The kitchen committee reported cups, saucers, glasses and other dishes purchased. The programme was a very special one, being descriptive talks given by Miss M. Welch and Miss L. Walsh on their visit to the "Century of Progress" Exhibition in Chicago, so vividly described were the various scenes and articles, that all listeners could draw the pictures for themselves and each felt they had glimpsed the exhibition and the voice of the meeting was given in a hearty vote of thanks to them by Mrs. J. McNeil. Before sitting down for refreshments, each one received a slip of paper containing a word from some maxim. All those completing one, sat down at the same table. REPAIRS MADE AT CONVENT

Rooms Changed About and Entire Interior of Building Redecorated

Considerable repairs and renovations were made at the Huntingdon Convent during the summer. In a desire to have ample classroom space Rev. Mother Superior changed the entire plan of the ground floor. The large reception hall formerly on the left, entering, has been converted into a classroom for the High School pupils. The former superior's rooms on the right have been made into a reception hall. The superior's office is now located on the south side of the building. The main entrance has been renovated and redecorated as well as has the music hall, library, the dining hall, and the dormitories. The halls on the ground floor have also been widened. New hardwood floors were laid throughout.

The entire building has been redecorated within and now presents a very bright and cheery appearance, which as Rev. Mother Superior says "will be conducive to increased ardency in studies."

Mr. James T. Elder in his butcher business is sponsoring a weekly drawing. Each cash customer over the counter, from Monday morning until the following Saturday night is entitled to a ticket. Alternate Havelock and Huntingdon Fairs Suggestion Presented in Letter to Gleaner

Editor of the Gleaner—The experience of attending two fairs in one week in the same county makes one stop and wonder why. Why two fairs? Take a look at the prize winners of each fair and observe how they seem to duplicate. The same exhibits appear at both fairs in livestock, poultry, fruit, fairs and flowers. Trucks is the answer. Exhibiting for some is only another racket.

If there has to be two fairs on account of local pride, etc., in Huntingdon County, the time has come when the same rules that apply to regional shows should be invoked in the duplicate county fairs. Exhibits to be shown at only one fair.

It is all right to say that both events at Havelock and Huntingdon were successful this year. But it seems absurd to have to get Government money for prize lists and present it to practically the same people twice in the same week.

It should suit everyone better to double the prize money and have one fair. Why not hold a fair in alternate years in Huntingdon and Havelock?

Curiously enough, the Fancy Work Department at the fairs affords the most shameless example of deliberate racketeering. The calves grow up, cows grow old, horses and all other livestock also; the flowers die and the jam moulds; fruit rots and cannot be shown year after year. But the unhappy people who sort and arrange the produce work stalls are beset by the perennial pillow cases, shawls, towels, dollies and whatnots? Seemingly, grandma's quilts and the blankets woven by Great Aunt Jenny have double a cat's life. It gets on ones nerves somehow to have to look at prizes plinned to family heirlooms twice in one week. But the ladies, bless them! think that the little rule which says all work must be done in the household within the year doesn't mean a thing. Exhibitors in this section ought to be limited to a specified number of articles. Just what would be reasonable for one or two busy people to accomplish in one year.

Otherwise, the whole department, in the interest of economy and honesty, should be abolished.

Huntingdon Fair Regains Its Popularity With Exhibitors

One of the Biggest Attendances on Record—Flowers, Vegetables, and Fruit Were Outstanding Features—Sixteen Ladies Showed Home-made Bread

The Huntingdon Fair has functioned for years. To see it pass into a state of oblivion was not wholly to be desired. If the fair was not going to be worth while it would be better to cancel it and devote the time and money that would be devoted to it to a better cause. Thanks to the Agricultural Society, and the unanimous support of the exhibitors the fair is not likely to die in this decade of time. The public supported the fair this year in the same manner as have the exhibitors.

BIG INCREASE IN SWINE ENTRIES

The 1933 fair saw one of the biggest attendances on record. In talking to Mr. R. J. M. Reid who judged the flowers, vegetables and fruit, he declared that if the fair was held one week later in the season it would be an easy matter to make the horticultural division of the fair so attractive that it alone would make the fair a financial success, and well worth its while for the exhibitors. With this week delay of the show, the apples would be in better condition for exhibiting and as a matter of fact he believed fully twice as many apples might then be shown. This feature of the show is well worth consideration, for the apple crops of our farms today represent real incomes to many a farmer.

These apple growers also grow many vegetables, and the competition between the farmers of our high land townships with the people living in Godmanchester, Elgin and Hinchinbrook put up a real show of keen rivalry in vegetables. This year's show of vegetables and apples was so commanding that at any time of the day you would see at least 50 people looking over the beautiful exhibits.

Another reason why this division of the fair might be more seriously considered is that Macdonald College is directing demonstration plots in the muck lands for vegetable growing. The demonstration plots are meeting with success and the day may not be far distant when vegetable canning on a commercial scale will be a reality in Huntingdon. If that day arrives, vegetable growing will be a big commercial crop for our farmers. The Agricultural Society will be doing a good stroke of business for the farmers if they direct some special planting of the muck lands for the thought of Mr. Reid along these lines.

The vegetable entries were such that in many classes 9 and 10 entries were common and in carrots the entry numbered 18.

The flower show was not only pleasing to the eye, but was a commanding exhibition. The perfume from the flowers, and the beauty of the cut blooms inclined one to feel that more should be made of that exhibition than is usually the case. No fall fair in communities such as this present a better flower show than the case here. This feature of the show has always been commanding and with a few changes made in the displaying of the flowers it might be made even more fascinating.

As is usually the case, a fine display towards the goal of rivaling Havelock as a bread show. Further studies will be necessary before that goal is attained, but this year saw 16 ladies showing home made bread.

Mrs. Thos. Ross, Mrs. George McLean, Mrs. Norman Stark, Mrs. C. J. Hyde, Miss Bernice McClatchie, Mrs. N. M. Brooks, Mrs. Roy Dunn, Mrs. M. Anderson, Mrs. W. Kelly, Mrs. Jas. Lang, Mrs. H. R. Graham, Mrs. H. Stark, Mrs. Peter Donnelly and Mrs. C. Waddell.

The McDonald & Robb prize of a barrel of flour for best loaf made using "Our Best Flour" was again won by Mrs. Roy S. Dunn, who won the honors at Havelock. Mrs. Lang, a sister of Mrs. Dunn won the second prize.

A number of plain cakes, etc., were shown.

A new class to be exhibited at our fair was that for eggs. Mr. Dalton Ross offered prizes for eggs with brown shells and one for eggs with white shells. Altogether there were 25 entries made, 16 entries being made in the brown shelled egg class.

The entry of preserves and canned fruits and pickles, etc., was not extensive. The many exhibitors showing at the fair gave every department its deserving observation and that department was certainly not overlooked by the ladies who were showing preserves. Of course most ladies would think their own the best, but the judge decided that point to her own taste and without interference from the observers.

Horses are comparatively easy to show at a fall fair, and perhaps that is the reason why many farmers are more willing to exhibit horses than cattle. This year's fair saw the greatest number of horses ever seen at the fair not only were all the horse stalls filled, but nearly two-thirds of one of the cattle barns was taken up with driving horses. The first three entries he seemed to be in a quandary. After a great deal of careful observation the honor was awarded Mrs. W. McMillan, who drove one of Mr. D. Rowat's horses, the second prize went to Mrs. Sam Herdman and the 3rd to Miss Hilda Anderson who also drove one of Mr. Rowat's horses.

Dr. J. C. Moore, M.P., offered a silver trophy for best lady driver and in this class 10 entries were made, Mrs. Sam Herdman winning.

CHAUTAUQUA FOR NEXT YEAR

Programmes Concluded in O'Connor Hall Friday Evening—Not Financial Success

The Canadian Chautauqua concluded in the O'Connor Hall on Friday evening with the comedy "A Pair of Sixes." Following the play Miss Batty, Chautauqua organizer, announced to the committee that Chautauqua was assured for Huntingdon next year for 25 signatures had been secured as guarantors.

The entertainments this year were enthusiastically approved and it is regrettable that it did not prove a success financially. The drama "Sun-Up" by Lulu Vollmer was exceptionally well received by the audience. It was a story of the dwellers in the U. S. mountain States and was well depicted, the acting of "Widow Cagle," taken by a man, having been specially good. The Lombard entertainers and the gifted violinist on Thursday afternoon and evening won all by their music and specialties. Their programme was well received and everything except talent and interest. The lecture "On the Bottom of the Sea," given that night by Robert Zimmerman, of Montreal, famous for his deep sea diving and ocean exploration work, as well as for his part in the filming of all the well-known deep sea pictures of the day, was heartily applauded. Any of the audience would be ready to admit that this lecture was worth the price of a ticket alone. It had about everything—wit, humour, interest, information, romance, adventure. The address by this Canadian traveller was one of the features of this year's programme. Of course, Friday, October 13th, was featured by Sue Hastings and her marvelous marionettes. The largest crowd to attend saw the farce comedy "A Pair of Sixes" on Friday evening. All were pleased with the play and its presentation and sorry that the Chautauqua had drawn to a close.

The prize list appears in this Gleaner and the awards in each class will be found in these columns.

Sheep and swine saw entries that indicated that the farmers felt mixed farming is advisable. Large lots of shots were almost common, an appreciated contrast from the show of 1932 when one lone entry of swine was recorded. The sheep were exhibited by Messrs. H. R. Graham, George and Ross, Pringle, D. T. Ness and N. J. Fennell.

The showing of poultry indicated a dwindling. The entry was made up of a few pens from each farmer. That is not the kind of a poultry show to be desired. May another year see a greater showing of poultry made. The Huntingdon Poultry Farm which is in its first year of existence showed 22 pens of Barred Rocks and Leghorns.

They managed to win 14 first prizes. A feature of all fall fairs that should not be overlooked is that of the sociable gathering of friends. They meet at the fair; they visit and discuss the farm crops and as the day wears on they are ready to discuss the goodness of the supper and dinners provided for public gatherings. The fair dinner at Huntingdon stands the test of the critical. The ladies of the community, the children, and the men, all dined in aid of the fair. The dinner was served in a very appetizing manner which again bespeaks good housekeeping in every sense of the word. The work of these ladies was on exhibit by the fact that all the ladies were well patronized. The ladies won a first prize, judging by the public commendation made about the ring-side after the noonday meal.

The Huntingdon Fair as a one day show is not the kind of a fair that should be desired. The show officials will now profit by the experience and see the show debt eventually liquidated and the standing of the show regained.

The couple was rushed to St. Luke's hospital where it was feared that Mrs. Faille suffered from a fractured skull. According to a conversation with officials of St. Luke's hospital at noon today they informed that Faille will recover and that Mrs. Faille's injuries were not serious.

In a statement given to the police Mrs. Faille said that her husband had acted queerly during the past few months.

Horse From District Plays in the Movies

There are no human actors or actresses insofar as we know, from this district, in Hollywood, but at least we are represented by a horse.

Only this week Major T. L. Irving has had a letter from Mr. R. B. Mann of Rancho Santa Fe, California, which supplies the motion picture industry with horses, requesting the blood line and pedigree of a horse bred by him. This horse "Fleety" 116049, was shown at the New York Horse Show, purchased by the Jockey Club there and finally going to its present Western owners.

The sire was "Valjean" and the dam "Golden Fly" the latter is still at Mr. Irving's stables at St. Anicet and had an exceptionally fine colt this year.

In his letter Mr. Mann writes, "Fleety is full of fire but is the most perfect back that I have ever seen and a wonderful jumper."

Visitor at a country house: "Did you say this was a stone's throw from the station?"
"Yes."
"Well, I have a great admiration for the man who threw the stone."

Softball Games at Huntingdon Fair Saw Strong Augmented Teams

Four strong softball teams entered the 1933 Huntingdon Fair. All teams were strengthened for the day, each team hoping to win the silver trophy. The Valleyfield Cardinals were not to be daunted, for they have led the way all season through the piteous box of St. Beavers. The Cardinals won the big tournament at Ormstown on Labor Day, and they are now in the final stages of the Valleyfield Canadians to decide which team is to be declared the champions of the South Western Quebec Softball League.

The first game on Friday was played between Huntingdon and the Beavers. Huntingdon was represented by the piteous box of St. Beavers. Huntingdon, Bert Johnston of Montreal was on the mound for the Beavers. In the first inning Huntingdon made two errors which resulted in two scores for the Beavers. The Beavers carried another run in the second inning. These three lone runs completed all the scoring in the game. It was a pitchers' battle throughout and strike-outs very common.

The second game was between Ormstown and the Cardinals of Valleyfield. Ormstown team was supported by strong players of Lachine whilst the Cardinals enlisted some help from the Canadians of Valleyfield. The Cardinals won by a score of 15 to 11.

The final game was then played between Cardinals and Beavers. The Cardinals were still fresh and ready for the fray. Johnston was not so keen and ably for his second game, and under the circumstances the Cardinals got the best of the play. The game ended with the Cardinals in the lead 9 to 4.

Mrs. J. J. Alexander is visiting friends and relatives in Montreal. Do you dream of the Spanish Main and pirate gold? If so, take a look at the good ship "Bonito" now on view in the window of W. S. Brown, Jeweller, Huntingdon. As ships models go it is a perfect reproduction of a Spanish galleon. The workmanship, down to the coloring of the sails and rigging seems to be perfect in every detail. It was made from 620 separate pieces of basswood and cedar by a boy 14 years old. The name of the youthful shipbuilder is George C. Anderson, Dundee, Que.

Right—Wrong William Garrow is dead, Eddy Cushman—Legal—Illegal man is a man to be feared on the highway; and Henri Simard and L. Longtin are held for murder of Wm. Garrow. Garrow and Cushman were conducting a bootlegging game of taking beer illegally into the United States. Cushman is known to have been a treacherous man, and one who would not hesitate to adopt unfair methods of gaining a point for himself. Garrow's past reputation was not a commendable one. Henri Simard, the St. Stanislas hotelman possibly knows this type of man better than the readers of this paper. He has suffered at the hands of just such lawless individuals as are most bootleggers or run-runners. Simard is held for murder by the Crown. Should he be held for murder is a question in the minds of some of our readers; for the dead man has not been seen in Canada. The laws of this country require that such an episode as transpired at St. Stanislas on August 31st calls for his arrest and trial on the charge of murder. Mr. Simard has taken that charge very much to himself, but he can rest assured not a single man who regards justice does not side in with him, and he can further be assured our Canadian laws will uphold him and he will eventually be discharged with a clean sheet. He protected his property, and one could not blame him for his quick action when we realize that he knew the type of individuals he was dealing with. Simard's being tried in Canada means he will not be extradited to the U. S. where we do not all hold the same high respect for the laws of justice being administered. Public sentiment is with Henri Simard and L. Longtin, and that fact alone is surely sufficient to indicate that the mills of justice though they grind slowly, will duly discharge Simard and Longtin, charged with murder.

Merchants Ask During the past few days merchants, dealers and business men in general in Huntingdon have signed a petition asking that the Town Council assess higher business taxes upon vans and pedlars that enter town for the purpose of selling their wares to the householders in town.

This action we feel is quite within reason, when one realizes that it is these same long established business places that built up the town to where it is. If they have built it up why should some pedlar come in and sell the goods in the town that he did nothing towards its building. The brush salesman, the aluminum salesman, the hosiery saleslady, the necktie girl, and ever so many other brands of house to house salesmen are all a cursed nuisance to the housewife; and incidentally always charge more for the product than charged for at a store.

Sometimes it happens that in order to unload a line of merchandise quickly this method of selling must necessarily be adopted and the people fall for it. If our merchants would band themselves together and say—"if householders are going to put up with this pedlar method of buying, let us saturate them with so many calls peddling our wares so that they will become sick of the house canvasser" then they will frown upon that method of trading. The competition is stiff, methods adopted often harsh and glaringly indignant, but too often the householder weakens because the stranger is present and you will not say, "I buy from our local merchants, go sell your wares to them or come here representing them." It was Huntingdonians that built and made Huntingdon what it is—not the pedlars.

Huntingdon Fair The Huntingdon Agricultural Society Div. B. held its annual fall fair on Friday. In place of being a two or three day show it was made a one day exhibition. It is a pleasure to write an editorial this year, when one neither heard no evil, saw no evil nor a single one speak evil of the 1933 Huntingdon Fair.

In brief what did one really hear concerning the Huntingdon Fair on Friday last. First they heard there was a big crowd of people, yes perhaps one of the largest attendance records in the past dozen years. When you spoke to an exhibitor he was in good spirits. He was busy, because he had to do all his showing in one day; but incidentally that saved him considerable on the exhibition expenses. It was pleasing the Agricultural Society, because the one day fair made it that their operating expenses were cut to a minimum. Wherever you went you heard people speaking of the excellence of the exhibits in horticultural and livestock departments, and lastly but by no means least of the excellence of the dinner served by the ladies of this district in aid of the Agricultural Society. What else did one hear—ah! it was the softball tournament. It attracted hundreds of fans, and it filled the bill for sporting entertainment for 1933 to the general satisfaction of the attendance.

What did one see at the Huntingdon Fair? They saw the finest apple exhibit ever seen at Huntingdon. It rivaled Havelock Fair for quantity, but the apples were shown off to better advantage at Huntingdon. The spectators left the fair with a better appreciation of the apple show than had they seen the show at Havelock. A vegetable show was seen that rivaled the fairs of Huntingdon 20 years ago. The great long table was covered from end to end, and on the floor were the large exhibits from the fields. A glance around and your attention was directed to the culinary art where a commendable showing was on display. You again saw a cut flower and plant display that was well worth the price of admission to the fair, but on top of that a fancy work exhibit was thrown in for good measure, and it too commanded the attention of the observant eyes of the ladies to like nice linen within their homes. As Mr. Farmer would wander about the fair grounds he saw full classes of dairy cattle exhibited, a fair show of swine and sheep, only to be overrun with an overwhelming entry of horses. This in brief is what one had to see at Huntingdon Fair.

One saw no evil at the fair. Judging was done to the best of the ability of the judge, and they laboured hard and long to complete their tasks within the time prescribed.

The Huntingdon Fair for 1933, which was once in doubt as to whether it would take place, is a thing of the past. The 1933 fair will be one of historical importance, for it marks the turning point where it was a case of no fair in the future, or for a more united effort to make it a surviving fall fair that can serve a useful purpose to our agricultural community.

Macdonald College On September 29, Macdonald Looks For Boys College will open its classes for the young men who purpose taking the degree course of agriculture. The course for the boys who wish to spend two years at Macdonald will open on November 1st.

That the students who attend Macdonald come out competent agriculturists has been proved time and again by the men who have passed through its portals. Exceptions of course have occurred, and these are the ones our eyes are too often fixed upon when we think of agricultural courses. Today of all times, is the time when a farmer needs the best of information at his command, so that he might grow crops with the greatest assurance of success and be able to market them, when grown to perfection. This is true whether it refers to cereals, vegetables, fruit or livestock and its by-products. The Macdonald College course will train the farmers along these lines. Macdonald College provides these students with recreation facilities. The students get training in debating and athletics in general. The students pass from Macdonald College with a better appreciation of how to live, to enjoy living, and how to make a living on the farm easier than did their fathers before them.

The cost of a course at Macdonald College is not excessive. The board and room is $30 per month and against this the Department of Agriculture makes a special grant equivalent to $9. So the actual board and room cost is $21 a month. The association fees of one kind and another come to less than $20 a year. Medical attention is free except for the nominal charges for medicines required.

The two-year course is one that should appeal to hundreds of young English-speaking farmers. The course opens November 1st and concludes in April of each year in sufficient time for the men to return to their respective farms for the season's work.

The Chicken Here and there the press of the Province is calling attention to the coming of the chicken supper season throughout the rural districts, and almost smacking its lips in happy anticipation. As the Belleville Intelligencer puts it: That season of the year is at hand where the great rural festival known as the chicken supper occupies one of the leading places in the thought of mankind in the cities as well as in the towns. Another writer sees visions of wonderful cats, with chicken, fried, roasted or stewed, occupying first place on the tempting menu. No autumn would be autumn without the slaughter of multitudes of young fowl to help in the harvest-tide feasting as well as in assisting in the maintenance of the church organizations, for fowl suppers are peculiarly part and parcel of the means of raising funds. Chicken suppers also attract the people to ponder over the blessings of the harvest when most of the season's work is done and nature is going to rest for the next few months to prepare for another springtime and harvest.

These suppers are social gatherings, and should not be allowed to fall away, even though they entail an immense amount of labor by the women and the men of the congregation. What would autumn be like without a score or more of these annual feasting, which recall in their own way the happy feasts in the castles of Merrie England as winter nights drew on in the long ago? Today the chicken supper is not an accompaniment to carousing, for a religious setting generally is found associated with the fowl meal.

But we wonder how much real profit there is in one of these feasts. If you count the labor and effort, there is none at all, but these are days and nights when one must not be stickish about a little extra work, for work is needed and will be needed to pull civilization and civilized towns and communities out of the slough of despond of the brand of 1929-33. But if one counts the pies, the cakes, the pickles, the scores of other factors which go to make up a full board for a supper on fowl, it would seem that the profit goes to the consumer, the man or the woman or child, who, paying a small amount of money, has the privilege of eating all and sundry. But the very holding of a supper, the appearance of the crowds about the tables, happy to eat and be filled, is in itself a satisfaction probably worth while. In fact, today the world has gone too far away from the old past of doing things for the mere sociability. There should be more of the spontaneous happiness and overflow of spirits which such institutions as fowl suppers tend to create and keep alive. So, long live the chicken supper.

WHAT IS THE N.R.A.?
F. L. ROBERTS, Manager, Chicago Division, National Recovery Administration, in the Rotarian Magazine. What is the NRA? It's an emergency measure to combat the depression, based on the fundamental that nobody should starve for lack of opportunity to earn a living.

Is it the "New Deal"? Exactly. The business game hasn't been played by rules that safeguard the employer who wanted to give his employees short hours and livable wages from the competitor who didn't. Uncle Sam is now the umpire who steps into call "time out" while the players themselves make new rules that will put out of the game those who won't play fair. Shorter hours will increase employment; living wages will mean a flow of healthy business. But everybody must resume the game by the same rules.

And the "Codes" are the new rules. Yes. They are simply agreements between the concerns themselves on one side and the government on the other. Codes are, roughly, of two kinds: First, the so-called blanket code, which is general and prescribes a minimum of forty hours and $14.15 a week for employees; and second, the trade-association codes. The latter are formulated by trade associations and vary somewhat, depending upon problems peculiar to an industry, from the blanket code. They must be oked by the special board in Washington, of which General Hugh Johnson is the chairman. Then they become obligatory upon all members of that particular industry or trade.

Who signs the blanket code? Any business employing one or more persons, not already signed up for a trade association code.

Where does one get the blank? Most employers have received one already; others may get them from their local postmasters. Signers are given a certificate in order that they may obtain "blue eagle" posters and stickers to identify their concerns as among those that have responded patriotically to the challenge of the emergency.

Then those who sign trade-association codes need not sign the blanket code? It is not obligatory. The blanket code is merely a device to operate until trade-association codes are prepared by all groups.

Can a business operate that has signed neither? Yes, but those who hold back must face public disfavor. Already thousands of men and women have signed pledges to buy only from NRA stores.

What if an NRA employer violates his code? It is assumed that he has signed in good faith, but if there is evidence that he has broken his word he may face a maximum $500 fine or six months in a federal penitentiary—and, when the license features are perfected, a revocation of his permit to do business. But all of that is a final resort. Public opinion is more effective than law.

Will the "New Deal" raise prices? It is expected to do so, but if there is a simultaneous increase of employment and everybody receives a living wage, the burden will be distributed equally.

Do you really think we can lift ourselves out of the depression by our own bootstraps? Yes, through the NRA—for it strikes at the root causes, unemployment, and a more equitable distribution of wealth. Remember the story told about Andrew Jackson by the President in his radio appeal. "Old Hickory" had died and someone asked, "Will he go to Heaven?" The answer given was, "He will if he wants to." The President, you will recall, then said, "If I am asked whether the American people will pull themselves out of the depression, I answer, 'They will if they want to.'"

"The prettiest rag rugs I ever saw"

"A wealthy lady from the City of Quebec who was visiting here happened to see the rag rugs I had just finished," writes a Three River woman. "She said she had never seen such artistic ones and asked if I bought new materials to get such beautiful color effects. When I told her I had dyed my old scraps with Diamond Dyes, she simply couldn't believe it. Besides being beautiful colors, they are fast and washable."

In the popular art of rag making women prove again the real value of Diamond Dyes for permanent dark colors by boiling. No other dyes make old materials look so new and rich in color. For light dainty shades without boiling for lingerie, summer blouses and dresses, use the wonderful new Diamond Tints. All drug stores have both Diamond Dyes and Diamond Tints.

Opportunity is Knocking THE saying that it's never too late to mend, doesn't apply to physical property. In these days, every community has its share of homes and business buildings which have been allowed to depreciate to the point where they are ready for the wrecking crew. Their degeneration may be laid to the door of false economy. While a dollar was "saved" temporarily, many dollars were lost because of it. There are hundreds of thousands of properties which can still be put in good condition at a moderate cost, but which will be beyond redemption if work is put off much longer. Today we can still get in on bargain prices for most supplies and commodities—tomorrow will tell a different story. The wholesale price level has been skyrocketing, and now the retail level is beginning to follow. To don't have to take anyone's word for it that this is the time to build and repair—the cold and unprejudiced statistical tables tell you that, and they permit of no argument. Build now, improve now—provide jobs and purchasing power—remember that investment and employment are cheaper than charity, and that they make charity unnecessary. —Malone Farmer

The Successful Farmer Must Be Modern JUST as the merchant in a large city must keep abreast of the times by carrying in his store the most modern make of goods, the latest styles and keeping in touch with the needs of the people, if he hopes to succeed, so must the farmer of the present day be constantly alive to the demands of the market and be in a position to meet these demands. Old methods of farming will not do in these modern times. Business methods will not get the farmer anywhere. A survey of farm conditions recently made by experts reveals the fact that the farmer who operates his farm in a modern business like that of the haphazard ways of looking after his farm, is the farmer who can show a balance on the right side of his ledger. They haven't the slightest idea what is coming when they run their farm. They don't even know what has become of it. They have a lot of cattle, horses, sheep, hogs, etc., on their farm, but they don't know what it is costing to feed them, and what percentage of profit, if any, they are making after the animal has been disposed of on the market. These are the things that count if a man is to be classed as a successful farmer. It is just as important to operate a farm along modern lines as anything else. It has been noticed that the farmer who has only pure bred stock on his farm, who tills his soil along scientific lines, who pays attention to the information which comes into his possession from authoritative sources, who is in constant touch with the market as to prices, who takes a personal interest in everything about his farm, who keeps a set of books, who adopts business methods, is the farmer who is not making very much complaint about the depression, although he has suffered with the rest. He is always in a position to take advantage of the rising tide and receives the benefit of every advance in price of farm produce. —Cornwall Standard-Freelholder

A Word To Motorists WITH the opening of school comes a need for greater caution on the part of motorists to avoid accidents. Among the army of young folk will be scores of tots going to school for the first time, many of whom are not old enough to understand what traffic regulations stand for, or who cannot be expected to sense the hazards of the street in this motor age. That they will dart out from the curb in the abandon of their childish play is certain. To prevent their doing so would be impossible unless the sidewalks are barred with guard rails. Hence, says the Pedestrians' Rights Association, it is the duty and responsibility of motorists to drive their cars, particularly in school zones, in not be to put the blame on green drivers, but, perhaps, to build up a body of statistics which might teach experienced drivers the danger of assuming that when they are hitting 60 miles an hour every car they meet is able to share the road with them to a margin of a few inches. Just a little panic in the other car may cause a sudden in-swing of a few inches and another head-on collision makes news on the front pages. —Toronto Star

Why Buy On The Door Step? FEW people realize that every five cent piece spent upon the door step to a peddler generally means that the money is taken out of the community circulation. Yet it is true and sometimes that the housewife should stop and consider. When you buy a cake of soap or an electrical appliance on your door step you are taking away the legitimate business of the men of your district. These merchants put up buildings and made real estate valuable. They equipped their stores with the modern inventions and accessories in order that they might serve the public. They succeed in their places of business with the necessities of life and the needs of the community. They hire local help and skilled labour in all these undertakings and made possible this way of life. These are the people who have paid the bulk of the taxes, the high rents, the street improvements. These are the men who had the vision that has built the district. Do they not in return deserve your support and help? All fair competition is most welcomed. These merchants however should be protected against unfair competition. The peddler who goes from door to door with the basket or the suit case is most reprehensible and should not be supported. The salesmen of the local offices and merchants are not in this class. They are men and women who represent local business men and should have your support and endorsement. They are trying to cope with a serious situation and are fighting the outside direct selling organization by their own methods. They are not to be turned down but every sale that can be put in their way should be aimed at the whole district. If all the people in this district will make it their business to stop buying from the peddler on the door step there will be thousands of dollars per year available for the district. Spend your dollars with your local merchants and you will get the returns in your churches, lodges, chapters, social clubs and other organizations. Stopping the peddler is not a means of giving a better living to hundreds of our own citizens who are living in this community. Buy from your local merchants and make this community a community worth living in and for. —West Toronto Weekly

Gunmen in Britain LORD Luce's bill imposing drastic new penalties upon the gunman should not encounter serious opposition. Fourteen years' penal servitude for using or even for trying to use a firearm in resisting lawful arrest is certainly an old-style penalty. It is a sentence of seven years for carrying a gun, whether real or imitation. But why not? The gunman must be stamped out before he gets a real footing in this country, and before a gun becomes a part of the criminal's professional outfit. Squeamishness is sentimental folly. Toy pistols and revolvers are now clearly brought within the category of prohibited weapons, and probably when the bill comes on for discussion the Government will be pressed to take action to prevent their importation into this country. They mostly come from Germany, and with small alterations can be turned into lethal weapons. What their legitimate use may be, except for stage purposes, it is difficult to see. —London Daily Telegraph

Put Yourself Across MERCHANTS who believe that in times of depression advertising should be cut down or cut out altogether should be interested in recent reports from many of the larger manufacturers in Canada that increases are being made in advertising appropriations. In hard times the consumer is shopping around for best bargains in all lines of goods and to sell his product the manufacturer or the merchant must get his message across to the public. A survey has shown that newspapers are the favorite medium of the advertiser because of their reader interest. Local newspapers are accorded the preference because everything they carry is of interest to the community and is read by everyone even if they do not all subscribe to the paper. A common expression today is "What's the news?" proving that everyone is curious as to the current events. The demand for news cannot but have a desirable effect on the advertising that appears with the news. People have to be constantly reminded that you are in business for "what is news today is forgotten tomorrow" applies to advertising as well as news. Buyers forget if they are not constantly reminded that you have something to sell. A well-planned advertising campaign will remind readers that you are in business and desire their patronage. —Amherstburg Echo

How to Better Poor Posture Bodily poise is just as important as social poise to the really attractive woman. Poor posture will spoil the effect of the most expensive gown, but if posture is poor, it's easy to improve it. Kathleen Howard writes in Harper's Bazaar. "Here is one way to do it," she writes. "Stand in front of your mirror without your clothes and turn sideways. You may see reflected a bad case of swayback. If you do, put one hand below your waist on your back and put the other in front, on your abdomen. Then roll the tip of your spine under and up, at the same time keeping your head well up. It really works."

King Feisal's Reign KING Feisal's death in Switzerland closes a career romantic even for the august descendant of Fatimah, the only child of the Prophet who survived. Feisal owed his kingship, and indeed, his rich fortunes, to two Britons. Colonel T. E. Lawrence (of Arabia fame) chose him to command the Arab levies who operated under General Allenby against the Turks; and though the levies, as levies invariably do, served with dubious merit, their leader was sent to the Peace Conference at Paris to plead, though somewhat hopelessly, the nationalist claims of the Arabs. Then, in the course of the development of Iraq, Sir Percy Cox was instrumental in having the candidature of Feisal for the new town of Iraq prevail over all others. Little peace was allowed to prevail in his kingdom, either since it came under the British mandate or since it gained its entire independence last year, an independence that is, however, associated with an alliance treaty with Great Britain extending over twenty years. The sudden death of King Feisal was inconvenient, for Iraq is based on almost all its borders with aspirants to its throne. His death occurred, too, before he had acted as he might have been hoped to act in connection with the brutal murder of some 600 Assyrians in the northern portion of Iraq. His murderous ambush, King Feisal himself seemed disinclined to lay proper share of the blame on his army commands; and as the affair was both unexplained and unexpected before the northern portion of Iraq, the British may be compelled, both through this incident and through the pressure of the nomad and other tribes who will now again concentrate on every border of Iraq, to intervene in the campaign for the detection of those kingships far less extensive than one of our smaller provinces, but more quarrelsome than a barrel of Kilkenny cats. —Winnipeg Free Press

Suppressing Crime THE belief in terroristic sentences as a means of suppressing any type of crimes that the community happens to be specially afraid of seems to be common to both the United States and Canada. It is exhibited in the campaign for the adoption of the death penalty for kidnapping in the United States, and in the Canadian resort to twenty-year imprisonment as a penalty for wearing the badge of an unlawful association. It is improbable that terroristic sentences ever have the deterrent effect that their advocates hope. There were plenty of them in Russia before the Revolution, and they did not succeed in preserving the Tsardom when its crisis came upon it. They have the grave disadvantage of arousing sympathy for the persons convicted, which is the last thing that those who dislike their crime should wish to do. Kidnapping is a very reprehensible crime, but it is not murder; and to treat it as the equivalent of murder is to invite kidnapers to become murderers. What the United States needs for the suppression of kidnapping is a vastly more efficient organization for the detection of the criminals, more reliable courts for their punishment, and a greater public sympathy with the efforts of the police. —Drummondville Spokesman

Rubbing Hub Caps A WISE driver gives the cars he meets as much room as he reasonably can. He does not rub hub-caps with people whose driving experience he knows nothing about. The authorities governing the highways might profitably gather information about so-called head-on collisions and ascertain how many of them were side-swiped or mere misadventures of a few inches on the part of one car or the other. And the length of experience of the different drivers could be recorded. The object would states that the precursor of the penny press was the Daily Evening Transcript, established in Boston July 24, 1830, by Lynde M. Walter. While this paper was not sold on the streets for one penny, it was quoted at the extremely low rate of $4 per annum. Probably the first daily that was actually sold for one cent was the Cent of Philadelphia, published in the same year as the Daily Evening Transcript in Boston. In New York city the idea was first conceived by Dr. Horatio David Shepard.

Unbreakable Glass

Glass used for the "hull panes"—not portholes now—of a new liner is of a special kind that has withstood a pressure of twenty tons. In one test of this glass, a piece of it weighing fifty-six pounds was dropped eighteen feet on to a steel plate. It came through this ordeal without showing even a crack. But glass nowadays can be wonderfully resistant. In certain tests of a bullet-proof glass recently, a .303 bullet was fired at it at a range of five yards. The glass plate under test was about an inch and a half thick and was made up of three layers. The bullet scarred the first layer, but made no impression on the second.

Army Distinction Badge

More than 150 years ago General Washington wrote the general order establishing the Purple Heart as a badge of distinction in the U.S. army. The badge was to foster and encourage every species of military merit and reward not only instances of unusual gallantry, but also of extraordinary fidelity and essential service. Those to whom it was awarded were permitted to wear on the facings over the left breast the figure of a heart in purple cloth or silk, edged with a narrow lace or binding.

Protection in Chairs

Early medieval chairs were really small chests with removable backs and armpeces, writes Estelle H. Ries, in "Mother-Wit." Later these became permanent parts and were usually very high at the backs and deep at the sides. This was not for ornamental purposes, but for protection against drafts. Such a form was essential to comfort in medieval dwellings in northerly climates, whether cottages or castles, for their crude structure and ill-fitting doors and window casings did not keep out the gusts of wind that blew through every crevice.

Spanish Olive Wealth

Spain grows an immense quantity of olives. Spanish olives supply close to a quarter of a million tons of olive oil each year. That is about one-third of the olive oil produced in the world. Some of the oil from Spanish olives is used in making castile soap. This soap has the name of a large tree in Spain. Many fruit trees are "old" at the age of thirty, but the olive tree at thirty has hardly started on its career. Olive trees live through the centuries, some of them being from five hundred to seven hundred years old. Olives picked green are not fit to eat until they are soaked in a liquid containing lye, washed clean, and placed in salt water.

Add Substance in Soups

Cabbage Soup Two pounds beef shank, 2 pounds cabbage, 1 pound yellow turnip. Chop all vegetables fine, in chopping bowl. Cover with water and add beef bone. Let come to boil; simmer slowly 3 hours, add salt, pepper, 1 teaspoon sugar, after one hour's cooking.

Bean Soup Take left-over beans and add water, using your judgment according to the amount of beans you have; let stew about half to three-quarters of an hour; put through a strainer, add 1 can of tomato soup, 1/2 can of cold water, set over the fire and beat with an egg-beater slowly until ready to serve.

Onion Soup One quart of milk, 6 large onions, yolks of four eggs, 3 tablespoons of butter, 1 large tablespoon of flour, 1 cupful of cream, salt and pepper. Put the butter in a frying pan. Cut the onions into thin slices and drop in the butter. Stir until they begin to cook, then cover tight and set back where they will simmer, but not burn, for half an hour.

Now put the milk on to boil, and then add the dry flour to the onions, and stir constantly for three minutes over the fire. Then turn the mixture into the milk and cook 15 minutes. Rub the soup through a strainer, return to the fire, season with salt and pepper. Beat the yolks of four eggs well, add the cream to them and stir into the soup. Cook three minutes, stirring constantly. Serve hot.

Celery Soup One bunch celery, leaves and all, cut fine (not with food chopper), 2 medium onions, 2 heaping tablespoons butter, 2 quarts water. When well cooked, pour in 2 cups strained tomatoes, add a teaspoon sugar, salt and pepper to taste. Thicken very little with 1 level tablespoon cornstarch diluted with 1/4 cup water and mixed thoroughly before adding to soup. Cook three minutes more and serve.

Quick Fish Soup One and one-half cups cooked or canned fish (flaked), 1 1/2 tablespoons butter, 3 cups milk, 1 1/2 cups cracker crumbs, salt and pepper. Heat milk, add fish, butter and seasonings. Then add crumbs and cook slowly for five minutes. Serve hot.

Lawyer: "It would be better if you could prove an alibi. Did anybody see you at the time of the crime?" Client: "Fortunately, no."

"You couldn't see a man starve, could you, lady?" "Not very well. I've come out without my glasses."

Paper Towels Growing more popular every day for use In The Kitchen

FIRST just a few women started using paper towels in the kitchen. But they liked them and told their friends. Soon the number spread, and daily grows larger and larger.

If it were only to save you the time and work of washing the linen kitchen towels—and the wear and tear on them, too—it would pay you to use Onliwon Paper Towels, for they only cost 1/4 of a cent a towel. But there are more than a score of uses for these soft, absorbent, sanitary Paper Towels. It's this wide variety of uses that has made them grow so rapidly in popularity.

Besides drying the face and hands, and the five uses illustrated in this advertisement, Onliwon Paper Towels are fine for drying meats after washing, mopping up spilled liquids, removing fats from soups, draining lettuce, polishing metal ware and silverware, ironing grease from clothing. Ask your dealer or write The E. B. Eddy Company, Limited, Hull, Quebec, for their folder showing twenty-four uses.

The Hidden Chateau

A Canadian Story by Frank Giolma

"And now," Cartwright said, "as soon as they all had arrived, I went seated and the door was shut, that we're all here, we'll get down to business." Nobody spoke for a moment, then Morden said: "So far as the servants are concerned, sir, I have to say that I've had three men who I can thoroughly trust on duty all day as well as last night. I've gone over again what everyone was doing yesterday afternoon and can report again that I'm certain, sir, that none of the servants are implicated in the robbery, or the murder, or the fact that everyone was doing, and where they were and have been ever since, all; that is, of course, except the sick water under Dr. Tomlin's care in room fourteen. My men are on duty now and will remain at their posts all night, so nobody can possibly come through our quarters without us knowing about it."

"Thanks, Morden," Cartwright replied. "I've checked up on the staff myself and am sure you're right. Anyone else got anything to report?" "This detective business or sleuthing or whatever you call it, gets into a fellow's blood," Phil Landon remarked a little sheepishly. "When Morden and I came off duty, this morning, I had a sneeze and then, then go Morden's consent and went prowling all over the Chateau below stairs. You know there's a great basement where the grub's kept. It's like a church crypt and we thought it would be just the place for a man to hide. All kinds of dark holes and corners down there and passages leading from one storeroom to another. We didn't find any trace of anyone hiding, although we went everywhere and when we returned, Morden told Morden, he said most quietly that you'd been down there with him yourself this morning, Cartwright. That made us feel rather like silly fools, you know."

"Not a bit of it," Cartwright replied. "I told Morden to let me know you search around and not to say we had already been there. If you had known we had been, you'd either have not gone or been careless, and it's just as likely that you'd find some clue as that you didn't. I would have helped of all of you and it's much the best for each one to feel he's going over fresh ground."

"That's a different matter," Landon answered with obvious relief. "I told Tommy I didn't think Morden would go on to try and waste our time." "I wouldn't think of trying to do such a thing, sir," Morden protested in horror. "Good! Anything from you, Nash?" Cartwright asked. "Only that Halburton and I went into conference, so to speak, on the doings of all the other members of the club and the guests. We already knew what a lot of them were doing yesterday afternoon and got tabs on the others, and just as sure as none of the members or guests were implicated, to use Morden's excellent phrase, as he is regarding the staff. The only man we know nothing about in the members' quarters is the sick water in room fourteen. As Morden says, he, of course, is in Dr. Tomlin's care, and so, out of the question."

"The finger of suspicion, Doctor," Cartwright said with a laugh, "is beginning to point towards your patient." "So it seems," Dr. Tomlin replied, "but I'm afraid it will have to go to somebody else. Though as someone has committed murder, I don't know of anyone at the moment whom I would rather see than the man convicted of the crime than the man in room fourteen, that is, of course, presuming he killed Arthur Selwyn. But I am afraid the supposition is entirely impossible. He's locked in the room. A Yale lock, you know, to which there are only two keys. I have one here, and the other is in Mr. Skues's private safe." Mr. Skues nodded assent. "There's a window," Dr. Tomlin added, "but I have had strong wooden bars put over it and they've not been tampered with. The man's a typical bit of the human wreckage one finds on the Pacific Coast," he continued.

"Calls himself Jones, presumably because that isn't his name. High strung, nervous, irritable, drug addict. I'm having to give him some of the hair of the dog that's bit him, but am reducing the amount daily. If I had not been able to do this—due to the excellent pharmacology you give at this clinic—he would have gone off his head. As it is, I think I shall be able to get him back to a reasonably healthy condition, at least while he is entirely under my care. But then, of course, just as soon as he is free, he'll go again. They all do. A man I should say who has lost all sense of the meaning of right and wrong. Just the very type of man we could all suspect, but for one reason, and that is he's been locked up safe and sound in room fourteen."

"He makes an interesting human study, I would give a lot for the real record of such a man's life. But that is always impossible. Men like him would never keep to the plain and simple truth even if they were sane, of course, they can't, for nobody who has sunk in the social scale has the courage to tell the reason or reasons. At least, that's my experience, and I've seen quite a little of the seamy side of life in our great cities and elsewhere. But then, I'm getting garrulous in my old age and Sergeant Cartwright wants to get on with the business in hand."

"Not a bit of it, Doctor," Cartwright replied. "I've got to own I'm beginning to wonder a little about your patient myself. I thought perhaps he might be fooling you or something. Now I know I can dismiss all thought of him."

"Entirely," Dr. Tomlin agreed, re-lighting his pipe.

"I suppose," Miss Dwight, Cartwright remarked, "it's hardly fair to ask about your activities, as you only joined our force this afternoon. Miss Dwight, gentlemen, has consented to help us. You will all agree that to say very well be able to render invaluable aid. As I said just now, she only joined up, so to speak, late this afternoon."

"I don't know whether it's worth reporting or not," Miss Dwight replied as Cartwright hesitated for a moment, "but I did hear something after dinner that seemed rather strange. It appears that this morning Mrs. Smyth asked the housekeeper to give her another suite, as she felt nervous in her present one since the robbery. Her belongings were moved within half an hour to one of the west balcony and early this afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Johnson
