Not Mozart again! That's so tired

How about the theme from Dragon Heart?

By Thomas Ledwell
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Who said orchestral music has to rely on the likes of Mozart or Bach? Sherbrooke's Film Music Orchestra is trying to explode the notion that classically trained musicians have to play classical music.

When the orchestra takes the stage at the University of Sherbrooke's Centre culturel on Monday, the repertoire will include scores from classics of the silver screen.

"It's never played. Nobody plays this music in concerts," said Lise Bellehumeur, the ensemble's director and founder. "We will never play the Fifth of Beethoven or something else like that. We have the mission to make sure this wonderful music, from the movies, is known and played."

Monday's performance will highlight music from such films as Star Wars, Dragon Heart, and a collection of Disney movies. The sheet music isn't always readily available, but members of the orchestra listen to the original sound tracks and transcribe much of the music they perform, said Bellehumeur.

She said she first had thoughts of building an ensemble around music from films a decade ago. The orchestra came together two years ago.

"I had a bunch of people who believed in this kind of orchestra. They went and grabbed musicians from all areas of Sherbrooke," she said, adding the group now boasts a total of 88 members.

Viola player Catherine Nadon joined the group last fall. Like many in the orchestra, Nadon learned her instrument performing Beethoven and Mozart concertos.

After more than 20 years of performing, she said she was losing interest. The orchestra's repertoire has reinvigorated her love of music.

"Classical music, after two or three times, it's like, 'Okay, we did the same concerto five years ago and it's still the same thing.' Now everything is new. It's a breath of fresh air," said Nadon, admitting songs from the Disney films are her

Oil about it

Hydrogenated, modified, palm

By Michelle Magnan
CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

When it comes to oils in packaged foods, everyone seems to have the same question: What does it all mean?

Be they hydrogenated, modified, palm, or something of the sort, oils are complicated. They're also in a lot of baked and packaged goods.

"I have been trying to find out information from food labels that state they have modified vegetable oil or modified palm oil and it seems somewhat confusing," wrote a reader.

It's not just you.

"Fats are confusing, in general," says Andrea Holwegner, a registered dietitian and president of Calgary-based Health Stand Nutrition Consulting.

That's because now that trans fats are public enemy No. 1, food makers are coming up with a slew of less nasty fats to replace them.

"Consumers are becoming more concerned about trans fats because they elevate bad cholesterol and lower good cholesterol. They're bad for your heart," Holwegner says.

"What manufacturers have been doing is taking trans fats out of their products, but they're replacing them with fractionated oils."

Fractionated (or modified) oils, which food makers use to give food the same texture and taste as trans fats, are found in everything from cookies to protein bars. Healthy, unsaturated fats aren't used in packaged or baked goods because they are liquid at room temperature and don't provide the same taste or "mouth feel" as a solid fat. While modified oils are better for you than trans fats, they're still not good for you.

"Modified or fractionated oils are typically saturated fats," Holwegner says. "They're not great for you because saturated fats still elevate bad cholesterol."

But what is a modified oil, exactly?

The reader who wrote in wondered if it was just another term for hydrogenated oil. (Hydrogenation turns unsaturated fatty acids into saturated or trans fats.)

Holwegner says it all depends on the oil and the process. Modified does not necessarily mean hydrogenated.

"It's not really a scientific term, so it depends on what they're doing to it," she says. "You could be talking about a modified olive oil." (Olive oil is known as a healthy fat.)

Alejandro Marangoni, a professor and food scientist at the University of Guelph, says modification can be unhealthy when it involves introducing a saturated fat to the mix. He explains how food makers can modify fats, turning unsaturated, healthy vegetable oils into more solid, saturated substances to give packaged foods taste, texture and to maintain their shelf life.

"If you have something that is liquid and you want to convert it into a solid, you have to add something solid to transform it," he says. "So what are you going to add? (Food makers) will go to Malaysia and buy palm oil," which is a saturated fat.

He says that while manufacturers call it palm oil, it should be called palm fat because it has a solid consistency.

"They add it to the (vegetable) oil, they blend it, and there you go — your solidified oil."

Another process manufacturers use is called interesterification, and it's been around for years.

"It's a chemical process by which you take some of the actual structural components of oil or fat molecules and shove one into the other," says Marangoni. "You have chemically mixed them, whereas the other (solidification process) is just a physical mixing. In the end, you have molecules that aren't really fat or oil molecules anymore. They're something in between."

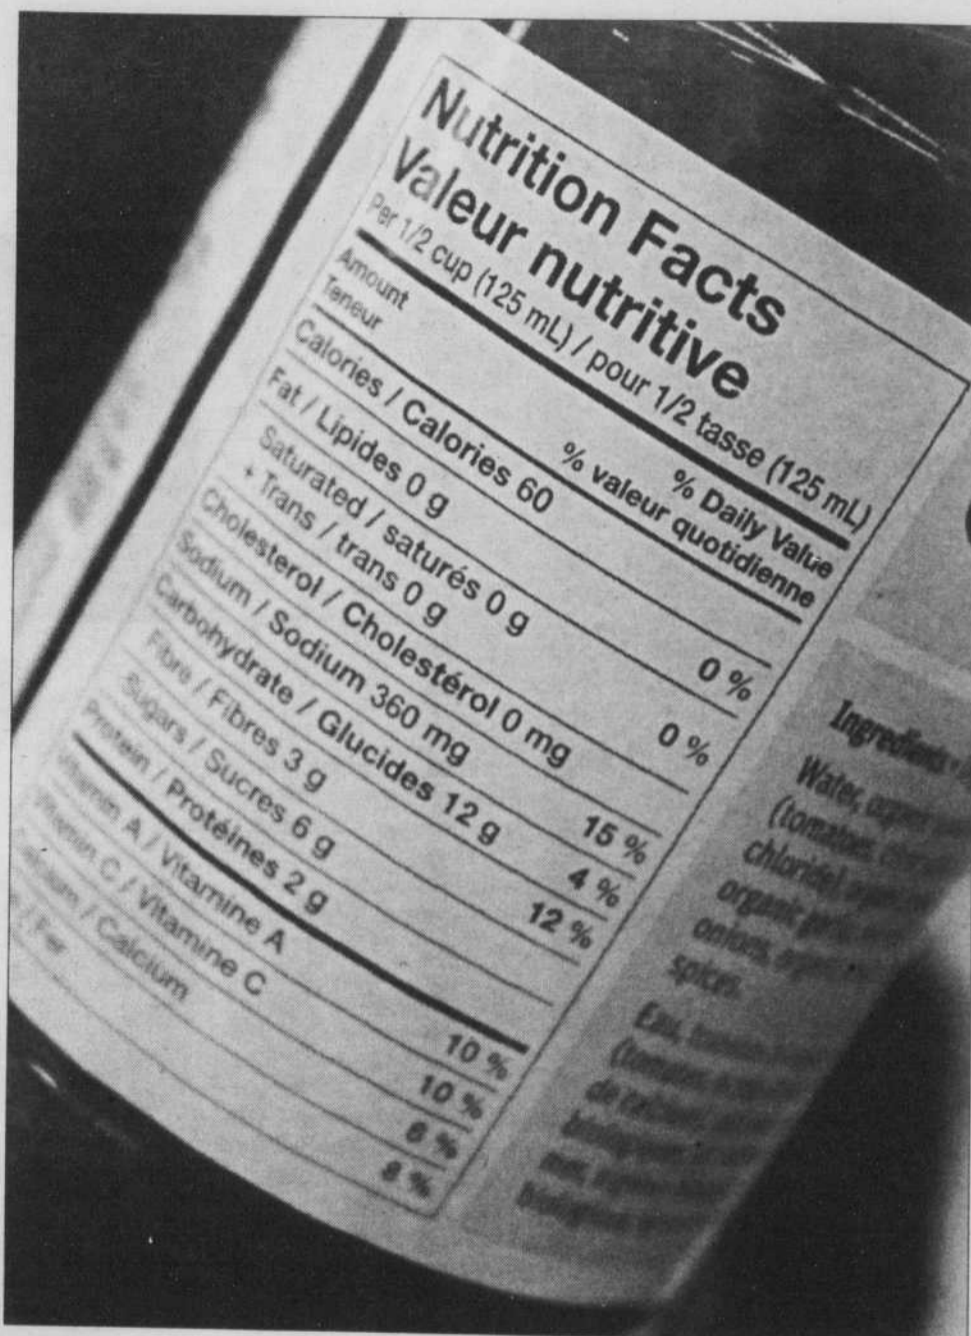

How does interesterification affect health?

"It's all the same crapshoot," he says, adding that he's seen research that shows interesterification has a negative effect on cholesterol, just like any other saturated or trans fat.

So what's a health-conscious consumer to do?

Both Holwegner and Marangoni recommend skipping the ingredient list altogether and focusing on the nutritional label instead. Don't worry about deciphering the specific type of oil in the food, or what's been done to it. Whether the oil is good or bad will be revealed in the label's fats section.

Food

When it comes to packaging, pay attention to the nutritional label.

"Look at the nutritional label to see how much saturated and trans fats are in there, because the ingredient listing is confusing," Holwegner says.

The first and primary fat to avoid is the trans fat. Make sure the foods you buy have none. Saturated fat is the second-most important one to avoid. While your recommended daily intake will depend on a variety of factors like your height, weight and calorie needs (which a registered dietitian can help you determine), use the nutritional information to choose the healthiest products.

For example, compare two brands of crackers. If both have zero trans fats, choose the one with the least amount of saturated fat per serving.

And as time progresses, you can be sure new oils will hit the packaged food scene.

"There will be all sorts of weird stuff coming through the pipeline," Marangoni says. "The one you'll see disappearing is the hydrogenated oil because of the trans fats. Now they're going to have all sorts of oils from soybeans or sunflowers or genetically modified oils."

He emphasizes that no matter what oil is on a food's ingredient list, consumers should pay attention to one thing:

"Go back to the nutritional label — how many saturated and trans fats grams," he says. "Forget about the rest."

Getting to Africa

Art

He wants to make an impact

By Jen Young
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

Trevor McKinven grew up in the small lakeshore town of North Hatley and after much travel the young artist is returning home in hopes of making people smile and helping orphans through an art show called Caring-Catures For Africa.

"I've been painting what I see in my head," said McKinven, who has never been to Africa personally. "I've always wanted to do something for the thousands of orphaned children. I want to help and make a deep impact. I knew I could go over with an organization and volunteer, but I want to do something my way."

The AIDS crisis has devastated the continent, leaving many children without parents.

"I never considered myself an artist, but I know that I can draw and my pieces make people smile so I want to give these children, and town people, something they may never experience."

McKinven plans on heading to Africa and visiting hospitals and orphanages to do caricatures for patients, but to get there he will need to raise enough funds to pay for his trip, which he hopes this weekend's show can help with. The 29-year-old says that deciding to travel to Africa has been a long time in the making.

"I always liked to draw and sketch and my mom always called me an artist, but I never really considered myself to be. After school I moved to Scotland because my dad is from there and I wasn't spending any time on painting or drawing. Actually I worked for a year at the Scotch Whiskey Heritage Center. I had to sample four different scotch a day. That was a tough job," he said in jest. "Then I went to Italy for a year and worked as a tour guide. The company needed someone bilingual and I was only expecting to stay a couple months. But they stopped teasing me about my accent and I ended up staying for a year."

He said Paris and Italy drew out his inner passions.

"Italy was a good place to paint." A friend asked him to entertain kids with caricatures, and everything changed for him: "To me it's just drawing something on paper, but their little faces just lit right up. It brought them such joy and that's what I want to do for the orphans who are craving affection and interaction in Africa."

McKinven returned to Canada three years ago.

"When I moved back to Montreal I just sat down and chilled. I got out my paints and spent months and months in front of the canvas. I was coming down to North Hatley to see my parents and help at The Piggery on weekends and I decided to put on a show at the library."

That's when hard luck struck, but it didn't keep him down.

"I had dozens of pieces ready to come down but while I was working in the city I was watching television and I saw a fire. Then I realized it was my apartment as I saw the water breaking through the windows. I ran home and thankfully the whole apartment wasn't gone, but most of my work was. My drawings were finished and my paint melted. The firemen had pushed over my framed paintings so I was able to salvage them. The ones that still had footprints on them I renamed them Pieds de Pompiers."

Despite the devastation McKinven stuck with it.

"It's always been in me. I've just never taken it very seriously. Now I've started experimenting with different styles and colours. I've really gotten into the photo realization style. It looks like it's been drawn with a pen or pencil, but it's really black and white paint. I have always been drawn to what is happening over in Africa, I don't really know why. It's heartbreaking and I started capturing images from magazines, newspapers, photos from friends who had visited, and simply what I envisioned."

He finally came to the decision to pack his backpack and head over himself.

"I want to drive around and visit the hospitals and orphanages and do caricatures for these people. It's something I can do and many of these children will die from AIDS before they turn 10 and I'm sure this is something they would never have gotten. I want them to have a photo of themselves that can bring them some joy, and a smile. I see myself as a caricature caravan of sorts."

McKinven believes he will need to raise at least a couple thousand dollars.

"I plan on staying for as long as I'm needed," he said. "Every time I am working on a piece or thinking about my trip I recall the words of writer and journalist Gil Bailie who said, 'Don't ask what the world needs, ask yourself what it is that truly makes you come alive and go do that... what the world needs now more than ever are people who have come alive."

The drawings of Caring-Catures for Africa are at The Piggery in North Hatley Saturday and Sunday from noon until 6 p.m. All McKinven's pieces are for sale, and a caricature of yourself will be done for a minimum $10 donation. He said he mostly looks forward to seeing familiar faces he grew up with. Contact McKinven at 514-369-6910 or email djbugaboo2@hotmail.com.

favourites. "Even when you're practicing your sheet music, you're enjoying it."

Nadon said the orchestra offers a different way of listening to, and performing, music. It's a method that has caught the attention of musicians of all ages across the city. Many of those in the string section are teenagers, while those in the rest of the ensemble are between 25 and 65.

"I see students of mine playing in the same orchestra as me. Some 15 years of age difference," said Nadon, who, by day, teaches at Alexander Galt Regional High School.

"It's a great opportunity for them and for us. It makes us feel younger."

Bellehumeur said there's also a hidden magic in music from films that, for audiences of all description, sets it apart from traditional classical music.

"The difference is they already know this music. They heard it, and they never knew it. They were watching the movie and the story. When they hear this music, they say, 'I know that. I know that'."

When the Film Music Orchestra takes the stage, Bellehumeur doesn't leave it to the audience members' imaginations to conjure up images of the original films. Fight scenes, romantic interludes, and pivotal moments from the films are projected on screens in the theatre, while other elements are thrown in to add to the entertainment.

"We have lights, special effects, a big screen with bits of the movies that we are playing, we have singers, choreographers, and dancers. We have everything. It's not a concert, it's a show," said Bellehumeur.

Sherbrooke's Film Music Orchestra will perform at the Centre culturel at the University of Sherbrooke on Monday, May 14 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20.

BRIEF

MasGalore brings colour and masks

The North Hatley Library hosts a vernissage this weekend. It's for MasGalore, semi-abstract acrylic paintings and a series of masks created from found objects. The colours were inspired by a recent stay in San Miguel de Allende in Mexico by artist Margo Godin.

"I am a gatherer and a hunter of objects," said Godin. "The treasure hunt is almost as thrilling as the creative process. I love the history and mystery of found objects and also the fact that it allows me to play with a variety of media. Each new creation is a puzzle and the only limitation is my imagination."

The vernissage is Sunday, May 13, from 3 to 6 p.m. The exhibit runs until May 26; hours are Tuesdays to Fridays from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Wednesday evenings from 6:30 to 8:30 and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Call 819-842-2110.

THE RECORD

Good play, unpleasant story

'The beast is in all of us'

By Jen Young
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

The novel Lord of the Flies, which many of us read in high school, is violent. There is no mistaking the fact that desperate teenagers stranded together has the potential to be dramatic, vulgar, and sometimes violent, but according to Alexander Galt Regional High School drama teacher Nelson Gonyer, his new student show demonstrates how the battle between good versus evil, and control through fear, happens all around us.

"The story starts off with good intentions, but by the end of the second act a child gets murdered," said Gonyer, who has directed dozens, if not hundreds, of shows during his 30-year career at the school.

"The play is not for younger audiences, as it contains violence and coarse language, but it will make people think."

Gonyer is concerned that his play, which has been in the works since December, will be taken as offensive, but he says violence is all around us and there is no escaping it.

"The scariest horror story to me is not the monsters from the moon. It's the ones walking right beside you. The real message here is that if you're not vigilant the potential for violence is there. This is drama, a mirror to real life. It has been challenging but when it all comes together the play is very powerful."

Teenagers can be tough and this play, which is a Galt adaptation of a stage dramatization by Nigel Williams, demonstrates the cold hard truths. And violence is not restricted to men.

"We had to adapt the play since the original cast in the book are all boys, but I only had five boys so we had to turn Ralph, who is the main character, to Rachel. There's a cast of 23 and we will be switching casts per performance. However, Hayley Kezber (who plays Rachel) stays constant for every production."

Other lead actors include Cynthia Roy and Allison O'Neil, who will be playing Piggy, Mathew Stiffel and Taylor Wilson, who will be playing Jack, as well as Kyle Cartmel to name a few, but Gonyer says each member of the cast is great.

"There aren't understudies anymore. They are all as good as each other," he said. "Steven Belanger from Stanstead did everything he could to find rides all the way home at nights and Kyle Cartmel, who is playing Roger, in real life has the opposite personality as the lad he is playing and he learnt how draining and difficult it is to completely assume another identity. I'm proud of them all."

The play opens on Tuesday and runs until Saturday, May 19 and Gonyer says the most important reason for its support is the youth.

"In the beginning, the middle, and the end it's about the kids," he said after returning from rehearsal at 8 p.m. last Wednesday evening. "These kids have worked hard."

"They have given up their noon hours, Saturdays, and have done what they have had to do to stay after school for rehearsal; regardless of the decrease in late buses home. And on top of that they have had to focus on academics. I've always told the kids that academics come first, but for many, moments like with this play, being on stage is something they will remember for the rest of their lives."

He made mention of the numerous volunteers that played crucial roles in the realization of such a dramatic performance.

"Without the volunteerism these things wouldn't be possible," said the volunteer director (other names of note include Marcy Clark, Paul Millard, Steve Coates, Gonyer's wife Julie, Richard Goldfinch and Dave Fowlis. Gonyer's daughter is also responsible for the fake pig that will be butchered on stage).

Gonyer said this may be his last run at the stage.

"I hate like heck to say I won't be doing any more, but I really don't know if I'll be doing another play. It's the fatigue, the demands of my job have increased, new initiatives, and workshops make it more difficult to find the time to volunteer for such things."

"All the little stresses add up over the years and it's hard on the marriage and the family life and maybe it's time to back off."

"What I do know is these kids deserve to get as much support as possible. There is no greater rush than being on stage."

The play is performed each night at 7:30 in the Galt auditorium. For tickets call 819-875-5133.

To be or not to be a charity

Is there any question?

By Maurice Singfield
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD

Radio Communautaire Missisquoi (RCM) is not going to get charitable status at the moment because the Canada Revenue Agency doesn't believe operating a community radio station is made up solely of charitable activities. This means that we don't have the right to issue tax receipts and will only be able to if we can convince them our efforts are charitable.

The agency pointed out, in its response to the application for charitable status, that RCM is already involved in the advancement of education, a charitable activity, through its various projects, but because we are mixing our activities between charitable and non-charitable, we don't qualify.

If RCM were to create CIDI 99.1 FM as an educational charity we could probably acquire the status. To do this CIDI would have to focus only on advancing education in a charitable sense — meaning training the mind, advancing the knowledge or the abilities of people or raising the artistic taste of its community. Sounds good to me.

Let me see now. We would have to establish CIDI's studio as a training facility for students and others interested in the arts and sciences of broadcasting. We could also turn part of our facility into an audio library for members of our community to access. Interesting.

Also, we wouldn't have to produce the same old stuff that one already gets to hear on everybody else's radio station, because the revenue agency in its response said that "there is no evidence on file that any identifiable needy group is having its needs addressed by this activity (community radio) or that it serves a remote community which otherwise is not able to obtain programming."

Our programming would have to be completely different. It would be a learning experience.

We could invite teachers and students from the local school systems to participate and learn first-hand how to produce a radio show. We could ask young musicians to come and learn how to record their music for broadcast and have their music played in a Top 30 original format by participating in a contest called Being Who We Are (incidentally, if there are any aspiring young musicians out there with original material please send it in to CIDI's Being Who We Are).

DAVID ANDERSON

CIDI vice-president Maurice Singfield and president Dewey Durell look out over the land where the planned broadcast tower is to be constructed on Patch Hill in Lac Brome.

We could produce live shows featuring original local talent giving them the experience and venues to play in, like community centres and schools. Haven't we done this already (Feb. 17 at the Maison de la Culture in Waterloo)?

Oh yeah, we could have people from the community come into the studio and learn how to host and produce their own shows with special guests (I think we've already done that too; Dufur Mountain Bluegrass - host Gordon Cameron, Gilman's Corner - host Stuart Gilman, Down to Earth - host Jim Ferrier, The Golden Barb - host Barbara Golden, and Music in the Eastern Townships - host Chris Severs)

What we need most of all is 3,000 members at $35 each. That way we wouldn't have to give out tax receipts. It would cover the complete installation of our tower and transmitter and put us in a position whereby we can begin broadcasting.

The job at hand is to get people in our area, Brome Missisquoi and Shefford counties, to understand the importance of community radio. If you go to our website you'll be able to stream our latest programming and get an idea of what you can do to get involved in this once-in-a-lifetime project called CIDI 99.1 FM.

Charitable status or not, we're always going to be providing charitable activities for our community. Get in-

In the eye of the beholder

As promised, here's a picture of the CJMQ transmitter. Pretty isn't it?

As usual there is a lot going on at the station. It seems we no longer have any period of time in the year when things are quiet. It's very rewarding to see how you have embraced CJMQ. Our ever increasing level of community involvement is a good indication of this progress.

CJMQ now has a reporter who will keep us informed of issues being discussed at Sherbrooke city council meetings as well as Lennoxville borough meetings. This is really great news since involvement in municipal affairs is crucial to a vibrant community.

The name of the program is up for debate, and may end up being just that — Up For Debate, every Thursday from 5 to 6 p.m.

There are a lot of exciting developments in the works that will see us increase our community profile in a monumental way. I hope to be able to elaborate by next week.

CJMQ is a community radio station and while being on air is a large part of what we do it doesn't stop there. We are available to local organizations in many ways.

Of course we announce local events and actively promote community participation. CJMQ can also assist your organization with projects involving sound; the obvious is by providing music for events but that is just a small part of it. If you have a project that involves recording, contact us.

We regularly find recordings of Eastern

Townships events or interviews that were done without the proper equipment. Or the right way to use it may not understood, resulting in a recording that is flawed, and some are even ruined.

As a by-product of broadcasting, we have a level of expertise in recording. Let us help you in your choice of equipment and in its use. Having to repair recordings is more difficult than getting it right the first time around.

If your organization intends to undertake a (sound) project, contact us.

Also, if you have recordings remember that they will deteriorate over time and could be lost. CJMQ can help you to convert these recordings, which could include interviews or musical recordings by local artists, into a computer format to help ensure their continued viability.

CJMQ has been accumulating material such as this and creating a sound archive of the Eastern Townships. The goal isn't always to air the material; our concern is that these irreplaceable recordings could be lost if they aren't converted to a stable format.

Cassettes aren't forever — in fact the rate of deterioration of audio cassettes can be very rapid. This is an insidious process; you can see the cassettes on the shelf and you feel safe that they are secure. This is at best a false sense of security.

You can contact us by calling 819-822-9600 ext. 2689, or by email at cjmqnews@yahoo.ca. Don't wait! We can help you convert these files to CD, on computer files that are digital.

EEK! Movies

The return of 3D

By Jay Stone

CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

The big news from Hollywood is that 3D movies are making a comeback. We always love it when 3D movies are making a comeback. There's nothing like sitting in a theatre seat and being assaulted by three-dimensional dinosaurs or creatures from the black lagoon or — in one memorable feature entitled The French Line — Jane Russell, and all that she implies. It may have been the first movie in 36DD.

The new 3D boom is being credited to the competition from video games, just as the first 3D boom, in the 1950s, was part of Hollywood's strategy to fight the competition from television.

In those days, the movie industry was trying everything — Cinerama, VistaVision, Cinemascope, Todd-A-O — to give the movie screen the big-event feel that you couldn't get from the 17-inch black-and-white set in your living room cabinet that was forever blowing tubes.

Movies in 3D had been around since the 1890s, when British pioneer William Friese-Greene patented the process. Friese-Greene would show movies side by side on a screen, and the viewer would look through a stereoscope to converge the images and give them the illusion of depth.

Several innovations later, 3D entered the mainstream in 1952 with a movie called Bwana Devil, starring Robert Stack and Barbara Britton. It was about people building a railroad in Africa and fighting off marauding lions, but what you would remember, if you were there, was the natives throwing spears that seemed to come right off the screen and into your face. If you were, say, six years old in 1952, Bwana Devil was to television what Grand Theft Auto is to Driving Miss Daisy.

Lots more 3D movies followed, including Creature From The Black Lagoon, which was re-released a few years ago as a retro treat and a reminder of why 3D failed. You had to wear those cardboard glasses with one red plastic lens and one blue plastic lens, the kind you also got with 3D comic books and had the same effect of giving you a headache and also making you look particularly nerdy, especially if you had to put them on top of your regular eyeglasses and they kept slipping off. There was also the feeling — a feeling that became almost automatic when you put the glasses on — that you were about to see a really crappy film.

Eventually, 3D fell from favour.

Studio's piracy fears

Hollywood is crabby

By Brendan Kelly

CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

There will be no advance promotional screenings in Canada for Ocean's Thirteen or Harry Potter and the Order of Phoenix. Those are just two of the summer blockbusters from Warner Bros. Pictures that will be impacted by the Hollywood studio's decision to ban all public preview screenings of its films in Canada.

Warner made the unprecedented move because the Los Angeles-based film company is furious that the Canadian government is refusing to take any measures to combat what Hollywood sees as rampant film piracy in the country. The Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association, which represents the Canadian branches of the Hollywood studios, estimates that 20 to 25 percent of all camcorder-shot bootleg movies being sold around the globe were shot in Canadian cinemas, with Montreal being the country's centre for illicit copying of Hollywood blockbusters.

Other Hollywood studios contacted on Tuesday said they will continue to present advance screenings of their films in Canada — for the moment. But it is an open secret that all of the Hollywood majors are fuming over what's going on in Canada. Last year, executives at 20th Century Fox said they were considering releasing the studio's films in Canada a few weeks after their U.S. launch in an effort to reduce piracy. Earlier this year, the Motion Picture Association of America, which represents the major studios, listed Canada as one of the world's worst film piracy offenders, alongside piracy havens like China and India.

All promotional, charity, community, and educational advance screenings of Warner flicks in Canada have been nixed, said Dianne Schwalm, senior vice-president of theatrical marketing at Warner Bros. Canada. She said the studio may even consider cancelling festival screenings this fall if the government doesn't do something about film piracy. Warner has also cancelled plans for an extensive series of screenings of the upcoming Nancy Drew film that had been developed in collaboration with CanWest's Raise-a-Reader program and schools across the country.

"I have a lump in my throat," said Schwalm, when asked her feelings about nixing the Nancy Drew literacy project.

But she said Warner had to take desperate measures to deal with a desperate situation.

"When you have the largest percentage (in the world) of camcording here, and you can't stop it, it's off the rails," said Schwalm. "So we have to do something to protect the product. The crooks are still coming in to the theatres and taking the images. This is not something we wanted to do. It's an aggressive step but it's not one we're happy about taking. But we have to."

It's not illegal to videotape a movie in a Canadian cinema.

ALFRED HITCHCOCK'S
"dial M for Murder"
...is that you, darling?"

PRESENTED BY WARNER BROS.
MILLAND · GRACE KELLY · ROBERT CUMMINGS
WARNERCOLOR

BY WILLIAMS BASED UPON ALFRED HITCHCOCK'S SCREENPLAY BY ALFRED HITCHCOCK WRITTEN BY FREDERICK KNOTT who wrote the International Stage Success

Alfred Hitchcock's Dial M For Murder was shot in 3D — the scene where Grace Kelly reaches back for a pair of scissors to stab the man attacking her was particularly effective — but it was released in 2D (the 3D print was released briefly in the 1980s).

3D underwent a brief revival in the 1970s with an improved process called Stereovision. It spawned the most successful 3D movie ever, The Stewardesses, a softcore sex comedy that cost $100,000 and brought in $27 million. Some things, apparently, just have to be seen in three dimensions.

There was another comeback in the 1980s with movies such as Jaws 3D and Amityville 3D: the process was ideal for reviving tired franchises. I was privileged to see (and review) Friday the 13th Part III in this new generation of 3D. The process was so realistic that when someone on screen picked up a long pole and turned it sideways, you flinched to keep it from hitting you in the head. The movie itself, alas, seemed to be in 1D, a problem that also afflicted the very unmemorable The Adventures of Sharkboy and Lavagirl in 3D.

The '80s also brought the advent of Imax technology, making screens so big that Cinerama and Todd-A-O were placed under sedation down at the Home For Old Technology. James Cameron made Ghost of the Abyss in 3D Imax; he is also at the forefront of the latest revival with his highly anticipated movie Avatar. It's a top-secret project about which we know only that it is science fiction movie about fighting aliens, it is to be released in 2009, and it stars Sigourney Weaver, who, while no Bwana Devil, is certainly worthy of 3D study.

Avatar is part of a boomlet that has already begun. Disney released its animated movie Meet The Robinsons in both 3D and 2D, and its next Toy Story sequel may also come out in 3D. Dreamworks chief Jeffrey Katzenberg told The Associated Press that his studio may start releasing all its movies in 3D, starting with Monsters vs. Aliens in 2009.

The new glasses are better as well: no red and blue sheets of cellophane over your eyes, but dark lenses in large, lightweight glasses. You may still look like a nerd, but they have a better chance of staying on when the monsters and aliens start flying. After all, you have to duck.

The second album makes you, or breaks you

Shades of Dolly Parton

More than their first release, a sophomore album is the one that determines if an artist will make it or not. Miranda Lambert's second, Crazy Ex-Girlfriend, goes beyond her chart-topping debut in many ways.

She has matured as an artist and as a woman. Miranda Lambert wrote or co-wrote most of the songs on this album but despite her young age, 23, she has already established an excellent reputation as a songwriter.

The three tracks on this album that she didn't write all fit perfectly with her own material, which proves her ability to pick songs and make them her own.

There's 'Dry Town' by Gillian Welch, 'Getting Ready' written by Patti Griffin, and 'Easy From Now On' by Carlene Carter.

Miranda Lambert reminds me of legend Dolly Parton. Her voice offers some similarities and like Parton she writes her own stuff, she's a musician and she's not afraid to sing about topics that other girl singers seem to avoid.

She has the same kind of perky personality and during interviews she offers the same blunt honesty as Dolly Parton has always been known for. Despite the resemblance, Lambert can very well stand on her own.

Most of the new album is about love gone wrong and follows in the footsteps of her hit 'Kerosene'. It's about getting revenge or getting even. On the album opener 'Gunpowder and Lead' she sings, "His fist is big but my gun's bigger/he'll find out when I pull the trigger," about a woman waiting with her shotgun for her cheating and abusing boyfriend to come home.

There's also the title track, 'Crazy Ex-Girlfriend', an up-tempo number with great banjo work. There's a lot of anger and pain in these two numbers but they are emotions often associated with love gone bad in real life.

There's also 'Love Letters' which is a beautiful country ballad, a little more traditional than what she usually does and it sounds great. It is still about love gone wrong but this break-up makes the singer turn to faith and she sings "to find Jesus and it's too late/he's already closed the front gate/and the sign's flashing No Vacancy."

On 'More Like Her', the singer is more tender and this is when her voice sounds a lot like Dolly Parton's. The song is about a girl whose boyfriend decides to return to his ex-lover. She has a lot of regrets on how she should have made some efforts to be more like the other woman.

Another number about having regrets is 'Getting Ready (To Let You Go)'. The girl has lost her self-respect so it is time for her to do something, even if it means to let go. 'Guilty in Here' is about a woman who uses the men in her life, and can't stop and she sings with emotion, "Is it guilty in here, or is it just me?"

The whole album shows her versatility as well as her independence and huge talent. Her style is very different of what is being produced in Nashville now, and it is very refreshing to see how it sets her apart from all the other female newcomers on the country music scene.

'Desperation' is a number about how frustrating relationships can sometimes be while 'Down' has been inspired by a true story and offers a nice feel of bluegrass.

There's a couple of more light-hearted numbers on this album but it complements her work quite well. 'Dry Town' is a more traditional country number that will stay in your head the first time you listen. It is a funny song about wanting a cool beverage and finding that liquor sales are banned where you are. 'Famous in a Small Town' is about the inconveniences of living in a small town where everyone knows you and anything you do brings comments, good or bad.

The last track on the album is 'Easy From Now On' which was a hit for Emmylou Harris back in 1978. This classic is about finding a new balance after the end of a romance.

The album features songs which are all very different in beat and intensity but the lyrics are great throughout this entire collection.

The album is impressive and it will take Lambert to a different level in her young career.
