

It is important to recall that the doctrine of vagueness is applicable under section 7 only if the sanction provided for in the provision in question may deprive someone of life, liberty or security of the person.

In the case at bar, however, as noted above, the measures provided for in section 14.03 do not affect the right to practice a profession"here the profession of trustee"a right which, according to some cases, may make section 7 of the Charter applicable. In any event, I am of the view that paragraph 5(3)(e) and section 14.03 provide "sufficient guidance for legal debate".[25] The applicable test is a very strict one. As noted by Gonthier J. in Ontario v. Canadian Pacific Ltd.,[26] at page 1071:

In particular, a deferential approach should be taken in relation to legislative enactments with legitimate social policy objectives, in order to avoid impeding the state's ability to pursue and promote those objectives.

In the instant case, although it is true that the Superintendent has the discretion to decide what conservatory measures are needed in each situation, the circumstances in which such measures may be taken and the goal to be achieved, namely preserving the records of estates, are specified. The doctrine of vagueness is inapplicable in the circumstances.

2. Section 8 of the Charter

The applicants argued essentially that the conservatory measures taken in this case were in the nature of a seizure. Since that seizure was carried out without the prior authorization of a neutral and impartial arbiter, it was unreasonable within the meaning of section 8 of the Charter. They also argued that paragraph 5(3)(e) and section 14.03 of the BIA are constitutionally invalid.

It was in Hunter et al. v. Southam Inc.[27] that the Supreme Court of Canada first ruled on the scope of section 8 of the Charter, which reads as follows:

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

In dealing with the basis for this constitutional guarantee, Dickson J. (as he then was) wrote the following:[28]

This limitation on the right guaranteed by s. 8, whether it is expressed negatively as freedom from "unreasonable" search and seizure, or positively as an entitlement to a "reasonable" expectation of privacy, indicates that an assessment must be made as to whether in a particular situation the public's interest in being left alone by government must give way to the government's interest in intruding on the individual's privacy in order to advance its goals, notably those of law enforcement.

In defining the terms "search" and "seizure" in section 8, reference must be made to the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in R. v. Dyment .[29] In that case, the Court held that the essence of a seizure under section 8 is the taking of a thing from a person by a public authority without that person's consent.

Digitized by Google

In the instant case, the respondents argued that there was no seizure because the applicants do not own the estate records entrusted to them. In the alternative, they argued that the applicants consented to the seizure.

I do not share this view. Since Plant,[30] it has been accepted that ownership of the seized items is not a relevant consideration. Because section 8 is essentially concerned with the expectation of privacy, its focus is above all on individuals, not property. The taking of possession on September 1, 1995 was undoubtedly a "seizure" within the meaning given to that term in section 8 of the Charter.

Before examining the nature and scope of the guarantee provided by section 8 of the Charter, I should consider whether the guarantee can be waived by a person to whom it applies.

In criminal cases, the Supreme Court of Canada applied the following test for waiver before the advent of the Charter:

. . . [it must be] clear and unequivocal that the person is waiving the procedural safeguard and is doing so with full knowledge of the rights the procedure was enacted to protect and of the effect the waiver will have on those rights in the process.[31]

In R. v. Borden,[32] the Supreme Court made a definitive ruling on the question of what conditions must be met for a waiver of the section 8 guarantee to be valid. It confirmed the approach put forward by the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in R. v. Nielsen,[33] namely that the waiver of the section 8 right must, at a minimum, be subject to the conditions applicable to the waiver of a statutory procedural right like that in issue in Korponay.[34]

For a true waiver, the person purporting to consent must be possessed of the requisite informational foundation. In Borden,[35] Iacobucci J., writing for the majority, stated the following:

. . . the person purporting to consent must be possessed of the requisite informational foundation for a true relinquishment of the right. A right to choose requires not only the volition to prefer one option over another, but also sufficient available information to make the preference meaningful. This is equally true whether the individual is choosing to forego consultation with counsel or choosing to relinquish to the police something which they otherwise have no right to take.

In the case at bar, rather than risk having physical force used against him or proceedings brought against him for hindering government representatives in the performance of their duties, the applicant Mr. Tremblay preferred to act prudently and complied with their demand, on the assumption that the "direction for conservatory measures" pursuant to which they were acting was lawful. The applicant Mr. Tremblay felt that he had no choice; he simply submitted to the requirements of the representatives from the Office of the Superintendent, who, it should be noted, showed up at his place of business accompanied by bailiffs.

Moreover, I consider it important to point out that the representatives of the Office of the Superintendent were preceded that day by RCMP officers, who had search warrants issued by a justice of the peace, namely Judge Choquette of the Court of Québec, Criminal and Penal Division. As Mr. Tremblay saw it, the search conducted by the representatives of the Office of the Superintendent came within the scope of the police operation of the same morning. In these circumstances, I cannot conclude that he consented freely and voluntarily to the seizure and thus waived the guarantee conferred on the applicants by section 8 of the Charter.

Applicability of the Hunter criteria in a regulatory context

To determine whether a statute that authorizes a search or seizure is unreasonable, it is first necessary to ascertain whether the criteria formulated by Dickson J. (as he then was) in Hunter are applicable. Those criteria were summarized as follows by Wilson J. in Thomson Newspapers Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigation and Research, Restrictive Trade Practices Commission):[36]

(a) a system of prior authorization, by an entirely neutral and impartial arbiter who is capable of acting judicially in balancing the interests of the State against those of the individual;

(b) a requirement that the impartial arbiter must satisfy himself that the person seeking the authorization has reasonable grounds, established upon oath, to believe that an offence has been committed;

(c) a requirement that the impartial arbiter must satisfy himself that the person seeking the authorization has reasonable grounds to believe that something which will afford evidence of the particular offence under investigation will be recovered; and

(d) a requirement that the only documents which are authorized to be seized are those which are strictly relevant to the offence under investigation.

However, in Thomson Newspapers Ltd.[37] and R. v. McKinlay Transport Ltd.,[38] the Supreme Court stated that the development of less stringent criteria for administrative or regulatory searches and seizures may be consistent with the spirit of section 8.

The standard of review must be reasonable and take account of the regulatory nature of the legislation and the scheme enacted.[39] For example, prior authorization is not required for a search or seizure that is aimed not at detecting criminal activities but rather at ensuring compliance with regulatory provisions adopted to protect the public interest.[40] It is thus necessary to balance a group of factors.

Digitized by Google

What is the purpose of the legislation? What is the degree of intrusion? What expectation of privacy should exist in light of the purpose of the legislation? What is the nature of the seized documents? These are a few of the questions that must be asked.[41]

Sections 14.01, 14.02 and 14.03 of the BIA are part of a set of provisions whose essential purpose is the supervision of trustees' administration and conduct. In authorizing such supervision by the Superintendent, Parliament's primary aim is to protect third parties, whether they be debtors or creditors. The nature of the role played by trustees makes the existence of such rules necessary. Trustees act as fiduciaries and as such, as we have seen, they are responsible for administering property owned by others. For this reason, the duties and obligations of trustees in bankruptcy are highly regulated. Such trustees are subject to constant audits, by means of which the Superintendent assures himself of their integrity.

Moreover, the documents administered by trustees are, according to law, public documents. It has been found that the expectation of privacy associated with such documents, that is, documents produced in the course of operating a regulated business, is lower than the expectation of privacy associated with documents that are strictly personal and private.

As noted by La Forest J. in R. v. Fitzpatrick:[42]

In my view a similar standard should be applied to the use in a regulatory prosecution of records that are statutorily compelled as a condition of participation in the regulatory area. Little expectation of privacy can attach to these documents, since they are produced precisely to be read and relied upon by state officials. [Emphasis added.]

In light of these various factors, I do not think that the balance to be struck between society's interests and the applicants' expectation of privacy, which in the circumstances is low, requires a strict application of the Hunter criteria.

Our courts have recently developed less stringent criteria for cases in which the Hunter criteria are inapplicable. In this regard, I consider the Ontario Court of Appeal's decision in Johnson v. Ontario (Minister of Revenue)[43] to be relevant. In that case, the Court had to determine whether subsections 15(3) and (4) of the Tobacco Tax Act[44] were constitutional. Those subsections authorized the seizure of motor vehicles used in the tobacco trade and the contents thereof.

Since the measures authorized by subsections 15(3) and (4) of the Tobacco Tax Act were administrative or regulatory in nature, the parties acknowledged that the strict criteria formulated in Hunter were inapplicable. It was in that context that Arbour J.A. wrote the following:[45]

However, the fact that legislation is merely regulatory rather than criminal in nature does not in itself determine what standard of reasonableness will be required. This depends largely on the second step in the analysis which consists of identifying the privacy interest which is at stake under the search and seizure provision and the severity of the intrusion on that privacy interest.

It is therefore necessary to strike a balance between the reasonable expectation of privacy and the seriousness of the intrusion resulting from the search or seizure. She concluded as follows:[46]

Against this limited privacy claim, the intrusion permitted by s. 15 is serious . . . . The section contains no requirement of reasonable and probable grounds or even of reasonable suspicion. It allows a person authorized by the Minister of Revenue to stop and detain for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the Tobacco Tax Act, any commercial vehicle, to search the contents thereof, to seize documents that may afford evidence of a contravention of the Act and to seize cargo if it consists of more than 10,000 cigarettes.

She noted, however, that persons engaged in a regulated activity, such as the tobacco trade, must expect that the authorities will make certain inspections and checks. In other words, persons involved in a regulated activity must expect a certain amount of intrusion by administrative authorities. However, the measures authorized by subsections 15(3) and (4) went much further than what such persons were obliged to expect. Such measures would not be consistent with the section 8 guarantee unless the reasonable grounds test were met. She stated the following:[47]

A requirement of reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a commercial vehicle contains evidence of a contravention of the Tobacco Tax Act will, in my opinion, reduce the scope of the search sufficiently to recognize the privacy interest at stake. While not unduly impairing the enforcement of the Act, such a requirement would also satisfy the s. 8 Charter standard required for regulatory type searches.

The Johnson[48] test must, however, be applied only in cases in which the significance and severity of the intrusion so require. The reasonable grounds requirement will not be applicable when the case involves monitoring-type measures such as those discussed by Arbour J.A., namely checks and inspections that a person engaged in a regulated activity must reasonably expect. Likewise, the test will not be applied when doing so would be unjustified given the low degree of "intrusion".

In my view, since this case involves a search of private premises that was not conducted as part of a regulatory inspection, the degree of intrusion is greater than it would be, for example, in a case involving a request for the production of documents. For this reason, I feel that when conservatory measures involve a search or seizure within the meaning given to those terms in section 8 of the Charter, the measures cannot be taken unless there are reasonable grounds to believe that they will make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates.

Thus, in so far as it authorizes conservatory measures in the nature of a "seizure" where there are no reasonable grounds to believe that the measures will make it possible to "preserve" the records of an estate, paragraph 14.03(1)(b) of the BIA infringes the guarantee set out in section 8 of the Charter. That infringement is not saved by section 1, no evidence having been adduced in this regard by the Attorney General of Canada.

In so far as it infringes section 8 of the Charter, paragraph 14.03(1)(b) of the BIA is of no force or effect. I must therefore consider what remedy would be appropriate. In Schachter v. Canada,[49] Lamer C.J. set out the range of remedies and the principles applicable to selecting the appropriate one:

A court has flexibility in determining what course of action to take following a violation of the Charter which does not survive s. 1 scrutiny. Section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982 mandates the striking down of any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution, but only "to the extent of the inconsistency". Depending upon the circumstances, a court may simply strike down, it may strike down and temporarily suspend the declaration of invalidity, or it may resort to the techniques of reading down or reading in. . . . In choosing how to apply s. 52 . . . a court will determine its course of action with reference to the nature of the violation and the context of the specific legislation under consideration.[50]

For the following reasons, I am satisfied that the appropriate remedy in the circumstances is to "read down" paragraph 14.03(1)(b) of the BIA so that conservatory measures in the nature of a "seizure" are not authorized unless the Superintendent or his delegate has reasonable grounds to believe that they will make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates. This was the type of remedy chosen by the Supreme Court of Canada in a similar context in R. v. Grant .[51]

The advantage of such a remedy is that it means that a mechanism that is absolutely essential for the protection of third parties can be maintained. In my view, the reading down involved here satisfies Parliament's legitimate concerns for effective law enforcement without offending the reasonable seizure requirement under section 8 of the Charter.

The existence of reasonable grounds can be verified by this Court through judicial review after the fact. In Thomson Newspapers Ltd.,[52] La Forest J. noted the importance of such judicial review where the requirement of prior judicial authorization is found to be inapplicable:

The opportunity to challenge, by way of judicial review, the relevancy of any particular use of s. 17 to matters in respect of which the Director or Commission can conduct inquiries, provides adequate guarantee against potential abuse of the power s. 17 confers. No evidence of any such abuse is apparent in the case before this Court.

I now turn to the question of whether, in the case at bar, the Deputy Superintendent had reasonable grounds to believe that the conservatory measures would make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates. In my view, an affirmative answer must be given to this question. As I noted above, the evidence in the record refers to very serious misconduct, which called for effective and prompt action to protect the estates of third parties.

As for the applicants' argument with respect to section 12 of the Charter, I need only say that the conservatory measures taken in the case at bar do not amount to "cruel and unusual treatment". Section 12 is therefore inapplicable.

I also reject the arguments based on the Canadian Bill of Rights [R.S.C., 1985, Appendix III] on the basis that they are without merit.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the applications for judicial review are allowed in part. Paragraph 14.03(1)(b) of the BIA is of no force or effect in so far as it authorizes the taking of conservatory measures in the nature of a "seizure" where there are no reasonable grounds to believe that the measures will make it possible to "preserve" the records of estates.

The applicants' conclusions seeking to reserve their right to claim damages are dismissed.

REASONS FOR ORDER

MacKAY D.J.:

[1] These reasons concern my decision to dismiss the application by the applicant trustees for judicial review of three interrelated decisions of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy acting under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, as amended, ("the BIA" or "the Act").

[2] The decisions in question were made in proceedings concerning review of the conduct of the trustees following an investigation and a report by a senior disciplinary analyst ("SDA") concerning allegations of unprofessional conduct in the administration of two estates. The first decision concerned alleged misconduct by the trustees, a decision made September 3, 2002, following hearings conducted in the preceding May and June. By the second decision, made on February 12, 2003, the Superintendent dismissed a motion by the trustees for a stay of the proceedings or a rehearing, a motion based on the ground that there were alleged failures by the SDA to disclose material evidence in advance of the hearings in May and June 2002. The third decision, made June 23, 2003, concerned penalties imposed for failure of the trustees to meet professional standards expected of them.

[3] Under Rule 302 of the Federal Court Rules, 1998, SOR/98-106, unless the Court orders otherwise, an application for judicial review concerns a single decision of a federal board, tribunal or agency in respect of which relief is sought. The circumstances of this case warrant an Order, as the terms of the Order now issued confirm, that this proceeding relates to three interrelated and interdependent decisions made concerning the merits, a stay application and applicable penalties in the course of proceedings arising from investigation and hearings about alleged failure of the trustees to meet professional standards in the management of certain estates in bankruptcy.

[4] Proceedings in this application were extended following the hearing until January 2005 by written submissions, initiated by the applicants with responses by the Attorney-General, filed with leave of the Court. Those concern "fresh evidence" or information which it is urged has significance for this matter. After reviewing the background and the decisions in issue, these reasons then review developments after June 23, 2003 when the penalty decision was rendered, and the significance of those developments. Finally, these reasons deal with the merits of the issues raised in this application.

[5] The reasons proceed under the following headings:

A. The background and the decisions in issue.
B. Developments after June 23, 2003.
C. Significance of post-June 2003 developments.
D. The issues raised in judicial review.
   1. The standard of review
   2. The applicability of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, sections 7 and 11
   3. The applicability of the Canadian Bill of Rights
   4. The appropriate standard of fairness
   5. Specific errors alleged in law
   6. Reasonableness of the decisions of the Superintendent

[6] The applicant, Todd Y. Sheriff, is a licensed trustee under the BIA and he is the principal shareholder and an employee of the corporate applicant, Segal and Partners, Inc. which holds a corporate trustee licence under the Act. As a result of complaints about the administration by the trustees of two estates in bankruptcy, a Senior Disciplinary Analyst ("SDA"), exercising certain responsibilities of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy under the BIA, was directed to initiate an investigation of the work of the two trustees.

[7] Under the Act the Superintendent is responsible for licencing and supervision of trustees in their administration of estates as a fiduciary for the benefit of creditors. In the exercise of that responsibility the Superintendent receives complaints and he or his delegate may undertake an investigation or inspection of any matter to which the Act applies, including the conduct of a trustee.

[8] While the investigation of the SDA was underway, in March 2001 the corporate trustee reported concerns about alleged dishonesty of one of its staff who had been involved in the administration of the estates of interest to the SDA. That staff member (here called "A") was subsequently terminated in her employment. The investigation by the SDA led to two reports, the first on June 29, 2001, concerning alleged failures by the trustees to meet professional standards in administration of the two estates of concern. A second, supplementary report was completed October 25, 2001. Copies of both were provided to the trustees and preparations were made for a hearing by the Superintendent about the deficiencies, or the wrongdoing, reported by the SDA.

[9] Arrangements were made for hearings by the Superintendent with appropriate notice from the SDA's reports of the matters of concern, pursuant to section 14.02 of the BIA. Upon objection by the trustees to the form and content of the SDA's second report as inconsistent with directed requirements under the BIA, the Superintendent declined to deal with the second report, but commenced the hearing in relation to the first report. Prior to that hearing, the applicant trustees sought full disclosure of documents in possession of the SDA that were relevant to the anticipated hearing. The hearing was held May 27-30 and June 3, 2002, when decision was reserved. Subsequently on September 3, 2002, the Superintendent's decision found significant deficiencies in the administration by the trustees of the estates in question.

[10] Following the September 3, 2002 decision, the first of those here in question, the trustees raised objections to the admission, at the hearing, of the evidence of one, Mr. Webster. Since the Superintendent expressly stated by his decision that this evidence would be ignored, and it was not otherwise referred to in the decision, and it is not now said by the trustees that it was relied upon by the Superintendent, that objection has no merit. The second objection concerns alleged failure by the SDA to disclose in advance of or at the hearing, correspondence with another trustee, a third party, alleging dishonesty by A, the former employee of the applicant corporation, who had been employed by that third party after employment with the applicant trustee was terminated. That correspondence the applicants learned about only in November, 2002 when it was disclosed by the SDA as a document possibly relevant for the second report, which as we have noted, was completed October 25, 2002.

[11] The two objections of the trustees led them to apply to the Superintendent for a stay of proceedings or for a new hearing on the ground that the SDA had failed to disclose material evidence, i.e. the letter from a second corporate trustee concerning the alleged wrongdoing of A. They urged that had they known of that alleged wrongdoing by A, they might have called her as a witness and evidence of A's conduct could reasonably have resulted in a different decision concerning the applicants.

[12] That application by the trustees was heard on November 12, 2002 and was dealt with by decision of the Superintendent, dated February 12, 2003, the second decision here in question. No reason was found to order a new hearing or to stay proceedings. In his decision the Superintendent noted that a statement by A, included in the SDA's material evidence disclosed before the May-June 2002 hearing, a matter disputed by the trustees at the hearing, had specifically been excluded from his consideration, as stated in his decision. A had not been called as a witness at the hearing either by the SDA or by the trustees, though nothing precluded that.

[13] As for the failure to disclose the correspondence from the second corporate trustee, the Superintendent's decision found that the SDA had failed to meet appropriate standards for disclosing information that could have been relevant and of interest to the applicant trustees. Nevertheless, that "information would not itself have produced any different result, and in the circumstances of the case, on a balance of probabilities there was no reasonable possibility that the trustees were denied the opportunity to present a full answer and defence or that their right to a fair hearing was violated as a result of the failure to disclose the other trustee firm's report."

[14] Thereafter, submissions were made by the applicants and by the SDA to the Superintendent with respect to appropriate penalties. The decision, to impose penalties, was released on June 23, 2003. This is the third decision in issue in this application for judicial review. I return to the issues raised in this application after dealing with issues arising after the penalty decision in June 2003. The penalties then decided were not imposed, pending the outcome of this application.

B. Developments after June 23, 2003

[15] While the parties prepared for the hearing of this matter they were simultaneously involved in preparations for a hearing by a delegate of the Superintendent in regard to the second report of the SDA, which had originated on the basis of an audit of the applicant trustees' affairs following their report in 2001 of alleged wrongdoing by A, their former employee. In the course of preparations for that hearing concerning the second report the trustees continued to seek disclosure of information from the SDA. Further disclosure was made, in March and April 2004 when working papers of the SDA, excluding some claimed to be privileged, and a regulatory circular concerning management of third party accounts were produced by the SDA.

[16] That late disclosure led to a motion by the trustees to the Superintendent's delegate, that proceedings with regard to the second report be stayed. The motion was denied and preparations for the hearing on that matter continued with a view to commencing in the fall of 2004.

[17] The late disclosure with other concerns about the SDA's alleged failure to disclose relevant information was also a ground for argument in the hearing of this application concerning the decisions of the Superintendent. That ground I return to discuss, after first disposing of a second request by the trustees that this proceeding be stayed and the decisions here in question be set aside. That request was based upon "fresh evidence", said to have become available after the hearing of this application. That evidence is constituted by further disclosure of the SDA on November 2, 2004, of e-mail correspondence recently examined and perceived to be possibly relevant in relation to the hearing in regard to the second report. Submissions in respect of the significance of that fresh evidence were made in writing to this Court in December 2004, following a request in November by the applicants for leave to file a supplementary record.

[18] The disclosure made November 2, 2004, also became the basis for a second motion by the trustees to the Superintendent's delegate for a stay of proceedings in relation to the second report of the SDA. That motion, heard by the Honourable Fred Kaufman, the Superintendent's delegate, led to a decision dated January 6, 2005. That was sent to me by the trustees with a request for leave to file it in this matter, with additional submissions emphasizing the trustees' view that the reasoning of that decision has significance for this proceeding, and further supports their submission that this proceeding in relation to the first report be stayed or be ordered to be reheard by the Superintendent. That request the respondent Attorney General opposed by written submissions dated January 25, 2005.

[19] By his decision the Honourable Fred Kaufman, acknowledging that he was dealing with a different case than this, found that delayed disclosure, and some uncertainty whether all relevant information had been disclosed, put in question the integrity of the process in regard to the second report and so too the right and ability of the trustees to make full answer and defence in regard to that report. He found the wording of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act authorized him to grant a stay, and he stayed "the proceedings initiated against [the trustees'] by the Senior Discipline Analyst".

[20] By the Order now issued I confirm that the written submissions of the trustee, including the decision of January 6, 2005 by the Honourable Fred Kaufman, and the response by letter of the Attorney General, are filed in this proceeding. I do so in order to complete the record of submissions made before, at, and following the hearing of this application for judicial review.

C. Significance of post-June 2003 developments

[21] Having ordered the written submissions presented following the hearing of this matter to be filed, I am not persuaded that the fresh evidence revealed by the disclosure of information on November 2, 2004, or the decision of the Honourable Fred Kaufman have any significance for my decision. The November disclosure and the delegate's subsequent decision following the hearing of this application, and the earlier disclosures of March and April 2004, occurred long after the decisions of the Superintendent here in question. I note the trustees are concerned about alleged failure of the SDA to make timely disclosure of evidence or information in her possession at the time of the first report and also of the second report, and that both reports concern the same trustees and SDA, the same time period and some similar underlying facts.

[22] Nevertheless what is urged to be fresh evidence by disclosure in November 2004, as in March and April, 2004, mainly concerns conduct by A, the former employee of the trustees, contemplation of possible prosecution of A, and guidelines for managing third party accounts, matters which are not relevant for review of the decisions of the Superintendent here in question. Again, I note that any evidence of A was expressly excluded from consideration by the Superintendent when A was not called by the trustees or by the SDA at the hearing on the first report. Matters relating to third party accounts, possibly apart from the two estates of concern for the first report, are not relevant for review in this proceeding, and in any event the guidelines were not "fresh evidence" since they had been published for trustees some years ago.

[23] No substantive argument concerning the Superintendent's decision here in question is raised by the trustees on the basis of the "fresh evidence". They seek to support their claim for relief by relying on late disclosure, after the hearing, to bolster their similar argument made at the hearing of this application. They claim to have lost confidence in the fairness of the process followed by the SDA. That is unfortunate but their measure of the standard for fairness is not in itself persuasive.

[24] Finally, I am not persuaded that the decision of the Honourable Fred Kaufman, in relation to proceedings in preparation for the hearing on matters raised in the second report has significance for judicial review of the decisions made by the Superintendent in 2002 and 2003 in respect of matters raised in the first report. With respect for his decision, I note that it concerns different circumstances, although they involve the same trustees and SDA and the same general time period. It is a case different from this, as the delegate himself acknowledged. Each case concerns a different report, the first concerning perceived failure to meet professional standards, the second concerning perceived wrongdoing against the interests of beneficiaries of bankrupt estates.

D. The issues raised in judicial review

[25] I turn to the issues raised in the application records and the submissions made at the hearing of this judicial review of the decisions by the Superintendent in regard to the first report.

D.1. The standard of review

[26] The applicants urge that the standard of review in this application is correctness. While that may be the appropriate standard in relation to some or all of specific errors of law they urge were made by the Superintendent, I am not persuaded that standard is appropriate in assessing the decision of September 3, 2002 on the merits of the first report, and the penalty decision of June 23, 2003, when those are each considered as a whole.

[27] Under the BIA the Superintendent is responsible for supervision of the administration of all estates, with broad power to oversee the regime for management of bankruptcy and insolvency situations for the benefit of debtors, creditors and others interested in the estates. A primary means of supervision is through trustee licensing and regulation of the work of trustees. Under section 5 of the Act the Superintendent's supervisory responsibilities include:

5(3) The Superintendent shall, without limiting the authority conferred by subsection (2),

5(6) Les instructions données par le surintendant ne sont pas des textes réglementaires au sens de la Loi sur les textes réglementaires.

[29] The Act also includes provisions concerning investigations by the Superintendent, as follows:

14.01 (1) Where, after making or causing to be made an investigation into the conduct of a trustee, it appears to the Superintendent that

(a) a trustee has not properly performed the duties of a trustee or has been guilty of any improper management of an estate,

[30] In the context of the pragmatic and functional approach to the standard of review as confirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada in Law Society of New Brunswick v. Ryan, 2003 SCC 20 (CanLII), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 247 at paras. 20, 26-27 and in Dr. Q v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, 2003 SCC 19 (CanLII), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 226 at paras. 21-22, the decisions on the merits of the report and on any penalties are both decisions for which the standard of review is reasonableness. That standard rests on my assessment of the comparative expertise of the Superintendent relative to the Court in the supervision of trustees and of estates, of the purpose of the Act in general, and of sections 14.01 and 14.02 in particular, to ensure an appropriate exercise of fiduciary responsibilities in administration of estates, and of the nature of the ultimate issues for each decision, which are mixed questions of law and fact.

[31] In review of those decisions the Court owes deference to the conclusions reached by the Superintendent. Unless they are clearly unreasonable in light of the evidence considered by the Superintendent, the Court will not disturb his decisions on the merits and on penalties. That is particularly the case where in the course of a hearing the Superintendent "is not bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence" (the Act, subsection 14.02(2)(b)).

[32] Other decisions of the Superintendent, first in regard to the applicant's motion to stay proceedings based on alleged unfairness arising from failure of the SDA to provide full disclosure in advance of the hearing, and second in regard to alleged unfairness from the statute's vesting of various functions in the Superintendent, and third concerning specific errors of law claimed by the applicants, relate to the process followed by the Superintendent. For the first two mixed questions of fact and law, the standard of review applicable is also reasonableness. In assessing specific errors of law alleged, the standard is correctness.

[33] I turn to apply these standards to the decisions in issue after considering the applicants' claims in relation to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Constitution Act, 1982, Schedule B, Part I, and the Canadian Bill of Rights, S.C. 1960, c. 44.

D.2. The applicability of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, sections 7 and 11

[34] In written submissions in the applicants' record it is urged that the application of sections 14.01 and 14.02 as applied in this case violate their rights assured by sections 7 and 11 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is urged those constitutional rights are engaged by reason of procedural guidelines issued by the Superintendent which provide that one objective of the process for decisions affecting a trustee's licence is to ensure compliance with the legal obligations provided for under the BIA, the general rules and directives applicable, and the Charter of Rights and rules of administrative law.

[35] Enunciation of that objective does not in itself engage sections 7 and 11 of he Charter of Rights. The guidelines are directives issued by the Superintendent and do not constitute law in the normal sense (Pezim v. British Columbia (Superintendent of Brokers), 1994 CanLII 103 (SCC), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 557 at 591). The Charter is applicable in accord with its terms and relevant jurisprudence. Proceedings like those before the Superintendent are administrative in nature, controlling the practice of licenced trustees. At most they may affect economic interests and the privilege of practising as a licenced trustee. They do not affect rights to life, liberty and security of the person within the meaning of section 7 of the Charter (see Gosselin v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2002 SCC 84 (CanLII), [2002] 4 S.C.R. 429; Charles v. Canada (Attorney General), 1995 Carswell Ont. 1037 (Gen. Div.) aff'd 1998 Carswell Ont. 1297 (C.A.) at para. 47). Moreover subsection 11(d) of the Charter, referred to by the trustees, has no application to professional conduct proceedings under the BIA which proceedings are not penal in nature (R. v. Wigglesworth, 1987 CanLII 41 (SCC), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 541; Blencoe v. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission), 2000 SCC 44 (CanLII), [2000] 2 S.C.R. 307 at para. 88). Finally, it is well settled that the Charter rights here referred to do not protect the interests of the corporate trustee in any case.

Digitized by Google

[36] In my opinion, sections 7 and 11 of the Charter are not engaged by the proceedings conducted by the Superintendent under sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the BIA either directly, or indirectly as the trustees suggest by reason the objective stated for the process, or by reason of alleged failure of the SDA to disclose relevant information in advance of the hearing in May and June 2002.

D.3. The applicability of the Bill of Rights

[37] The trustees submit that in addition to their Charter rights their rights under the Canadian Bill of Rights are infringed by the proceedings, in particular those rights assured by subsection 1(a) which declares "the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law", and by subsection 2(e) which provides "... no law of Canada shall be construed and applied so as to ...(e) deprive a person of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations".

[38] It is well settled that subsections 1(a) and 2(e) of the Bill of Rights are concerned with rights of natural persons, not with claimed rights of corporations. Canada (Attorney General) v. Central Cartage, reflex, (1990) 2 F.C. 641 (C.A.); Pfeiffer v. Redling, (1995) Carswell Nat 1570 (F.C.T.D.). Further, the Bill of Rights does not apply with regard to a claim for a privilege or for licenced authority (Pfeiffer, supra; Re Joys and Minister of Natural Revenue, 1995 CanLII 3537 (FCA), [1995] 128 D.L.R. (4th) 385 (F.C.T.D.). I agree with submissions of the respondent that under the BIA, a trustee is licensed and regulated by the Superintendent; he has no right to a license and no vested interest in the license he may hold as a trustee.

[39] Further, as will be evident when I next consider the trustees' claims concerning the combination of functions under authority of the BIA and concerning failures of disclosure, claims relating to fairness of the process, I am not persuaded that they were not afforded a fair hearing in accord with the principles of fundamental justice. Thus, their claims do not establish a violation of rights ensured under the Canadian Bill of Rights in the process here followed by the Superintendent.

D.4. The appropriate standard of fairness

[40] The trustees raise two preliminary objections to the process which in my view concern the fairness of the proceedings. These concern the combination of functions authorized for the Superintendent, and the delay and failures in disclosure by the SDA.

[41] It is the case that under the BIA the Superintendent is responsible for investigation, reporting and adjudicating, including the imposition of penalties whenever concerns arise about the conduct and practice of a licensed trustee. Those functions may be delegated by the Superintendent, as the investigation and reporting were to the SDA in this case. In other cases the Superintendent may delegate to another the responsibility for a hearing and determinations of inadequacy or of penalties, as was done in regard to the second report completed with respect to the trustees concerned in this case.

[42] In Ocean Port Hotel Ltd. v. British Columbia (General Manager, Liquor Control and Licensing Branch), 2001 SCC 52 (CanLII), [2001] 2 S.C.R. 781 at para. 40, Madame Justice McLachlin wrote:

The mere fact that senior inspectors functioned both as investigators and decision makers does not automatically establish a reasonable apprehension of bias. [...]

In Bell Canada v. C.T.E.A., 2003 SCC 36 (CanLII), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 884 at para. 40, Chief Justice McLachlin and Bastarache J. commented, following the reasoning in Ocean Port:

The overlapping of investigative, prosecutorial and adjudicative functions in a single agency is frequently necessary for [an administrative agency] to effectively perform its intended role.

[43] In this case the Superintendent delegated his investigatory and reporting role to the SDA. The report became the basis for the hearing conducted by the Superintendent who, on the evidence presented by the SDA's report and the testimony and evidence of the trustees, reached decisions on the merits and ultimately on appropriate penalties. The Superintendent participated in one phase only and the various roles for which the office was responsible were not improperly confused. There was no inherent bias in the process. Moreover, the process was not criminal in nature and it did not lead to deprivation of basic rights or liberty. It was concerned with assessing and regulating the practices of licensed trustees. In my opinion, the structural framework established by the statute, as it was applied in this case did not constitute a breach of the appropriate standard of fairness.

[44] No basis is established concerning alleged violation of the Charter, or of the Canadian Bill of Rights, or of basic principles of fairness in process, that would warrant a finding that the statutory provisions, sections 14.01 to 14.03 are inoperative in the circumstances of this case.

[45] As earlier noted, the time this application was heard, in September 2004, and in subsequent written submissions to the Court, the trustees emphasized their concern about a lack of fairness in the process followed by reason of the lack of, and often belated, disclosure by the SDA both before and after the hearing by the Superintendent, a concern already noted and dealt with in part. I have declined to stay this proceeding, or the proceedings of the Superintendent, or to set those aside on the basis of the trustees' concerns about alleged failure of disclosure.

[46] Their concerns are based on principles concerning disclosure that have evolved in criminal law, now established by the decision in R. v. Stinchcombe, 1991 CanLII 45 (SCC), [1991] 3 S.C.R. 326 and the jurisprudence flowing from that. The proceedings here do not result in criminal penalties, they did not result in deprivation of the professional standing of a licensed trustee though the terms of their licenses were varied. I am not persuaded that in these disciplinary proceedings, to review the practices of licenses, criminal law standards for disclosure are necessary or appropriate.

[47] Rather, aside from exceptional circumstances not present in this case, in an administrative process for assessing and directing practices of licensed trustees, it is sufficient if disclosure extends to information upon which the report of the SDA is based, and the report itself, so that the person affected knows the case he is expected to meet and has a fair opportunity to answer that case.

[48] That basic standard of fairness of the process was met in this case, in my opinion. The case the applicant trustees had to meet was known to them in advance of the hearing, from the first report of the SDA and the documentary evidence produced before the Superintendent's hearing in May and June 2002 (D. & B. Co. of Canada Ltd. v. Canada (Director of Investigations and Research) 1994 Carswell Nat 1849 (F.C.A.); Re CIBA-Geigy Canada Ltd. 1994 Carswell Nat 1796). They had opportunity to provide evidence, to call witnesses and to make submissions before the Superintendent's decisions were made in September 2002 and in June 2003.

D.5. Specific errors alleged in law

[49] The trustees urged specific errors were made in failing to consider the significance of evidence revealed by belated disclosure. The first concerned failure to disclose, until after the first decision, information that became the basis for the trustees' motion to stay proceedings and for the Superintendent's second decision in February 2003, a matter I deal with in review of that decision. The second concerned an exculpatory statement by an employee of the Superintendent, which it is said might have had a significant bearing on results of the hearing. But the evidence of that employee, as in the case of the evidence of A, the trustees' former employee, was specifically excluded from consideration by the Superintendent, and the evidence in question was essentially a matter of opinion. In these circumstances, I am not persuaded that the information disclosed after the hearing would have had any bearing on the result had it been earlier available, and I note the trustees make no submissions except to speculate that the outcome might have been affected.

[50] Reference by the Superintendent in recitals of the penalty decision to a loan arranged by the trustees, when it is urged that loan was not established in the Superintendent's findings on the merits in the first report, is said to have been made without opportunity for the trustees to explain. That reference appears to me as a descriptive form of a recital, not as a factor relied upon in establishing the penalties imposed.

[51] The Superintendent is also said to have erred by failing to take into consideration in the penalty decision the trustees cooperation with the investigation and possible oppressive effects upon the trustees of undue emphasis on deterrence as a factor of the penalties imposed. This Court, however, defers to the Superintendent's assessment of appropriate penalties where no case is made that those are unreasonable in light of the evidence before him.

[52] In summary, the specific errors in law alleged by the trustees are not established, in my opinion and those submissions provide no basis for the Court to intervene to quash the decisions on the merits and on penalties.

D.6. Reasonableness of the decisions of the Superintendent

[53] By the decision of September 3, 2002 on the merits of the first report of the SDA the Superintendent found a number of specific errors in practice by the trustees in the management of the two estates that were subject to the investigation.

[54] Aside from concerns about the SDA's delay or failure in disclosing information in advance of the hearing, no sound argument is made by the trustees that the findings of the Superintendent were unreasonable. In written submissions they urge the appropriate standard of review of that decision is correctness, but as I have indicated the application of the pragmatic and functional test leads me to conclude that the standard is reasonableness. On the evidence before the Superintendent, from the report of the SDA with supporting documents and the evidence adduced by the trustees the findings of the Superintendent in relation to the merits of the first report were open to him and were reasonable.

[55] By the decision of February 12, 2003, the Superintendent dismissed the trustees' motion to stay proceedings or to order a new hearing because of the failure of the SDA to disclose correspondence from another corporate trustee about the conduct of A, a former employee of the trustees at the time of when the estates in question were administered by the trustees. In my opinion, the Superintendent did not err in law, nor did he reach an unreasonable decision, despite acknowledging failure by the SDA to meet her obligation to disclose the correspondence. No evidence from A, collected by the SDA and made available to the trustees and to the Superintendent, was considered by the latter; rather in his decision he expressly excluded it. A might have been called as a witness by the trustees but they did not do so. The correspondence from other corporate trustees, belatedly disclosed, dealt with A's conduct when employed by those other trustees after employment by the trustees had terminated.

[56] In the circumstances the Superintendent, who by statute has discretion to determine what is evidence and how it shall be weighed, did not err in law, and his decision was entirely reasonable. If the correspondence had been disclosed that would not have affected his determination of failures by the trustees to meet appropriate professional standards.

[57] By the penalty decision of June 23, 2003, the Superintendent ordered that the license of the corporate trustee be restricted for one month, that the license of the applicant Sheriff be suspended for six months and that he be restricted to administration of corporate estates for 18 months. As earlier noted, objections to the penalty decision raised by the trustees include specific allegations of errors in law by the Superintendent. Their objections also include the Superintendent's failure to refer in his decision to the applicants' cooperation with the SDA's investigation, or to the fact that some of the transgressions found prior to the hearing were readily addressed even before the hearing.

[58] In my view, none of these claims raises a serious issue about the penalty decision. Even if A's conduct had played a major role in the administration of the estates in question, an inference the Court is invited to draw, there is no evidence, and none was considered by the Superintendent to provide a basis for intervention by the Court. The conduct of the trustees in the course of the investigation is no more than would be expected of a licensed trustee. There is simply no basis for finding the penalty decision, made within the exercise of statutory discretion vested in the Superintendent, was unreasonable.

E. Conclusions

[59] In addition to incidental orders confirming procedural determinations on issues raised by the applicants by written submissions following the hearing of this matter, the Order now issued dismisses the trustees' application for judicial review, concerning the three interrelated decisions of the Superintendent in bankruptcy, in its entirety.

[60] For greater certainty I dismiss the applicants' requests for an Order:

a) declaring the discipline provisions (sections 14.01 to 14.03 of the BIA) inoperative pursuant to sections 7 and 11 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and subsections 1(a) and 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights;

b) quashing and setting aside the decisions of the Superintendent dated September 3, 2002, February 12, 2003 and June 23, 2003 and staying the proceedings; or

c) quashing and setting aside the three decisions here questioned and an Order staying the proceedings.

F. Costs

[61] Each of the parties seeks costs. As in the normal course, costs will follow the outcome. The respondent shall have costs as the parties may agree upon or, failing agreement within 45 days, as may be assessed by a taxing officer in accord with the mid-range of costs set by column III of the Court's tariff.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT

[1] This is an application for judicial review made by Jacques Roy, trustee in bankruptcy ("the trustee"), with regard to complementary and ongoing disciplinary decisions dated December 3, 2004 (concerning the merits of disciplinary offences, or lack thereof) and January 31, 2005 (determination of the sanction) by Lawrence A. Poitras, in his capacity as delegate of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy (the "delegate" or "delegate Poitras") under section 14.01 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("the Act"). In addition, another application for judicial review of the delegate's decision dated December 3, 2004 involving some of the same parties was initiated by the Attorney General of Canada (see A.G. Canada v. Jacques Roy, in his capacity of trustee – T-402-05).

[2] In his decisions, the delegate ruled that the trustee had committed four (4) of the fifteen (15) disciplinary offences with which he was charged, including those which were withdrawn during the hearing. Moreover, the delegate concluded that seven (7) other breaches of discipline were unfounded. Accordingly, a suspension of the trustee's licence for one (1) week was appropriate. For the purposes of this decision, instead of using the word "offence", I will use the term "breach", which is more appropriate, considering the facts in this case.

[3] In his application for judicial review, the trustee is challenging the merits of the determination made concerning each of the four (4) breaches of discipline, as well as the determination made concerning the sanction applied.

I. Facts

[4] Since 1986, the trustee has held a trustee's licence issued under the Act and has no disciplinary record.

[5] In connection with the administration of the assets in the bankruptcy of Distribution Sunliner (1985) Inc. ("Sunliner bankruptcy"), one of the company's shareholders, Mr. Paris, wrote a letter to the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy ("OSB") on December 7, 1995, requesting an investigation [TRANSLATION] "into the conduct of the trustee in bankruptcy Jacques Roy".

[6] Josée Plourde ("Ms. Plourde") from the OSB was assigned to follow up on the request for an investigation, and she prepared a report explaining certain factual situations connected with specific work performed in the Sunliner bankruptcy. In a letter sent to the trustee on May 9, 1997, Ms. Plourde issued the following opinion:

> - In general, the administration of this file seems to be in compliance with the provisions of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Bankruptcy Rules and the directives issued by the Superintendent.
> - ... the bill of costs was approved by the inspectors and assessed by the Court. As far as the trustee's fees and disbursements are concerned, we leave everything to the Court, which will award you fair and reasonable compensation according to the circumstances.
> (Parties' joint record, volume XI, tab B-15, letter from Josée Plourde to Jacques Roy dated May 9, 1997).

[7] On July 23, 1997, the Deputy Registrar signed a judgment discharging the trustee from the administration of the Sunliner bankruptcy. A final statement of receipts and disbursements, signed by the trustee on November 19, 1996, was included in the documents enclosed with the application for discharge.

[8] On June 8, 1999, Ms. Plourde attended a new meeting with Mr. Paris, Mr. Gallant, and a representative of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. During this meeting, they discussed the administration of the Sunliner bankruptcy, the involvement of Yves Lemaire ("Mr. Lemaire") in the administration of the bankruptcy, the monies received by the National Bank, and the cashing of cheques issued by a company named BCL, some of which had been cashed by Mr. Lemaire.

[9] On June 10, 1999, in light of these new facts, the OSB assigned this case to Mr. Nolet of the audit section. He signed a report on October 21, 1999.

[10] On March 2, 2000, Ms. L. MacDonald, Acting National Director, Compliance and Investigation, recommended to the OSB, Quebec City District, that the trustee face a disciplinary committee further to the complaints made by Mr. Paris, based on the [TRANSLATION] "new facts" revealed at the June 8, 1999 meeting, the trustee's reply, and Mr. Nolet's audit report.

[11] On November 24, 1999, in the bankruptcy file of Pierre-André Jacob ("Jacob bankruptcy"), a complaint was filed against the trustee by a creditor involved in the bankruptcy. The issues raised in this case concerned a trustee substitution and due diligence. The facts will be discussed in the analysis.

[12] On March 23, 2000, the OSB assigned Sylvie Laperrière, a senior analyst of professional conduct ("analyst Laperrière"), to investigate the trustee's professional conduct in the Jacob and Sunliner bankruptcies.

[13] Ms. Laperrière signed her report on April 17, 2001. It was amended on November 2, 2001. In her report, Ms. Laperrière concluded that the trustee's conduct in the administration of the Jacob and Sunliner bankruptcies gave rise to fifteen (15) alleged breaches of the Act and/or the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Rules, C.R.C., 1978, c. 368 (the "Rules") and of the directives issued by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy. This report was submitted to the Superintendent for a hearing under sections 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act. The Superintendent had delegated his authority under sections 14.01, 14.02 and 14.03 of the Act to delegate Poitras (the Superintendent's first choice as delegate had died, and delegate Poitras was subsequently chosen), in accordance with subsection 14.01(2).

[14] In the fall of 2004, the delegate chaired a disciplinary hearing for the fifteen (15) breaches complained of, some of which were withdrawn, and accepted only four (4), which read as follows:

> Pierre-André Jacob file
> (2) The trustee did not perform his duties in a timely manner and did not carry out his functions with due care by not accepting the application for substitution by representatives of Trans-Canada Credit and by delaying the preparation of minutes of the creditors' meeting of November 18, 1999, thereby contravening section 13.5 of the Act and Rule 36.

Distribution Sunliner (1985) Inc. file

[TRANSLATION]

(1) The trustee failed to obtain a statement from an officer of Distribution Sunliner (1985) Inc., from which it would have been possible to confirm the accuracy at the time of the bankruptcy of the inventory dated March 8, 1994, thereby contravening subsection 5(5) of the Act and paragraphs 6 and 7 of Directive No. 31 on taking inventory of the bankrupt's property, issued by the Superintendant of Bankruptcy on August 18, 1989.

(5) The trustee did not document his file:

- on the reconveyance to the trustee by Isomur of the Bay Distributors' account receivable of $6,031.43;
- on the results obtained regarding collection of the said account receivable by the trustee and the balance of $9,000 payable by Isomur;
- and on the decision to postpone sine die proceedings for recovery against Messrs. Georges Rivard and Jean-Yves Genest, of the amount owed under the judgment of January 4, 1995, thereby contravening subsection 5(5) of the Act and paragraph 5 of Directive No. 22 on the realization of the estate's assets, issued by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy on December 22, 1988.

(7) The trustee did not carry out his functions with due care:

- by not documenting his file on the instructions given by the trustee to Yves Lemaire of Gérance Mauricie, to follow up on the trustee's behalf on the recovery of money from BCL, and by not documenting his file on the change in status of Mr. Lemer (sic), who according to the trustee was acting for the National Bank of Canada in the collection of these amounts;
- by not informing BCL that it should send cheques to Yves Lemaire of Gérance Mauricie after learning of the instructions obtained from the National Bank of Canada by the latter;
- and by authorizing the said Yves Lemaire of Gérance Mauricie to open the trustee's mail, thereby contravening section 13.5 and subsection 5(5) of the Act and paragraph 5 of Directive No. 22 on the realization of estate assets, issued by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy on December 22, 1988, as well as Rules 36 and 52.

It should be noted that the numbering of the breaches follows the numbering used by the delegate in his decision dated December 3, 2004.

[15] The trustee challenges these determinations of the delegate, as well as the sanction ordering a one-week suspension of his trustee's licence.

II. Issues

[16] Considering the foregoing, the issues to be dealt with are as follows:

1) What is the standard of review applicable to each of the issues?
2) Should the breaches concerning the Sunliner bankruptcy be dismissed because Ms. Plourde of the OSB was satisfied with the conduct of the trustee in bankruptcy in that case?
3) Did the delegate err in concluding that the trustee did not perform his duties in a timely manner and with due care in the Jacob bankruptcy, contrary to Rule 36?
4) Did the delegate err in concluding that in the Sunliner bankruptcy the trustee infringed Directive 31 of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, which requires that a statement confirming the accuracy of the inventory of assets of the bankrupt be filed?
5) Did the delegate make a mistake of fact in concluding that in the Sunliner bankruptcy the trustee infringed paragraph 5 of Directive 22 of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, which requires that the trustee document his files?
6) Did the delegate err in concluding that the trustee did not perform his duties with due care in the Sunliner bankruptcy case?
7) Was the delegate's decision to suspend the trustee's licence for one week legal and proper in the circumstances of the case?

III. Analysis

1) What is the standard of review applicable to each of the issues?

[17] The Superintendent has a statutory duty to supervise and administer estates in bankruptcy in Canada. To this end, the Act grants the Superintendent numerous powers to oversee the administration of estates in bankruptcy in the interest of creditors, debtors, bankrupts, and any other interested parties. One of the control mechanisms used is the licensing of trustees, as well as the supervision of their activities, taking into consideration the Act, Regulations and obligations under the directives issued by the Superintendent. For the purposes of this issue, I will reproduce some relevant sections from the legislation:

5. (3) The Superintendent shall, without limiting the authority conferred by subsection (2),	5. (3) Le surintendant, sans que soit limitée l'autorité que lui confère le paragraphe (2) :

[19] Bankruptcy law is a specialized field that has its own administration through structures created by the Act: the Superintendent, the Official Receiver, the trustee, and the Quebec Superior Court (Bankruptcy Division) (on this point, see Sam Lévy & Associés Inc. v. Mayrand, 2005 FC 702 (CanLII), 2005 FC 702 at paragraph 135).

[20] Because of this specialization, persons who are called upon to assume responsibilities must rely on their training and experience to develop an in-depth knowledge of this field, its practices, and its customs. Accordingly, ethical standards, established by legislation and the directives, are part of the daily work in this field.

[21] According to the pragmatic and functional approach advanced in Dr. Q. v. College of Physicians and Surgeons, 2003 SCC 19 (CanLII), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 226 at paragraphs 21 and 22 (the absence of a privative clause or a right of appeal; the expertise of the decision-maker relative to that of the reviewing court; the purposes of the legislation and the provision in particular; and the nature of the question – law, fact, or mixed fact and law), it seems to me that the Superintendent has the necessary qualifications to be recognized as an expert in such matters. The Act does not include a privative clause and does not grant any right of appeal (see subsection 14.02(5) of the Act), except for specific recognition of a power to review and set aside decisions as specified in the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7. On the basis of the purpose of the Act and the content of sections 14.01 et seq., it seems to me that the standard of review applicable to a disciplinary report and to the decision concerning the sanction is that of reasonableness simpliciter. The reviewing court must show a degree of deference. On this point, I note that Mr. Justice MacKay in Sheriff v. Canada (Superintendent of Bankruptcy), 2005 FC 305 (CanLII), 2005 FC 305, at paragraphs 30 and 31, came to the same conclusion:

> 30. In the context of the pragmatic and functional approach to the standard of review as confirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada in Law Society of New Brunswick v. Ryan, 2003 SCC 20 (CanLII), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 247 at paras. 20, 26-27 and in Dr. Q v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, 2003 SCC 19 (CanLII), [2003] 1 S.C.R. 226 at paras. 21-22, the decisions on the merits of the report and on any penalties are both decisions for which the standard of review is reasonableness. That standard rests on my assessment of the comparative expertise of the Superintendent relative to the Court in the supervision of trustees and of estates, of the purpose of the Act in general, and of sections 14.01 and 14.02 in particular, to ensure an appropriate exercise of fiduciary responsibilities in administration of estates, and of the nature of the ultimate issues for each decision, which are mixed questions of law and fact.
> 31 In review of those decisions the Court owes deference to the conclusions reached by the Superintendent. Unless they are clearly unreasonable in light of the evidence considered by the Superintendent, the Court will not disturb his decisions on the merits and on penalties. That is particularly the case where in the course of a hearing the Superintendent "is not bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence" (the Act, subsection 14.02(2)(b)).

For the purposes of this decision, I will refer to the reasons stated by MacKay J. concerning the applicable standard of review, but I will add additional reasons here and there in the paragraphs that follow.

[22] Having said this, I note that one of the issues, the one concerning whether the trustee performed his duties in a timely manner and with due care in the Jacob bankruptcy (issue No. 3), raises questions of fact in connection with the evidence submitted. Here, the applicable standard of review is that of patent unreasonableness (see Marchand Syndics Inc. v. Laperrière, 2004 FC 1584 (CanLII), 2004 FC 1584, at paragraph 60).

[23] To sum up, for the purposes of this case, I intend to use the standard of reasonableness simpliciter for questions of mixed law and fact and that of patent unreasonableness for questions of fact. When analyzing each individual issue in dispute, I will begin by stating the applicable standard of review for greater precision and to allow for a better understanding of the decision.

[24] Before concluding on this first issue, counsel for the trustee argued that delegate Poitras should not receive the same degree of deference as the Superintendent, since he does not have the same expertise as Superintendent Marc Mayrand. The objective of such an argument is to ensure that the standard applied is that of correctness. No affidavit offering any evidence on this point was submitted. It is public knowledge that the chosen delegate was a judge and Chief Justice of the Quebec Superior Court, and in this capacity he has heard numerous and varied proceedings, including Bankruptcy Division cases. In his capacity as delegate, he was called upon to apply the Act, regulations and the directives to the facts submitted in evidence, render a decision, and ultimately decide on a sanction. He has done this for a large part of his life. I do not see how I could apply a standard of review other than those already mentioned above. Considering the circumstances in this case, such an argument must fail.

2) Should the breaches concerning the Sunliner bankruptcy be dismissed because Ms. Plourde of the OSB was satisfied with the conduct of the trustee in bankruptcy in that case?

[25] I would stress that this argument was not developed in any significant manner in the memorandum of the trustee. Having said this, counsel for the trustee claimed that Ms. Plourde's investigation, which began in 1995 and ended in 1997 in the Sunliner bankruptcy, concluded that the administration of the Sunliner estate in bankruptcy was in compliance with the Act, the regulations and the directives; accordingly, this determination by Ms. Plourde should be taken into consideration for the purposes of the disciplinary investigation to such an extent that the breaches in question should be dismissed.

[26] Counsel did not cite any authors or submit any case law in support of this argument. He merely argued that the investigation conducted by Ms. Plourde of the OSB and the decision to discharge the trustee were in themselves sufficient to show that no other conclusion could be reached concerning the disciplinary breaches.

[27] In answer to this argument, I underline that the evidence showed that new facts were adduced from the complaints made by Mr. Paris in the summer of 1999 (including, but not limited to, the role played by Yves Lemaire with the National Bank, the cashing of two (2) cheques from BCL by him, and the follow-up to a decision rendered against the company Isomur and two other defendants). These new facts explain the intervention of the OSB starting in the summer of 1999. These were slightly different from the facts which were the subject of Ms. Plourde's investigation up to 1997.

[28] With regard to the argument that all legal procedures in the Sunliner case were followed up to the discharge of the trustee, that at no time was any negative comment made about the administration of the estate and that, accordingly, the alleged breaches should be dismissed, there is a distinction to be made between the supervision of the estate by a Superintendent as specified under the Act and a disciplinary investigation. One is not necessarily done to the exclusion of the other. On this point, Mr. Justice Martineau made the following comment in Sam Lévy & Associés et al., supra:

> [195] Although subsection 48(1) of the Act discharges the trustee as to any act or default in the administration of the bankrupt's property and as to his conduct as trustee, the provision does not address all the Superintendent's supervisory powers under sections 14.01 et seq. of the Act. It is the Superintendent who has the exclusive power of issuing trustee licences and making the obtaining of such licences subject to certain conditions.
> [196] Additionally, a discharge order made by the Bankruptcy Court only affects the trustee's conduct in respect of third parties and any person who has an interest in the bankruptcy. In this regard, the discharge procedure is not a proceeding for examining the professional conduct of a trustee, at the conclusion of which a trustee may be subject to a disciplinary penalty. Any other conclusion would essentially amount to giving the Bankruptcy Court the power to place bankruptcy trustees beyond the reach of any disciplinary penalty, which would be to usurp the exclusive jurisdiction of the Superintendent
> 197] Further, I consider that subsection 41(8.1) of the Act clearly reflects the situation that existed before it was adopted. That provision only confirmed the state of the law, by expressly laying down a rule which had already emerged from the general scheme of the Act. Consequently, despite the fact that subsection 41(8.1) of the Act might not be applicable here, since it is not retroactive in application, I > consider that the discharge order made by the Bankruptcy Court is not a legal bar to the prosecution of disciplinary proceedings brought against the applicant Roy.

Digitized by Google

I entirely agree with these reasons.

[29] I note that this argument does not in any way affect the Jacob bankruptcy case.

3) Did the delegate err in concluding that the trustee did not perform his duties in a timely manner and with due care in the Jacob bankruptcy, contrary to Rule 36?

[30] The standard of review applicable to this issue is that of patent unreasonableness. This concerned a request by the trustee for a determination as to whether the delegate [TRANSLATION] "correctly interpreted the evidence adduced at the hearing ", thus raising a question of fact.

[31] The delegate concluded as follows:

> [T]he trustee did not perform his duties in a timely manner and did not carry out his functions with due care, by not accepting the application for substitution by the representatives of Trans-Canada Credit at the time of the meeting, namely November 18, 1999, and by delaying the preparation and forwarding of the minutes of the creditors' meeting of November 18, 1999, contrary to section 13.5 of the Act and Rule 36.
> (Joint record, volume I, tab 2, Decision of the delegate dated December 3, 2004, at page 19).

[32] The delegate's conclusion had two parts. First of all, the trustee did not accept the application for the substitution of the trustee at the meeting held on November 18, 1999, and secondly, he took too long to prepare and submit the minutes of the meeting of November 18, 1999.

[33] Rule 36 provides as follows:

36. Trustees shall perform their duties in a timely manner and carry out their functions with competence, honesty, integrity and due care. [Emphasis added]	36. Le syndic s'acquitte de ses obligations dans les meilleurs délais et exerce ses fonctions avec compétence, honnêteté, intégrité, prudence et diligence. [Je souligne]

[34] The delegate determined that the starting point of the application for the substitution of the trustee by the creditor was November 18, 1999. The trustee argued that on this date he had to contact Mr. Sévigny, the creditor's titular head, to discuss the reasons at the root of the application for substitution. At this meeting, no instructions to substitute the trustee were given, so the trustee claims.

[35] In addition, the trustee added that it was only in mid December 1999 that he concluded there actually was a substitution of trustee, following the receipt of a letter from the Official Receiver advising that the creditor had made a complaint and following a telephone conversation with Mr. Sévigny. The minutes of the November 18, 1999 meeting, which mentioned the substitution of the trustee, were submitted on December 28, 1999. Therefore, according to him, he had acted with due care, because he took action as soon as he received the letter from the Official Receiver.

[36] As mentioned in the preceding, the delegate determined that the starting point for the trustee to act on the application for substitution was November 18, not mid-December 1999. The delegate assessed the evidence as submitted. The evidence of the analyst on this point (testimonies of Mr. Sévigny, Mr. Pitt and his affidavit, etc.) allowed the delegate to conclude as he did.

[37] Under Rule 36, the trustee must perform his duties in a "timely manner" and with "due care". More than 39 days had gone by before the trustee acted. This is not acting in a "timely manner" or with "due care", even if we take into account that it was the holiday season. There is no need to consider the legal interpretation of the duty to act in a "timely manner" and with "due care", as the time elapsed speaks for itself, and there is no reason to conclude that this is a patently unreasonable decision.

4) Did the delegate err in concluding that in the Sunliner bankruptcy the trustee infringed Directive 31 of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, which requires that a statement confirming the accuracy of the inventory of assets of the bankrupt be filed?

[38] The standard of review applicable to this issue is that of reasonableness simpliciter, as it raises a question of mixed law and fact.

[39] The delegate concluded as follows:

> We conclude that the trustee failed to obtain a statement from an officer, of Distribution Sunliner (1985) Inc. from which it would have been possible to confirm the accuracy at the time of the bankruptcy of the inventory dated March 8, 1994, thereby contravening section 5(5) of the Act and paragraphs 6 and 7 of Directive No. 31 on taking inventory of the bankrupt's property, issued by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy on August 18, 1989.
> (Joint record, volume I, tab 2, Decision of the delegate dated December 3, 2004, at page 19).

[40] Subsection 16(3) of the Act provides as follows:

16(3) The trustee shall, as soon as possible, take possession of the deeds, books, records and documents and all property of the bankrupt and make an inventory, and for the purpose of making an inventory the trustee is entitled to enter, subject to subsection (3.1), on any premises on which the deeds, books, records, documents or property of the bankrupt may be, even if they are in the possession of an executing officer, a secured creditor or other claimant to them.
[Emphasis added]

16(3) Le plus tôt possible, le syndic prend possession des titres , livres , dossiers et documents, ainsi que de tous les biens du failli, et dresse un inventaire; pour lui permettre de préparer un inventaire, il a le droit, sous réserve du paragraphe (3.1), de pénétrer en tout lieu où peuvent se trouver les titres, livres, dossiers, documents ou biens du failli, quoiqu'ils puissent être en la possession d'un huissier-exécutant, d'un créancier garanti ou d'une autre personne qui les réclame.
[Je souligne]

[41] Under paragraphs 5(4)(c)(d) and (e) of the Act, the Superintendent is authorized to issue directives to facilitate the application of the Act and Rules. Subsection 5(5)of the Act adds the following:

5(5) Every person to whom a directive is issued by the Superintendent under paragraph (4)(b) or (c) shall comply with the directive in the manner and within the time specified therein.
[Emphasis added]

5(5) Les personnes visées par les instructions du surintendant sont tenues de s'y conformer.
[Je souligne]

[42] Directive 31, which has now been replaced by Directive 7, specifies the content of the inventory (see paragraph 4 of Directive 31 and its subparagraphs) and requires that the bankrupt or the bankrupt's representative sign a statement (see the Appendix of the Directive) certifying:

> . . . that to the best of my knowledge and belief this final inventory listing . . . represents the quantities, descriptions (and valuation, if applicable) of all estate property, goods and assets . . . .

If such a statement has not been obtained, the trustee must note its absence (see paragraph 7 of Directive 31).

[43] The trustee has admitted that the statement required under Directive 31 was not obtained, and the delegate noted this in his decision.

[44] The trustee argued that the statement was not compulsory, because the bankruptcy balance sheet had been filed with a sworn statement. He argued that this was sufficient to certify the accuracy of the inventory made a few days before the bankruptcy and that, accordingly, the objective of paragraphs 158(d) and (e) of the Act had been respected.

[45] A simple reading of the bankruptcy balance sheet shows that it does not contain the information required under paragraph 4 of Directive 31. All that was mentioned under the inventory of the bankruptcy balance sheet was an amount of $120,000 at item "c" and a reference to a list under the heading "inventory", where we find a book value of $442,914 and an estimated realizable value of $120,000. There is no list of property.

[46] The report of the inventory taken a few days before the bankruptcy does not contain the statement required under paragraph 7 of Directive 31. Only the signature of the person who took the inventory appears in the report.

[47] In addition, counsel for the trustee argued that the delegate had erred in law by not rendering a decision on the importance of the requirements of subsection 5(5) of the Act and paragraphs 6 and 7 of Directive 31, because the interrelationship between the duly sworn bankruptcy balance sheet and the inventory taken a few days before the bankruptcy allowed the trustee to argue that he:

> [TRANSLATION]
> . . . complied with all the requirements of the Act, and any criticism on this point is based on a strictly legalistic and technical reading of the Act and/or Directive 31.

[48] The trustee was of the opinion that the objective of Directive 31 had been met, as was shown by the evidence submitted. The delegate made another finding, specifically that the evidence on record did not show non-compliance with the Directive in not filing the statement in support of the inventory.

[49] Without delving into the details of paragraphs 158(d) and (e) of the Act and of Directive 31, it seems to me that there is a marked difference between a bankruptcy balance sheet and an inventory of estate assets. One document cannot be substituted for the other, and vice versa. The balance sheet of a bankruptcy does not necessarily have an inventory of assets as required under paragraph 4 of Directive 31. The sworn statement of the balance sheet of a bankruptcy does not confirm the content of the inventory. Accordingly, the delegate did not have to be concerned with the requirements of subsection 5(5) and paragraphs 6 and 7 of Directive 31, because the trustee's evidence was insufficient to counteract the requirements of Directive 31.

[50] With these findings, I come to the same conclusion as the delegate did in his decision, that is, that the requirement under Directive 31 concerning the statement of the bankrupt or of the bankrupt's representative was not respected. Consequently, the delegate's decision is reasonable and in no way warrants intervention by this Court.

5) Did the delegate make a mistake of fact in concluding that in the Sunliner bankruptcy the trustee infringed paragraph 5 of Directive 22 of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, which requires that the trustee document his files?

[51] Because this is a question of mixed law and fact the standard of review is that of reasonableness simpliciter.

[52] The delegate concluded that the trustee's files were not properly documented in the following situations:

- Isomur's reassignment to the trustee of the account receivable in the amount of $6,031.43 from Bay Distributors;
- the results obtained in connection with the collection of the said account receivable by the trustee and of the balance of $9,000 owed by Isomur;
- the decision to postpone sine die the actions to be taken by the trustee in order to recover from Georges Rivard and Jean-Yves Genest the amount of money owing pursuant to a judgment dated January 4, 1995.

[53] The delegate stated the following:

> This directive [paragraph 5 of Directive 22] confirms that the trustee has a duty to realize on all the assets of the estate. It is up to him to prove that he was unable to document everything that took place in his office regarding the receipts, disbursements and actions taken. The trustee's response that [TRANSLATION] "this would create a mountain of paper" is clearly inadequate.
> (Joint record, volume I, tab 2, Delegate's decision dated December 3, 2004, at page 19).

[54] The Court underlines the fact that, under subsection 5(5) of the Act, trustees have the obligation to abide by the directives issued by the Superintendent.

[55] Paragraph 5 of Directive 22 reads as follows:

5. As it is a statutory obligation on the part of a trustee to realize on all assets for the benefit of the estate, it is therefore expected that a trustee will document his files as much as possible in support of the receipts, disbursements and actions taken on all the transactions. The Official Receiver may, at his discretion, request from the trustee a copy of that documentation. [Emphasis added]	5. Étant donné que le syndic a l'obligation statutaire de réaliser tous les biens de l'actif pour le bénéfice des créanciers, il importe donc que le syndic justifie, autant que possible, toutes ses transactions quand (sic) aux recettes, déboursés et actions prises. Le séquestre officiel, lorsqu'il le juge à propos, peut demander au syndic de lui fournir une copie de ces documents. [Je souligne]

[56] In addition to the argument to the effect that the delegate did not give reasons for determination because he did not specifically mention the documents which should have been on record, counsel for the trustee submitted the following:

> [TRANSLATION]
> [T]he applicant was found liable not because of his incompetence or negligence, but because he reported details to the representatives of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy orally rather than placing written memos in his files.

[57] The evidence shows that the trustee's files did not contain documents explaining the following situations in a summary manner or otherwise:

- further to the sale of the accounts receivable to Isomur, the undertaking made by certain debtors to pay $9,000 to the trustee rather than $15,000;
- the trustee's responsibility to recover an amount of $6,031;
- the fact that the amount of $9,000 mentioned above was not recovered and a decision was made not to continue recovery proceedings because of the insolvency of the persons and corporations involved.

[58] It was only later, in August 1999, further to questions from auditor Nolet of the OSB that the trustee and the lawyer involved in the bankruptcy gave any explanations (see the Joint record, volume X, tab 49, letter from the trustee to Industry Canada, dated August 20, 1999, and Joint record, volume X, tab 49-D, letter from counsel for the trustee to the trustee, dated August 18, 1999). It is obvious that the explanations given in these letters were not documented in the trustee's files at the time of the events in question.

Digitized by Google

[59] A simple reading paragraph 5 of Directive 22 shows that it does not refer to verbal explanations, but rather to documents concerning all transactions in connection with the receipts, disbursements and actions taken. In such circumstances, it is up to the trustee to explain why it was not possible to document all relevant transactions. The trustee's defence to the effect that he subsequently gave oral and written explanations does not meet the requirements of paragraph 5 of Directive 22. This paragraph requires that trustees document their administration, not subsequently explain it. The trustee's answer to the effect that [TRANSLATION] "it will create a mountain of paper" is unjustified.

[60] With regard to the argument that the delegate did not give sufficient reasons for his decision insofar as he did not specifically mention the documents which should have been in the files, I can only note that the evidence was to the effect that there were no documents directly or indirectly explaining the follow-up on the $15,000 judgment in the trustee's favour, the defendants' undertaking to pay $9,000, the not-sufficient-funds cheque, the decision not to continue recovery from the defendants, or the trustee's agreement to recover $6,031.43 from another debtor. Accordingly, criticizing the delegate for not having specified the documents which should have been in his files seems to me to be a moot point, because, a priori, letters of explanation sent after the events would have been sufficient, or a fortiori, an ongoing correspondence as the case progressed would also have been sufficient. There was no obligation to give any more details. The delegate's decision concerning the fourth issue is reasonable, considering the case as a whole, the evidence and the applicable law.

6) Did the delegate err in concluding that the trustee did not perform his duties with due care in the Sunliner bankruptcy case?

[61] I intend to apply the same standard of review as that applied to the fourth issue, that is, reasonableness simpliciter.

[62] The delegate concluded that the trustee did not perform his duties with due care:

- by not documenting his files to report the mandate he gave to Yves Lemaire of Gérance Mauricie to follow up on the recovery of money from BCL, and by not documenting the change in status of Mr. Lemaire, who according to the trustee was acting for the National Bank of Canada in the collection of these amounts;
- by not advising BCL to forward cheques to Yves Lemaire after having learned about the mandate Mr. Lemaire obtained from the National Bank of Canada; and
- by authorizing Yves Lemaire to open the trustee's mail, contrary to subsection 5(5) and section 13.5 of the Act, Rules 36 and 53 of the regulations, and paragraph 5 of Directive 22.

[63] The Court has already cited subsection 5(5) of the Act concerning the obligation of a trustee to comply with the Superintendent's directives, as well as the obligation to document files as required under paragraph 5 of Directive 22 and Rule 36, which obliges trustees to perform their duties in a timely manner and with due care.

[64] For the purposes of this issue, section 13.5 of the Act specifies the following:

13.5 A trustee shall comply with such code of ethics respecting the conduct of trustees as may be prescribed.	13.5 Les syndics sont tenus de se conformer aux codes de déontologie régissant leur conduite qui peuvent être prescrits.

Furthermore, Rule 52 states the following:

52. Trustees, in the course of their professional engagements, shall apply due care to ensure that the actions carried out by their agents, employees or any persons hired by the trustees on a contract basis are carried out in accordance with the same professional standards that those trustees themselves are required to follow in relation to that professional engagement.	52. Dans toute activité professionnelle, le syndic veille avec prudence et diligence à ce que les actes accomplis par ses mandataires, ses employés ou toute personne engagée par lui à contrat respectent les mêmes normes professionnelles qu'il aurait lui-même à appliquer relativement à cette activité.

[65] The evidence shows that Mr. Lemaire's involvement in the Sunliner bankruptcy was not documented so as to show his role in the recovery of money from BCL, the new role he played in recovering this money for the National Bank, and the role Mr. Lemaire played in opening the trustee's mail.

[66] The fact that Mr. Lemaire's role was not documented in the Sunliner bankruptcy was explained some time later by the trustee. When conducting his audit, Mr. Nolet, an auditor from the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, in a letter following a meeting on July 23, 1999, obtained information concerning the role played by Mr. Lemaire in connection with the trustee. The trustee answered by giving explanations in his letters dated August 20 and November 19, 1999, including a letter from Mr. Lemaire dated August 10, 1999 regarding his role and the accounts receivable involving BCL. Moreover, his explanations were complemented by the testimony he gave at the hearing before the delegate.

[67] The evidence shows that in 1997, Mr. Lemaire, who had access to the trustee's mail at his other office in Trois-Rivières, cashed two (2) BCL cheques for the National Bank, as per his mandate. These cheques were payable to the order of the trustee. A third cheque from BCL was cashed by the trustee in 2000, after he had been discharged from the administration of the Sunliner bankruptcy on July 23, 1997.

[68] In conducting the analysis of the preceding issues, I have already mentioned the trustee's obligation to document the bankruptcy files in compliance with paragraph 5 of Directive 22. The evidence is clearly to the effect that this had not been done in the Sunliner bankruptcy with regard to the role played by Mr. Lemaire and the undocumented mandate he was given. It would have been prudent to document the role played by Mr. Lemaire, but this was not done.

[69] Having studied the evidence in relation to the ethical standards established by legislation and the Directives, and after having studied the reasons and the conclusion which the delegate reached, I conclude that his decision is reasonable.

7) Was the delegate's decision to suspend the trustee's licence for one week legal and proper in the circumstances of the case?

[70] This issue raises two questions of law, that is, the interpretation to be given to a statutory provision such as subsection 14.01(1) of the Act concerning the possible choices of sanctions to be considered and the question as to whether the delegate's decision provided sufficient reasons. The standard of review applicable to such matters is that of correctness. However, assuming that the delegate's decision reflects the choice of sanctions specified in subsection 14.01(1) and is supported with adequate reasons, I am asked to assess it by taking into consideration the evidence and the sanction of a suspension of one (1) week. In such a case, the standard of review applicable is that of reasonableness simpliciter (see paragraph 21 of this decision and the Sherriff decision, supra, at paragraph 30).

[71] For the purposes of this analysis, it is important to once again reproduce in full subsection 14.01(1) of the Act:

14.01 (1) Where, after making or causing to be made an investigation into the conduct of a trustee, it appears to the Superintendent that	14.01 (1) Après avoir tenu ou fait tenir une enquête sur la conduite du syndic, le surintendant peut prendre l'une ou plusieurs des mesures énumérées ci-après, soit lorsque le syndic ne remplit pas adéquatement ses fonctions ou a été reconnu coupable de mauvaise administration de l'actif, soit lorsqu'il n'a pas observé la présente loi, les Règles générales, les instructions du surintendant ou toute autre règle de droit relative à la bonne administration de l'actif, soit lorsqu'il est dans l'intérêt public de le faire :
(a) a trustee has not properly performed the duties of a trustee or has been guilty of any improper management of an estate,	a) annuler ou suspendre la licence du syndic;
(b) a trustee has not fully complied with this Act, the General Rules, directives of the Superintendent or any law with regard to the proper administration of any estate, or	b) soumettre sa licence aux conditions ou restrictions qu'il estime indiquées, et notamment l'obligation de se soumettre à des examens et de les réussir ou de suivre des cours de formation;
(c) it is in the public interest to do so,	c) ordonner au syndic de rembourser à l'actif toute somme qui y a été soustraite en raison de sa conduite.
the Superintendent may do one or more of the following:
(d) cancel or suspend the licence of the trustee;
(e) place such conditions or limitations on the licence as the Superintendent considers appropriate including a requirement that the trustee successfully take an exam or enrol in a

Digitized by Google

proficiency course, and

(f) require the trustee to make restitution to the estate of such amount of money as the estate has been deprived of as a result of the trustee's conduct.

[72] In his decision on the sanction dated January 31, 2005, after having eliminated option C, which is not relevant in this case, the delegate wrote the following concerning subsection 14.01(1) of the Act:

> Having practised as a trustee over a period of some 25 years and having been a member of the Board of Directors then vice-president of the Association québécoise des professionnels en restructuration et en insolvabilité (the Quebec association of professionals in debt restructuring and insolvency), there is no need to either require him to successfully undergo any examinations or proficiency courses. We are thus left with the option of cancelling or suspending his license as trustee.
> [Emphasis added]
> (Joint record, volume I, tab 2, Delegate's decision dated January 31, 2005, at page 36).

[73] With all due respect to delegate Poitras, I do not think that after having eliminated certain options—that of reimbursing the estate, which is inapplicable to this case, and that of taking proficiency courses— there were only two left, namely, either cancelling or suspending the trustee's licence.

[74] My reading of subsection 14.01(1) of the Act shows that Parliament used the verb "may do one of the following" ("peut" in French) and not the verb "must" ("doit" in French). Accordingly, Parliament gave the Superintendent or his delegate the additional discretionary option of not applying any sanction if the circumstances of the case warrant it. Such an interpretation of the word "may" is clearly stated in section 11 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, which reads as follows:

11. The expression "shall" is to be construed as imperative and the expression "may" as permissive. [Emphasis added]	11. L'obligation s'exprime essentiellement par l'indicatif présent du verbe porteur de sens principal et, à l'occasion, par des verbes ou expressions comportant cette notion. L'octroi de pouvoirs, de droits, d'autorisations ou de facultés s'exprime essentiellement par le verbe « pouvoir » et, à l'occasion, par des expressions comportant ces notions. [Je souligne]

In addition, in Khadr v. Canada (Attorney General), 2006 FC 727 (CanLII), 2006 FC 727, at paragraphs 107 and 108, Mr. Justice Phelan effectively summarized the case law bearing on the interpretation to be given to the word "may":

> 107 Characterizing "may" as permissive implies that it imports discretion upon the person it grants the permissive authority. Although this implication of discretion arises, it is not in itself conclusive. In R. v. S. (S.), 1990 CanLII 65 (SCC), [1990] 2 S.C.R. 254 at 273-274, Dickson C.J. indicates that, although "may" implies discretion, it does not preclude obligation. In R. v. S. (S.), Dickson C.J. refers to the judgment of Lord Cairns in the House of Lords case of Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford (1880), 5 App. Cas. 214 where a distinction was drawn between a power coupled with a duty and a complete discretion. The relevant portion of this judgment is as follows:
> > [The words "shall be lawful"] confer a faculty or power, and they do not of themselves do more than confer a faculty or power. But there may be something in the nature of the thing empowered to be done, something in the object for which it is to be done, something in the conditions under which it is to be done, something in the title of the person or persons for whose benefit the power is to be exercised, which may couple the power with a duty, and make it the duty of the person in whom the power is reposed, to exercise that power when called upon to do so.
> > [W]here a power is deposited with a public officer for the purpose of being used for the benefit of persons who are specifically pointed out, and with regard to whom a definition is supplied by the Legislature of the conditions upon which they are entitled to call for its exercise, that power ought to be exercised, and the Court will require it to be exercised.

> 108. The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal, in Brown v. Metropolitan Authority 1996 CanLII 5608 (NS CA), (1996), 150 N.S.R. (2d) 43 (C.A.), fully adopted the reasoning in Julius, holding that once the conditions were met (conditions as set out in a particular statute imposing a duty on the Metropolitan Authority to pay compensation for damages that arose out of its actions), a duty arose to exercise this power in spite of the fact that the words empowering the Authority were "may pay".

[75] In my opinion, taking into consideration the Interpretation Act, the Act and case law, it is a mistake to construe the verb "may" within the meaning of the Act as implying an obligation to impose a sanction of cancellation or suspension of the licence. I do not find anywhere in the words used by Parliament an obligation to do anything on the basis of the verb "may" ("peut prendre", "may do one or more of the following") as used in subsection 14.01(1) of the Act.

[76] Counsel for analyst Laperrière suggested that the delegate's decision is to the effect that the verb "may" must be understood as meaning all the discretion that is granted to him, which would include the option of taking all the evidence into consideration and not imposing a specific sanction.

[77] On reading the decision of January 31, 2005, it is impossible for me to agree with such an interpretation and find in it an implied understanding. The delegate clearly and specifically stated, "We are thus left with the option of cancelling or suspending his licence as trustee" (Joint record, volume I, tab 2, Delegate's decision dated January 31, 2005, at page 36). It is difficult to see an implicit understanding of discretionary power when the delegate demonstrates an explicit understanding of his power.

[78] My reading of the whole decision does not allow me to attenuate the delegate's explicit understanding. In fact, the text of the decision follows the line of reasoning resulting from the delegate's understanding of subsection 14.01(1) of the Act.

[79] At the hearing, particularly during the oral arguments, I asked if the delegate had expressed verbally his understanding of subsection 14.01(1) of the Act and the options he had, including that of not imposing any sanction, taking the complete record into consideration. I was told that he had not said anything on this point.

[80] The delegate's understanding of subsection 14.01(1) of the Act is an error in law which calls into question the entire decision rendered on January 31, 2005. He needed to bear in mind an understanding that included all the options to be considered and needed a clear understanding that it was a discretionary power that had been granted to him. This seems to me to be vital for a disciplinary decision-maker when he or she must assess the appropriateness of a sanction on the basis of the evidence on record.

[81] Having concluded that the decision of January 31, 2005 contained an error for the above-mentioned reason, the case must be returned to the delegate so that he may take the appropriate measures for a new decision to be rendered on the sanction, taking into consideration the discretionary power and all options available under subsection 14.01(1) of the Act. Therefore, it will not be necessary to deal with the trustee's two (2) other arguments, that is to say, the lack of reasons for the decision concerning the sanction and the merit of the decision suspending the trustee's licence for a period of one (1) week.

IV. Costs

[82] Costs were discussed at the hearing of the application for judicial review. Considering the result in this case and in accordance with the discretionary power granted to me under section 400 of the Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, and its subsections, costs are awarded to the trustee.

JUDGMENT

THE COURT ORDERS that:

- The application for judicial review be allowed in part, the decision of January 31, 2005, is set aside, and the case is returned to the delegate for redetermination of the sanction;
- Costs to the trustee.

REASONS FOR ORDER
STRATAS J.A.

A. Introduction

[1] The appellant moves for a stay or suspension of an administrative adjudicator's hearing while an appeal is pending in this Court. For the reasons set out below, I shall dismiss the motion.

B. The facts giving rise to the motion

The parties

[2] The appellant is a senior analyst / professional conduct official in the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy. The respondents are trustees who have administered various estates.

The legislative regime

[3] The Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy licenses trustees in bankruptcy. Under section 14.01 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S., 1985, c. B-3, the Office can inquire into the conduct of a trustee. Sanctions can be imposed where, among other things, the trustee has contravened the Act, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency General Rules, C.R.C., c. 368, or directives of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy made under section 5 of the Act.

The allegations

[4] After an investigation, the Office alleged that the respondents, while administering various estates, had committed a number of contraventions. It identified 12 categories of contraventions. The Office instituted disciplinary proceedings under section 14.01 of the Act against the respondents.

Digitized by Google

The disciplinary proceeding

[5] A delegate of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy tried the allegations. He found the respondents not guilty of misconduct under six of the twelve categories.

[6] In one category, the delegate found a contravention arising from the respondents' delays in administering two estates. The respondents had no defence to this and were guilty of misconduct. The delegate held a sanction hearing on this and imposed a reprimand.

[7] In the remaining five categories, the delegate found contraventions, but ruled that the respondents had established the defence of due diligence. Therefore, in these five categories, the delegate decided that the respondents were not guilty of misconduct. The appellant applied for judicial review to the Federal Court from that decision.

The Federal Court's decision: the case becomes bifurcated

[8] The Federal Court granted the application for judicial review in part: 2010 FC 97 (CanLII), 2010 FC 97. The Federal Court's decision led to bifurcation: of the five categories of contraventions placed before the Federal Court, a group of three are now in this Court and a group of two are now before the delegate for determination of sanction. Here is how that happened:

- The group of three now in this Court. On judicial review, the Federal Court agreed with the delegate that the due diligence defence was established in three categories of contraventions. The appellant appealed this portion of the Federal Court's decision to this Court.

- The group of two now before the delegate. On judicial review, the Federal Court found, contrary to the delegate, that the due diligence defence was not established in two categories of contraventions and so the respondents were guilty of misconduct. The Federal Court remitted these back to the delegate for determination of sanction. The respondents did not appeal.

[9] The delegate now intends to begin a hearing concerning the sanction that should be applied for the findings of misconduct in the group of two. The delegate's sanction hearing will likely take place and conclude before this Court deals with the appeal concerning the group of three. The appellant asks this Court to stay this sanction hearing until it determines the appeal concerning the group of three.

C. Analysis

[10] The test for a stay is set out in the well-known Supreme Court of Canada cases of Manitoba (Attorney General) v. Metropolitan Stores Ltd., 1987 CanLII 79 (SCC), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110, RJR-Macdonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 1994 CanLII 117 (SCC), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311, 143471 Canada Inc. v. Quebec (Attorney General), 1994 CanLII 89 (SCC), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 339 and Harper v. Canada (Attorney General), 2000 SCC 57 (CanLII), [2000] 2 S.C.R. 764, 2000 SCC 57.

[11] On the first branch of the threefold test for a stay, the appellant must establish a serious question to be tried on appeal. The threshold for seriousness is "a low one" and "liberal": RJR-Macdonald, supra at page 337; 143471 Canada Inc., supra at page 358, per La Forest J. (dissenting, with apparent concurrence on this point from the majority). An applicant need only show that the matter is not destined to fail or that it is "neither vexatious nor frivolous": RJR-Macdonald, supra at page 337. Based on the record in this case, I cannot say now that this matter is destined to fail.

[12] The appellant's request for a stay turns on the outcome of the remaining two parts of the test. The appellant must show that irreparable harm will be caused if the stay is not granted and the balance of convenience lies in favour of granting a stay. Where the stay seeks to stop persons acting under a statute from carrying out their duties, a "very important" public interest "weigh[s] heavily" in favour of allowing those acting under statutes to carry out their mandates: 143471 Canada Inc., supra at page 383, Cory J. (for the majority); Harper, supra at paragraph 9.

[13] Before applying for a stay from this Court, the appellant asked the delegate to adjourn until the appeal to this Court was determined. The delegate declined. If this Court grants the stay requested by the appellant in this motion, this Court essentially would be quashing an interlocutory, fact-based, discretionary scheduling decision made by the delegate, an administrative actor who is statutorily empowered to conduct his own proceedings. Seen in that light, the appellant's stay would be just like a successful interlocutory judicial review of the delegate's decision. But interlocutory judicial reviews are not available, absent exceptional circumstances: President of the Canada Border Services Agency v. C.B. Powell Limited, 2010 FCA 61 (CanLII), 2010 FCA 61. This underscores the exceptional nature of the relief sought by the appellant in the circumstances of this case. For this sort of exceptional relief, the appellant must file evidence that is credible, detailed and strong.

[14] The evidence offered by the appellant on the issue of irreparable harm falls short of the mark.

[15] The appellant submitted that if this Court grants her appeal and remits instances of misconduct from the group of three back to the delegate for determination of sanction, the delegate would have to hold a second separate hearing on sanction. Consequences giving rise to irreparable harm follow from this, says the appellant. The first hearing on sanction would become moot because the delegate would have to conduct a new, compendious assessment of sanction: the delegate would have to consider all of the instances of misconduct from the original category of five. Thus, "[a]ll of the time, energy and money spent" on the first sanction hearing would be wasted. The appellant also points to a savings of costs arising from holding one compendious sanction hearing, rather than two.

[16] This scenario of irreparable harm offered by the appellant suffers from at least four flaws. The appellant has fallen well short of proving the sort of irreparable harm necessary to obtain a stay.

[17] First, the appellant's scenario presupposes that her appeal will succeed. It may not succeed, with the effect that a second sanction hearing will not be held and the harms alleged by the appellant will not arise. The harms alleged by the appellant are speculative, hypothetical, or only arguable at best and do not qualify as irreparable harm: Canada (Attorney General) v. Canada (Information Commissioner), 2001 FCA 25 (CanLII), 2001 FCA 25, 268 N.R. 328 at paragraph 12.

[18] Second, the appellant has asserted, without evidence, that the first sanction hearing will be rendered moot by the second sanction hearing. In considering the issue of irreparable harm, the Court cannot accept bare assertions without evidence: Bathurst Machine Shop Ltd. v. Canada, 2006 FCA 59 (CanLII), 2006 FCA 59, [2006] 2 C.T.C. 276 at paragraph 24 (F.C.A.). It may be possible for the delegate to hold two sanction hearings dealing with the two groups of contraventions without reference to each other. It all depends on the circumstances.

[19] In this regard, the appellant offered no evidence to show an interconnection among the various matters such that there would have to be one compendious sanction hearing. Had the appellant filed that evidence, she might have been able to raise a tenable issue regarding whether irreparable harm would arise if the sanction hearing were held now. The available evidence, however, suggests no such interconnection. The delegate, in declining to adjourn the sanction hearing, obviously concluded that he could proceed with the sanction hearing and, if necessary, hold a second sanction hearing later. Further, the delegate has already proceeded in this way: he held a hearing and imposed the sanction of reprimand for one of the instances of misconduct even though several other matters were before the Federal Court and might come back to him later for a determination of sanction (see paragraph 6, above).

[20] Third, even if "time, energy and money" would be wasted, the appellant has failed to particularize adequately the nature and amount of waste. Indeed, as best as can be determined from the affidavit offered in support of the stay – and the affidavit is unclear on this point – perhaps only a few days of work might be wasted. This smacks of mere administrative inconvenience and is too trifling to justify the unusual remedy of a stay against a public decision-maker who wants to exercise his jurisdiction. Mere administrative inconvenience, without more, does not qualify as irreparable harm: Falkiner v. Director, Income Maintenance Branch 2000 CanLII 15904 (ON CA), (2000), 189 D.L.R. (4th) 377 at paragraph 9 (Ont. C.A.).

[21] Finally, the sort of bifurcation caused by the Federal Court's decision in this case often happens. Bifurcation and its unwelcome effects – greater inconvenience, increased complexity and mounting costs – are part of the normal vicissitudes of litigation. If the Court granted a stay on the basis of the evidentiary record in this motion, it would have to grant a stay in every case where bifurcation has happened. The appellant did not offer evidence that the bifurcation in this case caused abnormal, harsh consequences beyond the norm. Bifurcation, without more, is not a golden ticket to a stay.

[22] Therefore, the appellant has failed to show irreparable harm. This conclusion is sufficient to dismiss the appellant's motion for a stay of the delegate's sanction hearing. However, for completeness, I would add that the balance of convenience is strongly against the granting of this relief.

[23] The respondents filed an affidavit attesting to the impact that the allegations have had against them, their family and their business, including legal fees, enormous expenditures of management time, loss of staff and significant reputational, financial and emotional harm. Understandably, the respondents want the sanction hearing to finish as soon as possible. Depending on the outcome of the appeal in this Court, it may be the last hearing before the delegate in this matter and the end of what the respondents feel is an intolerable ordeal.

[24] Some of the respondents' evidence lacks sufficient particularity to be given full weight. However, it easily outweighs the appellant's evidence, summarized earlier in these reasons.

[25] This conclusion is buttressed by the public interest considerations that the Court must factor into the balancing: see paragraph 12, above. The delegate is discharging responsibilities under a statutory regime that protects the public by identifying and sanctioning instances of professional misconduct. Parliament has instructed the delegate to act as expeditiously as the circumstances and fairness permit: Act, subsection 14.02(2). The delegate now intends, with the respondents' support, to act expeditiously and determine the sanction that the respondents deserve for their misconduct in what I have called the group of two. Public interest considerations weigh against the granting of a stay.

[26] I conclude that the delegate may proceed with the sanction hearing without interference from this Court at this time. I decline to grant the stay requested by the appellant.

D. Conclusion

[27] Therefore, I shall dismiss the appellant's motion for a stay, with costs to the respondents.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT
BLAIS C.J.

[1] This is an appeal from the decision of Justice Mainville (Judge), as he then was, of the Federal Court, dated January 28, 2010 (Decision), which allowed, in part only, the appellant's application for judicial review of related decisions made by the Honourable James B. Chadwick in his capacity as Delegate of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy (Delegate). More specifically, this appeal is concerned with the Delegate's finding that the respondents had established a defence of due diligence with respect to certain violations of professional conduct provisions set out in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (BIA), the Bankruptcy and Insolvency General Rules, C.R.C. 1978, c. 368 (Rules) and the Directives of the Superintendent (Directives).

I. Background

[2] The respondents carry on activities as trustees in bankruptcy under licences issued by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy (Superintendent) pursuant to the BIA.

[3] In 2005, the appellant, in her capacity as a Senior Analyst (Professional Conduct) with the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy (OSB), was mandated to conduct an investigation of the respondents' professional conduct in the administration of bankruptcy estates. This investigation culminated in a report dated February 27, 2007 (Report), which identified over forty breaches of professional conduct provisions set out in the BIA, the Rules and the Directives.

[4] Following the receipt of the appellant's report, the Superintendent appointed the Delegate to conduct a hearing in order to determine whether the respondents had committed the alleged contraventions and whether any disciplinary measures set out in subsection 14.01(1) of the BIA were warranted.

[5] The Delegate described the alleged contraventions under the following 12 headings:

A. Bank balances of estate and insolvency files deposited in an "Interest Account".
B. Applications for trustee discharge while having a bank balance in the estate account.
C. Surplus from the consolidated trust account for summary administrations deposited in an "Interest Account".
D. Monies withdrawn for various uses from an "Interest Account".
E. Statements of Receipts and Disbursements.
F. Unauthorized fee withdrawal in a consumer proposal.
G. "Clearing Account" used to post estate transactions.
H. Co-mingling of funds in consolidated trust accounts.
I. Disbursement claimed for services performed by a related person.
J. "Third Party Account" used to post estate transactions.
K. Monies not deposited forthwith.
L. Delay in the administration of estates.

[6] In his decision dated December 1, 2008, the Delegate first dismissed a motion for a stay of proceedings filed by the respondents on grounds of delay, bias and other improprieties with respect to the conduct of the appellant's investigation. Concerning the nature of the allegations, the Delegate found that the alleged contraventions were strict liability offences which, as per the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in R. v. Sault Ste. Marie (City), 1978 CanLII 11 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299, allowed for a defence of due diligence.

[7] The Delegate rejected the allegations falling under headings A and D on the basis that the "Interest Account" operated by the respondents had been authorized by the OSB and had subsequently been closed when the OSB requested such a closure. The allegations under headings C, F, G and I were rejected on the basis that no contraventions of the BIA, the Rules or the Directives had occurred.

[8] With respect to headings B, E, H, J and K, the Delegate found that the respondents had failed to fully comply with the relevant statutory and regulatory provisions. However, having accepted the respondents' submissions that the estates at issue represented only a small fraction of their overall business and that the infractions were the result of administrative errors which had caused no prejudice to the estates or the creditors, the Delegate found that a defence of due diligence had been established. The Delegate ultimately found that the respondents were liable only with respect to the contraventions falling under heading L, in respect of which he concluded in a separate decision dated February 5, 2009, that the appropriate disciplinary measure was a reprimand.

[9] The appellant brought an application for judicial review challenging the Delegate's decision with respect to headings A, B, D, E, H, J and K, as well as the sanctions decision.

II. Decision of the Federal Court

[10] The Judge carried out the standard of review analysis established in Dunsmuir v. New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9 (CanLII), 2008 SCC 9, and characterized the issues before the Delegate as principally involving questions of fact or mixed fact and law for which the appropriate standard of review was reasonableness. (Decision, at paragraphs 52-59) However, the Judge identified two questions of law arising from the Delegate's decision, namely whether the allegations under headings B, E, H, J and K could be characterized as strict liability offences and whether a reprimand was an available form of sanction under subsection 14.01(1) of the BIA, to which he applied the correctness standard. (Decision, at paragraph 60)

[11] The Judge identified the first issue in the application as whether the Delegate had committed a reviewable error in finding, as a matter of fact, that the operations of the Interest Account under Headings A and D had been authorized by the OSB. The Judge stated that the record contained ample evidence to support the Delegate's finding on this issue, which was largely based on an assessment of the credibility of various witnesses. (Decision, at paragraphs 70-82)

[12] The Judge identified the second issue in the application as whether the Delegate had erred in law in finding that the allegations under headings B, E, H, J and K were subject to a defence of due diligence. Relying on Gordon Capital Corp. v. Ontario (Securities Commission), [1991] O.J. No. 934, 50 O.A.C. 258 (Div. Ct.), Carruthers v. College of Nurses of Ontario reflex, (1996), 31 O.R. (3d) 377 (Div. Ct.) and Canada (Attorney General) v. Roy, 2007 FCA 410 (CanLII), 2007 FCA 410, the Judge indicated that a contextual or sui generis approach was appropriate to determine whether allegations of professional misconduct were subject to a defence of due diligence: "If the legislative or regulatory provision at issue shows that an element of reasonable care is involved, then the defence of due diligence will generally be available (...)." (Decision, at paragraph 91) The Judge found that the provisions of the BIA and the Rules surrounding the allegations under headings B, E, H, J and K, when read together, disclose wording such as "due care" or "reasonably ought to know" and concluded that the Delegate was correct in finding that a defence of due diligence was available to the respondents. (Decision, at paragraphs 83-106)

[13] The Judge identified the third issue as whether the Delegate had erred in finding that the respondents had established a defence of due diligence to counter the allegations under headings B, E, H, J and K, which he described as a question of mixed fact and law reviewable on a standard of reasonableness. (Decision, at paragraph 107)

[14] Of particular importance for this appeal are the Judge's findings with respect to headings B, E and H. The Judge noted that the Delegate had accepted the respondents' evidence that the irregularities (i) represented a small segment of their overall business, (ii) had been unintentional, (iii) were the result of minor administrative errors on the part of their staff, (iv) had caused no prejudice to the estates or the creditors and (v) had not resulted in any benefits to the respondents. The Judge indicated that the Delegate must have inferred from these findings that the respondents had successfully established a defence of due diligence. (Decision, at paragraphs 111, 114 and 117) The Judge refused to interfere with the Delegate's conclusions, stating that they fell "within a range of possible, acceptable outcomes which are defensible in respect of the facts and the law." (Decision, at paragraph 113) However, the Judge reached a different conclusion with respect to allegations J and K, remarking on "the absence of any evidence tendered by the respondents in regard to a due diligence defence to these allegations, and the absence of explanations by the Delegate (...) as to why a due diligence defence was held to have been made out (...)." (Decision, at paragraph 121)

[15] The Judge identified the fourth issue in the application as whether the Delegate had erred in law at the disciplinary stage of the proceedings in imposing a reprimand on the respondents with respect to the infractions under heading L. The Judge stated that while the Delegate's determination of the appropriate remedy fell within his expertise and was therefore reviewable on the reasonableness standard, the determination of the spectrum of available remedies was a question of law subject to the correctness standard. (Decision, at paragraph 129) The Judge noted that while a "reprimand" was not an available form of sanction under subsection 14.01(1) of the BIA, the decision to impose or not to impose a sanction fell within the Delegate's discretion (Jacques Roy v. Sylvie Lapperière, 2006 FC 1386 (CanLII), 2006 FC 1386 at paragraphs 75-80). The Judge interpreted the Delegate's decision to impose a reprimand on the respondents as a decision that no specific measure or sanction contemplated by subsection 14.01(1) was warranted and held that this decision was reasonable in the circumstances. (Decision, at paragraphs 122-131)

[16] The Judge allowed the application in part and remitted the matter to the Delegate in order for him to determine the appropriate disciplinary measure, if any, to be imposed on the respondents with respect to headings J, K and L.

III. Issues and Analysis

[17] This appeal raises only one issue, namely whether the Judge erred in upholding the Delegate's finding that the respondents had established a defence of due diligence with respect to headings B, E and H.

A. Positions of the Parties

[18] The appellant argues that, in the context of a strict liability regime, due diligence is established by showing on a balance of probabilities that the accused took all reasonable care to avoid committing the illegal act or that he reasonably believed in a mistaken set of facts which, if true, would render the act innocent. (Sault Ste. Marie, above at pages 1325-1326; Corp. de l'École Polytechnique v. Canada, 2004 FCA 127 (CanLII), 2004 FCA 127 at paragraph 28) The appellant submits that the Federal Court has set a high threshold for proving the defence of due diligence (Cata International Inc. v. Canada (M.N.R.), 2004 FC 663 (CanLII), 2004 FC 663 at paragraph 22; Samson v. Canada (M.N.R.), 2007 FC 975 (CanLII), 2007 FC 975 at paragraph 35) and that the following principles have been established in the relevant case law: (i) errors made in good faith are not tantamount to due diligence as this defence requires affirmative proof that all reasonable care was exercised to ensure that errors were not made; (ii) proof of reasonable care must be established in relation to the particular contravention at issue and general compliance with a statutory regime is not sufficient; (iii) an employer must show that a system was in place to prevent the prohibited act from occurring and that reasonable steps had been taken to ensure the effective operation of that system; and, (iv) the fact that the contraventions did not cause prejudice to third parties is not relevant in assessing whether due diligence was exercised.

[19] The appellant submits that the Delegate erred in law in finding that the respondents had successfully established a defence of due diligence with respect to the allegations contained in headings B, E and H by showing, inter alia, that the infractions were the result of administrative errors, had caused no prejudice to the estates or the creditors and represented a small fraction of the overall volume of their business. Further, the appellant argues that the Judge erred in law in upholding a decision reached on the basis of an unacceptably low standard for the defence of due diligence.

[20] The respondents argue that this appeal should be rejected on the basis that the appellant is asking this Court to reweigh evidence pertaining to their defence of due diligence. The respondents submit that the issue of whether a defence of due diligence had been established was properly characterized by the Judge as a question of mixed law and fact which should be reviewed on the reasonableness standard. Alternatively, the respondents submit that, as per Dunsmuir, above at paragraph 70, even if an extricable question of law could be identified, the Delegate's decision should nevertheless be reviewed on the reasonableness standard on the basis that it has no significance to the legal system in general and was within the Delegate's expertise in matters of professional discipline.

[21] The respondents reiterate their position that the infractions set out in the Report did not result in any benefit to them or in any prejudice to the concerned estates or creditors, and evidence that the concerned estates and transactions represented a very small fraction of their overall business demonstrates that an adequate system of oversight was applied and, therefore, that "all reasonable care" had been exercised to prevent these infractions. In the alternative, the respondents argue that, as per Sault Ste. Marie, above, a defence of due diligence has also been established on the basis that the infractions resulted from a reasonable belief on a mistaken set of facts.

B. Standard of Review

[22] The role of this Court is to determine whether the Judge selected and correctly applied the appropriate standard of review to the Delegate's decision: Telfer v. Canada (Revenue Agency), 2009 FCA 23 (CanLII), 2009 FCA 23 at paragraph 18; Mugesera v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2005 SCC 40 (CanLII), 2005 SCC 40 at paragraph 35; Dr. Q v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, 2003 SCC 19 (CanLII), 2003 SCC 19 at paragraph 43. The Judge's selection of the appropriate standard of review is a question of law subject to review on the standard of correctness: Shneidman v. Canada (Customs and Revenue Agency), 2007 FCA 192 (CanLII), 2007 FCA 192 at paragraph 17; Davies v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 FCA 41 (CanLII), 2005 FCA 41 at paragraph 8; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33 (CanLII), 2002 SCC 33 at paragraph 8. If the correct standard of review was selected, the Judge's application of that standard constitutes a question of mixed fact and law reviewable on a "palpable and overriding error" standard, unless an extricable error of law can be identified in his reasons: Housen, above at paragraphs 26, 37.

C. Analysis

[23] As stated above, this Court must determine whether the Judge erred in finding that it was reasonable for the Delegate to conclude that the respondents had met their burden of proving a defence of due diligence with regard to the infractions listed under headings B, E and H. The answer to this question requires this Court to first determine whether the Judge selected the appropriate standard of review: Telfer, above at paragraph 18; Mugesera, above at paragraph 35; Dr. Q, above at paragraph 43. The Judge stated his position on this issue as follows:

107 Since the defence of due diligence was open to the Respondents under headings B, E, H, J and K, the Applicant submits that the Delegate made reviewable errors in finding that such a defence had been properly made out by the Respondents to counter all these allegations under these headings. This raises issues of mixed law and fact which are to be reviewed on a standard of reasonableness.

[24] The Judge correctly characterized the issue as to whether the respondents had established the defence of due diligence as a question of mixed fact and law, as it required the Delegate to apply a legal standard to a set of facts: Democracy Watch v. Campbell, 2009 FCA 79 (CanLII), 2009 FCA 79 at paragraph 21; Housen, above at paragraph 26; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., 1997 CanLII 385 (SCC), [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748 at paragraph 35. Further, the Judge correctly concluded that such questions, in an application for judicial review, are generally subject to the reasonableness standard: Dunsmuir, above at paragraph 53; Housen, above at paragraph 37.

[25] However, the judicial review of questions of mixed fact and law presents an additional challenge for reviewing judges. If an extricable question of law can be identified in the question of mixed fact and law put before the decision-maker, this question must be reviewed on the appropriate basis. If the extricable question of law is of "central importance to the legal system as a whole and outside the adjudicator's specialized area of expertise", it must be reviewed on the standard of correctness: Toronto (City) v. C.U.P.E., Local 79, 2003 SCC 63 (CanLII), 2003 SCC 63 at paragraph 62; Dunsmuir, above at paragraph 55. Conversely, if the extricable question of law involves the decision-maker's interpretation of a statute "with which [he] will have particular familiarity", it will generally attract the application of the reasonableness standard: Dunsmuir, above at paragraph 54.

[26] The question as to whether the respondents have successfully established a defence of due diligence with respect to headings B, E and H clearly presents an extricable question of law, namely the legal standard upon which such a defence must be established. Further, I disagree with the respondents' submission that the Delegate's interpretation of this standard should be reviewed on the standard of reasonableness because, in what I interpret to be a reference to the Supreme Court's above-cited comments in CUPE and Dunsmuir, "it has no significance to the legal system in general". (Respondents' Memorandum, at paragraph 77) The Supreme Court of Canada's affirmation in Sault Ste. Marie that the defence of due diligence was available in the context of "strict liability" infractions has impacted our legal system across many fronts, from quasi-criminal proceedings involving breaches of work safety or environmental regulations (R. v. Rio Algom Ltd. reflex, (1988), 66 O.R. (2d) 674 (C.A.); R. v. Imperial Oil Ltd., 200 BCCA 553) to the context of professional discipline (Re Ghilzon and Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario (1979), 22 O.R. (2d) 756 (H.C.J.); Stuart v. British Columbia College of Teachers, 2005 BCSC 645 (CanLII), 2005 BCSC 645). In addition, a plain reading of the case law shows that developments in the interpretation of "due diligence" in one context will influence the application of this standard in another. The Delegate's interpretation of the criteria required to establish a defence of due diligence and, by extension, the Federal Court's treatment of this issue in an application for judicial review, transcends the interests of the parties and holds significance to the Canadian legal system as a whole. Further, while courts have considered the relative expertise of the Superintendent and his delegates in the supervision of trustees to justify the application of the reasonableness standard to liability and sanctions decisions under section 14.01 of the BIA (Roy v. Poitras, 2006 FC 1386 (CanLII), 2006 FC 1386 at paragraphs 19-21; Sheriff v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 FC 305 (CanLII), 2005 FC 305 at paragraphs 30-31), the Delegate does not possess any comparative expertise on the standards required to establish a defence of due diligence. The Judge was therefore required to apply the standard of correctness to this aspect of the Delegate's decision: CUPE, above at paragraph 62; Dunsmuir, above at paragraph 55.

[27] Although the Judge's standard of review analysis identified two questions of law raised in the Delegate's decision for which he applied the correctness standard (Decision, at paragraph 60), his review of the Delegate's decision with respect to headings B, E and H failed to distinguish between the merits of the Delegate's findings and the legal standard against which these findings were made. The Judge simply qualified the issue of whether a defence of due diligence had been established by the respondents as a question of mixed fact and law and felt it appropriate to generally show deference to the Delegate's findings on this point. (Decision, at paragraphs 107, 112) The Judge's failure to separately examine the Delegate's interpretation of the standard required to establish a defence of due diligence under the correctness standard was an error of law: Democracy Watch, above at paragraph 26.

[28] Further, a review of the Delegate's decision pertaining to headings B, E and H shows that he misunderstood the burden falling upon the respondents with respect to the establishment of a due diligence defence.

[29] With regard to allegation B, the Delegate noted that the respondents admitted to having failed to comply with section 154 of the BIA and section 64(2) of the Rules [now section 61(2)] by applying for a discharge before forwarding all unclaimed dividends and undistributed funds to the Superintendent. Section 154 provides, inter alia, that before proceeding to a discharge, a trustee shall forward to the Superintendent, for deposit with the Receiver General for Canada, unclaimed dividends and undistributed funds. Completing section 154, section 64(2) states, inter alia, that at the time of discharge a trustee shall certify to the Court that he has forwarded all undistributed funds to the Superintendent. The Delegate accepted the respondents' submissions that the infractions (i) were the result of administrative errors, (ii) had not resulted in any prejudice to the creditors or benefit to them and (iii) that the amounts in issue represented a small fraction of their overall business. The Delegate concluded his analysis with the following statement: "Technically, there may be a breach of [the Act] and Rules. However, it was certainly unintentional." (Appeal Book, Vol. I, Tab 4, "Liability Decision", pages 103-104). For his part, the Judge indicated that "[t]he Delegate obviously inferred from this evidence that the Respondents has thus established a successful due diligence defence (...)." (Decision, at paragraph 111)

[30] The Delegate's findings with regard to headings E and H reflect a similar decision-making process. The respondents admitted to having submitted inaccurate Statements of Receipts and Disbursements (SRD) in contravention of sections 151 and 152 of the BIA. Section 151 of the BIA imposes a duty on trustees to prepare a SRD once all the property of a bankrupt has been realized while section 152 indicates the mandatory information contained in a SRD. The Delegate accepted the respondents' submission that these infractions were the result of administrative errors and had not resulted in any benefit to them or prejudice to the creditors. The Delegate adopted the same approach with respect to allegation H, which concerned the respondents' failure to maintain separate trust accounts for estates converted from a summary to an ordinary administration in contravention of section 13 of Directive No. 5. Again, the Delegate accepted the respondents' submissions that the amounts at issue represented a small fraction of their overall business and that the infractions were the result of administrative errors which did not prejudice the creditors. (Appeal Book, Vol. I, Tab 4, "Liability Decision", pages 110-111) The Judge's comments on the Delegate's findings also reflect the general deference he showed to this aspect of the Delegate's decision: "[T]he findings of fact and the inferences drawn by the Delegate from the evidence (...) are reasonable since they fall within an acceptable range of possible outcomes." (Decision, at paragraph 117)

[31] A plain reading of the Delegate's decision reveals that the following factors were considered as supporting the respondents' defence of due diligence: (i) the lack of intentional wrongdoing on the part of the respondents; (ii) the lack of any resulting prejudice to the creditors of benefit to the respondents; and (iii) the fact that the infractions related to a small portion of the respondents' overall business. In my opinion, these were not relevant considerations to the establishment of a defence of due diligence as articulated in Sault Ste. Marie and subsequently developed in the jurisprudence.

[32] The defence of due diligence was articulated in Sault Ste. Marie, at pages 1325-26 as follows:

The defence will be available if the accused reasonably believed in a mistaken set of facts which, if true, would render the act or omission innocent, or if he took all reasonable steps to avoid the particular event.

[33] While the Delegate regarded the respondents' diligence in the overall conduct of their business as a relevant factor in assessing whether due diligence had been established with respect to headings B, E and H, the jurisprudence is well-settled that, as per Sault Ste. Marie, evidence presented to support this defence must relate to the specific offence at issue. This principle has notably been adopted by the Ontario Court of Appeal (R. v. Raham, 2010 ONCA 206 (CanLII), 2010 ONCA 206 at paragraph 48; R. v. Kurtzman reflex, (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 417 at paragraph 37; Rio Algom Ltd., above at paragraph 31), the British Columbia Court of Appeal (R. v. Emil K. Fishing Corp., 2008 BCCA 490 (CanLII), 2008 BCCA 490 at paragraphs 13, 19; Imperial Oil, above at paragraphs 23, 28) and the Newfoundland and Labrador Court of Appeal (R. v. Alexander 1999 CanLII 18928 (NL CA), (1999), 171 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 74 at paragraph 18 (C.A.)). The Ontario Court of Appeal recently made the following comments on this particular aspect of the due diligence defence in Raham, above at paragraph 48:

The due diligence defence relates to the doing of the prohibited act with which the defendant is charged and not to the defendant's conduct in a larger sense. The defendant must show he took reasonable steps to avoid committing the offence charged, not that he or she was acting lawfully in a broader sense.

[34] Similarly, with respect to heading B, the Delegate accepted the respondents' submission that the breach of the BIA and the Rules was "unintentional". (Appeal Book, Vol. I, Tab 4, "Liability Decision", page 104). However, the lack of intentional wrong-doing will not support a defence of due diligence in the context of strict liability offences which, as stated in Sault Ste. Marie, have as their defining characteristic the absence of any need for the prosecution to prove the existence of a mens rea. In Pillar Oilfield Projects Ltd. v. Canada, [1993] T.C.J. No. 764 at paragraph 27, the Tax Court indicated that "innocent good faith in the making of unintentional errors is not tantamount to due diligence." More recently in Samson, above at paragraph 35, the Federal Court stated that "[i]t is not sufficient to plead forgetfulness or an error made in good faith."

[35] The fact that the infractions may have resulted from "administrative errors" on the part of the respondents' staff was also taken into consideration by the Delegate. However, with respect to headings B and E, subsection 7(f) of Directive No. 4R (Delegation of Tasks) specifically barred the respondents from delegating their responsibility to ensure both the accuracy of SRDs (Heading E) and that an application for discharge was not filed prior to forwarding all unclaimed dividends and undistributed funds to the Superintendent (Heading B). Further, as stated in Sault Ste. Marie at page 1331, en employer will not escape "strict liability" on the sole basis that the alleged infraction was committed by a staff member:

Where an employer is charged in respect of an act committed by an employee acting in the course of employment, the question will be whether the act took place without the accused's direction or approval, thus negating willful involvement of the accused, and whether the accused exercised all reasonable care by establishing a proper system to prevent commission of the offence and by taking reasonable steps to ensure the effective operation of the system.

[36] Finally, while the Delegate accepted the respondents' submissions that the infractions had not resulted in any prejudice to the concerned creditors, there is no reference in the case law pointing to the relevance of such considerations in a due diligence analysis. The appellant refers this Court to the comments of the Court of Quebec (Civil Division) in Millette c. Le Comité de surveillance de l'Association des courtiers, [2004] J.Q. no 8844 at paragraph 44 (Civ. Div.), aff'd 2006 QCCA 711 (CanLII), 2006 QCCA 711, to the effect that liability under a regime of professional conduct does not depend on whether a prejudice was caused to third parties. On this issue, the Court was referred to S. Poirier, La discipline professionnelle au Québec (Cowansville: Yvon Blais, 1998) at 39:

Contrairement à la faute civile, la faute disciplinaire est sans égard aux conséquences de l'acte posé. La conclusion recherchée en matière disciplinaire sera la sanction de l'infraction et non la réparation du préjudice causé.

[37] In light of these observations, it is clear that the Delegate determined that a defence of due diligence had successfully been established by the respondents on the basis of irrelevant criteria. The Delegate failed to hold the respondents to the correct burden of proof, namely to demonstrate on a balance of probabilities that they took all reasonable steps to avoid committing the specific infractions listed under headings B, E and H. Further, even if the Delegate had applied the appropriate criteria for assessing the respondents' due diligence, there is no evidence in the record which can support the finding that all reasonable care was exercised to prevent these specific infractions from occurring. Admittedly, the interpretation of the defence of due diligence in the jurisprudence sets a heavy burden on the respondents: Samson, above at paragraph 35; Cata International, above at paragraph 22. The Ontario Court of Appeal has notably commented on the "nebulous" nature of the notion of due diligence: R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1989] O.J. No. 1971 at paragraph 70 (C.A.).

[38] The respondents rightfully submit that, as per Sault Ste. Marie, a defence of due diligence will also be established if the accused "reasonably believed in a mistaken set of facts which, if true, would render the act or omission innocent." However, while the respondents invoke this alternative mode of defence, they have failed to identify a precise "set of facts" which was reasonably relied on to believe that their actions were lawful. Rather, the respondents' argument on this point seems to relate to a reasonable belief that existing control measures were adequate to prevent the infractions from occurring. In my opinion, on the evidence before us, that argument cannot form the basis of a due diligence defence.

IV. Disposition

[39] I would allow the appeal, set aside the Judge's decision pertaining to the contraventions listed under headings B, E and H and allow the application for judicial review with respect to these contraventions. The Delegate's decisions pertaining to headings B, E and H, in addition to his decision pertaining to the remedial measure under heading L, are thereby set aside. Given this disposition, the matter is remitted to the Delegate in order to determine the appropriate disciplinary measure, if any, under subsection 14.01(1) of the BIA with regard to the contravention under heading L in addition to the contraventions identified by the Judge (J and K) and on appeal (headings B, E and H) as a whole. However, in light of the appellant's failure to obtain a stay of the Judge's decision, and in the event the Delegate has already rendered a new decision with respect to disciplinary measures under headings J, K and L, I would remit the matter to the Delegate only with respect to headings B, E and H.

[40] The Federal Court awarded no costs and I would not disturb that finding. I would award the appellant its costs in this appeal.

NOËL J.A. (Concurring Reasons)

[41] I have had the benefit of reading the reasons of the Chief Justice. Like him I would allow the appeal. However, I reach that conclusion through a different route.

[42] The role of this Court sitting on an appeal from a decision rendered by the Federal Court further to an application for judicial review is to identify the correct standard of review and determine whether the Judge applied this standard correctly (Public Service Alliance of Canada v. Canada Post Corporation, 2010 FCA 56 (CanLII), 2010 FCA 56 at paragraph 84). In this case, the Delegate's decision gave rise to an extricable question of law which, by its nature, stood to be reviewed on a standard of correctness, i.e. what are the legal parameters of the defence of due diligence?

[43] Had the Judge assessed this question against the appropriate standard, he would have been bound to allow the application for judicial review with respect to the contraventions described under headings B, E and H because none of the grounds identified by the Delegate in exculpating the respondents from these contraventions come within the ambit of the defence of due diligence.

[44] Specifically, with respect to the contravention under heading B, the Delegate wrote at paragraph 68 of his reasons:

I accept Mr. MacLeod's evidence that the irregularities as set fourth in these allegations were as a result of administrative errors, and that there was no prejudice to the estates or the creditors, nor any benefit to trustees. Technically, there may be a breach of the Bankruptcy Act and Rules, it was certainly unintentional.

[45] As for the contravention under heading E, the Delegate wrote at paragraph 75 of his reasons:

The explanation given by Mr. MacLeod was that allegation 46 and 47 was an error made by his staff, for which he takes responsibility... At the time of signing the SRD he thought they were correct and accurate. The trustees did not benefit from any of these administrative errors...As has been pointed out, the trustees have not financially benefited from any of these mistakes. They may have used some creative accounting techniques to adjust the estates, but it would also appear that no creditor or debtor has suffered.

[46] With respect to the allegation under heading H, the Delegate noted at paragraph 84 that:

Mr. MacLeod's response to this allegation was that it represented a very small portion of the estates, which were administered by [the respondents].

[47] Finally, the Delegate at paragraph 87 added that:

[Mr. McLeod] points out that the effect of opening these estates in the consolidated bank account was an administrative error but did no prejudice or compromise the administration [of] the estate nor did it prejudice the consolidated bank account for consumer proposals.

[48] In short, the Delegate found that the defence of due diligence had been made out because the contraventions were the result of administrative errors, the creditors were not prejudiced, the respondents did not benefit and the amounts involved represented a very small fraction of the total value of the estates under the respondents' administration.

[49] However, the case law establishes that errors made in good faith are not tantamount to due diligence (Cata International Inc. v. Canada (Minister of National Revenue, Customs, Excise and Taxation – M.N.R.), 2004 FC 663 (CanLII), 2004 FC 663 at paragraph 22; Jean-Pierre Samson and the Minister of National Revenue, 2007 FC 975 (CanLII), 2007 FC 975; Pillar Oilfield Projects Ltd. v. Canada, [1993] T.C.J. no 764 at paragraphs 24 and 27); that proof of reasonable care in the general conduct of one's affairs is not sufficient to escape liability (R. v. Alexander, 1999 CanLII 18928 (NL CA), (1999) 171 Nfld & P.E.I.R. 74 (C.A.); R. v. Imperial Oil Ltd., (2000) 144 B.C.A.C. 118; R. v. Kurtzman, reflex, (1991) 4 O.R. (3d) 417, 429 (C.A.); R. v. Emonts, [2007] O.J. no 1206; R. v. Pilen Construction of Canada Ltd., [1999] O.J. No 5650; R. v. Cooke, reflex, (1989) 78 Sask. R. 141); that it is incumbent upon the person claiming due diligence to show that a system was in place to prevent the prohibited act (R. v. Sault-Ste-Marie, 1978 CanLII 11 (SCC), [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299 at page 1331; Chauvin c. Beaucage, 2008 QCCA 922 (CanLII), 2008 QCCA 922 at paragraphs 88-91) and that the fact that the contraventions did not cause prejudice to third parties is irrelevant (Millette c. Assoc. des Courtiers d'Assurances de la Province de Québec, 2004 CanLII 7074 (QC CQ), 2004 CanLII 7074 (CQ) at paragraphs 42-46; conf. at 2006 QCCA 711 (CanLII), 2006 QCCA 711 (CanLII) at paragraph 59; Chauvin c. Sheehan, 2010 QCCQ 1512 (CanLII), 2010 QCCQ, 1512 (CanLII); Latulippe c. Médecins, 1998 QCTP 1687 (CanLII), 1998 QCTP 1687 (CanLII); Poirier, S., La Discipline Professionnelle au Québec, Cowansville, Les Éditions Yvon Blais inc., 1998 at pages 38-39).

[50] Giving effect to the defence of due diligence as defined by the case law, it is apparent that none of the factors relied upon by the Delegate were capable of establishing such a defence.

[51] In response to questions from the Court during the hearing, counsel for the respondents (Mr. Christian) did not challenge the state of the law as I have described it. However, he took the position that this line of cases does not apply in assessing a due diligence defence in the context of this case.

[52] In particular, counsel noted that there are two branches to the due diligence defence as it was articulated in Sault Ste Marie (at pages 1325 and 1326):

... The defence will be available if the accused reasonably believed in a mistaken set of facts which, if true, would render the act or omission innocent, or if he took all reasonable steps to avoid the particular act. ...

[53] Insisting on the first branch of this test counsel argued that the strict due diligence standard which has been developed by the case law is appropriate with respect to infractions under certain statutes which are based on self-compliance such as the Income Tax Act. However, it is inappropriate in the case of the BIA.

[54] I can see no merit in this submission. First, although broken down into two elements, the Supreme Court in the above quote from Sault Ste Marie provides for a single test inasmuch as an accused who fails to take all reasonable steps to avoid the commission of an infraction will not be able to invoke the first element (i.e. reliance on others) in order to escape liability (Sault Ste Marie at p. 1331).

[55] Second, there is no basis for the suggestion that the BIA calls for a more relaxed approach. Trustees are expected to act in conformity with their statutory obligations. Investigations are undertaken under the BIA from time to time in order to ensure compliance just as they are under the Income Tax Act. This does not detract from the fact that trustees are expected to comply on their own volition as most do. The system could not function otherwise.

[56] I can see no basis for altering the standard of due diligence as it has been established by the case law when dealing with contraventions under the BIA. Applying this standard, it was not open to the Delegate to hold, on the record before him, that the due diligence defence had been made out. It follows that the Judge was bound to intervene and that he erred in failing to do so.

[57] I would allow the appeal on the terms proposed by the Chief Justice.

UNDERTAKING OF APPLICANT REGARDING CONDITIONS IMPOSED ON NEW LICENCES

If a trustee licence is granted by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, I accept that it be subject to the following conditions:

(a) that I will, for a period of twenty-four (24) months, practise with, and in the same physical location as, an active established trustee who is acceptable to the Superintendent; and

(b) that where, at any time during those twenty-four (24) months, I do not meet the requirement set forth in paragraph (a), I will be authorized to act only in the following cases:

(i) consumer proposals;

(ii) estates under the summary administration provisions of the Act;

(iii) estates, known as ordinary administration estates, for which the unsecured liabilities, as per the Statement of Affairs, do not exceed $500,000 and for which the realizable assets as per the Statement of Affairs, after deducting the value of all security interests, do not exceed $15,000; and

(iv) all other cases (notice of intention, Division I Proposal, Interim Receiver, estates not covered by case (iii) above, etc.), subject to the approval of the Designated Assistant Superintendent and on such terms as the Designated Assistant Superintendent shall determine, considering my performance.

These conditions will not necessarily restrict me to any specific employer and any transfer or change of employment assuring similar or better circumstances would be acceptable. I will inform the OSB in advance of any such change.

I also accept that these conditions may, upon written request, be reviewed after the period of twenty-four (24) months. They will thus either be removed, modified or maintained.

If other conditions are to apply, I will be so notified by the Superintendent, prior to the granting of the licence, for my approval.

(iv) tous les autres cas (avis d'intention, proposition en vertu de la section I, mise sous séquestre, dépôt en vertu de la LACC et actifs en dehors des critères du sous-alinéa (iii) ci-dessus), sous réserve de l'approbation du surintendant adjoint désigné et selon les modalités qu'il détermine, compte tenu du rendement du nouveau titulaire de licence.

13. Lorsque le nouveau titulaire de licence est autorisé à agir dans les dossiers énumérés au sous-alinéa 12*b*)(iv) de la présente annexe, le surintendant adjoint désigné peut exiger que ce nouveau titulaire de licence s'adjoigne un parrain qui exercera un rôle de surveillance dans l'administration de ces dossiers.

APPENDIX B

POLICY ON MULTI-JURISDICTIONAL LICENCES

A. Purpose

This policy sets out the various elements to be considered in reviewing a trustee's application to extend his or her licence to a province in which he or she does not maintain a resident office, as well as the procedures to follow in dealing with such an application. The policy is intended to ensure consistency in the application of the rules for extending licences to other districts.

B. General Principles

In reviewing a trustee's application, the Superintendent will consider the various elements set out below. He may then grant the extension without conditions, require that certain conditions be met before the extension is granted, or refuse the extension.

If the extension is granted, it will remain at all times conditional on the trustee complying with the requirements set out at the time of the extension.

The extension privilege may be revoked if the trustee fails to meet his or her obligations, or if the trustee's performance or the quality of the trustee's administration is no longer satisfactory, either with respect to files opened in the district for which the extension was given or in the district for which the licence was initially issued.

C. Factors to be Considered

The Superintendent will consider factors related to the trustee's knowledge of relevant legislation and

ANNEXE B

POLITIQUE SUR LES LICENCES MULTI-JURIDICTIONNELLES

A. Objet

La présente politique énonce les divers éléments qui doivent être pris en compte dans l'examen de la demande d'un syndic d'étendre la portée de sa licence à une province dans laquelle il ne possède pas de bureau principal, de même que la procédure à suivre pour traiter une telle demande. Elle vise à assurer une application uniforme des règles relatives à l'extension d'une licence à un autre district.

B. Principes généraux

Dans le cadre de l'examen de la demande du syndic, le surintendant doit tenir compte des éléments énumérés ci-après. Il peut ensuite accorder l'extension sans conditions, exiger que certaines conditions soient remplies avant d'accorder l'extension demandée, ou refuser la demande d'extension.

Dans les cas où l'extension est accordée, elle demeurera en tout temps conditionnelle au respect par le syndic des exigences établies au moment où l'extension a été accordée.

Le privilège de l'extension peut être révoqué si le syndic ne s'acquitte pas de ses obligations ou si son rendement ou la qualité de son administration ne sont plus satisfaisants, soit à l'égard des dossiers ouverts dans le district pour lequel l'extension a été accordée, soit dans le district où la licence a été initialement délivrée.

C. Facteurs à considérer

Le surintendant considère des facteurs ayant trait à la connaissance de la législation pertinente et à performance of professional engagements.

1. Knowledge of relevant legislation (paragraph 39(a) of Directive 13R4, Trustee Licensing)

a) Provincial Legislation

The trustee must have sufficient knowledge of provincial legislation pertaining to insolvency. While not necessarily exhaustive, the list in Part F below identifies various areas in which the trustee must be very familiar.

b) Board of Examination

A trustee who requests that his or her licence be extended from a common law province to a civil law province, or vice versa, will be required to appear before a Board of Examination. The Superintendent may also require that the trustee appear before a Board of Examination where the trustee does not have sufficient knowledge of the applicable legislation in the new province.

2. The requested extension must not adversely affect the performance of the trustee's professional engagements (paragraph 39(b) of Directive 13R4, Trustee Licensing). Review of an extension request will include consideration of the following factors:

a) Trustee compliance and performance, particularly with regard to:

- the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, and the Bankruptcy and Insolvency General Rules;
- the Superintendent's Directives;
- the closing of files, the number of open files, and the age of open files;
- the number and type of complaints against the trustee.

l'exercice des activités professionnelles du syndic.

1. Connaissance de la législation pertinente (paragraphe 39*a*) de l'instruction n° 13R4, Délivrance des licences de syndic)

a)* Législation provinciale

Le syndic doit posséder une connaissance suffisante de la législation provinciale en matière d'insolvabilité. Bien qu'elle ne soit pas nécessairement exhaustive, la liste figurant à la partie F ci-dessous fait état des divers domaines que le syndic doit bien connaître.

b)* Jury d'examen

Si un syndic demande que sa licence soit étendue d'une province de common law à une province de droit civil, ou vice versa, il doit se présenter devant un jury d'examen. Le surintendant peut également exiger que le syndic se présente devant un jury d'examen s'il ne connaît pas suffisamment la législation qui s'applique dans la nouvelle province.

2. L'extension demandée ne doit pas nuire à l'exercice des activités professionnelles du syndic (paragraphe 39(b) de l'instruction n° 13R4, Délivrance des licences de syndic). L'examen d 'une demande d'extension tiendra compte des facteurs suivants :

a)* La conformité et le rendement du syndic, notamment quant :

- à la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité et aux Règles générales sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité;
- aux instructions du surintendant;
- à la fermeture des dossiers, au nombre de dossiers ouverts et à l'âge de ces dossiers;
- au nombre et au type de plaintes déposées contre le syndic.

Digitized by Google

b) Quality of service provided by the trustee, including:

- the trustee's facilities and office;
- access to files;
- access to the trustee, e.g., assessment in person;
- access to the trustee's personnel, on-site or not, permanently or occasionally.

b)* La qualité du service offert par le syndic, notamment :

- les installations et le bureau du syndic;
- l'accès aux dossiers;
- l'accès au syndic, p. ex., évaluation en personne;
- l'accès au personnel du syndic, sur place ou non, en permanence ou à l'occasion.

c) Cost of services

Trustee fees and disbursements claimed against the estate should not be higher by reason of distance from the resident office.

c)* Le coût des services

Les frais et débours que le syndic réclame contre l'actif ne devraient pas être plus élevés en raison de l'éloignement du bureau principal.

d) Continuity in the administration of files

The trustee must conclude a succession agreement in case of death, incapacity or other factors that could prevent the trustee from performing engagements. He or she must ensure at all times that there is a successor for the files being administered. This criterion is mandatory in view of the risks inherent in leaving estate files without a trustee.

With the exception of the succession agreement, no one criteria set out above will be determinant. Each case will be considered on its merits based on the entire set of circumstances.

d)* La continuité dans l'administration des dossiers

Le syndic doit conclure une entente de succession en cas de décès, d'incapacité ou d'autres causes qui pourraient l'empêcher d'exécuter ses activités. Il doit veiller en tout temps à ce qu'il y ait un successeur pour les dossiers qu'il administre. Ce critère est obligatoire en raison du risque que représentent les dossiers d'actifs laissés sans syndic.

À l'exception des ententes de succession, aucun des facteurs susmentionnés n'est déterminant. Chaque cas est examiné au mérite et selon l'ensemble des circonstances.

D. Conditions for Issuing an Extension

Before being granted an extension, the trustee must commit in writing:

1. to maintain satisfactory performance and the same level of service as that which was represented to the Superintendent when he or she applied for the licence extension;

2. to submit to the Superintendent for prior approval

D. Conditions d'obtention d'une extension

Avant de se voir accorder une extension, le syndic doit s'engager par écrit :

1. à maintenir un rendement satisfaisant et le même niveau de service que celui qu'il a présenté au surintendant au moment où il a demandé l'extension de sa licence;

2. à soumettre au surintendant pour approbation préalable :

Digitized by Google

a) any significant change in the level of service that he or she represented to the Superintendent;
b) any significant change in the succession agreement.

a) tout changement important dans le niveau de service qu'il a présenté au surintendant;
b) tout changement important dans l'entente de succession.

E. Process

- The trustee makes an application in writing demonstrating that he or she meets the requirements of this policy.
- A copy of the succession agreement(s) for the files he or she administers is attached to the application.
- The entire application is reviewed by the Assistant Superintendent (Licensing) in consultation with the Designated Assistant Superintendent (DAS).
- The Assistant Superintendent (Licensing) makes a recommendation and forwards it to the Superintendent of Bankruptcy for a decision.
- This recommendation is not binding on the Superintendent.

E. Processus

- Le syndic fait une demande écrite dans laquelle il démontre comment il satisfait aux exigences de la présente politique.
- Il joint à sa demande une copie de l'entente ou des ententes de succession relatives aux dossiers qu'il administre.
- Le surintendant adjoint (Licences) examine l'ensemble de l'entente, en consultation avec le surintendant adjoint désigné (SAD).
- Le surintendant adjoint (Licences) formule une recommandation et l'achemine au surintendant des faillites, qui prendra la décision.
- La recommandation ne lie pas le surintendant.

F. Relevant Provincial Legislation

The trustee should have general knowledge as to the application of relevant provincial legislation in a bankruptcy situation. Generally, the trustee should be very familiar with the following areas of provincial legislation:

- Bulk Sales
- Business corporation
- Conditional Sales
- Construction Lien
- Credit Reporting
- Employment Standards
- Execution (or Exemptions)
- Family Law
- Fraudulent Conveyances
- Landlord and Tenant
- Mortgages
- Partition

F. Législation provinciale pertinente

Le syndic devrait posséder une connaissance générale de l'application de la législation provinciale pertinente en matière de faillite. De façon générale, le syndic devrait bien connaître les domaines suivants de la législation provinciale :

- Administration du bien d'autrui
- Bail
- Cession de créance
- Donations, préférences et dispositions frauduleuses
- Dossier de crédit
- Droit des biens, notamment l'indivision et la copropriété

APPENDIX C

POLICY ON REINSTATING A LICENCE THAT HAS CEASED TO BE VALID BY REASON OF THE TRUSTEE BECOMING BANKRUPT

A. Purpose

This policy sets out the factors the Superintendent may consider when deciding whether to reinstate the licence of a trustee pursuant to paragraph 13.2(4)(b) of the Act.

B. Sources and General Principles

As a general rule, the Superintendent may reinstate the licence of a trustee whose licence has ceased to be valid by reason of the trustee becoming bankrupt (hereinafter "the applicant") only after the discharge of the trustee who administered the applicant's bankruptcy (hereinafter "the administering trustee").

The Superintendent will handle reinstatement applications under paragraph 13.2(4)(b) of the Act on a case-by-case basis having regard to the factors set out in Part D.

If the applicant's bankruptcy was the result of fraudulent activities or other willful misconduct, the Superintendent will generally refuse reinstatement of the licence in the interest of protecting the integrity of the bankruptcy and insolvency system.

C. Application Process

A trustee whose licence has ceased to be valid by reason of the trustee becoming bankrupt may apply

ANNEXE C

POLITIQUE SUR LA RÉACTIVATION D'UNE LICENCE QUI A ÉTÉ ANNULÉE EN RAISON DE LA FAILLITE DU SYNDIC

A. Objet

La présente politique énonce les facteurs dont le surintendant peut tenir compte pour décider s'il doit réactiver la licence d'un syndic en vertu de l'alinéa 13.2(4)b) de la Loi.

B. Sources et principes généraux

En règle générale, le surintendant peut réactiver une licence qui a été annulée en raison de la faillite d'un syndic (ci-après appelé « le demandeur ») seulement après la libération du syndic qui a administré la faillite du demandeur (ci-après appelé « le syndic administrateur »).

Le surintendant traitera les demandes de réactivation fondées sur l'alinéa 13.2(4)b) de la Loi au cas par cas, après avoir pris en compte les facteurs énoncés dans la partie D.

Si la faillite du demandeur est attribuable à des activités frauduleuses ou à toute autre inconduite délibérée, le surintendant refusera généralement la réactivation de la licence afin de protéger l'intégrité du système de faillite et d'insolvabilité.

C. Processus de présentation de la demande

Le syndic dont la licence a été annulée en raison de sa faillite peut demander la réactivation de sa for reinstatement of his or her licence by submitting written representations to that effect to the Superintendent.

An applicant must provide an attestation of professional competence showing that he or she has kept up-to-date with developments in the insolvency field, and provide an attestation of good character showing that there have been no breaches, investigations or sanctions against the applicant that may impair public confidence in the bankruptcy and insolvency system.

D. Factors to be Considered

Upon receipt of an application for reinstatement under paragraph 13.2(4)(b) of the Act, the Superintendent will consider various factors, which may include, but are not limited to, the following:

a) Factors relating to the period prior to the bankruptcy:

- Causes of the bankruptcy.
- Whether the applicant breached his/her fiduciary obligations.
- Whether the applicant willfully neglected his/her creditors, was financially irresponsible, or whether his/her personal extravagance contributed to the bankruptcy.
- Number, nature and quantum of the applicant's creditors.
- Nature of the applicant's practice (number and type of files).
- History of the applicant's licence and the firm at which the applicant worked.
- Whether the applicant committed any act that is, by its nature, fraudulent or subject to sanction as criminal by a court of competent licence en présentant au surintendant une demande écrite en ce sens.

Le demandeur doit fournir une attestation de compétence professionnelle démontrant qu'il s'est tenu à jour en ce qui a trait aux développements dans le domaine de l'insolvabilité et fournir une attestation de bonne réputation démontrant qu'il n'a commis aucune contravention, n'a fait l'objet d'aucune enquête ni sanction pouvant compromettre la confiance du public à l'égard du système de faillite et d'insolvabilité.

D. Facteurs à considérer

Sur réception d'une demande de réactivation fondée sur l'alinéa 13.2(4)b) de la Loi, le surintendant tiendra compte de divers facteurs, notamment :

a)* Facteurs relatifs à la période précédant la faillite :

- causes de la faillite;
- manquement du demandeur à ses obligations fiduciaires;
- négligence délibérée de ses créanciers, irresponsabilité financière et extravagances personnelles ayant contribué à la faillite;
- nombre, nature et montant des créances du demandeur;
- nature de la pratique du demandeur (nombre et type de dossiers);
- antécédents de la licence du demandeur et de la firme auprès de laquelle il a travaillé;
- actes commis par le demandeur qui sont de nature frauduleuse ou pouvant être passibles d'une sanction criminelle par un tribunal jurisdiction.

b) Factors relating to the period of bankruptcy:

- Amount of time between the date of bankruptcy and the discharge of the administering trustee.
- Applicant's discharge and any conditions of discharge.
- Whether the administering trustee has been discharged.
- Relative percentage and amount of dividends recovered by creditors.

c) Factors relating to the period following the bankruptcy:

- Whether the applicant will be working with other trustees and will, therefore, be subject to internal control processes and procedures.
- The applicant's financial situation, including cash reserves to enable the applicant to operate the business, if applicable, over a period of time.
- The applicant's controls and reporting over trust accounts.
- Whether the Superintendent believes the applicant is:
  - competent to carry on the practice of a trustee;
  - capable of performing the essential duties associated with his/her employment; and
  - capable of carrying out any business or practice in which the applicant is engaged.
- Other factors, such as references to be submitted by the applicant, and the time period between the discharge of the applicant and the application for reinstatement.

compétent.

b)* Facteurs relatifs à la période de la faillite :

- période entre la date de la faillite et la libération du syndic administrateur;
- libération du demandeur et conditions de libération;
- libération ou non du syndic administrateur;
- pourcentage relatif et montant des dividendes recouvrés par les créanciers.

c)* Facteurs relatifs à la période suivant la faillite :

- la question de savoir si le demandeur travaillera avec d'autres syndics et sera donc assujetti à des processus et procédures de contrôle interne;
- la situation financière du demandeur, notamment l'encaisse nécessaire à l'exploitation de ses activités, le cas échéant, au cours d'une période donnée;
- les mesures de contrôle et de rapport du demandeur à l'égard des comptes en fiducie;
- la question de savoir si le surintendant croit que le demandeur est :
  - apte à exercer la profession de syndic;
  - capable de remplir les fonctions essentielles liées à son emploi;
  - capable de diriger des activités ou une pratique à laquelle il prend part;
- tout autre facteur, notamment les références présentées par le demandeur et la période écoulée entre la libération du demandeur et la demande de réactivation.

Digitized by Google

While the above factors are intended to clarify the basis upon which the Superintendent may decide to reinstate a licence of a trustee whose licence has ceased to be valid by reason of bankruptcy, the Superintendent maintains the ultimate discretion in the matter.

Bien que les facteurs susmentionnés visent à préciser le fondement sur lequel le surintendant peut décider de réactiver la licence d'un syndic qui a été annulée en raison de la faillite de celui-ci, il revient en définitive au surintendant de trancher la question.

The Superintendent may reinstate a licence with or without conditions or limitations, or may refuse the reinstatement application. The applicant will be notified accordingly.

Le surintendant peut réactiver la licence avec ou sans conditions ou restrictions, ou encore peut rejeter la demande de réactivation. Le demandeur sera avisé en conséquence.

Subject: Directive No. 29R2, *Advertising by Trustees

The Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy (OSB) has amended paragraph 6(b) of Directive No. 29, Advertising by Trustees, to replace the word "resident" with the word "non-resident." When the Directive was re-numbered and re-issued on August 14, 2009, part of the "non" in "non-resident" was inadvertently dropped in paragraph 6(b) of the English version of Directive. The omission of the word "non" is clearly an oversight since it appeared in paragraph 6 of Directive No. 30R issued on July 23, 1993, on the same topic. This error is also present in the French version of the Directive since the translator used the word "resident" to translate the document.

The omission has been corrected and the first portion of paragraph 6(b) has been replaced by the following: "(b) the advertising of a non-resident trustee office must always include the address of the principal place of business [...]."

Objet : Instruction n° 29R2, *Publicité par les syndics

Le Bureau du surintendant des faillites (BSF) a apporté une modification au paragraphe 6b) de l'instruction n° 29, Publicité par les syndics, afin de remplacer le mot "principal" par le mot "secondaire". Lorsque l'instruction a été numérotée et émise de nouveau le 14 août 2009, la partie « non » du terme « non-resident » a été omise par erreur au paragraphe 6b) de la version anglaise de l'instruction. L'omission de la partie « non » du terme est clairement une méprise, car elle figure au paragraphe 6 de l'instruction n° 30R émise le 23 juillet 1993 et qui porte sur le même sujet. Cette erreur s'est répercutée dans la version française, car le traducteur a utilisé le terme « principal » dans sa traduction du document.

Cet oubli a été corrigé et la première partie de la phrase au paragraphe 6b) a été remplacée par ce qui suit : "b) la publicité d'un bureau secondaire de syndics doit inclure l'adresse du lieu d'affaires principal [...]".

Policy

4. When advertising their services, trustees shall always identify themselves as Trustee in Bankruptcy.

5. A trustee shall not advertise, directly or indirectly, in a manner that:

(a) is false or misleading;

(b) contravenes professional good taste or fails to uphold professional courtesy;

(c) reflects unfavourably on the competence or integrity of any trustee;

(d) refers to the trustee as a specialist in a particular industry or area of insolvency, or

(e) involves a statement, the content of which the trustee cannot substantiate.

6. The following guidelines apply in all advertising by trustees:

(a) trustees may advertise their services anywhere in Canada provided that their advertising indicates in which province and/or territory they are licensed, if the advertisement is outside the province and/or territory in which they are licensed;

(b) the advertising of a non-resident trustee office must always include the

Politique

4. Lorsqu'ils annoncent leurs services, les syndics doivent toujours s'identifier en tant que syndic de faillite.

5. Un syndic ne doit pas annoncer ses services, directement ou indirectement, d'une façon qui :

a) soit fausse ou trompeuse;

b) va à l'encontre du bon goût professionnel ou n'observe pas la courtoisie professionnelle de rigueur;

c) peut être perçue comme portant atteinte à la réputation d'un autre syndic;

d) mentionne que le syndic possède une spécialité dans un secteur d'activité ou un domaine particulier de l'insolvabilité; ou

e) énonce une affirmation que le syndic ne peut justifier.

6. Les lignes directrices suivantes s'appliquent à toute publicité par les syndics :

a) Les syndics peuvent annoncer leurs services n'importe où au Canada, mais la publicité doit préciser la province ou le territoire pour lequel ils détiennent une licence lorsque la publicité est fait hors de leur province ou territoire;

b) la publicité d'un bureau secondaire de syndics doit inclure l'adresse du lieu address of the principal place of business from which an individual trustee normally practises and this address must be prevalent in the advertisement;

(c) the advertising of a non-resident office must be done in a manner which will not convey to the public the impression that there is a resident individual trustee in that office;

(d) in advertising, the name of trustees and full-time employees may appear and their status must be identified accordingly (i.e., trustee, estate administrator); and

(e) it is permissible for trustees to use a logo to identify their firm.

7. Asset realization, contributions to the estate by the debtor as well as trustee's fees and expenses are governed by the Act, Rules, individual circumstances and orders of the Court. As these amounts are not predictable, it is difficult to conceive that this type of publicity would not be misleading. In any event, if charges and/or expenses are advertised, it must be done in conformity with the provisions of this Directive and with the standards described in Appendix A.

8. Subject to Directive No. 15, Trustee Consultation Fees in Bankruptcies and Proposals, it is acceptable for a trustee to advertise his or her fees in respect of a preliminary or initial consultation prior to bankruptcy.

d'affaires principal où un syndic particulier exerce normalement ses fonctions et cette adresse doit prédominer dans la publicité;

c) la publicité d'un bureau secondaire ne doit pas donner l'impression au public qu'un syndic résidant y travaille à temps plein;

d) le nom des syndics et de leurs employés à temps plein peut paraître dans la publicité, mais leurs fonctions doivent être précisées (p. ex., syndic, administrateur); et

e) les syndics peuvent se servir d'un « logo » pour identifier leur bureau.

7. La réalisation des biens, les contributions à l'actif par le débiteur ainsi que les honoraires et débours du syndic sont régis par la Loi, les Règles, les circonstances individuelles et les ordonnances du tribunal. Comme ces montants ne peuvent être déterminés à l'avance, il serait difficile de concevoir une telle publicité qui ne serait pas trompeuse. Quoi qu'il en soit, si une publicité devait porter sur les charges ou déboursés, elle devra respecter les dispositions de la présente instruction et les normes de pratiques énoncées à l'annexe A.

8. Sous réserve de l'instruction n° 15, Honoraires de consultation du syndic dans les faillites et les propositions, il est acceptable pour un syndic d'annoncer le montant de ses honoraires pour une rencontre ou une consultation initiale avant la faillite.

APPENDIX A

Canadian Association of Insolvency & Restructuring Professionals' (CAIRP) Bulletin on Compliance in Advertising (October 2000)

(Issued by the Professional Conduct Committee (PCC) in order to put all members and trustees on notice that several practices do not conform to the Directives and CAIRP's Rules)

1. False Names: It is the opinion of the PCC that placing an extra "A" in front of a firm's name contravenes paragraphs 5(a) and 5(b) of the Superintendent's Policy Statement 30R - Advertising by Trustees (now subsection 5(a) and (b) of Directive No. 29) and violates CAIRP's Rules as it is false advertising. Similarly, a standalone alphabetical listing under a name different from the firm's licensed name is unacceptable; i.e., "Bankruptcy Boutique".

2. Principal Office: Another common fault that the PCC has found with advertising is that the principal place of business is not indicated where a firm lists several addresses but does not have a resident trustee at each of the locations listed in the ad. It would be acceptable to say "by appointment only" where the address is for a satellite or non-resident office. The wording of Directive No. 30R, paragraph 6 (c) (now subsection 6(c) of Directive No. 29) provides the best guidance as to what is intended by the Directive, "It should not convey to the public the impression that there is a resident individual trustee in that office."

One member has dealt with this very clearly by showing "Mr. CIRP trustee in bankruptcy" at his address and "Ms. EA, estate administrator" at his non-resident office address.

3. Exclusive Headings: The Superintendent's Directive requires that trustees must identify themselves as "trustee in bankruptcy" in their advertising. Several members have said that this is redundant when they are listing themselves under a Yellow Pages or a newspaper heading such as "bankruptcies - trustees", which is reserved only for trustees. On the other hand, trustees have complained to CAIRP that non-trustees have been allowed to place ads in these sections. As a result, the PCC has come to the conclusion that the requirement to use "trustee in bankruptcy", as required by Directive No. 30R (now Directive No. 29) should remain in this Directive. At the same time, it will be writing to the Yellow Pages Publishers to ask them to refuse any ads for this section unless the advertiser is identified as "trustee in bankruptcy". This will make it much easier to prevent non-trustees from advertising in these sections. Until now, the ads have been removed after the fact.

4. Estate Administrators: In keeping with the principle that the "bankruptcies- trustees" section is exclusively for trustees, the PCC asks that you remove any individual listings for estate administrators.

5. Photos: Photos of office staff or models without using names are acceptable. When names are used in the ad, the status and full name of the employee must be included. Most trustees take appointments under their corporate licence. When they put in their photo and feature their name prominently in a display ad, the name of their firm must be included.

6. Internet Listings: Internet listings constitute advertising and the content must comply with advertising standards.

7. Practical Experience: When ads refer to years of experience, the number of years should refer to the number of years the trustee has held his or her licence.

ANNEXE A

Bulletin de l'Association canadienne des professionnels de l'insolvabilité et de la réorganisation (ACPIR) sur la conformité en matière de publicité (octobre 2000)

1. Faux noms : Le CCP estime que l'ajout d'un « A » supplémentaire devant le nom d'un cabinet va à l'encontre des alinéas 5a) et b) de l'énoncé de politique 30R du surintendant - Publicité des syndics (maintenant les paragraphes 5 a) et b) de l'instruction n° 29), ainsi que des règles de l'ACPIR/CAIRP, car il s'agit de fausse publicité. De la même façon, une inscription alphabétique isolée sous un nom différent de celui pour lequel le cabinet détient une licence, p. ex. « Bankruptcy Boutique » est inacceptable.

2. Bureau principal : Il arrive souvent qu'un cabinet énumère plusieurs adresses dans son annonce sans donner celle de son principal établissement alors qu'il ne compte pas parmi ses membres un syndic résidant à chacun des endroits énumérés, ce qui constitue une faute. Lorsque l'adresse concerne un bureau satellite ou secondaire, l'ajout des mots « sur nomination seulement » serait acceptable. Il convient à cet égard de se reporter à l'alinéa 6c) de la Directive 30R (maintenant paragraphe 6 c)de l'instruction n° 29), qui indique le mieux l'intention sous-jacente à la politique : « Elle ne doit pas donner l'impression au public qu'un syndic résidant y travaille à temps plein. »

Un membre a été très clair dans sa publicité en utilisant les mots « M. CIRP, syndic de faillite » pour l'endroit où il réside et les mots « M™ AE, administratrice d'actifs » pour son bureau secondaire.

3. Rubriques exclusives : Selon la Directive du surintendant, les syndics sont tenus de se désigner à titre de « syndic de faillite » dans leur publicité. Plusieurs membres ont souligné que cette façon de procéder est redondante lorsqu'ils s'inscrivent sous une rubrique des Pages Jaunes ou d'un journal comme « Faillites - syndics », qui est réservée uniquement à l'usage des syndics. Par ailleurs, certains syndics se sont plaints à l'ACPIR/CAIRP du fait que des personnes qui ne sont pas syndics ont été autorisées à publier des annonces sous ces rubriques. Le CCP en est donc arrivé à la conclusion que l'obligation d'utiliser la désignation « syndic de faillite » conformément à la Directive 30R *(maintenant l'instruction n°29)*devrait demeurer en vigueur. Au même moment, il écrira aux éditeurs des Pages Jaunes pour leur demander de refuser de publier toute annonce sous cette rubrique, à moins que l'annonceur ne soit désigné par les mots « syndic de faillite ». Si cette façon de procéder est utilisée, il sera beaucoup plus facile d'empêcher les personnes qui ne sont pas syndics de s'annoncer sous ces rubriques. Jusqu'à maintenant, les annonces ont été retirées après coup.

4. Administrateurs d'actifs : Compte tenu du principe selon lequel la section « Faillites - syndics » est réservée exclusivement à l'usage des syndics, le CCP vous demande de retirer toute inscription individuelle qui concerne les administrateurs d'actifs.

5. Photographies : Il est permis de publier des photographies du personnel de bureau ou de mannequins sans utiliser les noms. Lorsque les noms figurent dans l'annonce, le poste et le nom au complet de l'employé doivent être indiqués. La plupart des syndics acceptent des mandats en application de leur licence de syndic constitué en société. Lorsqu'ils publient leur photographie et placent leur nom en évidence dans une annonce, le nom de leur cabinet doit également figurer dans celle-ci.

6. Inscriptions dans une page ou un site web : Les inscriptions figurant dans une page ou un site web constituent une forme de publicité et le contenu doit respecter les normes relatives à la publicité.

7. Expérience pratique : Lorsque le nombre d'années d'expérience est indiqué dans les annonces, ce nombre devrait correspondre au nombre d'années au cours desquelles le syndic a détenu sa licence.

Reasons for Decision of
The Honourable Madam Justice Constance Hunt

Application for Leave to Appeal under Rule 505(6)

Digitized by Google

Reasons for Decision of
The Honourable Madam Justice Constance Hunt

[1] The Appellant, Terry Moses ("Moses"), seeks leave pursuant to Rule 505(6) to appeal my November 1, 2005 order ("Order") to a three-member panel. The application is dismissed.

Background

[2] In his Statement of Claim, Moses claimed damages of $700,000, representing his alleged loss of shareholders' equity in a company (which operated as Mr. Tux) of which he was the sole owner and director. He claimed further damages of $300,000 representing the value of his lost opportunity to build on the share value of Mr. Tux. Moses's allegations against the BDO defendants (BDO Dunwoody Limited and its employees Weninger and Edwards) included negligence, breach of contract and professional malpractice in failing to advise him of the commercial proposal provisions of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (as amended) (the "BIA") and thereafter in their conduct during the ensuing bankruptcy proceedings. He also claimed negligence against all the defendants in the disposal of Mr. Tux's inventory.

[3] Briefly, these claims arose after Moses assigned Mr. Tux into bankruptcy and BDO was appointed trustee. BDO was also appointed receiver by ATB Financial, a creditor of Mr. Tux. BDO contracted with Bill Wigley to liquidate Mr. Tux's inventory.

[4] Moses' Statement of Claim was struck. Neither the Master (who allowed the initial application under Rule 129) nor the Queen's Bench chambers judge who heard the application de novo (and ordered the Statement of Claim struck pursuant to Rule 129 and summarily dismissed the action in favour of the defendant pursuant to Rule 159) gave written reasons. Nor was I provided with transcripts of their oral reasons. The respondents suggested that the primary reason for the success of their application was that Moses had no cause of action against them in his personal capacity. Moses appealed the striking of his claim.

[5] Moses applied to stay the enforcement of the costs orders granted below, and the respondents applied for security for costs of the appeal. My Order denied the stay application and awarded security for costs of $10,000 each to the three sets of respondents (Bill Wigley, ATB Financial, and the BDO defendants).

Leave to Appeal a Single Justice of Appeal's Order

[6] Rule 505(6) of the Alberta Rules of Court provides:

> No judgment given or order made by one justice of appeal shall be subject to any appeal, except by leave of the justice giving the judgment or making the order.

In two cases a judge recused himself from hearing a leave application concerning his own decisions: Prefontaine v. Minister of National Revenue 2001 ABCA 288 (CanLII), (2001), 293 A.R. 369 (C.A.), 2001 ABCA 288; Liu v. Tangirala 2005 ABCA 243 (CanLII), (2005), 371 A.R. 71 (C.A.), 2005 ABCA 243. In Liu, he clarified that in Prefontaine he had not done so on a constitutional basis, but rather because of concerns about an apprehension of bias.

[7] In Vysek v. Nova Gas International Ltd., 2002 ABCA 112 (CanLII), 2002 ABCA 112, (2002), 303 A.R. 209 (C.A.), another judge observed at para. 17:

> Rule 505(6) imposes a mild form of gate keeping, designed to deploy judicial resources when they are needed to address serious issues and end the costly appeal motion cycle when they are not. This is achieved most efficiently by having the judge who heard the appeal motion consider the leave application, "because of that judge's familiarity with the evidence, the issues and the need for further review": Pugh v. Schepanovich 1993 CanLII 7292 (AB QB), (1993), 159 A.R. 397 at 400 (Q.B.). Judges have the necessary skills to determine whether a matter they have considered raises an important issue that merits scrutiny by three other judges.

[8] Although additional materials put before the Court by Moses during oral argument make passing reference to Prefontaine, the issue of whether Rule 505(6) gives rise to an apprehension of bias was not seriously pursued. Moses did not ask that I recuse myself. I see no reason to do so.

The Test for Leave to Appeal Under Rule 505(6)

[9] In Standards of Review Employed by Appellant Courts, (Edmonton: Juriliber, 1994), former Justice R. P. Kerans states at pp.70-72:

> The very existence of [a requirement for leave to appeal] indicates that only appeals meeting some standard of worthiness should receive permission to proceed. This standard may be "a matter of general public importance" or it may be "a strong likelihood of success" or any other standard the leave court chooses.
> The Ontario Court of Appeal has adopted a fairly explicit leave policy for those cases where leave is required. It has indicated leave will be granted if an "arguable question" arises involving one of these issues:
> (a) the interpretation of a statute or Regulation of Canada or Ontario including its constitutionality;
> (b) the interpretation, clarification or propounding of some general rule or principle of law;
> (c) the interpretation of a municipal by-law where the point in issue is a question of public importance;
> (d) the interpretation of an agreement where the point in issue involves a question of public importance.
> The Court will of course consider also cases where special circumstances would make the matter sought to be brought before the Court a matter of public importance or would appear to require that in the interest of justice leave should be granted - such as the introduction of new evidence, obvious misapprehension of the Divisional Court of the relevant facts or a clear departure from the established principles of law resulting in a miscarriage of justice.
> The outlining of the foregoing criteria is not to say that in cases in which there is clearly an error in a judgment or order of the Divisional Court, it is not the duty of the Court of Appeal to grant leave so that it might correct the error. However, the possibility that there may be error in the judgment or order will not generally be a ground in itself for granting leave.
> It would seem that in the second category, more than merely an "arguable" case must be put to the leave judge. The British Columbia Court of Appeal similarly requires, in the case of an interlocutory order "an obvious error."
> On the other hand, the leave policy may leave the entire question to the ad hoc judgment of the leave judge, who might even grant open-ended leave, permitting appeal on any issue. With respect, that largely undermines the idea of leave.

[10] The annotation to Rule 505(6) in Stevenson & Côté's Alberta Civil Procedures Handbook 2006 (Juriliber: Edmonton 2006) states that the applicable test to be used in determining whether to grant leave includes "whether there is an issue of law, whether discretion is involved, and whether there is an arguable ground": Vysek v. Nova Gas International Ltd. 2002 ABCA 136 (CanLII), (2002), 303 A.R. 221 (C.A.), 2002 ABCA 136, at para. 16. In R. v. Knight 2003 ABCA 114 (CanLII), (2003), 57 W.C.B.

Digitized by Google

(2d) 196 (Alta. C.A.), 2003 ABCA 114, Côté J.A. refused to grant leave under R. 505(6) on the ground that "Knight had failed to provide any valid reason for granting leave to appeal. He did not argue any error of law, and there was no important issue raised.".

[11] The Court of Appeal of British Columbia has held that when a panel reviews a decision of a single appeal judge, it should ask "was the chambers judge wrong in law, or wrong in principle, or did the chambers judge misconceive the facts": Haldorson v. Coquitlam (City), 2000 BCCA 672 (CanLII), 2000 BCCA 672 at para. 7. That Court has also said that a panel should interfere only if "satisfied that the Chambers Judge was wrong in the legal sense and not merely that he exercised a discretion incorrectly": Frew v. Roberts, [1990] B.C.J. No. 2175, (1990), 29 B.C.L.R. (3d) 34 (B.C.C.A) at para. 36. Although these cases deal with the standard of review of the chambers judge by a panel, they inform the question of what test should be applied on a leave application under Rule 505(6).

[12] It is also worthwhile to consider the nature of the decision in regard to which leave is sought. Stays and security for costs orders are both exercises of discretion. Absent an error of law, reasonableness is the applicable standard in reviewing an exercise of discretion: Decock v. Alberta 2000 ABCA 122 (CanLII), (2000), 255 A.R. 234 (C.A.), 2000 ABCA 122 at para. 13.

[13] Absent a question of general public importance, it is my view that the test governing an application under Rule 505(6) is whether

(i) there is a possible error of law;
(ii) a discretion has been unreasonably exercised; or
(iii) the chambers judge misapprehended important facts.

Parties' Positions

[14] Moses submits that if I do not grant leave he will be denied natural justice. In effect, he says, this will end his appeal. Presumably natural justice will be denied because if he does not have the resources to post security for costs, his main appeal will be dismissed. He also argues that he is prejudiced because "the respondents are aggressively pursuing collection of their trial costs", but adduces no evidence to support this claim. In oral argument he stated that it would be unfair if a lack of resources prevented a person from pursuing an appeal.

[15] His second argument is that in the security for costs application, the respondents did not discharge their burden of proving "special circumstances" because they did not prove he had no assets. On this point, the respondents point to the evidence that no real property registered in Moses's name was found in their search of Alberta Land Titles.

[16] The respondents' position is that there are no grounds for granting leave. They say I applied the correct tests properly. They submit that Moses is not denied natural justice. They question his allegation that impecunious appellants are prevented from having their appeals heard. The safety net, they say, is that if the appellant discharges the burden of proving that the appeal has a reasonable prospect of success, security for costs may not be ordered. It is only absent a reasonable prospect of success of the appeal that an appellant's impecuniosity becomes critical.

Analysis

A. Stay of Enforcement of Bill of Costs

[17] In determining whether to grant the stay of enforcement, I applied the tri-partite test (RJR-MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (A.G.), 1994 CanLII 117 (SCC), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 311), which requires the applicant to show:

1. Serious question - Preliminary and tentative assessment of the merits of the case: is it a serious question as opposed to a frivolous and vexatious one?
2. Irreparable harm - Would the applicant suffer irreparable harm (harm that is difficult to compensate in damages) if the stay is refused?
3. Balance of convenience - If the stay is refused, will the applicant suffer greater harm than the respondent would suffer if the stay were granted?

[18] Although my reasons were not explicit on the "serious question" part of the test, I did not conclude that Moses failed on this part of the test. Rather, I concluded that he had not shown irreparable harm.

[19] Irreparable harm refers to the nature, not the magnitude, of the harm. Harm that is unquantifiable in monetary terms is irreparable. Harm is irreparable where damages cannot be collected. Impecuniosity is a relevant factor to consider but is not determinative: RJR-MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (A.G.).

[20] There can be irreparable harm if refusal to grant the stay renders the appeal nugatory: Triple Five Corp. v. United Western Communications reflex, (1994), 19 Alta. L.R. (3d) 153 at 155, [1994] A.J. No. 278 at para. 6 (C.A.), motion for a stay of execution dismissed: [1994] S.C.C.A. No. 226.

[21] Having to pay money alone is not irreparable harm: Kassian v. Hill 2002 ABCA 140 (CanLII), (2002), 303 A.R. 391, 2002 ABCA 140. Proof of irreparable harm may be shown where the amount of the judgment exceeds the ability of the ordinary citizen to repay: Edmonton (City) v. Westinghouse Canada Inc. (1996), 187 A.R. 153 (C.A.); see also Re Evans (Bankrupt) (1992), 135 A.R. 46 (C.A.), and Costello v. Calgary (City) (1995), 178 A.R. 81 (C.A.).

[22] I determined that Moses had failed to provide evidence of irreparable harm. The unpaid taxed costs were in the sums of $13,053 (BDO defendants) and $12,541 (ATB Financial). Presumably Wigley's as-yet untaxed costs would be similar. There is no evidence that if Moses paid these amounts, he would be unable to recover them if he succeeded on his substantive appeal. BDO and ATB are major corporations who would easily be able to repay. There is no evidence that the respondent, Wigley, could not repay the costs if required to do so.

Digitized by Google

[23] The only possible argument is that Moses's impecuniosity means that a refusal of his stay application will determine his substantive appeal. As I noted in my reasons at para. 5, no evidence was adduced by Moses in this respect. Even in the most current application he only refers to the "possibility" of his inability to pay. That is not evidence of irreparable harm.

[24] I am satisfied that I properly applied the correct legal test and came to a reasonable conclusion. The test for granting leave is not met in regard to my refusal to grant a stay of the costs order.

B. Security for Costs

[25] In Gusky v. Rosedale Clay Products, [1917] 34 D.L.R. 727 at 728 (Alta. C.A.) it was held that:

> The successful litigant should be entitled to an order for security upon proof of the appellant's poverty unless the appellant satisfies the judge or court to whom the application is made that the case is one in which an appeal may properly be taken with some reasonable prospect of success.

This decision has been cited with approval many times.

[26] The following principles guide the Court in determining whether to grant security for costs: Freyberg v. Fletcher Challenge Oil and Gas Inc. 2003 ABCA 208 (CanLII), (2003), 330 A.R. 130, 2003 ABCA 208:

- security will not be ordered unless there are special circumstances;
- special circumstances are required for good reason: appellate costs are a small portion of litigation costs and the appellant must pay the bulk of these costs in providing the appeal books;
- there must be some proof that costs may not be recovered or recovered only with great difficulty;
- where there is a reasonable prospect of success on appeal, the application will fail.

[31] One of the factors that may show special circumstances is that a portion of the trial costs remain outstanding: Ellis v. Friedland 2001 ABCA 45 (CanLII), (2001), 277 A.R. 126 (C.A.), 2001 ABCA 45 at para. 16. If there are special circumstances, the onus shifts to the appellant to establish a reasonable prospect of success on the appeal: Ellis v. Friedland, at para. 16. Ordering a poor appellant to pay security for costs where there is no reasonable prospect of success is not tantamount to a summary dismissal of the appeal: Vysek v. Nova Gas International Ltd. 2002 ABCA 136 (CanLII), (2002), 303 A.R. 221, 2002 ABCA 136 at para. 20, refusing leave to appeal from 2002 ABCA 5 (CanLII), (2002), 303 A.R. 33, 2002 ABCA 5. There is little prospect of success when the decision under appeal is discretionary, there is no obvious error in the judgment below, and the appellant has twice argued her case and twice lost: Sorochan v. St. Albert Protestant Separate School District No. 6, 2002 ABCA 260 (CanLII), 2002 ABCA 260 at para.9.

[32] A three-member panel of this Court, hearing an appeal of a single judge's security for costs order disagreed that, by upholding the order, "we thus turn our faces away from justice … we do not equate agreeing with [the appellant] with fulfilling our oaths to do justice": Sunlife Trust Co. v. Gramaglia (1996), 187 A.R. 31 (C.A.) at para. 6, leave to appeal to S.C.C. denied at [1996] S.C.C.A. No. 360.

[33] The respondents' evidence showed that Moses was impecunious. Moses failed to rebut that. He provided no evidence that would lead to a different conclusion, either on November 1, 2005 or on this application. His Notice of Motion in this application simply states that there is the "possibility" that he would be unable to post costs. Given this, the onus of proving a reasonable prospect of success on appeal shifts to Moses.

[34] I have carefully reconsidered whether there is a possible legal error or an unreasonable exercise of my discretion in concluding that he does not have a reasonable chance of success on his appeal, or whether there are other grounds upon which I should grant leave. During the hearing of this application, I specifically asked Moses to explain the merit in his appeal. Nothing he said in reply shed any light on this subject, including that he would have a "fairer chance" in front of three judges. I remain of the view that his prospects for success are dim, because this is not the kind of case where he has a personal action against the respondents.

Conclusion

[35] The application for leave is dismissed. As I indicated during the oral hearing, pursuant to my Order the respondents must apply by notice of motion to have the appeal struck if Moses does not pay the ordered security for costs.

[36] I direct counsel for ATB to prepare the necessary order arising from these Reasons. Rule 323 is waived.

[1] Houlden J.A. is supervising the Treasury CCAA proceedings; he lifted the stay for the purpose of my hearing this motion regarding a replacement nominee for the trustee. It is expected that he will lift the stay generally on Dec. 15, 1995 or shortly thereafter once all pressing matters regarding the CCAA proceedings have been dealt with by him. It would then appear that everyone's expectation and desire is that Treasury immediately thereafter be placed in bankruptcy.
[2] UBS (the replacement petitioning creditor in the bankruptcy proceedings) moved to amend the petition to nominate Richter as trustee in bankruptcy in place of Deloitte. It also sought a receiving order against Treasury (appointing Richter as trustee) effective immediately following the termination of the CCAA proceedings. As regards the latter motion, it would seem to me that this should be more appropriately dealt with once the CCAA proceedings have terminated. Mr. Barnes argued on behalf of UBS and the ALC Committee; he was supported by Mr. Robertson also acting for UBS and by Mr. Fogul on behalf of Ontario. Deloitte took no part of the argument; it had previously indicated that it was not willing to stand for appointment as trustee (either as sole trustee or in some joint or shared responsibility capacity) unless it had the endorsement of all three major stakeholders - the ALC Committee, Rehabilitator and Liquidator. The ALC Committee was opposed to Deloitte having a role as trustee. Instead it wished to have Richter, a firm which had done extensive forensic investigation on its behalf in the CCAA proceedings, the investigation being essentially of document review but no interviews or examinations. The substitution of Richter as the trustee nominee was opposed by the remaining participants - Mr. Horton for the Rehabilitator, Mr. Zarnett for the Liquidator, Mr. Leonard for NOLA and Mr. Scott for Compcorp; they preferred that Dunwoody or Doane be the substitute since they submitted that Richter was not impartial in the bankruptcy proceedings given its involvement for the ALC Committee in the CCAA proceedings.
[3] The Rehabilitator has tabled a motion which obstensively was to be heard at the same time as this motion for an order:

> 1. Declaring that the bankruptcy of [Treasury] shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of the Protocol which is attached as Appendix A [to that motion record].
> 2. In the alternative, declaring that section 69.3(1) of [BIA] does not operate with respect to the [Rehabilitator's] claims against [Treasury] as set forth in the draft Statement of Claim attached as Appendix "B" [to that motion record] (the "Ontario Proceedings").
> 3. In the further alternative granting the [Rehabilitator] leave to issue and proceed in the Ontario Proceedings; and > 4. such further and other relief as to this Honourable Court seems just.

This motion was certainly premature since the stay had not been lifted for that purpose and it presupposed that the trustee in bankruptcy (once Treasury were declared bankrupt) would be preempted from this motion. I found this quite puzzling, especially since this matter had been previously informally canvassed and the same concerns expressed. This motion was adjourned to a more appropriate time once all interested parties had been canvassed. This overall battle amongst the stakeholders has been fought since the beginning of the CCAA proceedings some sixteen months ago. Despite this intimate, intensive and extensive involvement it was candidly volunteered by the Rehabilitator that the matter was complicated beyond any comprehension and that it could not be even described after all this time. Thus in the Michigan material there were claims advanced by the Rehabilitator on the basis of eleven separate (and distinct) grounds. It would not seem that the Rehabilitator is estopped from pleading in the alternative: see (Sharby v. N.R.S. Elgin Realty Ltd. (Trustee of) reflex, (1991), 3 O.R. (3d) 129 (Gen. Div.) at pp. 140-1), at least at this stage of the proceedings.
[4] I would also note that the estate is of the magnitude of some $630 million dollars, all of which except approximately $30 million dollars (plus or minus a very wide allowance) is in the form of "cash". Thus while the major percentage of the estate has been liquidated, it is clear that there is a sizeable absolute amount of the number of various types of assets to be gathered in, subject to of course assorted disputes. If this latter role were hived off, it would comprise a major bankruptcy estate by itself.
[5] It would appear that Richter, Dunwoody and Doane are willing to be considered as nominees. Deloitte has removed itself from the running, based upon its unfulfilled condition. Other firms are conflicted out.
[6] Perhaps it is the fact that
(a) the major stakeholders have been warring in a very negative sense for over a year.

Digitized by Google

(b) the potential losses for each are quite sizeable, in the hundreds of millions, when each with moral legitimacy looks upon their own "ultimate" situation as an innocent who has been mugged,
(c) there is a great deal of money ($630 million dollars odd) which may be recovered out of the estate.
(d) under certain scenarios it is conceivable that a stakeholder could obtain a benefit before the others and under other scenarios the stakeholder might be shut out from that estate.
(e) tactics may appear at first glance to give more relief (or inflict a negative relief upon the others) than strategies,
(f) stakeholders may be unsure of their comparative positions and interests despite ample opportunity to reflect upon same,
(g) some undisclosed factor(s) or
(h) a combination of some or all of the foregoing, which has resulted in all concerned attempting to introduce a lot of colour and atmosphere plus premature arguments into these proceedings. I would not think that helpful in the long run, neither for these proceedings in general nor for the interest of the stakeholders so advancing this tinged view of things and trying to set the stage for future battles. However on reflection I trust that counsel and their clients will appreciate that this is unproductive.
[7] The ALC Committee and specifically UBS appear to represent creditors of Treasury who loaned funds to Treasury in a commercial situation, taking the benefits of that loan together with its commercial risk. The other side may to some degree or other have claims against the $630 million dollars which may be in the nature of property or trust claim (or something similar) which I will hereafter describe as a proprietary claim which would take some or all of the $630 million dollars out of the estate (and thus away from the potential dividend to be shared amongst the creditors). There also seems to be the possibility of a claim which although a "creditor claim" within the estate is advanced on the basis that it should enjoy a priority and be paid out before the "ordinary" creditor claims, this priority not being of a temporal nature but rather of a preference nature. I think it fair to observe that the rights and entitlements advanced are not so clear cut that, at least at this stage, it would be inappropriate for any trustee to acquiesce and hand over the funds. Unless there is some compromise achieved, it is painfully obvious that there will be litigation. This litigation may be as to a dispute between the trustee and someone claiming that it has a proprietary right which takes assets out of the estate (see the comments of Goodman J.A. in R.J. Nicol Construction Ltd. (Trustee of) v. Nicol 1995 CanLII 1371 (ON CA), (1995), 30 C.B.R. (3d) 90 (Ont. C.A.) at p. 94 or it may be a dispute amongst creditors within the estate (see the views of Ferguson J.A. in Re Orzy (1923), 3 C.B.R. 737 (Ont. C.A.) at p. 741 and of Hodgins J.A. at p. 738) or a combination thereof. While the trustee would have an active role in the proprietary claim dispute, it would seem to me on a casual observation of the trustee's role in a dispute between creditors in the estate would primarily be that of a true stakeholder (i.e. in its "original" sense of someone who merely holds the stakes being wagered or fought over as opposed to the "modern" additional sense used by the participants here of someone who claims to have a stake in the outcome of these proceedings) and, as may possibly be required, ensure that the participants observe the rules of the game, even if only on a report basis to the court or by asking for advice and directions.
[8] In this regard and regard and generally the trustee is an officer of the court. As stated in Houlden and Morawetz, Bankruptcy Law in Canada (3rd ed. 1995) at pp. 1-61/2:

> The trustee is an officer of the court and should impartially represent the interests of creditors: Re Roy (1963), 4 C.B.R. (N.S.) 275 (Que. S.C.). He should act equitably and, as far as possible, hold an even hand between competing interests of various classes of creditors: Re Reed (1980), 34 C.B.R. (N.S.) 83, reversing 32 C.B.R. (N.S.) 203 (Ont. C.A.). In bringing proceedings, such as an application to set aside a fraudulent preference, he should not adopt an adversarial or hostile role: Touche Ross Ltd. v. Weldwood of Canada Sales Ltd. (1983), 48 C.B.R. (N.S.) 83, additional reasons at 49 C.B.R. (N.S.) 284 (Ont. S.C.). Rather, he should present the relevant facts to the court in a dispassionate, non-adversarial manner, and leave the matter to the court for decision.
> The trustee's obligation is to act for the benefit of the general body of creditors, not just the benefit of unsecured creditors. He must not, therefore, act in a manner which is prejudicial and unfair to the interests of secured creditors: Re Bell's Ltd.: Bank of Montreal v. Touche Ross Ltd., 60 C.B.R. (N.S.) 224, reflex, [1986] 4 W.W.R. 211, 48 Sask. R. 241 (Sask. Q.B.).
> A trustee in bankruptcy does not function as an agent of the creditors in the ordinary sense, but as an administrative official required by law to gather in and realize on the assets of the bankrupt, and then to divide the proceeds among those entitled thereto in accordance with the scheme set out in the Bankruptcy Act: Clarkson Co. v. Muir (1982), 43 C.B.R. (N.S.) 259, 53 N.S.R. (2d) 609, 109 A.P.R. 609 (C.A.).

[9] Mr. Barnes submitted that there were two issues before me – firstly that there was no legal impediment against Richter acting as trustee since there was nothing to prevent a person from becoming such merely because of an association of a nature such as here, where Richter has been acting as a forensic investigator for the ALC Committee (which includes representation of UBS) and secondly that Richter is an appropriate person to nominate (and appoint) in the circumstances.

[10] I would observe that Richter does not appear on the material before me to have a problem of possible disqualification pursuant to s. 13.3. of BIA. If there were any potential conflict of interest as set forth in that section, it should disclosed at the time of appointment and at the first meeting of creditors if it falls within s. 13.3(2).

[11] S. 43(9) BIA provides that:

> On a receiving order being made, the court shall appoint a licensed trustee as trustee of the property of the bankrupt, having regard, as far as the court deems just, to the wishes of the creditors.

S. 102(5) BIA states:

> The purpose of the first meeting of creditors shall be to consider the affairs of the bankrupt, to affirm the appointment of the trustee or substitute another in place thereof, to appoint inspectors and to give such directions to the trustee as the creditors may see fit with reference to the administration of the estate.

See also s. 14 and s. 14.04 of BIA. I did not find it helpful for Mr. Fogul to point out that Ontario could lead a move to appoint Richter as trustee at the first meeting of creditors if it were not so appointed as trustee upon the receiving order being made since such action would be, to my mind, quite inappropriate if I were to determine in this motion that Richter were for some reason "disqualified" in the circumstances.

[12] In Re Quinte Nurseries Ltd. (1982), 41 C.B.R. (N.S.) 156 (Ont. S.C.) at p. 160 Saunders J. observed:

> The choice of trustee is for the creditors and, in my opinion, the nominee of the petitioning creditor should be appointed pending the first meeting of creditors when the final determination will be made.

I would be of the view that Registrar Ferron's opening words in Re Batteries Included, Inc. (1987), 67 C.B.R. (N.S.) 123 (Ont. S.C.) at p. 123:

> The court is not bound to appoint a trustee named in the petition by the petitioning creditor, nor is the official receiver required to > appoint a trustee named by the debtor as the assignee in an assignment.

must be taken in context. In that case he went on to examine the various reasons why he appointed another trustee than the one nominated by the petitioning creditor (recognizing this was an interim appointment until the first meeting of creditors). He observed at p. 124:

> I chose to appoint Yale, Kline, Geary Limited as the trustee in place of Collins Barrow Limited, named in the petition for several reasons, none of which have anything to do with competency and integrity.
> In my opinion, in this instance Yale, with whom the debtor filed its assignment, is in a better position to administer the estate. That firm has already been involved in a watching brief for a secured creditor, and has a fairly extensive knowledge of the debtor company.
> In addition Yale has identified the company's assets and liabilities, and has in fact prepared a preliminary statement of affairs which accompanied the assignment. That work will not now have to be duplicated.
> Further, four creditors of the debtor have expressed a preference for Yale, I suppose because of the above factors, and their wishes should at least be given some standing in the matter.
> Finally, there is a suggestion that the debt owing to petitioning creditor is disputed. It seems to me that it would not be appropriate in these circumstances to appoint Collins Barrow Limited as trustee because of the potential for conflict.

This fits within the philosophy of Re Drash (1930) 38 O.W.N. 295 (C.A.) at p. 296. See also I. Caron Ltd. v. Robin Hood Mills Ltd. (1935), 17 C.B.R. 101 (Que. S.C.) at p. 102.

[13] Houlden J.A. for the court in Re Reed (1980), 34 C.B.R. (N.S.) 83 (Ont. C.A.) said at p. 86:

> ...Unless this inquiry is carried out, the credit union may be dealt with unfairly. A trustee in bankruptcy should act equitably and so far as possible hold an even hand between the competing interests of various classes of creditors. As James L.J. said in Re Condon; Ex parte James (1874), 9 Ch. App. 609 at 614 (L.JJ.):
> "I am of opinion that a trustee in bankruptcy is an officer of the Court. He has inquisitorial powers given him by the Court, and the Court regards him as its officer, and he is to hold money in his hands upon trust for its equitable distribution among the creditors."

See also my view in Re Rizzo Shoes (1989) Ltd. 1995 CanLII 7361 (ON SC), (1995), 29 C.B.R. (3d) 270 (Ont. Gen. Div. [Commercial List]) at pp. 277-8 including my observation:

I think it also fair to observe that in deciding whether or not the trustee has acted properly the court must be careful to judge the trustee's conduct in light of the circumstances as they existed at the time the trustee performed the act or made the decision: see Cocks v. Chapman, [1896] 2 Ch. 763 at 777 (C.A.).

[14] A trustee may be removed for cause: see Houlden and Morawetz, supra, at p. 1-52 where the authors observe:

Digitized by Google

"Cause" means misconduct, fraud, dishonesty, becoming bankrupt or otherwise incapable of acting as a trustee: Re Herman (1930), 11 C.B.R. 239 at 246. Cause is not, however, restricted to dishonest conduct; misconduct short of dishonesty is sufficient: Re Bryant Isard (1923), 4 C.B.R. 41, 24 O.W.N. 597 (S.C.).

Cause exists: (a) if there is conduct showing that it is no longer fit that a person should continue as trustee; (b) if there is a danger to the estate property; (c) if there is a want of reasonable fidelity; (d) if circumstances prevent the creditors from working in harmony with the trustee; (e) if the trustee cannot act impartially; (f) if there has been an excess of power by the trustee; (g) if there has been a lack of bona fides by the trustee; or (h) if there has been unreasonable conduct by the trustee in relation to the bankrupt estate. The main principle upon which the jurisdiction of the court is exercised in ordering the removal of the trustee, is the welfare of the creditors and of the bankrupt estate. The trustee must not undertake a duty and put himself in a position that is in conflict with his duty as trustee, or act in a manner that is inconsistent with that duty. If the trustee has placed himself in a position of conflict, he cannot continue as trustee; he must resign or be removed by the court; Re Commonwealth Investors Syndicate Ltd. (1986), 61 C.B.R. (N.S.) 147, 69 B.C.L.R. 346 (S.C.)', additional reasons at (1986), 62 C.B.R. (N.S.) 308 (B.C.S.C.). In the Commonwealth case, the trustee was removed because he had improperly delayed the winding up of the bankrupt estate for several years.

Even if a trustee is not dishonest, the court, if it is of the opinion that he has not acted in the best interests of creditors and that he cannot act in concord with the inspectors, may remove him and appoint a new trustee: Re Gauthier Lumber Ltd.; Vanasse Tire Ltd. v. Tardif (1960), 1 C.B.R. (N.S.) 127 (Que. S.C.).

Where a trustee wishes to be relieved of its duties as trustee in bankruptcy, the court can appoint a substitute under s. 14.04. "Cause", in s. 14.04, embraces a trustee who is incapable of acting for any reason: Re Philip's Manufacturing Ltd. 1992 CanLII 458 (BC SC), (1992), 16 C.B.R. (3d) 127 (B.C.S.C.). Where it would be difficult for a trustee to act impartially and impossible for it to sue itself, a substitute trustee will be appointed: Re Philip's Manufacturing Ltd., supra.

In Re Bryant, Isard & Co., supra, Fisher J. was quite caustic with his comments about the actions of the trustee, he said at p. 52 [C.B.R.]:

I find the trustee guilty of misconduct and abuse of his office in making these payments and retaining the cheques.

...

The trustee who is an officer of the Court, has no right to make free with creditors' moneys committed to his charge.

However he did not remove the trustee, although he sanctioned the trustee with making the estate good on the inappropriate payment and indicated that his order was without prejudice to the creditors removing the trustee. Fisher J. in doing so observed at p. 53:

The Court, on an application to remove a trustee for cause, exercises a judicial discretion. The sole question for me to determine in this case is whether there is in the evidence submitted, sufficient cause shewn that the trustee, J.L. Thorne, is unfit to be continued as trustee in the administration of this estate. The estate is a large one, with many important and complicated business problems to solve before the estate can be finally wound up, and while it is the duty of the Court to vindicate the law but in doing so to abstain if possible from injury to those who are vitally, and beneficially interested, to inflict a needless injury on them and vindicate some legal principle should be avoided. Here to transfer the administration of the estate would involve the necessity of a large additional expense, and delay. Therefore, notwithstanding my findings, I will not adopt the extreme course of removing the trustee from office for the following reasons:

(1) It would add to the great expense already incurred in this estate.

(2) The trustee is conversant with the estate, and is in a much better position than a new trustee would be in assisting the Crown authorities in the pending criminal proceedings against N.P. Bryant, and also in the civil actions awaiting trial; and

(3) The creditors at the meeting of December 4, 1922, and the inspectors at the meeting in May, 1923, were not in favour of removing the trustee, and counsel representing Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal creditors urged before me that it the wish of their clients that the trustee should not be removed, but if what has come to light on this application should lead the creditors to change their opinions they have power to do so under the Act. An authorized trustee, as I have pointed out, is an officer of the Court and must administer the estate in his charge in accordance with The Bankruptcy Act.

So to in appointing a trustee the Court is exercising a judicial discretion. No one should take too lightly the burdens and responsibility of securing such an appointment. The appointment is not a franchise to make money (although a trustee should be rewarded for its efforts on behalf of the estate) nor to favour one party or one side. The trustee is an impartial officer of the Court; woe be to it if it does not act impartially towards the creditors of the estate. Miquelon J. in Re Gauthier

Lumber Ltd. (1960), 1 C.B.R. (N.S.) 127 (Que. S.C.) said at pp. 135-6:

> On ne peut certes pas affirmer que l'intimé a été malhonnête. Par ailleurs, la Cour ne peut non plus dire qu'il a été un gérant impartial, chargé qu'il était par la loi, de protéger les intérêts de tous les créanciers. Les créanciers garantis sont généralement en état de se protéger et leurs intérêts sont assez souvent contraires à ceux des créanciers ordinaires. Ce sont ceux-ci que le syndic représénte d'abord et ils ont droit à ce que la conduite d'un syndic solt au-dessus de tout soupçon.

[15] McQuaid J. in Prince Edward Island v. Bank of Nova Scotia (1988), 70 C.B.R. (N.S.) 209 (P.E.I. T.D.) reversed on other grounds (1989), 77 C.B.R. (N.S.) 113 (P.E.I. C.A.) had concerns about the propriety of appointing a former privately appointed receiver-manager as trustee. His concerns would appear to be expressed as part of his decision in an obiter fashion when he said at p. 220:

> It is clear that, immediately upon his appointment, the trustee in bankruptcy is in full, complete and exclusive control of the bankrupt business and all of the assets thereof, to the total exclusion of the owner, operator or manager of the business. I think it may be said that those erstwhile functionaries, whatever their capacity might have been, become functus upon that appointment. This would clearly include any receiver-manager who might have been in place at the time of the bankruptcy.
> It is the duty of the trustee, who is an officer of the court, to represent impartially the interests of all creditors; he is obligated to hold an even hand as between competing classes of creditors; he must act for the benefit of the general body of creditors; he is not an agent of the creditors, but an administrative official required by law to gather in and realize on the assets of the bankrupt and to divide the proceeds in accordance with the scheme of the Bankruptcy Act among those entitled. And perhaps most importantly, he must conduct himself in such a manner as to avoid any conflict, real or perceived, between his interest and his duty.
> While it may not be incompatible with the scheme of the Bankruptcy Act, or, indeed, with the role of the trustee in bankruptcy, the propriety of appointing the former receiver-manager as trustee is a matter of serious import. The two functions are certainly incompatible, if not in actual conflict.
>
> As in this instance, the receiver-manager is, in fact, the nominee of the major creditor, put into place as the watchdog on behalf of that creditor, essentially to preserve and hopefully to realize upon the assets of the business for the benefit of that creditor albeit as the agent of the company. That is normal, prudent business practice, not to be criticized, and something which happens regularly in the world of commerce.
> On the other hand, the trustee, who is in actuality an officer of the court, rather than a single creditor's nominee, must represent all creditors, and ensure that conflicting interests are resolved equitably. He must not only act without interest or bias, but must be clearly perceived to be acting without interest or bias.
> That perception may be difficult to maintain when he who yesterday was the man of a single creditor must today act, and be seen to act, as the man of all creditors. (Emphasis added).

As seen by the emphasized words he recognizes that such an appointment may not be incompitable with the BIA or the role of a trustee. It would appear on a reading of the case that McQuaid J. was concerned about there were aspects in which as a receiver-manager representing the interests of a secured creditor the firm in question was not recognizing various aspects which it should have as trustee. For instance he states at pp. 221-2:

> ...It is inconceivable to me that Doane Raymond would not know that Doane Raymond was sitting on a cash deposit representing the assets of the firm whose bankruptcy it was administering.
> I find it equally difficult to believe that "the funds realized from the sale by the Receiver [i.e., the corporate entity of Doane Raymond] of the assets of Island Jewellers were paid to the Bank without the participation or consent of the Trustee in Bankruptcy [i.e., the corporate entity of Doane Raymond]". Is the local office that large that the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing?

[16] In Federal Trust Co. v. Frisina (1976), 20 O.R. (2d) 32 (S.C.) Galligan J. raised the question of perception or appearances as to a court appointed receiver-manager (i.e. one which was appointed by the court and not privately) when he observed at p. 35:

> Whatever may be required of a person whom a Court will appoint as receiver-manager of a property I think that such a person must be reasonably competent to perform the duties entrusted to him and must be disinterested and impartial so as to be able to deal with the rights of all persons with an interest in the property in a fair and even-handed manner. It ought to be remembered that a receiver-manager appointed by the Court under s. 19 of the Judicature Act, becomes an officer of the Court and is therefore very different from a person appointed manager by a mortgagee in possession. That person is simply the agent of the mortgagee.
> I think it follows that not only must the receiver-manager appointed by the Court be impartial, disinterested and able to deal with the rights of all interested parties in a fair and even-handed manner, but he ought to appear to have those qualities.

> A good part of the argument on the motion was taken up with a discussion of the relative competence of Geisel and Lousbury. If all else were equal, it would seem to me to be sensible to appoint that person whom the Court thought to be the more competent. In this case, it seems that both have sufficient competency to perform the duties of a receiver-manager, but because of the view I take of the case it is unnecessary for me to weigh the relative competence of them.
> The evidence discloses two facts that in my opinion seriously mar the appearance of impartiality and disinterestedness which I think Geisel ought to have if he is to be appointed the receiver-manager. I do not intend to cast aspersions upon him by suggesting that, in fact, he would not act impartially and be disinterested, but I do not think he ought to be appointed if circumstances exist which would raise in the mind of a reasonable and intelligent man a real apprehension that he lacked impartiality and disinterestedness.

However it is important to appreciate that the test here is of a reasonable and intelligent man, i.e. one who is objective and who has been informed of all material facts. However in that case it was determined that the receiver-manager in question, as an officer of the court would not pass muster on such an objective test since he had a close and direct business relationship with the second mortgagee applicant as he owed that trust company five million dollars and further that he owned a building which would be in direct competition for tenants with the building which was the subject of the receivership.

[17] Thus there would appear to be healthy objective reasons for scepticism about the impartiality appearances in both Federal Trust and Prince Edward Island, supra, based on actual financial competition and Federal Trust and the incapatibility of simultaneously being involved in several roles in Prince Edward Island.

[18] I think it instructive to read Tannis Trading Inc. v. Camco Food Services Ltd. (Trustee of) (1988), 67 C.B.R. (N.S.) 1 (Ont. S.C.) in conjunction with Dr. Morawetz's annotation found at pp. 2-3 of that report. In that case CCL was an audit client of the trustee's organization, which was found to be "an important and valued relationship" (p. 6). At that same page it was determined that "the claims [of the estate] against CCL... are crucial to the administration of the estate". Saunders J. went on to say at pp. 6-7:

> It appears that the trustee and the inspectors feel that the trustee has acted impartially and will continue to do so. It is likely that such will be the case. That, however, is not the test. In a situation such as this, the court must consider from an objective point of view whether it would be difficult for the trustee to act with impartiality: see Re Shaw Co., 16 Sask. L.R. 275, 3 C.B.R. 198, reflex, [1922] 3 W.W.R. 119, 68 D.L.R. 616 (K.B.). In my opinion, the answer in this particular case is clearly in the affirmative. The trustee is, in effect, suing its > own client. On the particular facts, I am of the opinion that there is a potential for a conflict of interest and, perhaps more importantly, there is an appearance of conflict. An unsecured creditor seeks the removal of the trustee. There is no suggestion that the request is not bona fide. In my opinion, in the special circumstances of this case, the trustee ought to stand aside or be replaced.

Dr. Morawetz observed at pp. 2-3:

> In ordering that the trustee should be removed, the court relied on the judgment of the Saskatchewan Court of King's Bench in the case of Re Shaw Co., 16 Sask. L.R. 275, 3 C.B.R. 198, reflex, [1922] 3 W.W.R. 119, 68 D.L.R. 616, which in turn, relied on the English case of Re Lamb, [1894] 2 Q.B. 805, 64 L.J.Q.B. 71 at 74 (C.A.), and held that the court must consider from an objective point of view whether it would be difficult for the trustee to act with impartiality. The court was of the opinion, that there was a potential for a conflict of interest and, perhaps more importantly, there was an appearance of conflict.
> The judgment in the Shaw Co. case is very short, and no reference was made to one of the leading Ontario cases, Re Bryant, Isard & Co.; Ex parte Higginson (1923), 24 O.W.N. 597, 4 C.B.R. 41 (S.C.). In that case the court considered the removal of a trustee from office to be an extreme course and refused to remove the trustee because: it would add to the great expense already incurred in the estate; a new trustee would not be as conversant with the estate as the present trustee; and neither the inspectors nor the creditors were in favour of removing the trustee. Although in the Bryant, Isard case the court did not remove the trustee, the order was made without prejudice to the rights of the creditors to remove the trustee and appoint another in its place if so advised.

See also Re Ethier reflex, (1991), 7 C.B.R. (3d) 268 (Ont. Bktcy.) at p. 273.

[19] In Shaw, supra, it should be noted at p. 199 that the trustee had as some (material) shareholders (and a director) persons who were making large claims in the estate of the bankrupt company. As for Lamb, supra, the trustee was a creditor of two estates which were in competition with each other as to ownership of the only asset of value as A.L. Smith L.J. said at pp. 820-1:

> Now, what is the salient point in this case? If a man has a pecuniary interest in the success of one estate which is the creditor of another estate, and he has no pecuniary interest in the success of the other estate, and he is called upon to act for both, it seems to me that a prima facie case is made out that he is placed in a difficulty as regards > acting with impartiality between the two. It is obvious–everybody knows it who has any knowledge of life–that when a man has a pecuniary interest, his mind is naturally warped in favour of his own interest. It is human nature, and no one can doubt it. Beyond all question Mr. Gregson has a pecuniary interest as a creditor to the amount of 3,000*l.* in the success of Emerson's estate. As regards Lamb's estate he as a creditor has a pecuniary interest of only 400*l.*, and it is said that Emerson's estate is a creditor of Lamb's estate. Standing in this position between the two estates, can it be said with truth that Mr. Gregson's connection with Emerson's estate is not such as to make it difficult for him to act with impartiality towards Lamb's creditors? This is the real question, and that question my brother Vaughan Williams did not put to himself. If he had done so, I think he would have answered it in the same way as I am now doing. We are not suggesting that Mr. Gregson is not a gentleman of probity - not a word has been said about that - but the question is, whether upon the facts of the case the objection of the Board of Trade to his appointment as trustee of Lamb's estate was a valid objection. In my judgment it was.

[20] I think it instructive to recall what Cave J. said in Re Martin (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 29 at p. 33:

> The objection which is taken here is the third of those objections, namely, that the connection of this trustee with, or his relation to, the bankrupt or his estate makes it difficult for him to act with impartiality in the interests of the creditors generally. It is not easy to lay down any general rule, and indeed it is a question of fact with regard to which it is, to my mind, impossible to lay down any accurate general rule. Every case must depend more or less upon its circumstances, and, having regard to the expressions in the Act, one must see whether the facts are such as to lead to the conclusion that the trustee's connection with or relation to the bankrupt or his estate makes it difficult for him to act with impartiality.

[21] Is there such a problem for Richter in these circumstances? I think not if one looks at the situation well informed and objectively. As Tysoe J. in Re Western Canada Beverage Corp. reflex, (1993), 22 C.B.R. (3d) 10 (B.C. S.C.) stated at p. 18:

> ...It has become fashionable to allege conflicts of interest but the Court will not act out of fashion.

It should almost go without saying (and would not be said but for the unfortunate wrangling history of this case) that once Richter were appointed trustee it bears allegiance to the creditors of the estate as an officer of the Court. It is not beholden to any of the creditors on an individual (or segregated) basis and certainly not to UBS, Ontario or the ALC Committee. Its loyalty is to the creditors as they are found–be it UBS, Ontario, other creditors represented by the ALC Committee, the Rehabilitator or Liquidator–as a collective group. So long as it does so then it will not have a problem with impartiality or conflict of interest.

[22] NOLA submitted in its factum that it recommends the appointment of an independent, impartial trustee, citing at p. 6 thereof:

> See 11 U.S.C. s 101(14) (E). In re Micro-Time Management Systems Inc., 102 B.R. 602 (Bankr. E.D.Mich. 1989) (Bankruptcy trustee held disqualified because of professional relationship with and consultant work for a major creditor of estate); In re Envirodyne Industries Inc. 150 B.R. 1008, 1019 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1993) ("The key issue is whether the [allegedly disinterested] firm's interest in maintaining the client relationship with Salomon, the substantial party-in-interest, could impair the firm's ability to act with impartiality, even unconscious impartiality.")

This was responded to by American counsel (Chaim Fortgang) for the ALC Committee who faxed a submission as follows:

> In ¶17 of the factum of [NOLA], counsel cites two U.S. Cases for the proposition that under U.S. Law, representation of a creditors' Committee would be a basis to disqualify a professional from acting as trustee or as a professional for a trustee. The cases cited do not so hold at all. They stand for the proposition that prior representation of a target in a potential litigation against the target would disqualify a professional from acting on behalf of the estate, because he could not be expected to vigorously pursue a former client. The law in the U.S. clearly permits counsel for a creditors' committee to become counsel to a Trustee after the creditors' committee has been disbanded.
> In a case remarkably similar to the instant situation a contested secured claimant objected to counsel for the creditors' committee functioning as counsel for the trustee. It was alleged inter alia, by the contested secured creditor, that counsel for the creditors' committee advised against a settlement of litigation involving subordinating the claim of the secured creditor proposed by the secured creditor and thus was not disinterested.
> The court noted that disqualification motions are often used for purely tactical reasons and the impending conflict between the secured creditor and counsel was not a basis for disqualifying counsel for the trustee.
> The objecting party argued that the bankruptcy Code intended to disqualify any person who in the slightest degree had some interest or relationship that would color the independent and impartial attitude required by the Code. Thus counsel should be disqualified. The court disagreed and said "It is clear that a law firm's prior representation > of a Creditors' committee does not disqualify it from representing a trustee in bankruptcy." In a REA Holding Corporation 4 BCD 1249 (Bkptcy S.D.N.Y. 1979). In re W.T. Grant 4 B.R. (53 Bkptcy S.D.N.Y. 1980).

> The Court further observed "Indeed, their previous familiarity with this case through their preparations on behalf of the creditors' committee will station this firm in a position where further delay and expense should be eliminated which might otherwise have been incurred if another law firm were brought into this case by the trustee to investigate the underlying events and transactions."
> Counsel to NOLA apparently does not appreciate the distinction between having represented an individual creditor with an adverse interest which may be a basis for disqualification and having represented a creditors' committee (which is the estate) which can not be a basis for disqualification.

[23] I have a number of varying observations concerning these submissions. While I appreciate that there are foreign elements in this matter, including American elements, what we have here is the nomination and appointment of a trustee for a bankrupt estate in Canada pursuant to BIA. That process if governed by Canadian law and a Canadian statute. That is not to say that judges of our court are chauvinistic or xenophobic. To the contrary, we will consider foreign jurisprudence in context and specifically where there appears to be a gap in our jurisprudence. As I said however in another case: Re Cadillac Fairview, unreported, released Feb. 9, 1995 at p. 7 for somewhat different purposes:

> Recognizing that this is a CCAA proceeding which will be governed by Canadian law, perhaps it would be highly desirable for Canadian counsel for all stakeholders to ensure that their clients (and their non-Canadian counsel) appreciate some of the differences between our reorganization law and procedures and that with which they may be more familiar.

When I speak of taking foreign cases in context, one of the most obvious aspects is to consider whether foreign statute law is substantially different in essential elements. However it may be appropriate, keeping in mind that the U.S. legislation has a detailed overwhelming impact on these American cases to review how that jurisdiction views potential conflict situations.

[24] Further I would observe that it is unfortunate that it was left up to this court to determine that REA, supra, had been ruled upon by the U.S. District Court (S.D.N.Y.) on January 14, 1980 (2 B.R. 733) and the case remanded back to the Bankruptcy Court for reconsideration (as to which see Bankr. L.Rep. (CCH) P67 483, 22 Collier Bankr. Cas. (MB) 1051 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1980)). However it appears to me that this appellate decision was based upon a question of failure to disclose potential conflict of interest and not upon the fact of co-counsel's prior involvement with the creditors' committee in superseded chapter XI proceedings which had been found by the Bankruptcy Court not to conflict with its present role in the bankruptcy proceedings. The prior involvement with that creditors' committee did not appear to trouble the appellate court. As Galgay J. (the bankruptcy judge) said at p. 1253:

> The law firm served as counsel to the Official Creditors' Committee during the REA Chapter XI proceeding but at no point in the REA > proceeding did Whitman & Ransom represent any particular railroad or airline. The role of counsel to an official creditors' committee is not adverse to or in conflict with the role of counsel to a bankruptcy trustee if liquidation should subsequently ensue.

[25] In Grant, supra, decided a month after the release of the appellate decision in REA, Galgay J. said at pp. 82-3:

> ...It is also asserted that WGM's role as co-counsel to the Chapter XI Creditors' Committee constitutes a disqualification factor.
> [34] This Court recently had the opportunity to review the factors to be considered in entertaining a motion to disqualify attorneys for a trustee in In re REA Holding Corp., 4 Bankr.Ct.Dec. 1249 (S.D.N.Y. 1979). The disqualification of both a trustee and his co-counsel was sought upon alleged conflicts of interest which prevented them from adequately representing the interests of the bankrupt estate. Among the alleged conflicts cited was the fact that the counsel for the trustee had represented the Creditors' Committee during the Chapter XI case that preceded an adjudication in bankruptcy and the retention of such counsel by the trustee. In considering that motion I was guided by the teachings of Ernie Industries, Inc. V. Patentex, Inc., 478 F.2d 562 (2d Cir. 1973). Ernie admonishes courts to recognize their "responsibility to preserve a balance, delicate though it may be, between an individual's right to his own freely chosen counsel and the need to maintain the highest ethical standards of professional responsibility." 4 Bankr.Ct.Dec. at 1253 (citation omitted). Additionally, I noted the difficulties involved in evaluating the claims asserted in the perspective of the guidelines provided by United States v. Standard Oil Company, 136 F.Supp. 345, 367 (S.D.N.Y. 1955), which states:
> When dealing with ethical principles, it is apparent that we cannot paint with broad strokes. The lines are fine and must be so marked. Guideposts can be established when virgin ground is being explored, and the conclusion in a particular case can be reached only after painstaking analysis of the facts of precise application of precedent.

> I concluded and reaffirm that "(t)he role of counsel to an official creditors' committee is not adverse to or in conflict with the role of counsel to a bankruptcy trustee if liquidation should subsequently ensue." 4 Bankr.Ct.Dec. at 1253.

In the appeal decision of Re W.T. Grant Co. 1, 699 F.2d 599 (2d. Cir. N.Y. 1983) Friendly J. in dismissing the appeal said at p. 613:

> We see no reason to disagree with Judge Galgay's reaffirmation, 4 B.R. at 83, of his conclusion in In re REA Holding Corp., 4 Bankr.Ct.Dec. 1249, 1253 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1979), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 2 B.R. 733 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), that "[t]he role of counsel to an official creditors' committee is not adverse to or in conflict with the role of counsel to a bankruptcy trustee if liquidation should subsequently ensue." WGM's previous representation of one or more of the banks or their subsidiaries in unrelated matters is scarcely a ground for disqualification. There is no contention that WGM regularly served any of the banks in bankruptcy cases, and their having done so in one or more unrelated cases would not prevent a vigorous assertion of the claims of the subordinated debentureholders against the banks. On an issue of this sort particular weight should be given to the conclusion of the Bankruptcy Judge, who had abundant opportunities to observe the activities of WGM over many months and concluded "that the Trustee's attorneys have served him and the creditors of the bankrupt estate with vigor, objectivity and independence."

[26] I think it appropriate to take a look at the fact situations in Micro-Time and Envirodyne, supra. In both there would appear to be a problem with ongoing relationships of significance with creditors who may be adverse in interest to the bankrupt estate. In Envirodyne at pp. 1018-9 Schwartz C.J. said:

> ...Judge Schmetterer based the American Printers decision, in part, on the reasoning in In re Amdura Corp., 121 B.R. 862 (Bankr.D.Colo. 1990). In Amdura, a firm seeking to be employed as debtor's counsel represented the debtor's primary secured lender on an ongoing basis in matters unrelated to the bankruptcy case. The debtor commenced the bankruptcy case as result of its inability to reach an accommodation with the lender. A partner of the firm testified that other counsel would have to be employed to investigate and prosecute a potential suit against the lender because the firm would not "bite the hand that feeds it." In re Amdura, 121 B.R. at 867. During the February 10 hearing, Mr. Millstein argued that the facts in this case do not justify disqualifying Cleary, Gottlieb because, unlike the creditor in Amdura, Salomon is not the primary secured creditor in this case. Mr. Millstein apparently believes that the relative size of the creditor's claim vis-a-vis the estate's total debt is necessarily relevant to whether Debtors' counsel may continue to maintain a relationship with that creditor without violating the tests of Sec. 327(a).
> Counsel's argument is not persuasive. The key issue is whether the firm's interest in maintaining the client relationship with Salomon, a substantial party-in-interest, could impair the firm's ability to act with impartiality, even unconscious impartiality. The Amdura opinion correctly focuses on the law firm's ability to act impartially as the debtor's representative in all matters. The court in Amdura does not consider the relative size of the creditor's claim in a vacuum, but in conjunction with the creditor's status as a major client of the firm. Amdura, 121. B.R. at 869.
> The court must remain cognizant of the fact that Salomon is an insider, a 64% owner, and a substantial creditor of the Debtor Envirodyne. The negotiation of a plan of reorganization likely will necessitate negotiation with Salomon, a "substantial client" of
> Cleary, Gottlieb. Given these facts in this case, the Debtors' interests and the interests of the creditor body as a whole are not best represented at a negotiation table by a lawyer who faces a substantial client on the other side. (FN 14)

[27] In Micro-Time Rhodes J. stated at pp. 607-8:

> [4] The facts in this case are essentially the same as those in In re Gray, 64 B.R. 505 (Bankr.E.D.Mich.1986). Although the trustee and the accountants for the trustee are not prepetition creditors of the estate, Bohl's work for Comerica does present a potential, if not an actual, conflict of interest. Comerica was a major creditor of Micro-Time. The amount of its debt was very strongly disputed and there had been an adverse relationship between the principal of the debtor (Kirkland) and Comerica. When the trustee was appointed, it was clear that a successful resolution of Micro-Time's dispute with Comerica would be a necessary prerequisite to any successful chapter 11 reorganization of Micro-Time. Any hint of any prior or ongoing relationship between Comerica and Bohl would create at least the appearance of impropriety. This is sufficient under the case law and section 101(13) to disqualify John C. Bohl, Jr. as trustee and Parker, Bohl & Associates as accountants for the trustee.
> Like the accounting firm in Gray, Bohl did not disclose his potentially disqualifying relationship with Comerica in either the trustee's declaration of disinterest or in the affidavit he submitted when he applied for approval to appoint Parker, Bohl & Associates as accountants for the trustee. Instead, Bohl swore in his affidavit that "To the best of my knowledge neither our firm nor any member thereof... holds any interest adverse to the matters upon which we are to be engaged. Neither I nor any member of my firm has any relationship or interest in the above named debtor or any other parties of interest therein." These statements were false; Bohl had an ongoing relationship with Comerica.

Micro-Time and Envirodyne illustrate quite different concerns than the situation prevailing here. There is no suggestion of an ongoing relationship with the ALC Committee side which would possibly influence Richter from its neutral, impartial role as trustee, acting in the best interests of the estate.

[28] Thus given that Richter is the preference of the petitioning creditor (and of the ALC Committee which appears to represent apparently unchallenged major creditors); it has the advantage of being quite familiar with and knowledgeable of the situation from its prior involvement as forensic investigator; the proprietary claims have been acknowledged as complex and difficult to describe; those advancing proprietary claims have had the advantage of advice from their own forensic investigators; it does not appear on the material before me that Richter has any ongoing relationship with any creditor and particularly not with any creditor or claimant which may have an adverse position to the estate, it would not seem to me appropriate to disqualify Richter as the nominee for trustee in place of Deloitte in the petition by UBS, but rather it would seem that Richter was adequately qualified to act as trustee. This result would avoid the estate taking a significant period of time to catch up with potential slippage exposure if the litigation heats up quickly and a duplication of expense for another firm to come to the same position as Richter now is on the learning curve. On a practical basis, given what is at stake in relation to the funds already expended as as to Richter's investigation, I do not see this duplication as a major factor but certainly it is a reasonable factor to consider. To their credit the Rehabilitator and the Liquidator have acknowledged that they in essence expect a fair fight in the proprietary claim situation against a trustee which is adequately and well prepared; they were not opposing Richter on the basis of knocking out a worthy opponent. The Liquidator had no concern about Richter being hired as a consultant by any trustee; I understand the Rehabilitator's attitude to have been the same. They were concerned, I take it, that Richter was beholden to the ALC Committee and the creditors it represented. As discussed, that relationship is at an end and Richter must be indifferent to all creditors, whomsoever they may be. Certainly this aspect of neutrality must be demonstrated throughout the trusteeship, including any s. 163 examinations.

[29] In the result I see no impediment to Richter replacing Deloitte as the nominee for trustee in the UBS petition order accordingly.

[30] As a postscript I would observe that my secretary and the manager of the Commercial List/Bankruptcy Office were bombarded with calls yesterday and today as to when my decision was going to be released and why it had not been then released. Counsel have advised that they had not done so. It may be that these enquiries were made by persons who were trading in or arbitraging claims. Such behaviour is not only inappropriate, but also counterproductive (looking at their self interest of having the decision as early as possible).

Motion granted.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT
LÉTOURNEAU J.A.
ISSUES

[1] The appellants are challenging a decision by Madam Justice Tremblay-Lamer of the Federal Court (judge) dated November 10, 2004. They raised three grounds for appeal including one regarding the judge's refusal to hear a motion for her disqualification. They wisely withdrew this ground of appeal at the hearing.

Digitized by Google

[2] At the hearing, the two issues that we accepted and regarding which we invited counsel to submit their arguments, are the following:

(a) Did the appellants have the right to be heard before conservatory measures were taken with respect to the estate managed by the appellants pursuant to section 14.03 of the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (Act), such that there was a breach of procedural fairness?

(b) Was there a rational connection between the facts giving rise to the decision to use conservatory measures and the conservatory measure directing the official receiver not to appoint the appellants to administer any new ordinary administration estates until further notice or until a decision had been made under section 14.01 of the Act?

[Emphasis added.]

[3] The appellants state that, in the absence of a rational connection, the measure was legally unfounded and is therefore void because it breaches section 14.03 of the Act and paragraphs 18.1(3)(b) and 4(a), (c) and (f) of the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7.

[4] I refer to the provisions of the Act as well as the directions on conservatory measures relevant to the resolution of the dispute:

Directions for Conservatory Measures

(section 14.03 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act)

WHEREAS the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (the Act) provides the Superintendent of Bankruptcy with the general power to supervise the administration of all estates and matters to which the Act applies;

WHEREAS the exercise of the powers of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy set out in paragraph 5(3)e) of the Act revealed that the trustees have an abnormally high number of files that have been open more than three years;

WHEREAS the trustees are also the subject of an investigation under the provisions of section 14.01 of the Act;

WHEREAS on August 5, 2003 a letter was sent to the trustees giving them 15 business days in which to submit an acceptable closing plan intended, among other things, to reduce to 10% of their inventory the percentage of summary administration files open for more than 36 months and to 40% of their inventory the number of ordinary administration files open for more than 36 months, or to provide the Superintendent of Bankruptcy with a satisfactory explanation as to why the number of files older than three years exceeds these levels;

WHEREAS despite repeated requests, the trustees did not submit, within the prescribed time, a detailed closing plan in compliance with the requirements of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy;

WHEREAS the trustees effectively refused to submit a detailed closing plan, submitting only a plan that does not accord any priority to the oldest files, nor to those with large bank balances, and which plan does not even set time lines for the various stages of closing, the trustees in question instead chose to challenge the authority of the Office of the Superintendent to require such a closing plan;

WHEREAS moreover the trustees did not even respect their own closing plan, which had not, for the reasons set out above, been accepted by the Office of the Superintendent;

WHEREAS the trustees lacked diligence in closing their files, of which the number of ordinary administration estate files open for more than three years, as of February 3, 2004, was 69 administered by the corporate trustee and Bruno Marchand (99% of his total inventory of ordinary administration files), and 133 by the corporate trustee and Georges E. Marchand, 35 of which were under the personal licence of Georges E. Marchand (98% of his total inventory of ordinary administration files);

WHEREAS some of these estates contain large sums of money which the trustees are not distributing to the creditors;

WHEREAS the trustees' conduct is prejudicial to the creditors, who are being subjected to undue delays in the payment of their dividends;

WHEREAS the trustees refuse or neglect to complete the administration of these files, and in so doing, are not rendering their accounts as required by the Act;

WHEREAS it is not permissible for a fiduciary, such as a bankruptcy trustee, to refuse or neglect to account for his administration;

WHEREAS the Superintendent of Bankruptcy has reasonable grounds to believe that the estate files require protection and that the administration of these files should be completed as soon as possible;

WHEREAS the Superintendent of Bankruptcy may, in order to protect estates, exercise the powers set out in subsection 14.03(1) of the Act, under the circumstances anticipated in subsection 14.03(2) of the Act;

WHEREAS the Superintendent of Bankruptcy has delegated to the undersigned, in accordance with subsection 14.01(2) of the Act, in certain situations mentioned in subsection 14.03(2), the Superintendent's powers as specified at subsection 14.03 (1) of the Act, copies of which delegation are attached, along with copies of subsections 14.01(2) and 14.03(1) to (4) of the Act;

WHEREAS subsections 14.03(1)a) and b) and (2)b) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act apply;

I, the undersigned, Sylvie Laperrière, in my capacity as Senior Analyst, Professional Conduct, direct:

The Official Receiver to not appoint Bruno Marchand, Georges E. Marchand and Marchand Syndics Inc. to administer any new ordinary administration estates;

These directions take effect immediately and will stay in place until further notice or until a decision is rendered under section 14.01 of the Act.

In accordance with subsection 14.03(3) of the Act, these directions bind their addressees, who must comply with them;

In accordance with subsection 14.03(4) of the Act, a person who complies with these directions is not liable for any act done by the person only to comply with them.

[5] I have not referred to the provisions relied on from the Federal Courts Act because they are not necessary to the resolution of the dispute.

[6] Some background is required regarding the issuance of this conservatory measure, which was not the only one. Others were issued, withdrawing the appellants' administration of 48 files and entrusting them to the official receiver to ensure their conservation, and then to an agent of the Office of the Superintendent for Bankruptcy, for their administration and settlement: see the appeal book, volumes 5 and 6, pages 969 to 972 and 997 to 1,000.

THE FACTS AND THE PROCEDURE

[7] The judge properly summarized the factual background of this case and the circumstances leading ultimately to the issuance of the conservatory measures. We need not review all of them even though they are very informative and enlightening in regard to the appellants' conduct. I will simply refer to paragraphs 2 to 5, 7 to 23 and 28 to 31 of her decision.

> [2] The applicants were the subject of a number of reports of the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy (OSB) for more than a decade because their administration displayed some chronic deficiencies in the time taken to close files. An audit report in January 1992 indicated, for example, that a file opened in February 1973 had never been closed. In February 2004, this file was still open and the monies had still not been distributed to the creditors, when the balance of the trust account in this case amounted to $575,505.30.
> [3] That may represent the most extreme case, but other supervision and audit reports, in October 2000 and March 2003, indicate the same problems.
> [4] Seven agreements in relation to closure plans were developed during the period from 1993 to 2001 by the OSB in collaboration with the applicants under which they would proceed to close their files that were more than three years old. Only one of these seven plans (the 1996 one) was implemented by the applicants.
> [5] Moreover, during this period, many creditors complained about the slowness with which the applicants were completing the administration of their file and a number of judgments of the Superior Court of Quebec denounced their negligence.

> [7] In July 2003, the OSB began the Initiative for the Orderly and Timely Administration of Insolvency Estates (IAPO) throughout the country. Pursuant to paragraph 5(3)(e) of the Act, the OSB conducted a general investigation to identify all the trustees in Canada who had not managed to close their files in less than three years at an acceptable level. To be identified by this program, the ordinary administration files dating back more than three years had to make up more than 60% of the trustee's inventory, and summary administration files had to make up more than 15%.
> [8] The goal of the IAPO was to lower these levels to less than 40% and 10% respectively. Ninety-nine trustees were identified in this investigation, and the applicants were included in this group.
> [9] On August 5, 2003, Ms. Lorraine Provost, the OSB representative, wrote to the 99 trustees who had been identified urging them to provide, within 15 business days, a closure plan acceptable to the OSB and to demonstrate regular progress throughout the year. The monthly reports were to list, at minimum, the files closed in the preceding month and the files that would be closed in the current month, as well as provide any further information concerning the status of the other files that were to be closed under the plan. She explained that the OSB considered a file to be closed only when the trustee obtained his or her discharge, and not earlier.
> [10] In the letter she sent to the applicants, she noted that 94.29% of the ordinary files and 57.76% of the summary files of Georges Marchand, and 97.70% of the ordinary files and 62.63% of the summary files of Bruno Marchand had been open for more than three years.
> [11] The applicants and all the other trustees identified in the IAPO program were also informed that failure to produce the documents or comply with the requests for a closure plan acceptable to the OSB within the time allotted would expose them to conservatory measures under section 14.03 of the Act.
> [12] On August 26, 2003, the applicants submitted to the OSB a table in which they indicated the number of files they planned to close for each of the following four quarters commencing September 1, 2003.
> [13] The exchange of correspondence between the parties during this period is crucial, since it is at the heart of the litigation. It is important, therefore, to relate its content in some detail.

[14] On September 4, 2003, Mr. Georges Marchand sent a letter to Mr. François Leblanc of the OSB in which he stated that he had understood that the closure plan was to be more detailed, and further details were provided on September 8, 2003.

[15] In a letter sent on the same date, Ms. Provost explained that the suggested plan was not acceptable. To be acceptable, the plan had to indicate:

- the number of summary administration files of more than three years for which receipts and disbursements returns would be produced;

- the number of summary administration files of more than three years for which the trustee's discharge would be obtained;

- the number of ordinary administration files of more than three years for which receipts and disbursements returns would be produced;

- the number of ordinary administration files of more than three years for which the trustee's discharge would be obtained.

[16] The OSB also asked that the applicants supply a detailed list of the files that were to be closed within the next quarter.

[17] In a letter dated September 10, 2003, the applicants asked the OSB for clarifications as to all of the comments exchanged in the letter of August 5, 2003, and more particularly the reference to section 14.03 of the Act. The applicants further explained that in their opinion the decision of the Superior Court in Abderrazik (Syndic de), [2002] J.Q. No. 2241 (S.C.) (QL), the OSB did not have authority to demand a detailed list of the files to be closed.

[18] On September 19, 2003, in reply to this letter, Ms. Provost informed the applicants that the plan submitted was not accepted by the OSB. She explained that the expression [translation] "the files closed" meant that the OSB would receive, before the deadline, a document showing that the trustee had been discharged, i.e. the certificate of compliance or order of discharge.

[19] On September 25, 2003, the applicants' counsel wrote a further letter to Ms. Provost. He repeated that the plan submitted was acceptable and that the request for a detailed list went beyond the OSB's administrative authority. He suggested a meeting within 90 days, should that prove necessary, to discuss this matter.

[20] In a letter dated October 24, 2003, the OSB counsel again notified the applicants that the plan submitted was not acceptable and requested a written undertaking to close on a priority basis files dating back ten years or more with a bank balance of $25,000 or more, that is, a total of 17 ordinary administration files, a list of which was provided to them.

[21] On October 31, 2003, the applicant's counsel replied to the letter of October 24, 2003, providing some figures in respect of the closure of files and objectives to be achieved within the period in question. He suggested a meeting in early January 2004 to describe and review the efforts made for that purpose over a represented period of several months.

[22] On November 7, 2003, the OSB counsel stated that the case was very serious. He said that the OSB request in relation to the file closure plan remained unchanged.

[23] That same day, the applicant's counsel renewed his request for a meeting in early January 2004 and asked once again what statutory authority the OSB had to demand a sequential order of closure of the files.

[28] He also mentioned that the process of closing a bankruptcy file is subject to some delays over which the trustee has no control. That is why the IAPO program normally gives the trustees 12 months in which to present their evidence. It was not fair that the respondent was suggesting the imposition of conservatory measures after only six months. The applicants were available to discuss the actual and meaningful progress in the closure process and thereby to avoid conservatory measures being taken.

[29] It was at that point, in view of the repeated refusal of the applicants to comply with the OSB requirements, that the respondent's decision to impose two series of conservatory > measures directions crystallized. These measures were taken only in regard to the 48 files with large bank balances ($10,000 or more) since those are the files that are likely to produce a dividend for the creditor.

> [30] The first series, which took effect on February 10, 2004, provided:
> - that 48 active ordinary administration files opened for several years would be withdrawn from the applicants until the official receiver wound up their administration or a custodial trustee was appointed for that purpose; and
> - that the applicants could not be assigned any new ordinary administration files by the official receiver.
> [31] The second series, issued on February 24, 2004, resulted in the firm of H.H. Davis& Associés Inc. being instructed to wind up the administration of the 48 files withdrawn from the applicants.

[8] As the judge states, the Office of the Superintendent did not take the conservatory measures capriciously. They were taken following a history of inexcusable delays sanctioned by the Court: see Société Chapichou Inc., Georges Marchand et Procureur général du Canada, S.C. No. 500-11-002944-862, March 16, 1995, where the judge determined that there was no valid excuse for the trustee's failure to finalize the matter and that the trustee was solely responsible for the delays described as unacceptable; Dubois (Re), [1995] A.Q. No. 1684, where the judge stated that it seemed difficult to justify prolonging the management of a small estate for eight years; Benchaya et Marchand Syndics Inc. et Surintendant des Faillites, S.C. No. 500-11-006335-976, January 17, 2000; Benchaya et Marchand Syndics Inc., S.C. No. 500-11-006335-976, July 6, 2000, where the trustee, in the same matter, was fined $1,000 for contempt of court because he refused to obey an order of the Superior Court directing him to pay the debtor the amount of $5,157.92; Blais et Marchand Syndics Inc. et Surintendant des Faillites, S.C. No. 405-11-000158-897, January 15, 2003, where Sénécal J. determined that there was no justification for the matter to have dragged on for 10 years.

[9] The appellants challenged the validity of these measures before both the Superior Court of Québec and the Federal Court on practically the same basis, however without elaborating the argument of unconstitutionality based on paragraph 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights in their written memorandum before us. They were successful in the Superior Court: see Marchand Syndics Inc. v. Procureur général du Canada et H.H. Davis et associés Inc., 2005 CanLII 27120 (QC CS), [2005] R.J.Q. 2094. The Superior Court declared that paragraphs 14.03(1)(a) and (d) of the Act were inoperative because they were inconsistent with paragraphs 1(a) and 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. The respondents appealed and the matter is now pending before the Court of Appeal of Québec.

[10] By contrast, the Federal Court dismissed the appellants' arguments accepted by the Superior Court of Québec. Hence the appeal before us by Marchand Syndics Inc. as well as the trustees Georges and Bruno Marchand.

[11] On appeal before us, I must say that the appellants were in no rush to move their case forward. On July 15, 2005, the Court awarded them an extension of time to file a reply to a motion to dismiss their appeal for failing to proceed diligently, without costs: see docket A-658-04, order dated July 15, 2005. In a decision dated August 25, 2005, the Court observed that more than eight months had elapsed since the motion had been filed and that the appellant had not taken any steps to advance the matter. The Court nevertheless dismissed the motion to dismiss the appeal, but ordered the appellants to pay $1,000 in costs, payable immediately: see docket A-658-04, order dated August 25, 2005.

[12] Finally, on July 18, 2006, the Court dismissed an unfounded application by the appellants to suspend the hearing of this appeal. It ordered them to pay $1,500 in costs, payable immediately regardless of the outcome of the litigation. The Court also ordered the judicial administrator to schedule the hearing of this appeal, which had already dragged on enough, as soon as possible. Accordingly, it was heard on October 18, 2006, i.e. three months after the order: see docket A-658-04, order dated July 18, 2006.

ANALYSIS OF THE APPELLANTS' SUBMISSIONS AND OF THE DECISION BY THE JUDGE OF THE FEDERAL COURT

The alleged breach of procedural fairness

[13] The appellants submit that the directions for conservatory measures were issued in breach of the rules of procedural fairness and fundamental justice. Three grounds were raised at the hearing in support of this argument. First, the appellants contend that they had the right to be heard, in an oral hearing, on the advisability of issuing conservatory measures. Second, the measures are measures of indefinite duration and they seriously compromise their right to practice. Third, the measures were issued by a person who was both judge and a party, thereby breaching the rule of Nemo judex in causa sua: no one can be a judge in their own case.

Digitized by Google

[14] I will examine each of these arguments, beginning with the right to be heard. I must point out though, as with the unconstitutionality argument based on the Canadian Bill of Rights, this procedural fairness argument, as pleaded at the hearing, does not appear in the notice of appeal as a ground of appeal or in the appellant's written memorandum. The only breach of procedural fairness that they raised is the one relating to the refusal to receive the motion to disqualify the judge. And that is a ground for appeal that they withdrew. The appellants' counsel simply referred us to paragraph 20 of their written memorandum, where it states that their memorandum of fact and law filed at first instance supplements the arguments set out therein. Yet, there was no such argument. Nevertheless, section 337 indeed provides that the notice of appeal must set out a complete and concise statement of the grounds intended to be argued. These are the grounds normally elaborated in the memorandum of fact and law. The appellants' notice of appeal is twenty (20) pages long and reflects everything but the complete, concise, and precise grounds of appeal. It is in fact a veiled, deficient memorandum of fact and law.

The right to be heard before conservatory measures are directed under section 14.03 of the Act

[15] At the hearing, the appellants claimed that they were entitled to an oral hearing on the conservatory measures, presumably before a third party, probably a judge, to decide whether such measures should be issued. It is difficult to know the appellants' exact position because, as I said, their memorandum of fact and law did not refer to this issue, much less the issue of the right to be heard by a third party. The respondent's counsel, in relying on this same procedural fairness that the appellants so ardently claimed, objected to a new ground of appeal being raised for the first time on appeal, at the hearing, when it did not appear in the written memorandum or in the notice of appeal. The oral arguments of the appellants' counsel were not much more enlightening on the issue, as they simply stated that the hearing could not take place before the same person, nothing more.

[16] In fact, the appellants challenge our Court's decision in Tremblay v. Canada (Superintendent of Bankruptcy), 2001 FCA 46 (CanLII), 2001 FCA 46, where our Court dismissed a similar claim to a right to an oral hearing when resorting to conservatory measures. At paragraphs 4 to 6, the Court writes:

> [4] In such circumstances, it is hardly surprising that the Superintendent thought it necessary to take conservatory measures to protect the assets which, objectively, on the evidence before him, seemed to be at risk at the time.
> [5] We consider that there is no merit in the appellants' argument that the Superintendent failed to observe the rules of natural justice in dealing with them. The appellants were aware of the audits taking place in their offices. They knew that a number of complaints had been filed against them and they knew the nature of the complaints. As the motions judge properly pointed out, they had several opportunities to be heard and to provide explanations about the alleged deficiencies, but chose to ignore them. They are hardly in any position to complain now.
> [6] Finally, the appellants argued that the Superintendent taking control of the estate records was a disguised revocation of their trustee licence without their having an opportunity to be heard as required in s. 14.02 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, as amended ("the Act"). This argument is without basis in the case at bar and is founded on a misapprehension, not to say distortion, of the action taken by the Superintendent. The taking control of the estate records, which was made necessary by the appellants' conduct, was a measure taken to protect a third party's property involved in an administrative and disciplinary inquiry. This inquiry is now concluded, disciplinary proceedings have been initiated and the appellants may exercise the rights conferred on them by s. 14.02, if that has not already been done.

[17] In this case, as in Tremblay, the appellants had many opportunities to express their point of view regarding the requests by the Office of the Superintendent. They were well aware of the allegations against them. They provided explanations in that regard on more than one occasion. They knew they had been asked to provide a detailed plan for the closing of files that had been long drawn out to the detriment of the creditors, failing which they would face conservatory measures. They refused to do so on the grounds that in their opinion, the Office of the Superintendent did not have the authority to demand such a plan from them.

[18] In passing, the appellants' counsel argued at the hearing that the judge improperly determined that their clients had not provided the detailed plan that they had been asked to provide. They referred us to letters containing statistical projections on file closings (e.g. 90 files by November 30, 2003, 170 by February 28, 2004, etc.): see appeal book, volume II, page 359. Clearly, without further details and specifications, these letters did not amount to a valid closing plan addressing the concerns expressed by the Office of the Superintendent about the backlog of files and the value of the estates at issue. In short, it was impossible for the Office of the Superintendent to know whether the emphasis had truly been placed on the backlog of files, where significant amounts lay stagnant to the detriment of the creditors (see, for example, the case of a matter dating back to 1973 with $575,505.30 held in trust and which, in 2004, had still not been settled: judge's decision, paragraph 2; see also the matters of Vide et Traitement Canada Inc. dating back to 1992; Les Remorques Bédard Inc., dating back to 1990; and Matériaux de Plomberie et Chauffage du Coteau Inc., dating back to 1991, with respective estates of $414,986.93, $272,008.19 and $146,990.09). In fact, the appellants' counsel was unable to point out any evidence in the appeal record establishing that the detailed plan requested had in fact been provided.

[19] I share the opinion of the judge that in this case there was no breach of procedural fairness and that the appellants were heard and given the opportunity to raise their arguments. I refer to paragraphs 82 to 86 of her decision which accurately summarizes this opinion:

> [82] In this case, I must take into consideration the efforts made by the OSB with its decision to begin the IAPO across the country, which led to a more specific investigation into the cases of administration of the applicants' active files. I note that once this process began between the OSB and the Syndics Marchand, the OSB informed the applicants that the failure to provide an acceptable closure plan could trigger some conservatory measures.
> [83] The abundant correspondence exchanged between the applicants and the OSB indicates that the rules of natural justice were complied with since the applicants were informed on many occasions of the OSB's requirements and the consequences they were risking should they refuse to comply with those requirements.
> [84] The applicants also think they had some legitimate expectations that a certain procedure would be followed. They state that the process contemplated by the IAPO program extended over a 12-month period, but that in their case the conservatory measures had been issued after only six months. I note, however, that the IAPO program required that a closure plan meeting the OSB's requirements be accepted at the outset. That did not happen in this case. The respondent did not contravene the procedure laid down by the IAPO program, therefore, since the applicants never provided an acceptable closure plan.
> [85] In the circumstances, given the statutory framework, the OSB had no need to grant the applicants a hearing or to meet with them one last time, since all the previous attempts had proved unproductive. As I said in Groupe G. Tremblay, supra, a hearing is not necessary before taking conservatory steps since when they prove necessary it is imperative that the OSB act swiftly.
> [86] I am satisfied, therefore, that the rules of natural justice were complied with in regard to the applicants and that the decision to issue conservatory measures directions does not contravene paragraph 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights, supra.

[20] The appellants acknowledge that they were heard on many points but not, they say, on the nature and choice of conservatory measures taken against them. In my opinion, our Court's decision in Tremblay, supra, is determinative. The appellants have not persuaded me that there are grounds to derogate from it. The fact that paragraph (d) of section 14.03 was added to the Act after the decision by this Court does not change the fact that we have before us conservatory measures which, as we shall discuss later on, are a means of protecting and administering property belonging to third parties, dictated by imperatives of safety, emergency or the need to carry out the objectives of the Act.

[21] I would add the following for purely pragmatic and functional purposes. Can we conceive that a measure taken to preserve evidence – an inspector's order to shut down a workplace in accordance with section 186 of An Act respecting Occupational Health and Safety, R.S.Q., c. S-2.1 to ensure the safety of the workers or an order to garnish from a third party pursuant to subsection 224(1) of the Income Tax Act – be subject to a notice of preliminary hearing? The question is asked and answered. Indeed, the Superior Court of Québec did not hesitate to answer in these terms in regard to section 15 of An Act respecting the Ministère du Revenu du Québec, a provision that is analogous with subsection 224(1) of the federal statute, in Sioui v. Sous-ministre du Revenu du Québec, [1995] R.J.Q. 2,492, at page 2,496:

> The Court is of the opinion that the right to be heard, enshrined by section 23 of the Charter, does not apply to the seizure under section 15… This seizure does not determine the party's right; it is a provisional measure intended to ensure income tax is paid until there has been a definitive decision in the dispute.

[22] In this case, as we shall see later on, the conservatory measure was itself an interim measure and therefore of limited duration. Beyond that fact, the appellants were not without recourse. They could seek a judicial review of the decision made: in fact, they did seek two reviews before two different courts where they were heard on the constitutionality of the existence of a power to direct such measures as well as the lawfulness of the power that was exercised in their case. They could also have been heard at the hearing regarding their licence: section 14.02 expressly provides that it and the resulting decision is subject to judicial review and then to a subsequent appeal.

The nature of the conservatory measures under section 14.03 of the Act

[23] As this Court pointed out in Tremblay, supra, the conservatory measures under section 14.03 of the Act are measures taken to protect the property of third parties in the course of an administrative and disciplinary inquiry. They are dictated by a necessity to act quickly in order to ensure estates are preserved in the circumstances provided in subsection 14.03(2). "Preserve" in this case means not only protection against the loss or destruction of the estates in question, but also protection against improper or lacking management of the administration of an estate, to the detriment of creditors and the public interest. This is indeed suggested by the circumstances established by the Act whereby the Superintendent may resort to those measures.

[24] In fact, the Superintendent may resort to these protective measures when carrying out an inquiry or investigation pursuant to the powers conferred to him under paragraph 5(3)(e) of the Act, when pursuant to subsection 14.01(1) measures have been taken in regard to a trustee's licence for failing to properly fulfil the duties of a trustee, for improper management of the estate or for failing to comply with the Superintendent's directions (subsection 14.01(1), when it is in the public interest to do so (ibidem) or when a trustee fails to comply with one of the conditions of the licence, including the code of ethics respecting the conduct of trustees (section 13.5) [Emphasis added].

[25] It is clear that the use of conservatory measures is not, as the appellants ultimately claim, limited only to cases of estates compromised as a result of fraud, misappropriation or embezzlement. It is there so that the objectives of the Act are attained, which certainly includes the objectives of properly and efficiently administering estates as well as the objective of trustees respecting the terms and conditions of their licences.

[26] It would be false to claim, as the appellants do, that the conservatory measures apply indefinitely, particularly in this case.

[27] First, the Act itself clearly provides a time limit on the restriction in regard to the administration of new assets. Paragraph 14.03(1)(d) stipulates that it remains in effect until there has been a decision regarding the suspension or cancellation of the licence. The conservatory measures at issue are measures that are purely accessory to the principal litigation, which is disciplinary in terms of the appellants' ability to practice their profession: they are born of the litigation and extinguish with it.

[28] Second, the conservatory measure which is in dispute here has an additional limit: the order may be lifted when the Superintendent is satisfied with the guarantees offered regarding the proper and diligent administration of the estates to the creditors' benefit rather than to their detriment. In the words of the direction itself, "[t]hese directions take effect immediately and will stay in place until further notice".

[29] The appellants were certainly affected by this measure dated February 10, 2004, temporarily limiting their access to new estates. But we must not exaggerate. Beyond the time limit, the direction also contained a material limit: it applied only to new ordinary administration estates. It is closely connected and adapted to the problem alleged against the appellants: i.e. negligence in the administration of ordinary administration estates. As stated by Mr. Justice Chamberland of the Court of Appeal of Québec – from whom the appellants requested the interim execution of a judgment in their favour, declaring inoperative paragraphs (a) and (d) of section 14.03 and, accordingly, quashing the directions for conservatory measures – the appellants were certainly impeded in their professional activities, but they were not prevented from acting as trustees in summary administration estates, in certain ordinary administration estates or in proposals: see Procureur général du Canada et al. v. Marchand Syndics Inc. et al. et H.H. Davis et Ass. Inc. et Banque canadienne impériale de commerce, C.A.Q., No. 500-09-015869-050, November 8, 2005.

[30] In support of dismissing the appellants' motion, Mr. Justice Chamberland writes:

> [TRANSLATION]
> The evidence of irreparable harm is not very persuasive. There is no doubt that the measures imposed on the petitioners since February 2004 impede their professional activities. The evidence establishes however that this does not prevent them from continuing to act as trustees, i.e. continuing to administer certain ordinary administration bankruptcies, namely by administering summary administration estates and proposals. The situation is perhaps difficult – since they cannot be appointed as trustees in ordinary administration bankruptcies – but it is not critical, and is not an irreparable prejudice.

[31] I would add as complementary information that the appellants had informed the Office of the Superintendent that in any event they wanted to significantly reduce the influx of new ordinary administration estates. They reiterated this information before us, adding that the appellants were planning to retire.

[32] I turn now to the appellants' complaint in support of their allegation of a breach of procedural fairness, namely that the person who directed the conservatory measures was at once judge and a party. It would not usually be necessary to address this issue since it is another issue that the appellants failed to raise or elaborate in their memorandum of fact and law. But the appellants insisted that it be decided in order to avoid the undertaking of a new challenge.

[33] The allegation is unfounded for the reasons that I have already stated relating to the very nature of a conservatory measure. It is also unfounded because the appellants based their claim on a narrow and incorrect interpretation of Sheriff et al. v. Attorney General of Canada, 2006 FCA 139 (CanLII), 2006 FCA 139, decided by our Court.

[34] In that matter, our Court simply reiterated the principle that a person cannot initiate and judge an action. That goes without saying. But here the conservatory measures are not an action. As I already stated, they are incidental and accessory to a disciplinary proceeding brought against the appellants. The hearing of this proceeding, pending decisions on the various recourse brought by the appellants challenging the Superintendent's powers, was entrusted to Mr. Greenberg, an independent adjudicator who will hear the appellants in accordance with section 14.02. I believe it would be superfluous to say more.

[35] The appellants also relied on Authorson v. Canada (Attorney General), 2003 SCC 39 (CanLII), [2003] 2 S.C.R. 40 and Air Canada v. Procureure générale du Canada et le Commissaire de la concurrence, 2003 CanLII 32929 (QC CA), [2003] R.J.Q. 322 (C.A.Q.) in support of their argument.

[36] Authorson is of no help to the appellants. At paragraph 42 of this decision, Mr. Justice Major states that paragraph 1(a) of the Canadian Bill of Rights guarantees notice and some opportunity to contest a governmental deprivation of property rights only in the context of an adjudication of that person's rights and obligations before a court or tribunal. [Emphasis added.]. While it is obvious that the conservatory measure has an impact on the appellants' business, it is accepted that they do not have property rights over the estates of third parties, which they are responsible for administering in accordance with the Act and the conditions of their licence. They are only trustees and, under subsections 5(2) and (4) of the Act, the Superintendent has the ultimate control of the estates and can give trustees directives regarding the performance of their duties. Moreover, the respondent's decision, like that of an inspector, is an administrative decision authorized by the Act.

[37] At paragraph 59, Mr. Justice Major lists the guarantees of fundamental Justice conferred by paragraph 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. He adds and I quote:

> All of these protections are legal rights applicable in the context of, or prior to, a hearing before a court or tribunal.
> . . .
> Its protections are operative only in the application of law to individual circumstances in a proceeding before a court, tribunal or similar body.

The proceeding referred to by Major J. is the disciplinary proceeding where the appellants will be heard in accordance with section 14.02 of the Act before a disciplinary tribunal. Resorting to conservatory measures is not a proceeding before such a forum: the respondent is not a court or a tribunal or a similar body.

[38] With regard to Air Canada, supra, we did not have the benefit of any such arguments in the respondent's written memorandum since the appellants' ground for appeal was new and did not appear, as I already mentioned, in their notice of appeal or in their memorandum of fact and law (the only reference to this case by the appellants in their memorandum is found in three lines at paragraph 44; it was made in relation to the ground for appeal involving the judge's disqualification and was withdrawn at the hearing). But that aside, the decision of the Court of Appeal of Québec in that matter is entirely different from the one at issue in this case.

[39] In Air Canada, the Commissioner of Competition (Commissioner) issued an interim order for an injunction against Air Canada prohibiting it from offering to sell or selling, directly or indirectly, particular fares on a given number of routes. The Court of Appeal of Québec determined that the Commissioner, while continuing the inquiry against Air Canada, had become a judge for the purposes of issuing an injunctive order. This is not at all the case with respect to the respondent under the Act and section 14.03. Indeed, in Métivier v. Mayrand, [2003] J.Q. No. 15389 (C.A.Q.), the Court of Appeal of Québec distinguished the Superintendent's situation from the Commissioner's in terms of the guarantees of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy's independence and impartiality under paragraph 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. It determined that the legislative scheme resulting from 14.01 and 14.02 of the Act was not contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights and therefore was not invalid or inoperative.

[40] Moreover, the decision made by the respondent to resort to conservatory measures was not an injunctive measure like the one taken by the Commissioner. It did not prohibit the appellants from carry on their activities as trustees. It only removed certain files whose administration was jeopardized as a result of their inability to close them and their failure or refusal to cooperate with a procedure that would likely have enabled them to keep them.

[41] It is true that the appellants have been temporarily deprived of the opportunity to receive new ordinary administration estates. But that fact does not change the conservatory nature of the measure taken pursuant to paragraph (d) of section 14.03, as long as there is a rational connection between that measure and the facts underlying the decision to resort to conservatory measures. I will now address that issue.

Was there a rational connection between the facts underlying the decision to resort to conservatory measures and the decision made under paragraph (d) of section 14.03 of the Act?

[42] The judge determined that the appellants were repeatedly asked, to no avail, to provide a specific closing plan which, under the circumstances, would have provided that the most problematic files be given priority. This finding of fact is amply supported by the evidence.

[43] Following the series of refusals and the notices that conservatory measures could be taken, the judge also determined at paragraph 70 of her decision that "it was not patently unreasonable to consider that the administration of the estates in the oldest files was compromised and that it was necessary to protect them by resorting to conservatory measures so that the administration of the files could be diligently wound up and the sums obtained would be paid to the creditors at the earliest opportunity". Whether in this case we apply the standard of patent unreasonableness or that of simple unreasonableness, the situation in my opinion warranted that these measures be taken in the interest of the creditors, in the public interest and in the interest of properly and efficiently administering third party property as the appellants were bound to do under the Act.

[44] In a situation where there was undeniable and certain negligence in the management of ordinary administration estates and a refusal to cooperate to accelerate their settlement, it was not unreasonable to avoid aggravating the existing problem by not allowing similar estates of that type to be added to those the appellants continued to administer, thereby potentially compromising the proper administration of both those and the new estates. Only 48 of the most drastic ordinary administration estates were removed from them through the conservatory measures, in accordance with the ordered and timely administration of insolvency cases across the country. The others – 144 in all – remained under their administration.

CONCLUSION

[45] In my opinion, in analyzing the arguments submitted by the appellants and in applying the law to the facts of the matter, the judge did not make any error that would justify our intervention. The temporary conservatory measures taken were necessary to ensure the proper administration of ordinary administration estates which were compromised by the appellants' negligence and refusal to cooperate. The measures were taken in keeping with the Act and the rights that it confers on the appellants. They were complaining about measures that were brought about by their own wrongdoing.

[46] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal with costs. Under the circumstances, given the state of the proceedings in the appeal book as well as the nature of the challenge which was derived in large part from it's first time around, I would order that costs be payable immediately and that they be assessed in accordance with column V of Tariff B.

INTRODUCTION

[1] This is an application for an order pursuant to s. 14.04 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (the "BIA"), removing PricewaterhouseCoopers ("PWC") as trustee in bankruptcy for United Used Auto & Truck Parts Ltd., Seiler Holdings Ltd., and VECW Industries Ltd., and United Used Auto Parts (Storage Div.) Ltd. (together "United"), and appointing George Abakhan, licensed trustee, in its place.

[2] The applicant is Ian Mott, an officer, director, major shareholder, and creditor of one or more of the United companies. The sole purpose of the application is to provide creditors of United with a trustee that has the capacity to sue PWC for alleged breaches of fiduciary duty as trustee of the bankrupt estate and court-appointed receiver of the assets of the estate.

[3] The application arises from the court-approved sales of certain lands owned by United in Surrey, B.C. (the "United Lands"). In particular, it concerns a sale in 2001 to the Pacific National Exhibition (the "PNE") of lots 3 to 6 and 8 to 20 of the United Lands (the "PNE Lands").

[4] It is alleged that PWC, as United's trustee and receiver, failed in a fiduciary duty owed to United's creditors to maintain and enhance the value of the United Lands and to obtain a fair price on the sales. PWC denies these allegations and contends in any event that any legal action commenced now on those claims is res judicata and so barred either because the claims have been adjudicated in this Court before or because Mr. Mott should have but failed to raise them in earlier court proceedings.

[5] The parties sought and obtained directions from Mr. Justice Tysoe on April 12, 2006. His Lordship directed that PWC was at liberty to raise the issue of res judicata on this application in advance of determining whether to replace PWC as United's trustee.

BACKGROUND

[6] For many years, United operated a used auto parts business in Surrey, B.C. near the Patullo Bridge. It managed at the same time to assemble about 150 acres of land, some of which it used in its auto parts business, and some it kept vacant for redevelopment. This activity all took place under the direction of Mr. Mott.

[7] As far back as 1994, United was under pressure of foreclosure of the United Lands from the Royal Bank. In May of that year, to forestall foreclosure, United entered into a forbearance agreement whereby the bank agreed to forbear from foreclosing until May of 1997. The agreement was extended a number of times through to 1998.

[8] Beginning in about June 1997, the PNE and United had discussions on and off about the sale to PNE of the PNE Lands.

[9] In March 1998, United entered into another forbearance agreement with another charge holder on the United Lands, R.A. Aziz. By that agreement, United was required to put the United Lands on the market for sale and undertake an aggressive sales and marketing program. United entered into a one-year listing agreement with Colliers.

[10] Meanwhile, in about January 1998, United had made an informal proposal to the secured creditors whereby United would sell $25 million worth of the United Lands by September 1998. In that time, however, there were no sales.

[11] In September 1998, three years of taxes were unpaid on the United Lands, and United obtained financing through another charge holder, Century Services. With that, United owed the Royal Bank about $6 million, Century Services about $5 million, Aziz about $6 million, and there were also other charges over the United Lands.

[12] The Royal Bank and Century commenced foreclosure proceedings in January 1999. They obtained orders nisi on February, 4 1999.

[13] United resisted applications for conduct of sale by the mortgagees in early 1999. It entered into another forbearance agreement with Aziz. The agreement included a repayment plan that required United to achieve various sales targets or a refinancing of the property by July 1999. United failed to meet the targets and sold none of the properties. In about July 1999, United consented to an order granting joint conduct of sale of the United Lands to the Royal Bank, Century, and Aziz.

[14] On August 16, 1999, Century and the Royal Bank obtained an appraisal from Burgess, Austin, Cawler & Associates valuing the United Lands at $44.4 million based on industrial-salvage zoning. The appraisal was updated on September 23, 1999, valuing the lands at $23 million to $25 million if sold en bloc and $30.5 million if sold in individual lots. Century and the Royal Bank then agreed to list the United Lands for $32 million en bloc. Accordingly, on October 12, 1999, they entered into a listing agreement putting the asking prices at $49.6 million in total based on selling the lots individually and $32 million on an en bloc basis.

[15] On November 8, 1999, United commenced proceedings under the Companies' Creditors Arrangements Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 (the "CCAA"). Ernst & Young was appointed as a monitor and was granted conduct of sale of the United Lands.

[16] On February 23, 2000, in the CCAA proceeding, the court approved a sale of the United Lands to Cape Developments, Oxford Properties, and GE Capital for $30 million. That sale was subject to two conditions: first, that Cape could rezone the property, and second, that Cape could be satisfied of the environmental condition of the property. Cape never cleared its conditions, and although an extension was negotiated, Cape failed to increase the deposit in accordance with the extension agreement. In the result, that transaction collapsed.

[17] Meanwhile, on April 27, 2000, CB Richard Ellis provided a report for Mr. Mott valuing part of the United Lands, consisting of lots 22 through 32 (the "Group Five Lands"), at $28,400,000 based on highway-commercial zoning. A letter from Mr. Ellis to Mr. Mott on May 23, 2000, stated that the total United Lands excluding the Group Five Lands were worth $750,000 to $800,000 per acre.

[18] In May 2000, Ernst & Young issued its ninth monitor's report. It was negative about United's conduct and ability to organize. The report stated that the prospects for restructuring appeared to be significantly poorer than when the Cape offer had been accepted earlier in the year.

[19] The monitor remained of the view that United's operations could be financially viable in due course under competent management. However, the monitor accused Mr. Mott of improperly dealing with funds generated from the sale of its "P.M.S.I." inventory, which should have been held strictly in trust. The report stated:

It is common ground that the management of United lacks the skills to achieve the restructuring without significant professional assistance. However, even that professional assistance is without effect if management is not prepared to accept and execute professional advice it received in a prompt and efficient manner.

The report also alleged that United had filed a false affidavit and had breached a court order not to give further security.

[20] In June 2000, Mr. Justice Tysoe granted the Royal Bank and Century conduct of sale of the United Lands, and they entered into a further listing agreement with Colliers to list the lands en bloc for $32 million as well as on an individual lot basis. The CCAA proceedings were terminated the next month. United was declared bankrupt, and PWC was appointed as the trustee in bankruptcy. United appealed, but the appeal was dismissed on August 8, 2000. PWC was later replaced as the trustee for United Used Auto Parts (Storage Div.) Ltd., but remained in that position for the rest of the United companies.

[21] By this time, the administrative charges on the United Lands had risen to approximately $850,000. The interest costs on the mortgages were running at about $300,000 per month. In August 2000, Mr. Justice Tysoe approved the sale of lot 1 of the United Lands for $2.4 million, and on September 1, 2000, he appointed PWC as the receiver of the assets and undertaking of United with conduct of sale of all but lots 1, 7, and the Group Five Lands. Conduct of sale of lot 1 and the Group Five Lands remained with the Royal Bank and Century. Lot 7 was the subject of a separate foreclosure proceeding and was sold on November 27, 2000, to a numbered company owned by Advance Lumber for $2,525,000.

[22] On February 6, 2001, PWC, acting as the receiver, filed applications under the Royal Bank and Century foreclosure actions for an order for sale of the PNE Lands and the right to purchase lot 2 for $12,572,600. The purchaser was a numbered company controlled by the PNE. PWC also applied for an order that lot 21 be sold to a numbered company related to Ralph's Auto Supply for $1,250,000.

[23] Mr. Ritchie Clark appeared as counsel for Mr. Mott and for United itself on the sale applications. Although he brought no counter-application on behalf of United, Mr. Clark objected to the sale on several grounds, including alleged failures by PWC to adequately inform the other parties as to who were the purchaser's backers, to provide information on the negotiation history, to properly market the property, and to obtain a price at fair market value. Mr. Clark applied for an adjournment, which was refused, and Mr. Justice Shaw approved the sales on February 9, 2001. Later that month, Mr. Justice Tysoe granted PWC conduct of sale of the Group Five Lands.

[24] On March 9, 2001, Mr. Mott sought leave to appeal the orders for sale granted by Mr. Justice Shaw. The application was dismissed.

[25] The original sale of the PNE Lands to the PNE failed to close because the PNE wished to also acquire lot 7, which had been sold to Advance Lumber in a separate foreclosure proceeding. However, on May 11, 2001, PWC brought another application based on a renewed agreement with the PNE. It was for an order that the PNE Lands and the right to purchase lot 2 be sold to the PNE for $12,572,600 and that lots 27 to 32 (the "Replacement Lands"), which formed part of the Group Five Lands, be sold to a company related to Advance Lumber for $2,146,000. On May 15, 2001, after a hearing May 11 and 14, 2001, Mr. Justice Thackray approved these sales.

[26] Mr. Mott and his son, Howard Mott, appeared at the hearing before Mr. Justice Thackray without counsel and made submissions opposing the sale. They requested an order directing a trial on the issue of constructive expropriation, but made no formal application to support the order. Mr. Justice Thackray dismissed their request, saying that such an application was not technically before him. Mr. Justice Thackray found further that the Motts had failed to establish a foundation for their allegations of conspiracy and fraud.

[27] Mr. Mott sought leave to appeal Mr. Justice Thackray's ruling, but his application was dismissed on May 18, 2001. A further application by Mr. Mott to vary the Court of Appeal's order of May 18, 2001, and to stay Mr. Justice Thackray's orders approving the sales was similarly dismissed by the Court of Appeal on May 20, 2001.

[28] After completion of the sale of the PNE Lands, the court made further orders granting Aziz conduct of sale of the remainder of the Group Five Lands, being lots 22 to 26. In about August 2002, the court made a vesting order in the foreclosure actions, approving the sale of lot 24 to Ralph's Auto Supply for $1,130,000. On October 3, 2003, Mr. Justice Tysoe granted a vesting order approving the sale of the remaining lots 22, 23, 25, and 26 to R & R Trading Co. Ltd. for $2,644,800.

THE FIRST MOTT ACTION

[29] On May 31, 2000, Mr. Mott, on behalf of himself and Moe-Villa Investments Ltd., a fourth mortgagee of the United Lands, commenced B.C. Supreme Court Action No. S013035 (the "First Mott Action") against the PNE, PWC, and Advance Lumber. Concurrently, he filed certificates of pending litigation against 24 lots within the United Lands. His claim was for damages for breach of trust, deceit, and conspiracy. He alleged that the court-approved sales were not made in good faith for valuable consideration and that the defendant purchasers were not bona fide purchasers for value.

[30] The endorsement on the writ provided:

Moe-Villa Investments Ltd. claim a mortgage over the lands... and claim its security interest in the land which is being compromised by the tortuous [sic] and deceitful conduct of the Defendants in this action and in Supreme Court of B.C. action numbers H99076 and H99085. Ian Mott claims damages and title of the lands is being wrongfully [sic] transferred away by errors of the court and the parties to the action participated and wrongfully dealt in ways to deprive the Plaintiffs of their interest in the lands as set out in the attached schedules... These lands are being taken without proper compensation to the Plaintiffs. Fair market value was not paid by the purchasers presently on title... The Plaintiffs claim against the Defendants, and each of them, for damages [sic] and loss resulting from, breach of trust, deceit, and conspiring to transfer to the Defendant purchasers P.N.E...., 617548 B.C. LTD., ADVANCE LUMBER LTD. and 606703 B.C. LTD. the aforesaid interests in parcels of land unlawfully for less than fair market value, and contrary to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. and the Company Act, R.S.B.C. The Defendants conspired to depress the market value of the lands and the Defendant purchasers obtained the lands the lands [sic] and interests in the lands owned by the Plaintiffs for less than true market value. The said purchases of lands were not made in good faith for valuable consideration and the Defendant purchasers are not bona fide purchasers for value.

[31] PWC applied to dismiss that action as an abuse of process, and the application was heard before Madam Justice Allan on August 23, 2001. Madam Justice Allan, upon reading the materials and hearing argument, ruled that all the issues in the new action had either been raised or should have been raised in the previous sale approval proceeding before Mr. Justice Thackray, who had dismissed the allegations of conspiracy as groundless.

[32] Included in her findings of fact and law were the following:

[para. 8]... Mr. Mott's son made extensive submissions on that application, alleging serious improprieties by the Receiver and the P.N.E. Specifically, Mr. Mott alleged a conspiracy between the Receiver and the P.N.E., to have the P.N.E. obtain land at price advantageous to the P.N.E., and disadvantageous to Mr. Mott.

[para. 22]... In essence, the plaintiffs seek the return of the lands, and damages to compensate them for the Receiver selling those lands to the P.N.E. for less than fair market value, and deceitfully.

[para. 25]... the plaintiffs filed additional affidavits asserting that Colliers did not permit prospective purchasers of the lands to make offers because Colliers was reserving certain parcels for purchase by the P.N.E.

[para. 26]... The plaintiffs suggest that numerous matters were not before Mr. Justice Thackray, and that with respect to some issues, he was confused and did not understand them.

[para. 31]... Mr. Mott seeks to pursue the claim that the defendants acted wrongfully and deprived the plaintiffs of their lands without proper compensation. He alleges the lands were "wrongfully transferred away by errors of the courts."

[para. 33] Both plaintiffs claim for damages as a result of the defendants' breach of trust, deceit, and conspiracy to depress the market values of the lands. Mr. Mott alleges a wrongful sale of the lands, and seeks to have those transactions reversed.

[para. 34] These issues have all been raised in previous proceedings and litigated. There are no new parties to the litigation. There is no "fresh evidence" that was not or could not have been discovered in previous litigation. The proposed evidence of Mr. Seilor and Mr. Lutor who were apparently unsuccessful in making offers to purchase portions of the lands does not raise a new issue.

[para. 35] Mr. Justice Thackray devoted 18 paragraphs of his careful and lengthy reasons for judgment to the alleged conspiracy alleged by Mr. Mott, and dismissed it as groundless.

[para. 37] The PNE has been judicially determined to be a bona fide purchase for value. Allegations against Advance Lumber co-operating with PNE and Colliers, the realtor acting as agent for PWC, were canvassed before Thackray J. and have no merit.

[para. 38] I conclude that the plaintiff's application is an abuse of process and should be dismissed pursuant to Rule 19(24)(d).

[para. 45]... So, pursuant to Rule 19(24), there will be two orders of special costs.

THE SECOND MOTT ACTION

[33] On June 13, 2001, Mr. Mott commenced another action, B.C. Supreme Court Action No. S013957 (the "Second Mott Action"), against the existing and additional defendants. He filed certificates of pending litigation against the Group Five Lands. A similar application was made to strike the action under Rule 19(24) as an abuse of process. It was heard on September 26, 2002, before Mr. Justice Davies, who found that the endorsement in the Second Mott Action was "virtually identical" to the endorsement on the First Mott Action. Mr. Justice Davies held that because the Second Mott Action was "in all material respects identical to an action which has already been struck by this court as an abuse of process, it must be dismissed on the basis of res judicata."

THE PROPOSED STATEMENT OF CLAIM

[34] In the proposed action underlying the application before me, the claims against PWC are detailed in a draft statement of claim submitted on behalf of Mr. Mott. As a pleading it is overloaded with redundancies, evidence, and conjecture, but it also manifests a number of allegations, which may be excerpted as follows:

PROPOSED STATEMENT OF CLAIM

Statement of Claim Para. No.	Allegation:
4 - 5	PWC accepted appointment as Trustee and failed to disclose to the court and United's creditors its conflict in dealing with the PNE sale when PWC was also the auditor for PNE. PWC should never have accepted an appointment as Receiver because of the conflict that existed between the interests of the secured creditors and unsecured creditors.
6 – 7, 18	PWC failed to exercise its duty to take reasonable care, supervision and control of the debtor's property, specifically by failing to preserve the values of the property and enhance those values where it would have been prudent and feasible, and by failing to market the properties in a manner which would achieve the best possible price. PWC failed to appear at a public hearing in Surrey, July 31, 2000, to oppose a down zoning to remove salvage use from land zoned "Industrial Salvage" ("I.S."). PWC could have opposed the down zoning successfully on the basis that the down zoning constituted contravention of an agreement between the United and the City of Surrey in 1985. PWC knew or ought to have known that the proposed down zoning was part of a plan by Surrey to upgrade the use of the area where the United Lands were situate for commercial use, and it knew that commercially zoned lands were much more valuable than lands zoned for salvage or lands zoned for industrial use.
8 - 9	PWC failed to take reasonable steps to enhance the value of the subject lands before placing them on the market for sale by applying for a rezoning of the subject lands for commercial use or by not requesting Surrey counsel on July 31, 2000 to postpone the final passage of the down zoning to give it an opportunity to prepare rezoning applications.
10, 18	PWC locked the doors of the twelve business operations of United and proceeded to liquidate the assets without any prior notice to United, knowing that closing the businesses would put into jeopardy the non- conforming use of the United Lands and the premium value associated with that use, and knowing that United was revitalizing its business and the CCAA monitor's forecast income from operations would amount to approximately $866,000. PWC caused United to lose profits from the time of business closure to the present and in the future.
11	PWC listed the properties of United for sale without first taking advantage of the material change in Surrey's planning objectives to upgrade the area for commercial use and when it set an en bloc listing price of $32 million dollars which was an unconscionably low price having regard to the fair market value of the properties if sold as individual lots.
12	PWC failed to list the properties on MLS in a timely fashion and discouraged offers from potential purchasers who were interested in acquiring individual lots, with a view to accommodating the wishes of PWC's client, the PNE, which needed a large assembly of land to stay in place while it was in the process of deciding on its own site relocation. PWC failed to obtain a fair and reasonable return for the sale of the United Lands over reasonable period of time on a program that would give the properties as broad exposure as possible and encourage sales of individual lots but at the same time allowing consideration of en bloc offers that included premiums for the value of large blocks of land.

13	PWC failed to secure access as to the individual lots or to commence proceedings to enforce contractual rights claiming damages,, with the result that the lots bordering on the perimeter road were sold for substantially less than fair market value.
17	PWC sold the PNE Lands to the PNE for $12,572,600 based on a price of $185,000 per acre, which was substantially less than fair market value, knowing at the time that the PNE had secured the necessary commitment from the City of Surrey to rezone the subject lands for commercial purposes, and that if the lands were rezoned, their value would more than triple the price that was agreed upon. PWC further failed to take into account the following: (a) the earlier expressions by the PNE of its willingness to pay full market value; (b) the scarcity of large blocks of land that would suit the needs of the PNE, and the fact that the PNE Lands were the PNE's first choice of all potential sites it had reviewed over a number of years; (c) the fact that the PNE was under a time constraint to acquire lands for a new site because of the expiry of an existing lease; (d) the fact that the Province of British Columbia, which owned the PNE, had the financial ability to pay not only full market value but a premium as well.
20	PWC entered into a tri-partite agreement with PNE and Advance Lumber whereby PWC sold six lots (the "Replacement Lands") from the Group Five area to Advance Lumber, and Advance sold lot 7 of the United Lands to the PNE, and failed to advise the court of the following: (a) its conflict of interest in dealing with the PNE, an important client of PWC; (b) information regarding the commitment that Surrey had made to rezone the lands to permit commercial use, including a casino; (c) the sale price of Lot 7, which would have provided the court with a good indicator of the value of the PNE Lands; (d) information about PWC's failure to take appropriate steps to preserve and enhance property values and to market the properties in a manner to achieve the best possible price; (e) information as to its complete failure to drive a hard bargain with the PNE.
21	PWC also breached its fiduciary duty by: (a) misinforming the court of the proper status for the zoning of the Replacement Lands and misinforming the court that salvage use on the subject lands would not likely be permitted by Surrey when PWC knew the opposite to be true; (b) discouraging the court from placing any value on an offer for one of the lots in the Replacement Lands which reflected a premium value based on the intended salvage use; (c) misinforming the court that United's inventory had been sold off; (d) misinforming the court that the sale price for the Replacement Lands was approximately $10,000 below market value when in fact a fair price for the Replacement Lands may well had been in excess of $2 million above the actual sale price; (e) misinforming the court that the Group Five Lands had been actively marketed for a long time before the agreement and purchase of sale to Advance was entered into.
22	PWC failed to make the PNE accountable for the difference between the fair market value of the Replacement Lands and the actual sale price of the same.

23	PWC failed to obtain the best possible price for the remaining lots by setting a low benchmark in the sale of the Replacement Lands, in causing those lots bordered on the perimeter road to lack access, and failing to secure commercial zoning or to commence salvage operations to preserve the nonconforming salvage premium.

THE DOCTRINE OF RES JUDICATA

[35] In British Columbia, applications to have actions dismissed on the basis of res judicata are brought under Rule 19(24), which enables the court to dismiss an action if it is "unnecessary, scandalous, frivolous, or vexatious", or is "otherwise an abuse of the process of the court."

[36] The doctrine of res judicata and the related rules against abuse of process and collateral attack are designed to ensure that once a cause of action or the issues within it have been finally determined by the courts, they cannot be brought forward again. The goal is to bring litigation between two parties to a definitive end and to prevent one party from pursuing the other in the courts more than once over the same cause or the same issues: Fenerty v. The City of Halifax (1920), 53 N.S.R. 457, 50 D.L.R. 435 (S.C.). Other policy reasons underlying the doctrine are to prohibit duplicative litigation and avoid potentially inconsistent results, undue costs, and inconclusive proceedings: Danyluk v. Ainsworth Technologies Inc., 2001 SCC 44 (CanLII), [2001] 2 S.C.R. 460, 2001 SCC 44.

[37] In Angle v. Minister of National Revenue, 1974 CanLII 168 (SCC), [1975] 2 S.C.R. 248, 47 D.L.R. (3d) 544 at p. 555, Dickson J. explained the operation of the doctrine of res judicata and its two main branches: cause of action estoppel and issue estoppel. He wrote:

In earlier times res judicata in its operation as estoppel was referred to as estoppel by record, that is to say, estoppel by the written record of a court of record, but now the generic term more frequently found is estoppel per rem judicatam. This form of estoppel, as Diplock L.J. said in Thoday v. Thoday [[1964] P. 181.], at p. 198, has two species. The first, "cause of action estoppel", precludes a person from bringing an action against another when that same cause of action has been determined in earlier proceedings by a court of competent jurisdiction. ... The second species of estoppel per rem judicatam is known as "issue estoppel", a phrase coined by Higgins J. of the High Court of Australia in Hoystead v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation [(1921), 29 C.L.R. 537.], at p. 561:

I fully recognize the distinction between the doctrine of res judicata where another action is brought for the same cause of action as has been the subject of previous adjudication, and the doctrine of estoppel where, the cause of action being different, some point or issue of fact has already been decided (I may call it "issue-estoppel").

(a) Cause of Action Estoppel

[38] Cause of action estoppel applies to bar proceedings that allege the same cause of action between the same parties if that cause has already been determined by the courts. However, despite its name, it is not so strictly limited. Cause of action estoppel also applies to bar subsequent proceedings covering the same subject matter and arising out of the same relationship between the parties, even though the second litigation may be based on a different legal description or conception of the cause: Lehndorff Management Ltd. v. L.R.S. Development Enterprises Ltd. 1980 CanLII 393 (BC CA), (1980), 19 B.C.L.R. 59 at pp. 64-65, 109 D.L.R. (3d) 729 (C.A.), cited with approval in Chapman v. Canada 2003 BCCA 665 (CanLII), (2003) 21 B.C.L.R. (4th) 272, 2003 BCCA 665 at para. 17.

[39] This broader definition of cause of action estoppel recognizes that parties to an action have a duty to bring their whole case to the court's attention and not to reserve some aspect of the matter against the possibility of a decision in the opponent's favour as a means of preserving a way to come at the opponent again. As Wigram V.C. explained in Henderson v. Henderson (1843), 3 Hare 100 at 114-15, 67 E.R. 313 at 319:

In trying this question I believe I state the rule of the court correctly when I say that, where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a court of competent jurisdiction, the court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case, and will not (except under special circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of the matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject in contest, but which was not brought forward, only because they have, from negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, in which the parties exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time.

[40] This description of the doctrine was quoted with approval by our Court of Appeal in Lehndorff Management, supra, where Carrothers J.A. gave the following further explanation of the doctrine's scope:

The maxim res judicata does not apply to distinct causes of action (Hall v. Hall and Hall's Feed & Grain Ltd. (1958), 15 D.L.R. (2d) 638 (Alta. C.A.)), but it does apply where the second action arises out of the same relationship, and the same subject matter, as the adjudicated action, although based upon a different legal conception of the relationship between the parties (Morgan Power Apparatus Ltd. v. Flanders Installations Ltd. (1972), 27 D.L.R. (3d) 249 (B.C.C.A.)). It also applies not only to points on which the court in the first action was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of the first litigation and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time (Winter v. Dewar, 41 B.C.R. 336, reflex, [1929] 2 W.W.R. 518, [1929] 4 D.L.R. 389 (C.A.)).

[41] Where a party seeks to pursue a second action against the same foe, the court must be satisfied that the new cause of action alleged is truly separate and distinct from the old, and not merely a new portrayal of the same subject matter, such as tort rather than contract. Litigants may not simply characterize the facts of the first action in a different way to avoid the application of res judicata.

[42] PWC cites M.R.S. Trust Co. v. 374961 B.C. Ltd. reflex, (1997), 31 B.C.L.R. (3d) 247, [1997] B.C.J. No. 13 (QL)(S.C.), for its similarities to the case at bar. M.R.S. brought foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage in default against Giovanni Zen, a covenantor under the mortgage. Zen was represented at the hearing for an order nisi and conduct of sale of the property. The court ordered personal judgment against Zen at that time.

[43] Zen subsequently commenced an action claiming breach of contract, breach of trust, and breach of a duty of care arising from M.R.S.'s conduct during the foreclosure proceedings. Zen claimed that following the hearing, he had ceased to be a party to the foreclosure proceedings and was unable to protect his interest in seeing that the highest price possible was obtained for the property. M.R.S., in turn, sought a declaration that Zen's action was estopped by the doctrine of res judicata.

[44] The court held that Zen did not cease to be a party to the foreclosure proceedings. As a party with a vital interest at stake, he had standing to seek the court's assistance in obtaining the maximum sale price. Because the same parties were involved, the doctrine of res judicata could apply. The facts upon which Zen based his claims were all known before the order approving the sale was granted. Additionally, the issue that Zen sought to raise, that is, M.R.S.'s alleged failure to ensure the maximum possible price, was before the court at the earlier hearing. The court found that secondary issues relating to the sale price, such as waste, vandalism, and security issues, were relevant to the issues to be decided in the foreclosure and should have been raised at that time. The court stated at para. 37:

To Zen's contention that his claim is in tort and is therefore a distinct cause of action from the issues on the foreclosure the short answer is that the subject matter, the sale of the property, and the duties of M.R.S. (if such they were) were all matters within the competence and purview of the Court in the foreclosure. Recasting these issues in positive terms as a "duty" on the part of M.R.S. does not create a fundamentally different cause which could be separately litigated.

(b) Issue Estoppel

[45] The second branch of the doctrine of res judicata prevents litigants from attempting to re-litigate the same point or issue against the same party even though the overall cause of action now being pursued may be different. Where a material fact or issue in a proceeding has already been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, that fact or issue may not be attacked or thrown into dispute in subsequent proceedings among the same parties: Danyluk*, supra,* at para. 54.

[46] In Danyluk and Angle, supra, and the Supreme Court of Canada adopted the three-part test for issue estoppel first framed by Lord Guest in Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner & Keeler Ltd. (No. 2), [1967] 1 A.C. 853 at p. 935:

(1) that the same question has been decided;
(2) that the judicial decision which is said to create the estoppel was final; and
(3) that the parties to the judicial decision or their privies were the same persons as the parties to the proceedings in which the estoppel is raised or their privies.

[47] Issue estoppel applies to any issue of fact, law, and mixed fact and law that is necessarily bound up with the determination of that issue in a prior proceeding: Danyluk, supra, at para. 54. However, it acts to bar further proceedings on such issues only in circumstances where it is clear from the facts that the question has already been decided: R. v. Van Rassel, 1990 CanLII 124 (SCC), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 225, 53 C.C.C. (3d) 353 at para. 32.

ABUSE OF PROCESS

[48] As Madam Justice Allan did in the First Mott Action, the court may, in the alternative to applying the doctrine of res judicata, apply the doctrine of abuse of process, which was recently restated by the Supreme Court of Canada in Toronto (City) v. Canadian Union of Public Employees, 2003 SCC 63 (CanLII), [2003] 3 S.C.R. 77, 2003 SCC 63 at para. 35:

Judges have an inherent and residual discretion to prevent an abuse of the court's process. This concept of abuse of process was described at common law as proceedings "unfair to the point that they are contrary to the interest of justice" (R. v. Power, 1994 CanLII 126 (SCC), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 601, at p. 616), and as "oppressive treatment" (R. v. Conway, 1989

CanLII 66 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1659, at p. 1667). McLachlin J. (as she then was) expressed it this way in R. v. Scott, 1990 CanLII 27 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 979, at p. 1007:

... abuse of process may be established where: (1) the proceedings are oppressive or vexatious; and, (2) violate the fundamental principles of justice underlying the community's sense of fair play and decency. The concepts of oppressiveness and vexatiousness underline the interest of the accused in a fair trial. But the doctrine evokes as well the public interest in a fair and just trial process and the proper administration of justice.

[49] The doctrine of abuse of process is more flexible than res judicata and is typically invoked where the requirements of issue estoppel are not strictly met, yet it is apparent that the applicant is attempting to re-litigate a matter or to otherwise undermine the consistency and finality of judicial decision-making.

COLLATERAL ATTACK

[50] Another closely related doctrine to that of res judicata or abuse of process is the rule against collateral attack on final judgments. In R v. Wilson, 1983 CanLII 35 (SCC), [1983] 2 S.C.R. 594, 4 D.L.R. (4th) 577, the Supreme Court of Canada stated the rule as follows:

It has long been a fundamental rule that a court order, made by a court having jurisdiction to make it, stands and is binding and conclusive unless it is set aside on appeal or lawfully quashed. It is also well settled in the authorities that such an order may not be attacked collaterally and a collateral attack may be described as an attack made in proceedings other than those whose specific object is the reversal, variation, or nullification of the order or judgment.

[51] In Roeder v. Lang Michener Lawrence & Shaw, 2005 BCSC 1784 (CanLII), 2005 BCSC 1784, [2005] B.C.J. No. 2830 (QL) at para. 23, Rogers J. stated:

A proceeding is a collateral attack when it asserts facts inconsistent with a previous factual determination by a court that had jurisdiction to make it, or when the proceeding seeks relief that is inconsistent with a previous disposition by a similarly competent court. To be a collateral attack it is not necessary that the proceeding bluntly assert that the previous order should be set aside.

[52] Thus, if the present proceedings are found to be a collateral attack on the orders of Justices Shaw, Tysoe, Thackray, Allan, or Davies, or on any of the orders of the Court of Appeal refusing Mr. Mott leave to appeal, the proposed action may be struck as an abuse of the court's process.

DISCRETION FOR SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES

[53] The application of an estoppel to bar future litigation is not automatic, nor is it guaranteed. As Finch J.A. (as he then was) explained in British Columbia (Minister of Forests) v. Bugbusters Pest Management 1998 CanLII 6467 (BC CA), (1998), 50 B.C.L.R. (3d) 1, 159 D.L.R. (4th) 50 (C.A.) at para. 32:

It must always be remembered that although the three requirements for issue estoppel must be satisfied before it can apply, the fact that they may be satisfied does not automatically give rise to its application. Issue estoppel is an equitable doctrine, and as can be seen from the cases, is closely related to abuse of process. The doctrine of issue estoppel is designed as an implement of justice, and a protection against injustice. It inevitably calls upon the exercise of judicial discretion to achieve fairness according to the circumstances of each case.

[54] The same principle applies to cause of action estoppel and the doctrines of res judicata, abuse of process, and collateral attack in general. A court must retain a residual discretion to refuse to apply any form of estoppel when do to so would be contrary to the requirements of justice. As the Supreme Court of Canada explained in Danyluk, supra, at para. 33: "The underlying purpose is to balance the public interest in the finality of litigation with the public interest in ensuring that justice is done on the facts of a particular case."

POSITION OF UNITED

[55] United argues that the breaches of fiduciary duty alleged against PWC have not been raised before now and so constitute a new cause or causes of action that must be brought before the court for resolution.

[56] According to United, the only issue before Mr. Justice Thackray during the applications for approval of sales of the United Lands was whether or not a fair price had been secured in all of the circumstances. It says that the court was not asked to consider what duty of care the receiver had with respect to preserving the goodwill of the business and the property, nor was the court asked to consider the nature of the duty of the receiver to achieve the best possible price, a duty that United says was owed to all interested parties, including the bankrupt and the shareholders of the bankrupt. The court was not called upon to make a ruling whether the receiver had breached its fiduciary duty to preserve the property and to achieve the highest price for the property. Therefore, a person appearing at the applications for approval could not possibly succeed on a request for a trial so that such allegations could be judicially determined, and neither of the parties could have reasonably expected that that the outcome of the sale approval would bar a future action for breach of fiduciary duty. United relies on the comments of Finch J.A. (as he then was) in Bugbusters, supra, to argue that a reasonable expectation of that kind is required before a party can be estopped from pursuing further action.

[57] Referring to Bennett on Receiverships, 2nd ed, (Toronto: Carswell, 1999) at p. 182-83 and p. 247, United says that the courts will generally follow the recommendation of a receiver and leave it to the receiver to assess offers to purchase a debtor's assets, accepting that the price put forward by the receiver is the best possible price obtainable. It is uncertain whether United means to imply that the court did not apply itself to the independent duty that it has to ensure a fair price during the sale approval proceedings. Certainly the implication seems to be that the court did not seriously consider the issues related to PWC's wrongful conduct, which Mr. Mott raised during the sale approval hearings.

[58] United contends that due to the summary nature of the proceedings, which does not permit oral or documentary discoveries or interrogatories, Mr. Justice Thackray was not in a position to judge the sufficiency of the evidence relating to these allegations of wrongdoing. It is on this basis that United distinguishes the case of Toronto Dominion Bank v. Preston Springs Gardens Inc., [2006] O.J. No. 1834 (QL) (Ont. Sup. Ct. J.), in which res judicata was found to apply to claims of breach of duty and negligence against a receiver that had been the subject of detailed evidence and full argument in an earlier proceeding.

[59] United argues that it never had the opportunity to bring forward its claims of breach of fiduciary duty. Even if Mr. Justice Thackray had directed a trial as Mr. Mott had requested, the issue of breach of fiduciary duty could not have been tried at that time as it had no relationship whatever to constructive expropriation, which was the basis advanced for the deceit and conspiracy claims.

[60] Moreover, United says that although Mr. Justice Thackray was entitled to refuse to order a trial of the issue, the reasons that he provided with respect to allegations of conspiracy and fraud had no judicial weight because he had already determined that the issue was not properly before him. United says that Madam Justice Allan was therefore wrong in her view that Mr. Justice Thackray had considered all of the issues, that it was wrong for Mr. Justice Davies to concur, and that it would be wrong for this court to make a similar finding with respect to the allegations and issues in the proposed statement of claim.

[61] United argues that both Madam Justice Allan and Mr. Justice Davies should have recognized that the evidence required to succeed in the claim of constructive expropriation would not be sufficient to support a claim of conspiracy, which necessitated a new action against PWC. United claims that this was confirmed by Mr. Justice Thackray when he expressed his view that the matter was not before him. According to United, a tort of conspiracy requires collusion and an agreement of the parties acting together to injure an individual. That is distinct from what is required to prove a constructive expropriation, on the grounds advanced before Mr. Justice Thackray, and it is different again from what is required to prove a breach of fiduciary duty, on the grounds alleged in this action.

[62] United cites Re Caswan Environmental Services Inc., 2001 ABQB 240 (CanLII), (2001), 287 A.R. 11, 2001 ABQB 240 at p. 197, as support for its contention that the courts have recognized the impracticality, for the sake of justice, of forcing certain actions to be tried together:

The principle of avoiding litigation by installment [sic] must be tempered by practical considerations. The plaintiff's original application for declaratory relief would have bogged down the judicial process if it were coupled with an action for resultant damages. Common sense dictates that a determination as to the validity of the competing security interests should have been made before a damage claim was advanced. ... It is unlikely that any court would have granted leave to sue an interim receiver for damages until a declaration as to the entitlement of the goods was made. In practical terms there was no way in which a damage claim could have proceeded contemporaneously with the declaratory relief sought.

[63] United also says that Madam Justice Allan should have realized that she could dispose of the First Mott Action on the basis of lack of jurisdiction, and had she done so, res judicata would not arise to bar the proposed claims. According to United, because it was bankrupt, the BIA dictates what proceedings could be brought to set aside a sale, and leave was required, but not obtained, to begin the First Mott Action. As the BIA provides a complete code on the subject, United says Madam Justice Allan could, and should, have concluded that there was no jurisdiction to hear the action. The same argument appears to be made against the decision of Mr. Justice Davies in the Second Mott Action.

[64] On the question of mutuality of parties, United argues that the proposed action involves different parties in that Mr. Abakhan, as the new trustee for United, would bring the action against PWC itself for acts and omissions committed when acting as both receiver and trustee. United says that the previous actions involved PWC only as a representative of United. Moreover, on the application for a trial of the issue of constructive expropriation, Mr. Mott represented himself personally, and United was not represented at the hearings, thus according to United, the parties to the various proceedings are not the same and no estoppel may bar the proposed action.

[65] Finally, United asserts that the proposed action is based on new evidence that could not have been discovered with reasonable diligence at or before the earlier proceedings. Alternatively, United argues that this new evidence constitutes a "special circumstance" sufficient to permit the court to refuse to apply an estoppel should grounds for one be made out. United describes the new evidence as follows:

(a) information that prior to entering into the agreement of purchase and sale with the PNE, Surrey had made a commitment to the Province to re-zone the lands to permit commercial use of the PNE Lands including a casino;
(b) information about the sale price of lot 7 from Advance Lumber to the PNE, which would have provided the court with a good indicator of value;
(c) information showing the lack of any offers and counter-offers leading up to the agreement of purchase and sale with respect to the PNE which is evidence from which an inference can be drawn that PWC failed in its duty to aggressively seek the best possible price; and
(d) evidence which demonstrates the ease with which PWC was able to commence a salvage parts operation on lot 24 to maintain salvage zoning for that lot and evience from which the court can infer the court was misled by PWC as to the non-salvage use of the Replacement Lands.

POSITION OF PWC

[66] PWC says that the complaints in the proposed statement of claim are essentially the same as those that were raised in the sale approval proceedings and also in both the First and Second Mott Actions. The Mott Actions were not confined to allegations of conspiracy. They included claims of breach of trust and deceit. PWC prepared a list of passages from the affidavits and submissions filed in the sale approval application before Mr. Justice Thackray and in the First Mott Action before Madam Justice Allan, as well as quotations from the learned justices' judgments, which demonstrate that the issues now raised were all before the court in those earlier proceedings. These passages are as follows:

(a) "the receiver... is seemingly beholden to making a transaction with the P.N.E. to the detriment of the interest of the United Group creditors." (May 10, 2001, affidavit of Ian Mott, para. 49)
(b) "the Trustee seems only to be interested in serving only the interests of the secured creditors, the Royal Bank and Century Services and includes Aziz in this group. (May 10, 2001, affidavit of Ian Mott, para. 56; May 14, 2001, submissions of H. Mott, page 26, lines 2-5)
(c) "The Trustee's actions, taken individually and as a whole unreasonably favor the interests of the PNE and are a betrayal of his duty to the interests of the ordinary creditors. The Trustee as appointed auditor of the PNE is favoring the interests of the PNE and as Trustee in Bankruptcy of the United Group defrauding the ordinary and other creditors." (May 10, 2001, affidavit of Ian Mott, para. 61; May 14, 2001, submissions of H. Mott, page 27, lines 32-39)
(d) "... United's interests and those of the secured and unsecured creditors who will not be paid by the sale to the P.N.E. are not being properly served by the trustee who ought to be acting in good faith and without any appearance of conflict. The fact is that the trustee PricewaterhouseCoopers (P.W.C.) is both a trustee of the United Group of Companies in bankruptcy as well as the appointed auditors of the P.N.E." (May 10, 2001, affidavit of Ian Mott, para. 64; May 14, 2001, submissions of H. Mott, page 28, lines 29-37)
(e) "... we don't think the trustee is acting on behalf of the best interests of all the creditors. We feel he's acting only in the interest of the major secured creditors." (May 14, 2001, submissions of H. Mott, page 16, lines 19-23)
(f) "... it's not clear to me that the trustee is representing the unsecured creditors at all." (May 14, 2001, submissions of H. Mott, page 49, lines 25-27)
(g) "... the trustee and receiver, for any bankruptcy, never mind one as big as this, and as complex as this, should never be in conflict. They should be totally independent parties..." (May 14, 2001, submissions of I. Mott, page 49, lines 36-40)
(h) "the Motts questioned the propriety of the PricewaterhouseCoopers being both the receiver and the trustee." (May 15, 2001, reasons for judgment of Thackray J., para. 7)
(i) "[Mr. Mott's] submission was grounded upon assertions of improprieties. The Court on several occasions informed Mr. Mott that to establish the improprieties, that went so far as to allege fraud, it was necessary for him to produce evidence." (May 15, 2001, reasons for judgment of Thackray J., para. 50)
(j) "Mr. Mott then deposed as to the 'inappropriate actions' of the trustee and concluded that 'the trustee was intent on raising quick liquid cash to finance his receivership and sought the easy route of disposing of the inventory and chattels of the businesses for a value 'well below its actual market value.' He added:

61. The Trustee's actions, taken individually and as a whole unreasonably favour the interests of the PNE and are a betrayal of his duty to the interests of the ordinary creditors. The Trustee as appointed auditor of the PNE is favouring the interest of the PNE and as Trustee in Bankruptcy of the United Group defrauding the ordinary and other creditors.

I asked Mr. Mott if I was correct in reading this to mean that Mr. Mott was alleging fraud on the part of the trustee. He said that I was." (May 15, 2001, reasons for judgment of Thackray J., paras. 65 and 66)
(k) "... in recommending this sale at what we now realize was a grossly inadequate sum, the Receiver had a duty to the Court to disclose its own conflict of interest. Unknown to Mr. Clark and his client and not disclosed to the Court was the fact that the Receiver was and remains this purchaser's auditors." (May 2001, Outline of I. Mott, page 6, par. 2(aa))

(l) "The Plaintiffs claim against the Defendants, and each of them, for damages and loss resulting from breach of trust, deceit, and conspiring to transfer to the Defendant purchasers... the aforesaid interests in parcels of land unlawfully for less than fair market value... The Defendants conspired to depress the maket [sic] of the lands and the Defendant purchasers obtained the lands the lands [sic] and intersts [sic] in the lands owned by the Plaintiffs for less than true market value." (Endorsement to Amended Writ of Summons dated August 15, 2001, in the First Mott Action)

(m) "The relief which the Plaintiffs seek in the present action is the return of the subject lands to the United Group... and for additional damages, including the loss of profits suffered by the Plaintiffs which resulted from wrongful interference with contractual arrangements, misrepresentations, deceit, breach of trust and other illegal actions on the part of the Defendants..." (August 18, 2001, affidavit of Ian Mott sworn in the First Mott Action, para. 6)

(n) "... the PNE, Colliers International, the Receiver/Trustee (PricewaterhouseCoopers Inc.), the City of Surrey, the Province of B.C., Golders Associates, and others have worked in concert to frustrate and prevent fair value marketing of the subject lands by delaying the public listing of the individual lots until December 200, by discouraging prospective purchasers from making offers, and by refusing to process offers on the subject lands from prospective purchasers." (August 18, 2001, affidavit of Ian Mott sworn in the First Mott Action, para. 14)

(o) "[Mr. Mott is] claiming damages, once the land's returned, for the improper conduct. He's alleging for the first time breach of trust, deceit. The word "conspiring" or "conspiracy" has come up in his mind and from his mouth before without him even knowing the meaning of that. The – what he's saying is that, according to his affidavit evidence, is that the Royal Bank, Century Services, the receiver, Advance Lumber, the Aziz group and the PNE in particular, have worked together to transfer the lands to the PNE, and of course to Advance in this case, for amounts that clearly are not anywhere near the fair market value, and they've done so deceitfully, and that is dishonestly." (August 22, 2001, submissions of P. Formby, counsel for Mr. Mott, in the First Mott Action, page 51, lines15-29)

(p) "And that history, I'd like to be very clear, I don't think it's ever been properly presented before the court. And – and to do it properly, It would take a trial, and the simply cases with respect to what there – what happened thereafter with the – I would say the powerful players as opposed to those that didn't have any power with respect to the conduct of the receiver in an application, what will be alleged obviously, you know, is that there's grave misgivings with respect to the duty, the fiduciary duty of the receiver being breached, where there's an application I believe where the Royal Bank to have this particular receiver appointed, PricewaterhouseCoopers. And this is a court appointed receiver that should know of its particular duty with respect to all interested parties, not just to secured creditors." (August 22, 2001, submissions of P. Formby in the First Mott Action, page 66, lines 32-45)

(q) "Both plaintiffs claim for damages as a result of the defendants' breach of trust, deceit, and conspiracy to depress the market values of the lands. Mr. Mott alleges a wrongful sale of the lands, and seeks to have those transactions reversed." (August 23, 2001, reasons for judgment of Allan, J., para. 33)

(r) "[PWC] had a duty to pursue... the contract that [the United Group] had with the City of Surrey." (September 26, 2002, submissions of I. Mott in the Second Mott Action, pages 32-33)

[67] PWC submits that Mr. Mott should not be permitted to continue to litigate these same claims simply by recasting his grievance as a breach of fiduciary duty owed by PWC, or even by introducing some new fact. PWC argues that this amounts to litigating by instalment, and the court ought not to permit it or force PWC to bear the hardship resulting from having to defend further litigation: Melcor Developments Ltd. v. Edmonton (City) 1982 CanLII 1139 (AB QB), (1982), 37 A.R. 532, 136 D.L.R. (3d) 695 (Q.B.)

[68] In response to Mr. Mott's argument before Madam Justice Allan that some of the allegations were never "properly framed in any type of claim other than in opposition to the sale of the lands" and so no cause of action was ever advanced against PWC in the prior proceedings, PWC argues that any of the issues now raised are issues that either were raised or should have been raised in any event because they formed part of the same subject matter of the earlier litigation: See Henderson and Chapman, supra.

[69] PWC contends that each of the allegations of misconduct on the part of PWC as trustee and receiver were raised in affidavits and argument during the sale approval proceeding and that these allegations were fundamental to Mr. Justice Thackray's decision in that he could not have approved the sale if he found that any of these allegations had merit. As the sale was approved, the issues must be deemed to have been finally determined: Toronto Dominion Bank, supra, citing Bank of America Canada v. Willann Investments Ltd. reflex, (1993), 23 C.B.R. (3d) 98, [1993] O.J. No. 3039 (QL) (Gen. Div.)

[70] On the issue of mutuality of the parties, PWC says, firstly, that mutuality is not lost by replacing PWC with Mr. Abakhan as the trustee in bankruptcy for United. Regardless of what individual or company is acting as trustee, the trustee was a party to the foreclosure actions and certainly had the opportunity to appear on the relevant hearings. Whether or not it chose to do so is, according to PWC, irrelevant; a party is bound by a decision in which they could have

[71] PWC also argues that there is no loss of privity because of the fact that Mr. Mott purported to appear on his own behalf as a creditor and shareholder of United in some of the proceedings and on behalf of United itself in others. PWC argued that according to the judgment of Mr. Justice Tysoe in Lang Michener LLP v. American Bullion Minerals Ltd., 2006 BCSC 504 (CanLII), 2006 BCSC 504, [2006] B.C.J. No. 685 (QL), there is a residual power in the directors of a company to oppose the enforcement of security on behalf of a company, and this is clearly what Mr. Mott was doing. In doing so, Mr. Mott raised any and all arguments that could have been made on behalf of the trustee and the estates of the bankrupt companies.

[72] Accordingly, PWC argues that the parties to the proposed action are the same as were parties to the previous proceedings, and mutuality is not lost. PWC relies on Sopinka, Lederman, and Bryant, The Law of Evidence in Canada, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1999) at p.1088, where the learned editors note that: "it is impossible to be categorical about the degree of interest which will create privity." Mutuality will arise where there is "a sufficient degree of identification between the two to make it just to hold that the decision to which one was party should be binding in proceedings to which the other is party."

[73] As regards any special circumstances, PWC cautions that the courts have treated the discretion to refuse to apply res judicata as a very limited one, and "the fact that harsh results follow the application of the doctrine has not deterred its application by the courts": General Motors of Canada Ltd. v. Naken, 1983 CanLII 19 (SCC), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 72 at p. 101, 144 D.L.R. (3d) 385; Manolescu v. Manolescu, 2003 BCSC 1094 (CanLII), (2003) 47 C.B.R. (4th) 77, 2003 BCSC 1094 at para. 10.

[74] For all the details provided in the proposed Statement of Claim as to the wrongdoing of PWC, I agree with the submission of PWC that, essentially, the claims sought to be advanced boil down to the following:

(a) PWC as receiver failed to obtain the best possible price for the sale of the United Lands, which were worth more than the amount for which they were sold;

(b) the PNE was the audit client of PWC, and, as a result of that relationship, PWC was in a conflict of interest and participated in a conspiracy with the PNE and the City of Surrey (among others) to sell the United Lands to the PNE at less than fair market value;

(c) PWC failed to preserve the industrial-salvage zoning of some of the lots in the United Lands, resulting in a reduction of the value of those lots;

(d) PWC failed to apply for rezoning of some of the United Lands to highway-commercial, such that the potential value of the United Lands was not realized; and

(e) PWC failed to market the United Lands properly.

[75] In my view, the cause of action proposed in the draft statement of claim, and the issues sought to be advanced, arise from the same relationship and the same subject matter as was adjudicated in the proceedings before Mr. Justice Thackray, Madam Justice Allan, and Mr. Justice Davies. The facts and issues now raised were squarely before the court in the sale approval proceeding and in both Mott Actions.

[76] Mr. Mott admits that he had the opportunity to be heard, and was heard, as an interested party during the sale approval applications before Mr. Justice Thackray. Mr. Mott argued strenuously that the sale ought not to be approved. In his submissions and affidavit evidence, he put before the court each of the allegations regarding PWC's conduct that are set out above as being the issues to be determined in the proposed action, including specifically the alleged conflict of interest, conspiracy to sell at less than fair market value, and each failure to perform those actions that would have resulted in obtaining the best possible price for the United Lands. I cannot accede to United's contention that it had no opportunity to make these claims.

[77] As Madam Justice Allan noted, Mr. Justice Thackray issued lengthy and carefully considered reasons for his decision to approve the sale. Leave to appeal was sought and dismissed. These same arguments were again brought before Madam Justice Allan and then again before Mr. Justice Davies. Both found that the issues had been litigated and determined such that it would be an abuse of the court's process to review them once again. No appeal was taken of either of these decisions.

[78] Mr. Mott now advances a few items of evidence that apparently did not come into his hands until after the two Mott Actions were concluded. I find that some of this evidence was discoverable with reasonable diligence prior to the sale approval proceedings and certainly prior to the Mott Actions. The rest I do not weigh as critical. Although it may not have been discoverable prior to the sale approval proceeding, it does not bring to light any new issue or cause of action formerly unknown or unpursued by Mr. Mott, nor is it likely that this evidence would have substantially altered the outcome of the previous proceedings.

Digitized by Google

[79] While it is correct to say that breach of fiduciary duty, constructive expropriation, and conspiracy are each distinguishable as causes of action, the record shows that the evidence and argument offered to oppose the sale in the hearing before Mr. Justice Thackray included all of the allegations that Mr. Mott would now seek to prove in the case at bar. The same is true for both the Mott Actions, in which the claim alleged was not conspiracy alone but also breach of trust and deceit, which require much the same evidence as against PWC as the breaches of fiduciary duty now alleged. Any minor differences in the facts and issues raised in the proposed action belonged, in every case, to the subject matter of the earlier litigation. Mr. Mott has simply changed the legal description of his claim to facilitate re-litigation of the same issues.

[80] I also accept PWC's argument that the requirements of issue estoppel are met for each issue now raised in the proposed statement of claim. There is sufficient connection to create privity. The appointment of a new trustee will not undermine the mutuality of parties required for the application of issue estoppel to the issues in the proposed action. The parties involved in all the previous proceedings include PWC, United, and Mr. Mott as either named parties or interested parties. The fact that Mr. Mott appeared variously in his capacity as shareholder, creditor, or director of United does not, in my view, seriously affect the mutuality requirement in this case. As Mr. Mott concedes that the previous decisions were final, and as I have found that the same issues were litigated, the proposed action is barred in its entirety by the doctrine of issue estoppel.

[81] However, even if the requirements of issue estoppel were not strictly met, I would dismiss the proposed action as an abuse of process and impermissible collateral attack on the judgments of Mr. Justice Thackray, Madam Justice Allan, and Mr. Justice Davies. Many of United's arguments are directed at challenging various aspects of Madam Justice Allan and Mr. Justice Davies' reasons for judgment. Yet Mr. Mott does not appear to have attempted an appeal of either decision. He has chosen instead to recast his claim yet again to avoid the outcome of those judgments.

[82] Mr. Mott raises an interesting argument that the summary nature of an application for sale ought to be considered a "special circumstance" leading the court to refuse to apply an estoppel that would bar a trial of an action where the evidence may be much more thoroughly tested. The record shows, however, that this same argument was presented to Mr. Justice Thackray and Madam Justice Allan and was not accepted by either of them. The court, by its own account, carefully addressed the issues arising between these parties, even though the issues were brought forward in a summary proceeding.

[83] As regards the argument that Madam Justice Allan should have disposed of the action on the basis of lack of jurisdiction, clearly that is an issue that should have been put before Madam Justice Allan with resort to the Court of Appeal if necessary. It is not an issue for this court to resolve in the case at bar.

[84] Similarly, as to the statements in Mr. Justice Thackray's reasons for judgment with respect to the allegations of fraud and conspiracy and his refusal to direct a trial on the issue of constructive expropriation, Mr. Mott was entitled to seek leave to appeal that decision and did so. The Court of Appeal dismissed his leave application. Mr. Mott then applied further to stay the decision and vary the order of the Court of Appeal. Again, his application was dismissed. It is not for this court to sit in further judgment of the sufficiency and accuracy of those reasons or the orders they support.

[85] Nothing advanced in the current proceeding or sought to be advanced in the proposed action alters the fact that all the material facts and issues underlying the breaches of duty now alleged were raised, considered, and rejected either explicitly or implicitly in the finding that the sales of the United Lands were made for fair market value through an appropriate process approved by the court.

[86] Two judges of this court have declared that to adjudicate further on the matters brought before the court in the First and Second Mott Actions would be an abuse of process. Nothing arises in the present proceedings to change that view. I can find no special circumstances sufficient to militate against the application of the doctrines of res judicata, abuse of process, and collateral attack. Mr. Mott has had the opportunity to have his objections to the sale and his allegations of misconduct by PWC heard. This is a strong case for bringing finality to the litigation. To allow the trustee to commence the proposed action would be inconsistent with three previous orders of this court, and I can find no compelling reason for taking such a course.

CONCLUSION

[87] Mr. Mott's overriding contention has been that the United Lands were sold at less than fair market value for wrongful reasons. The court rejected that contention expressly in the sale approval application before Mr. Justice Thackray. Two other judges have declined to permit that claim and its related issues to be re-litigated. In my view, the claims sought to be pursued are res judicata and an abuse of process.

[88] The sole reason for the application to remove PWC as trustee was to provide United with a trustee that had the capacity to sue PWC so that these same issues could be re-opened. As there is no reason to re-open the claims, there is no reason to remove PWC as trustee at this time. The application is dismissed with costs as scale 3.

COOPERS & LYBRAND LIMITED, in its capacity as Trustee in Bankruptcy of the Estate of Associated Freezers of Canada Inc. APPLICANT
-and-
RETAIL, WHOLESALE CANADA, LOCAL 1015 (Division of U.S.W.A.) RESPONDENT

CHAMBERS DECISION
Heard Before: Justice J. Michael MacDonald in Chambers on October 3, 1995, at Halifax, Nova Scotia
Decision: (Orally) October 12, 1995
Written Release of Decision: October 25, 1995
Counsel: John MacPherson and Richard Rafuse, Q.C. for the Applicant
Ronald Pink, Q.C., for the Respondent
Ann Barrett for Mr. Pink (Decision)

In April of this year Associated Freezers of Canada Inc. (together with affiliated companies) was petitioned into bankruptcy by order of Mr. Justice Spence of the Ontario Court, General Division. Coopers& Lybrand Limited, the applicant herein, was the named trustee.

Prior to bankruptcy, Associated carried on operations at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, with certain of its employees represented by the respondent. The respondent was a party to a collective agreement with Associated. This agreement was in force at the time of the bankruptcy.

Since the bankruptcy the trustee continues to operate out of the Dartmouth facilities, employing all members of the respondent union who previously worked for Associated. Before taking over the Dartmouth operations the trustee had each employee sign an employment contract acknowledging that the trustee was not a successor employer (Tab F of the Pettit affidavit).

The respondent not being a party to these contracts applied in June of this year to the Nova Scotia Labour Relations Board seeking a declaration that the trustee is a successor employer by virtue of Section 31 of the Trade Union Act, R.S.N.S.(1989) as amended.

Digitized by Google

The trustee has applied to this Court for an order declaring the application before the Labour Relations Board stayed.

The parties have agreed upon the following issues:

(1) Is the respondent's application to the Labour Relations Board stayed by the operation of Section 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA")?

(2) Is the respondent's application to the Labour Relations Board stayed by the operation of Section 69.3 of the BIA?

(3) Is the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia (in Bankruptcy) the proper forum to hear an application pursuant to Section 215 or Section 69.3 of the BIA?

(4) Can the trustee be deemed to be a successor employer?

Is the respondent's application to the Labour Relations Board stayed by the operation of Section 215 of the BIA?

Section 215 of the BIA provides:

> "215 Except by leave of the Court, no action lies against the Superintendent, an official receiver, an interim receiver or a trustee with respect to any report made under, or any action taken pursuant to, this Act."

By virtue of Section 215, the trustee is protected from actions or other proceedings except by leave of the court. Re: Wilanour Resources Limited (1982), 43 C.B.R. (N.S.) 153 Ontario Supreme Court (in Bankruptcy).

The respondent in failing to seek leave maintains that Section 215 has no application to the case at bar. It submits that the trustee is automatically a successor by virtue of Section 31 of the Nova Scotia Trade Union Act.

Section 31 reads in part:

> "31(1) Where an employer sells, leases or transfers or agrees to sell, lease or transfer his business or the operations thereof or any part of either of them and either
> > (a) the employer or the purchaser, lessee or transferee or any of them is a party to or is bound by a collective agreement with a bargaining agent on behalf of any employees affected by the sale, lease or transfer or contract...
> unless the Board otherwise directs, the collective agreement, certification, application, notice or entitlement to give notice continues in force and is binding upon the purchaser, lessee or transferee."

The respondent therefore submits that the trustee has failed to acknowledge the provisions of the Trade Union Act by not recognizing the respondent's statutory successor rights and the existing collective agreement. This failure it maintains is therefore not "an action" of the trustee "taken pursuant to the BIA."

The respondent is correct in that leave is not required if the trustee fails to take action otherwise required by law, A. Marquette & Fils Inc. v. Mercure (1975), 10 N.R. 239 (Supreme Court of Canada). However, in the case at bar I am asked to assume that the trustee is automatically a successor employer, and therefore bound by the collective agreement. This is clearly not the case. Clause 8 of the order of Mr. Justice Spence states just the opposite:

> "8. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Receiver...shall not...be or be deemed to be a successor employer within the meaning of any legislation, federal, provincial or otherwise, which may have application in any jurisdiction in which any of the Business and Assets are situate or pursuant to any agreement with any union or employee."

This is a valid order of the Ontario Court with jurisdiction over this issue.

Furthermore, I find that upon bankruptcy all employment with the bankrupt terminated. Mr. Justice Austin of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Re: Rizzo and Rizzo Shoes Limited (1995) 30 C.B.R. (3d), at page 13 noted:

> I conclude that while the Ministry had the status to make these claims on behalf of the former employees of Rizzo, no liability arose with respect to termination, severance, or vacation pay, because the employment was ended by the order of bankruptcy and not by the act of the employer.

The fact that the court in Rizzo was dealing with a non-union situation is not material to the issue before me. With no employment there can be no collective agreement.

I agree with Justice Abella in Re: St. Mary's Paper (1994), 26 C.B.R. (3d) 27: (Ont. C.A.) where at page 291 she states:

Digitized by Google

> Contracts of employment with employees, including collective agreements, terminate with a bankruptcy.

In the case at Bar the trustee did not omit to take action as envisaged by the Supreme Court of Canada in Marquette. It acted under the authority of the BIA b3 entering into new contracts of employment with the workers. The trustee is therefore protected by Section 215. The respondent must secure leave before applying to the Labour Relations Board.

Alternatively, I have been asked by the respondent to grant leave nunc pro tunc.

In appropriate circumstances this court may grant leave to proceed nunc pro tunc. This was confirmed by Chief Justice Glube of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court Trial Division in MacCulloch (Bankrupt) 1992 CanLII 2796 (NS SC), (1992), 115 N.S.R. (2d) 131.

In light of the clear wording of clause 8 of the Spence order and in light of my finding that the trustee is not bound by the collective agreement it would be inappropriate for this Court to grant leave.

By virtue of Section 188(1) of the BIA, I declare the respondent's application to the Labour Relations Board stayed.

My consideration of the remaining issues is therefore no longer necessary. These issues are, nonetheless, worthy of comment:

Is the Respondent's Application to the Labour Relations Board stayed by the operation of Section 69.3 of the BIA?

Section 69.3 of the BIA provides in part:

> "693(1)...no creditor..shall commence...any...other proceedings, for the recovery of a claim provable in bankruptcy until the trustee has been discharged."

The trustee submits that the respondent's Section 31 application is a proceeding for a claim provable in bankruptcy as defined by Section 121 of BIA:

Section 121 (1):

> "All debts and liabilities, present or future, to which the bankrupt is subject on the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt or to which the bankrupt may become subject before the bankrupt's discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt shall be deemed to be claims provable in proceedings under this Act."

The respondent submits that its application relates only to the activities of the trustee since bankruptcy as employer of the members of the respondent union. Yet, the respondent makes no such qualification in its Form 12 application (exhibit G of the Pettit affidavit).

Furthermore, one cannot consider successor rights in isolation. For example, vacation rights under the collective agreement are dictated by pre-bankruptcy activities, thereby making Section 69.3 of the BIA applicable. The respondent's application is therefore stayed also by virtue of Section 69.3 of the BIA.

Is the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia (in Bankruptcy) the proper forum to hear an application pursuant to Section 215 or Section 69.3 of the BIA?

The trustee is correct when it submits that, in effect, the respondent is asking the Labour Relations Board to vary clause 8 of the Spence order. Any such application should be brought before the Ontario Court under Section 187(5) of the BIA which reads:

> "Every court may review, rescind or vary an order made by it under its bankruptcy legislation."

While this Court can enforce Justice Spence's order by virtue of Section 188 of the BIA it cannot, and should not, vary the terms of the Ontario order. The fact that the respondent received no notice of the Ontario hearing is a matter for that court to consider on an application to vary.

Can the trustee be deemed to be a successor employer?

I have already answered this question in the negative but I will elaborate further on a point raised by counsel for the respondent.

There is case law to support the fact that collective agreements do not terminate upon the appointment of a court appointed receiver Re: Ontario Labour Relations Act: Maritime Life Assurance Co. v. Chateau Gardens (Hanover) Inc. et al. reflex, (1983), 2 D.L.R. (4th) 553, Ontario High Court. This makes sense. Court appointed receivers are appointed to manage an existing enterprise.

Digitized by Google

In bankruptcy however the bankrupt by law ceases operation. For this reason employment terminates. With no employment there can be no collective agreement. Therefore, while trustees and receivers may perform similar functions their mandates are quite distinct.

In the case at Bar the trustee could have opted to close the plant down entirely putting all employees permanently out of work. Instead it decided to operate the plant. It did so on the strength of Justice Spence's order declaring successor rights inapplicable. It would be improper for this court to change the proverbial "rules of the game" at this stage. The trustees application is therefore granted.

If counsel cannot agree on costs, I invite written submissions within two weeks.

Ontario Court of Justice (General Division) [In Bankruptcy] Spence J.

Judgment – May 25, 1995.

(Docs. 31-205284-T, 31-205285-T, 31-205286-T)

May 25, 1995. Endorsement.

[1] SPENCE J.: – The United Food & Commercial Workers Union, Local 175 (the "union") seeks leave nunc pro tunc to continue certain proceedings which it has initiated against Peat Marwick Thorne Inc. ("PMTI") under the Labour Relations Act (the "UOLRA") and the Hospital Labour Disputes Arbitration Act (the "HLDAA".). By a court order dated December 14, 1994, PMTI was appointed the trustee in bankruptcy of three companies, 588871 Ontario Limited, 542212 Ontario Limited and Grosvenor Health Care Partnership (No. 2). These companies have carried on or held an interest in the business of the Quinte Beach Nursing Home (the "home"). The union has been the certified bargaining agent for certain of the employees employed at the home, under a collective agreement dated September 29, 1991.

[2] PMTI, as trustee, seeks an order that the proceedings brought by the union under the OLRA are stayed by operation of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (the "BIA").

[3] The proceedings brought by the union against PMTI are as follows:

(i) an application dated January 31, 1995, under s. 64 of the OLRA, to have PMTI declared a successor employer;

(ii) an application dated January 31, 1995, under s. 91 of the OLRA alleging violation of ss. 65, 67, 69 and 81(1) of the OLRA;

(iii) requests dated January 31, 1995 and February 28, 1995, for the appointment of an arbitrator pursuant to s. 46 of the OLRA; and

(iv) an interest arbitration proceeding under the HLDAA.

Digitized by Google

[4] Whether the proceedings mentioned in items (ii) through (iv) may properly be brought against PMTI appear to depend in part on a determination being made in the proceeding referred to in item (i) to the effect that PMTI is a successor employer under the OLRA.

Background

[5] On or about November 30, 1994, PMTI took over the day-today operations of the home in its capacity as the interim receiver of the home pursuant to an order of appointment granted by Houlden J. dated that day. Subsequently, on December 14, 1994, Houlden J. made an order appointing PMTI as trustee in bankruptcy of the home. No notice was given to the union of that proceeding.

[6] On December 14, 1994, Houlden J. also made an order (the "supplemental order") [unreported], which contains the following provisions:

> THIS COURT ORDERS that the employment of the Nursing Home employees be and is hereby terminated by reason of the bankruptcy of 588871, 542212 or Grosvenor, that the Trustee be and is hereby authorized to offer new employment to all the employees of the Nursing Home on a temporary basis, and that the Trustee shall not be, nor be deemed to be, a successor employer with respect to the employees engaged by the Trustee or any former employees of the Nursing Home, under the Labour Relations Act (Ontario), the Employment Standards Act (Ontario), any collective agreement or other contracting between the Nursing Home or 588871, 542212, or Grosvenor and any of the employees, or under any other provincial or federal legislation pertaining to employees or otherwise.
> THIS COURT ORDERS that provided that the Trustee does not make any contributions to any pension plans in which the Nursing Home or 588871, 542212 or Grosvenor are participants, the trustee shall not be nor be deemed to by an "employer" under section 1 of the Pension Benefits Act (Ontario).
> THIS COURT ORDERS that the Trustee is authorized but not obligated to carry on the Nursing Home business until the first meeting of creditors of the estates of 588871, 542212 and Grosvenor.

[7] It appears that subsequent to that time PMTI has carried on the business of the home and actions have been taken in the course of that activity that have prompted the union to seek the relief which is now in issue. The reason given for carrying on the business is the need to provide care to the remaining occupants. There is no evidence before me as to whether the trustee has carried on the business of the home subsequent to the first meeting of creditors mentioned in para. 5 of the supplemental order.

Legal Issues

[8] Section 215 of the BIA provides that, except by leave of the court, no action lies against a trustee in bankruptcy with respect to any action taken pursuant to the Act.

[9] The union submits that in an application for leave under s. 215, it is only necessary to allege facts which could form the basis of an action against the trustee, it is not the duty of the court to determine the merits of the action before granting leave: LeBlond c. Tremblay (1985), 54 C.B.R. (N.S.) 199 (C.A. Qué.).

[10] The trustee argues that it cannot properly be held liable under the collective agreement. The trustee contends:

1. A trustee can have no liability under a collective agreement because, as an executory contract, the collective agreement terminate on bankruptcy.

2. The trustee could be determined to be a "successor employer" under the OLRA and therefore subject to liability on the basis asserted by the union only if there has been a sale of the employer's business and there is a continuation of that business and neither of these is the case here. In particular the mandate of the trustee to carry on the business is only incidental to its responsibility to take possession of the bankrupt's assets and to realize them for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate, which is not consistent with the notion of a continuing business.

3. The supplementary order of December 14, 1994 expressly states that the trustee is not a "successor employer".

[11] The union states that the supplementary order was obtained without notice to the union. It appears this is not disputed but no contention is advanced that there was any legal requirement that notice of the motion for that order was to be given to the union.

[12] The union asserts that the Ontario Labour Relations Board (the "board") has discretion under s. 64(12) of the OLRA to determine whether a business has been sold by one employer to another. For this purpose, "sale" includes "any other disposition". The decision of the board is final and conclusive for the purposes of that Act. If a sale is determined to have occurred to a successor employer, then, under s. 64(2) of the OLRA, if the predecessor employer was bound by a collective agreement the successor employer is bound by it as if the successor employer were the predecessor employer, until the board declares otherwise. On this basis it would appear that if proceedings were taken against the trustee under the OLRA, the board would have the jurisdiction to determine whether there has been a sale of the business to the trustee as a successor employer and if it were to determine that there had been, the trustee would be liable with respect to the collective agreement as a successor employer under the Act.

Digitized by Google

[13] A determination to that effect would be apparently inconsistent with the rule in bankruptcy law that the collective agreement terminates on the occurrence of the bankruptcy: Re St Marys Paper Inc. 1994 CanLII 1232 (ON CA), (1994), 26 C.B.R. (3d) 273 (Ont. C.A.), at p. 291 per Abella J.A.: "Contracts of employment with employees, including collective agreements, terminate with a bankruptcy." Such a determination would also be apparently inconsistent with the provision in the order of Mr. Justice Houlden of December 14, 1994 which provides that the trustee is not to be, and is not to be deemed to be a successor employer under the OLRA.
[14] Those two prospective inconsistent results seem to me to be central to the proper disposition of the present motion. This court is being asked in effect to grant leave under the BIA for proceedings to be taken against the trustee which could result in liability on the part of the trustee if but only if determinations are made under the OLRA which are inconsistent with the bankruptcy law and to an order of this court made under the BIA. The first of these potential inconsistencies seems to me to involve something akin to a constitutional issue concerning paramountcy. However, no submissions were made by counsel as to constitutional considerations. The second potential inconsistency raises the question whether it is appropriate for this court to grant leave where the relief to be sought would conflict with a decision already taken by this court in the same matter.
[15] The union argues that s. 110 of the OLRA gives the board exclusive jurisdiction with respect to the successor employer questions and accordingly that the supplementary order is "problematic" in this regard. Section 110 appears to support the union's position on this point, but their submission may not give adequate weight to the underlying principle of bankruptcy law that the collective agreement terminates with the bankruptcy.
[16] PMTI says that the relief sought by the union involves claims relating to matters which arose before the bankruptcy and which by s. 69.3 of the BIA may not be asserted until the trustee has been discharged. PMTI argues that the court should not exercise its discretion under s. 69.4 to lift the stay against such claims, because it is equitable that those claims should be dealt with in the same manner as all other claims against the bankrupt.
[17] It appears that certain claims, pertaining to the remission of health and welfare contributions and pension contributions, relate to the period prior to bankruptcy and would therefore constitute provable claims in bankruptcy. In the absence of any reason to grant an order under s. 69.4, the s. 69.3 prohibition against any proceedings in respect of these claims must remain in effect, quite apart from the disposition of the request for leave.
[18] PMTI also contended that this motion involves an important policy question. If, in circumstances such as those in the present case, a trustee in bankruptcy who is given authority to carry on the business is to be exposed to the risk of being considered a successor employer and the attendant liabilities of the status, no trustee would ever undertake to carry on that business and that could thwart the proper operation of the BIA. I think this concern may properly be taken into account.
[19] With respect to the request for leave, I think a delicate balancing of the relevant considerations is required. The board clearly has jurisdiction under the OLRA to make a determination that there has been a sale of a business and that PMTI is a successor employer. The considerations which have been raised here concerning the apparent inconsistencies between a positive determination to that effect and bankruptcy principles and the order of December 14, 1994 could presumably be considered in those proceedings to the extent germane and in any other proceedings that may be taken in this matter. The courts should ordinarily defer to the board on a matter clearly within its statutory jurisdiction. On the other hand, if a decision were taken by the board against the trustee, it would involve the inconsistencies mentioned above. It would be incompatible with the termination of the collective agreement as a result of the bankruptcy and the limited role of a trustee in bankruptcy in carrying on a business. It seems to me that such matters are properly to be addressed by this court on this application for leave under the BIA and not to be deferred for decision to a tribunal which is not charged with responsibility in respect of the bankruptcy law. The stay of proceedings imposed by s. 215 of the BIA is one part of the machinery of the Act which functions to ensure that the purposes of the Act can be carried out properly without the undue intervention of other proceedings. The stay imposed under s. 215 has a proper effect in this case, for the reasons mentioned above. Accordingly, the request for leave nunc pro tunc should not granted.
[20] The parties may make submissions about costs.
Application dismissed.

on appeal from the court of appeal for ontario

Bankruptcy and insolvency — Bankruptcy court — Jurisdiction — Whether bankruptcy judge lacks jurisdiction to determine whether interim receiver is successor employer under provincial labour relations legislation — Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ss. 47, 72(1).

Bankruptcy and insolvency — Procedure — Action against interim receiver — Bankruptcy legislation precluding proceedings against interim receiver without leave of court – Union seeking leave to bring "successor employer" application against interim receiver — Whether Mancini test applicable — Whether test different when dispute relates to receiver's obligations to debtors' employees represented by union — Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 215.

The company TCT became insolvent and its largest secured creditor applied for an order appointing an interim receiver. The order appointing KPMG states that the receiver's employment-related actions could not be considered those of a "successor employer", and prohibits proceedings being taken against the interim receiver unless the court grants leave. After TCT was assigned in bankruptcy, KPMG sold most of the assets of the warehousing business to a new company. All unionized employees at the Toronto warehouse were terminated by KPMG, but some of them were later hired by the new company. Except for a change in location, the only major difference between TCT's operations and those of the new company was the absence of the union as representative of TCT's former employees.

The union applied to the Ontario Labour Relations Board seeking, in particular, a declaration that, as a successor employer to TCT or KPMG, the new company was bound by the collective agreement pursuant to s. 69 of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 ("LRA"). After a stay was granted on the basis that s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA") precludes proceedings against an interim receiver or trustee without leave of the court, the union sought the necessary court approval. The bankruptcy judge amended the paragraph relating to the "successor employer" protection in the order appointing the interim receiver, but denied leave. The Court of Appeal unanimously concluded that only the labour board had jurisdiction to determine who was a successor employer, but divided over the test under s. 215 for granting leave to bring successor employer applications. The majority was of the view that the traditional Mancini test represented too low a threshold when the proposed proceedings were successor employer applications, and that other factors should be considered to take account to a greater extent of the impact of such litigation on the bankruptcy process. Accordingly, the majority set aside the bankruptcy judge's refusal to grant leave and remitted the leave application back to him for reconsideration based on the enhanced enumerated factors. The union appealed the Court of Appeal's order denying leave, and the secured creditor cross-appealed on the issue of the bankruptcy judge's jurisdiction. Held (Deschamps J. dissenting on the appeal): The appeal should be allowed and the cross-appeal dismissed.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Fish, Abella and Charron JJ.: The bankruptcy court does not have jurisdiction to decide whether an interim receiver is a successor employer within the meaning of the LRA. The powers given to the bankruptcy court under s. 47(2) BIA are powers to direct the interim receiver's conduct. That section does not, explicitly or implicitly, confer authority on the bankruptcy court to make unilateral declarations about the rights of third parties affected by other statutory schemes. Further, s. 72(1) BIA declares that unless there is a conflict, any legislation relating to property and civil rights is deemed to be supplemental to, not abrogated by the Act. The right to seek a successor employer declaration pursuant to the LRA does not conflict with the bankruptcy court's authority under s. 47(2). If the s. 47 net were interpreted widely enough to permit interference with all rights which, though protected by law, represent an inconvenience to the bankruptcy process, it could be used to extinguish all rights. Explicit language would be required before such a sweeping power could be attached to s. 47. [4] [43-51]

The bankruptcy judge erred in not granting leave to the union to bring a successor employer application against the interim receiver. Under the Mancini test, the threshold for granting leave under s. 215 BIA is not a high one. The question under s. 215 is whether the evidence provides the required support for the cause of action sought to be asserted. If the evidence discloses a prima facie case, leave should be granted. The focus of the inquiry is not a determination of the merits. The threshold of the Mancini test strikes the appropriate balance between the protection of trustees and receivers from frivolous suits, while preserving to the maximum extent possible the rights of creditors and others as against a trustee or receiver. As a result, Mancini is consistent with the requirement that there be explicit statutory language before the BIA is interpreted so as to deprive persons of rights conferred under provincial law. Where Parliament has intended to confer immunity on trustees or receivers from certain claims, it has done so explicitly. In the absence of such express protection, the bankruptcy court should not convert the leave mechanism in s. 215 into blanket insulation for court-appointed officers. There is no reason to create a more stringent test to be applied only to claims by employees represented by unions. To impose a higher s. 215 threshold in a case involving a labour board issue is to read into the BIA a lower tolerance for the rights of employees represented by unions than for other creditors. Nothing in the Act suggests this dichotomy. Finally, the Mancini test does not in any way interfere with the protections that Parliament has deemed necessary to preserve the ability of trustees and receivers to discharge their duties flexibly and efficiently. In this case, since it cannot be said that the Union's claim is frivolous or without an evidentiary foundation, it should be allowed to proceed. [7] [55-61] [67-72] [80]
Per Deschamps J. (dissenting on the appeal): A judge who must decide whether to grant leave to bring proceedings against a trustee under s. 215 BIA must determine the actual scope of the remedy being sought, identify potential conflicts and tailor the leave so as to avoid a situation in which proceedings based on provincial law have the effect of hindering the discharge of the trustee's duties and responsibilities under the BIA. Since conflicts of jurisdiction are not tolerated in constitutional law, proceedings that lead to a constitutional conflict have no basis in law and the judge must therefore deny leave to bring them. [154]

The decision to continue operating the business is central to the trustee's role under the BIA and, in principle, a trustee should not be bound by obligations that interfere with the resolution of the bankruptcy. The provisions of the BIA that protect trustees against proceedings are a clear indication of Parliament's intent to give trustees the flexibility they need to discharge the duties imposed on them by the BIA. The successor employer declaration is not free of pitfalls when it applies to a trustee. The effect of such a declaration is that the trustee becomes a party to the collective agreement and becomes liable to perform all the obligations set out in that agreement, including those that were binding on the former employer before the business was transferred. Although it is common ground that the LRA confers the exclusive power to decide who is a "successor employer" on the Ontario Labour Relations Board, the LRA cannot frustrate the purpose of the BIA. It is therefore important to strike a balance between the trustee's duties and immunities under the BIA and the employees' rights under the LRA. In the event of conflict, the parties must refer to constitutional principles. Courts that hear disputes relating to the difficulty of applying federal and provincial statutes concurrently must attempt to reconcile the application of those statutes in a manner consistent with the respective jurisdictions of the two levels of government. Where conflict is unavoidable, however, the federal statute is paramount to the provincial statute. Hence the importance of the screening mechanism of s. 215 BIA, which serves the purpose of ensuring that provincial and federal statutes do not conflict with each other. Since the bankruptcy of a business affects the interests of all the creditors, not just of the employees, the bankruptcy judge is in a better position to evaluate the interests at stake and prevent conflicts. [91] [101] [103] [111-112] [116-117] [123] [127-128]

Although the criteria established in Mancini for applying s. 215 are easy to apply to a simple action in damages based on wrongdoing by the trustee, they must, in other cases, be tailored to the specific nature of each application for leave. The judge must assess the nature and scope of the proceeding in light of the evidence. This review does not have the effect of giving special or different treatment to successor employer declarations. When reviewing the seriousness of the cause of action, the bankruptcy judge must be vigilant and make provision for conflicts. By ensuring that the conclusions being sought do not impair the application of the BIA and, if need be, limiting the scope of proceedings based on a provincial statute, the bankruptcy judge permits the federal statute and provincial legislation to be applied simultaneously. A judge who denies leave to bring proceedings merely avoids a conflict by relying on the paramountcy doctrine in a preventive manner. However, the bankruptcy judge must take care not to supplant the court or tribunal that will rule on the merits. The judge's first task is to enquire into the actual effect of the application, not a vaguely defined effect on the administration of the bankruptcy. The judge will be justified in limiting the scope of proceedings or denying leave to bring them only if the proceedings would genuinely hinder the trustee's work. An approach that focussed too much on the management flexibility required by the trustee could all too easily lead the judge to find that a conflict exists and would hardly be in keeping with s. 72 BIA, which makes express provision for the application of provincial legislation that is compatible with the federal statute. [124] [135] [143-153]
In the instant case, the unqualified conclusions sought by the union are likely to result in direct conflicts with the application of the BIA. Neither the facts in the record nor the positions advanced by the parties are sufficient for this Court to engage in the review that is the Superior Court's responsibility. The matter must therefore be remitted not only for a review from the constitutional standpoint, but also for a review of the seriousness of the cause of action and the sufficiency of the evidence. The judgment of McLachlin C.J. and Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Fish, Abella and Charron JJ. was delivered by

1 Abella J. — Bankruptcy suspends the economic independence of an enterprise or individual. No longer can operational choices be made by the owner of a business. These become instead the responsibility of the receiver or trustee appointed by the court to salvage as much of the business's financial remains as possible for the benefit of creditors.

2 Those creditors include unionized employees. The issue in this appeal is the extent to which the rights of those employees must yield to the overall objective in a bankruptcy of maximizing the ability of creditors to minimize their losses. In particular, the issue is whether those employees are entitled to the same access to a remedy as other stakeholders who attempt to impugn a receiver's or trustee's conduct.

3 The analysis engages both the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, and the Ontario Labour Relations Act, 1995, S.O. 1995, c. 1, Sch. A.

4 Three provisions of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act are engaged by the circumstances of this case. The first is s. 47, authorizing a judge to appoint and supervise an interim receiver to take possession and control of, or otherwise deal with the debtor's property. The second is s. 215, which immunizes the conduct of receivers and trustees from lawsuits unless prior judicial authorization is obtained. The third is s. 72(1), declaring that unless there is a conflict with the Act, any legislation relating to property and civil rights is deemed to be supplemental to, not abrogated by the federal Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

5 The relevant provisions of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 are ss. 69(2), 69(12), 114(1) and 116, the combined effect of which is to give to the Ontario Labour Relations Board exclusive and final authority to determine whether a financial transaction constitutes a sale of a business, thereby triggering the obligation, as a "successor employer", to honour any collective agreements of the acquired business.

6 The issue which animates the interpretive interplay between these provisions is whether to endorse the current judicial approach set out in Mancini (Bankrupt) v. Falconi reflex, (1993), 61 O.A.C. 332 (C.A.), to determinations under s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act granting or withholding permission to sue a receiver or trustee.

7 For over a decade, the reigning test for mediating between the protection from litigation for those administering a bankrupt estate, and the right to sue them for this very administration, has been the one set out in Mancini. In essence, the three principles summarized in Mancini preclude frivolous, vexatious or manifestly unmeritorious claims from proceeding. For the reasons that follow, unlike the majority in the Court of Appeal, I see no reason to dethrone it and create a higher test to be applied only to claims by employees represented by unions.

I. Background

8 The bankrupt, T.C.T. Logistics Inc., was one of a number of related companies (collectively "TCT") operating a trucking, freight brokerage and warehousing business of high-tech goods in Canada and the United States. TCT operated its warehouse business from several sites, one of which was in Toronto.

9 Forty-two employees at the Toronto warehouse were represented by the Industrial Wood & Allied Workers of Canada, Local 700 ("Union"). On their behalf, the Union entered into a collective agreement with TCT. The term of the agreement was from May 1, 2000 until April 30, 2004.

10 During the course of the collective agreement, TCT became insolvent. GMAC Commercial Credit Corporation — Canada ("GMAC"), TCT's largest secured creditor, applied under s. 47 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act for an order appointing KPMG Inc. ("KPMG") as interim receiver. The Union was not given notice of this application.

11 The order was made on January 24, 2002. It provides for the termination of all employees "effective immediately", but it also gives KPMG authority to hire or fire any of TCT's employees.

12 The order explicitly states that KPMG's employment-related actions could not be considered those of a "successor employer". The order also prohibits proceedings being taken against the interim receiver unless the court grants leave, and then only if KPMG's solicitor/client costs in such proceedings are secured by court order.

13 The provision at the heart of this litigation is para. 15 of the order, the central provision insulating KPMG from a successor employer designation and more elaborately protecting it from employment obligations arising under either provincial or federal legislation. It states:

15. THIS COURT ORDERS that the employment of employees of the Debtors, including employees on maternity leave, disability leave and all other forms of approved absence is hereby terminated effective immediately prior to the appointment of the Receiver. Notwithstanding the appointment of the Receiver or the exercise of any of its powers or the performance of any of its duties hereunder, or the use or employment by the Receiver of any person in connection with its appointment and the performance of its powers and duties hereunder, the Receiver is not and shall not be deemed or considered to be a successor employer, related employer, sponsor or payer with respect to any of the employees of any of the Debtors or any former employees within the meaning of the Labour Relations Act (Ontario), the Employment Standards Act (Ontario), the Pension Benefits Act (Ontario), Canada Labour Code, Pension Benefits Standards Act (Canada) or any other provincial, federal, or municipal legislation or common law governing employment or labour standards, (the "Labour Laws") or any other statue [sic], regulation or rule of law or equity for any purpose whatsoever, or any collective agreement or other contract between any of the Debtors and any of their present or former employees, or otherwise. In particular, the Receiver shall not be liable to any of the employees of any of the Debtors for any wages (as "wages" are defined in the Employment Standards Act (Ontario)), including severance pay, termination pay and vacation pay, except for such wages as the Receiver may specifically agree to pay. The Receiver shall not be liable for an [sic] contribution or other payment to any pension or benefit fund.

14 Paragraph 14 of the order is also relevant:

THIS COURT ORDERS AND DECLARES that nothing in this Order shall constitute the Receiver as the employer of the employees of any of the Debtors and further orders and declares that the appointment of the Receiver will not constitute a sale of the business of any of the Debtors.

15 Pursuant to a further order, KPMG was directed to file an assignment in bankruptcy on behalf of TCT and the related companies. The assignment was filed on February 25, 2002. KPMG was appointed trustee in bankruptcy.

16 KPMG did not give notice to TCT's employees before it had obtained the January 24 order permitting it to terminate their employment. The Union, upon learning about the order, wrote to TCT and KPMG on February 1, 2002 advising them that, in its view, any collective bargaining rights under the Ontario Labour Relations Act, 1995 remained "operative and in full force and effect".

17 KPMG met with the employees on February 25, advising them that the business would be continuing in order to evaluate potential sales of the warehousing business. KPMG asked the employees for their loyalty and support "to allow us to maximize the enterprise value for all stakeholders".

18 Subsequently, because of the rapid deterioration of the warehousing business, KPMG sought to sell it as a going concern as quickly as possible. On April 12, KPMG agreed to sell most of the assets of the warehousing business to Spectrum Supply Chain Solutions Inc., a newly formed company.

19 On April 16, KPMG informed the employees about the Spectrum deal and of its intention to seek court approval two days later. An order approving the transaction was obtained on April 18. The closing was scheduled to take place on April 19, 2002.

20 The leasehold interest in the Toronto warehouse was not one of the assets Spectrum purchased. As a result, KPMG decided to wind down its operations and disclaim the lease. It asked Spectrum to manage this process from April 19 until May 23, the date by which KPMG was obliged to vacate the Toronto premises. The resulting management agreement between Spectrum and KPMG entitled Spectrum to any revenues earned during that period in exchange for incurring the costs of winding down the Toronto operation.

21 All unionized employees at the Toronto warehouse were terminated by KPMG on May 9. Some of them were later hired by Spectrum. These hirings were not in accordance with the Union's seniority list.

22 As a result, the Union applied to the Ontario Labour Relations Board on May 13, seeking the following relief under the Ontario Labour Relations Act, 1995:

- a declaration that Spectrum was the successor employer to TCT and/or KPMG, and, accordingly, bound by the Union's collective agreement with TCT (under s. 69 of the Act);
- a declaration that TCT and Spectrum were a single employer for labour relations purposes (under s. 1(4) of the Act);

Digitized by Google

- a declaration of unfair labour practices against TCT and/or KPMG and Spectrum for entering into an agreement discriminating against unionized employees and eliminating the Union in Spectrum's workforce (under s. 96 of the Act); and
- an order certifying the Union as the exclusive bargaining agent for Spectrum's employees.

23 The underlying premise of the Union's application to the Ontario Labour Relations Board was that Spectrum was incorporated for the sole purpose of acquiring TCT's warehousing business and had colluded with KPMG to operate TCT's business at a different location under substantially the same management. Except for the new location, the only major difference between TCT's operations and those of Spectrum was the absence of the Union. The president of Spectrum had been the vice-president, Warehousing and Logistics, of TCT; several of the warehousing managers of TCT became managers of Spectrum; and Spectrum set up the warehousing operations in its new Toronto location with essentially the same customers as TCT.

24 Relying primarily on s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act which prevents proceedings against an interim receiver or trustee in bankruptcy without leave of the court, KPMG obtained a stay of the Union's application from the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

25 The Union accordingly sought the necessary court approval. In its motion to the bankruptcy judge, it asked for the deletion of those portions of the January 24 order which had declared KPMG's conduct incapable of scrutiny under federal or provincial labour and employment legislation. It also sought to strike the security for costs provision.

26 The bankruptcy judge agreed that the costs requirement was unduly onerous and deleted it (2003 CanLII 64272 (ON SC), (2003), 42 C.B.R. (4th) 221). He declined, however, to delete that part of the order declaring that the interim receiver could not be found to be a "successor employer" under the Labour Relations Act, 1995.

27 In the course of his analysis, the bankruptcy judge made a number of observations. Since interim receivership orders are designed to enhance the value of the bankrupt estate as much as possible, and since this objective may sometimes best be realized by continuing the operation of a debtor's business pending a sale, the court was entitled to consider the policy implications of exposing interim receivers or trustees to the risk of being successor employers. Moreover, eliminating the risk of an obligation that might otherwise accrue from continuing a business as a going concern offers employees the possibility of employment with a subsequent purchaser.

28 The bankruptcy judge concluded that it would be unduly burdensome on an interim receiver, and incompatible with its duties, to impose the requirements flowing from a successor employer designation on a receiver engaged in such temporary and limited employment relationships.

29 However, applying the "ancillary" or "necessarily incidental" doctrine crafted by Dickson C.J. in General Motors of Canada Ltd. v. City National Leasing, 1989 CanLII 133 (SCC), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 641 (refined by Iacobucci J. in Global Securities Corp. v. British Columbia (Securities Commission), 2000 SCC 21 (CanLII), [2000] 1 S.C.R. 494, 2000 SCC 21, and by LeBel J. in Kitkatla Band v. British Columbia (Minister of Small Business, Tourism and Culture), 2002 SCC 31 (CanLII), [2002] 2 S.C.R. 146, 2002 SCC 31), the bankruptcy judge concluded that the "successor employer provisions" of the order were only "sufficiently integrated" with the legislative scheme of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act if the interim receiver was carrying on the bankrupt's business for the purpose of an orderly liquidation of the bankrupt's assets or of effecting a sale of the bankrupt's business as a going concern. He relied on Farley J.'s distinction in Royal Crest Lifecare Group, Re 2003 CanLII 11504 (ON SC), (2003), 40 C.B.R. (4th) 146 (Ont. S.C.J.), between a receiver (or trustee) acting "qua realizer" of the assets and acting "qua employer". When acting "qua realizer", the receiver was entitled to immunity from successor employer provisions.

30 The bankruptcy judge accordingly amended para. 15 of the order by adding language clarifying that the "successor employer" protection was only valid if KPMG was acting "qua realizer" and its conduct was for the purpose of preserving, protecting or liquidating the debtor's assets. The specific language added to the second sentence of para. 15 was:

for the purpose of preserving, protecting and realizing upon the assets of the Debtors by effecting a sale or sales of the assets or of the business of the Debtors as a going concern or otherwise or for the purpose of effecting an orderly liquidation of the assets of the Debtors.

Since in his view KPMG was carrying on the business as a going concern for these very purposes and acting "qua realizer", it was therefore entitled to the protection stipulated in the January 24 order.

31 Turning to s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the bankruptcy judge denied the Union leave to bring proceedings against KPMG at the Ontario Labour Relations Board. Since he had concluded that the provisions of the order in relation to KPMG's status as a successor employer were valid as amended, he saw no basis on which leave should be granted to bring a proceeding seeking relief contrary to the terms of the order.

32 On appeal by the Union to the Court of Appeal, there were two issues:

Digitized by Google

- Did the bankruptcy judge have jurisdiction under s. 47(2) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act to make declarations about successorship?
- Did he err in the exercise of his discretion by denying leave under s. 215 of the Act?

33 The Court of Appeal unanimously concluded that only the labour board had jurisdiction to determine who was a successor employer (2004 CanLII 11415 (ON CA), (2004), 71 O.R. (3d) 54). Section 47(2) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act did not confer on the bankruptcy judge the jurisdiction to make declarations on this issue or to otherwise immunize KPMG from such potential declarations by the labour board. Writing for the court on this issue, Feldman J.A. observed that the federal Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act itself explicitly states in s. 72(1) that only provincial laws which conflict with the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act can be abrogated. She did not find in s. 47(2) the authority to declare whether actions taken by KPMG make it a successor employer. Accordingly, she saw no conflict between the authority given to the bankruptcy court under s. 47(2) to supervise an interim receiver, and the successor rights provisions in s. 69(12) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, making a paramountcy analysis unnecessary. As a result, in her view the provincial laws conferring this exclusive jurisdiction on the labour board were unaffected by the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

34 Since the bankruptcy judge had no jurisdiction to make any determination relating to successor employer status, the distinction he drew in para. 15 of his January 24 order protecting the interim receiver only when it was acting "qua realizer" and not "qua employer" of the assets was immaterial.

35 On this basis, the Court of Appeal further amended para. 15 deleting the bankruptcy judge's "qua realizer" addition, and adding the following two passages:

. . . unless and until an order is made by the OLRB, upon leave of this court under s. 215 of the BIA, declaring the interim receiver a successor employer to the debtors, and subject to the specific terms of any such order, the interim receiver is not obliged to make any payment as a successor employer . . . . For clarification, the parties have agreed that if any such amounts become payable by the interim receiver as a successor employer, in no event is the interim receiver to be liable for any amount that either became due or accrued prior to the date of its appointment.

36 The court divided, however, on the bankruptcy judge's approach to and resolution of the Union's application for leave to bring labour board proceedings. The disagreement was over the test under s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act for granting leave to bring successor employer applications. Feldman J.A., whose analysis was endorsed in separate concurring reasons by Cronk J.A., was of the view that the traditional Mancini test represented too low a threshold when the proposed proceedings were successor employer applications. In her view, an approach was required that took more account of the impact of such litigation on the bankruptcy process.

37 The revised test proposed by Feldman J.A. added factors such as the complexity of the receivership; the availability of suitable purchasers; the potential duration of the receiver's operation of the business pending a sale; any arrangements the receiver has made with the Union to accommodate the employees; the likelihood that a subsequent purchaser will be declared a successor employer bound by the obligations under the collective agreement; and the timeliness of the labour board hearing relative to the receiver's temporary operation and ultimate sale of the business.

38 Feldman J.A. concluded that the bankruptcy judge was obliged not to determine the issue itself, but to determine whether a prima facie case of successor employer status had been made out, and, based on the factors she enumerated, to decide whether to grant leave. She accordingly set aside his refusal to grant leave and remitted the leave application back to him for reconsideration based on her enumerated factors.

39 In dissent, MacPherson J.A. saw no basis for erecting a higher threshold for granting leave when the application was for successor employer applications. Other creditors' applications for leave to bring proceedings under s. 215 are usually determined in accordance with the Mancini test, the applicability of which had been consistently upheld by the Ontario Court of Appeal, most recently in Royal Crest Lifecare Group Inc., Re 2004 CanLII 19809 (ON CA), (2004), 46 C.B.R. (4th) 126. In his view, by formulating what he characterized as a "more vague and more elaborate" (para. 111) test uniquely for successor employer leave applications, the majority was inviting a bankruptcy court to do indirectly through s. 215 what it had decided, correctly in his view, could not be done under s. 47(2), namely, insulate the receiver from successor employer determinations.

40 Applying the test in Mancini, MacPherson J.A. concluded that the bankruptcy judge had erred in refusing to grant leave to the Union to bring successor employer and unfair labour practice proceedings against KPMG. His remedy, accordingly, would have been to grant leave to the Union to proceed with its application before the labour board.

41 The Union appealed the Court of Appeal's order denying leave to bring its successorship proceedings before the labour board, and disputed the majority's conclusion that the Mancini test set too low a bar for granting leave to bring proceedings before the labour board. The Union also sought to have the Court of Appeal's amended version of para. 15 set aside to the extent that it continues to make declarations with respect to successorship rights.

42 GMAC cross-appealed the Court of Appeal's amendments to para. 15, taking issue with the court's unanimous conclusion that a bankruptcy judge lacks jurisdiction to declare whether a receiver is a successor employer under the Labour Relations Act, 1995.

II. Analysis

A. Can a Bankruptcy Court Judge Determine Successor Rights Issues?

43 The first issue decided by the Court of Appeal, and raised in the cross-appeal, relates to whether the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to decide whether an interim receiver is a successor employer within the meaning of the Labour Relations Act, 1995. The unanimous conclusion of the Court of Appeal was that it had no such jurisdiction. I agree.

44 The bankruptcy court's authority to supervise the interim receiver is found in s. 47(2) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, which states:

47. . . .

(2) The court may direct an interim receiver appointed under subsection (1) to do any or all of the following:

(a) take possession of all or part of the debtor's property mentioned in the appointment;

(b) exercise such control over that property, and over the debtor's business, as the court considers advisable; and

(c) take such other action as the court considers advisable.

45 These statutory parameters, though sufficiently flexible to authorize a wide range of conduct dealing with the taking, management, and eventual disposition of the debtor's property, are not open-ended. The powers given to the bankruptcy court under s. 47(2) are powers to direct the interim receiver's conduct. That section does not, explicitly or implicitly, confer authority on the bankruptcy court to make unilateral declarations about the rights of third parties affected by other statutory schemes.

46 Any doubt about whether s. 47(2) was intended to dispense such jurisdictional largesse vanishes when it is read in conjunction with s. 72(1) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, which states:

72. (1) The provisions of this Act shall not be deemed to abrogate or supersede the substantive provisions of any other law or statute relating to property and civil rights that are not in conflict with this Act, and the trustee is entitled to avail himself of all rights and remedies provided by that law or statute as supplementary to and in addition to the rights and remedies provided by this Act.

47 The effect of s. 72(1) is that the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act is not intended to extinguish legally protected rights unless those rights are in conflict with the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. The right in issue here is the right found in s. 69 of the Ontario Labour Relations Act, 1995 to seek a declaration that a subsequent employer is bound by the employment obligations found in the collective agreements of its predecessor. I agree with Feldman J.A. who concluded:

. . . the first half of [s. 72] clearly states that the BIA will not abrogate or supercede any provincial law unless that law is in conflict with the BIA. The language of s. 47(2) of the BIA does not conflict with the successor employer sections of the LRA and therefore does not abrogate or supercede that Act. [para. 30]

48 Section 114(1) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 states:

114. (1) The Board has exclusive jurisdiction to exercise the powers conferred upon it by or under this Act and to determine all questions of fact or law that arise in any matter before it, and the action or decision of the Board thereon is final and conclusive for all purposes, but nevertheless the Board may at any time, if it considers it advisable to do so, reconsider any decision, order, direction, declaration or ruling made by it and vary or revoke any such decision, order, direction, declaration or ruling.

49 This means the labour board has exclusive jurisdiction to make a successor employer determination. It is difficult to see how the right to seek such a declaration conflicts in any way with the bankruptcy court's authority under s. 47(2) to direct and supervise the interim receiver's effective management of the debtor's assets.

50 Trustees, receivers and the specialized courts by which they are supervised, are entitled to a measure of deference consistent with their undisputed expertise in the effective management of a bankruptcy. Flexibility is required to cure the problems in any particular bankruptcy. But guarding that flexibility with boiler plate immunizations that inoculate against the assertion of rights is beyond the therapeutic reach of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

51 If the s. 47 net were interpreted widely enough to permit interference with all rights which, though protected by law, represent an inconvenience to the bankruptcy process, it could be used to extinguish all employment rights if the bankruptcy court thinks it "advisable" under s. 47(2)(c). Explicit language would be required before such a sweeping power could be attached to s. 47 in the face of the preservation of provincially created civil rights in s. 72. As Major J. stated in Crystalline Investments Ltd. v. Domgroup Ltd., 2004 SCC 3 (CanLII), [2004] 1 S.C.R. 60, 2004 SCC 3:

Digitized by Google

. . . explicit statutory language is required to divest persons of rights they otherwise enjoy at law. . . . [S]o long as the doctrine of paramountcy is not triggered, federally regulated bankruptcy and insolvency proceedings cannot be used to subvert provincially regulated property and civil rights. [para. 43]

The language of s. 47(2) falls well short of this standard. The bankruptcy court can undoubtedly mandate employment-related conduct by the receiver, but as s. 47(2) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act is presently worded, the court cannot, on its own, abrogate the right to seek relief at the labour board.

52 Accordingly, the Court of Appeal was correct to conclude that the bankruptcy judge had no jurisdiction to make a declaration about or immunize the receiver from successor employer liability. To the extent that any provision of the order does so, including the amendments added by the Court of Appeal, they should be set aside.

B. Is a Unique Test Required Under Section 215 for Leave to Bring Successor Rights Applications?

53 Having concluded that the bankruptcy judge has no jurisdiction either to make a determination as to the receiver's status as a successor employer, or to immunize it from such a determination by the labour board, the remaining issue is whether to set aside the bankruptcy judge's refusal to permit the Union remedial access to the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

54 The debate between the parties is over the extent of the bankruptcy court's discretion when leave is sought by a union to bring a successor employer application against the receiver or trustee. This shifts the focus to s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, which states:

215. Except by leave of the court, no action lies against the Superintendent, an official receiver, an interim receiver or a trustee with respect to any report made under, or any action taken pursuant to, this Act.

55 For almost 150 years, courts and commentators have been universally of the view that the threshold for granting leave to commence an action against a receiver or trustee is not a high one, and is designed to protect the receiver or trustee against only frivolous or vexatious actions, or actions which have no basis in fact. As L. W. Houlden, G. B. Morawetz and J. Sarra stated in Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada (3rd ed. (loose-leaf)), vol. 3, at p. 7-118.2:

The court will not refuse leave unless there is no foundation for the claim or the claim is frivolous and vexatious . . . .

56 Essentially, unless the claim is without merit, the gate to a litigated determination has usually been opened under s. 215 and its statutory predecessors: see Randfield v. Randfield (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 766, 45 E.R. 1075, at p. 1077, per Turner L.J. (". . . it is not, as I apprehend, according to the course of the Court, to refuse liberty to try a right which is claimed against its receiver, unless it is perfectly clear that there is no foundation for the claim"); In re Diehl v. Carritt (1907), 15 O.L.R. 202 (H.C.J.), at p. 204; Danny's Cabaret Ltd. v. Horner, [1980] B.C.J. No. 1293 (QL) (C.A.); Virden Credit Union Ltd. v. Dunwoody Ltd. (1982), 45 C.B.R. (N.S.) 84 (Man. Q.B.), at p. 90; Re New Alger Mines Ltd. (1986), 59 C.B.R. (N.S.) 113 (Ont. C.A.); RoyNat Inc. v. Allan 1988 CanLII 3499 (AB QB), (1988), 61 Alta. L.R. (2d) 165 (Q.B.); B.N.R. Holdings Ltd. v. Royal Bank 1992 CanLII 410 (BC SC), (1992), 14 C.B.R. (3d) 233 (B.C.S.C.); Toronto Dominion Bank v. Alex L. Clark Ltd. reflex, (1993), 22 C.B.R. (3d) 6 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), at para. 7; Nicholas v. Anderson 1996 CanLII 8256 (ON SC), (1996), 40 C.B.R. (3d) 32 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), at paras. 13-15; Burton v. Kideckel 1999 CanLII 15010 (ON SC), (1999), 13 C.B.R. (4th) 9 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 13; Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada v. Armitage 2000 CanLII 16921 (ON CA), (2000), 50 O.R. (3d) 688 (C.A.), at para. 2; Vanderwoude v. Scott and Pichelli Ltd. 2001 CanLII 6622 (ON CA), (2001), 143 O.A.C. 195, at para. 22; Bennett on Bankruptcy (8th ed. 2005), at pp. 416-17; Bennett on Receiverships (2nd ed. 1999), at p. 223; and Houlden, Morawetz and Sarra, at p. 7-118.2.

57 In the leading case of Mancini, the Court of Appeal summarized the accepted principles as being the following:

1. Leave to sue a trustee should not be granted if the action is frivolous or vexatious. Manifestly unmeritorious claims should not be permitted to proceed.

2. An action should not be allowed to proceed if the evidence filed in support of the motion, including the intended action as pleaded in draft form, does not disclose a cause of action against the trustee. The evidence typically will be presented by way of affidavit and must supply facts to support the claim sought to be asserted.

3. The court is not required to make a final assessment of the merits of the claim before granting leave. [Citations omitted; para. 7.]

58 The court in Mancini explained that the duty of the trustee is to protect both the creditors and the public interest in the proper administration of the bankrupt estate. The gatekeeping purpose of the leave requirement, therefore, in light of this duty, is to prevent the trustee or receiver "from having to respond to actions which are frivolous or vexatious or from claims which do not disclose a cause of action" (para. 17) so that the bankruptcy process is not made unworkable. On the other hand, it ensures that legitimate claims can be advanced.

59 The question under s. 215 is whether the evidence provides the required support for the cause of action sought to be asserted. As Blair J. observed in Nicholas:

The question . . . is whether, in the circumstances of this case, the facts in support of the proposed claim have been disclosed by sufficient affidavit evidence to ensure the claim's proper factual foundation, having regard to the policy of requiring leave in order to protect a trustee from claims which have no basis in fact. [para. 16]

In other words, the evidence must disclose a prima facie case.

60 Although the Mancini test calls for an investigation into whether the proposed litigation discloses a cause of action, the focus of that inquiry is not a determination of the merits. This is a particularly important observation in circumstances where exclusive jurisdiction to decide the legal questions raised in the proceedings resides elsewhere. As the court said in Mancini, at para. 16 "[o]n a continuum of evidence ranging from no evidence to evidence which is conclusive, the evidence required to support an order under [the predecessor of s. 215] must be sufficient to establish that there is a factual basis for the proposed claim and that the proposed claim discloses a cause of action." See also Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada, at para. 2.

61 This threshold strikes the appropriate balance between the protection of trustees and receivers from the distraction and delay inherent in frivolous or merely tactical suits, and the preservation to the maximum extent possible of the rights of creditors and others as against a trustee or receiver. In this way, Mancini is consistent with Crystalline's requirement that there be "explicit statutory language" (para. 43) before the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act is interpreted so as to deprive persons of rights conferred under provincial law.

62 The approach proposed by the majority in the Court of Appeal would require that courts consider the effect of the proposed proceeding on, among other considerations, the potential for interference with the maximization of stakeholder value. With respect, the result of the application of this higher threshold would necessarily bar some meritorious cases on the basis that other stakeholders would be better off. To allow bankruptcy courts to use the leave requirement in s. 215 to pick and choose between stakeholders' claims on the basis of a standard which, as MacPherson J.A. noted, at para. 111, is both "more vague and more elaborate" than that set out in Mancini, would be a profound departure from the principles in Crystalline. The integrity and efficiency of the bankruptcy process are sufficiently advanced by directing bankruptcy courts to deny leave to frivolous and merely tactical suits.

63 A more interventionist approach is premised on the "single control" theory of bankruptcy litigation. In Sam Lévy & Associés Inc. v. Azco Mining Inc., 2001 SCC 92 (CanLII), [2001] 3 S.C.R. 978, 2001 SCC 92, a case dealing with the enforceability of bankruptcy court orders across Canada, Binnie J. described the goal of a single court controlling all aspects of a bankruptcy, including litigation, as being "the expeditious, efficient and economical clean-up of the aftermath of a financial collapse" (para. 27). The benefits of avoiding multiple proceedings in multiple provinces underlay the decision. But, as Binnie J. also observed, "[s]ingle control is not necessarily inconsistent with transferring particular disputes elsewhere" (para. 76).

64 "[T]ransferring particular disputes elsewhere" is all that is done when leave under s. 215 is granted. Moreover, I note that the "transfer" in the instant case consists only of permitting the tribunal vested with exclusive jurisdiction over the matter to ultimately decide it. It is one thing to avoid permitting provincial enforcement schemes to defeat legitimate bankruptcy orders, as was held in Sam Lévy, it is another to use the bankruptcy process to defeat legitimate assertions of provincially granted rights, including labour and employment rights over which the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction. The Mancini test is not, in short, inconsistent with "single control".

65 Ultimately, the appropriate test under s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act remains a question of statutory interpretation, and the Act itself provides important context for the resolution of that question. I think it is instructive that s. 37 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act provides that when the bankrupt, any creditor, or any other person is aggrieved by an act or decision of a trustee or receiver in the administration of the bankrupt estate, he or she may apply to the bankruptcy court. The court may then reverse, modify or confirm the act or decision complained of, making such order as it thinks just. No leave is required under s. 37.

66 Sections 37 and 215 have been called alternative means of proceeding against a trustee or receiver: see Virden Credit Union, at pp. 89-90. The difference, of course, is that under s. 215, permission can be sought to seek a remedy elsewhere than in the bankruptcy court, and certain claims will be beyond the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court under s. 37. Nevertheless, many actions that may be brought with leave under s. 215 may also be heard in the bankruptcy court on a s. 37 application. What is instructive about s. 37, however, is that it demonstrates that Parliament did not consider it appropriate to immunize court-appointed officers from litigation.

67 On the other hand, where Parliament has intended to confer immunity on trustees or receivers from certain claims, it has done so explicitly, as in s. 14.06(1.2) (trustee immune from certain liabilities arising from continuing the debtor's business or the employment of the debtor's employees); s. 14.06(4) (trustee immune in certain circumstances from environmental liabilities); s. 41(8) (discharge of liability of trustee upon discharge of trustee); ss. 50(9) and 50.4(5)

Digitized by Google

(trustee not liable for detrimental reliance on cash-flow statements if the trustee reviews the statements reasonably and in good faith); s. 80 (trustee not liable for losses resulting from seizure of property); s. 148(3) (no action for a dividend lies against a trustee); s. 171(6) (trustee not liable for reasonable and good faith statement of opinion as to the probable cause of the bankruptcy); s. 197(3) (trustee not liable for costs of a proceeding); s. 251 (no action against a receiver for loss resulting from notice of the receiver's appointment); and s. 252 (no action against a receiver for failure to comply with the Act where the receiver reasonably believed the debtor was not insolvent).

68 In the absence of such express protection, the bankruptcy court should not convert the leave mechanism in s. 215 into blanket insulation for court-appointed officers.

69 The issue then becomes whether there is some reason why the long-standing principles governing the granting of leave should be different when the dispute relates to the receiver's obligations to the debtors' employees represented by a union.

70 The argument for a higher, more elaborate threshold advanced by the majority in the Court of Appeal is to enhance the receiver's ability to decide how and when to sell the assets, free from the fear of subsequent scrutiny for labour relations violations. The Mancini test does not in any way interfere with the protections that Parliament has deemed necessary to preserve the ability of trustees and receivers to discharge their duties flexibly and efficiently. If the argument is that the receiver should be protected from the threat of litigation by the Union because of its inevitable cost, delay and inconvenience, then no creditor should ever be granted leave to sue. No litigation is without delay, cost and inconvenience. But Parliament has nonetheless decided, through s. 215, that the bankruptcy court should, in its discretion, permit litigation against court-appointed officers. It has made no distinction between unions and other creditors in granting this discretionary authority and none should be imputed.

71 To impose a higher s. 215 threshold when it is a labour board issue is to read into the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act a lower tolerance for the rights of employees represented by unions than for other creditors. I see nothing in the Act that suggests this dichotomy.

72 A hierarchical approach to s. 215 which makes it significantly more difficult for a successorship case to obtain leave would unduly give trustees and receivers more protection from being answerable to the court for possible misconduct related to potential breaches of labour relations, and offers unique and enhanced protection for trustees who violate labour rights. It is, moreover, an approach that undermines the protection of rights endorsed by this Court in Crystalline. As Borins J.A. of the Ontario Court of Appeal observed in Royal Crest:

While the important role performed by bankruptcy trustees is deserving of protection, the rights of labour unions to pursue legitimate issues on behalf of their members must also be respected. [para. 70]

73 The Court of Appeal unanimously — and correctly — reached the conclusion that the bankruptcy court cannot make declarations about, or immunize court-appointed officers from accountability for contraventions of applicable labour relations laws. Yet, the majority's proposed threshold for leave under s. 215 would not only upset the balance in the Act between the gate-keeper function of the bankruptcy court and protected property and civil rights, it would create a real risk that s. 215 would become a de facto means by which the bankruptcy court could make such declarations, and, contrary to Mancini, effectively decide the issue on its merits. That is what happened at first instance in this case. As MacPherson J.A. observed in his dissent:

In short, and with respect, my colleague introduces through the side door of s. 215 (a leave provision, not a provision conferring authority on the receiver) precisely what she correctly does not permit the receiver to do through the front door of s. 47(2). [para. 115]

74 Section 215 is not designed to protect the trustee from well-founded litigation. It is designed to afford protection from claims for which there is no factual foundation. All major stakeholders, on a plain reading of the statute, have been given similar access for remedying alleged grievances against the trustee under ss. 37 and 215. Absent a statutory intention to the contrary, this symmetry should continue, whatever the identity of the stakeholder. There is no reason to depart from it when what is sought is relief from the labour board rather than from a bankruptcy judge.

75 That brings us to the proposed action in this case, namely a successor rights application before the labour board. Various provincial statutes provide that the successor employer is bound by the collective agreement and required to recognize the exclusive representation of the employees by their union. The statutes declare that the collective agreement is binding if the business has been sold or otherwise transferred to the successor until the tribunal otherwise declares.

76 In Lester (W.W.) (1978) Ltd. v. United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry, Local 740, 1990 CanLII 22 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 644, Wilson J., in her dissenting reasons, explained that the purpose of the "successor rights" provisions in labour legislation is "to prevent the loss of union protection by employees whose company's business is sold or transferred" (p. 652). A successor employer is defined in

s. 69(2) of the Ontario Labour Relations Act, 1995 as someone who acquires a business by sale or transfer from an employer and is bound by any existing collective agreements until the Ontario Labour Relations Board rules otherwise.

77 To be found to be a successor employer, as McLachlin J. noted for the majority in Lester, a labour board must first determine whether a discernable part of the business was disposed of. This requires an examination of "the nature of the predecessor business, and the nature of the successor business" (p. 676) to determine whether the business of the predecessor is being performed by the successor. Relevant factors include the work covered by the terms of the collective agreement, the type of assets transferred, whether employees are transferred, and whether there is continuity of management or of the work performed. In each case, as McLachlin J. pointed out, the labour relations board must determine "if, within the business context in which the transaction occurred, it can reasonably be said on the factors present that the business or part of the business has been transferred from the predecessor to the successor" (p. 677).

78 KPMG and GMAC make a number of arguments directed specifically at the obstacles to the Union's successorship claim, including a constitutional paramountcy argument relating to the effect of a successor employer declaration on the priority scheme in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. These are matters for the labour board's consideration. They are not germane to whether leave should be granted. And I appreciate the majority of the Court of Appeal's concern that the possibility of subsequent labour relations scrutiny may have an impact on a receiver's decision about how best to maximize stakeholder value. But again, this goes not to whether leave should be granted, but is a consideration in deciding the merits of the successor rights application. Issues of successorship are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the labour relations board. The labour board has been given exclusive responsibility for deciding these issues because the provincial legislature has confidence in its ability to do so in the public interest, based not only on the expectations of employees, but on those of employers as well.

79 In this case, the Union sought to argue before the Ontario Labour Relations Board that the interim receiver became the employer of the employees after its appointment when it decided to employ them in order to continue operating the warehouse. As an employer, it would be obliged to abide by the collective agreement and applicable labour and employment statutes. The Union alleged it failed to do so by, among other acts, manipulating the sale agreement so that the Union was ousted from the purchaser's workforce.

80 It is by no means clear how the Board will deal with a particular successorship issue, since the outcome will be determined by the facts. But where, as here, it cannot be said that the Union's claim is frivolous or without an evidentiary foundation, it should be allowed to proceed.

81 A postscript: No notice of the motion appointing an interim receiver was given to the Union, the exclusive bargaining agent of the employees. I appreciate that what happened in this case is not uncommon: receivers routinely seek an ex parte order from the bankruptcy judge with a draft order agreed upon by the debtor corporation and major creditors. Unions, as in this case, receive no notice, thereby losing the opportunity at the earliest possible stage to participate in the formulation of the plan for dealing with the debtor's assets. Notice is no guarantee either of cooperation or resolution, but, arguably, a union shut out of the process early will eventually, like any major creditor, likely seek to protect its interests. As Iacobucci J. observed in Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd., 1997 CanLII 332 (SCC), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 701:

The point at which the employment relationship ruptures is the time when the employee is most vulnerable and hence, most in need of protection. In recognition of this need, the law ought to encourage conduct that minimizes the damage and dislocation (both economic and personal) that result . . . . [para. 95]

82 While advance negotiations with unions on important decisions may not eliminate a subsequent claim for successor employer liability, they could potentially yield a greater possibility for resolution than ignoring them would. Optimally, advance discussions about the impact on employees if the business is continued will lead to compromise rather than litigation.

83 This would have resulted, in this case, in the immediate integration of a significantly affected party into the development and supervision of the orderly, fair and effective management of the insolvency process. It would not, of course, necessarily have avoided a multiplicity of proceedings. Nor would it have guaranteed the Union's blessing of the proposed methodology for preserving and realizing the assets. But it would have, at the very least, ensured that its legitimate concerns were factored into the planning at an early enough stage, thereby possibly avoiding later proceedings such as those which arose in this case.

III. Disposition

84 I would allow the appeal with costs throughout, grant leave to the Union to bring its proceeding before the labour board, and set aside those parts of the order that make a declaration about, or immunize the receiver from, successor employer liability. I would dismiss the cross-appeal with costs.

85 Deschamps J. (dissenting on the appeal) — What factors guide a bankruptcy judge when hearing an application for leave to bring proceedings against a trustee? That is the main issue in this case. To resolve it, however, the Court must consider the limits on the application of provincial law in bankruptcy matters. For the reasons that follow, I am of the view that a judge who decides an application under s. 215 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"), must do so in a manner consistent with federal and provincial heads of power so as to avoid any constitutional conflicts. I would therefore affirm the Court of Appeal's judgment (2004 CanLII 11415 (ON CA), (2004), 71 O.R. (3d) 54) remitting the case to the Superior Court of Justice for reconsideration in light of the principles set out below.

86 I have read the reasons of Abella J. She concludes (at para. 78) that it is the Ontario Labour Relations Board ("OLRB") that must decide the constitutional question. In my view, the BIA provides for a step that is specifically designed to avoid any constitutional conflicts, and the administrative tribunal should not be allowed to make an unconstitutional declaration. Thus, we disagree as to the forum that should hear and determine the conflict issue. A superior court judge presiding over a bankruptcy case acts as a specialized tribunal. He or she is very familiar with the duties and responsibilities of trustees and serves as the initial jurisdiction to which someone wanting to bring proceedings against a trustee must apply. I propose that the application for leave to bring proceedings pursuant to s. 215 BIA be analysed based on the actual effect of the proceedings on the duties and responsibilities of the trustee as set out in the BIA. Such an analysis is the only way to guarantee compliance with the principles of constitutional law.

87 In order to assess the areas of conflict between the BIA and the provisions of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, S.O. 1995, c. 1, Sch. A ("LRA"), concerning successor employers, it will be helpful to begin by briefly reviewing the trustee's role in the context of the 1992 reform of the bankruptcy scheme. I will then discuss the effect of successor employer declarations made by the OLRB before turning to the constitutional principles applicable in the event of conflict. I will conclude by identifying the specific criteria for avoiding conflicts and then making a few comments on the case before the Court.

1. Powers and Responsibilities of the Trustee

1.1 Role of the Trustee

88 Viewed generally, the administration of a bankruptcy is straightforward. The trustee receives the assets in one hand, then settles any claims with the other using the proceeds of realization of the assets. In concrete terms, the trustee, in performing these functions, plays an active role in the liquidation of the bankrupt's estate. The trustee's duties and responsibilities are explicitly governed by the BIA. The bankrupt's property vests in the trustee (s. 71). The trustee's powers with respect to the property are set out in the BIA (ss. 30 and 31). Subject to the rights of secured creditors and certain other exceptions, the remedies of all the creditors are stayed (s. 69.1). The BIA also governs the nature of provable claims and the claims procedure (s. 121). A trustee who carries on the bankrupt's business or continues the employment of the bankrupt's employees is not personally liable for any claims arising before the bankruptcy (s. 14.06(1.2)). However, trustees are authorized to settle such claims out of the assets vested in them (s. 67) by distributing the proceeds of realization of the assets in accordance with the BIA, based on the priority of payment for which that Act provides (ss. 136 to 147).

89 The trustee is, first and foremost, an officer of the court:

. . . and the Court regards him as its officer, and he is to hold money in his hands upon trust for its equitable distribution among the creditors.

90 The basis for the trustee's long-recognized role as an officer of the court is found in s. 16(4) BIA; under the BIA, the trustee has the same status as the interim receiver: Parsons v. Sovereign Bank of Canada, [1913] A.C. 160 (H.L.), at p. 167; L. W. Houlden, G. B. Morawetz and J. Sarra, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada (3rd ed. (loose-leaf)), vol. 1, at C§10 and C§44. This status obliges the trustee to act equitably and prudently, to cooperate with the court and, in a more general manner, to contribute to the proper administration of justice (L'Heureux (Syndic de), 1999 CanLII 13791 (QC CA), [1999] R.J.Q. 945 (C.A.), at p. 949; Caisse populaire de Pontbriand v. Domaine St-Martin Ltée, [1992] R.D.I. 417 (C.A.); Azco Mining Inc. v. Sam Lévy & Associés Inc., 2000 CanLII 9546 (QC CA), [2000] R.J.Q. 392 (C.A.); Re Reed (1980), 34 C.B.R. (N.S.) 83 (Ont. C.A.); J. Auger and A. Bohémier, "The Status of the Trustee in Bankruptcy" (2003), 37 R.J.T. 57, at pp. 99-100).

91 The BIA protects trustees while they are acting as officers of the court and exercising the powers conferred upon them by law. A trustee is not personally bound by the bankrupt's obligations. In addition to being protected by the provisions that confer immunity upon them (ss. 14.06(1.2), (2) and (4), 50(9) and 50.4(5)), trustees benefit from the screening of the proceedings provided for in s. 215, which is central to the litigation in the case at bar. The provisions that protect trustees against proceedings are a clear indication of Parliament's intent to give trustees the flexibility they need to discharge the duties imposed on them by the BIA.

92 It is also interesting to note that similar protections exist for monitors appointed under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ss. 11.7(4) and 11.8(1), (3) and (5), and liquidators acting pursuant to the Winding-up and Restructuring Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. W-11, ss. 35.1 and 76(2).

1.2 1992 Reform

93 The rules governing bankruptcy changed considerably with the coming into force of the 1992 reform. The most striking change was the priority given to the reorganization of companies, as opposed to the interruption of business. D. C. A. Tay comments as follows on the significance of the BIA's new thrust:

The main impact of the BIA is to change the thrust of Canada's bankruptcy legislation from liquidation to rehabilitation. Whereas the old Act dealt primarily with who gets what from the remains of the bankrupt's estate, the BIA tries to provide more ways for an insolvent debtor to stay alive and to restructure and reorganize its affairs.

(Implications of the New Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (1993), article VI, "The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act: Striking a Balance Between the Rights of the Debtor and its Creditors", at p. 2)

94 This change is fundamental, and it unquestionably constitutes one of the main objectives behind the reform. Its effect, in concrete terms, in the case at bar is that the trustee was obliged to facilitate the sale of a going concern rather than to cease operations and liquidate the assets. The objective of continuing operations is a factor that must be incorporated into the constitutional analysis when considering whether a provincial statute frustrates the purpose of the BIA.

95 The trustee's duties and responsibilities as a public officer permeate these new functions. The trustee has been transformed from a mere liquidator into an agent of financial restructuring. If trustees are responsible for ensuring that businesses survive and that jobs are preserved, then it follows that they must manage the businesses until purchasers can be found. The trustee's management role is essentially a temporary one. Although the length of the trustee's administration may vary depending on the nature of the business and the economic conditions at the time, the trustee serves essentially as a bridge in maintaining or reorganizing the business before handing it over to a purchaser.

96 It is clear from this crucial role of the trustee that bankruptcy inevitably has consequences for labour relations, which is why it is important to review the interrelationship of the rules of bankruptcy and those of labour relations, more specifically those applicable to the successor employer declaration.

2. Purpose and Effect of the Successor Employer Declaration

2.1 Purpose of the Declaration

97 Every Canadian legislature has enacted a provision pursuant to which employees' union protection remains in effect should the business they work for be transferred. The Ontario provision that is relevant to the instant case reads as follows:

69. . . .

(2) Where an employer who is bound by or is a party to a collective agreement with a trade union or council of trade unions sells his, her or its business, the person to whom the business has been sold is, until the Board otherwise declares, bound by the collective agreement as if the person had been a party thereto and, where an employer sells his, her or its business while an application for certification or termination of bargaining rights to which the employer is a party is before the Board, the person to whom the business has been sold is, until the Board otherwise declares, the employer for the purposes of the application as if the person were named as the employer in the application.

98 Without this protection, employees could, although still working at the same jobs, albeit for a new employer, be stripped of the rights their union had negotiated on their behalf.

99 In Lester (W.W.) (1978) Ltd. v. United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry, Local 740, 1990 CanLII 22 (SCC), [1990] 3 S.C.R. 644, McLachlin J., as she then was, explained the purpose of the successor employer declaration as follows:

The basic aim of such provisions is to prevent employees from losing union protection when a business is sold or transferred or when changes are made to the corporate structure of a business. . . . [p. 671]

100 Numerous factors are taken into consideration when establishing whether the purchaser of a business has succeeded to the vendor as employer. To determine whether the business has been transferred, the usual practice is to ask whether sufficient significant elements of its assets have been sold to the purchaser and assess the degree of continuity in the business's operations. Each case turns on its own facts, and no single factor is determinative. The decision maker may compare both the human aspects (employee know-how, management system, licences, patents, goodwill) and physical aspects (tangible assets of the business, equipment, land, location) of the assigned business with those of the new one to decide whether there has been a sale. The decision maker also determines whether the constituent parts of the business have been transferred as a whole that is sufficiently coherent for the transfer to be equivalent to the sale of the business as a "functional economic vehicle" and for the survival of the rights arising out of collective bargaining to be justified (Lester, at p. 676; Metropolitan Parking Inc., [1980] 1 Can. L.R.B.R. 197 (Ont.), at p. 208; Lincoln Hydro Electric Commission, [1999] O.L.R.B. Rep. May/June 397, at pp. 415-16; G. W. Adams, Canadian Labour Law (2nd ed. (looseleaf)), at pp. 8-4 to 8-23).

2.2 Effect of the Declaration

101 The effect of a declaration by the OLRB that an entity has succeeded to another as an employer is that the entity in respect of which the declaration is made becomes a party to the collective agreement and becomes liable to perform all the obligations set out in that agreement, including those that were binding on the former employer before the business was transferred. The new employer becomes personally liable for the predecessor employer's debts, as well as for any violations of the collective agreement occurring before the sale. For example, the successor may be bound by an arbitration award against the predecessor and be forced to assume responsibility for unfair labour practices. Generally speaking, the successor is personally liable to perform the predecessor's obligations (Adam v. Daniel Roy Ltée, 1983 CanLII 147 (SCC), [1983] 1 S.C.R. 683, at pp. 694-95; Man of Aran (1974), 6 L.A.C. (2d) 238 (Ont.); Woodbridge Hotel (1976), 13 L.A.C. (2d) 96 (Ont.); Uncle Ben's Industries, [1979] 2 Can. L.R.B.R. 126 (B.C.); Re United Brotherhood of Carpenters& Joiners of America, Local 3054 and Cassin-Remco Ltd. reflex, (1979), 105 D.L.R. (3d) 138 (Ont. H.C.J.); Radio CJYQ-930 Ltd. (1978), 34 di 617; Adams, at pp. 8-38.2 to 8-39; D. D. Carter, G. England, B. Etherington and G. Trudeau, Labour Law in Canada (5th ed. 2002), at pp. 280-81).

102 Although protecting employees upon the sale of a business is straightforward in the context of the transfer of obligations to the purchaser, a number of questions are raised when the issue arises in a situation involving a trustee. The difficulties faced by trustees are exacerbated by a lack of uniformity both in labour relations legislation across Canada and in the case law relating to that legislation (Adams, at pp. 8-4 et seq. and 8-39 et seq.).

103 It is common ground that the LRA confers the exclusive power to decide who is a "successor employer" on the OLRB. However, since the Ontario statute cannot frustrate the purpose of the BIA, it is necessary to determine to what extent a declaration that a trustee is a successor employer is compatible with the BIA.

3. Conflicts Between the BIA and the LRA

104 I have already discussed the effect of a successor employer declaration made under the LRA. Section 69(2) LRA provides that the purchaser of the business is bound by the obligations of the employer-vendor who signed the collective agreement as if the purchaser had been a party to that agreement. I also mentioned above that a declaration that a trustee is an employer within the meaning of the LRA would raise a number of questions. Even a cursory review brings a number of conflicts to light.

105 The most obvious conflict results from claims for unpaid wages. The effect of a successor employer declaration is that the person to whom it applies is liable for the obligations of the employer who signed the collective agreement. The new "employer", the trustee in the case at bar, would be liable for all wages left unpaid by the bankrupt. This obligation is in direct conflict with two provisions of the BIA.

106 The first is s. 14.06(1.2), which explicitly provides as follows:

(1.2) Notwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law, where a trustee carries on in that position the business of the debtor or continues the employment of the debtor's employees, the trustee is not by reason of that fact personally liable in respect of any claim against the debtor or related to a requirement imposed on the debtor to pay an amount where the claim arose before or upon the trustee's appointment.

As the declaration binds the trustee to perform all the obligations of the employer who signed the collective agreement, its effect is to impose on this officer of the court a personal liability from which he or she is explicitly exempted by s. 14.06(1.2).

107 The second incompatible provision is s. 136(1)(d), which gives priority to claims of the bankrupt's employees for up to six months' back pay, to a maximum of $2,000 per employee. Any claims in excess of this amount are treated as ordinary claims and paid rateably (s. 141). If the trustee is considered to be an employer, he or she must pay the employees' claims in full, which is inconsistent with the BIA. This is another situation in which there is a direct conflict because it is impossible to comply with both the BIA and the LRA. Although not all bankrupt employers accumulate debts for back pay in excess of the limits provided for in the BIA, when one does, the bankruptcy court cannot unconditionally allow a union to request that the trustee be declared the bankrupt's successor.

108 Another conflict may arise in situations similar to the one in Adam v. Daniel Roy Ltée. In that case, the new employer was ordered to reinstate and indemnify an employee who had been dismissed by the predecessor employer because of her union activities. Such a decision, if applied to a trustee, would require the trustee to reinstate an employee even though the bankruptcy had, in principle, terminated his or her employment (Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), 1998 CanLII 837 (SCC), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27).

Digitized by Google

109 Other conflict situations are more subtle. One example is where a trustee must continue operating a business with only a few remaining employees. Procedures relating to lay-offs or to relocation may impose constraints that are incompatible with reorganization for bankruptcy purposes.

110 A final conflict results from the fact that the successor employer declaration is not time-limited. In the case of an actual purchaser, this poses no problems. In principle, the transfer of the business, like the declaration, is final. The same is not true in the case of a trustee, since the trustee, as an officer of the court, is entitled to be discharged once the administration of the assets has been completed (s. 41(2) BIA). An unconditional declaration would make the trustee an employer even though the reorganization has been completed and the trustee has been discharged by the bankruptcy court.

111 The above examples clearly illustrate that the successor employer declaration is not free of pitfalls when it applies to a trustee who must discharge his or her duties in accordance with the BIA. If in my first example it is clearly impossible to apply the two statutes concurrently, a situation in which the trustee could be held personally liable for debts of the bankrupt connected with the collective agreement would just as obviously frustrate the purpose of the BIA. As Feldman J.A. stated in the instant case:

These bankruptcy considerations are critically important where an interim receiver could be declared a successor employer of the debtor if it carries on the debtor's business in order to sell it as a going concern. Whether to carry on the business is one of the most significant decisions that the receiver must make. That decision affects the entire direction of the bankruptcy and its outcome and, importantly, the ability of the receiver to maximize the value of the bankrupt's estate for the benefit of the affected stakeholders. [para. 53]

112 The decision to continue operating the business is central to the trustee's role under the BIA. This role cannot be disregarded. The parties must strike a balance between the trustee's duties and immunities under the BIA and the employees' rights under the LRA. In the event of conflict, the parties must refer to constitutional principles. A brief review of the relevant doctrines is therefore in order.

4. Double Aspect and Paramountcy Doctrines

113 Conflicts of legislative powers are not tolerated in constitutional law. A number of doctrines have been developed to ensure that federal and provincial powers are respected. Two of them are relevant here: double aspect and paramountcy. The doctrine of paramountcy has been considered in a number of this Court's decisions dealing specifically with bankruptcy, and it would be helpful to summarize those decisions.

4.1 Double Aspect Doctrine

114 Provincial legislatures have jurisdiction over property and civil rights under s. 92(13) of the Constitution Act, 1867 (the "Constitution"). The regulation of conditions of employment falls under this head of power. No one is questioning the constitutionality either of the LRA as a whole or of s. 69(2). As for Parliament, it has jurisdiction over bankruptcy and insolvency under s. 91(21) of the Constitution, and neither its jurisdiction nor the provisions granting powers and immunities to trustees are being contested. Thus, each of these statutes, in its own field, is within the jurisdiction of the level of government that enacted it.

115 When effect is given to federal and provincial statutes, they can often be applied concurrently. The Privy Council recognized this possibility at a very early stage:

. . . subjects which in one aspect and for one purpose fall within sect. 92, may in another aspect and for another purpose fall within sect. 91.

(Hodge v. The Queen (1883), 9 App. Cas. 117, at p. 130)

Thus, when trustees manage businesses while searching for a buyer, they derive their powers from the BIA, which is within federal jurisdiction. However, they are not exempt from the application of all provincial legislation. The BIA even makes express provision for the application of compatible provincial legislation relating to property and civil rights. Section 72(1) reaffirms the applicability of laws that are not in conflict with the BIA:

72. (1) The provisions of this Act shall not be deemed to abrogate or supersede the substantive provisions of any other law or statute relating to property and civil rights that are not in conflict with this Act, and the trustee is entitled to avail himself of all rights and remedies provided by that law or statute as supplementary to and in addition to the rights and remedies provided by this Act.

A trustee who operates a business must satisfy a large number of requirements. For example, he or she may neither fail to collect source deductions from employees' pay nor violate minimum labour standards.

116 As a result, because of the division of legislative powers between the levels of government, trustees are subject to a large number of provincial statutes. Courts that hear disputes relating to the difficulty of applying federal and provincial statutes concurrently must attempt to reconcile the application of those statutes in a manner consistent with the respective jurisdictions of the two levels of government: Reference re Employment Insurance Act (Can.), ss. 22 and

23, 2005 SCC 56 (CanLII), [2005] 2 S.C.R. 669, 2005 SCC 56. Where conflict is unavoidable, another doctrine may apply, namely, paramountcy.

4.2 Paramountcy Doctrine

117 The paramountcy of federal laws over provincial laws in the event of conflict is a doctrine that was established long ago: W. R. Lederman, "The Concurrent Operation of Federal and Provincial Laws in Canada" (1963), 9 McGill L.J. 185. Conflicts that will trigger recourse to this doctrine may occur where it is impossible to apply a federal statute and a provincial statute simultaneously (Multiple Access Ltd. v. McCutcheon, 1982 CanLII 55 (SCC), [1982] 2 S.C.R. 161, at p. 191), but may also occur where the application of a provincial statute frustrates the legislative purpose of a federal one: Law Society of British Columbia v. Mangat, 2001 SCC 67 (CanLII), [2001] 3 S.C.R. 113, 2001 SCC 67, and Rothmans, Benson& Hedges Inc. v. Saskatchewan, 2005 SCC 13 (CanLII), [2005] 1 S.C.R. 188, 2005 SCC 13, at para. 12.

118 While this principle is easily stated, it is not always easy to apply, as can be seen from the numerous cases on this subject.

4.3 Specific Context of Bankruptcy

119 The BIA and the LRA are not necessarily incompatible. While it is important to acknowledge potential conflicts, it is just as important to ensure that the paramountcy doctrine is not interpreted in a way that makes it impossible to apply provincial provisions in respect of aspects that are compatible with the federal statute. The double aspect doctrine is as important as the doctrine of paramountcy. Courts must ensure that the balance struck by the Constitution is respected and that each level of government can exercise its jurisdiction fully when this can be done without impeding action by the other level.

120 In several important judgments on the subject of bankruptcy, this Court has considered the relationship between bankruptcy legislation and various aspects of provincial property law: Deputy Minister of Revenue v. Rainville, 1979 CanLII 2 (SCC), [1980] 1 S.C.R. 35; Deloitte Haskins and Sells Ltd. v. Workers' Compensation Board, 1985 CanLII 82 (SCC), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 785; Federal Business Development Bank v. Quebec (Commission de la santé et de la sécurité du travail), 1988 CanLII 105 (SCC), [1988] 1 S.C.R. 1061; British Columbia v. Henfrey Samson Belair Ltd., 1989 CanLII 43 (SCC), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 24; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, 1995 CanLII 69 (SCC), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453, and D.I.M.S. Construction inc. (Trustee of) v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 52 (CanLII), [2005] 2 S.C.R. 564, 2005 SCC 52.

121 In Husky Oil, Gonthier J., writing for the majority, summarized the principles that can serve as a basis for a "consistent and general philosophy as to the purposes of the federal system of bankruptcy and its relation to provincial property arrangements" (para. 31). He not only noted that provinces may not directly affect priorities under the Bankruptcy Act, but also stated propositions that permit the paramountcy doctrine to be applied where provincial legislation indirectly conflicts with the BIA (paras. 32 (quoting A. J. Roman and M. J. Sweatman, "The Conflict Between Canadian Provincial Personal Property Security Acts and the Federal Bankruptcy Act: The War is Over" (1992), 71 Can. Bar Rev. 77, at pp. 78-79) and 39):

(1) provinces cannot create priorities between creditors or change the scheme of distribution on bankruptcy under s. 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act;

(2) while provincial legislation may validly affect priorities in a non-bankruptcy situation, once bankruptcy has occurred section 136(1) of the Bankruptcy Act determines the status and priority of the claims specifically dealt with in that section;

(3) if the provinces could create their own priorities or affect priorities under the Bankruptcy Act this would invite a different scheme of distribution on bankruptcy from province to province, an unacceptable situation; . . .

(4) the definition of terms such as "secured creditor", if defined under the Bankruptcy Act, must be interpreted in bankruptcy cases as defined by the federal Parliament, not the provincial legislatures. Provinces cannot affect how such terms are defined for purposes of the Bankruptcy Act[;]

(5) in determining the relationship between provincial legislation and the Bankruptcy Act, the form of the provincial interest created must not be allowed to triumph over its substance. The provinces are not entitled to do indirectly what they are prohibited from doing directly;

(6) there need not be any provincial intention to intrude into the exclusive federal sphere of bankruptcy and to conflict with the order of priorities of the Bankruptcy Act in order to render the provincial law inapplicable. It is sufficient that the effect of provincial legislation is to do so. [Emphasis in original.]

122 Although the propositions enunciated in Husky Oil relate more specifically to conflicts between provincial statutes and the scheme of distribution established in the BIA, they have a scope that extends beyond that specific context, and they demonstrate how the paramountcy doctrine applies in the context of bankruptcy.

123 In principle, a trustee should not be bound by obligations that interfere with the resolution of the bankruptcy. However, all the conflicts to which I have alluded will not occur every time the OLRB makes a successor employer declaration. On the one hand, it may be that in the particular circumstances of a case, the trustee's conduct is inconsistent with the role entrusted to him or her by the BIA; on the other hand, the OLRB may make a partial declaration if the union does not require the transfer of all the former employer's obligations. The case at bar is a good example of the latter situation. The union argues that it is not seeking a declaration of liability for debts owed before the appointment of the receiver. While this clarification is helpful, it does not avert every potential conflict.

124 The Superior Court plays a decisive role in identifying potential conflicts and must not authorize proceedings that could give rise to a conflict. A judge who denies leave to bring proceedings does not declare the provincial provision to be of no force or effect; he or she merely avoids the conflict by relying on the paramountcy doctrine in a preventive manner, hence the importance of the screening mechanism of s. 215 BIA.

5. Section 215 BIA

5.1 Purpose of Section 215 BIA

125 As I mentioned earlier, Parliament's intent to give trustees flexibility in administering bankruptcies is evident in the immunities provided for in the BIA. Section 215 plays an important role in protecting trustees, because a superior court must, in applying it, screen proceedings that could be brought against them. It reads as follows:

215. Except by leave of the court, no action lies against the Superintendent, an official receiver, an interim receiver or a trustee with respect to any report made under, or any action taken pursuant to, this Act.

126 My colleague Abella J. objects to incorporating factors related to the special nature of a declaration that a trustee is an employer into the criteria for applying s. 215 BIA. To do so would in her view be to create a special and exceptional test for such a declaration. I myself see it as an incorporation of constitutional principles and an adjustment to new dimensions of the remedies that may be authorized against trustees.

127 Like Feldman and Cronk JJ.A., I am of the opinion that s. 215 acts as a screening mechanism for the purpose of ensuring that provincial and federal statutes do not conflict with each other. The bankruptcy judge acts as a specialized tribunal. Not only is the bankruptcy judge responsible for applying the federal statute, which must take precedence over provincial legislation in the event of conflict, but he or she is also the first person before whom the issue of the potential conflict is raised and the only one in a position to assess all the interests at stake. It is the bankruptcy judge who must decide all issues relating to the application of the BIA.

128 In Tranchemontagne v. Ontario (Director, Disability Support Program), 2006 SCC 14 (CanLII), [2006] 1 S.C.R. 513, 2006 SCC 14, the Court recognized the central role of the first court or tribunal to which a claimant applies. That case required a decision as to which of two administrative tribunals should decide an issue relating to human rights. In the case at bar, the choice is between the Superior Court and an administrative tribunal, the OLRB, and, what is more, it involves a constitutional question. In light of the Superior Court's expertise in bankruptcy matters and in matters relating to the Constitution, there is all the more reason to choose the Superior Court instead of the administrative tribunal. The bankruptcy court must be permitted to play its central role in full before the tribunal external to the bankruptcy considers the application against the trustee: Sam Lévy & Associés Inc. v. Azco Mining Inc., 2001 SCC 92 (CanLII), [2001] 3 S.C.R. 978, 2001 SCC 92. In contrast, the OLRB specializes in labour relations, and its mission is to apply the LRA and, more specifically in the case at bar, s. 69(2), the purpose of which is to protect employees. Since the bankruptcy of a business affects the interests of all the creditors, not just of the employees, the bankruptcy judge is in a better position to evaluate the interests at stake and prevent conflicts.

129 I agree with my colleague Abella J. that the trustee is not immunized by the BIA. There are two sections that provide for supervision of the trustee's activities: ss. 37 and 215. Section 37 allows any interested person to apply to the bankruptcy court to have it confirm, reverse or modify an act or decision of a trustee that is the subject of a complaint. This remedy is not conditional on first obtaining leave and it sometimes constitutes an alternative remedy to s. 215 BIA. What distinguishes s. 37 from s. 215 is that the latter allows proceedings to be brought in a court or tribunal other than the bankruptcy court and that it requires leave. Leave is required here because Parliament intended that the bankruptcy court have control over the proceedings. The other court or tribunal is not one that specializes in bankruptcy matters.

130 The vast majority of the decisions based on s. 215 are from cases involving alleged wrongdoing by a trustee: Alamo Linen Rentals Ltd. v. Spicer Macgillivry Inc. (1986), 63 C.B.R. (N.S.) 38 (Ont. Prov. Ct.); Beatty Limited Partnership (Re) reflex, (1991), 1 O.R. (3d) 636 (Gen. Div.); Chastan Ventures Ltd., Re 1993 CanLII 745 (BC SC), (1993), 23 C.B.R. (3d) 115 (B.C.S.C.); Willows Golf Corp. 131 The courts have hesitated to grant leave to bring proceedings against a trustee for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that the trustee is a successor employer. The instant case exemplifies this, but the Court of Appeal is not alone in this respect: 588871 Ontario Ltd., Re 1995 CanLII 7375 (ON SC), (1995), 33 C.B.R. (3d) 28 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

132 With the evolution of administrative law and the growing number of specialized tribunals, s. 215 is now used for a much wider variety of purposes than before. I agree with what Feldman J.A. said on this subject:

In cases to date dealing with leave under s. 215 of the BIA, such as Mancini, where the issue has been trustee wrongdoing, factors relating to the bankruptcy court's control over the process have not arisen. In such cases, if leave is granted, the trustee will hire a lawyer to defend it in court, and the trustee will proceed to carry out its duties conducting the receivership or bankruptcy. [para. 54]

133 Applications for leave based on grounds other than negligence or refusal by the trustee to discharge his or her duties are thus a fairly recent occurrence. It is quite clear from the few reported cases that bankruptcy judges are desirous of preserving the trustee's flexibility and that they ensure that proceedings brought before the other court or tribunal do not impede action by the trustee. For instance, in Royal Crest Lifecare Group, Re 2003 CanLII 11504 (ON SC), (2003), 40 C.B.R. (4th) 146, the Ontario Superior Court dismissed a union's motion for leave to apply to the OLRB on the following basis:

There has been no allegation, let alone evidence, that the Trustee here (even if one were to consider E&Y Inc. in its capacity as IR) has been dragging its feet or will do so. The CUPE cross-motion for leave is dismissed without prejudice to such a motion being brought back on again with appropriate factual underpinning which I would be of the view ought to demonstrate that the Trustee has slipped over from functioning qua realizor of assets in a diligent fashion to the role of being predominantly an employer in its activities. [para. 29]

On an appeal from that judgment (2004 CanLII 19809 (ON CA), (2004), 46 C.B.R. (4th) 126, at para. 27), the Ontario Court of Appeal explicitly approved the Superior Court's approach, although it noted the constraints inherent in the bankruptcy context:

A bankruptcy is a disaster. A company has failed; in many cases it will not survive. Creditors, who provided goods and services in good faith, may lose substantial sums of money. Employees of the bankrupt company instantly lose their jobs. The bankruptcy judge is thrown into the middle of the disaster. The judge will need to make important decisions that will affect the future of the company, creditors and employees. The qualities of a good bankruptcy judge are therefore expertise, sensitivity and speed.

The trustee has many responsibilities — to the estate it is managing, to creditors and to the court. Where, as here, a trustee in bankruptcy seeks to hire former employees of the bankrupt company, the trustee also has a responsibility to those employees. The trustee's decision to bring a motion on the first day of its trusteeship seeking a declaration that it not be deemed a successor employer "for any purpose whatsoever" was, in the bankruptcy judge's view, premature. Accordingly, he dismissed the motion. The trustee does not appeal this component of his decision.

Equally, the appellants' cross-motion, understandable perhaps because of the trustee's motion, was also, arguably, misconceived. The first day of a bankruptcy is hardly "business as usual" for anyone, including the employees. The relationship between the trustee and the employees of the bankrupt company cannot be resolved instantly. Care, sensitivity, negotiation and at least some time will be necessary before an appropriate relationship can be set in place. The bankruptcy judge regarded the union's cross-motion as premature as well. Accordingly, he dismissed it, but without foreclosing the possibility that such a motion could succeed once the parties, at a minimum, had explored the establishment of an appropriate employment relationship. Again, I see no basis for interfering with the bankruptcy judge's exercise of discretion in this regard. [paras. 21, 22, 31 and 32]

134 Thus, the purpose of ss. 37 and 215 is not to immunize the trustee against legitimate proceedings, but to permit the trustee's administration to be supervised without impeding it. Facilitating a form of supervision by the bankruptcy court supports the trustee's role. The BIA establishes a scheme under which the effectiveness of the trustee's administration can be taken into account without shielding the trustee from the courts' power of supervision. Section 215 does not indicate what criteria must be met. The flexibility afforded by Parliament permits the bankruptcy court to adapt to new realities, including successor employer declarations.

5.2 Criteria for Granting Leave

135 Mancini (Bankrupt) v. Falconi reflex, (1993), 61 O.A.C. 332 (C.A.), is often cited as the source of the analysis that the judge must conduct. Although the criteria established in that case are easy to apply to a simple claim against a trustee for breach of his or her duties, they must be tailored to the specific nature of each application for leave.

5.2.1 Mancini and the Sufficiency of the Evidence

136 There is a need to demystify the analysis developed in Mancini. In that case, the moving parties applied for leave to commence an action by way of counterclaim for damages against a trustee. They alleged that the trustee's proceeding constituted an abuse of process and that the trustee had organized a criminal prosecution. The moving parties thus accused the trustee of wrongdoing and asked for an award of damages against the trustee personally. This was not a proceeding likely to impair the application of the BIA. The judge did not need to consider the effect the proceeding might have in this regard. However, the Court of Appeal clearly differentiated between two matters a judge must consider on an application for leave under s. 215: the seriousness of the cause of action and the sufficiency of the evidence. On the seriousness of the cause of action, the Court of Appeal in Mancini did not set out the applicable analysis, but simply summarized the case law.

137 In my view, the most interesting aspect of that case was the court's discussion about the standard of proof. Moreover, that was the main issue in the case. The Court of Appeal wrote the following:

In considering whether leave should be granted under s. 186 [now s. 215] of the Bankruptcy Act to commence an action against the trustee, the motions court judge was required to consider the evidence, very generally reviewed above, in the context of the counterclaim sought to be made against the trustee. The issue is not whether the evidence on the s. 186 motion discloses the existence of a cause of action against the trustee, but rather whether the evidence provides the required support for the cause of action sought to be asserted by way of the appellants' counterclaim. Thus, it is necessary to examine the claims that the appellants sought to make against the trustee.

The appellants submit that the motions court judge erred in holding that the evidence filed in support of their motion under s. 186 of the Bankruptcy Act must be sufficient to establish a factual foundation for the claim that the appellants propose to make against the trustee. The appellants submit that the test under s. 186 requires no more than some evidence providing a factual foundation for the claim they seek to assert. In my opinion, the motions court judge was correct in reaching the conclusion he did on this issue. On a continuum of evidence ranging from no evidence to evidence which is conclusive, the evidence required to support an order under s. 186 must be sufficient to establish that there is a factual basis for the proposed claim and that the proposed claim discloses a cause of action.

The sufficiency of the evidence must be measured in the context of the purpose of s. 186 which, as stated earlier, is to prevent the trustee from having to respond to actions which are frivolous or vexatious or from claims which do not disclose a cause of action. As I have previously noted, the evidence on a motion under s. 186 does not have to be sufficient to enable the motions court judge to make a final assessment of the merits of the claim sought to be made, but it must be sufficient to address the issues that I have identified, having in mind the objectives of s. 186. [Emphasis added; paras. 12, 16 and 17.]

138 In saying this, the Court of Appeal was affirming the decision of the trial judge ((1989), 76 C.B.R. (N.S.) 90), who had adopted a clear formulation of what evidence would be sufficient for leave to be granted to bring proceedings against a trustee:

Because the decision requires an exercise of discretion, the Court must make a more thorough enquiry than when considering whether or not a claim, as a matter of law, discloses a cause of action. In considering whether a claim discloses a cause of action, the Court presumes the allegations in the claim to be true to determine whether those allegations can provide the basis for a remedy. On a section 186 application, the Court must consider whether there is evidence of a factual basis for the proposed claim. The policy of section 186 is to protect the Trustee from claims which have no basis in fact. Ensuring a proper factual foundation for a proposed claim requires that the alleged facts must be disclosed by sufficient affidavit evidence. Facts are not allegations merely to be accepted at face value. [pp. 93-94]

139 If Mancini can be considered to have laid down a threshold or test of some sort, I would say that the test relates to the standard of proof required for the bankruptcy court to grant leave to bring proceedings.

140 With regard to the sufficiency of the evidence, Mancini thus makes it clear that the judge to whom an application for leave is made under s. 215 cannot accept vague allegations. The allegations must be supported by the evidence. The judge does not have to be convinced that the action is well founded, since he or she is not the trier of fact. However, the judge must ensure that there is sufficient factual evidence, whether in the form of affidavits or exhibits, to support the allegations. To do this, the judge must review the evidence. In ordinary usage, the standard of proof in civil proceedings is often characterized as requiring either proof on the balance of probabilities or prima facie evidence. The threshold under s. 215 is not the trial judge's threshold of proof on the balance of probabilities, but prima facie evidence.

141 Unlike in Mancini, what is in issue in the case at bar is not the question of fact of the sufficiency of the evidence, but the question of law that is considered at the stage of the review of the seriousness of the cause of action.

5.2.2 Seriousness of the Cause of Action

142 The review of the seriousness of the cause of action must be adapted to the nature of the proceedings the applicant intends to bring. If, as in Mancini and the majority of the cases submitted to the courts until quite recently, a monetary award is all that is sought, the proceedings do not prevent the trustee from carrying out his or her duties or impose a burden on the trustee that is incompatible with the BIA.

143 However, bankruptcy judges clearly cannot grant leave to bring proceedings that are incompatible with the BIA. Thus, a bankruptcy judge could not authorize proceedings aimed at holding a trustee liable where the BIA immunizes trustees against the liability in question, as in the case of environmental damage. Since a full defence is available to the trustee pursuant to s. 14.06(2) and (4), such proceedings could not be characterized as serious or, in the words used in Mancini, "not frivolous". When a proceeding is not a simple action in damages based on wrongdoing by the trustee, the judge must therefore assess the nature and scope of the proceeding in light of the evidence.

144 Thus, in proceedings in which the OLRB is asked to declare that a trustee has succeeded to the bankrupt as employer, the review by the bankruptcy judge enables the judge to identify the union's actual objective in making this request. This makes it possible for the bankruptcy judge to reconcile the employees' interests with those of anyone else who has interests in the bankruptcy.

145 The judge's review does not have the effect of giving special or different treatment to successor employer declarations. Regardless of the reason the judge gives for granting leave to bring proceedings, the general context of the bankruptcy remains relevant. The judge must play an active role, anticipate the consequences of the proceedings, and limit their scope if need be. Screening the proceedings in this way is in fact what the trial judge did when he amended the order appointing the receiver so as to limit the protection of the receiver to acts it carried out in the context of the liquidation of the property. This limitation should be qualified if, for example, the issue concerns the rate of wages paid by the trustee. The process engaged in by the trial judge is nevertheless an example of what bankruptcy judges can be required to do on a regular basis in the course of their interactions with the parties. They can tailor the leave they grant to the specific needs of each case. When reviewing the seriousness of the cause of action, the bankruptcy judge must be vigilant and must deal with conflicts that could impair the application of the BIA.

146 In the case at bar, Feldman J.A. concluded that an operational conflict results each time a bankruptcy judge denies leave to bring proceedings under s. 69(2) LRA:

Because the denial of leave under s. 215 of the BIA can be used by the bankruptcy court in appropriate circumstances to preclude the OLRB from exercising its exclusive jurisdiction to declare a person a successor employer, it is in operational conflict with s. 69 of LRA when such leave is denied. When that occurs, s. 72(1) of the BIA is engaged, with the result that s. 69(12) of the LRA is superceded by s. 215 of the BIA. [para. 69]

147 I myself would present this idea from a positive perspective. Judges who exercise their jurisdiction under s. 215 are in a position to avoid operational conflicts. By ensuring that the conclusions being sought do not impair the application of the BIA and, if need be, limiting the scope of proceedings based on a provincial statute, the bankruptcy judge permits the federal statute and provincial legislation to be applied simultaneously.

148 If the union seeks only to maintain wage rates, the proceedings can be limited to that purpose. Similarly, the problem of the period during which the declaration will be effective can be resolved by specifying that the trustee's liability will terminate when the business is transferred to the purchaser.

149 Some cases, such as those involving seniority, may be difficult to evaluate. The issues in such cases will turn on the specific facts of each bankruptcy situation and will sometimes require an assessment of the overall impact of the proceedings.

150 Feldman J.A. mentioned the following factors:

Digitized by Google

The factors that the bankruptcy court applies on a s. 215 application will relate to both procedural and substantive aspects of the process. Some important factors will include: the timing of the application, the complexity of the receivership and the demands on the receiver as it carries out its obligations, the potential duration of the period that the receiver intends to operate the business before it can be sold (normally as brief as possible), the availability of potential purchasers and their financial strength, and the likelihood that a purchaser will be declared a successor employer and assume all of the obligations under the collective agreement. This latter factor may be particularly important because it will give practical assurance to the union that all of the terms of the collective agreement will be honoured and the employees protected. Another key factor is the practicality of proceeding before the OLRB and the timeliness of a hearing before that tribunal in the context of the proposed temporary operation of the business and its sale. [para. 58]

These factors could be applied incorrectly. They inevitably overlap with those that will determine the decision on the merits. The bankruptcy judge must take care not to supplant the court or tribunal that will rule on the merits.

151 Using the factors proposed by Feldman J.A. entails a second risk. These factors do not expressly mention the employees' rights. The trustee represents the interests of all the creditors, including the employees. The proposed factors must therefore be resituated in the context of the exercise of a remedy that necessarily implies constraints relating to the rights of all the creditors. They cannot serve to allow the trustee to evade the application of a statute that, although it may create a constraint, does not hinder the trustee's work. Judges must therefore bear in mind that they will be justified in limiting the scope of proceedings or denying leave to bring them only if the proceedings would genuinely hinder the trustee's work. The judge's first task is therefore to enquire into the actual effect of the application, not a vaguely defined effect on the administration of the bankruptcy.

152 Employees' wage rates are one example of a constraint related to the application of the collective agreement that does not ordinarily hinder the trustee's work. Trustees who retain employees' services do not necessarily have the right to reduce their wages. Consequently, if a union seeks a declaration that a trustee is the bankrupt's successor for the sole purpose of maintaining wage rates, and if the interests of the parties cannot be reconciled at the hearing before the bankruptcy court, then leave should normally be granted. An order that a monitor pay recalled employees in accordance with the terms of the collective agreement has been made in the context of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act. Such an order does not generally lead to conflict with the duties of a liquidator or a trustee: Syndicat national de l'amiante d'Asbestos inc. v. Jeffrey Mines Inc., [2003] Q.J. No. 264 (QL) (C.A.).

153 Moreover, the review before the bankruptcy judge of the consequences of a declaration is likely to make the parties aware of their respective interests and create an atmosphere conducive to the respect of everyone's rights. When considering the application, the judge must therefore bear in mind all the interests at stake and accept that every constraint does not necessarily hinder the trustee's work. An approach that focussed too much on the management flexibility required by the trustee could all too easily lead the judge to find that a conflict exists and would hardly be in keeping with s. 72 BIA.

154 To sum up, a judge who must decide whether to grant leave to bring proceedings against a trustee must determine the actual scope of the remedy being sought, identify potential conflicts and tailor the leave so as to avoid a situation in which proceedings based on provincial law have the effect of hindering the discharge of the trustee's duties and responsibilities under the BIA. Determining the scope of the remedy is part of the review of the cause of action. Since conflicts of jurisdiction are not tolerated in constitutional law, proceedings that lead to a constitutional conflict have no basis in law. The judge must tailor the leave. If the conflict cannot be avoided in this way, then leave to bring the proceedings must be denied.

6. Application to the Case at Bar

155 My colleague Abella J. concludes that leave to bring proceedings should be granted. I myself believe that the case should be reconsidered by the Superior Court. The union has not stated its objective other than to say that the proceedings do not concern debts incurred prior to the trustee's appointment, but this is insufficient to eliminate every potential conflict of jurisdiction, and it is also insufficient for us to substitute our assessment for that of the trial judge.

156 To appreciate the nature of the analysis the bankruptcy judge must carry out, it will be helpful to set out the facts of the case.

157 On January 18, 2002, the respondent GMAC Commercial Credit Corporation — Canada ("GMAC"), the principal creditor of the respondents T.C.T. Logistics Inc. and T.C.T. Warehousing Logistics Inc. ("T.C.T."), was informed that T.C.T. had artificially inflated its accounts receivable and had obtained advances from GMAC that exceeded the value of its security by $21 million. On January 24, 2002, at GMAC's request, the Ontario Superior Court appointed KPMG Inc. as interim receiver of T.C.T.'s property. The appointment order provided that no proceedings could be commenced against KPMG without leave of the Superior Court. The order also stated that KPMG would not be considered to have succeeded to T.C.T. as employer. On February 25, 2002, T.C.T. made an assignment in bankruptcy. KPMG was appointed trustee in bankruptcy. As of the date of the bankruptcy, T.C.T. was operating a brokerage, logistics, trucking and warehousing business in Canada and the United States. The sale of the business was considered urgent (refusal by GMAC to advance additional funds, trucks located across Canada and the U.S., perishable goods still in transit or in warehouses, storage of property at risk, etc.).

158 T.C.T. had 1,357 employees across Canada, including unionized employees represented by 13 different unions. There were 225 employees in the warehousing division, which included warehouses located in Edmonton, Calgary and Toronto. The operation of these warehouses was subject to collective agreements covering 78 employees, including the 42 employees in the Toronto warehouse, who were represented by the appellant, Industrial Wood & Allied Workers of Canada, Local 700 (the "union"). On April 12, 2002, KPMG reached an agreement with Spectrum Supply Chain Solutions Inc. ("Spectrum") under which Spectrum would buy certain specified assets of T.C.T.'s warehouses. The letter of intent initially signed by Spectrum and KPMG provided that Spectrum would operate the warehouses and continue to employ most of the employees. After evaluating the assets, however, Spectrum decided that two of the warehouses were of no interest to it, including the one in Toronto, which was considered to be in disrepair. The final agreement provided that the employees would be terminated and that the lease of the Toronto warehouse would not be assigned to Spectrum. On April 16, 2002, the Toronto employees were informed of the agreement with Spectrum and were also informed that KPMG would be applying to the Superior Court for approval of the agreement on April 18, 2002. The Toronto warehouse was closed on May 23, 2002.

159 On May 13, 2002, the union filed two applications with the OLRB in which KPMG was named as a responding party. The purpose of the first was to have Spectrum declared to be the successor employer to T.C.T. and KPMG under s. 69(2) LRA. The second was a complaint of unfair labour practices. KPMG contested the applications, submitting that all proceedings were stayed pursuant to the appointment order and the BIA and that the union had not applied to the Superior Court for leave, as required by the appointment order and by s. 215 BIA. On August 27, 2002, the OLRB ruled in the trustee's favour and stayed the hearing of the applications.

160 The proceedings in the Superior Court concerned only KPMG. The union's application to have Spectrum recognized as the successor to T.C.T. with respect to its obligations as an employer was not in issue.

161 The reasons given by Ground J. of the Superior Court on the merits of the remedy the union sought to exercise were clear (2003 CanLII 64272 (ON SC), (2003), 42 C.B.R. (4th) 221). Ground J. concluded that the trustee had merely acted as a liquidator and should not, as such, be declared the bankrupt's successor. He did not consider the actual objective being pursued by the union or the possibility of limiting the scope of the proceedings that could be brought before the OLRB. Moreover, it is impossible to determine whether he considered these proceedings to be frivolous or to have no chance of succeeding or whether he felt that the evidence did not prima facie support the union's cause of action. In any event, the judge analysed the merits of the case as if he himself was the trier of fact.

162 One observation is necessary here. The unqualified conclusions sought by the union are likely to result in direct conflicts with the application of the BIA. Neither the facts in the record nor the positions advanced by the parties are sufficient for this Court to engage in the review that is the Superior Court's responsibility. The union and GMAC do not agree on the scope of the successor employer declaration sought by the union in the instant case. The union does not seek to place a time limit on the declaration that the receiver and trustee is a successor employer. Nor has it stated if it is seeking a monetary award or the reinstatement of all unionized employees in the context of the unfair labour practices complaint. Does the dispute concern only wages or does it also relate to transfers and terminations of staff? Other issues could be raised by the parties, who are familiar with all aspects of the case. Not only is it necessary to assess the sufficiency of the evidence, but the uncertainty surrounding the scope of the proceedings and the union's actual objective prevents the Court, incontrovertibly in my view, from granting the union the leave it seeks and that was denied by the judge of the Superior Court.

7. Conclusion

163 The analytical approaches of the Court of Appeal and the Superior Court had the effect of avoiding a constitutional conflict, but they could block legitimate actions. Even in their role as liquidators, trustees are often required to conform to obligations imposed on them by provincial legislation. Not every constraint inherent in a proceeding for a successor employer declaration is liable to hinder the administration of the bankruptcy. The criteria proposed by the Superior Court and the Court of Appeal are therefore too demanding.

164 I propose instead to incorporate into s. 215 a review designed to prevent constitutional conflicts. Under this approach, the paramountcy doctrine would apply only where the third party's proposed action would hinder the application of the BIA.

165 Furthermore, I believe that this Court should not supplant the Superior Court to assess the cause of action and the sufficiency of the evidence. In the review required by s. 215, the trier of fact has an active role to play. It is the trier of fact who must conduct the review.

Digitized by Google

166 The Court of Appeal ordered that the case be remitted to the Superior Court. That was a sound decision. The matter must therefore be remitted not only for a review from the constitutional standpoint, but also for a review of the seriousness of the cause of action and the sufficiency of the evidence. The Superior Court did not conduct this more complete review. The Court of Appeal's disposition should accordingly be confirmed.

167 For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal and the cross-appeal.

1. Introduction

[1] This is an application by PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC) for advice and direction in the liquidation of the estate of the Canadian Commercial Bank (CCB). After argument on the issue, counsel for PWC, the liquidator, submitted an amended Notice of Motion in which it requested a declaration. The particulars of the amended Notice of Motion are reproduced below. Also, the present application deals only with the U.S. properties that were realized during the course of the liquidation. The question before me has to do with the liability of the liquidator for environmental claims in respect of those properties.

[2] The Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta ordered that CCB be wound up on September 3, 1985. Price Waterhouse Limited, Now PWC, was appointed liquidator of the estate and effects of CCB. Since that time, there has been a great deal of change in environmental law. Legislation has been passed throughout North America that imposes liability for actions that damage the environment. The liquidator canvassed some of this legislation in its July 1999 Report to the Court. I do not propose to review that information. However, in light of this legislation, the liquidator has raised legitimate concerns as to its potential liability for environmental claims. The liquidator now turns to this Court for advice and direction on the following questions as stated in its Amended Notice of Motion:

> (i) do PWC as liquidator of CCB and the Estate of CCB itself, have responsibility for potential environmental liability claims which may hereafter be asserted in connection with PWC's administration of the affairs of CCB in the United States and the affairs of its U.S. affiliates CCB Business Credit, Inc., CRC Development Corporation, Westlands Diversified Bancorp, Inc. and CCB Bancorp, Inc. (which amalgamated and continued as CCB Bancorp, Inc.), Automated Processing & Development Corp., Commercial Center Bank and CCB Realty, Inc. or does such responsibility rest solely with Bank of Canada as a secured creditor of CCB by virtue of all the monetary benefit derived from such administration flowing to Bank of Canada rather than to the Estate of CCB?
> (ii) does the answer to (i) depend in part on the determination of whether Bank of Canada stood outside of the liquidation of CCB in the enforcement of its security, or came into the liquidation to value and retain its security utilizing the procedures outlined in sections 78-84 of the Winding-up Act, and if so does that impact of the question of liability?
> (iii) if the answer to the first part of (ii) is yes, did Bank of Canada stand outside of or come into the liquidation of CCB for the purposes of realizing on its security?
> (iv) does the fact that no monetary recoveries flowed directly to Bank of Canada from PWC's administration of the affairs of CCB Bancorp, Inc.'s subsidiary Commercial Center Bank impact on the answer to (i), or is it sufficient that Bank of Canada obtained all benefit from the Consolidation Accounting Decision rendered by this Court on January 14, 1994 (upheld by the Court of Appeal of Alberta, leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada refused) and all benefit from the trust created by this Court by Order dated December 22, 1994, thereby indirectly benefiting from the administration undertaken by PWC of such entity?

(v) does the fact that the Estate of CCB benefited from realization upon:

(1) CCB's loans to its employees in the United States;

(2) CCB's U.S. dollar denominated mortgage loans recorded on Item 13 of CCB's Schedule J Returns filed with the Office of the Inspector General of Banks prior to the commencement of the liquidation; and

(3) the shares held by CCB in a U.S. entity known as El Camino Bancorp; impact upon the answer to (i)?

(vi) if the answer to (i) is that a liquidator of CCB and the Estate itself have no responsibility for any such potential environmental claim, and such responsibility rests solely with Bank of Canada as a secured creditor of CCB, should PWC apply to convert some portion of the Advance Payment Plan to final dividends?

(vii) if PWC is to make an application as contemplated in (vi) above, should such application await further clarification of potential exposure in Canada to environmental claims against the Estate of CCB or PWC as liquidator of CCB and if so should PWC undertake a process similar to that process set out in Schedule "3" of the Liquidator's Report dated July 26, 1999 or should some other process be adopted, and if so what?

(viii) if PWC is to make an application as contemplated in (vi) above, what is the impact of Bank of Canada retaining "excess security" over and above its proven debt, to satisfy environmental or other claims which may hereafter be asserted against it in its capacity as a secured creditor, and how is that excess security to be dealt with in converting Advance Payments to final dividends?

[3] In the amended notice of motion, PWC added the following request for relief:

In the alternative, a declaration that Bank of Canada has responsibility for potential environmental liability claims which may hereafter be asserted in connection with PWC's administration of the affairs of CCB in the United States and the affairs of its U.S. affiliates.

I will canvass the issues and the law and then return and answer the questions the liquidator posed in its Amended Notice of Motion.

2. Jurisdiction of the Court to issue a declaration

[4] The Bank of Canada submitted that this Court does not have the jurisdiction to give advice and direction and to issue a declaration because there is no actual claim. The Court should not attempt to answer questions that are entirely hypothetical. In Smith* v. Attorney General of Ontario, 1924 CanLII 3 (SCC), [1924] S.C.R. 331 at 336, Duff J. cited Glasgow Navigation Co. v. *Iron Ore Co., [1910] A.C. 293:

> It is not the function of a court of justice to advise parties as to their rights under a hypothetical state of facts.

[5] Further, Bank of Canada submitted that because there is no actual claim at present, it is premature for this Court to make an order. It is impossible to ascertain the actual liabilities of the parties before the specific facts of an actual claim are reviewed.

[6] There is merit to this argument. It is difficult to ascertain the liabilities of parties when there are no specific facts available. Nevertheless, it is also clear that this Court's jurisdiction to issue a declaratory judgment is very broad. Section 11 of the Judicature Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. J-1, states:

> 11 No proceeding is open to objection on the ground that a judgment or order sought is declaratory only, and the Court may make binding declarations of right whether or not any consequential relief is or could be claimed.

[7] In Re Henning and City of Calgary (1974), 51 D.L.R. (3d) 762, the Alberta Supreme Court, Appellate Division discussed the breadth of the courts' power to issue a delaration. McDermid J.A. stated at 764:

> In Kent Coal Co. ltd. et al* v. Northwestern Utilities, [1936] 4 D.L.R. 337 at p. 354,... McGillivray, J.A., giving the judgment of the majority of this Division, reviewed the authorities as to the jurisdiction of the Court to grant a declaratory judgment and quoted the remark of Lord Sterndale in Hanseon v. *Radcliffe Urban District Council, [1922] 2 Ch. 490, where he stated:
> > In my opinion, under Order XXV., r.5, the power of the Court to make a declaration, where it is a question of defining the rights of two parties, is almost unlimited; I might say only limited by its own discretion. The discretion should of course be exercised judicially, but it seems to me the discretion is very wide.

[8] In Newfoundland* v. *Quebec (Commission Hydro Electrique), 1982 CanLII 28 (SCC), [1982] 2 S.C.R. 79, the Supreme Court of Canada considered what type of interest was necessary for a party to be entitled to a declaration from the Court. Beetz J. stated at 106:

Digitized by Google

> Further, it is not necessary for Churchill Falls to have already refused to perform the Power Contract in order for the Superior Court to rule on the rights of the parties to the contract. The value of the new declaratory action which Hydro-Quebec is seeking to use lies precisely in the fact that it allows the litigant to protect a threatened right. As the Commissioners observed, "the interest required to institute proceedings may flow from a right which itself would only be eventual". What matters is that the interest in obtaining a solution to a genuine problem is real. I consider that Hydro-Quebec does really possess such an interest.

[9] This jurisprudence does not directly address whether a Court may grant a declaration when this request is submitted in an amended Notice of Motion after argument has been heard. Before I review the authority on that issue, I note that the declaration sought by PWC was a direct extension of the argument heard on the original Notice of Motion. This Court's response differs very little as a result of the requested amendment.

[10] Amendments to Notices of Motion are made pursuant to Rules 132 and 133 of the Alberta Rules of Court:

> 132. The court may at any stage of the proceedings allow any party to alter or amend his pleadings or other proceedings in such manner and on such terms as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in issue between the parties.
> 133. The court may at any time, on terms as to costs or otherwise, amend any defect or error in any proceedings, and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on the proceedings.

[11] In Hoffman* v. *Ohlson Ranch Ltd.1995 ABCA 57 (CanLII), (1995), 165 A.R. 68, the Alberta Court of Appeal allowed an amendment to the Notice of Motion. This was pursuant to Rule 518 which governs amendments on appeal. The power given to the Court of Queen's Bench pursuant to Rules 132 and 133 appears to be equally broad. In the Alberta Civil Procedure Handbook 2000 (Edmonton: Juriliber, 2000) at 101-102, W.A. Stevenson and J.E. Côté state that the general rule to amend a pleadings is in fact very broad. There are only four exceptions to the rule. First, an exception exists when the amendment would cause serious prejudice that cannot be repaired by a payment of costs. Second, an amendment will not be allowed when it would be hopeless; an amendment that would have been struck out had it been in the pleadings originally will not be allowed. Third, the Court will disallow the amendment where it would add a new cause of action or a new party outside the limitation period. Fourth, the amendment will be disallowed when it, or the failure to plead it earlier, is indicative of bad faith.

[12] The circumstances of the case at bar do not fall within any of the exceptions. This Court accordingly has the authority to allow the amendment to the Notice of Motion. In Hoffman, supra, the Court of Appeal further held that it would allow the amendment where it would not take any of the parties by surprise. It is unclear whether that qualification applies to Rules 132 and 133. In light of the commentary in Stevenson and Côté, I am of the view that it does not. Nevertheless, even if it did, as I indicated earlier, this amendment changed very little in the ultimate result. Furthermore, in light of the oral argument, this amendment could not have taken any of the parties by surprise. The issues which arise from the request for a declaration were clearly addressed in argument. Therefore, I hold that this Court has the jurisdiction to provide advice and direction and to issue a declaration.

3. Legislative Protection

[13] The paramount issue in this application is the scope of the protection offered by s. 76(2) of the Winding-up and Restructuring Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. W-11 (WURA):

> Distribution of assets
> 76.(1) After the notices required by sections 74 and 75 have been given, the respective times specified in the notices have expired and all claims of which proof has been required by due notice in writing by the liquidator in that behalf have been allowed or disallowed by the court in whole or in part, the liquidator may distribute the assets of the company or any part of those assets among the persons entitled to them and without reference to any claim against the company, or, in the case of an authorized foreign bank in respect of its business in Canada, that has not been sent to the liquidator.
> Claims not sent in
> (2) The liquidator is not liable to any person whose claim has not been sent in at the time of distributing the assets or part thereof under subsection (1) for the assets or part thereof so distributed.

[14] PWC submitted that s. 76(2) protects it from environmental claims that arose against the Estate prior to the liquidation. Section 76(2) does not protect the liquidator from any claims that arose during the liquidation or post-liquidation. The Bank Support Group, an unsecured creditor, suggested an interpretation of s. 76(2) that is far broader in scope. He submitted that the section protects the liquidator from all claims, whether prior to, during, or after the liquidation.

Digitized by Google

[15] PWC suggests that its restrictive interpretation of s. 76(2) is buttressed by the fact that the WURA does not contain a section, akin to those found in other insolvency legislation, which specifically protects the representative of creditors from environmental claims which arise from the discharge of its duties. For example, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 (BIA), contains the following sections:

> Liability in respect of environmental matters
> 14.06(2) Notwithstanding anything in federal or provincial law, a trustee is not personally liable in that position for any environmental condition that arose or environmental damage that occurred
> (a) before the trustee's appointment: or
> (b) after the trustee's appointment unless it is established that the condition arose or the damage occurred as a result of the trustee's gross negligence or wilful misconduct.
>
> Non-liability re certain orders
> 14.06(4) Notwithstanding anything in any federal or provincial law but subject to subsection (2), where an order is made which has the effect of requiring a trustee to remedy any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting property involved in a bankruptcy, proposal or receivership, the trustee is not personally liable for failure to comply with the order...
> (a) if... the trustee
> (i) complies with the order, or
>
> (ii) ... abandons, disposes of or otherwise releases any interest in any real property affected by the condition or damage...
> Claim for clean up costs
> 14.06(8) Notwithstanding subsection 121(1), a claim against a debtor in a bankruptcy or proposal for the costs of remedying any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting real property of the debtor shall be a provable claim, whether the condition arose or the damage occurred before or after the date of the filing of the proposal or the date of the bankruptcy.
> Effect of discharge of trustee
>
> 41.(8) The discharge of a trustee discharges him from all liability
> (a) in respect of any act done or default made by him in the administration of the property of the bankrupt, and
> (b) in relation to his conduct as trustee,
> but any discharge may be revoked by the court on proof that it was obtained by fraud or by suppression or concealment of any material fact.

[16] Likewise, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 (CCAA) has a specific section which provides protection to a representative of creditors within the discharge of its function:

> 11.8(8) Any claim ... for costs of remedying any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting real property of the company is secured by a charge on the real property and on any real property of the company that is contiguous thereto and that is related to the activity that caused the environmental condition or environmental damage, and the charge
> (a) is enforceable in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which the real property is located, in the same way as a mortgage, hypothec or other security on real property; and
> (b) ranks above any other claim, right or charge against the property, notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or anything in any other federal or provincial law.

[17] Courts often look at related statutes when interpreting a provision. In Dreidger on the Construction of Statutes, 3rd ed. (Toronto: Butterworths, 1994) at 285, Ruth Sullivan explains:

> The context of a legislative provision includes not only the immediate context and the rest of the Act in which the provision appears but also any other legislation that may cast light on the meaning or effect of the words. Traditionally, the category of related legislation is said to consist of statutes in pari materia, that is, statutes enacted by the same legislature and relating to the same subject.

[18] And later, she explains the governing principle at 285, 286:

> Statutes enacted by a legislature that deal with the same subject are presumed to be drafted with one another in mind, so as to offer a coherent and consistent treatment of the subject. The governing principle was stated by Lord Mansfield in R. v. Loxdale:
>
> Where there are different statutes in pari materia though made at different times, or even expired, and not referring to each other, they shall be taken and construed together, as one system, and as explanatory of each other.

Digitized by Google

> In effect, the several statutes are construed together as if they constituted a single Act and the presumptions of coherence and consistent expression apply to these statutes as if they were part of a single Act.

[19] Therefore, it is clear that this Court may look at the BIA, supra, and the CCAA, supra for guidance in determining the scope of s. 76(2) . The sections reproduced above expressly protect the representative of creditors from environmental claims against it. There is no such section in the WURA, supra. The issue for this Court to decide is what is to be made of this absence. The rules of statutory interpretation are clear in this regard when comparing two provisions within the same Act. If an idea is specifically expressed in a provision, and no mention is made of it in another, it is assumed that Parliament intended the idea to apply only where it is specifically mentioned. Section 15 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 states:

> 15.(1) Definitions or rules of interpretation in an enactment apply to all the provisions of the enactment, including the provisions that contain those definitions or rules of interpretation.
> (2) Where an enactment contains an interpretation section or provision, it shall be read and construed
> (a) as being applicable only if a contrary intention does not appear; and
> (b) as being applicable to all other enactments relating to the same subject-matter unless a contrary intention appears.

[20] Therefore, I should not assume that Parliament intended the WURA to be interpreted as including sections that were not expressly included. The Court also cannot give existing sections, such as s. 76(2), such a wide scope as to write in sections that Parliament did not include. This is so even though related statutes expressly include such sections. In fact, the absence of such protection only speaks louder in light of the fact that Parliament turned its mind to including such protection in related statutes. I cannot impute an intention to Parliament to include protection in the WURA which it simply did not include.

[21] Clearly, the lack of express legislative protection against environmental liability is a legitimate source of concern for the liquidator. The Bank Support Group suggested that the correct interpretation of s. 76(2) of the WURA is one which is broad enough to incorporate such protection. Unfortunately, there is an extreme dearth of jurisprudence on the interpretation of that section. Only one case, which is quite dated, has come before me. In City of Toronto and Toronto Hydro-Electric Commission v. Wade, [1932] O.R. 500, the Ontario Court of Appeal interpreted the predecessor of the provision which now concerns us. In that case, the Court considered wether the liquidator could be held personally liable for municipal taxes and utility bills which arose against the estate, but which had not been claimed at the time that the liquidator had been discharged. The Court held that, according to the Dominion Winding-up Act, there was no recourse against the liquidator personally once it had been discharged and the assets of the estate distributed. The Court sated at 502:

> Now in these circumstances the plaintiffs' right to recover the amounts claimed must be based upon some personal liability of the defendant, either for moneys due the plaintiffs by himself or for damages for some negligence on his part while occupying the office of liquidator. In view of his discharge from all such liability, I cannot see how any action against him as liquidator can lie, and it seems doubtful if, in the circumstances any personal action could lie based upon tort except possibly for fraud in the performance of his duties.

[22] This case, while not authoritative, does indicate that an earlier view of this issue was that, except in cases of malfeasance or negligence, a liquidator is not liable for any claims once discharged. PWC argued that this case can be distinguished on its facts. In Wade, the claims arose before the liquidation began. Therefore, even if it were followed, PWC submitted, it would be of no value because the potential claims in this case will have arisen during the course of the liquidation. I am of the view that the statement of liquidator liability in Wade is broader than that insofar as it absolves the liquidator of liability for all claims that are identified after it is discharged, with the exception of those which are due to its negligence or malfeasance. Nothing in the Wade decision states that the liquidator's liability is limited to claims that arose against the Estate prior to the commencement of liquidation.

[23] Unfortunately, the term "claim" is not defined in the current WURA. Nonetheless, the way the word is used in other sections may shed light on its scope. For example, s. 71 states:

> 71(1) When the business of a company is being wound up under this Act, all debts and all other claims against the company in existence at the commencement of the winding-up, certain or contingent, matured or not, and liquidated or unliquidated, are admissible to proof against the company...
> (2) In case of any claim subject to any contingency or for unliquidated damages or which for any other reason does not bear a certain value, the court shall determine the value of the claim and the amount for which it shall rank.

Digitized by Google

[24] These sections do not aid in clarifying whether the term "claim" is used solely in reference to claims that arose against the insolvent company before liquidation began or whether they may include claims against the liquidator. No other section of the WURA is any more helpful.

[25] As discussed above, the Courts may look at related enactments to see the definition given to the word "claim". The word "claim" is defined in s. 121 of the BIA, supra:

> 121.(1) All debts and liabilities, present or future, to which the bankrupt is subject on the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt or to which the bankrupt may become subject before the bankrupt's discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt shall be deemed to be claims provable in proceedings under this Act.

[26] In Re Bomasuit, [1951] O.J. No. 196 (Ont. H.C.J.) (QL) the Court interpreted s. 83(1) of the old Bankruptcy Act, which was identically worded, and held at para. 12:

> Section 83(1) . . . appears to make it clear that only debts, etc. to which the debtor is liable at the date of the bankruptcy or those to which he may become subject at his discharge by reason of an obligation incurred before the bankruptcy would share in the assets of the new business which are now vested in the trustee. Subsequent creditors would have to wait.

[27] Accordingly, a claim under the BIA only includes claims which arose before the bankruptcy. This is supportive of PWC's position that claims under the WURA only include those that arose against the Estate.

[28] Absent any other authority for an alternative interpretation, I am of the view that the word "claim" in the WURA only includes claims against the Estate. Accordingly, the only interpretation which Parliament could have intended for s. 76(2) is one which excludes protection for the liquidator against environmental claims arising during the liquidation.

4. Agency

[29] PWC has also asked for direction as to whether it can be indemnified for any environmental claims arising in relation to properties which it managed not in its capacity as liquidator, but rather in its role as agent for Bank of Canada. Before I deal directly with the indemnification issue, it is necessary to answer the objection raised by the Bank of Canada as to whether the winding-up Court has the jurisdiction to decide an agency matter, relating to the liquidation, between the liquidator and a secured creditor. Essentially, the question is whether this agency falls within the liquidation such that this Court has jurisdiction, or whether it is a contractual matter between two private parties.

a. Jurisdiction of the Court

[30] PWC submitted that this Court has jurisdiction for three reasons. First, the Bank of Canada has come into the liquidation and therefore has attorned to the jurisdiction of the winding-up Court. Second, PWC submitted that the scope of the jurisdiction of the winding-up Court pursunt to the WURA, supra, is sufficiently broad to allow it to decide this matter. Third, s. 11 of the Judicature Act, supra, gives this Court the authority to decide this matter.

[31] First, has the Bank of Canada come into the liquidation? A secured creditor has three options in a liquidation. It can stay outside the liquidation and value its security through other legal avenues. In doing so, it foregoes any unsecured claim for deficiencies. Secondly, it can come into the liquidation and value and retain its security. It may then prove for any deficiency as an unsecured creditor according to the procedure outlined in the WURA. Thirdly, it may release its security to the liquidator and prove its claim as an unsecured creditor: H. Sutherland, et al, Company Law of Canada, 6th ed. (Carswell: Scarborough, 1993) at 903, WURA, R.S.C. 1985, c. W-11; Deacon* v. *Driffil (1879), 4 O.A.R. 335 at 338 (C.A.).

[32] It is clear that the Bank of Canada has come into the liquidation. Bank of Canada brought an application in 1988 to allow it to sue Price Waterhouse (now PWC) outside the liquidation, in order to enforce its security. That motion was withdrawn in 1990. Then, in 1990 PWC applied to this Court for authority to permit Bank of Canada to retain its collateral. That order was sought pursuant to s. 84 of the WURA. All parties wishing to participate in the application for the retention of Bank of Canada's security had to file Notices of Appearance. In Bank of Canada's Notice of Appearance, the Bank stated:

> Bank of Canada seeks an Order declaring that the Hypothecation and Assignment Agreements [...] are valid security and that the Bank of Canada has priority with respect to the Collateral covered thereby.

[33] It is evident that Bank of Canada was not seeking a declaration by this court that they had remained outside the liquidation. Rather, the Bank sought a declaration that it had priority. The retention order that was granted states, on page 3, that there is a reservation of Bank of Canada's right to rank in the liquidation for any deficiency claim, pursuant to s. 80 of the WURA.

[34] It is apparent that Bank of Canada opted to pursue the second option. Namely, it came into the liquidation and it valued and retained its security. Further, as indicated by the Retention Order, it retained its right to prove for any deficiency as an unsecured creditor as directed by the WURA.

Digitized by Google

[35] I am not convinced that it is relevant to my jurisdiction whether the Bank of Canada has come into the liquidation or not. The winding-up Court, through the liquidator, is given very broad authority to deal with matters pertaining to the liquidation. This power is conferred by s. 35(1)(h) of the WURA:

> 35(1) A liquidator may, with the approval of the court, and on such previous notice to the creditors, contributories, shareholders or members of the company as the court orders,
> ...(h) do and execute all such other things as are necessary for winding-up the affairs of the company and distributing its assets...

[36] The express wording of this section indicates that it was Parliament's intention to give the liquidator, and accordingly the Court through whose authority the liquidator acts, a very wide breadth within which to complete the liquidation process quickly and efficiently. In Kansa General International Insurance Company (liquidator of)* v. *Maska U.S. Inc., [1998] Q.J. No. 1410 (C.A.) (QL) the Court held that s. 35(1)(h) gives the liquidator wide powers and that those powers should not be interpreted as being merely technical or administrative.

[37] In light of the wording of the section, I find that it confers the authority upon the liquidator, and therefore the winding-up Court, to take any reasonable action to complete the liquidation. This authority must include the jurisdiction of the winding-up Court to determine the obligations of two parties, both involved in the liquidation in some capacity, pursuant to a contract which, although peripheral to the actual liquidation, pertains directly to it.

[38] Third, PWC submits that s. 11 of the Judicature Act gives this Court the authority to decide this issue. I do not see how that section has any bearing on this issue. Clearly, as indicated above, that section gives the Court wide powers to issue declaratory judgments. That does not mean that a winding-up Court can issue declaratory judgments on issues that are peripheral to the liquidation. Section 11 gives the Court authority to issue declarations, but that authority must be intended to fall within spheres over which the Court already has jurisdiction.

[39] Based on the foregoing, I am of the view that regardless of whether the Bank has stepped into the liquidation or not, I have the jurisdiction to deal with the issue of its indemnification of PWC within the context of the agency relationship between those two parties.

b. Indemnification

[40] Bank of Canada engaged PWC as its agent in order to realize its collateral. PWC therefore acted simultaneously as liquidator in respect of the assets of the Estate and as agent for the Bank of Canada. Through the various agreements between the parties it is possible to distinguish which properties PWC dealt with as agent and which properties it dealt with as liquidator. However, since no specific environmental claims have yet been put forth, it is unnecessary to determine those relationships at this point. What the liquidator seeks now is a declaration giving it some certainty that it has a right to indemnification from its principal, Bank of Canada, should a claim arise after PWC has been discharged. Should a claim come forward, clearly the liquidator will have to prove that the property to which the claim related was one administered pursuant to the agency agreement.

[41] Bank of Canada appointed PWC as its agent through a general agency agreement contained in a letter dated September 1, 1985. The agreement states:

> Bank of Canada is a major secured creditor of Canadian Commercial Bank and we refer you to the Hypothecation and Assignment Agreements between us and Canadian Commercial Bank executed March 25, 1985 and April 16, 1985. To minimize costs and realization losses due to the difficulty of integrating the realization by the liquidator and the realizations under our security, we request that if you are appointed liquidator of Canadian Commercial Bank you also act on our behalf in realization of our security. In this regard you would not be required to obtain specific releases of our security in the liquidation of the assets subject thereto, but would account separately for the proceeds of realization of such assets.

[42] This is clearly a general agency agreement. However, when an agent is retained by its principal, the scope of the agent's authority to act on behalf of the principal is not limited only to the express agreement between the two. Rather, the agent also has implied authority to do all acts which are necessary for it to accomplish the objective of the agency relationship. G.H.L. Fridman, in The Law of Agency (Toronto: Butterworths, 1996) explains this implied authority at 68:

> It is possible, indeed in some instances necessary, to read into the agent's express authority a certain implied authority. This may be because what has been expressly stated when the agency relationship was created does not cover the acts performed or required to be performed by the agent. It may be because the only way of construing the document which contains the agent's express authority is by inferring the necessary implications. Moreover, if there is no statement which clarifies exactly what the agent's authority is, then the only way of knowing what authority can properly be attributed to the agent is by inferring a certain implied authority. This is part of an agent's actual authority, which the principal has consented, by implication, that the agent should have. If the principal has not consented to his agent's > having this implied authority, and has taken the necessary steps to make the outside world aware of his lack of consent, then the agent will not have such authority. Failing such lack of consent together with notice thereof to third parties, the agent's implied authority is part of the authority which the parties have agreed upon shall be exercised by the agent on the principal's behalf.

[43] Therefore, PWC had implied authority to carry out the acts necessary to accomplish the realization of the Bank of Canada's security, despite the fact that this very general agreement does not explicitly outline the scope of PWC's authority as agent.

[44] The question which this Court must answer, therefore, is whether PWC may be indemnified for any necessary actions it took as agent for the Bank of Canada, if environmental claims later arise from those actions. Clearly, a principal must indemnify its agent for any losses or liabilities that arise from the agent discharging its duties express or implied. For instance, Fridman, supra, states at 201:

> The principal's duty to indemnify his agent against losses, liabilities and expenses incurred in the performance of the undertaking may be expressly stated in the contract of agency. But it is more usually implied.

[45] The agent is not entitled to indemnification where it acted negligently or outside its scope of authority (at 202):

> Thus, the agent in order to make his principle liable to indemnify him in this way, must have acted within its express, implied, or usual authority. ...
> However, there is no duty to indemnify an agent who has acted unlawfully, or in breach of his duty, or negligently.

[46] Also, in Vic Priestly Landscaping Contracting Ltd.* v. *Elder (1978), 19 O.R.(2d) 591 at 599, Ferguson, Co.Ct.J. held:

> However, while the Elders may not be able to rely upon the fact of their agency as a defence vis-à-vis the plaintiff, their capacity as agents does entitle them to claim indemnification for any liability from their principals. In McMillan* v. *Barton et al (1890), 19 O.A.R. 602 at 613; affirmed 20 S.C.R. 404, the Court held:
> > Every agent is entitled to be indemnified by his principal against loss arising out of the service rendered. The law implies that obligation in the absence of express agreement.
> See also 1 C.E.D. (Ont. 3rd) "Agency", para. 14. This principle applies so long as the agent has acted within his authority and the loss does not result from the agent's own neglect or default.

[47] The law on this issue is clear. However, because there is no actual claim before this Court it is impossible to state whether or not the Bank of Canada will have to indemnify PWC for a specific loss. It is possible to state that, in relation to the properties that are subject to the agency agreement, insofar as PWC acted within its authority, express or implied, and did not do so negligently, in breach of its duty, or illegally, it will be entitled to indemnification from its principal, the Bank of Canada for any losses or liabilities that may arise.

5. Equitable Benefit

[48] PWC also submits that it is entitled to indemnification from the Bank of Canada based on the equitable principle that he who receives the profit should bear the burden. Essentially, the argument is that in relation to the properties which resulted in a benefit to the Bank of Canada, the Bank should be responsible for any loss or liability.

[49] Counsel was unable to provide the Court with any equitable benefit case law in a liquidation context. Rather, PWC asked this Court to draw an analogy from related contexts such as bankruptcy, receivership and mortgage foreclosure. Further, these cases all relate to costs: Carter Oil & Gas Ltd. (Trustee of)* v. Carter (1998), 217 A.R. 135 (Q.B.), aff'd (1998), 228 A.R. 1 (C.A.); Re Joly-Sac. 1991 CanLII 3362 (QC CA), (1991), 12 C.B.R. (3d) 182 (Que. C.A.); MacPherson v. Ritz Management Inc., [1992] O.J. No. 506 (Gen. Div.) (QL); Ford v. The Earl of Chesterfield (1856), 52 E.R. 924 (C.A.); Wright v. *Kirby (1857), 53 E.R. 182 (C.A.).

[50] It is only equitable, in my view, that Bank of Canada be liable to bear any loss in relation to the properties from which it received a benefit. A loss includes an environmental claim that arises from the management of the properties during liquidation. I see no reason not to extend the equitable principle evident in the above noted cases to the liquidation context. However, this principle should only extend insofar as PWC acted reasonably in its management of the properties. Nor do I see why the fact that Bank of Canada benefited indirectly rather than directly should have any bearing. However, the proportion of responsibility for any loss is only equal to that of the benefit received. Where parties shared the benefit arising from a property, they should likewise share the loss.

6. Proposed Investigations

Digitized by Google

[51] Two proposals were made both in the written briefs and oral argument. First, the Bank Support Group proposed that the liquidator should advertise for any environmental claims pursuant to ss. 75 and 76 of the WURA. That proposal was not well-received by the parties to the application. I am of the view that that is not a wise course of action. The liquidator has already advertised for claims as is its duty and to do so again would be redundant. The interests of all the parties involved will be best served by an efficient end to this liquidation.

[52] That brings me to the second proposal. As indicated earlier, this application dealt only with the U.S. realizations. Accordingly, the liquidator has proposed a scheme whereby it would review its files on the Canadian properties in order to ascertain the degree of risk of a potential environmental claim. In light of my decision in this application, I do not feel that this is a worthwhile endeavour. Again, it is in everyone's best interests that this liquidation be finalized as quickly as possible.

7. Conclusion

[53] The liquidator has its advice and directions to the extent set out above. In light of the Court's inability to resolve the issue of liability for particular environmental claims, actual or potential of which PWC has no notice, the application for advice regarding the excess security is premature.

[54] If the parties cannot agree as to the costs of this application, they may speak to me within 30 days of the date this decision was rendered.

DATED at Edmonton, Alberta this 23rd day of June, 2000.

On appeal from the order of Justice S. Rogin of the Superior Court of Justice, dated March 29, 2004, affirming the order of Deputy Registrar in Bankruptcy R. Stevens dated October 10, 2003.

R.A. BLAIR J.A.:

Background

[1] The issue on this appeal is whether, and if so to what extent, the court may restrict the ability of a trustee in bankruptcy to provide the inspectors and creditors of the bankrupt estate with access to, or information from, the books, records and other documents of the bankrupt where there is a concern that the inspectors or creditors may use the information they obtain for purposes collateral to the administration of the bankrupt estate.

[2] Underlying the appeal is the following commercial dynamic. The bankrupt, Impact Tool & Mould Inc., and its largest unsecured creditor, Unique Tool & Gauge Inc., were rivals. Each engaged in the highly competitive business of manufacturing plastic injection moulds in the Windsor area. The purchaser of Impact Tool's assets and undertaking, Impact Tool & Mould (Windsor) Inc. – a company owned and controlled by the same three principals who owned and controlled Impact Tool – continues to carry on its same business out of the same premises and in the same fashion.[1]

[3] Unique obtained a judgment against Impact Tool, which with interest and costs, now stands at over $600,000. Impact Tool became insolvent as a result of the judgment and other financial difficulties that it was experiencing. Faced with this situation, two of the company's shareholders (who were also secured creditors) arranged for a court-appointed interim receiver to be put in place and approximately a month later the company's assets were sold, again with court approval, to Impact Tool & Mould (Windsor). Immediately after the asset sale was completed, the interim receiver assigned Impact Tool into bankruptcy.

[4] Four inspectors were appointed in the bankruptcy proceedings. Kevin O'Brien, a representative of Unique, was one of them. Impact Tool (Windsor), and the three former principals of Impact Tool, demonstrated a marked reluctance to cooperate with the Trustee in bankruptcy in providing access to and producing the books, records and other documents of the bankrupt ("the Documents")[2]. The interim receiver, in whose possession many of the Documents remained, adopted their position. This reluctance was based upon the concern of the purchaser – founded on an earlier incident in the interim receiver proceedings – that Mr. O'Brien and Unique would use the information they obtained in Mr. O'Brien's capacity as inspector for their own competitive purposes rather than for purposes of the administration of the bankrupt estate. As the purchaser of the assets and undertaking of the bankrupt, Impact Tool (Windsor) was obviously anxious to protect its investment and the confidential competitive information of Impact Tool underlying that investment.

[5] As a result of these difficulties, the Trustee applied to the Deputy Registrar for an order requiring the interim receiver and Impact Tool (Windsor) to produce the Documents. The Trustee also sought an order permitting it to share with, disclose and distribute to the inspectors the information that it acquired in its review of those materials, and that it be at liberty to report to the creditors in the normal course, without any restrictions in relation to the knowledge it acquired in its review of the Documents.

[6] The Deputy Registrar made an order that the Documents be produced to the Trustee, but he restricted the Trustee from providing them to the inspectors and creditors of the bankrupt estate without further order of the court on notice to Impact Tool (Windsor). Justice Rogin, the appeal judge, upheld the decision of the Deputy Registrar, concluding that the order was reasonable and that it properly balanced all the competing interests and addressed the privacy issues at play.

[7] The Trustee appeals the restrictive nature of the orders below.

Digitized by Google

[8] In my view, the appeal must be allowed. Respectfully, the Deputy Registrar and the appeal judge erred in principle in precluding the inspectors and creditors from having access to the Documents in the circumstances of this case. In brief, the Deputy Registrar and the appeal judge confused two important concepts, namely, access by the inspectors and Trustee to the Documents of the bankrupt – which they require in order to carry out their essential functions that lie at the heart of the regulatory scheme under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, as amended (" the BIA") – and the use to which the inspectors and creditors may put the information they acquire. It is permissible to restrain the latter. Generally, however – and except in the rarest of cases – inspectors, in particular, and the creditors they represent, should not be barred from access to the bankrupt's documents. Other controls, such as orders restraining the use to which the documents may be put or, in proper circumstances, removing the offending inspector, will normally suffice to protect other interests that need protection.

[9] My reasons for this view follow.

Facts

[10] Impact Tool operated as a tool and mould shop, manufacturing plastic injection moulding in the Windsor area. Its directors, officers and shareholders were Jeff Andrews, Roberto Santarossa and John Sabelli.

[11] In 2002, Impact Tool was experiencing financial difficulties. In January of that year, Unique obtained its judgment. An appeal was unsuccessful. In the meantime, judgment debtor proceedings occurred, and in the course of those proceedings Impact Tool refused to release certain financial information and trade-related reports to Unique. It did so on the ground that the information would provide Unique with a competitive advantage. Unique moved for production, and in January 2003, Brockenshire J. ordered the documents to be produced unless Impact Tool deposited sufficient funds to pay an independent expert to examine them and to report to Unique's counsel "but bearing in mind the continuing interest of [Impact Tool] in protecting proprietary information not directly relevant to the issues on a judgment debtor examination". Impact Tool deposited the funds.

[12] In March 2003, however, Andrews and Santarossa – as secured creditors of Impact Tool – requested the court to appoint the respondent, Doyle Salewski Inc., as interim receiver of the company. Patterson J. granted the order, effective March 10. The interim Receiver took possession of the property, assets and undertaking of Impact Tool, and continued to operate it as a going concern. As part of this process, the interim receiver took possession of the Documents.

[13] On April 23, 2003, Brockenshire J. granted an order approving the sale of Impact Tool's undertaking and assets to Impact Tool (Windsor) for a purchase price of approximately $4.8 million. As noted earlier, Andrews, Santarossa and Sabelli are also the shareholders, directors and officers of Impact Tool (Windsor). The sale transaction was completed on May 15, 2003.

[14] On May 20, 2003, the interim receiver assigned Impact Tool into bankruptcy – a move clearly contemplated in advance as part of the process of reorganizing the Impact Tool business. The appellant, BDO Dunwoody Limited (which had been advising Unique in the receivership process), was appointed the Trustee in bankruptcy. By all accounts Unique is funding the bankruptcy.

[15] At the first meeting of creditors, four inspectors were appointed. One of those inspectors, Mr. O'Brien, is a representative of Unique.

[16] When the Trustee sought production of the bankrupt's Documents, the competition/confidentiality issue resurfaced. Driven by the concerns of the purchaser and its principals that Unique, through its representative O'Brien, would misuse information that O'Brien would obtain in his capacity as inspector, both the interim receiver and Impact Tool (Windsor) resisted production. There is extensive correspondence on the record about this. Before the closing of the sale transaction, Unique's solicitors wrote to the interim receiver requesting that it protect the Documents of Impact Tool for review by the Trustee, once appointed. The interim receiver took the position that the Trustee would only be provided with the information requested if it gave an undertaking not to disclose anything except the books records and documents relating to Impact Tool's accounting and bookkeeping. Eventually, the Trustee provided such an assurance, without prejudice to its right to move before the court for directions.

[17] In due course, the Trustee did bring its motion and, as indicated at the outset of these reasons, the Deputy Registrar made the order directing that the Documents be produced to the Trustee, but prohibiting the Trustee from disclosing them to the inspectors or creditors without further court order.

Analysis

[18] The central issue on this appeal is the extent to which, if at all, restrictions may be placed on the ability of a trustee in bankruptcy to provide inspectors and, to a lesser extent, creditors with access to the books, records and documents of a bankrupt. The case does not involve the production of documents that belong to third parties (such as the purchaser here, or the solicitors or auditors of the bankrupt).

[19] The Deputy Registrar's decision to prohibit such access was premised upon the concerns of the pre-bankruptcy purchaser of the bankrupt's assets and undertaking. The concerns were that the inspector, Mr. O'Brien, had previously used Impact Tool-related customer information obtained from the interim receiver's first report in an attempt to dissuade customers from doing business with Impact Tool prior to the asset sale, and therefore – presumably, it seems – that he would abuse his position as inspector in the bankruptcy to make collateral use of information again for purposes extraneous to the administration of the bankruptcy. This would enable his company – the creditor and competitor, Unique – to steal a competitive advantage on the new purchaser's business. In this case, the asset purchase was not at arms length, but it was nonetheless sanctioned by a court order from which no appeal has been taken. The principles at play are equally applicable, it seems to me, to a situation where the insolvent company's assets have been acquired by a third-party purchaser for value.

[20] There was some evidence to support the conclusion that during the interim receivership, after receiving a copy of the interim receiver's first report, Mr. O'Brien had contacted at least two of Impact Tool's suppliers, disparaging Impact Tool, encouraging the suppliers to put the company on a C.O.D. basis, and expressing disappointment that they continued to do business with it. Mr. Santarossa and Mr. Doyle (representing the interim receiver) certainly took from this intelligence that Mr. O'Brien and Unique were using information obtained through the interim receivership in order to gain a competitive advantage in the market place. There is no direct evidence linking Mr. O'Brien's alleged contacts with the suppliers to his access to the interim receiver's report, but even if the allegations are true, it is not proof that he would necessarily flout his fiduciary duties to the general body of creditors and his statutory obligations as an inspector of the bankrupt estate, once those responsibilities were explained to him.[3]

[21] I have a more substantial difficulty with the order of the Deputy Registrar and the affirming order of the appeal judge, however. Respectfully, they are founded on an error in principle.

[22] As a general rule the inspectors and creditors of a bankrupt estate are entitled to access to the books, records and documents of the bankrupt because they require that access to be able to carry out their important functions under the bankruptcy legislation. The use to which they may put the information obtained through that access is restricted to matters relating to the administration of the bankrupt estate. In focusing on whether the inspectors and creditors should be denied access to the Documents, rather than on whether the problem he faced could have been resolved by restraining the use to which the inspectors and creditors could put the information they obtained, the Deputy Registrar lost sight of this guiding principle. He was wrong in doing so.

[23] I have come to this conclusion for the reasons that follow. In analyzing the proper approach to be taken to the type of problem the Deputy Registrar faced, there may be some distinction between the position of inspectors and that of the creditors, however. I shall therefore deal with the case of inspectors and creditors separately.

Inspectors

[24] Because of the scheme of the bankruptcy regime, and the distinct role and responsibilities of inspectors in it, considerations governing the production of the bankrupt's documents to them differ from the normal considerations concerning the production of private and confidential documents, and the protection of third party interests, in a lawsuit. I would not say there can never be situations where an order prohibiting access to inspectors might be appropriate, but such circumstances will, of necessity, be rare. Here, there was no suggestion that the Documents sought by the Trustee were not relevant to the inspectors' duties.

[25] In my opinion, the proper approach to the conflict facing the Deputy Registrar was to recognize the general rule outlined above and to ask, not whether the inspectors should be deprived of access to the bankrupt's documents, but whether the circumstances require them to be restrained in the use to which they may put them (or, if appropriate, to consider whether they should be removed as inspectors). That was not the approach followed in this case, however.

[26] A brief examination of the role and responsibilities of inspectors in the bankruptcy scheme underscores the reason for the different approach in principle that I favour.

[27] Apart from its rehabilitative goals with respect to personal bankrupts, the purpose of a bankruptcy is to gather in and realize upon the assets of the bankrupt and to distribute those assets amongst the creditors on an equitable basis, subject to their priorities. In that sense, bankruptcy is a creditor-driven process, with the creditors pursuing their claims by collective action through the trustee in bankruptcy: see Dartmouth (City) v. Barclays Bank of Canada 1996 CanLII 5620

(NS CA), (1996), 40 C.B.R. (3d) 1 (N.S.C.A.). The inspectors – appointed by the creditors under s. 116 of the BIA – are the creditors' representatives in this exercise.

[28] The inspectors' role is integral to the operation of the bankruptcy regime. As the creditors' representatives in the administration of the bankrupt estate, they owe a fiduciary duty to the general body of creditors, collectively: Re Bryant, Isard and Co; Ex parte Higginson (1923), 4 C.B.R. 41 (Ont. S.C.). While the trustee in bankruptcy is vested with the assets of the bankrupt and is responsible for the day-to-day administration, it is the inspectors who have the primary supervisory role in the administration of the bankrupt estate. They have an obligation to be proactive and to keep watch on the trustee to ensure that assets are realized to the best advantage of the estate: Taylor v. Davies, (1919), 51 D.L.R. 75 (P.C.); Re Paul-Emile Roy Inc. (1968), 13 C.B.R. (N.S.) 244 (Que. S.C.). In Re Fishman (1985), 56 C.B.R. (N.S.) 316 (Ont. S.C. in Bankruptcy) at 317, Henry J. said:

> The inspectors are the supervisors of the trustee and it is their function to instruct the trustee to take whatever steps they consider appropriate in order to protect the estate and the creditors.

[29] Earlier, in Re Hess (1977), 23 C.B.R. (N.S.) 215 (Ont. S.C. in Bankruptcy), Henry J. had outlined the role of the inspectors in more detail. At p. 217 he said:

> [The general duty of the trustee] is to get in and administer the estate for the benefit of the creditors. Many of the duties he performs under statutory authority alone. In matters of judgment, where the interests of the estate and creditors may be adversely affected, he is required to obtain the permission of the inspectors, as for example in the matters set out in s. 14 of the Act,[4] which is not exhaustive.
> The inspectors of the estate are also statutory officials appointed under s. 94 of the Act.[5] They represent the interests of the creditors. They must be and must act independently of the trustee in the sense that they are not in a conflict of interest with the affairs of the estate, especially as to the matters set out in s. 94. They are required to supervise the trustee's administration of the estate generally and in matters specified in s. 14 of the Act and elsewhere. The inspectors are themselves subject to control and direction by the creditors by virtue of s. 94(9). The fundamental concept is that the creditors are the final supervising authority in the administration of the estate, the inspectors represent their interest, the trustee's conduct is supervised by both; the overall administration of the estate is subject to the supervision of the superintendent by s. 5; in cases of dispute or doubt the court is resorted to for adjudication or direction for the purpose of the proper application of the law [emphasis added].

[30] Although there is no specific provision in the bankruptcy legislation giving inspectors the general supervisory powers referred to above, the propositions arise from the scheme of the legislation and from the many and varied powers and supervisory duties invested in the inspectors throughout the BIA. The general nature of the inspectors' pivotal supervisory role is well-embedded in the jurisprudence. In addition to the foregoing authorities, Masten J.A. put the position very succinctly in Re Feldman (1932), 13 C.B.R. 313 (Ont. S.C., App. Div.), at 314:

> In other words the whole scope and foundation of The Bankruptcy Act is that in the practical administration of the estate of the bankrupt the governing authority shall be the inspectors and not the Court, the inspectors being practical men named by the creditors, and unless it is shown they are acting fraudulently or in some way not in good faith for the benefit of the estate, the administration of the affairs of the estate is to be governed according to their directions. [underlining added]

This passage was approved by this court in Re Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Limited 1998 CanLII 2673 (ON CA), (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 280 (C.A.), per Charron J.A. at 287. See also Re Melnitzer reflex, (1991), 9 C.B.R. (3d) 30 (Gen. Div. in Bankruptcy).

[31] A review of the BIA reveals a wide variety of inspector powers and responsibilities that underpin this overarching supervisory role. For instance, s. 30 gives the trustee a broad list of powers that are essential to the administration of the bankrupt estate, but which can only be exercised with the permission of the inspectors. These powers include the power to sell, lease, carry on the bankrupt's business as a going concern, institute or defend litigation, and settle debts owing to the bankrupt or any claims made by or against the estate. Proposals in bankruptcy must be approved by the inspectors: s. 50(3). The trustee in bankruptcy must call a meeting of creditors if requested to do so by a majority of inspectors and if the trustee fails to do so a majority of the inspectors may convene such a meeting themselves: s. 103. Section 119 mandates that the trustee "shall have regard to any directions that may be given by resolution of the creditors at any general meeting or by the inspectors"[6].

[32] The duties imposed upon inspectors by subsections 120(3) and (4) of the BIA bear citing in full:

Digitized by Google

> 120(3) The inspectors shall from time to time verify the bank balance of the estate, examine the trustee's accounts and inquire into the adequacy of the security filed by the trustee and, subject to subsection (4), shall approve the trustee's final statement of receipts and disbursements, dividend sheet and disposition of unrealized property.
> (4) Before approving the final statement of receipts and disbursements of the trustee, the inspectors shall satisfy themselves that all the property has been accounted for and that the administration of the estate has been completed as far as can reasonably be done and shall determine whether or not the disbursements and expenses incurred are proper and have been duly authorized, and the fees and remuneration just and reasonable in the circumstances [underlining added].

[33] How can inspectors carry out their overall supervisory role in the administration of the estate, and the specific duties assigned to them, without access to the bankrupt's books, records and documents? How, in particular, can they "satisfy themselves that all the property has been accounted for and that the administration of the estate has been completed as far as can reasonably be done"? The answer is that they cannot. That is why, in my respectful view, the broad limit to access imposed by the order of the Deputy Registrar and the order of the appeal judge upholding it cannot stand.

[34] At the same time, the jurisprudence is clear that inspectors have a fiduciary duty to the body of creditors generally, as well as the statutory duties imposed under the legislation. Inspectors must perform their duties impartially and in the interests of the creditors who appoint them: Re Bryant, Issard & Co.; ex parte Higginson, supra. They may not use their position as inspector for purposes extraneous to the administration of the bankruptcy. It follows that access to the books, records and documents of the bankrupt must not be used for any such extraneous purposes. See Re Taylor Ventures Ltd. 1999 CanLII 5475 (BC SC), (1999), 9 C.B.R. (4th) 136 (B.C.S.C.); GMAC Commercial Credit Corp.-Canada v. TCT Logistics Inc. 2002 CanLII 35019 (ON SC), (2002), 37 C.B.R. (4th) 267 (Ont. Sup. Ct., Comm. List).

[35] The respondents rely heavily upon Taylor Ventures and GMAC in support of the Deputy Registrar's order. Neither case stands for the proposition that the bankrupt's books, records and documents may be withheld from the inspectors, however. In addition, both are distinguishable on the basis that each involved the production of third party documents and not the books, records and documents of the bankrupt itself[7].

[36] In Taylor Ventures, Burnyeat J. applied what in my view is the proper approach to addressing a problem of the type confronting the Deputy Registrar here. He granted the Trustee and the inspectors "complete and unrestricted access" to all of the Taylor files received from the former solicitors of the bankrupt (to which privilege did not attach), but ordered that "they may use those files and the information contained [in them] only in relation to the affairs of the Bankrupt" (para. 34).

[37] Farley J. did not apply Taylor Ventures to preclude inspectors from having access to the documents of the third party auditors in GMAC. In fact, he said he agreed with Burnyeat J.'s analysis. He ordered that the documents be produced to the trustee, but limited the trustee's right to provide access to the creditors in that case. I shall return to GMAC in relation to creditors in a moment.

[38] The respondents rely upon two additional authorities – Re Hickman Equipment (1985) Ltd., 2003 NLSCTD 108 (CanLII), (2003), 44 C.B.R. (4th) 82 (Nfld. Sup Ct – TD in Bankruptcy), and Re St. Anne-Nackawic Pulp Co., reflex, (2005), 8 C.B.R. (5th) 142 (N.B.Q.B. in Bankruptcy). Like Taylor Ventures and GMAC, however, these cases do not relate to access to the documents of the bankrupt, but rather to auditors' files and papers. I need not deal with them further. Suffice it to say that, to the extent they suggest that inspectors and creditors may be denied access to the bankrupt's documents rather than being subject to restrictions of the use to be made of such documents, I prefer the approach articulated here.

[39] The Deputy Registrar alluded to the possibility – asserted by counsel – that once the information has been released to the inspectors the phrase "let the cat out of the bag" may have application, in terms of inappropriate extraneous use that may be made of the information. I am satisfied, however, that the imposition of a restraining order on the use that may be made of information obtained is an adequate remedy in most cases. First, I am not prepared to assume as a default position, that individual inspectors will readily ignore their statutory and fiduciary obligations to use the information they receive only for purposes of administration of the estate or, when faced with a direct restriction compelling them to do so, they will be unable or unwilling to abide by it. Secondly, injunctive orders are commonly employed to prevent and control the misuse of confidential proprietary information in commercial competition cases. They are binding not only on the parties, but also on those who have knowledge of the order. They are effective and they may be enforced by the court's contempt powers.

[40] Moreover, there is an additional remedy available. Section 116(5) of the BIA provides for the removal and replacement of inspectors, at the instance of the trustee or a creditor. It is true that in this particular case Impact Tool

(Windsor) is not a creditor of the bankrupt and therefore could not resort to s. 116(5). However, I note that both Messrs. Andrews and Santarossa are. Nonetheless, a party in the position of Impact Tool (Windsor) is not without a remedy in such circumstances. It can request the trustee to bring such an application and, if the trustee refuses, attack the trustee's decision under s. 37, which enables the bankrupt, a creditor, or "any other person" aggrieved by a decision of the trustee to appeal to the court.

[41] In summary, then, it is generally an error to preclude the inspectors in a bankruptcy from having access to the books, records and other documents of the bankrupt. To do so is to undermine their ability to carry out their functions under the bankruptcy scheme and legislation. Inspectors owe a fiduciary duty to the general body of creditors, and as a result – amongst other things – they may only use their access to the books, records and documents for purposes relating to the administration of the estate. They may be restrained from improperly using the information they obtain for collateral purposes, or they may be removed as inspectors, in appropriate cases. I am satisfied that these latter remedies provide adequate protection from the misuse of such information in most cases, without undercutting the inspectors' ability to perform their statutory functions.

Creditors

[42] Creditors stand on a somewhat different footing, which may justify a more flexible approach, in some circumstances, to the general rule in favour of access.

[43] For instance, in GMAC Farley J. restricted the trustee's right to provide access to the documents in question to creditors. The facts were different from those of the present case, though. In GMAC the creditors had made it clear that they wished to have access to the auditor's working papers in order to determine whether they (as opposed to the bankrupt company) might be able to advance a claim for auditors' negligence outside of the bankruptcy. Thus, their motive was clear. They were not seeking access in order to exercise their duties under the BIA. The thrust of Farley J's decision is found in the following comment, at para 13:

> In my view it would be inappropriate to allow these creditors here in their individual persona capacities to piggyback upon the Trustee's s. 164 examination to get a leg up in non-bankruptcy litigation.

[44] I agree. In such circumstances, I do not see anything wrong with limiting the access of creditors to the documents as long as the ability of their representatives, the inspectors, to carry out their functions in relation to the administration of the estate is not hampered.

Digitized by Google

[45] While the bankruptcy process is creditor-driven, and while the creditors ultimately give directions to, and control, the trustee and the inspectors, creditors have more rights than duties under the bankruptcy scheme. They do not owe fiduciary duties to anyone in relation to the bankrupt estate and they do not have the same sort of statutory obligations with respect to the administration of the estate that the trustee and their representatives in the administration of the estate, the inspectors, have. This makes their position somewhat different than that of the inspectors in terms of needing access to the bankrupt's documents in order to carry out their functions in the Act. Creditors are undoubtedly precluded from using, for purposes extraneous to the administration of the bankruptcy, any information they receive in their capacity as "the final supervising authority in the administration of the estate"[8]. That restriction may be founded more on an implied obligation not use the information they receive in that fashion – similar to the implied obligation that arises respecting production in civil proceedings – than on a statutory or fiduciary obligation, however.

[46] For purposes of this appeal, I need not decide the rationale for the creditors' restriction on the use of information or the issue of the extent to which creditors may be excepted from the general rule in favour of permitting access to the books, records and documents of a bankrupt. I note that, although the order of the Deputy Registrar deprived Impact Tool's creditors of access to the Documents, the Trustee had not specifically requested an order allowing them access. It sought an order permitting it to report to the creditors in the normal course, without restrictions based upon what it learned in its review of the Documents. I am satisfied that the record before the Deputy Registrar in this case did not justify denying the Trustee the right to report to the creditors in that fashion.

Standard of Review

[47] Before the appeal judge the parties agreed that the standard of review of the Deputy Registrar's decision was reasonableness. The appeal judge concluded that the decision was reasonable because there was evidence upon which the Deputy Registrar could have made his decision and because he addressed the issues of privacy and balanced all competing interests. The respondent argues this standard continues to apply.

[48] I disagree. "Reasonableness" in this sense is a standard that is applied in the administrative law context. The Deputy Registrar in bankruptcy is not an administrative tribunal. Although not a judge, he or she exercises a judicial function in deciding issues such as those arising in this case. Applying the patently unreasonable/reasonable/correct spectrum that constitutes the standard of review in administrative law matters to the decisions of a deputy registrar in bankruptcy is not helpful. As Lane J. noted in Re Golden Mile Bowl Inc. 2005 CanLII 31583 (ON SC), (2005), 14 C.B.R. (5th) 187 (Ont. S.C.), at para. 13:

> An appeal of the registrar's order will be allowed where it is demonstrated that the registrar erred in principle or in law or failed to take into account a proper factor or took into account an improper factor, which led to a wrong conclusion.

See also Re Barukory Investments Limited (1979), 32 C.B.R. (N.S.) 185 (Ont. H.C.), at p. 186; Re Barrington and Vokey Limited 1996 CanLII 5193 (NS SC), (1996), 48 C.B.R. (3d) 270 (N.S.S.C.) at para. 18; Re Mengistu 2003 SKQB 319 (CanLII), (2003), 45 C.B.R. (4th) 277 (Sask. Q.B.) at para. 4.

[49] An appeal to this court under s. 193 of the BIA from an order of the nature in question here, should be determined on the same criteria.

[50] The Deputy Registrar's decision must be set aside. For the reasons outlined above, he erred in principle and thereby arrived at a wrong conclusion. In fairness to the Deputy Registrar, he felt that he was bound by the decision of Farley J. in GMAC, but, as I have explained, GMAC did not address the issue of depriving the inspectors of access to the bankrupt's books, records and documents. Similarly, the decision of the appeal judge must be set aside, founded as it was upon the application of an erroneous standard of review (albeit at the urging of the parties) and upholding a decision based upon an error in principle.

Disposition

[51] For the foregoing reasons, then, I would allow the appeal, set aside the order of the appeal judge, and vary the order of the Deputy Registrar by deleting paragraph 3 thereof and substituting the following:

> 3. THIS COURT ORDERS that BDO Dunwoody Limited, in its capacity as Trustee of the Estate of Impact Tool & Mould Inc., is at liberty to share, disclose and distribute to the Inspectors of the Estate of Impact Tool & Mould Inc., any and all information which the Trustee now has or hereafter acquires in its review of the books, records and other documents relating to the Estate of Impact Tool & Mould Inc.

3A. THIS COURT ORDERS that BDO Dunwoody Limited, in its capacity as Trustee of the Estate of Impact Tool & Mould Inc., is at liberty to report to the creditors of the Estate of Impact Tool & Mould Inc., in the normal course, without restriction or reservation, of the knowledge the Trustee now has or hereafter acquires in its review of the books, records and other documents relating to the Estate of Impact Tool & Mould Inc.

3B. THIS COURT ORDERS that the Inspectors and the Creditors of Impact Tool & Mould Inc. are hereby restrained from using the books, records and documents of Impact Tool & Mould Inc. to which they may be provided access, and any information obtained from in relation to such books, records and documents, for purposes other than those relating to the administration of the bankrupt estate and the affairs of the Bankrupt.

[52] The appellant is entitled to its costs of the appeal and of the application for leave to appeal, payable by the respondent Impact Tool & Mould (Windsor) Inc. I would fix costs in the amount of $3,500 in relation to the application for leave to appeal, and in the amount of $10,000 in relation to the appeal, all inclusive of fees, disbursements and GST.

[1] From this point on I shall refer to Impact Tool & Mould Inc., Impact Tool & Mould (Windsor) Inc. and Unique Tool & Gauge Inc., respectively as "Impact Tool" (or, "the Bankrupt"), "Impact Tool (Windsor)", and "Unique".

[2] Although there may be some question whether all of the documents in question here are documents of the Bankrupt, the parties have approached these proceedings of the basis that they are. I have therefore considered this appeal on the same basis.

[3] Trustees normally should make the inspectors familiar with the duties imposed upon them at their first meeting: see Houlden & Morawetz, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada, 3d ed., vol. 2 (Toronto: Carswell, 1992) at 5-27.

[4] Now s. 30 of the BIA.

[5] Now s. 116 and following of the BIA.

[6] In keeping with the legislative regime outlined by Henry J. in Re Hess, supra, s. 119 provides that, in cases of conflict, any directions given by creditors trump those given by inspectors, and that inspectors' decisions are subject to court review.

[7] In Taylor Ventures the documents were from the files of the bankrupt's solicitors. In GMAC they were the files of the bankrupt's accountants, including their working papers.

No. 16R

PRÉPARATION DU BILAN STATUTAIRE

Émise: le 15 décembre 1988

Émise de nouveau: le 10 janvier 1991

OBJET

Cette directive révise et remplace la directive #16 émise le 22 décembre 1986 ainsi que toute autre politique émise antérieurement sur ce sujet.

GÉNÉRALITÉS

1. Le bilan statutaire est l'un des documents les plus importants pour l'administration de l'actif et sert à l'ensemble des participants nommément la cour, le syndic, les créanciers, les inspecteurs et le séquestre officiel, dans leur prise de décisions.

2. Bien que le bilan statutaire soit celui du débiteur, c'est généralement le syndic qui le prépare à même les renseignements fournis par le débiteur. Compte tenu de cette pratique, il est normal et acceptable que le temps consacré par le syndic à la préparation du bilan statutaire soit un coût imputable à l'actif.

3. Alors que les états financiers rédigés par un comptable professionnel sont préparés selon des principes comptables généralement reconnus, tel n'est pas le cas pour le bilan statutaire puisqu'aucune ligne directrice n'existe. Très souvent, en raison des diverses méthodes utilisées, les bilans suscitent le doute ou l'équivoque.

PREPARATION OF THE STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS

Issued: December 15, 1988

Reissued: January 10, 1991

PURPOSE

This Directive revises and replaces Directive #15 issued December 22, 1986 as well as any previously issued policies on this matter.

BACKGROUND

1. The Statement of Affairs is one of the most important documents for the administration of the estate and one on which a variety of users, the Court, the trustee, the creditors, the inspectors and the Official Receiver, base their decisions.

2. Although the Statement of Affairs is the debtor's statement, the trustee often assists in its preparation on the basis of the information provided by the debtor. As the preparation of the Statement of Affairs is normally done by the trustee, the time spent is a normal and acceptable charge to the estate.

3. Whereas financial statements prepared by professional accountants will normally be prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, such is not the case for a Statement of Affairs where there are no guidelines. There are concerns that the manner in which it is prepared in numerous instances leads to confusion and misunderstanding.

4. La variété dans la présentation des actifs et du passif lors de la préparation du bilan statutaire transmet souvent une image incorrecte de la situation véritable du débiteur, laissant les créanciers, le syndic et le séquestre officiel sans critères fiables pour leur prise de décisions.

LIGNES DIRECTRICES

5. Tout en aidant le débiteur dans la préparation de son bilan les syndics doivent, selon leur expérience et expertise, faire un effort pour promouvoir le plus possible la divulgation complète des renseignements nécessaires et aider le débiteur à fournir des renseignements qui sont des plus précis et appropriés, compte tenu des circonstances, des exemptions et des législations provinciales.

6. Le formulaire 74A - Le bilan d'un failli non-commerçant doit être utilisé pour tous les débiteurs-consommateurs et les faillites de non-commerçants, que le dossier soit administré selon les dispositions de l'administration sommaire ou non. Le formulaire 74 - Le bilan commercial doit être utilisé pour les autres administrations.

7. Lorsqu'il s'agit de la faillite d'une société en nom collectif, un bilan doit être préparé pour l'entreprise ainsi que pour chacun des associés qui fait cession de ses biens.

8. Aux fins de la présente directive,

a) un débiteur-consommateur est un particulier:

- qui n'a pas d'actif d'affaires; et
- qui n'exploite pas présentement une entreprise; (les vendeurs à commission ou autres personnes dans une situation semblable doivent être considérés comme des consommateurs)

b) l'endettement résultant de garanties ou d'endossements d'emprunts d'une compagnie ou d'une tierce personne en affaires, ne constitue pas un endettement découlant de l'exploitation d'une entreprise.

4. The multiplicity of ways in which assets and liabilities have been treated for the purpose of the preparation of the Statement of Affairs have often led to a distorted picture of the actual situation of the debtor leading to unreliable criteria on which decisions by the creditors, the Official Receiver and the trustee are made.

GUIDELINES

5. While assisting a debtor in preparing his Statement of Affairs, trustees are expected to make an effort by using their experience and skill to improve the full disclosure of all the necessary information and help the debtor to provide information which is proper and as accurate as possible, having regard to the circumstances and to the provincial exemptions and legislations.

6 Form 74A - Statement of Affairs of a Non-Business Bankrupt is to be used for all consumer debtors and non-business bankruptcies whether the estate is administered under the summary administration provisions or under the regular provisions of the Act. Form 74 - Statement of Affairs is to be used for all other proceedings.

7. Where a partnership is involved, a Statement of Affairs must be prepared for the business as well as for each of the partners making an assignment.

8. For the purpose of this Directive,

a) a consumer debtor is defined as an individual:

- who has no business assets; and
- who is not currently active in business; (commissioned salespersons or individuals in similar occupations should be classified as consumer debtors)

b) indebtedness resulting from guarantees or endorsements of a corporation or a third party operating a business does not constitute a debt arising out of the operation of a business.

9. Nonobstant le paragraphe 6, lorsqu'il semble plus à propos, dans certains cas, d'utiliser une formule plutôt que l'autre, le syndic devra consulter le séquestre officiel quant à la possibilité de le faire

10. Lors de la préparation du bilan d'un failli non-commerçant comme d'un commerçant:

a) le nom et l'adresse complète de chaque créancier doivent apparaître, les créanciers additionnels qui n'apparaissent pas sur la liste doivent être inscrits sur une liste séparée;

b) lorsque le montant exact ou approximatif de la dette ou d'un bien de l'actif n'est pas connu, le "meilleur montant estimé" devrait être indiqué et le débiteur doit s'abstenir d'utiliser un point d'interrogation dans les colonnes "valeur estimée des actifs" ou "montant de la dette" du formulaire 74A ou dans les colonnes "actif" ou "passif" du formulaire 74;

c) lorsqu'il n'est pas possible de déterminer un montant en raison de sa nature éventuelle, une explication doit être donnée quant à la raison pour laquelle le montant ne peut être établi (e.g remboursement d'impôt non connu, jugement non rendu);

d) lorsqu'un bien est détenu conjointement ou partiellement, il faut en tenir compte, en démontrant au bilan la part du débiteur dans l'actif, la part des créances garanties dont il est directement responsable ainsi que toutes réclamations éventuelles vu qu'il est conjointement et solidairement responsable, avec le(s) autres copropriétaire(s), de la totalité des créances à l'encontre du bien;

e) lorsque le débiteur ne peut déterminer si un montant est ou serait dû à un créancier mais veut toutefois l'aviser. Le créancier devrait être démontré comme créancier supplémentaire au bilan statutaire sans qu'un point d'interrogation ou un montant n'apparaisse dans la colonne des dollars;

f) les annexes "A" et "B" montrent comment les éléments particuliers d'actif et de passif doivent être traités ou présentés au bilan statutaire;

9. Notwithstanding paragraph 6, in those cases where the use of the alternate form could be more appropriate, the trustee shall consult the Official Receiver as to the acceptability of using the alternate form.

10 In completing the Statement of Affairs or the Statement of Affairs of a Non-Business Bankrupt:

a) the full name and complete address of each creditor is to be shown, additional creditors not shown on the list should be shown as a separate list;

b) where the exact or approximate amount owed or where the value of the asset is not known, the "best estimate" of the amount involved is to be included and the debtor is to refrain from using a question mark in the "estimated dollar value of assets" or the "amount of debt" columns of Form 74A or in the "assets" or "liabilities" columns of Form 74;

c) in those cases where it is not possible to determine an amount because of its contingent nature, an explanation is to be provided as to why an amount cannot be indicated (i.e. - tax refund unknown, judgment not yet rendered);

d) where a property is jointly or partially owned, the situation is to be reflected in the Statement of Affairs with the debtor's share of the property, the share of the secured encumbrances that he is directly responsible for as well as any possible contingent claims as he is, with the other co-owner(s), jointly and severely responsible for all of the encumbrances against the property;

e) where the debtor cannot ascertain if an amount is or could be owed to a creditor, but wants to include the said creditor. The creditor should be shown on the Statement of Affairs as a supplementary creditor without any amount or question mark in the dollar amount column.

f) appendices "A" and "B" indicate how individual elements of assets and liabilities are to be dealt with or presented on the Statement of Affairs;

g) les annexes au bilan statutaire doivent être entièrement complétées dans les moindres détails afin de justifier les montants apparaissant à la page frontispice du bilan statutaire; et

h) la page frontispice du bilan statutaire (formulaire 74) devrait être envoyée à tous les créanciers avec l'avis de la première assemblée des créanciers et la liste des créanciers. Si une exemption provinciale est prévue, le montant de l'exemption devrait figurer sous la rubrique "description". Tout intérêt partiel du débiteur dans le bien doit être indiqué. La valeur estimée par le débiteur des biens réalisables doit figurer dans la colonne des dollars.

4. Valeur de rachat de l'assurance-vie: Les polices d'assurance-vie devraient faire l'objet d'un examen. La valeur de rachat doit indiquer "exemption" s'il y a un bénéficiaire privilégié ou si l'actif n'est pas le bénéficiaire.

5. Valeur de bourse: (y compris les obligations d'épargne du Canada payées en entier ou souscrites) Le syndic doit saisir tous les titres et effets de commerce négociables, même s'ils sont considérés comme étant sans valeur. Il faut mentionner la valeur nette réalisable des diverses actions et en faire une description appropriée.

6. Immeubles: Fournir l'adresse municipale de l'immeuble, préciser si le débiteur est propriétaire individuel ou en copropriétaire et indiquer si l'immeuble est totalement ou partiellement grevé. Dans le cas d'un terrain, une brève description légale peut remplacer l'adresse municipale. La valeur à indiquer correspond à la valeur réalisable de la propriété.

   Même si les biens-fonds ou toute autre propriété font l'objet d'un litige, il faut les inscrire dans la colonne de l'actif et porter les charges dont ils sont grevées dans la colonne du passif, peu importe l'intérêt ou l'équité détenu par le débiteur, pourvu qu'il en soit toujours le propriétaire enregistré. Si les procédures sont terminées et que ni le débiteur ni le syndic n'ont de recours pour reprendre possession du bien, la propriété ne doit pas faire partie de l'actif, pas plus que la sûreté réelle qui s'y rattache. Il faut indiquer, s'il y a lieu, seulement le déficit anticipé lors de la réalisation du bien. Si une exemption provinciale est prévue, le montant de l'exemption devrait figurer sous la rubrique "description".

7. Véhicules: Indiquer l'année, le modèle et numéro de série du véhicule et préciser s'il est partiellement ou totalement grevé. Pour déterminer la valeur des automobiles, il serait acceptable de consulter un livre reconnu (livre noir) qui fait mention de la valeur des véhicules. La valeur à indiquer correspond à la valeur réalisable estimée.

8. Équipements de loisir (y compris camionnettes de camping, caravanes, bateaux, équipement de chasse ou autre) Faire une description complète des équipements et en indiquer l'année, le modèle et le numéro de série. La valeur à inscrire correspond à la valeur réalisable estimée

9. Remboursement d'impôt prévu. Correspond au remboursement que le débiteur n'avait pas encore touché à la date de la cession mais qu'il devait recevoir selon la déclaration d'impôt de l'année précédente. Si une évaluation raisonnable du remboursement d'impôt préfaillite a été faite, il est possible de l'inclure au bilan à condition de mentionner qu'il s'agit d'un montant approximatif.

10. Autres actifs: Comprend tous les autres actifs non visés par les rubriques ci-dessus notamment les comptes à recevoir, les REER, les sommes à recevoir à la suite d'un litige, les nues-propriétés et les autres droits en vertu de testaments ou d'une succession ainsi que les intérêts du débiteur dans toute transaction. La valeur à indiquer correspond à la valeur réalisable estimée.

P A S S I F

1. Créanciers non garantis: Inscrire toutes les dettes non garanties et, dans le cas de créanciers privilégiés ou garantis, la partie non garantie des sommes qui leur sont dues.

2. Créanciers garantis: Seule la partie garantie des dettes doit figurer dans cette colonne. Lorsque la valeur de la propriété grevée par une sûreté réelle est inférieure au passif total, l'excédent de la dette doit être déclaré comme non garanti. La description détaillée de la garantie sur le bien grevé doit paraître au bas de l'annexe "A".

3. Créanciers privilégiés La partie privilégiée des dettes doit figurer sous cette rubrique. Lorsque le débiteur ne peut déterminer si une somme est ou pourrait être due à un créancier et qu'il veut inscrire ce dernier (p. ex. Revenu Canada) sur la liste des créanciers privilégiés, aucun montant ne doit être indiqué. Lorsqu'il y a possibilité d'une fiducie présumée, le montant pouvant être réclamé contre l'actif devrait apparaître sous cette rubrique.

4. Dettes éventuelles ou autres dettes non liquidées: Expliquer la nature et fournir le montant de la réclamation ainsi que la dette pouvant être réclamée contre l'actif pour fin de dividende. Faire la même chose pour les garanties. Si le débiteur a consenti une garantie ou un endossement envers un tiers, la nature de cette garantie ou de l'endossement doit être indiquée.

Disclosure

5. Third-party deposits and guarantees shall be fully disclosed in writing

(a) to give the creditors, the inspectors, the Superintendent and the taxing officers a complete financial picture of the entire insolvency proceedings and to conform with the requirements of subsection 152(1) of the Act;

6. Subject to section 7, trustees shall disclose, in reporting at the first meeting of creditors and in the Estate Information Summary (EIS), the existence of and the name of the depositor or guarantor regarding any direct or indirect deposit or guarantee of fees by a third party.

7. In unusual or exceptional circumstances where the disclosure of the name of the depositor or guarantor provides undue hardship, embarrassment or would otherwise result in the third-party deposit or guarantee not being given, the trustee may withhold disclosure at the first meeting of creditors of the name, but shall not withhold this disclosure from the Superintendent.

8. The full disclosure and the proper treatment of these deposits or guarantees is consistent with the principles embodied in section 61 of the Rules and subsection 152(1) of the Act attesting that there were no other direct or indirect considerations paid or payable to the trustee with regard to the administration of the estate.

9. (1) Third-party deposits and guarantees are not estate funds.

(2) If third-party deposits are received in an estate, the trustee's file shall contain satisfactory written evidence of third party deposits, whether direct or indirect.

(3) If no such written evidence exists in the trustee's file, these deposits will be considered, by the Superintendent, to be estate funds like any other deposits and will be treated accordingly.

7. Dans les circonstances exceptionnelles où la divulgation du nom du déposant ou du garant pourrait engendrer des difficultés excessives, susciter de l'embarras ou empêcher le versement du dépôt ou de la garantie, le syndic peut s'abstenir de divulguer le nom à la première assemblée des créanciers mais ne peut refuser de le divulguer au surintendant.

8. L'entière divulgation et le traitement approprié de ces dépôts et garanties vont de pair avec les principes de l'article 61 des Règles et du paragraphe 152(1) de la Loi attestant qu'il n'y a aucune autre considération directe ou indirecte payée ou payable au syndic relativement à l'administration de l'actif.

9. (1) Les dépôts et garanties de tierces personnes ne sont pas des biens de l'actif.

(2) Lorsque des dépôts de tierces personnes sont versés à l'actif, le syndic doit avoir au dossier une preuve écrite concluante de ces dépôts, qu'ils soient directs ou indirects.

(3) Lorsqu'il n'y a aucune preuve écrite au dossier du syndic, ces dépôts seront considérés par le surintendant comme des biens de l'actif, à l'instar de tout autre dépôt, et seront traités en conséquence.

retain and the period of retention as provided in the Act and the Rules.

Types of Documents to Retain Documents of the bankrupt

4. (1) The deeds, books, records and documents of the bankrupt referred to in subsection 16(3) of the Act are the documents generated by and attesting to the commercial and legal activities and operations of the debtor prior to the bankruptcy.

(2) If the bankruptcy involves a business concern, these documents will generally include, but are not limited to:

(a) salary records;
(b) accounting records;
(c) sale and purchase invoices;
(d) correspondence;
(e) banking records;
(f) contracts;
(g) letters patent;
(h) shareholders' register; and
(i) book of minutes of a corporation.

Documents relating to the administration of the estate

5. (1) The books, records and documents relating to the administration of the estate referred to in subsection 26(2) of the Act are the documents generated for or by the trustee reflecting the trustee's decisions and actions in the administration.

(2) These documents will generally include, à conserver et la durée de cette conservation selon les dispositions de la Loi et des Règles.

Documents à conserver

Documents du failli

4. (1) Les titres, livres, dossiers et documents du failli mentionnés au paragraphe 16(3) de la Loi sont les pièces qui proviennent et témoignent des activités et opérations commerciales ou à caractère juridique du débiteur avant la faillite.

(2) Lorsque la faillite est de nature commerciale, ces documents incluront généralement, sans toutefois s'y limiter :

a) les relevés et livres de salaires;
b) les registres comptables;
c) les factures d'achats et de ventes;
d) la correspondance;
e) les effets bancaires;
f) les contrats;
g) les lettres patentes;
h) le registre des actionnaires et des transferts; et
i) le livre des procès-verbaux de la compagnie.

Documents concernant l'administration d'un actif

5. (1) Les livres, registres et documents concernant l'administration d'un actif mentionnés au paragraphe 26(2) de la Loi sont les documents produits pour ou par le syndic durant sa propre administration pour justifier ses décisions et démarches.

(2) Ces documents incluront généralement, but are not limited to:

(a) proofs of claim;
(b) various notices to creditors;
(c) reports to creditors, the Court and the Superintendent;
(d) correspondence;
(e) time sheets;
(f) applications and court orders;
(g) all minutes of meetings;
(h) the banking records and accounting records showing receipts and disbursements of funds; and
(i) supporting documents for various disbursements.

6. In view of section 22 of the Act, which limits the obligation to make any return that the bankrupt was required to make to one year prior to the commencement of the calendar year, the trustee could limit the taking of possession of documents to the period necessary to prepare these reports. In practical terms, this could involve a period of approximately two years depending on the date of the bankruptcy except for those records that, in the opinion of the trustee, would not be required.

Retention of Documents

7. (1) Subject to other statutes, section 68 of the Rules requires that a trustee retain, for a period of four (4) years after the trustee's discharge, the books, records and documents that relate to the administration of the estate.

(2) A trustee should extend the retention period of documents where other statutes sans toutefois s'y limiter :

a) les preuves de réclamation;
b) les avis divers aux créanciers;
c) les multiples rapports aux créanciers, au tribunal et au surintendant;
d) la correspondance;
e) les feuilles de temps;
f) les requêtes et les ordonnances;
g) tous les procès-verbaux d'assemblées;
h) les effets bancaires et les relevés comptables démontrant les entrées et dispositions de fonds; et
i) les pièces justificatives pour les divers débours.

6. Puisque l'article 22 de la Loi limite l'obligation de produire une déclaration que le failli était tenu de faire, à un an avant le début de l'année civile au cours de laquelle il a fait faillite, le syndic pourrait restreindre sa prise de possession à la période nécessaire à la préparation des rapports qu'il peut devoir préparer. En termes pratiques, cette période devrait couvrir environ deux ans avant la date de la cession sauf pour les documents qui, de l'avis du syndic, ne seraient pas nécessaires.

Conservation des documents

7. (1) Sous réserve d'autres lois, l'article 68 des Règles prévoit que le syndic conservera pendant une période de quatre (4) ans après sa libération, les livres, registres et documents qui portent sur l'administration de l'actif.

(2) Le syndic devrait prolonger la période de conservation des documents lorsque d'autres require documents to be kept for a longer time period (e.g., the Income Tax Act (R.S.C. 1985, c.1 (5th Supp.)) requires the retention of documents for a period of six (6) years) lois exigent que les documents soient gardés pendant une plus longue période de temps (par exemple, la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu (L.R.C. (1985), ch. 1 (5e suppl.)), exige la conservation de documents pendant une période de six (6) ans).

8. The trustee is not required to retain deeds or documents if a copy of these documents was filed with the Court or is held by the provincial registry office.

8. Le syndic n'est pas tenu de garder des titres ou documents dont une copie a été déposée ou est disponible auprès du tribunal ou du bureau d'enregistrement de la province.

9. If the trustee has a waiver of notification (Appendix A), the trustee may dispose of the documents relating to the commercial and legal activities prior to the bankruptcy immediately after the discharge of the trustee.

9. Si le syndic détient une renonciation (annexe A), il peut disposer des documents portant sur les activités et opérations antérieures à la faillite, immédiatement après sa libération.

10. Where the administration will be prolonged as a result of specific litigation, and:

10. Lorsque l'administration se prolongera en raison d'un litige particulier, et que :

(a) all of the assets have generally been realized;

a) tous les actifs ont généralement été réalisés,

(b) the trustee has received a waiver of notification from the bankrupt; and

b) le syndic possède une renonciation de la part du failli, et

(c) the trustee has allowed a reasonable delay for any government agency to make a routine audit,

c) un délai raisonnable est accordé pour permettre aux organismes gouvernementaux de faire les vérifications d'usage, the trustee may dispose of the secondary documents as if the administration had been completed while retaining the documents relating to the litigation.

le syndic peut disposer des documents secondaires comme si l'administration de l'actif était terminée tout en retenant les documents liés au litige.

4. This Directive applies to trustees and administrators, as defined in section 66.11 of the Act, who are required to keep estate records under the Act. For ease of reading, the term "trustee" in this Directive is to be read as including an administrator.

5. This Directive shall be read in conjunction with Directive 17, Retention of Documents by the Trustee, and Directive 5R4, Estate Funds and Banking.

6. This Directive shall be applied in conjunction with the requirements imposed by other statutes, whether federal, provincial/territorial or municipal, to maintain adequate books and records and to satisfy evidentiary requirements.

Objet et portée

3. La présente instruction précise les conditions, les principes et les exigences minimales applicables à la tenue des documents électroniques par les syndics pour aider ceux-ci à se conformer aux exigences administratives et juridiques liées à la tenue des dossiers de l'actif en vertu de la Loi, sans dicter les types de technologie requis.

4. La présente instruction s'applique aux syndics et aux administrateurs au sens de l'article 66.11 de la Loi, qui doivent tenir les dossiers de l'actif en vertu de la Loi. Pour faciliter la lecture, dans la présente instruction, le terme « syndic » vise également les administrateurs.

5. La présente instruction doit être lue en conjonction avec l'instruction n° 17, Conservation des documents par le syndic, et l'instruction n° 5R4, Les fonds de l'actif et procédures bancaires.

6. La présente instruction s'applique conjointement avec les exigences imposées par d'autres lois et règlements, qu'ils soient fédéraux, provinciaux, territoriaux ou municipaux, sur la tenue appropriée de livres et de registres et le respect des obligations en matière de preuve.

Principes de conservation des dossiers de l'actif

7. Le syndic conserve les dossiers de l'actif de manière à assurer l'accessibilité, l'authenticité, l'intégrité, la fiabilité, la lisibilité et la pérennité de l'information qui y est consignée. L'intégrité d'un document est assurée lorsqu'il est possible de vérifier que l'information n'en est pas altérée et qu'elle est maintenue dans son intégralité, et que le support qui porte cette information lui procure la stabilité et la pérennité voulue.

perennity to the information.

8. Estate records may be destroyed after the appropriate retention period has expired pursuant to Rule 68(1).

9. Subject to the allowable fees and disbursements under the Act and Rules, the costs associated with the retention of estate records shall not be charged to the estate.

Retention Principles for Electronic Estate Records

10. A trustee who digitizes a paper-source estate record shall ensure that the resulting electronic estate record is an intelligible, electronically readable reproduction of that document. The conversion must not result in the loss, destruction or alteration of information and data relevant to the estate record.

11. Without limiting paragraph 10 of this Directive, a trustee who keeps estate records electronically shall ensure:

(a) the electronic estate records are retained in a format that does not change the information contained in the electronic estate records that was originally made, sent or received;

(b) the information in the electronic estate records is readable and perceivable by any person who is entitled to access or require the production of electronic estate records; and

(c) if electronic records are sent or received, any information that identifies the origin and destination of the electronic estate record, and the date and time when it was sent or received, is also retained.

8. On peut détruire les dossiers de l'actif une fois que la période de conservation appropriée a pris fin conformément à la Règle 68(1).

9. Sous réserve des honoraires et débours prévus par la Loi et les Règles, le coût de la conservation des dossiers de l'actif n'est pas imputé à l'actif.

Principes de conservation des dossiers électroniques de l'actif

10. Le syndic qui numérise un dossier de l'actif sur papier s'assure que le dossier électronique de l'actif qui en résulte est une reproduction électronique intelligible et lisible du document. La conversion ne doit pas entraîner la perte, la destruction ou la modification des données et des renseignements figurant au dossier de l'actif.

11. Sans limiter le paragraphe 10, le syndic qui assure la tenue électronique des dossiers de l'actif s'assure que :

a) les dossiers électroniques de l'actif sont conservés sous une forme qui ne modifie en rien l'information contenue dans les dossiers électroniques de l'actif faits, envoyés ou reçus à l'origine;

b) l'information contenue dans les dossiers électroniques de l'actif est lisible ou perceptible par quiconque a accès aux dossiers électroniques de l'actif ou est autorisé à exiger la production de ceux-ci; et

c) si les dossiers électroniques sont envoyés ou reçus, l'information qui permet de déterminer l'origine et la destination du dossier électronique de l'actif, ainsi que la date et l'heure d'envoi ou de réception, est elle aussi conservée.

(a) user authentication and permission controls;
(b) firewall and virus protection;
(c) disaster recovery and business continuity;
(d) audit trail capability to detail alterations; and
(e) system backups.

14. Without limiting paragraph 13(d) of this Directive, audit trails shall contain sufficient information to provide evidence of the authenticity of stored electronic estate records, including information about changes to the electronic estate records stored in the system.

15. Without limiting paragraph 13(e) of this Directive, a trustee shall ensure that procedures are in place to back up electronic estate records on a daily basis and shall ensure that backed-up

12. Le syndic veille à ce que les dossiers électroniques de l'actif soient accessibles et intelligibles en tout temps, et produit ces dossiers aux fins d'inspection comme l'exige la Loi, peu importe l'endroit où ils se trouvent et la manière dont ils sont stockés, classifiés ou indexés.

Exigences associées au système de tenue de documents électroniques

13. Le syndic conserve les dossiers électroniques de l'actif dans un système de tenue de documents électroniques sécurisé qui comprend des mécanismes de contrôle permettant de préserver l'accessibilité, l'authenticité, l'intégrité, la fiabilité, la lisibilité et la pérennité des dossiers électroniques de l'actif traités et conservés dans ce système, y compris, à tout le moins, les fonctions suivantes :

a) authentification des utilisateurs et contrôle des permissions;
b) pare-feu et protection antivirus;
c) reprise après sinistre et continuité des opérations;
d) capacité de conserver des pistes de vérification afin de repérer les modifications;
e) copies de sauvegarde du système.

14. Sans limiter l'alinéa 13*d*) de la présente instruction, les pistes de vérification contiennent suffisamment d'information pour prouver l'authenticité des dossiers électroniques conservés de l'actif, dont des renseignements sur les modifications apportées aux dossiers électroniques de l'actif conservés dans le système.

15. Sans limiter l'alinéa 13*e*) de la présente instruction, le syndic veille à ce que des procédures soient en place pour faire une sauvegarde quotidienne des dossiers

16. A trustee shall put in place a quality assurance process or program to ensure the electronic recordkeeping system remains compliant with this Directive.

Destruction of Digitized Paper-Source Estate Records

17. Subject to paragraphs 18 to 20 of this Directive, a trustee may destroy a paper-source estate record that has been digitized and stored in a secure electronic recordkeeping system in accordance with this Directive.

18. Prior to destroying any paper-source estate record that has been digitized, the trustee shall submit to the Designated Assistant Superintendent an attestation and declaration regarding his or her electronic recordkeeping system, as provided in Appendix A of this Directive. One attestation may be submitted for one or more individual trustees who work in the same firm and/or office, which shall be specified therein.

19. A trustee shall not destroy a paper-source estate record after digitization until satisfied that no system failure will result in the loss of the digitized document.

20. Pursuant to subsection 26(1) of the Act, regardless of digitization, a trustee shall not destroy the original signed copies of any minutes, proceedings had or resolutions passed at any meeting of creditors or inspectors until the appropriate retention period has expired pursuant to Rule 68(1).

16. Le syndic met en place un processus ou un programme d'assurance de la qualité de manière que le système de tenue de documents électroniques demeure conforme à la présente instruction.

Destruction des dossiers de l'actif sur papier et numérisés

17. Sous réserve des paragraphes 18 à 20 de la présente instruction, le syndic peut détruire un dossier de l'actif sur papier qui a été numérisé et conservé dans un système de tenue de documents électroniques sécurisé conformément à la présente instruction.

18. Avant de disposer des dossiers de l'actif sur papier qui ont été numérisés, le syndic soumet au surintendant adjoint désigné une attestation et une déclaration relatives à son système de tenue de documents électroniques, ainsi que le prévoit l'annexe A de la présente instruction. Une attestation peut être soumise pour un ou plusieurs syndics individuels qui travaillent dans un même cabinet ou bureau, auquel cas il faut le préciser dans l'attestation.

19. Le syndic ne peut disposer des dossiers de l'actif sur papier qui ont été numérisés que s'il est satisfait qu'aucune panne du système n'entraînera la perte du document numérisé.

20. Conformément au paragraphe 26(1) de la Loi, le syndic ne peut détruire le texte original et signé de tout procès-verbal, procédure entamée ou résolution adoptée à une assemblée de créanciers ou d'inspecteurs, même si ces documents ont été numérisés, avant l'expiration de la période de conservation requise conformément à la Règle 68(1).

Place and Date of Hearing: Vancouver, B.C.
November 12, 1998

[1] Oral reasons on this matter were given on November 12, 1998. These written reasons supplement the decision provided on that date. The Trustee in Bankruptcy applies pursuant to s.34(1) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act which allows the Trustee to apply to the court for directions in relation to any matter affecting the administration of the estate of a bankrupt. In particular, the Trustee seeks directions as to whether it is at liberty to provide to all of the Inspectors of the Bankrupt

"complete and unrestricted access to all Taylor Ventures Ltd. and related files which the Trustee has received from ... the former solicitors for the Bankrupt." The counsel for the former solicitors submits that, in the unique circumstances of this bankruptcy, complete and unrestricted access to the records should not be available to the Inspectors.

BACKGROUND

[2] Taylor Ventures Ltd. was incorporated in 1979 and had raised approximately $36 million from in excess of 400 investors. Taylor then used that money to purchase and develop various real estate projects in British Columbia. Pursuant to its own petition, an order was made on January 22, 1998 that Coopers & Lybrand Ltd. be appointed as the Receiver-Manager of all of the undertaking of Taylor. By order made February 18, 1998, five individuals were appointed as a Steering Committee to represent the interests of all investor creditors. After extensive negotiations, a May 8, 1998 order relieved Coopers of much of its duties and responsibilities as Receiver- Manager. Its responsibilities were assumed by the Steering Committee so that the Committee could undertake many of the tasks which would ordinarily be the responsibility of the Receiver-Manager and so that the cost of the Receiver-Manager undertaking mailings to the investor creditors and of undertaking a forensic audit of the affairs of Taylor could be avoided.

[3] The Receiver-Manager was provided with the authority to assign Taylor into bankruptcy. That was done and a receiving order was made on September 2, 1998 with Pricewaterhouse Coopers Inc. appointed as the Trustee. At a meeting of creditors held on October 22, 1998, five Inspectors were appointed: Gary Bateman, Peter Elms, David Mosher, Laurie Giles and Michael Sturby. Mr. Mosher represents a judgment creditor of Taylor and the other Inspectors were investor creditors who advanced monies to Taylor. Four of the five Inspectors had served as a members of the Steering Committee. Michael Sturby is a member of the Steering Committee and is an Inspector. Mr. Sturby had been retained by Coopers to conduct research and analysis in relation to Taylor and its related numbered companies and had undertaken much of the forensic auditing tasks which would ordinarily have been undertaken by the Receiver-Manager.

[4] In the Statement of Affairs of Taylor, unsecured creditors are listed as $33,285,810.99, secured creditors are listed at $13,556,802.00 and total assets are listed at $18,155,385.00.

CONCERNS RAISED ON BEHALF OF THE FORMER LAW FIRM OF TAYLOR

[5] The concerns raised by the solicitor for the former lawyers can best be summarized in his October 16, 1998 letter to the solicitors for the Trustee:

> ... one of the investors who is anticipated to be starting a lawsuit by using Heather Ferris and David Roberts at Campney & Murphy is also an inspector in the bankruptcy and that you anticipate that he may wish to examine the files in question under the context of the bankruptcy. Firstly, I think it is plain that the trustee's possession of the files and access to those files must only be exercised for legitimate and proper purposes of the bankruptcy. It would be completely inappropriate and wrong, in my view, for an investor who is also an inspector to go through all of our client's files so as to get information and documentation for the purposes of a personal lawsuit which is anticipated to be commenced. First of all, it subverts the concept of implied confidentiality of documents from one litigation matter to another. Secondly, it subverts the disclosure of documents issues of relevance and privilege which flow within each individual lawsuit.
> In strikes me that the trustee is under an obligation to respect the confidentiality of documents produced within the bankruptcy in the same manner as a litigant is under a duty to respect the confidentiality of all documents produced by the discovery process.
> It strikes me that if indeed there are inspectors who are also actual or prospective litigants against our client or others arising out of matters touched upon in the Taylor Ventures Ltd. bankruptcy that those inspectors are in conflict of interest and should either resign or steps should be taken by the trustee to deal with the issue in some other manner so as to prevent the use of documents used in the bankruptcy from being used for other personal purposes or for other litigation.

The concerns are therefore twofold: (a) the Inspectors will use the knowledge they obtain from the files to either promote their own personal lawsuit against the former solicitors or to provide information to one of the Investors who has threatened a lawsuit against the former solicitors arising out of the alleged representation of both Taylor and that Investor by the former law firm; (b) information which will be confidential to the Investors and their solicitor, Ms. Ferris, will be made known to Mr. Roberts, the partner of Ms. Ferris, in his capacity as the solicitor likely to be commencing an action on behalf of one of the Investors against the former law firm of Taylor arising out of the alleged fiduciary duty owed by the former law firm to the Investors and/or out of the alleged representation of both an Investor and Taylor on a particular transaction or transactions.

POSITION TAKEN BY THE SOLICITORS FOR THE INSPECTORS

[6] The position of the Inspectors is best outlined in the November 4, 1998 letter to the solicitor for the former law firm:

The Trustee in Bankruptcy of Taylor Ventures Ltd. stands in the shoes of the bankrupt. The files of Taylor Ventures Ltd. which are in the possession of Mr. Oliver, belong to Taylor Ventures Ltd., the bankrupt. Communications between Taylor Ventures Ltd. and Mr. Oliver are privileged and the files may not be disclosed to others by Mr. Oliver without the permission of Taylor Ventures Ltd. However, the client, now the Trustee in Bankruptcy, may waive that privilege if he chooses. The confidentiality is the Trustee's and the Trustee may disclose what he chooses because the files belong to the Trustee, as does the privilege.

APPLICABLE PROVISIONS: BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY ACT AND RULES

S.16(5)No person is, as against the trustee, entitled to withhold possession of the books of account belonging to the bankrupt or any papers or documents relating to the accounts or to any trade dealings of the bankrupt or to set up any lien thereon.

S.16(2)No person is eligible to be appointed or to act as an inspector who is a party to any contested action or proceedings by or against the estate of the bankrupt.

S.120(1)No inspector is, directly or indirectly, capable of purchasing or acquiring for himself or for another any of the property of the estate for which he is an inspector, except with the prior approval of the court.

S.163(1)The trustee ... may, without an order, examine under oath before the registrar of the court or other authorized person, the bankrupt, any person reasonably thought to have knowledge of the affairs of the bankrupt ... respecting the bankrupt, his dealings or property and may order the person liable to be so examined to produce any books, documents, correspondence or papers in his possession or power relating in all or in part to the bankrupt, his dealings or property.

S.164(1)Where a person has, or is believed or suspected to have, in his possession or power any of the property of the bankrupt, or any book, document or paper of any kind relating in whole or in part to the bankrupt, his dealings or property, or showing that he is indebted to the bankrupt, he may be required by the trustee to produce the book, document or paper for the information of the trustee, or to deliver to him any property of the bankrupt in his possession.

R.65(5)Documents that are subject to the lien of a solicitor shall be returned to the solicitor upon completion of the estate to which the documents relate.

WHAT IS PRIVILEGED

[7] It is clear that there is a distinction between the "facts" which may be in a solicitor's file and "confidential communications." It is clear that, as to matters of fact, no privilege attaches to documents and that they are not confidential. Similarly, a solicitor must answer questions regarding the movement of funds in and out of a trust account: see, for instance, Re Lauzier (1996), 43 C.B.R. (2d) 207 (Ont.Ct.of Justice-Gen.Div.). In Descoteaux et al v. Mierzwinski and A./G. Que. et al 1982 CanLII 22 (SCC), (1982), 141 D.L.R. (3d) 590 (S.C.C.), where Lamer J. delivered the judgment of the court, there is this description of the scope of privilege:

The following statement by Wigmore (8 Wigmore, Evidence para.2292, p.554 (McNaughton Rev.1961), of the rule of evidence is a good summary, in my view, of the substantive conditions precedent to the existence of the right of the lawyer's client to confidentiality:

Where legal advice of any kind is sought from a professional legal adviser in his capacity as such, the communications relating to that purpose, made in confidence by the client, are at his instance permanently protected from disclosure by himself or by the legal adviser, except the protection be waived. (at p.603)

CAN A TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY WAIVE THE PRIVILEGE

[8] The 1965 decision of McDermott J. in Re Cirone, (1965) 8 C.B.R. 237, stood for the proposition that the Trustee stepped into the shoes of the client and was in a position to waive the privilege in order to require the former solicitor for a bankrupt to be examined. In dealing with the power to examine the former solicitor, McDermott J. stated:

Counsel for the trustee cited numerous cases in support of his contention that the privilege of the solicitor is actually that of the client, and that the client can release the solicitor from refusing to answer on a question of privilege, or from divulging information that came to him from his client, and further submits that when the client has become bankrupt the trustee steps into the shoes of the client and has the right to relieve from or waive the solicitor's privilege (or actually the client's privilege) of not answering questions leading to information obtained by the solicitor for the bankrupt before the bankrupt assumed that status. See 2 Halsbury, 3rd ed., p.408, para.820: "The solicitor of a person who afterwards becomes bankrupt cannot set up as against the trustee in the bankruptcy any privilege which is the client's"; and the reference there to Cordery on Solicitors, 4th ed., p.298. (at p.239)

[9] The motion before the court had been made in an action commenced by the Trustee against the former solicitor. The question was whether the former solicitor should re-attend at his examination for discovery to answer the questions that he previously refused to answer. In deciding that the former solicitor should attend to answer the questions, McDermott J. concluded:

> The trustee in bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act should be permitted much wider scope in the course of his examinations in cases where he is obliged to take an action in court on behalf of the creditors to try to recover funds, and where it is his duty to make all possible investigation in his work as a trustee to carry out fully the administration of the estate for the benefit of the creditors. (at p.243)

[10] In Re Abacus Cities Ltd. (1981), 40 C.B.R. (N.S.) 172 (Alta.Q.B.), MacDonald J. dealt with the question of whether or not a Trustee was in a position to waive privilege in connection with communications between the previous solicitors for the bankrupt and the bankrupt in order that the communications might be introduced in evidence at preliminary hearings in Ontario relating to fraud charges against the principal of the Abacus. MacDonald J. commented:

> Were Abacus Cities Ltd. not in bankruptcy, decisions of and for the company would be made by the Board of Directors. Being in bankruptcy, the Trustee replaces the Board of Directors, at least in all matters concerning the property of the bankrupt. (at p.173)

[11] After citing the decision in Re Cirone, supra, MacDonald J. concluded:

> It would be improper to claim the privilege of the company for the purpose of protecting an employee who enjoys no solicitor-client privilege in a prosecution for a breach of a statute.
> If the trustee with the advice of the inspectors in bankruptcy knows of any reason why, in the interests of the bankrupt, privilege should be claimed and certainly he can do so. The trustee as an officer appointed by the court is under an obligation to balance the public interests in any decision he makes.
> I do not consider that an order should go directing the trustee to waive privilege as there may be circumstances of which this court has no knowledge, but an order will go authorizing the trustee to waive privilege and suggesting he do so if he has no reason to believe that such a waiver would be to the prejudice of the interests that he represents.

[12] In Re Dilawri (1983), 47 C.B.R. (N.S.) 93 (Ont.S.C.), Ewaschuk J. dealt with the question of whether the former solicitor of the bankrupt should re-attend and answer questions relating to property presently or formerly forming part of the estate of the bankrupt. Ewaschuk J. concluded as follows:

> My initial impression was that the trustee in bankruptcy, though vested with the bankrupt's property and charged with a duty to act in the best interests of the bankrupt's creditors, possess no right to waive solicitor-client privilege with respect to the bankrupt's property. That was so on the basis that the solicitor-client privilege was such a fundamental right in our legal system that this right should not be lightly derogated from. And it was also based on the assumption that the creditors' rights to the bankrupt's property could be adequately protected by inquiry into the acquisition, location and disposition of property, which attract no privilege, being objective acts and transactions and not confidential communications: see Ont. Securities Comm. v. Greymac Credit Corp. (Ont. Div. Ct., 30th March 1983, not yet reported). In other words, by compelling the bankrupt and solicitor to disclose the flow of the bankrupt's property, the rights of the creditors would be adequately protected without requiring disclosure of the client's instructions, and thus disclosure of the purpose for which the property was acquired or disposed of.
> However, I find that my impressions are not valid in law. It appears clear that a trustee in bankruptcy does indeed possess the legal right to waive the bankrupt's solicitor-client privilege with respect to the bankrupt's former property: Re Cirone; Reisman v. Laker (1965), 8 C.B.R. (N.S.) 237 (Ont. H.C.) and implicity reaffirmed in Ont. Securities Comm. v. Greymac Credit Corp., supra. Thus, the law's interest in protecting confidential legal communications must yield to the seemingly greater interest in protecting the creditors' rights in the easily disposed of bankrupt's property.
> I would hope that the trustee in bankruptcy would not lightly waive a solicitor-client privilege unless the bankrupt's property cannot be determined and reached in any other way. Now that the act/transaction as opposed to communication distinction has been developed and recently clarified, I would hope it would be the rare case where the trustees would waive the privilege. (at pp.95-6)

[13] In the Re Ontario Securities Comm. v. Greymac Credit Corp. decision referred to (reported at reflex, (1983), 146 D.L.R. (3d) 73 (Ont.H.C.-Div.Ct.)), the court dealt with the ability of a Receiver appointed under the Loan and Trust Corporation Act to waive solicitor and client privilege on behalf of a company. The court concluded that the Receiver had the power to waive solicitor-client privilege but that the power had to be used only for the purposes for which the Receiver was ordered to take control of the company:

> Section 159 of the Loan and Trust Corporations Act expressly provides that the registrar has his powers "for such purposes". The result of the Orders in Council is that the registrar has all the powers of the boards of directors of Greymac Trust and Crown Trust, which would include the power to waive a solicitor-and-client privilege of either of those corporations, but > those powers are expressly conferred for the purposes for which the registrar was ordered to take control. It is no part of those purposes, in my judgment, to render assistance to the Morrison Commission in its inquiry into the affairs of Greymac Trust and Crown Trust and other corporations. That being so, the registrar, in my judgment, has no right to waive the solicitor-and-client privilege of Greymac Trust or Crown Trust so that their solicitors or former solicitors may be free to disclose confidential information to the commission. (at p.81)

[14] The decision in Re Cirone, supra, was described by the court in Greymac as not being "determinative of the issue" because of the differences between the purposes for which a Trustee in Bankruptcy is appointed and the purposes for which a statutory Receiver was ordered to take possession and control. The court said that the Trustee was appointed to liquidate the assets of the bankrupt and distribute the proceeds amongst the creditors whereas the statutory Receiver was appointed to take possession and control of the two trust companies and conduct their businesses and to take " ... such steps as in his opinion should be taken towards their rehabilitation or continued operation." (at p.81)

[15] The court in Greymac also dealt with the question of what would and would not be privileged:

> Evidence as to whether a solicitor holds or has paid or received moneys on behalf of a client is evidence of an act or transaction, whereas the privilege applies only to communications. Oral evidence regarding such matters, and the solicitor's books of accounts and other records pertaining thereto (with advice and communications from the client relating to advice expunged) are not privileged, and the solicitor may be compelled to answer the questions and produce the material.
> It may be helpful to ask in such a case whether the client himself if he were the witness, could refuse on the ground of the solicitor-and-client privilege to disclose particulars of a transaction directed by him through his solicitor's trust account. The fact that a client has paid to, received from, or left with his solicitor a sum of money involved in a transaction is not a matter as to which the client himself could claim the privilege, because it is not a communication at all. It is an act. The solicitor-and-client privilege does not enable a client to retain anonymity in transactions in which the identity of the participants has become relevant in properly constituted proceedings. (at p.83)

[16] The trial decision of Ewaschuk J. and the decision in Greymac were reviewed by the Ontario Court of Appeal in Re Dilawri (1984), 53 C.B.R. (N.S.) 251. The judgment of the court was delivered by Lacourciére J.A. The court dismissed the appeal but also ruled that: "... the appellant may refuse to answer any and all questions in respect of instructions which he has received or professional advice which he gave to the debtor in respect of the bankrupt's property." (at p.256)

[17] The court had the following comments about the judgment of Ewaschuk J.:

> We respectfully disagree, however, with the proposition accepted by the learned motions court judge that a trustee in bankruptcy possesses the legal right to waive the privilege with respect to legal advice given to the bankrupt respecting his former property. He relied on Re Cirone; Reisman v. Laker (1965), 8 C.B.R. (N.S.) 237 (Ont.S.C.); in our respectful view, the case is based on a broad proposition stated in 2 Hals. (3d) 408, para.820, which does not appear to be consistent with the rationale for the privilege. Cirone involved the proposed examination of a solicitor against whom there were allegations of fraudulent preference with respect to his fees for services to the bankrupt. (at p.254)
> Mr. Justice Houlden in his article "Discovery in Criminal Prosecutions in Bankruptcy Matters" (1972), Can.Bar Rev. 486 at 488, states that it is a difficult question whether or not the Cirone case should be extended beyond its particular facts. We think that it should be limited to its own facts, and that the proposition in Halsbury is too broad having regard to the authority upon which it is based. (at p.254)
> In our view, the appellant can be compelled to disclose all information regarding the bankrupt's affairs, transactions and the whereabouts of his property, etc., which do not require the disclosure of communications made to the appellant for the purpose of giving legal advice. These communications with respect to property are not privileged. All questions contained in Sched.A to the order of Ewaschuk J. can be read as falling in this category of non-privileged information and to that extent they should be answered by the appellant. In that respect, there is no privilege to be waived by the client or by the trustee. (at p.255)
> The privilege attaches, however, to all information requested by the client for the purpose of obtaining professional advice and assistance and given for that purpose. (at p.255)
> It is also unnecessary to say definitely whether there may be circumstances in which the trustee may properly waive the bankrupt's privilege. We do not think, however, that the protection of creditor's rights, standing alone, is sufficient to overcome the solicitor/client privilege. (at p.255)

[18] Subsequent decisions have not been consistent in dealing with the Ontario Court of Appeal decision in Re Dilawri. In Re Amonson (1985), 57 C.B.R. (N.S.) 314 (Alta.Q.B.), Chrumka J. dealt with whether the bankrupt's former solicitor should present himself for examination by the Trustee pursuant to ss.133 and 134 of the Act. Chrumka J. stated:

> There are matters which deal with the preparation of documents and dispensing of funds, with respect to which there is no solicitor-client privilege. There are other areas of communications between solicitor and client where there clearly is a privilege in the client. (at p.316)

[19] Chrumka J. then cited the trial decision but not the appeal decision in Re Dilawri before concluding:

Digitized by Google

> ... a trustee in bankruptcy may waive the solicitor-client privilege, but that it should not be waived unless the bankrupt's property cannot be determined in any other way ...
>
> However, questions should not be asked which are concerned with the giving of legal advice by Mr. Milne [the lawyer] and which attempt to elicit the nature of the legal advice given. No privilege, of course, attaches where a communication is made in furtherance of a criminal purpose.
> In an examination of this type, it seems to me that it is generally unnecessary to breach the confidentiality respecting the legal advice sought or given. There is nothing improper or irregular in asking Mr. Milne questions which deal with the assets, disposition of the assets, tracing of them, the flow of funds and similar matters. But care should be taken with respect to the solicitor-client privilege concerning the giving of the legal advice unless this advice was in furtherance of a criminal purpose. (at pp.316-17)

While Chrumka J. does not refer to the Ontario Court of Appeal decision, he concludes as they did that much which is in the possession of the former solicitor is not privileged.

[20] Registrar Quinn in Wolch's Guaranteed Foods Ltd. 1994 CanLII 8935 (AB QB), (1994), 24 C.B.R. (3d) 268 (Alta.Q.B.) dealt with an application by a Trustee for a declaration that certain correspondence, memoranda and documents in the possession of a former solicitor were producible and not subject to any solicitor-client privilege. The documentation requested related to legal and accounting advice received prior to a "rather elaborate series of transactions "including a resolution declaring a dividend." Registrar Quinn concluded:

> Counsel for the Trustee submits that any privilege there may have been has in any event been waived by the Trustee, and that the Trustee is entitled to receive all of the documentation, even if it includes communications between the Bankrupt and its lawyer for the purpose of obtaining professional legal advice. Having regard to what was said in the Chilcott [Dilawri] case, I conclude there is no authority for holding a Trustee can waive the Bankrupt's privilege. (at p.273).
> Turning to the present case, I do not purport to decide whether or not a waiver by a Trustee of a Bankrupt's privilege is possible. It is not necessary for me to do so, because I am of the opinion that even if such a waiver is possible, circumstances that would warrant it have not been shown by the Trustee. (at p.275).

Registrar Quinn concluded that the lawyer and accountant should produce at their examinations under s.163(1) of the Act, any books, documents, correspondence or papers in their possession or power respecting the bankrupt, its dealings or its property, except those which were privileged.

[21] In Shepherd (Trustee of) v. Shepherd 1997 CanLII 12416 (ON SC), (1997), 50 C.B.R. (3d) 115 (Ont.Ct.of Justice-Gen.Div.), Greer J. cited with approval the Court of Appeal decision in Dilawri although he found that the documents requested did not fall within the category of privileged documents.

[22] Since the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in Dilawri, it is possible to summarize the position of the Trustee regarding privileged information as follows:

(a) Solicitors or former solicitors can be compelled to disclose to the Trustee all information regarding the property and affairs and transactions of the bankrupt which do not require the disclosure of communications made for the purpose of giving legal advice. Specifically, questions which deal with assets, the disposition of assets, the tracing of assets or sale proceeds or the flow of funds in and out of trust or otherwise are matters which are not subject to solicitor-client privilege.

(b) Communications made for the purposes of giving legal advice are not privileged where the purpose of the communication was made to further a criminal purpose. All other communications for the purpose of giving legal advice are privileged and must not be disclosed to the Trustee or others and this privilege cannot be waived by the Trustee on behalf of the bankrupt.

(c) The Trustee can, pursuant to ss.16(5), 163(1) and 165(1) of the Act, require the examination of a former solicitor and the delivery of documents in the possession of the former solicitor providing those documents and that examination does not relate to matters which are privileged.

[23] In this case, all documents and information in the possession of the former solicitors must be delivered up to the Trustee except that the former solicitors are not obligated to disclose communications between Taylor and themselves which were made for the purpose of providing legal advice to Taylor. It is then necessary to review the question of whether the documents and information that come into the possession of a Trustee and the Inspectors may then be provided by the Trustee and the Inspectors to third parties or may be used by the Inspectors or provided to others by the Inspectors for purposes other than for purposes of the bankruptcy.

CAN DOCUMENTS WHICH ARE NOT PRIVILEGED BE PROVIDED TO THIRD PARTIES

[24] In Re Nadon Paving Ltd. (1967), 10 C.B.R. 57 (Alta.C.A.), the court dealt with the question of whether documentation in the hands of a consultant should be produced or not. The consultant had been retained by the bankrupt to review the workmanship of the bankrupt company but a copy of the report prepared by the consultant was not available to the Trustee. The Trustee sought a copy of the report from the consultant so that the Trustee could proceed with an action against the owner who refused to pay for work done by the bankrupt company. The court concluded that the documents should be made available. As to the argument of whether or not what is now s.163(1) of the Act should be used as a "dress rehearsal" for ongoing litigation, the court concluded:

> Re Franks; Ex parte Gittins [1892] Q.B. 646, was referred to and it was argued that because of that decision an examination that had for its purpose the improving of the trustee's position in civil litigation should not be made. In that case Vaughan Williams J., acting under the equivalent English section, postponed an examination of a party against whom the trustee intended to assert a claim because, he said at p.647, that he wished "to avoid permitting the trustee to have anything like a dress rehearsal of the cross-examination in the action." The rule that he was applying was stated by Cave J. in Re Easton; Ex parte Davies (1891), 8 Morr. 168 at 171:
> I admit that when the person seeking to interrogate is the official receiver or the trustee it is no answer to say that an action is pending by the official receiver or trustee against the witness he proposes to examine. But it is the duty of the registrar to see that the questions are put bona fide for the benefit of the creditors, and not for any indirect purpose.
> The contemplated litigation in this case is not against the appellant but against John Laing & Sons Ltd. There is therefore no question of any preliminary examination for discovery as far as that action is concerned. (at p.60)

[25] Houlden J. in Re Tompkinson (1971) 14 C.B.R. (N.S.) 245 (Ont.S.C.) dealt with a situation where actions had previously been commenced by the Bank of Nova Scotia against the sister of the bankrupt claiming a fraudulent conveyance and where the same counsel was acting for the Bank of Nova Scotia and for the Trustee on a proposed examination under s.163(1) of the Act. Houlden J. commented:

> I suggested to counsel for the Trustee that, if the Trustee was bona fide in bringing this application, the Trustee should have no objection to the Court ordering that the examinations not be used in the proceedings brought by the Bank of Nova Scotia. Counsel has consented to my imposing this restriction on the examinations. I do not know what the Bank of Nova Scotia intends to do with its pending actions, but where the trustee appears to have a prima facie right to attack the two transactions in question for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate, I believe the Trustee should be permitted to conduct a s.121 [now s.163] examination. If the Trustee had no interest in the transactions, and merely wished to assist the Bank of Nova Scotia, the decisions of Re Desportes (1893), 10 Morr. 40, 68 L.T. 233 and Re Easton; Ex parte Davies (1891), 8 Morr. 168, 64 L.T. 798 would be relevant and I would stay the holding of the examination. But in this case, there is good reason for the Trustee to examine into the transactions and, in my view, the Trustee should be permitted to conduct it. (at p.248)

[26] In dealing with this general question, Cory J. (as he then was) in Re Long (1978), 29 C.B.R. (N.S.) 225 (Ont.S.C.) allowed an examination and concluded:

> There may be many instances where it is essential for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt that the trustee obtain as much information as possible before he determines whether or not to proceed with an action or undertake an action on behalf of the bankrupt's estate. The principle thus given is of great important and ought not, in my opinion, to be unduly fettered or restricted. It would seem that in many situations the trustee can proceed with an examination which is, in effect, a discovery, without there being payment of security costs for the protection of the other parties. That right is prone to abuse, and no doubt in some instances, if it were exercised without restraint by a trustee, it would become so abusive that the court would take steps to restrict the practice. (at p.227)

[27] In Re Catalina Products Inc. (1982), 43 C.B.R. (N.S.) 94 (B.C.S.C.), Skipp L.J.S.C. (as he then was) dealt with the question of whether a person could be represented by counsel at a s.163(1) examination even though that counsel also represented a creditor of the estate. After concluding that the person could be represented by counsel, Skipp L.J.S.C. stated:

> I conclude that the nature of the examination under s.133(1) [now s.163(1)] is a bar to the admission of the creditors to the proceedings. The examination under s.133 is not the proper forum for the creditors to inform themselves with respect to the assets of the bankrupt or the dealings of the estate, there being alternatives open to them.
> Since counsel here represents not only Mr. Evans, the person being examined, but a creditor as well, a restriction should be placed on counsel that as a condition of his being allowed to attend he should give an undertaking not to divulge information obtained at the examination to the creditor. (at p.169)

[28] While Re Greymac, supra, deals with the question of the powers available to a statutory Receiver, it is clear from the judgment of the court that the court was of the view that the powers available should only be exercised for the purposes for which they were provided.

[29] In dealing with questions arising under ss.163(1) and 164(1) of the Act, the court has limited the scope of the examination or the delivery of documents to matters relating to the bankrupt, his dealings or property. For instance, in Re Sun Squeeze Juices Inc. 1994 CanLII 7467 (ON SC), (1994), 27 C.B.R. (3d) 98 (Ont.Ct.of Justice-Gen.Div.) Farley, J. dealt with the right of inspection of documents in the possession of an accounting firm. Regarding s.164, Farley J. noted that it was:

Digitized by Google

> ... wide enough to include a right of inspection of documents even though they are the property of another person. Naturally the production of such must be of documents "relating in whole or in part to the Bankrupt, his dealings or property". (at p.99)

[30] It is clear that the Trustee is appointed for the purposes set out under the Act and Regulations. Under s.16(3) of the Act, the Trustee is required to take possession of the deeds, books, records and documents and all property of the bankrupt and may enter onto premises for the purpose of making an inventory of that property. Under s.30 of the Act, the Trustee may do a number of things with the permission of the Inspectors: (a) sell the property of the bankrupt including the goodwill of any business and any book debts owing; (b) lease any real properties; (c) carry on the business of the bankrupt; (d) "bring, institute or defend any action or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the bankrupt"; (e) incur obligations, borrow money and give security on any property of the bankrupt; (f) comprise and settle any debts owing to the bankrupt; (g) comprise any claim made by or against the estate of the bankrupt; etc. The activities of the Trustee must be limited to the legitimate interests of the creditors and of the affairs of the bankrupt.

[31] The powers available to the Trustee do not include the ability to review the books and records of the bankrupt to obtain, not information which is pertinent to the affairs of the bankrupt, but information which would be of use to third parties. The efforts of the Trustee and the Inspectors must be spent for the benefit of the creditors only as the interest of those creditors relate to the property, dealings and affairs of the bankrupt. It is clear that the Inspectors and the Trustee stand in a fiduciary relation to the general body of creditors. As a result, the Inspectors and the Trustee must not use their access to the books and records of the bankrupt for their own purposes, the purposes of creditors who may have separate actions against third parties who had dealings with the bankrupt or in a way which would conflict with the Trustee's obligation to pursue all legitimate claims against third parties that may be available to the Trustee and the bankrupt.

[32] The duties owed by the Inspectors have been variously described:

(a) Re Bryant, Isard & Co. (1923), 4 C.B.R. 41 (Ont. S.C.) - Inspectors stand in a fiduciary relation to the general body of creditors and should perform their duties impartially and in the interests of the creditors who appoint them. (at p.48);

(b) Re Fentiman (1926), 7 C.B.R. 355 (Ont. S.C.) - Inspectors must not allow their duty as Inspectors to conflict with some other interest.;

(c) Re Shannon & Co. (1931), 13 C.B.R. 291 (Alta. S.C.) - An Inspector must not act for his or her own personal advantage and must make a full and complete disclosure to the Trustee of the matters much might reasonably create suggestion of conflict.;

(d) Re Promedia Inc. (1984), 51 C.B.R. (N.S.) 132 (Que. S.C.) - An Inspector will be removed if there is a conflict of interest and the fact that the Inspector could be of assistance in administering the estate is not sufficient reason to justify his continuance as an Inspector.

[33] The Inspectors were not appointed in order that they might review the materials available to them to see whether they or others might have causes of action available against parties who had dealings with the Bankrupt. Plaintiffs having causes of action against parties such as the former solicitors will have all of the rights of discovery allowed by the Supreme Court Rules. It is inappropriate to allow the Inspectors to use their present access to materials to allow them or others to have early access to materials which will be available on discovery or to have access to materials which would not be available on discovery.

[34] In the circumstances of this case, the access which both the Trustee and the Inspectors and their solicitors will have to the documents and records obtained from the former solicitors will be limited to using those documents in relation only to the "affairs of the Bankrupt", its "account", its "trade dealings", or its "dealings or property" and not in relation to any other purposes. Accordingly, it is appropriate to impose upon the Trustee and the Inspectors and their respective solicitors that, while the Trustee and the Inspectors will have complete and unrestricted access to all Taylor and related files which the Trustee has received from the former solicitors of the Bankrupt, they may use those files and the information contained only in relation to the affairs of the Bankrupt. At the same time, the solicitor for the Inspectors will provide an undertaking that she and those in her office who are assisting her in her representation of the Inspectors will not provide any of the information or documents they obtain in that capacity to any other members of their firm.

CONSTANCE MINERVA TINANT

Respondent

APPLICATION FOR RESTORATION OF THE APPEAL TO THE LIST

R.F. TINANT
The Applicant in Person

COUNSEL:

L.M.E. ARES, Q.C.
For the Respondent

REASONS FOR DECISION OF

[1] The applicant applies for an order to have his appeal restored to the general appeal list. It was struck because, after the appeal books were filed, no steps were taken to prosecute the appeal between April 2002 and December 2002.

[2] The applicant has filed a short affidavit in support of his motion which does no more than state that his appeal was struck and that he wants it restored to the list. Fortunately the affidavit filed by the respondent is more informative. This affidavit, along with another affidavit that the applicant filed in previous proceedings, provide sufficient information to enable me to deal with this application on a substantive basis.

Background

[3] This application involves an appeal filed by the applicant from a decision made in Court of Queen's Bench following a matrimonial property trial which was heard from September 24 to September 28, 2001. Written reasons for judgment were issued on October 18, 2001. The formal judgment was entered on December 20, 2001. Minor amendments to the formal judgment were filed on February 12, 2002. The appeal was filed on January 4, 2002 and the appeal books were filed on April 19, 2002.

[4] The applicant filed for personal bankruptcy on October 2, 2002. The trustee in bankruptcy did not wish to pursue the appeal and took no steps to further it. In consequence the appeal was struck from the general list in accordance with the usual practice of this Court.

[5] There is nothing before me to indicate why no steps were taken by the applicant or his counsel to prepare the applicant's factum between April 19, 2002 and October 2, 2002. However the applicant did produce a letter dated early June 2003, by which his trustee purported to assign the bankruptcy estate's interest in this appeal to the applicant. No consideration for that assignment was expressed in the letter. Even though the letter was not filed, I propose to treat it as if it were part of the material properly before me.

Analysis

[6] In 707739 Alberta Ltd. v. Phillips 2001 ABCA 219 (CanLII), (2001), 286 A.R. 367, at paragraph 13 Hunt J.A. reviewed the factors to consider in the restoration of an appeal:

> If the appellants could bring themselves within the six-month time period in Rule 515.1(9), their application would be to restore an appeal under Rule 515.1(7). An order to restore an appeal struck from the list under Rule 515.1(7) is discretionary and, in exercising that discretion, a judge must consider all relevant matters: Brown v. Royal Bank of Canada 2001 ABCA 73 (CanLII), (2001), 277 A.R. 241; 242

Digitized by Google

> W.A.C. 241 (C.A.), at 242. A mere slip or inadvertence to appear on the part of counsel will generally not prevent the restoration of the appeal to the list: ibid.; Bishop v. Bishop (1990), 113 A.R. 280 (C.A.). On the other hand, panels of this court have refused applications to restore struck appeals on a number of grounds: an appeal appears to lack merit: Kowalchuk v. Kowalchuk, [1999] A.R. Uned. 538; [1999] A.J. No. 1585, (C.A.), online: QL (AJ); an appellant shows no intention of proceeding with an appeal and has not taken any steps to prosecute his appeal with diligence: Sammut v. Landau Estate , [1989] A.J. No. 128 (C.A.), online: QL (AJ); the delay is so great that prejudice to the respondents is evident: Clay v. Board of Reference and Board of Education of Calgary reflex, (1990), 106 A.R. 24 (C.A.); and an appellant can offer no reasonable explanation for a lengthy delay in taking steps to restore an appeal: Kalin v. Cline, [1992] A.J. No. 973 (C.A.), online: QL (AJ).

[7] The applicant has not shown that he has prosecuted his appeal with diligence. Indeed the opposite has occurred. Rule 538(1)(a) of the Alberta Rules of Court required the applicant to file his factum within 60 days of filing the appeal books. The gap between April 19, 2002 and October 2, 2002 is much greater than 60 days. None of the applicant's materials explain why the factum was not filed in accordance with this requirement. Further the applicant's appeal was struck from the list in December 2002 but he did not file this motion until May 16, 2003. Again no explanation is proffered to account for this delay.

[8] Delay and prejudice go hand in hand. It is now almost 2 years since the trial. Successful parties should not have the fruits of their success revisited long after trial. Appellants must be aware that with the right of appeal there is a corresponding obligation to prosecute the appeal with reasonable diligence or the right will be lost. Where there is a deadline in the rules for a step, there should be some explanation for the failure to meet that deadline before an appeal will be restored to the list.

[9] There is a second reason why this appeal should not be restored to the list. The applicant has no right to prosecute it as the right to pursue this appeal is within the exclusive capacity of the trustee in bankruptcy and that right cannot be assigned to the applicant.

[10] The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ("BIA") touches on this issue in the following sections:

> s. 30(1) The trustee may with the permission of the inspectors, do all or any of the following things:
>
> > (a) sell or otherwise dispose of for such price or other consideration as the inspectors may approve all or any part of the property of the bankrupt, including the goodwill of the business, if any, and the book debts due or growing due to the bankrupt, by tender, public auction or private contract, with power to transfer the whole thereof to any person or company, or to sell the same in parcels;
> > **...
> > (d) bring, institute, or defend any action or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the bankrupt;
> > **...
> > (l) appoint the bankrupt to aid in the administering of the estate in such manner, and on such terms as the inspectors may direct.
> >
> > **...
> s. 40(1) With the permission of the inspectors, any property of a bankrupt found incapable of realization shall be returned to the bankrupt prior to the trustee's application for discharge
> (2) Where a trustee is unable to dispose of any property as provided in this section, the court may make such order as it may consider necessary.

[11] There are good reasons why the capacity to act is vested in the trustee. First, the assets of the bankrupt are in the control of the trustee. If the proceeding is unsuccessful it is likely that there will be a costs consequence. A costs order against the bankrupt will generally be meaningless. Further if any of the property of the bankrupt is available to satisfy the costs award then it is likely that the property should have been turned over to the trustee. Also, if the bankrupt has legitimate means to raise costs, those means would generally be better spent on contribution to his or her creditors.

[12] Second, one of the purposes of cost awards is to ensure that parties will carefully consider whether there is any merit to a proceeding. When a party is bankrupt that careful consideration is easily set aside as the party is insulated from costs consequences as he or she has already lost all his or her assets to the trustee. Also the party against whom costs consequences have some meaning, the trustee, has already assessed the risks and has determined that the potential benefits of the proceeding are outweighed by the risks of a costs award.

[13] The applicant argues that different considerations apply where there is an assignment by the trustee of the right to appeal. In my view they do not. It would be a hollow benefit to persons being sued by bankrupts to be assured that the bankrupt and the trustee could avoid all consequences of cost awards by the simple mechanism of an assignment of the right to commence or continue an action, particularly where that assignment is granted for nominal or, as is the case here, no consideration. I conclude that Esson J.A. was correct in Bolton v. Amborq Developments Ltd. 1987 CanLII 2586 (BC CA), (1987), 15 B.C.L.R. (2d) 20, 66 C.B.R. (NS) 310 (C.A.) when he determined that the use of an assignment in this type of situation is at odds with the spirit of the BIA.

[14] I turn to the issue of whether matrimonial property litigation enjoys a special exemption which permits a bankrupt to commence or carry on with litigation in his or her own name. This issue needs to be addressed because two decisions issued by judges of the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, Deloitte, Haskins & Sells Ltd. v. Graham 1983 CanLII 1044 (AB QB), (1983), 42 A.R. 76, 144 D.L.R. (3d) 539 (Q.B.) ("Deloitte") and Dinapoli v. Yeung, 2002 ABQB 714 (CanLII), [2003] 3 W.W.R. 714, 2002 ABQB 714, came to this conclusion.

[15] It is clear that capacity to institute or continue proceedings does not vest in the trustee in every case. Section 30(1)(d) of the BIA only applies to proceedings which relate to the property of the bankrupt. Therefore proceedings which do not relate to property remain within the purview of the bankrupt subject always to the rights of opposing parties to move for security for costs.

[16] Also the BIA specifically preserves to the bankrupt the right to pursue wages and other employment entitlements: see s. 68 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985,
c. B-3, as amended by S.C. 1997, c-12. The Supreme Court has interpreted this provision as permitting a bankrupt to commence or continue proceedings for wrongful dismissal which it concluded is "akin to wages": see Wallace v. United Grain Growers, 1997 CanLII 332 (SCC), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 701, 152 D.L.R. (4th) 1.

[17] In Deloitte, supra, McDonald J. (as he then was) concluded that the definition of property in the BIA, while broad, does not include a claim under the Alberta Matrimonial Property Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. M-9, now R.S.A. 2000, c. M-8 ("MPA"). In my view the reasoning used to support this decision does not stand up under scrutiny. The basis for this conclusion is that the rights granted under the MPA do not relate to property but rather to the right to ask the court for an order in its discretion.

[18] I do not agree. The MPA is about matrimonial property. The entire purpose of the MPA is to achieve an equitable distribution of married people's property after a marriage breakdown has occurred. It is true that the court enjoys a discretion as to how it distributes the property, but courts often enjoy discretions relating to remedy, especially where equitable principles are factors to be applied. That does not mean, however, that wherever equitable principles come into play that which is being sought or granted no longer relates to property but to an equitable order. Also the MPA makes it clear that while judges may take equitable principles into account, once they have done so, they are required to make an order distributing the total property belonging to the married parties.

[19] There is no good reason why matrimonial property should enjoy a different status than does other property. In fact there is a good reason why it should not. It is not unusual for bankrupts to attempt to place their property beyond the reach of their creditors and the trustee. One possible way of achieving this objective would be to have one's spouse commence a matrimonial property application and then agree to a generous order. If such orders do not relate to property, then neither the trustee or any creditor would have a say in the matter.

[20] Finally, when one is dealing with the party who has a legal interest in the bulk of the matrimonial property, as is the situation involving this applicant, what is being sought is not an order but a limitation or diminution of the property to be taken from that party. The applicant is not seeking a matrimonial property order, he is asking the court to reduce the one that has been granted to the respondent. In other words he wants to preserve his property and is asking this Court to permit him to do so. This proposed form of proceeding has to be one "relating to the property of the bankrupt".

[21] I conclude that pursuit or defence of an order, even though discretionary, which relates to property, is a legal proceeding relating to property and is, by virtue of s. 30(1)(d) of the BIA, within the exclusive capacity of the trustee. In consequence this application is dismissed.

(Appellant))

FINLAYSON J.A.:

This is a motion by the appellant, Michel Belec, under s.7(5) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O 1990, Chap. C.43, to set aside or vary a decision of Madam Justice Weiler dated May 27, 1994, in which, inter alia, she ordered the appellant, Belec, one of the defendants by counterclaim, to give security within fourteen days in the amount of $150,000 to abide the outcome of the appeal. Belec had filed a notice of appeal from the judgment of Spence J. in which Belec was ordered to pay Vulcan Packaging Inc. $338,000. This motion was returnable on November 2, 1994, but on that date, counsel for the moving party did not appear despite being advised that counsel for the responding party, Vulcan Packaging Inc., would be appearing and was ready to proceed. Prior to the opening of the court, members of the panel were provided with correspondence to which I will refer in some detail.

On October 26, 1994, Deloitte & Touche wrote to the Ontario Court (General Division) advising that Michel Joseph Paul Emile Belec had filed an assignment in bankruptcy on October 5, 1994 and that it had been appointed Trustee. A copy of this letter was sent to the Court of Appeal for Ontario. The author referred to s.69(1) of the "Bankruptcy Act" and stated that "the above action [referring to the appeal pending] should be discontinued forthwith". Counsel for the responding party replied on October 31, 1994, taking issue with the content of the Trustee's letter. On the same date, he wrote to the Registrar of this court enclosing copies of the above correspondence.

On November 1, 1994, Robert A. Klotz wrote to counsel for the moving and responding parties and to the Registrar of this court. I set out the letter in full:

> Deloitte& Touche, Trustee in Bankruptcy of the Estate of Mr. Belec, has requested that we intervene to clarify the flurry of correspondence in this matter.
> Mr. Belec is now bankrupt. The proceeding against Mr. Belec is therefore stayed by the operation of s.69.3 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. The trustee quite properly advised the Court of Appeal of these facts, by letter of October 26, 1994. The appeal is a step in the proceeding; the proceeding itself is stayed; therefore the appeal is stayed. Rule 11 of the Rules of Civil Procedure similarly provides for a stay. The trustee authorized Mr. Zuber to attend to advise the Court of Appeal of the bankruptcy and the consequent stay of proceedings. However, it is immaterial to the trustee whether it is Mr. Zuber, or Mr. Baert, or indeed the trustee's letter itself, which informs the Court of Appeal that Mr. Belec is bankrupt and the proceeding is stayed.
> I would request that Registrar Kromkamp advise Mr. Baert that the appeal is not proceeding tomorrow. In the event that it does proceed, we would consider it a nullity. We call on both counsel to respect the stay provided for in s. 69.3 and Rule 11, and to refrain from inappropriately threatening the trustee with a cost sanction.

On November 1, counsel for the moving party, wrote to all concerned, including the Registrar of this court, stating that relying upon the information that the motion was "stayed by operation of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act", he would "not be attending tomorow's motion at the Court of Appeal".

This motion was adjourned on November 2, because of the absence of counsel for the moving party. The Registrar was instructed to contact counsel for the moving party and Robert A. Klotz and require their attendance on November 8, 1994. Mr. Klotz did appear on November 8. He stated that he was representing the Trustee and persisted in his submission that all proceedings in this court were stayed by virtue of s.69.3(1) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c.B-3, as amended (the "BIA"). The section reads as follows:

> 69.3 (1) Subject to subsection (2) and sections 69.4 and 69.5, on the bankruptcy of any debtor, no creditor has any remedy against the debtor or the debtor's property, or shall commence or continue any action, execution or other proceedings, for the recovery of a claim provable in bankruptcy, until the trustee has been discharged. [Emphasis added.]

Subsection (1) clearly makes reference to a creditor, not a debtor such as the appellant Belec. Depite this language, which would not appear to have any application to an appeal by a bankrupt against a judgment creditor, counsel for the Trustee stated that Vulcan, as a creditor, was continuing its action against Belec, the debtor, by resisting Belec's appeal against Vulcan's judgment. This submission makes no sense to me. In my view, the applicable section of the BIA is 71(2):

> 71. (2) On a receiving order being made or an assignment being filed with an official receiver, a bankrupt ceases to have any capacity to dispose of or otherwise deal with his property, which shall, subject to this Act and to the rights of secured creditors, forthwith pass to and vest in the trustee named in the receiving order or assignment, and in any case of change of trustee the property shall pass from trustee to trustee without any conveyance, assignment or transfer.

The definition of "property" in s.2 of the BIA is very broad and includes "things in action". Belec had a counterclaim against Vulcan. By virtue of s.71(2), that cause of action was vested in his Trustee and the carriage of the appeal by Belec was firmly in the hands of the Trustee. It appears to me that the obligation of the Trustee was therefore to contact counsel for the moving party and instruct him as to whether the Trustee intended to proceed with the appeal and with this motion, which arose out of the appeal. If time was required to investigate the merits of the appeal, the Trustee should have instructed counsel to arrange for an adjournment of the motion, either on consent, or failing consent, on application to the court. Counsel, in turn, should have notified this court of the Trustee's position pursuant to rule 11 of the Rules of Civil Procedure which I will refer to in more detail below.

Far from assuming this responsibility and doing something positive, the Trustee, as counsel frankly conceded, was only concerned with avoiding costs to itself and the bankrupt estate. This was a legitimate concern, but the way in which the Trustee dealt with it was quite inappropriate. Correspondence filed with the court on November 8 is most revealing. In a letter to counsel for the moving party dated October 31, 1994, the Trustee, specifying that it was acting as Trustee and not in its personal capacity, purported to authorize counsel to attend on the motion on behalf of Belec "in order that you do the court the courtesy of completing your file, in light of Mr. Belec's bankruptcy". The author of the letter made it clear that counsel was not acting for the Trustee and that the Trustee would "not be responsible for costs of any nature, either for yourselves or for the opposing party with respect to this motion".

The Trustee appeared to be operating on the faulty premise that any proceedings that were outstanding prior to the bankruptcy were irrelevant, and the Trustee, to use its words, could treat them as a nullity. However, absent any language in the BIA which governs proceedings in this court, our Rules of Civil Procedure still apply and the Trustee has a duty to comply with them. It is not the BIA which stays these proceedings, it is the rules of court. Rule 11 of the Rules of Civil Procedure provides:

> 11.01 Where at any stage of a proceeding the interest or liability of a party is transferred or transmitted to another person by assignment, bankruptcy, death or other means, the proceeding shall be stayed until an order to continue the proceeding by or against the other person has been obtained.
> 11.02 (1) Where a transfer or transmission of the interest or liability of a party takes place while a proceeding is pending, any interested person may, on filing an affidavit verifying the transfer or transmission of interest or liability, obtain on requisition from the registrar an order to continue (Form 11A), without notice to any other party.
> (2) An order to continue shall be served forthwith on every other party.
> 11.03 Where a transfer or transmission of the interest of a plaintiff takes place while an action is pending and no order to continue is obtained within a reasonable time, a defendant may move to have the action dismissed for delay, and rules 24.02 to 24.05 apply, with necessary modifications.

Counsel, having instituted proceedings in the Ontario Court (General Division), was obliged to comply with the rules of court. Rule 11 clearly covers an appeal in a proceeding commenced in the General Division. Rule 11.02 provides that either party may obtain an ex parte order continuing the proceeding in the name of the Trustee. The Trustee should have determined whether it wished to proceed with the motion and advised counsel for the respondent so that the appropriate steps required under rule 11.02 could be taken.

Counsel for the moving party had a clear duty to the court and other counsel involved to seek instructions from the Trustee to obtain an order to proceed with the appeal or to abandon it. He was not entitled to wash his hands of the proceedings. So far as the pending motion in the appeal is concerned, if counsel could not arrrange for its orderly disposition, he should have asked for the court's intervention. In the circumstances of this case, the Trustee had no business writing to the court at all. If it wished to become a party to the proceedings, it could have taken them over from counsel for Belec and then adopted any position it considered appropriate. Both the moving party and the Trustee have ignored the rights of the responding party by attempting to leave the appeal in limbo.

It is unfortunate that this matter got out of hand and was allowed to carry on as long as it has. We now know that the Trustee never did have any intention of taking over the carriage of the appeal. Instead of issuing declarations, the Trustee could have arranged for the abandonment of the appeal with a few telephone calls. If any problems arose relating to costs of an abandoned appeal, they could have been resolved by this court. The conduct of counsel for the moving party and the Trustee towards this court was wrong and has resulted in a considerable waste of court time. Since both counsel have apologized to the court for their discourtesy, there is no reason to say anything further on that score.

With respect to the motion under s.7(5) of the Courts of Justice Act, since there is no intention of proceeding with it, there is no further purpose in maintaining the stay in so far as it interferes with the court's ability to deal with this motion. The motion should be dismissed. In my view, counsel for the responding party is entitled to his costs of the day from the Trustee in bankruptcy personally for the attendance November 1, 1994, which I fix at $1,000. I would make no other order as to costs.
