SALE OF CHEESE.

Sept. 3rd—The Richmond and Drummond cheese sale took place to-day. Only about 900 cheeses were offered. Best bid for uncolored 7 1/2. No sale. Colored sold for 7 1/2. Next sale Sept. 14th, at 1 o'clock.
Mr. Foster, president of the Cowanville Board of Trade, addressed the board at some length, encouraging the continuance of the board. The Cowanville Board had the same difficulties to contend as the Richmond Board has but the farmers there have decided that selling at home is preferable and now thousands of cheese are sold each week. The Ontario men never think of selling otherwise than by the board. It is simply sale by auction, and the bigger the sale the bigger the crowd of buyers.

BROOKBURY.

Burt Fish from Nashua, N. H., is home on a visit.

Mrs. Cortisier Tite, from Bishop Crossing, is visiting friends in Brookbury.

A phibic meeting was held at the Moss school house last Friday night, and next Friday night there will be a meeting at the Gilbert school house.

The most severe thunderstorm of the season passed over this place last Sunday about 4 p. m. A lightning bolt struck Robert Jenkinson's barn, but did not do very much damage.

Among the latest arrivals in Brookbury are Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Cole from Nashua, N. H., who are visiting at Mr. J. H. Tite.

Elder Charles McClure will preach in the Advent Church next Sunday the 11th. Charlie Tite writes home from Kansas City that he attended the International Exposition at Omaha, Neb. He says Canada had a fine exhibit of agriculture and mines.

BARNSTON.

School started here on Monday. Miss Kate E. Cole teaches in the Model department and Miss F. Hayes in the elementary.

All the pupils in Barnston were occupied by strangers last Sunday, viz., Mr. W. L. Shurtleff, L. L. M., in the Methodist, Mr. A. Campbell, B. A., student, in the Baptist, and a Rev. Mr. Bishop in the Episcopal.

The Rev. Mr. Stowell of Berlin Falls, N. H., is announced to preach in the Baptist Church next Sunday, and the Rev. Thos. Bennett, bible agent in the Baptist Church in the forenoon of the same day.

The storm made itself felt last Sunday in this vicinity. It partially unroofed a barn belonging to Mr. Jno. Cleland. The Rev. J. H. Murray preached in Coaticook Methodist Church last Sunday, morning and evening.

NORTH HATLEY.

Mr. John Colt, of Gorham, N. H., is spending his vacation with his brother and sister.

Miss Parsons, of Rock Island, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Ham.

Miss Georgie LeBaron accompanied her brother on the excursion to Montreal and Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. B. Cadworth, of Brattleboro, Vermont; professor Samuel Earl, of Tuft's College and his sister, Rev. Gertrude Earl, pastor of the Universalist Church at Gorham, N. H., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Cole.

Miss Ida Ramsdell is visiting with the family of Mr. Elwin Bean.

Miss Westover, of Sutton, has arrived; she is the teacher of the Grammar School, which commences next Monday.

Colonel Montgomery's lecture on the "Land of the Inces," Monday evening, was well attended, and is spoken of in the highest terms.

The regular service will be held next Sunday morning in the Universalist Church. In the evening the subject for the Y. P. C. U. will be, "Salvation—in what does it consist?" Leader—Miss Helen White.

JOHNVILLE.

Several of our citizens are occupying positions of trust on the fair grounds.

A very pleasing social event this week was a birthday party given on Monday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Alton Lindsay, in honor of the 21st birthday of their youngest daughter, Edith. About fifty guests were present, and Miss Edith received many beautiful presents and warm congratulations. Merry games and pleasant social intercourse filled up the early hours of the evening. After the dainty and appetizing repast, spread by the hostess, had been disposed of, a pleasing programme of songs, instrumental music, recitations, etc., participated in by Rev. W. A. Kender, Allan Ayer, Miss Lindsay, Mr. and Mrs. Nutbrown, Misses

COMPTON.

Compton Model School re-opened on Monday. There were 33 pupils in the Model department and 29 in the elementary.

Quite a number of the pupils come from a distance, 9 from Martinville, 4 from Hillhurst, 2 from Moo's River and 1 from Cookshire. The school rooms are large, healthful and pleasant, the teachers hopeful and happy and the scholars earnest and ambitious.

Mr. B. F. Hitchcock and daughter Katie have returned home.

Miss Lillian Todd and her sister Mrs. Merrill are home on a visit.

Compton Ladies College re-opened on Wednesday.

Mr. Farham preached in the Methodist Church on Sunday morning. His subject, "Love versus Law" was handled with good effect. Mrs. S. J. Craig led a very interesting temperance meeting in the evening, subject—"A Call to Arms."

The temperance workers in this vicinity are well organized and have convoked committees appointed to work all the township.

The young ladies of the Methodist Church have organized a young ladies aid of Epworth League.

A holiday was given the pupils of the Model School on Wednesday to attend the Fair at Sherbrooke. Quite a number availed themselves of the opportunity.

JANINO.

ISLAND BROOK.

Large numbers from this quarter are attending the Sherbrooke Fair.

A very severe electric storm passed over this place Sunday, Sept. 4th. No damage was done to buildings, but Mr. Geo. Kerr had the misfortune of having one of his cows killed by lightning.

Miss Grace Doherty, accompanied by her nephew from Ontario, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Green.

The school in district No. 11 commenced on Monday with Miss Annie Williams as teacher. Our village school opens next Monday, with Mabel L. Lyons as teacher.

The Ladies Aid met with Mrs. Jas. Campbell on Friday afternoon.

Mr. G. W. L. French has got his dam nearly completed.

Mr. Luther French, who has been ill, is able to ride out again.

Mrs. E. E. Bowen continues the same.

Mrs. Joseph Seale remains about the same.

Master Gerald Christie has gone to Valleyfield, where he intends going to school for the winter.

Miss Lizzie Thompson of Montreal, spent Sunday in town.

Mr. and Mrs. William Gansby were visiting Mr. H. E. Sunbury.

Mr. G. N. Gansby and Master Clifford made us a short call last week.

Miss N. W. Christie is attending Cookshire academy.

MOE'S RIVER.

The anniversary meetings which took place late in August were very pleasant and helpful.

The meeting of the friends here with their former pastor, Mr. Potter and family, afforded much pleasure.

Mr. Potter and wife also attended the meeting of the Ladies' Circle at Mrs. Pierce's. Circle meets with Mrs. E. Laing of Hillhurst on Wednesday p. m. Sept. 21st.

Mrs. E. E. Bellum entertained the Ladies' Aid of the Regular Baptists last week.

The funeral of the late Mr. James Bellum of East Clifton, took place at the Baptist Church here on Thursday afternoon, Sept. 1st. The many friends and relatives at the church testified to the esteem in which he was held by those who knew him during his useful life of 68 years. Mr. Bellum was a man with no enemies and will be missed by those who knew him best. Rev. A. H. Moore

ADDARLEY, QUE.

Presbyterian Sabbath School held a very fine picnic at Mr. George Henderson's grove. The weather was fine, and ladies and gentlemen from Inverness, Ireland and all round were present.

Rev. E. Smiley will conduct services in this place on Sunday, the 11th at 3 p. m.

MILAN.

One of our young citizens, Mr. M. McDonald, was married at Three Rivers recently to Miss Mabel Young of that place. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald gave a reception to their Milan friends, which was declared by all to have been a merry affair.

The Royal Templars have appointed committees for the distribution of prohibition literature in the surrounding districts.

According to reports of canvassers our townships of Marston, Hampden, Winslow and Whitton will give a large majority for prohibition.

The Farmers' Club is disposing of most of the thoroughbred stock now in possession and purpose buying more of different breeds.

A large crowd left here for the exhibition the last three mornings.

Miss Mamie Morrison returned to Chicago Wednesday morning.

Miss Emma Witty, matron of Heaton Hospital, Montpelier, Vt., spent a day here this week.

During the storm Sunday, lightning tore a shoe off the foot of Mrs. Neil Murray, injuring the foot slightly.

FULFORD.

A. H. Whiting has moved into the Merrill Davis house, Mr. Grenier the present owner of the saw mill taken possession.

Mrs. H. E. Joyal and Miss Daisy Joyal are visiting friends at Knowlton.

There is considerable sickness in this district.

Miss Rosa Bourgeois has been sick but is better.

Mrs. Lym N. England is very ill. Her many friends hope for her recovery. Much sympathy is felt for Mr. and Mrs. Allen Wright in the loss of their only son, a bright little fellow aged two years and five months, who died August 28th.

We are grieved to announce the death of Miss Duquette, daughter of Jas. Duquette, who died of consumption August 31st. Deceased had many friends and was very highly respected. She was a sister of Mrs. Willie Bourgeois of this place. About two years ago Mr. Duquette 1st at a son just in the prime of life with the same dread disease. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved family.

We are sorry to say Mr. John Williams was taken suddenly ill Sunday night. At present writing is very ill. We hope for her speedy recovery.

A P. E. Island J. P.

INTERVIEWED BY THE PATRIOT'S SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

Overwork Brought on Neuralgia and Shattered Health Generally Passed Many Sleepless Nights.

From the Charlottetown Patriot.

The Patriot's special correspondent "Mac" being in the eastern section of the Island on business, heard many complimentary remarks concerning Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which appear to be the favorite medicine in all parts of Canada. Among those who are very sympathetic in the praise of this medicine is Neil McPhee, J. P., of Glencorralde, and our correspondent determined to call upon him to ascertain from his own lips his view of the matter. Mr. McPhee was found at home, and as he is a very interesting and intelligent gentleman, our correspondent was soon "at home" too. Mr. McPhee said:—

"About four years ago I got run down from overwork on the farm. As there is considerable timber land on my property I thought I could go into making timber in addition to my farm work. The task however proved to be heavy for my strength, and I soon began to break down. I contracted a severe cold, neuralgia followed, and I found myself in shattered health generally. I felt very much distressed and discouraged and spent many sleepless nights. I tried several very highly recommended medicines, but received no permanent benefit from any of them. As Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were so highly recommended through the press, I thought I would give them a fair trial. After using a few boxes I found they were having the desired effect and I began to find my wanted health and strength gradually returning. I kept on using the pills until I had regained my former vigor and had gained considerable in flesh as well. Now I consider myself a healthier man and feel as well as ever I did in my life. I can conscientiously recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to any person suffering as I was. I have the utmost confidence in their curing properties."

Rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, nervous headache, nervous prostration and diseases depending upon humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc., all disappear before the fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They give a healthy glow to pale and sallow complexions. 8-ld by all dealers and post paid at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. Do not be persuaded to take some substitute.

NOVEL ADVERTISING FOR MONSOON TEA.

Some bright suggestions come among the many new ideas offered to the Monsoon Tea Company for advertising their Monsoon Indo-Ceylon tea. The latest is the use of the horseless carriage or automotor, with carrying body designed to represent the original Monsoon Tea package as sold in the stores, but enlarged about a hundred times. And thenceforth it is to serve as the Monsoon Tea delivery carriage. The trouble with these new advertising suggestions is that they fail in the most important object sought. They all lack the earnest attention necessary to convince people of the fact that Monsoon tea is all other packaged teas in purity, flavor and substance which is proven so perfectly in the first sip of Monsoon Tea.

ILL FATED.

This came to pass: The sky grew dark,
A wondrous wind swept over the sea,
And ruddy waves swept a laboring bark
And ran a like fends in revelry.
Then loud above the crashing spars,
The furious yell of storm's cheer,
A cry rang out that sought the stars—
The frenzied cry, "Man overboard!"

The beeding seas bore hard behind, Their summits capped with glistening foam,
And screaming furies in the wind
Forbade the ship in "stays" to come,
And, bobbing 'twixt the deep,
The fishing waters in his coils,
The man essayed to climb the steep,
The vast and yielding hemispheres.

And there he swam alone with death,
Beneath the water sobbing slips,
How fiercely drawn his quickening breath Between his bloodless lips!
And, like one who views the past,
Sweet vistas soon to be forgot,
He turned his head to the tempest's blast
How broken, lingering look.

A sun kissed stretch of yellow sand,
A dimpling wave of sunlit sea,
The airy reared and wined's wand Disturbed the summer harmony.
A ravaged form there, dark and still,
Unmoved, unknown, forgot, forgot, Yet once it braved the tempest's will,
Creature of circumstance—or what?

A PHILANTHROPIST.

"Whom do you think I saw driving with Gerald Morton this morning?" asked Mrs. Morris of her great friend, the doctor's wife, as the two ladies were enjoying 5 o'clock tea and the general gossip of the parish together one afternoon.

"Beatrice Harcourt," Mrs. Maynard answered promptly.

"Ah, you saw her, too, then. I must say I was astonished! It is well known that young Morton bears the character of being the fastest man in the neighborhood."

"I have long ceased to be surprised at anything Beatrice Harcourt does," the other lady answered significantly.

"If Mr. Kenrick does not mind, I do not see why any one else should trouble their heads about her eccentricities."

"Certainly not," Mrs. Morris agreed.
"But really, Rose, she was laughing and talking in the most familiar manner, and Gerald was bending toward her until his face nearly touched hers!"

"And that is our future vicar's wife!
Well, I shall take care my daughters do not see much of her." And Mrs. Maynard drew herself up with a kind of lofty indignation as some fresh visitors were shown into the room.

Poor Beatrice! Her numerous delinquencies were the subject of many afternoon tea gossips, and had been ever since she came to Hillchester, four years ago. She certainly was unlike other girls, for in addition to being a "blue stocking" and having taken her degree at Oxford she had a most unreasonable interest in the working classes—not a mere ladylike interest, which contented itself with calling at their cottages with a few words of good advice and a track.

Ah, no; she had always some plan or "craze," as the good people of Hillche-ster called it, for their benefit on hand-classes for the young girls, ambulance lectures, concerts, teas, what not.

For the conventionalities of society she cared not at all. She never attended the afternoon teas, therefore she heard no gossip. She was not even particular about being in the fashion—in fact, the black serge dress she usually wore looked, from constant exposure to the weather, as if it had seen better days.

She had been known ever to take the broom of the lame old crossing sweeper at the corner of the road and work away in earnest until there was a passage fit for a queen to walk over.

And in spite of all the vicar of Hill-chester had asked Beatrice Harcourt to be his wife. Well, as the leaders of so city in Hillchester remarked with ominous sighs, wonders would never cease.

Nevertheless it must be confessed that Rev. John Kenrick was in no very enviable frame of mind as a week later he wended his way somewhat slowly toward his ladylove's abode.

The gossip which had begun in Mrs.
Maynard's drawing room had spread all over the parish, until a version of it, highly exaggerated and colored, had reached even the vicar's ears.

Beatrice soon discovered something was amiss, and after the first greetings were over she asked anxiously:
"What is the matter, John? You do not look well."

For a full minute Mr. Kenrick did not answer. Instead he looked down at her as she stood with one small hand resting upon his black coat sleeve, the sunlight falling with loving touch upon her fair hair, which was cut short (another point which met with the disfavor of the Hillchester matrons), and curled naturally all over her head like a child's.

"Trix, it is silly perhaps, but something I have heard today has troubled me greatly."

"About me?" Trix asked gayly. "Of what fresh enormity am I accused, John?" and a sudden gravity crept into the sweet voice. "I thought you said that you minded none of these things."

"I do not," the vicar answered quickly. "Indeed," gently stroking the soft, yet strong looking hand, "I love you all the better for them; but—it is better to speak out. Trix, have you been driving with Gerald Morton lately?"

The next moment Mr. Kenrick would have given much never to have asked the question, for Trix turned to him quickly, a whole world of scorn shining in her blue eyes.

"And so, John, this means that you cannot trust me, and you choose rather to believe any idle story people may tell."

"Tell me there is no truth in it, Trix," Mr. Kenrick said quietly, though his eyes had clouded with a deep look of pain beneath her implied rebuke,
"and I promise you I will believe it."

But Beatrice had removed her hand, and all the sunshine had died out of her bonny face as she said wearily: "Mr.
Morton has driven over to Castlefields twice this week. Is there anything else you want to ask?"

No, there was nothing else. Mr. Kenrick felt it was sacrilege with these pure eyes looking into his brother's face, to doubt which now seemed to him so unworthy.

It was a month later, and Beatrice Harcourt was walking swiftly along the dusty road leading to Castlefields, carrying a small basket containing some delicacies for the sick woman who was going to see. The sound of wheels made her turn her head, and the next moment a deep, musical voice said pleasantly:
"Miss Harcourt, are you again bound on the same journey? Now do let me have the pleasure of giving you a lift."

Beatrice hesitated one moment; then she answered frankly: "Thank you so much. You know, Jennie, that poor crippled child I told you about. Well, I have had a note from her this morning to say her mother is very ill, and there is no one to do anything for her."

Gerald Morton looked admiringly down at the fair face beside him. It was the young man of Hillchester who had given Beatrice Harcourt the name of "the fair philanthropist," and it spoke well for the girl that even in the fastest circle her name was never mentioned but with respect.

When Beatrice reached the little cottage, which lay close to a wood five miles from Hillchester, she found everything in a state of confusion. One glance at the poor woman showed her to be in a high state of fever and slightly delirious, while an ominous crimson rash was beginning to make its appearance on her face and neck.

"Why, Beatrice, your mother has the fever!" Beatrice exclaimed rapidly.
"Haven't you sent for a doctor, child?
And is there no neighbor who would come and help to nurse her?"

"I wrote to the doctor, miss, when I sent your note, but he has not been here yet, and as to neighbors, miss, there are none for a mile or more."

All the morning Beatrice waited, doing all she could for the poor sick woman, and the afternoon was well on its way when the welcome rap, which surely told of the doctor's appearance, sounded at the door.

Beatrice literally flew to open it, and found herself face to face not with the doctor, but with the vicar.

For the last month, ever since the gossip about Gerald Morton—in fact, matters had been rather strained between the vicar and his fiancée, but all was forgotten now as in the impulse of the moment Beatrice exclaimed:
"You must not come in here, John, or touch me. Mrs. Carr has the fever!"

For a moment a look of keen anxiety darkened his grave blue eyes, and the next Mr. Kenrick had folded the slight form close in his arms as he murmured awakened, "Trix, my own brave darling, would you have me a greater coward than yourself?"

With his arms still about her she told him how Gerald Morton had driven her to the cottage in the morning, adding, "It was well he did, for I should have been an hour later, and Jennie and her mother were quite alone."

"Trix, will you forgive me for letting that horrid scandal trouble me even for one moment. Dear heart, I feel I shall never forgive myself."

"Yes, I will forgive you," Trix answered gayly, "but my shadow goes from her honest eyes, 'only you must never do it again, as the children say.'"

A fortnight later all Hillchester was thrown into a state of dire consternation by the news that Beatrice Harcourt had scarlet fever and was, moreover, so dangerously ill that the local doctor almost despaired of her life.

It happened during one of the worst days of Beatrice's illness that Mrs.
Morris and her friend, Mrs. Maynard, were walking by the drive gate leading to Beatrice's home. To their astonishment they saw a large crowd of people waiting just outside the door—women with babies in their arms, girls who had stolen a few minutes out of their dinner hour, even one or two tall youths and laboring men.

In a moment the door opened, and a maidervant spoke a few words to the anxious watchers. Evidently it was good news, for with one accord they slowly and silently turned to go away, and as they passed the two ladies one woman exclaimed in a broken voice, which showed tears were not far off:
"Ah, well, if we lose her, our best friend is gone, and that's certain. There isn't many in this world like our Miss Beatrice. Bless her sweet face!"

Mrs. Maynard and Mrs. Morris walked on in silence. The lesson was learned, though it was bitter, for each felt,
"What would these people have cared had I been in Beatrice Harcourt's place?"

But Beatrice, dangerous as her illness was, did not die, and six months later Hillchester was the scene of a greater rejoicing than had ever known for many a long year, while the wonderful arcs with their various devices, the glad faces of the people, the children with their flower laden baskets and the church bells ringing out their sweet messages far and wide all combined to show the love and respect which their vicar and his bride had so deservedly gained in the hearts of their people.—

Mortality in War.
The question of the possible mortality among those engaged in military operations is one of great interest just now to insurance companies in America, and efforts have been made to learn the proportion of the losses to the total number of troops in the American civil war. It appears that the number of enlistments (reduced to a three years' basis) is estimated at 2,320,272, and that the mortality is summed up as follows: Killed and died of wounds, 110,070, or 47 per 1,000; died of disease, 224,586, or 97 per 1,000; died from accident and all other causes, 24,783, or 11 per 1,000; total, 359,439, or 15.5 per 1,000 for the three years' term. Thus the average death rate per year among those enlisted works out roughly at 52 per 1,000.—Hospital.

Miss Ada Bailey has returned to East Charleston, where she intends resuming this summer.

Mr. and Mrs. O. Wheeler, Master and Miss Ida are visiting friends in East Hatley.

Mrs. B. Knapp and children who have been visiting friends here have returned to Coaticook. Miss J. Bailey accompanied them.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Bailey are away on a visit to relatives in Barton Landing.

Miss J. Hynes is visiting her sister, Mrs. H. Leavitt.

Miss S. Mackie and J. Shorten were calling on friends last week.

The ice cream social which was held at Mr. C. R. Bailey's last week was a success in every way. Owing to the damp weather that evening, supper was served in the house. A large number were present and partook of the good things served by the ladies of this place, to which every one did justice. After supper a short but interesting programme was given by the young people of this place. Recitations were given by Misses M. Wheeler, J. Bailey, C. P. Pease, also one by Miss E. Bridgette, if I recollect correctly, which was a very pleasing manner. The violin and organ duet, by Miss E. Bridgette and Mr. Gilbert added much to the evening's enjoyment; the song by Miss Coates was appreciated by all. The programme closed with prayer by Rev. A. C. Baker of Sawyerville and every one went home feeling well paid for coming.

is the sovereign cure and needs no more reliable testimony of its efficacy to cope with and cure this disease than that such eminent divines as Rev. W. H. Withrow, Methodist; Rev. Mungo Fraser, Presbyprominent leaders in the Church courts, who have over their own signatures testified of its virtues. What better evidence for you that it will cure you.

GOLD AROUND INDIAN STREAM.

It would not be surprising if another season saw thousands of gold seekers coming up the valley. That there is gold here in paying quantities is now a well known fact. Last summer, "White" Terrill and Norman Perry went prospecting upon the head waters of Indian Stream. They found traces of gold, and were satisfied that more was there for those who would seek it. This spring they took in sixteen hundred pounds of supplies and resolved to devote the season to the work. They were three weeks taking the food &c. in. No one has been able to find their camping ground. Mr.
Perry came out this week to purchase a miner's pan and to send specimens to the Philadelphia mint. We saw one nugget that weighed nearly one-fourth of an ounce. Mr. Perry was very careful in his conversation as regards the location.
He went to Colebrook to consult T. F.
Johnson, Esq., as regards a miner's rights. A number thought they would return to the woods with him, but he got away without their knowledge. While the miner's have cleaned up enough for a good summer's work, they will remain in camp all the ground freezes up.—

A Popular Home Work
SUCCESSFUL ONLY WHEN DIAMOND DYES ARE USED.

In thousands of happy and thrifty homes in the Dominion and in the colony of Newfoundland the work of rug and mat making is becoming very popular.
Home made rugs and mats are more highly valued for their softness and beauty.
This is not surprising when we remember the fact that the home articles are the best wearing and prettiest.

The Diamond Dyes have given a great impetus to the work of making home made rugs and mats. In former times the troublesome part of the work was the dyeing. With the old fashioned and poorly prepared dyes the dyeing operation was long and unsatisfactory. The introduction of the Diamond Dyes with their special colors for wool, and for cotton and mixed goods, has been a boon to womanhood. Old and faded rugs and yarns for mats and rugs can now be dyed any beautiful and brilliant shade with the Diamond Dyes—shades that are perfectly fast to sun and soap.

If you wish to be at all times successful in dyeing for rug and mat making, we here offer a warning note against the use of adulterated package and soap grease dyes that only produce muddy and streaky colors that cannot possibly stand any ordinary washing. Ask for the Diamond Dyes, use them as per directions, and your success is assured.

"Gerhard Heintzman" Pianos, and it is mere repetition to say again that the firm manufacturing them have evolved from the elusive elements of acoustics certain well-defined and enduring beauties rare comiums sometimes run into extravagant expressions when attempting to delineate the musical worth of instruments of such paramount excellence as is found in those made by "Gerhard Heintzto restrain a tendency aroused by careful and thorough examination.

It was a "Gerhard Heintzman" grand that was used as the solo instrument by Mr. Welsman at his recital last night, and a truly grand piano it was, possessing a noble, rich, and satisfying quality of tone, and complying with the most exact requirements of so accomplished and versatile an artist.
It was a piano that proved its superior merits to such an extent as to completely obviate the neces-

GOOD HEALTH
A vivacious woman's fun can frequently speak in more eloquent language than any known to the tongue of man. It can invite or repel, sigh or smile,
sneer or mock,
haughty, tear
a passion to the heart or humbly seek forgiveness.
It can also tell the story of health. A woman who suffers from weakness and disease in a womanly way sits in sorrow and dejection while her healthy sisters enjoy themselves. She may be naturally beautiful, naturally attractive, naturally interesting and animated and witty, but the demon of ill-health is gnawing at the very vitals of her womanly nature and she soon becomes a withered plant for women who suffer in this way. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in wifehood and motherhood. It tones and builds up the shattered nerves. It restores the glow of health to the pallid cheek. It gives springiness and trip to the carriage. It makes the eyes sparkle with returning vivacity. It imparts animation to the mien and gestures. The fan that long lay listless and idle in the lap of an invalid again speaks the eloquent language of a healthy, happy woman.
Thousands of women have testified to the marvelous merits of this wonderful medicine.

For several years I suffered with prostrations of the uterus," writes Miss A. Lee Schuster, of Box 12, Rodney, Jefferson Co., Miss. "Our family physician treated me for kidney trouble, and everything else but the right thing. I grew worse and worse. My body was emaciated, hands and feet numb, and cold, stomach weak with great palpitation of the heart. I would suffer with nausea all night. I began to use your Favorite Prescription and I began to improve right away. I have taken three bottles and now I am as well as usual and am very happy and thankful to you."

RATAPLAN.
"Oh Rataplan! It is a merry note, And mother, I'm for 'listing in the morn."
"Go leave your mother's latter age forlorn!"
"Oh, mother, I am sick of sheep and goats,
And with the reaping of the corn."
"Long to see the British colors float."
"For very, glory, glory, was I born."
She saw him march. It was a gallant sight.
She blew herself and praised him for a man,
And straight he hurried to the bitter fight
And found a bullet in the dear Sudan.
They dug a shallow grave. "Twas all they
And that's the end of glory. Rataplan!

A GIRL'S APRON.

She is a pretty, dark eyed girl, and this is the story she tells of the romantic meeting and courtship of her father and mother. It is a story of the civil war, and the famous Confederate spy who dressed as a woman and was known as Sue Mundy figures in her narrative:

You know, all of mother's folks were Confederates, while father's people belonged to the other side.
On account of this little apron the spy, Sue Mundy, was suspected by the Union soldiers of being a man and a spy. I will tell you about it.

The apron, you will notice, is made of alternating stripes of red and white and forms, as you see, the flag of secession. This stain here is a witness to the first meeting of my father and mother.

My mother's father was an officer in the Confederate army. He was killed in the beginning of the war, leaving grandmother with three children, all girls. They lived on a farm not far from Fairfield, Ky., and were fairly well off. At the time mother made this apron she was about 15 or 16. Her oldest sister had just come home from boarding school, bringing a friend with her. The friend in question was none other than Sue Mundy, who had come for the express purpose of spying on the Yankees, who were encamped a short distance from town. If I remember rightly, the camp was the headquarters of General Bull.

Mother says Sue Mundy was one of the most effeminate men she ever saw.
He was unusually slender for a man, and had small, delicately formed hands and feet, an oval face, large black eyes and long, rippling, dark brown hair.
He was also the possessor of a good soprano voice.

He came prepared with an extensive wardrobe and carried off his part of a fashionable and fascinating young lady to perfection. Of course my mother and Miss Sue in time made the acquaintance of some of the officers stationed near our town, one of whom became very much infatuated with Miss Sue, and baskets of fruit and flowers came almost daily bearing his card.

Of course, owing to the troubled times, there was a dearth of parties and balls. For amusement my aunt and Miss Sue were in the habit of attending the dancing class to which my mother and her younger sister went one evening of each week.

One evening before going to dancing school mother made this apron and wore it over her white dress for the benefit of the Yankees who were certain to be present. About the middle of the evening mother and Miss Sue went into the smaller room for a drink of water. A man bearing the bars of a sergeant on his arm was just raising the dipper to his lips when mother said mischievously:

"A health to Jeff Davis."

"As quick as a flash came the retort
"Yes, here's a health to you apron," while the contents of the dipper were dashed over that offending article of attire.

At this insult to the southern colors
Miss Sue forgot that brawn did not enter into the make up of the young ladies of those days and gave the young officer a right handed blow which sent him like a log to the floor, from which he did not rise at once. When he did, it was with a graceful bow to his late assailant and an apology for his rudeness to mother.

After this the Yankees put their heads together, and remembering the information which had gone to the "Johnnies" concerning their forces, Miss Sue's aptitude at sketching and on top of it all the knock out of the young officer, they were convinced that Miss Sue was not what she pretended to be. A watch was kept on her movements.

By the time of the next dancing lesson a plan was made for the escape of Miss Sue from quarters that were beginning to be rather warm for her.
Mother and my aunt went as usual to the dancing class, and to all inquiries concerning Miss Sue they replied that she was at home with a headache. In reality that interesting young person was booted and spurred and waiting for the appointed time to dash by the pickets and start on his 40 mile ride to Louisville.

Near the end of the lesson there was the sound of hurried footsteps on the stairs and in a moment Sue Mundy came hurriedly into the room. For some reason there were no Yankees present.
In a few words she told of how he had tried to pass the pickets, had been fired on and had jumped from his horse and hid in the bushes by the roadside and saw the Yankees go by in hot pursuit of his frightened horse, which was making straight for the farm from which it had been bought a few days before. Sue Mundy then waited till their hoof beats grew faint, and then under cover of the darkness he made his way to the dancing school. Finding the coast clear, he had come up, knowing that all the dancing people were southern sympathizers and would do all they could for him.

They quickly formed their plans, the only thing they could have done under the circumstances. They had him lie down under one of the benches at the far end of the room, while two or three of the girls sat directly over him and spread their voluminous skirts so as to completely hide his recumbent figure.

In a short time several Yankees came in and stood talking near the door.
There was nothing in the appearance of the room to indicate that there was a spy concealed. Two sets of young folks were going through the stately measure of the lancers, with the little Frenchwoman, who was the teacher,
and straight he hurried to the bitter fight
And found a bullet in the dear Sudan.
They dug a shallow grave. "Twas all they
And that's the end of glory. Rataplan!
—Living Age.

They had not been long concealed when grandmother got word that a squad of cavalry who had been scouring the country for stragglers were headed for her place. It was too late for the Johnnies to escape. Clearly something had to be done at once. The Johnnies would be found, and grandmother and the girls would be arrested probably.
Grandmother went to the outhouse and laid the matter before the two men.
They were unarmed, while grandmother's arsenal consisted of a rusty old musket.

Mother proposed a plan, which was carried out successfully. She and her younger sister had often mused with their cousins and other neighbors' boys.
They had always been the life and drum corps.

There was a dense plum thicket not far from the house. A queer procession headed for it in a little while. There was grandmother, my two aunts, mother, the two Johnnies and the negro cook. Mother carried her life in one hand and this apron in another, while my aunt had a drum. Mother tied her apron to a stick and hoisted it above the plum trees.

In a few minutes the Yankees came in sight. Mother says she saw the uniformed men, mounted on splendid horses, her heart bounded and that her sister trembled so that it was a second or so before they could command courage enough to carry out their part of the programme.

The Yankees came to a halt at sight of the red, white and red flag. Then came the shrill notes of the fife and steady beat of the drum. Then "Dixie" came floating over across the meadow to them. They came closer. What meant the ominous silence so far as shot went? The Johnnies had not fired a single shot. The plum thicket was large enough to conceal a goodly body of men. They approached the thicket and fired. The only damage done was these bullet holes in the apron. Panic seized the advancing men, and wheeling their horses they went helter skelter across the meadow and in the direction of their camp.

When they returned, a short time later, they had been heavily re-enforced.
They found the farmhouse in the possession of two women and three girls and a trace of Johnnies anywhere.
Not long after this the war was over.
A young Union officer called at grandmother's one day and asked for mother.
He was the sergeant who had christened her apron. The call was followed by many others, and the following year mother and father were married.—St.

An Ancient Agricultural Implement.
An agricultural relic of considerable interest was unearthed recently on the farm of Amos Buckman, in Springfield township, Delaware county. Buckman's farm is known as the "Levis Homestead," and it is said to be the oldest place in the county, the title dating back to William Penn's time. The farmhouse, a solid stone structure about 250 years old, has begun to show signs of age, and last week steps were taken to put it in repair. Preparations were made to reshingle the roof, but before this could be done it was necessary to tear down and rebuild the large chimney. The men engaged at this work had razed the chimney to the level of the roof, when they came to a large flat piece of iron which had been put in to brace the chimney against the stone wall. This was torn out and thrown to the ground, when one of the workmen noticed its odd shape. After the mortar had been cleaned off it was examined and proved to be an old fashioned "sod cutter." A name was sunk on it, of which only the three last letters (sis) could be made out, but that, the date, 1758, is fairly legible. At that time the plows were very primitive, yet they had in a crude form the cutters still frequently used on modern plows to open the way for the share.
Owing to the mortar the cutter is well preserved, but the worn edges attest that it had done a fair amount of work in its palmy days before it was built into the chimney.—Philadelphia Record.

A Porcelain House.
Japan, it seems, intends sending to the Paris exhibition a huge house, hexagonal in shape and composed entirely of porcelain. It measures several yards in circumference, and its weight will not be less than 70 tons. From the artistic point of view, according to the several models already finished, it will be exquisite. It is estimated that the cost of making it will be about £2,000.

ADDRESS ON PROHIBITION.
Rev. Mr. Shearer, of St. Andrew's Church, will deliver an address on Prohibition Grounds this evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Ven. Archdeacon Roe and Mrs. Roe have returned to Windsor Mills from their trip to the Lower St. Lawrence, apparently much improved by their outing.

JINGLES AND JESTS.
A Kiss.
Surrounded by admirers
At Long Beach, Hobson stood As any hero under Such circumstances would
And with his heart in tumult,
His surging soul in swirl,
He calmly faced the musketeer
Of half a hundred girls.
There were eyes of skyey blue,
There were eyes of burning brown,
There were eyes of gray and blue,
There were eyes to bring one down
From heaven to Long Island
To wear the hero's crown.
And Hobson stood among them,
While batteries of smiles
Were turned full on the hero,
In varying forms and styles,
Which filled the air with heart throbs
And strewn them round in piles.
At last one maiden deigned
A dream of pink and white bliss,
From saintly old St. Louis (With more of them like this),
Reached up and handed Hobson
A large and luscious kiss.
Then out spake Hero Hobson,
"By the gods," said he,
"If any one had mentioned
That this would come to me

The last revelations in the Dreyfus affair constitute a curious comment on Zola's last book "Paris," which gives no rose water picture of the political meannesses of the great capital. The world will now anxiously await the manifestation of a different spirit than that which followed Zola in the recent trial.

The splendid generalship of Sir Herbert Kitchener, and the not less splendid dash and courage of the British soldiery, at Omdurman, have won tributes of respect even from those who wish to see Great Britain's power lessened. This signal proof of the nation's ability to hold her own against greater numbers can hardly fail to profoundly effect the situation in Europe and Asia; and that in the direction of augmenting her influence in obtaining freer commerce for the whole world and better harmony for the best energies of civilization.

The Bridge Disaster.

Cornwall, Ont., Sept. 8.—The following special report was sent the Star:—"Fifteen men dead and a score or so severely, perhaps fatally, injured, is the awful result of the collapse of the span of the new bridge of the New York & Ottawa Railway Company, over the channel of the St. Lawrence, reported in the last edition of Tuesday's Star."

The circumstances of the accident are probably unparalleled in the history of modern bridge building. The story of the building of the twin bridges is in itself a thrilling tale. A short distance above Cornwall the whole body of the mighty St. Lawrence is penned in a narrow channel about three-quarters of a mile wide, but two miles above the town a branch runs suddenly south and then east, forming Cornwall Island. A large body of land belonging to the tribe of Iroquois Indians. The fall on the bed of the river is considerable, and in both channels, which are about the same width, three-quarters of a mile, the river fairly falls in its downward course. The task of bridging such a treacherous stream, was naturally a stupendous one, and the building of the stone piers in both channels of the river by the Smith Mills Company, of New York city, was attended by untold labor and difficulties, but finally, after a year's work, their contract was completed not long ago, and the right piers handed to the Phoenix Bridge Company, of Phoenixville, Pa., who forthwith proceeded to put up the massive steel work. The south channel, which was the scene of the accident, was spanned by a noble structure of three arches, supported on four massive stone piers. Each of the spans was 370 feet in length, while the bridge was 57 feet above high water.

THE BRIDGE COLLAPSED.

As told in the brief despatch in the last edition of Tuesday's Star, pier number two counting from the American side in the South Channel bridge of the New York and Ottawa railway, and two out of the three steel spans went down into the river.

Now all that can be seen of the once magnificent structure is the one span, standing grimly against the Cornwall island shore, and on the other a mass of tangled debris of the span nearest the American shore.

FIFTEEN WENT DOWN TO DEATH.

The centre span and the pier are hidden by the rushing waters of the St. Lawrence, now made twice as swift and angry by the impediment, which accident has thrown in their course. The water around the wreck is somewhat of a rapid now, and it requires a strong oarsman to breast the current.

It was just a couple of minutes before 12 noon, when a thundering crash was heard, and the pier and the two spans resting on it went down into the river, carrying with them some fifty human souls.

The bridge had been completed on Saturday, and the force at work largely reduced. The workmen remaining were employed in taking off the traveller and appliances. Several painters were also working on the bridge, and a couple of men were engaged on some small piece of work in the centre span. These two were thrown into the river, but both escaped with slight bruises.

FOURTEEN KILLED AT ONCE.

Most of the men were working on the floor of the bridge in the first span, and it was here that the greatest number of casualties occurred. The traveller and most of the bridge fell right on top of them, and fourteen are known to have been killed at once.

Canada's Great Eastern Exhibition.

Great Success Has Attended the Efforts of the Directors—Attendance so Far Ahead by Several Thousands.

The success which has attended the Sherbrooke Fair, which practically ends to-day, is a great compliment to the management, if compliment were needed, for the efforts of the Association has always been directed towards the furtherance of healthy competition among our great agricultural community. That their efforts have been appreciated in this direction can be answered best by stating that year after year since the Association was formed the increase has been very marked.

By this rivalry a better grade of stock is raised, and in the course of time rebounds back on the farmer by increased prices. To gather a great crowd together there must be a variety of attractions so that this one, and that one may follow the particular line in which they are interested. It can be said without fear of contradiction that outside of Toronto there is no exhibition in Canada that can compete with the one held in our midst. A prominent gentleman, who is fully qualified to give an opinion, and who was not talking for publication, stated that he never saw a better arranged parade, not even in Toronto, and that the show of itself would compare very favorably with the one in the Queen City, when the population was taken into consideration.

The numerous duty of manager is filled by Mr. H. R. Fraser, who is a past master in laying out arrangements and details which seem to dovetail into each other with a precision that only long practice and forethought can bring. He is kept from early morning until late at night superintending, giving decisions on questions brought before him, and this he does in a manner that gives general satisfaction to all. He is assisted by an excellent office staff.

The President, Hon. John McIntosh, is no means an idle man. Besides looking after the general interests of the Association he has always time to pass in and out among the exhibitors and keeps himself posted on questions that affect them, so that things may run smoothly. The other directors are not men of leisure either and the departments in which they are allotted is well attended by these.

It is expected that when the grand total is made it will be found that the attendance will show a considerable increase over last year, notwithstanding the fact that Wednesday turned out to be very wet in the afternoon which deterred many from attending, and kept them down town rather than experience the amusements on the Exhibition Grounds. As it was there was over 15,000 people paid for admission. Yesterday opened with a clear sky, and a cool breeze, and the appearance of the weather had again agreed to give a spell of good weather. The special trains arriving in the city from across the line were well patronized, as also were the special runs by the other rail ways. It was American visitors day, and it is reckoned that there would be between 18,000 and 20,000 people on the grounds. The grand stand by two o'clock was packed and standing room was at a premium.

The Judges finished their labours in the afternoon, and the officials are now busy posting up the successful winners. In addition to the attractions before the grand stand, the main building and machinery hall had an ever passing crowd who made minute examinations of the various exhibits and carried away large quantities of advertising matter.

The grand parade of stock was a splendid one, and as each first prize winner passed the grand stand a full share of appreciation was shown more especially was this the case when some animal had several of the first and special tickets around his neck. The cattle being more slower in their movements do not evoke the same enthusiasm as does the high spirited horse as he prances and shows his points as if he knew he had to do his best. Mr. S. L. Clough's wagon, drawn by three horses contained the band, and it would be difficult to find three animals that are so well matched and present such fine points.

The special performance before the grand stand was as usual the very best talent that could be procured and each item was carried out without a hitch. There was very little waiting for as each item was closed another was ready to go on.

The Vaidis twin sisters on the revolving trappe gave a very thrilling entertainment. Such a performance is entirely new, and certainly was not the least item on the programme. Major Henderson, the original drummer boy of the Rappahannock, who is accompanied by his son gave an imitation of the naval battle between Admiral Dewey and the Spanish fleet at Manila, and his manipulation of the stick showed that he is a sleader in this particular line.

The Davenport Bros. gave a fine exposition of acrobatic performance. There were three in the troupe and they executed a feat of about 10 or 11 years of age took a full share of the many intricate evolutions they performed. Later the two older brothers give an exhibition of comic acrobatic work that elicited a great deal of amusement.

Miss Bessie Gilbert, cornet virtuoso, gave a capital rendition on the cornet, and had to resort to an encore.

The Lundgrens in their sensational min-air revolving ladder act and Miss Lizzie Vaidis who made a leap from a tower about 100 feet high, came in for a good deal of admiration.

The gentleman who gave a representation of the different armies of the world when he comes to that of the U. S. and Cuba the public at once show where their sympathies lie, but what a thrill is felt when the last to be shown is that of a Colonial trooper of one of the British Colonies. The pent up feelings are let loose, and amid the applause can hardly be heard the strains of God Save the Queen.

Guides pace horse "Tommy" is a great feature on the programme. He paces his mile without a break and on the last lap he shoots a dart of fire around the track and then returns to his driver.

The 3rd Regiment band of Concord, N. H., were in attendance during Wednesday and Thursday and gave great satisfaction.

The balloon ascensions were watched by the large concourse of people with something akin to awe, and as the parachute leaves the balloon a thrill of excitement passes over the people until the aeronaut has again reached terra firma.

SOMEWHERE.

Somewhere the wind is blowing. I thought as I toiled along In the burning heat of the midday. And the fancy made me strong— Yes, somewhere the wind is blowing. Though here where I gasp and sigh Not a breath of air is stirring. Not a cloud in the burning sky.

Somewhere the things we long for Exist on earth's wide bound. Somewhere the sun is shining When winter nips the ground. Somewhere the flowers are springing. Somewhere the corn is brown And ready to the harvest. And somewhere the hungry town To feed the hungry town.

Somewhere the twilight gathers. And weary men lay by. The burden of the day. And, wrapped in slumber, lie; Somewhere the day is breaking. And gloom and darkness flee. Though storms our bark are tossing. There's somewhere a placid sea.

And thus, I thought, 'tis always. In this mysterious life. There's always gladness somewhere In spite of its pain and strife. And somewhere the sin and sorrow Of earth are known no more. Somewhere our weary spirits Shall find a peaceful shore.

Somewhere the things that try us Shall all have passed away. And doubt and fear no longer Impede the perfect day. Oh, brother, though the darkness Around thy soul be cast, The earth is rolling onward. And light shall come at last!

—Alfred Capel Shaw in Elfrida Fata.

THE APPLE TREE.

One evening I noticed by Monasia's photograph, which always stood covered with a white crape veil on a small table, three red cheeked apples. These plectra fruits seemed out of place in the aristocratic Parisian drawing room, crowded with rare knickknacks and works of art.

Monasia's mother, observing my questioning glance, said, pointing to a picture at the end of the room, "These fruits were picked on the apple tree which you see in this picture, the last one painted by Monasia." Then the sorrowful woman told me the story of the apple tree so intimately connected with that of the young artist, Marie Bashkirtseff, who died when only 24 years old.

In the spring of 188— Monasia was planning to paint a peasant woman in the open country for the salon of the following year. She spent days looking in the outskirts of Paris for a suitable landscape in which to place her model.

One morning she found near Sevres a field enclosed by fence palings, beyond which a walk overgrown with grass led itself under willows, through whose young shoots the sun shone brightly. Half way up the walk, on a background of grayish green bushes, with an outline almost as soft as that of smoke, stood a robust apple tree, broadly spreading its flowery branches. The whole scene was filled with tender, fresh, stirring harmony, with spring itself. Monasia was moved. She felt that this was the looked for spot. Opening the gate, she walked toward the house, which was separated from the orchard by a garden filled with beehives. The proprietor happened to be one of those half bourgeois, half peasant horticulturists who provide the Parisian markets with flowers and fruits. The request made by the enthusiastic looking young girl with the expressive blue eyes flattered him. He loved his trees, and the admiration of a painter for them pleased him extremely. Monasia was readily given permission to work in the enclosure, and she began the very next day.

Early in the morning she arrived on the tramway, with her model, who carried her lunch in a basket. Monasia understood her. She was a beginner, for some of her pictures had already been much talked of at the salon. Though belonging to a rich family, which occupied a high position among the aristocracy of her country, she worked not as an amateur, but as an artist anxious to win fame. Her work showed the melancholy fire and poetry which belong to those born in Little Russia. The sketch of her painting absorbed her entirely. She was trying to put on the canvas some of the effervescent spring about her. She painted rapidly, as if afraid not to be able to finish the task she had undertaken. Every morning she came back, in spite of the April showers and the rawness of the air, which often made her cough. The owners of the place admired her pluck, and as they saw her painting, bareheaded, standing in the dew, with a blouse over her gray dress, they believed her to belong to their station in life and thought she was working for her daily bread.

The housewife brought her warm milk, the children played near her while she rested, and the horticulturist, learning that some young tree interested him, he had not hesitated to cut them down. It was touching to see this man, usually so careful of his possessions, willingly sacrifice them to gratify the wish of the young artist. By degrees a touching intimacy began between them. At noon Monasia was often invited to share the cabbage soup and bacon.

The picture was growing. The peasant seated at the foot of the apple tree looked most lifelike. Only a few finishing touches were needed. Gathred around the easel, the family agreed that the apple tree was beautiful, for it seemed as if by stretching out one's hand the pretty, fresh, pink and white blossoms could be plucked. One evening Monasia carried her picture away to show it to some friends, promising to return with it in order to finish certain details in the landscape. They waited for her in vain. One by one the blossoms on the tree were carried away by the breeze. At the end of a fortnight a package arrived containing a dress pattern of handsome black silk. A letter accompanied the present. Monasia told her friends that a severe cold kept her indoors and she begged the housewife to accept the dress in remembrance of the kind hospitality she had received.

This was indeed a disappointment for these good people. What they had done for the artist had been done for friendship's sake. The gift of the silk, which must at least have cost 80 francs a yard, pained them. The present seemed entirely out of proportion with the service rendered. Their pride was hurt. They decided to return the silk. In a catalogue of the salon they found Monasia's address, and one day on their way to the Halle they stopped in the Avenue de Villiers, where the artist lived. When they arrived in front of the house, they thought they must have made a mistake in the number. Was it possible that their young friend lived in this beautiful mansion? Then she was not a poor artist.

They rang; a liveried servant opened the door. After taking their names he ushered them into a sumptuous drawing room. Monasia was lying on a couch wrapped in a loose white plush gown. She was much thinner, very pale. Her large eyes shone with a phosphorescent brilliancy. Recognizing her friends, she uttered a joyful exclamation, and raising herself with difficulty she gave them her emaciated hand.

"I am so happy to see you," she said, coughing almost at every word. "You must not feel hurt because I did not come to thank you. I am not allowed to go out. It seems that I worked too hard on my last picture. I took cold standing in the grass. I am now here for some time."

The horticulturist and his wife looked at her in bewilderment. An expression of deep pity came over their faces. The gardener no longer knew what to do with the package containing the silk. He felt that he could not return it. "We don't mind it as you were sick," answered the wife, "but still we were sorry that you sent us this silk. What we did for you we did willingly. We did not want a present for letting you work on our place. My husband and I decided to bring the dress back."

"Oh, you were the one who wished to bring it back," interrupted the husband. "You are both foolish about the matter," exclaimed Monasia, laughing as she used to. "You would pain me deeply by refusing my present. I wish you to wear this dress," she added, speaking to the gardener's wife, "in remembrance of me when I am no longer in this world."

Then they both assured her that as she was so young she would soon regain her strength and overcome the disease.

"No," answered Monasia, "I cannot get well. The candle is burning at both ends. I shall not live long. You know that children who are too clever never live long." She tried to laugh, but a mist covered her blue eyes.

"And the apple tree?" she asked, abruptly changing the subject. "Is it always beautiful?"

"Oh, no, indeed," they answered, "the blossoms are all gone; but the fruit is beginning to show. Apples will be plentiful. You must come out and eat some in September. The good air of Sevres will restore you to health, mademoiselle."

She shook her head and let it fall back on the cushions, tired and exhausted by having spoken so much.

When the horticulturist and his wife departed, Monasia closed her eyes and thought of the apple tree. It was in its roots to its branches. It spread its foliage in the sun, laughing at rain and wind, at cold nights and hot noons, while she, imprisoned in a room, attended by the wisest Paris doctors, was slowly dying. Oh, misery of human life! She was young, beautiful, rich, beloved, unusually gifted. She had so much to tell the world, her head was so full of pictures.

Toward the end of October the gardener and his wife received a letter with a wide black border telling them of Monasia's death, and these good people wept for the lovely girl who during one month had been the life and brightness of their modest country dwelling.

In the mad whirl of large cities a human life ended makes little more impression than the falling of a dead leaf. After a few days of painful astonishment the gay Parisian world which had so admired and fettered Monasia returned to its business and pleasures. Alone three women in mourning continued to weep in the home of the Avenue de Villiers.

One April afternoon they were quietly sitting in the drawing room, filled with souvenirs of the departed, when the gardener and his wife came into the room. They were dressed for the occasion. The husband wore his Sunday coat, the wife had her shawl on, under which she concealed a large package.

"Excuse us, ladies," said the gardener, "I am afraid we are disturbing you, but we could not let this time of the year go by without letting you know that we often speak of the dear young lady. My wife and I thought we would like to bring you something in remembrance of her." The woman raising her shawl brought forth an armful of flowery branches. "These are," he continued, "the blossoms of the apple tree she painted. They will tell you better than we can how we felt toward Miss Monasia, and if you will allow it we will bring you every year some blossoms from the tree as long as it bears."

What kindness there is in simple hearts! It is truly wonderful that all the eloquence of the poets and all the gold of the earth. The gardener and his wife have kept their word, and thus it is that Monasia's picture is almost always adorned with pink blossoms or ripe apples—faithful and simple offerings from the old apple tree to the dead young girl.—From the French of Andre Theuriet For Short Stories.

DOGS AND A MAD DOG.

SANE ANIMALS QUICK TO RECOGNIZE HYDROPHOBIA.

A Curious and Highly Interesting Illustration of the Intelligent Sense That is Possessed by Canines and Not by Human Beings.

That dogs possess certain attributes of sense which are lacking in the human being is generally recognized by scientific men. A curious case which occurred in Brooklyn last summer exemplifies this trait in a very clear manner, showing how man's intelligence is at fault. It was a very hot evening, the thermometer having fluctuated in the nineties all day. A pug dog, which had been lying on a doorstep arose and began to walk to and fro on the sidewalk, whining in a peculiar tone.

Presently it lay down, stretched out and rolled over; then got to its feet and resumed its sentrylike march more slowly than before. Its owner came out of his store and spoke to it, but it paid no attention to him. From time to time the pug would stretch out, growling, only to get up again and pace to and fro. Several persons in the crowd which gathered said that it was going to have a fit, and this impression gained ground when it lifted up its voice in a plaintive howl with a strange catch at the end of the note.

Attracted by the gathering of people, an elderly man, leading a magnificent St. Bernard in leash, approached to see what was going on. As he reached the front of the crowd the pug gave its broken howl again. Instantly the great St. Bernard sprang back. The hair on its neck bristled and it showed every evidence of terror. In vain did the man try to calm the animal. With paws extended and head and tail rigid, deep growls of protest it struggled to retreat.

"That's a strange thing," said the owner. "I never saw Prince act that way before. Come back here, boy."

But Prince gave no notice and flew a leap that the leash was freed from the holder's grasp and the big fellow fled up the street at the top of his speed. A few minutes later a small cur trotted around the corner as the pug was lying stretched out and gazing at the sky. One larger dog, the new arrival walked around the sufferer, then approached with the evident intention of touching noses, an intention which was never carried out, for the pug just then lifted its head and sounded that strange note. With a howl of subject terror the cur turned and ran. At the same moment a setter which had been nosing around in the gutter diagonally opposite bounded in the air at the sound of the pug's howl and set off at a swift lope in the opposite direction.

That part of Brooklyn is populous with dogs, and many passed that way, every one without exception that heard the voice of the sufferer turning tail with all evidences of the liveliest alarm. One larger dog, a bulldog, bolted straight through the crowd, knocking down a woman and a boy in its desperate haste to get away. For a moment the cry of "Mad dog!" was heard, but it referred to the fugitive and not to the pug, which was now whimpering under the caresses of its master. Even at the severest of its suffering it was quite gentle and did not even exhibit such paroxysms as a dog in a fit shows. As its owner was debating with a friend the advisability of taking the pug indoors two men, one of whom had been nosing around the sufferer, stopped to look at the animal. The man with the bulldog, who was obviously a sportsman, handled the pug with his companion and bent over the leash.

"Let's have a glimpse at him," said he. "I know a thing or two about these animals."

"I was afraid at first that it was a case of going mad," said the owner, "but I guess it's only a fit."

"That's all," said the sportsman, feeling in the pug's mouth and examining its eyes. "Folks always think that it's hydrophobia if a beast cuts up a little when it's warm weather. Stand up here and let's see your paces."

Lifting the pug, he set it on its feet again. For a few steps it staggered under the weight of the man, but then, giving a howl, sank down again. There was an answering howl from the bulldog, and it strained at its collar until its eyes started from its head from the pressure on its throat. At the sound of his cry the sportsman's face changed and he jumped away.

"Come here, Nero," he commanded his dog, catching at the leash and dragging hard, but the animal snarled so savagely that he gave over the attempt to force it and simply held it where it stood. Still it tugged with all its power, trembling through all its powerful body.

"See here," said the sportsman, turning to the owner of the pug. "You can't kill that dog too quick. If ever a dog was mad, that's a case right there."

"You told me it was a fit a minute ago," protested the other. "I don't believe it's mad."

"Don't you?" cried the sportsman. "Well, I didn't either, but my dog does, and you can bet your last cent on a dog's judgment in any case like that. This bull of mine was never afraid of anything before in his life, and now look at him, so scared he's shaking like a leaf. He knows he's in danger of his life, that he knows, and if every doctor in the country told him that dog of yours didn't have hydrophobia I'd back Nero for knowing better."

"A dozen other dogs have acted the same way as soon as they heard that howl," put in a man who had been there from the first.

"I'd look like a fool killing my dog just because other dogs are afraid of him," said the owner.

Meantime the bulldog had been taken across the street, where it lay inert and dumb. A policeman approached and entered into the discussion, taking the side of the pug's owner, who declared his willingness to sacrifice his animal if there was any reasonable ground for belief that the trouble was really rabies. Presently another dog appeared, wandered around unconcernedly until it heard the pug's howl and then ran away shrieking shrilly, a circumstance which went far toward bringing the policeman around to the sportsman's opinion. He got out his revolver, and none too soon, for without warning the pug sprang into the air and began whirling around, uttering short, choking snarls and snapping at the air furiously. That settled it, and two shots from the revolver ended the dog's sufferings, while the bystanders fled in all directions.

After the pug was dead Nero's owner tried to persuade the bulldog to approach the body, but met with such determined resistance that he gave it up. The crowd went away, leaving the mystery of that unanimous and instantaneous canine diagnosis to which they had been witnesses, which perhaps had saved some of them from a terrible death.—New York Sun.

A BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR

Of our busy and growing city showing the unrivalled water power within its limits, its large and thriving manufacturing, its banking and mercantile institutions, its railway facilities and its fine healthy location as a point for tourists.

The book will contain views of our streets, rivers, public buildings, churches, schools, factories, hospitals, private residences and portraits of leading officials, judges, members of parliament, etc. These views have all been prepared from photographs by a leading firm of engravers and the result is most satisfactory.

The book has demanded much research and care in its preparation, and will be found to contain a great deal of information of interest to our citizens, aside from the views of surpassing beauty in our city. The low price at which it has been decided to sell the book will enable our citizens to secure a number of copies to send to their friends at a distance, which will help to advertise our city. Ready in a few days.

PRICE 25c.

No pains or expense has been spared to make this, the first work of its kind gotten out in Sherbrooke, worthy of the city.

Orders may be sent to the undersigned publishers at any time.

TICK SEA CHARTS.

The Wonderful Navigating Feats of Natives of the Marshall Islands.

The German protectorate of the Marshall Islands, which lie just east of the Caroline Islands in the equatorial Pacific, contains the most daring sailors known. They are constantly performing feats in navigation that European sailors feared to venture on long after they had the compass, which instrument, by the way, the Marshall Islanders reject as useless.

The archipelago lies in two widely separated groups, the Radeck and the Ralik chains, and in each chain the islands lie for the most part at extensive intervals.

Yet the native pilots conduct voyages all over their own archipelago and to the Caroline Islands in one direction and the Gilberts in another. For this voyaging they rely upon charts of their own construction, the knowledge having been handed down from remote antiquity. These charts are generally about a yard square and are constructed of slender sticks tied together. At some intersections of the sticks are fastened small shells, which stand for the different islands. The pilot points himself in the bow of the vessel with his chart before him. He points to each island by a particular shell corresponding to the island from which he is just sailing. He sets the course by indicating by one of the sticks radiating from that shell in the proper direction. Thereafter, he watches the course in the south with very slight use of the heavenly bodies for the determination of direction.

They make no secret of their art. They are often at great pains to teach it to white men and wonder that no one has yet been able to decipher their charts. Their explanation is that each stick on a chart shows the course of a stream in the sea, and that by following the streams they can find their way to their destination.

They claim to see these streams with their eyes, just as shown by the sticks. Whatever may be the explanation, it is certain that they navigate hundreds of miles of empty ocean with neither compass nor chronometer nor other instruments save a chart of sticks. If by any accident they go astray they make no attempt to continue the voyage, but run at once down to leeward until they make a familiar landfall, often as far to the west as the Carolines.—New York Sun.

MIRAGE IN MANITOBA.

Train Seen Twice Fifteen Minutes Before It Was Due.

Arrived at Shanawan, my companion kindly offered to stay with me till the train came, but I sent him off and took my stand on the track with nothing more substantial than a telegraph pole to shelter me from the icy blast. When I was left alone—sky overcast, curious kind of mist in the air, the wind howling around me and the loose snow that the wind raised from the prairie driving past me in sheets—I thought it about as desolate a picture as I have ever set eyes on. As luck would have it, the train was late, and I had 50 minutes in which to enjoy myself alone. I was never so abjectly cold as when that train eventually came. I was rewarded by seeing a curious atmospheric phenomenon that I used to read of as tantalizing weary travelers in the Sahara, and that, I am told, is common here under certain conditions—viz, the mirage. At least 15 minutes before the train arrived I saw it and suddenly leap into a way that made me pick up my bag and hop off the track in double quick time. Then I waved my handkerchief for it to stop, and suddenly I noticed that it had stopped about 50 yards off. I began to charge up the track so as to get on board, when it mysteriously and suddenly disappeared. A few minutes later I saw it again, only this time off the track and running along the prairie. It gave me quite a eerie feeling, and I began to think the cold had got into my head, and I cast superstitious glances round me to see if there were any more trains frolicking about in the snow, and suddenly I thought me of what I had heard about the mirage. When I saw distinct tracks the train had stopped, it must have been at Lacombe, nearest station, about nine or ten miles up the line.—London News.

Ice Cream In Japan.

"I met a charming young Japanese woman the other day," says a woman contributor. "She was eating ice cream, and by way of conversation I asked her if they have ice cream in Japan."

"Oh yes," said she, "but not so much as in America, nor is it good as American ice cream. There is no other country in the world where they have such delicious ice cream and loaves as in America."

"And what do you call ice cream in Japan?"

"We have adapted the American name," she answered. "We call it ice cream. We have lemonade, too, and we call it 'Lemon squash.' We call it 'Lemon squash,' said an English woman who sat next."

"No," laughed the dainty lady from Japan. "We call it lemonade, and even if you don't know a word of Japanese you needn't suffer for lack of your national drink when you go to Japan for ice cream. The lemonade are words every body understands."—Washington Star.

The Amulet Habit.

Many sailors on our men-of-war wear amulets to keep away evil spirits. Some wear them to keep off disease. This superstition prevails to a limited extent among the officers of the line. In the old days children were required to wear amulets made of asphaltum, tied to the neck with a string. They were supposed to keep off all contagious and infectious diseases, and it is possible that they did, because the persistent allusion of the gum is enough to destroy all branches of the bacteria family. No stranger cared to fondle a child scented with asphaltum. The Mohammedans used to wear diminutive copies of the Koran as amulets. I have seen negroes in the south wear the horny substance of a horse's hoof to keep off the smallpox.—New York Press.

Lightning and Thunder.

It is said that lightning may be recognized as a distant flash of light, and that clouds among which it plays are at a high altitude, but that thunder can seldom be heard at a greater distance than ten miles. The sound of thunder is also subject to refraction by layers of different density in the atmosphere, and as the effects of "sound shadows," produced by hills and other interposed objects. These are among the reasons for the existence of the so-called "sheet," or "summer," lightning, which seems to be unattended by thunder.

The hardest Japanese wood is the kiyaki, resembling oak in fiber, which takes a high polish and is used for fine work and frames of ships, but is becoming very scarce, the price having doubled within the last few years.

Fred—"How are you getting on with Miss Angell? Did you speak to her father, as you determined?" Frank—"Yes." Fred—"And how did it come out?" Frank—"So-so. I said to him, 'Mr. Angell, I love your daughter.' Said he, 'So do I.' Now let's talk of something else." Fred—"And then?" Frank—"We talked of something else."

WHO MAY VOTE.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR VOTERS IN THE COMING PLEBISCITE.

Very many inquiries are being received asking for definite information regarding who may vote in the coming plebiscite. Here is the answer:—

"All persons whose names are upon the last revised provincial voters' list."

In the city of Montreal all persons who voted, or who had the right to vote in the last provincial general elections in June 1897, will have a right to vote in the plebiscite, as there has been no revision of the lists since that time. In all other municipalities in the province of Quebec the lists were revised in the month of March, 1898. These will be the lists used in the plebiscite vote.

No names can now be added to any of these lists. Women will not have a vote.

Persons disqualified, under Sections 13 and 14 of the Quebec Election act, from voting in provincial elections, are qualified to vote in the plebiscite, and on making a declaration before the deputy returning officer, shall be allowed to vote.

Electorals may vote in every electoral district in which their names appear in the voters' lists, just as in a Dominion election. Voters' lists may be examined by any elector at the office of the secretary treasurer of their municipality.

In the province of Quebec the following persons are entitled to vote in provincial Dominion elections, as well as the plebiscite, provided, of course, their names have been put upon the voters' list as described above.

"Male persons of twenty-one years of age, subjects of Her Majesty, who are owners or occupants of real estate valued at three hundred dollars or over, in any city or two hundred dollars in any other place; tenants paying rent of thirty dollars annually, in the city, or twenty dollars elsewhere; school teachers in any institution under the control of school commissioners or trustees; retired farmers, sons, working on the farm for one year; proprietors' sons residing with their fathers; fishermen owning boats, nets or fishing tackle valued at one hundred and fifty dollars; priests, curés, vicars, missionaries and ministers of any religious denominations domiciled for upwards of five months; persons who draw an annual salary of at least three hundred dollars."

The municipal voters' list is the basis on which the parliamentary list is prepared. All other persons must make special application to the secretary-treasurer of the municipality or to the board of revisers to have their names put upon the list.

As already stated, this cannot now be done in time for the plebiscite.

The Anticosti Danger

AN ENGLISH VIEW OF IT.

The London Daily Mail has the following article on M. Menier's doings in Anticosti:—

Trouble is brewing in Canada over the island of Anticosti, lying at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, and commanding the highway to the ports of Montreal and Quebec.

About April, 1896, M. Menier, the French 'chocolate king' acquired the island from the Quebec government, in which the province is included, for a merely nominal sum. His plan at the time was stated to be to turn the whole island, which has an area of about 3,500 square miles, into an immense hunting park, where Canadian wild animals might be bred.

M. Menier also expressed a desire to experiment in colonization by bringing out a number of French farmers, etc. This was very pleasing to the then Premier of Quebec, who little realized what his government had done in bartering away territory to a foreigner. He was shortly, however, to receive a rude awakening.

In May, 1896, a big cargo boat, 'Le Savoy' arrived at Anticosti, having among its cargo a large number of field guns—previously to shoot the wild animals with or to assist the settlers.

On May 30, 1896, a Nova Scotia fishing schooner, when fishing off West Point, Anticosti, was warned off by M. Menier's servants, and was informed that it was M. Menier's desire that no vessel should fish within the three mile limits. If the order to move on was not attended to, force was threatened.

This was practically a declaration on M. Menier's part that the island was foreign territory, and must be regarded as such. The incident caused much indignation in Canada at the time, and it was explained that although M. Menier had certain rights over the island it did not belong to him, and he could not prevent fishing around its shores.

The latest developments are more interesting still, and shows M. Menier's great desire to advance colonization. The residents of Fox Bay, one of the principal settlements in the island, were, according to mail advices dated the 9th inst. ordered to vacate the place in twenty four hours.

Some of the people have, it appears, lived there for twenty-five years. Being poor, they have appealed to the Canadian government for protection. The Ottawa authorities have, however, shifted the responsibility on to the Quebec government and the people have been told to look to the latter for redress.

The matter stands thus at present, and should be the subject of searching inquiry.

Valuable as the island is from a strategic point of view, it has also a great value for future cable expansion in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. M. Menier's name is associated with many French and anti-British cable undertakings, among these being the so-called first section of the Pacific cable from Queensland to New Caledonia, and the projected cable from San Francisco to Hawaii. Having regard to the future uses to which Anticosti may be put, geographically, care should be taken to preserve British jurisdiction intact.

HE EMPTIED HIS POCKETS.

The Comte de Corbieres, Minister of the Interior to Louis XVIII, while working in the King's Cabinet, one day, became absorbed in his work, and so far forgot himself as to place his snuff-box on the King's desk after taking snuff.

The King observed this unheard of familiarity from the corner of his eye, but said nothing. Presently the Minister whipped out his pocket handkerchief, and placed it beside the snuffbox.

"Monsieur de Corbieres," remarked the King at last, "You appear to be emptying your pockets."

"Perhaps so, sire," was the calm response, "but that is much better than filling them."

The King smiled at the clever hit at the corruption of some of the Minister's predecessors. Corbieres was noted for his scrupulous integrity.

FOR THE AGED.

Paine's Celery Compound Gives the needed stimulus to good digestion and assimilation, and keeps the blood pure.

Nature's medicine brings health and happiness to those in advanced years.

King David, the sweet singer of Israel, says: "The days of our years are three-score years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow."

The physical troubles and burdens of old people are many. Disordered nerves, constipation and impoverished blood seem to make them grow weaker from day to day.

Paine's Celery Compound is a precious and invaluable medicine for old people. It is nature's true nerve, tissue and flesh builder; it keeps the blood pure and fresh from day to day, regulates the organs of digestion, and keeps the appetite natural and healthy. No other medicine in the world so quickly recruits the strength and waning energies of men and women advanced in years. Paine's Celery Compound has added many long years to the lives of old people in the past, and to-day thousands sing the praises of the wonderful medicine, because it has bestowed peace and content and kept them free from the infirmities of old age.

IN TUNIS.

The Arabs of Tunis give their children opium to prevent their crying. It is estimated that each child consumes, on an average, an infusion of one poppy-head every evening of its life up to the age of two years. No ill effects are noted as resulting from this singular practice. The men of Tunis who are not Moslems are often hard drinkers. There are shops in the town where a subscription of five shillings a month gives the right to come every day and drink as much as one likes. This is possible, as palm wine is very cheap and very strong. The Moslems are, of course, forbidden to drink wine or spirits, but in Tunis they frequently contrive to reach the same ends by making a preparation of hemp flowers. The milder kind is called kif, and when used in moderation, has no more effect than wine, but the concentrated essence known as chira, produces intoxication as quickly as raw spirits and leads to delirium tremens.

A vagrant, on being brought before the magistrate, wept so bitterly as to evoke the sympathy of the worthy justice who kindly inquired: "Have you been out of work for a long time?" "Ever since my poor mother died." "How old were you at that time?" "Eighteen months, your worship."

Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure

Saves Thousands of Lives.

Four years ago Jacob Dewit, of Hay Island, was dragged to the verge of death by dreadful heart disease. He was given up to die. From vigorous manhood he had gone to a broken despondent wreck. He procured Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, used it faithfully, and to-day weighs 215 pounds, and lives to bless the day the great remedy was recommended to him. It relieves in 30 minutes.—24.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1898.

Mr. Carl Elliott is at home on a visit.
Mr. A. O. Norton was in town over Sunday.

Mr. John Fraser was in Montreal this week on a business trip.
Mrs. Jas. McKenna has returned from a visit to friends at Quebec City.

Mrs. Cowles and her son Jean, have gone to Montreal for the winter.

Miss Emma Tracy has gone to Boston to attend the millinery openings.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Fletcher of Berlin,
N. H., are visiting friends in town.

Mr. A. A. Hall has moved into the house that he recently purchased from Mr. E. L. Sleeper.

Miss Mary Hall of Tilton, N. H., is the guest of Misses Maud and Lillie Huntington.

Miss Warner has returned to take charge of the millinery department at Miss Farley's.

Miss Minnie McKee who has been in Montreal for some time is at home on a visit.

Miss Lena O'Neil will assist Miss Tracy during the coming millinery season.

Mr. C. A. Kennedy has been improving his building with a coat of paint.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones of New York, are the guests of Mrs. Jones' father, the Rev.
Canon Foster.

Mr. Albert Welch of Sherbrooke, spent Sunday in town, the guest of Mr. J. N.
White.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Humphrey who have been visiting friends in town returned to Boston on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hurd of Lowell,
Mass., and the guests of Mr. and Mrs.
M. B. Lovell.

The Rev. J. H. Murray of Barnston preached at the Methodist Church last Sunday morning and evening in the absence of the pastor.

Mr. H. C. Fontaine has got a new plate glass in his front window that was broken by an accident some weeks ago.

The academy and also the French and English schools have re-opened this week.
There seems to be quite a number of scholars from outside attending the schools this year.

Mr. W. T. Lindsay, who has been in the Montreal hospital for treatment for some time, is so much improved as to be able to return home.

Last Tuesday was court day at the Commissioners Court. There were a number of cases disposed of in a very summary manner.

Uncle Tom's Cabin Co., were in town on Tuesday. They gave a very good entertainment. Their colored singers were exceptionally good.

This being the week of the Great Eastern Exhibition at Sherbrooke many of our citizens are in attendance; they speak very highly of the show as well as the management.

There has been a petition circulated asking the town to buy the Cutting lots and some adjacent property on Cutting and Lark Streets, and convert it into a public park.

Mr. C. A. Kennedy has purchased a plant for generating acetylene gas. He will soon have his establishment illuminated with this new light which will be the first of the kind in this town.

Monday being Labor Day, the public offices were closed, but aside from this there was little or no observance of the day.

Mr. A. E. Paquette was at Stanstead last week and organized a Court of the Canadian Order of Foresters. We are informed by Mr. Paquette that he intends to devote some time to this work in the vicinity of Danville.

There are a number of cases of typhoid fever in town. Among the worst are two children of Mr. H. W. Andrews. They are at the present writing very low though their recovery is earnestly hoped for by a large circle of friends.

Last Monday afternoon as Mr. W. J.
Welch and J. M. Turner were engaged in building a chimney at the new house now being built by Mr. E. F. Sleeper, when the staging gave way and both men were thrown to the ground, a distance of some twenty five feet. They were both severely shaken up though we believe no bones were broken. It has been remarked that ill luck seems to follow these two men, when working together, as they are the same two who got a similar fall from the Baptist Church about two years ago while working under similar circumstances.
