The Hunchback of Notre Dame as an animated musical? Stop the Disneyfication of world culture

Souffrons, mais souffrons sur les cimes.

Victor Hugo

BUSINESS NEWS: Nineteen ninety-five has been the biggest year in history for corporate mergers and acquisitions. Wendy married Tim Horton. Walt Disney Co. bought several newspapers, a few radio stations, and the ABC TV network to make it the largest entertainment company in the world. It already owns a hockey franchise, bought into professional baseball with one quarter of the California Angels and will get into pro football whenever the opportunity arises. It is building an amateur sports complex at Disney World along with an Indy 200 raceway.

Is this what happens when history ends with the triumph of capitalism over socialism?

Disney already owns half of Southern California, most of Florida and a good chunk of French countryside. Why not go whole hog and buy their own country where they can run a government of the company, by the company and for the company. I'd like to suggest Australia. Lots of sandy beaches, furry things with pockets, duck-billed mammals laying eggs. Should be a theme park in there somewhere.

Who's Who By Tadeusz Letarte

They are currently turning the cartoon feature Beauty and the Beast into a Broadway musical. But the news that troubles me most is that The Hunchback of Notre Dame is being produced as an animated musical. Composer Alan Mencken told the press, "There are a lots of laughs in Hunchback! We have singing and dancing gargoyles." Indeed! And perhaps a production number in the Court of Miracles? where the armless and legless beggars, the halt and the lame, the stunted, twisted and diseased dregs of meedieval Paris gather in the evenings?

Hunchback is a great favorite of mine since I first read Hugo's masterpiece as a teenager and then clambered all over the roof of Notre Dame de Paris wishing I had something to throw down on the tourist below.

There's a saying around Hollywood that 'Good books make bad movies' but the 1930s version is a classic despite the fact that if I were casting Quasimodo, Charles Laughton's name is not one that would spring immediately to mind. Lon Chaney, perhaps but Laughton?

The 1950s version, starring Anthony Quinn and Gina Lollobrigida should also have been a stinker but was closer to the book and also triumphed. I haven't a copy handy and the Lennoxville Library leans more towards Stephen King and Danielle Steel, but if memory serves, the book ends with the hanging of Esmeralda (the executioner leaping onto her lovely shoulders to hasten her end) and, her boy thrown into a pit. Quasimodo disappeared.

Many years later, her bones are discovered with his twisted ones nearby. Now, by all that's sacred, how can Disney turn that into lighthearted entertainment without destroying a literary masterpiece? Is this also what happens when history ends? The Disneyfication of the world culture? Jeepers!

Assman keeps going, and going... Gag hasn't run out of steam

REGINA (CP) — Even Broadway Joe has Assmania!

On Monday night's edition of David Letterman's talk show, former NFL great Joe Namath joined in the ribbing of Regina gas jockey Dick Assman, 61.

In a mock commercial produced by Letterman's staff, Namath held a football against a backdrop of a Petro-Canada sign, threw the ball and declared: "Nobody's got a better arm than Dick Assman. I'm Joe Namath, and I'm a Dick Assmaniac."

The long-running gag started a month ago when Letterman showed off a newspaper ad for Assman's gas station. The talk-show host promised to make his subject Canada's greatest tourist attraction.

ONE OF FEW

He hasn't been far wrong. Letterman revealed Monday that Assman's Petro-Canada station will be listed as "one of the few attractions on the Prairie provinces" in the next edition of the popular Let's Go USA travel guide.

He also showed off an entire line of Assman merchandise — including stickers, T-shirts and bottled water sporting Assman's gap-toothed smile.

The audience saved the biggest laugh for a pair of black shorts with Assman's first name printed on the front and his last name on the back.

Assman was in Toronto in a publicity swing but his boss and travelling partner, Scott Gosselin, said Assman likely saw the sketch.

"I don't think Dick watches American football, but he will definitely have heard of (Namath)," Gosselin said.

Hip rocker needs a hip

TORONTO (CP) — Rocker Eddie Van Halen, whose band arrives this weekend to play at the Molson Amphitheatre, says he's performing on a pulverized hip.

"I have what's called a vascular necrosis, which means the top of the ball on my hip joint is dead bone," Van Halen said. "It's just from years of drinking and jumping on it and not feeling the damage I was doing."

"The thing is, I haven't had a drink now in 10 months — actually, Aug. 2 was my 10-month anniversary — and the doctor says there's a slim chance it could get better."

If it doesn't, Van Halen will get an artificial hip, something he doesn't seem to mind.

"The quality of life sucks," he said. "I can't run, I can't exercise, I can't play golf, I can't jump on stage. Give me a new hip — I'll be back to normal."

98 Days of Summer

By Rita Legault

Lakeside, Knowlton, JOE 1V0. Or FAX it to: (819) 569-3945 or (514) 243-5155. The deadline is next Wednesday, August 16, at 4 p.m. Winners will be chosen at random from the responses and will be notified by phone.

Sunil is on vacation this week, enjoying his days of summer. Colleague Rita Legault offers these suggestions for this week as your summer slowly winds to an end.

Your Days of Summer list for the week

Day 71 — Friday, August 18: If you haven't already seen it, catch the hottest play of the summer in the Townships, Heat Wave, playing at Theatre Lac Brome. It is without a doubt the best thing seen on local stages in a long, long time. This weekend is your last chance to catch it, so don't miss it.

Day 72 — Saturday, August 19: As you may have guessed, summer theatre in one of my favorite summer activities. If you've already seen Heat Wave, discover one of the many other excellent playhouses in the region. Challenge yourself by attending a French play. You can also take a chance that your name won't be pulled in our contest and catch the The Wild Guys at the Piggery in North Hatley or see Pizza Man which plays this weekend only at the Echo Art Theater Barn in Brome.

Day 73 — Sunday, August 20: Pack a picnic basket and take a leisurely old-fashioned Sunday drive through the countryside. Take an unknown highway and see where it leads you. Get lost on a winding dirt road through picturesque fields of ripe corn and waving hay and have fun finding your way back home again.

Day 74 — Monday, August 21: Yep, it's back to work, but that needn't ruin your day. Convince your favorite colleague to go to lunch, even if it isn't payday. Discover an exotic new restaurant, order the spiciest thing on the menu, and get back to the office late. Tell the boss I said it was okay.

Day 75 — Tuesday, August 22: Dust off your stationery, search for a pen which isn't out of ink, and head outside for the shade of your favorite tree. Write that long-promised letter to that special relative, that long lost friend, or, if you don't have any friends or relatives, write your MP, MNA, or least favorite politician. I'm sure they've done something recent-tly to tick you off. Give 'em hell.

Day 76 — Wednesday, August 23: Stop on the way home from work and pick up a lovely bottle of red wine, a freshly baked baguette, some pâté campagne, garden fresh tomatoes, and some ripe cheese. Drag a table out onto the lawn or the balcony, cover it with a checkered tablecloth, adorn it with a candle in a wine bottle, and pretend you're dining in a café on the banks of the Seine in Paris. Finish off your meal with a sinfully delicious French pastry and a cup of rich, dark roasted coffee with hot milk. All you'll be missing for the truly French experience is a rude waiter.

Day 77 — Thursday, August 24: Pick up your Mom, a favorite aunt or a special friend and drop by Uplands Museum in Lennoxville for a stroll in the gardens and afternoon tea served from 3 to 4:30 p.m. After washing down your cakes and other assorted goodies all lovingly baked by the staff at Uplands — don't miss the current slice cookies — finish your visit with a fascinating glimpse of the Townships' very first inhabitants in the upstairs exhibit entitled "A 6,000 year voyage: Archeology in the Eastern Townships".

98 Days Of Summer is a celebration of everyone's favorite time of year, and the upcoming 100th anniversary of the Record as a daily newspaper.

Keith Thome, Cary Lawrence, Marcel Jeannin and Joanna Noyes star in Heat Wave at Theatre Lac Brome.

New exhibits at Ulverton's mill

SHERBROOKE — Ulverton's Woolen Mill is presenting five new exhibits which will help bring you back in history to a time when the Ulverton River powered not only the woolen mill but also the local economy.

A new panel at the historical site locates all of the 18 wool, saw and flour mills built on Ulverton's river.

Not only was the river needed for its power, but the water was also used in the transformation of the wool. Another new exhibit shows the steps in which water was needed to process the wool at the beginning of this century.

The mill also has an impressive collection of more than 35 spinning wheels — probably the biggest collection in Canada.

This collection called: "The Spinning Wheel an Artist's Works, A Craftman's Tool" regroups many different types of spinning wheels which come from all parts of the province and which were often homemade.

Those willing to try and spin their own little piece of wool will get the chance to do so in the craftman's workshop which has just been laid out. With the help of some craftsmen you will see how the wool is processed by weaving looms.

Also on display is the original working machinery, such as the impressive industrial spinning mule, the country, card, the twister and the coner.

Ulverton's Woolen Mill is organizing many different activities on weekends, such as a farmer's market on August 20 and an exhibition of antique cars on September 30. For more information, call (819) 826-3157.

Mystery writer still not recognized at home

The Joy of Fielding: Real women; real Canadian

By Lee-Anne Goodman
CP Life-Entertainment Editor

TORONTO (CP) — It's not that Canadian mystery writer Joy Fielding has anything against men.

Sure, there's usually a good louse or two in most of her books, including her latest thriller Don't Cry Now (Doubleday, $27.95). And it's often the husband or the ex-husband of the imperiled heroine.

But Fielding, 51, swears she's a big fan of men and matrimony.

"My marriage keeps getting better and better, so maybe I'm exorcising all of my demons," Fielding said with a laugh in a recent interview.

"I've been married 21 years to the same man and he just gets better all the time . . . so I don't think that husbands are bad and wives are wonderful, but I am very pro-women."

NEW BOOKS

Don't Cry Now is the story of Bonnie Wheeler, who's a suspect in the murder of her husband's ex-wife. As she goes about trying to figure out who pumped a bullet into the boozy

Joan, Bonnie unearths disturbing truths about her childhood, her step-children, her best friend and her seemingly perfect marriage.

The novel lacks the quick pace and eerie plot twists of 1991's See Jane Run, arguably Fielding's best work and certainly among her most critically acclaimed. It earned rave reviews from critics across North America and was made into a highly rated U.S. television movie.

But it's still a pleasure to read Fielding for the deft touch she has with female characters. They have strong friendships, believable mother-daughter relationships and their dialogue rings true.

"I have a lot of very close women friends and I really value women's friendships, I really like women," says Fielding, slim and animated in a black-and-white check suit.

Believable female characters are all too scarce in a lot of popular fiction, adds Fielding, who has a worldwide reputation after almost 25 years of writing psychological thrillers.

She's also had her books translated into 15 languages.

"John Grisham's central female characters ring about as true as Bugs Bunny — they're not real people. Whenever I'm reading most books by modern male fiction writers, the minute they get to the female characters they lose me.

"I think: 'What's the matter with this character? Something is wrong.' And then I realize, of course, that's not the way women think, that's not the way women act."

Fielding is so committed to the realistic portrayal of women in her fiction she admits to bristling when she hears her books described as merely "good reads."

"A good read has a slightly condescending tone to it. You know, it's a good read BUT . . ."

"I think I'm more than a good read. I think my books have a certain level of insight, especially into the roles of modern-day women. I think that I am saying things in there about society and women's role in society and inter-personal relationships and mother-daughter relationships."

Fielding also bemoans the reluctance by many Canadian critics to celebrate this country's writers.

"I think it's unfortunate that we don't do a little bit more in terms of promoting our own talent. I go into a bookstore in the States and I'm treated like royalty. Here, I could stand on my head and do cartwheels and no one would notice."

Perhaps that's because a lot of people don't know she's Canadian.

"It's not like I've tried to make a secret of it," she says.

But her books have all been set in U.S. cities. That may change soon, since she's proposed to her publisher that some stories be set in her hometown of Toronto.

Who is Joy Fielding?

A sketch of writer Joy Fielding:

BORN — March 18, 1945, in Toronto.

EDUCATION — Attended the University of Toronto.

CAREER — Dabbled in acting for a number of years, including a stint on Gunsmoke and the Canadian film Winter Kept Us Warm.

NOVELS — The Best of Friends, 1972; The Transformation, 1976; Trance, 1978; Kiss Mommy Goodbye, 1980; The Other Woman, 1982; Life Penalty, 1984; The Deep End, 1986; Good Intentions, 1989; See Jane Run, 1991; Tell Me No Secrets, 1993; Don't Cry Now, 1995.

PERSONAL — Married to Warren Fielding, a corporate lawyer, since 1974. They have two teenaged daughters, Shannon and Annie.

QUOTE — "I go into a bookstore in the States and I'm treated like royalty. Here, I could stand on my head and do cartwheels and no one would notice."

Author defends horror writing genre

Vampire volumes aren't pulp — Anne Rice

By Conway Daly

MONTREAL (CP) — Author Anne Rice is busy pushing the fifth instalment of The Vampire Chronicles, spreading the word that horror writing doesn't necessarily mean trash.

Some other writers avoid the book-promotion circuit, or enter it with great reluctance. Not Rice.

Arriving for a book-signing clad in black bridal gown and veil, Rice steps from the plush red interior of an old-fashioned caleche. It's drawn by a black horse, and the coachman sports a fine top hat.

Rice waves to the applauding crowd on the sidewalk, then enters a book store to face questions about Memnoch the Devil.

It's part of a series that began with Interview with the Vampire, the 1976 novel that introduced Lestat, the fanged one played by Tom Cruise in the recent film version.

Much of the new book deals with an ingenious theological argument presented by Satan (here known as Memnoch) that he really cares more about humanity than God ever did.

"I studied a great deal of Scripture and biblical works and went down deep into my tradition," said Rice, adding that her hometown of New Orleans is full of people who have seen ghosts.

NOT PULP

Rice, whose 16 books include a trilogy about witches as well as pornography and erotic fiction, said her vampire volumes aren't pulp and aren't just about vampires.

Her tales have a lot in common with the stories on almost every TV newscast, she said.

For example, Lestat and his fellow Children of the Night "see everything as beautiful but they have to kill to stay alive. I think we're a lot like that ourselves.

"It really is about us. Vampirism is a metaphor for affluence, the terrible affluence we have in these countries while people starve in others. We drink their blood."

For someone who deals in vampires and other ghastly creations, Rice is quite chipper.

She said she relishes the chance to meet readers, especially when they turn up for book-signing sessions wearing "lace and jewels and antique silks and satins."

Writing Memnoch "allowed me to get intimate with my fears. My greatest fear is that there isn't a God paying attention to us. I can't quite figure it out."

As for other personal worries, Rice said she's no longer afraid of the dark or of death. "I hate to bring it up, but we're all going to die, sooner or later."

360-year-old book sells for $38,000

Champlain book sets record

MONTREAL (CP) — A book by Samuel de Champlain printed about 360 years ago has sold for $38,000 at a Montreal auction — a record price for a book sold in Canada.

About nine people started bidding for the 1632 volume, Les Voyages de la Nouvelle-France Occidentale, Dictionnaire de la France, at the Tuesday evening auction.

The winner, a Montreal collector, does not want his name made public.

The book is an eye-witness account of Champlain's travels among the Algonquins, Hurons and Montagnais between 1603 and 1629.

The book was missing an original map, and was expected to sell for about $10,000.

Six years ago, a copy of the same edition in similar condition sold in England for about $6,000.

"It was all over in about five minutes. When the bidding came to $27,000 the atmosphere was very charged," said auction house official Chantal Montgomery.

"Everyone held their breath. There were only two people left and the price went even higher and higher. There were goose bumps — it was so exciting."

Porcelain is canvass to china painter

Semenok serves up her art on plates

By Tanya Maier

SHERBROOKE — From the way she talks about china painting, Mary Semenok gives listeners the impression there's nothing to it.

"All you need is a good imagination. If you can sew, knit or crochet, you can paint," she said.

However, for someone who has never painted, the talk of mixing oils, paint mediums, firings, cones, kilns, cross thatching, and Kazan squirrel blenders (brushes) can be rather mindboggling.

Yet, Semenok insists that it's a learned art.

It was in exchange for a personal favor that she learned how to paint on porcelain 15 years ago. Friend Helen Burnham of Guelph, Ontario said to her, "If you help me out, I'll teach you to paint."

Since those first lesson, Semenok has attended two seminars by Dan Wolf from Philadelphia, the teacher of the teachers.

JUST A HOBBY

China painters in the Eastern Townships are rare. Semenok has been asked to teach, but declined because she doesn't want her hobby to take away from the time and support she likes to give to her husband.

According to Semenok, her husband Phil is very interested in her work and encourages her.

"It makes him so happy when he comes home and smells paint," she said.

At the present time, she doesn't make any profit from her work — only enough to pay for materials.

Despite the fact that she doesn't advertise, word of mouth brings in quite a few orders, especially for wedding gifts. Her popularity is such that her plates can be found in every province of the country.

Although most of her work is done freehand, the value of knowing how to trace a design onto a porcelain object is not to be underestimated. Even experienced artists can employ tracing when customers bring in a drawing or picture that they want duplicated on china.

The image is first traced out onto tracing paper. Then carbon paper is placed under the tracing paper and the two are put on top of the piece of china which receives the design as it is retraced.

Semenok uses a number of pre-mixed, purchased paints but also mixes her own for special colors.

Paint powder is blended with mixing oil with a brush on a palette. A brush is then saturated with painting medium and loaded with the special color.

Loading the brush with two different colors can be particularly effective when doing flowers. One lighter shade and one darker shade on the same brush for the same stroke imitates the natural shadowing on flower petals.

After each layer of paint, the object is fired in a kiln.

Semenok usually works with a 0-17 cone, a small object about an inch long that is placed inside the kiln with the porcelain during the firing and cone controls the heat.

When the kiln reaches 1700 degrees Fahrenheit, after about an hour, the cone bends into a U-shape. There is a small peephole in the side of the kiln made so the artist can check to see if the cone is bent and when it is, the machine is turned off.

Depending on the effect desired, a porcelain item generally takes from two to five layers of paint and the same number of firings.

Although Semenok tries to make it sound simple, she concedes that it takes a lot of patience to paint china. Some of her comments expose the sentiments of a typical artist.

"You should never feel you've done okay because then you'll never improve," Semenok says.

And she never stops looking for things in her surroundings to provide her with inspirations for her work.

"When you're out driving around you see things you've never seen before," she said. "You're always looking for things that would look good on a plate."

The real dilemma is deciding what to see Three winners and a dud at Shaw Festival

By Ian Gaskell

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE — Scattered through the charming and picturesque town of Niagara-on-the-Lake, the Shaw Festival's three theatres provide distinctly different thespian experiences, from the admittedly light and unchallenging to very serious drama.

What the productions generally have in common, however, are strong ensemble acting, inventive direction, and imaginative design. Couple these production values with the available repertoire of fascinating nineteenth and early twentieth-century plays that constitutes the festival's mandate, and you have a reason for the company's high reputation in the world of theatre.

As with Stratford, the real dilemma at Shaw is deciding what to see. Studying the season brochure is a bit like gazing at a dessert menu: you've finally got to make a choice. And unless you're blessed with large quantities of time (and funds), you have to content yourself with only a small sampling of the available offerings.

SHAW, WILDE AND COWARD

Of the ten productions presented this year, I opted for two by George Bernard Shaw, The Philanderer and You Never Can Tell, Oscar Wilde's An Ideal Husband and Noel Coward's are a few impressions.

Written in 1893 but not performed until 1907, The Philanderer by Shaw is not one of his better-known pieces: all the more reason for seeing it. The play is anthologised in Plays Unpleasant, Shaw's volume of pieces peopled by disreputable characters and dealing with apparently distasteful themes. This piece, subtitled a "topical comedy" explores the serious subject of sex in a very light-hearted and un-Victorian fashion. Shaw also tackles issues like Ibsenism, the new woman, and, in a delightfully savage attack, the entire medical profession.

In general, this is the kind of the thing that the Shaw Festival does best. A tight ensemble, impeccably costumed, articulating the sharp, pointed dialogue of the playwright's discursive prose in an intimate and cleverly designed setting.

BACK IN TIME

On entering the small Court House Theatre, we were invited on stage to "view the artifacts" — late 19th century theatre memorabilia belonging to Joseph Cuthbertson, Shaw's fictional theatre critic. A nice conceit — as the opening of the play sends us back in time a hundred years, and the museum becomes Cuthbertson's drawing room. With display cases removed, the artifacts are no longer curiosities but simply the ornaments of nineteenth century daily life. And on the previously empty sofa Leonard Charteris and Grace Tranfield are discovered in hot embrace.

Simon Bradbury is an athletic Charteris, vaulting over the furniture just as he leaps over the conventions of normal social behavior. While everyone has brilliant moments, Bradbury carries the show with his superb comic timing. His relaxed, almost laconic delivery alternating with fits of frenetic angst.

You don't often leave the theatre wishing that a play had lasted longer. To my regret, this particular performance, unlike some of those scheduled, did not include the seldom presented Fourth Act.

A DISAPPOINTMENT

The second Shaw, You Never Can Tell, is a disappointment. This production presented at the larger Festival Theatre suffers by contrast with The Philanderer. Whereas the latter play is unabashedly and comfortably theatrical, this offering seems embarrassed by the space it needs to fill.

The production looks nice. It opens to a beautifully painted drop of the bounding main, made boundless by enormous reflecting panels right and left. Unfortunately, Act One is supposed to take place in a dentist's office. The silly solution, Normand Browning and Helen Taylor star in the Shaw Festival's production of Oscar Wilde's An Ideal Husband.

to place the dentist's chair on the beach and to make the waiting room a carnival booth, quickly entangles everyone in a design concept gone wrong. The actors, making their entrances from inside the booth/waiting room, emerge into sunshine like so many blinking time-travellers entering a parallel universe from Dr. Who's tardis. (They've even gone to the trouble of using an elevator to get the actor's invisibly into the booth.)

STIFF, UNPERSUASIVE

In a question and answer session after the play (for which a large part of the audience stayed) one of the actors claimed that director Christopher Newton had asked for a large acting style. He used the expression "opera without music". Think about that for a moment. What an unpleasant prospect. Take away the music from opera and you are left with stiff, declamatory, unpersuasive performance. Which, is pretty much how this one felt.

Also at the Festival Theatre, Noel Coward's Calvalcade is frankly spectacular. This is a production dominated by its scenography. Looming over the stage are three vast projection screens, the centre one flying in and out to allow for scene changes. The latter are carried out by means of a revolve that whisks actors and props on and off. Vast in scope the play covers 30 years of the declining British Empire, from the end of the previous century through the First World War to the promise of the Second.

Its special magic comes from the cinematic substitution of one fast scene by the next in a collage of images. Just for example: a railing pivots into view, autumnal projections, black clad figures, moody lighting, some sombre music, and we have the funeral of Queen Victoria. This production, by itself, is worth the trip.

BLACK COMEDY

Back at the Court House, Oscar Wilde's An Ideal Husband receives a sharp production at the hands of director Duncan McIntosh. This is really quite a dark comedy: the political career of a highly respected politician is to be destroyed by a blackmailing schemer, a woman with a past. All ends well, of course, as the problems are neatly and happily resolved in the tradition of the "well-made play".

Perhaps the mellifluous-voiced Alan Gray takes his character, the narcissistic dandy Viscount Goring, one small mincing step beyond the pale. Goring is, of course, a fairly obvious projection of Wilde, himself. But he should not, in the world of this play, seem such an apparent devotee of the "love that dare not speak its name". However, it is through him and Nora McLellan as Lady Markby (a somewhat less threatening version of Lady Bracknell), that the sunnier world of Ear-nest lightens the piece. The epigrammatic bon mots come fast and thick. I especially liked (the non-authorial?) judgement on pessimists — "I don't like the way they do their hair."

You can't win them all, I suppose; but three out of four is a good average.

Ian Gaskell is technical director of Centennial Theatre at Bishop's University.

TV WEEK

Hingsburger on sex, truth, and videotape

TVOntario documentary to feature Townshipper

By Erin Kaye

On Thursday, August 17, the cameras start rolling in Eastman as TVOntario begins filming a documentary on Township resident Dave Hingsburger.

Hingsburger is one of the people the TV station is featuring in a series about scientists and original thinkers.

The program will focus on the work Hingsburger has been doing with people who have developmental disabilities. An acknowledged expert in the area of sexuality and developmental disabilities, Hingsburger's work in the last few years teaching people with disabilities how to protect themselves from sexual abuse has been lauded for its emphasis on prevention and protection.

Hingsburger does more than just theorize in front of a computer screen. He works directly with people with disabilities and their care providers.

Last year Hingsburger provided workshops for over 900 people with developmental disabilities and "somewhere around 10,000" staff, parents or other care providers on the subject of sexuality, abuse prevention and disability.

He has documented his work in 10 books (all but one still in print) and over 50 professional publications. This work came to the notice of TVOntario. Some preliminary interviews were done and from them they decided to feature Mr. Hingsburger in one of their shows.

"Actually, I am quite nervous about this kind of exposure Hingsburger said in an interview. "I have made some training films before, most recently for the Kennedy foundation, and some brief television and radio interviews but never has the focus been so much on my life and work."

"In fact, I think I might bore them a bit!" he added.

When talking about his work, Hingsburger becomes more passionate.

"People with developmental disabilities are the most victimized group in our society and little has been done, until recently, to address the problem," he said.

"We clinicians, who say we care, have got to start making some changes in how we do things. My work has been to develop an approach for teaching people with disabilities to be their own first line of defence," he adds. "Clearly we — service providers — have failed. We have to give people with disabilities the skills, language and power, to keep themselves safe."

The sessions Hingsburger runs for people with disabilities have been very successful.

"The idea for these workshops came from a woman in British Columbia and then the actual workshops were funded by the Secretary of State," he explained. "Linda Perry and I travelled all over British Columbia training people with disabilities how to say 'no' and staff and parents how to hear the word 'no.'"

That training took off and now it has been offered in a variety of states and several provinces.

VICTIMS

"When doing a workshop in Windsor I met a group of people with disabilities who were so powerful in their discussion of their personal victimization," Hingsburger said. "More than that they wanted to help other people with disabilities deal with the victimization."

"The memory of them stayed in my mind for a long time. With a bit of organization we have arranged for them to videotape their stories and advice."

TVOntario will be part of the crew filming the process of putting this work together."

To make the documentary, TVOntario will be filming Hingsburger at home in the Townships, and at work in a number of cities in Ontario. His home base is Quebec but he works throughout the U.S. and Canada.

While he began his clinic work in Toronto and works across North America, Hingsburger chose to live in the Townships.

PLACE TO BREATHE

"After all those years working with people with disabilities who either were victimized or victimized others, I realized I needed some breathing space," he said. "At the time I moved, I was working all over North America and needed only to be near an airport in order to make a living. One visit to the Townships was enough to sell me."

"I still work at the clinic in Ontario while doing education for people around North America, but here is my home," he adds. "I can sit at my computer and write, sometimes about horrible things, and look out my window into forest. I am reminded that the world that we were given is beautiful."

Since moving to the Townships Hingsburger says his creative output has soared. From his home in Eastman, he has published four books, created two videotapes, as well as writing articles for a variety of magazines, like the United Church Observer, that have nothing to do with disability.

TVOntario expects to film Hingsburger in a variety of settings through the fall and then air the film sometime in January or February.

Coats of arms, crests and floral emblems

Canadian heraldry depicted on stamps

When this country came into being in 1867 it had nothing to identify it as such except to be known as the Dominion of Canada.

In 1868 the original four provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia received arms by royal warrant that combined also served as the great seal of Canada. It was in the form of a shield quartered, bearing the arms of the four provinces.

As each new province was admitted into Confederation, they were assigned arms that were then added to the shield. The design became cluttered and was proclaimed unsatisfactory. Therefore, in 1919 a Canadian committee was formed to search for a distinctive design of a coat-of-arms.

Within a year such a design was forwarded to the College of Arms in London, England for consideration. By royal proclamation King George V assigned armorial bearings to Canada on November 21, 1921. As a nation we were now identifiable through what is known as heraldry.

HEREDITARY SYMBOLS

Heraldry is the science and art that deals with hereditary symbols that are used to distinguish individuals, institutions and corporations. Because they probably originally appeared on shields, these symbols or crests are referred to as armorial bearings. There is a far greater explanation of the word but like the language and terminology of heraldry, must be left to further exploration by the reader.

Heraldry makes for an excellent philatelic topic for a vast amount of material exists and what better place to start than with Canadian stamps. Seeing that our coat-of-arms appears on stamps it would be appropriate to explain the design of these armorial bearings before actually looking into the stamps on which they appear.

Beginning with the shield; three gold lions on a red background in the top left portion represents the arms of England. Next to that in the upper right portion is the arms of Scotland; a red lion rampant on a gold background. Under the arms of England is a silver stringed gold harp on a blue background, the arms of Ireland. Next to that is the arms of France, three fleur-de-lis on a blue background. The point of the shield is made up of a sprig of three red maple leaves on a white background.

NEW COLORS

It's important to note that these maple leaves were changed from green to red in 1957, red being one of our national colors and indicative of autumn.

Supported by the shield is a royal helm in gold that is wreathed with our national colors of red and white surmounted with a crowned gold lion gardant holding a single red maple leaf in the right paw. Centered directly above the lion gardant is the crown of St. Edward.

Facing the coat-of-arms, to the left of the shield is a gold lion rampant with red claws holding a silver lance with gold tassels and gold spear upon which flies the Union Jack. To the right of the shield is a silver unicorn with gold horn, mane and hooves wearing a gold coronet around its neck with gold chains attached. The unicorn is also holding a lance identical to that being held by the lion but flying a flag bearing three fleurs-de-lis. The lion and unicorn are representatives of England and Scotland respectively.

The above described all rest on a carpet of green out of which grows tudor roses, thistle, fleurs-de-lis and shamrocks. All these symbols represent the races that originally settled this country — English, French, Scottish and Irish.

CANADA'S MOTTO

Under the carpet the coat-of-arms is completed with the nation's motto; 'A Mari usque ad Mare' (From Sea to Sea). This was taken from Psalm 78 verse 8 of the King James version of the Bible which reads; "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth".

Pictorial stamps were being issued long before 1921. It is therefore surprising a stamp depicting that new coat of arms was not issued until June 1, 1935.

On that date a dark green 10 cents denomination special delivery express stamp was released. This was followed three years later with a dark carmine stamp of the same design with a 20 cents value. On March 1, 1939 this same stamp was overprinted with a new 10 cents value in black.

On July 1, 1942 Canada issued yet another special delivery express stamp bearing the coat of arms as part of the war effort issue. The design showed the armorial bearings surrounded with the flags of Great Britain and those of the military services and the whole set into a shield. At the end of the war another such stamp was released depicting the coat-of-arms set within a differently designed shield and wreath.

EMBLEMS AND CRESTS

Although many Canadian stamps bear emblems and crests, the most prominent issued is the 1964-1965 provincial flowers and coats-of-arms. The armorial bearings are very descriptive of the provinces and territories they represent. The last stamp of the issue depicts the Canadian coat-of-arms.

It would appear the first stamp of the provincial flowers and coats-of-arms does not belong in the series. The design is a sprig of red maple leaves on a light blue background. At the time however, it was thought this would become the design of our new flag. As it turned out, it wasn't. The design though does belong as part of heraldry because it is taken from the point of the shield within the coat-of-arms.

In 1979 a miniature sheet of twelve stamps depicting provincial and territorial flags was issued. Some of these flags have incorporated a portion of their coat-of-arms within the design. They may be used in a heraldry topical collection. It would be difficult to justify using all the stamps however.

Canada received its new constitution on April 16, 1982. Five years later a stamp depicting the Canadian coat-of-arms was issued to commemorate the event and to mark Law Day. It's a very modern but distinctive design.

INSTITUTIONS

While we have been looking at governmental coats-of-arms, it must be remembered that heraldry also represents individuals and institutions. Some of these are represented on Canadian stamps. On October 28, 1983 the Dalhousie Law School was honored on stamp for the centennial of their existence. The shield or armorial bearings of that institution are incorporated within the design.

Governor General's coat-of-arms

The Boy Scouts and Girl Guides are also institutions with distinctive heraldic bearings. In 1955 a stamp bearing the Scout crest was issued on the occasion of the World Jamboree held at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario. The Guides had a stamp depicting their crest issued in commemoration of their 50th anniversary in 1960.

We have simply looked at a few Canadian stamps with heraldic bearings. If you want to expand on the subject, you need only look at the British Isles. Many of their coats-of-arms are incorporated within ours. If that's not enough then start looking at countries within the British Commonwealth for stamps with various heraldic bearings. There's no end to the subject.

Although it's not necessary, learning the language of heraldry would be advantageous in creating an exhibit on the subject. It certainly is something to consider. Of course, if you do decide to involve yourself in this topic, it is colorful and interesting enough that prompting one to study the language will not be necessary.
