HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY, JUNE 15.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL (CANADA) BILL.

The Duke of Newcastle, in moving the second reading of this bill, said that it would not be necessary for him to trespass upon their lordships' attention for more than a few moments while he explained the objects of the measure, and the circumstances under which it had been his duty, on the part of the Government, to introduce it to the House. Many of their lordships, who remembered the time when the affairs of Canada had occupied very much more of the time and attention of the Legislature than he was happy to say of late years they had done, would remember that the question of the constitution of the Legislative Council was frequently among the most important of the subjects which had then been discussed. For a long time past it had been felt, by many who were connected with that colony, that the constitution of the Legislative Council, by means of nomination by the Crown, had not fulfilled those objects for which a second House of Legislature existed in this and other constitutional countries, as well as in many of the colonies. The object of the second Legislative Council was that it should operate in some degree as a check upon the popular body, and should prevent that hasty legislation which, under circumstances of excitement, was likely to be produced where one legislative body alone existed—and that one popularly elected. But those who had considered that a nominated Upper Chamber would fulfil more nearly the duties which attached to the House of Lords in this country, and had believed that there was a strong analogy between such a nominated body and the House of Lords, must, he thought, have long since been disabused of such an impression by the operation of those bodies, and by the force of circumstances as they already existed. He would not now enter into a discussion upon that question. It had frequently been discussed in that house before; and only a few years ago he had himself been a party, when sitting on the opposite side of that house, to arguing in favor of an elective as distinguished from a nominated Upper Chamber, in the case of the New Zealand constitution, which was at that time under the consideration of the House. Without discussing, then, the question as to how little a nominated body in the colonies could for various reasons resemble the House of Lords, it was only necessary that he should direct attention to the position in which the Legislative Council was at the present moment. It appeared that nobody acquainted with the colony could deny that, at the present time, although many of the gentlemen of that Legislative Council were among the most highly respected in the colony, yet that the main body, of which they formed the component parts, did not exercise that due influence in the colony and the Legislature which it ought to possess; and that from circumstances, over which certainly they had no control or influence, it had fallen into considerable disfavor with the colonists. To such an extent, indeed, had this been carried, that he believed it was an undeniable fact that those who were the most distinguished, and might be considered by the Governor of Canada as best fitted to be placed in the Council, frequently expressed the greatest repugnance and unwillingness, and sometimes even their absolute refusal, to enter it. He thought that the statement of that single fact might almost be considered as conclusive against any determination upon the part of the Legislature of this country to insist upon the maintenance of the system which at present existed (hear), and, if it should be considered right for the Legislature to take upon themselves to change the existing form of the constitution of the Upper House of Canada, they would not be acting without a precedent, or doing in favor of Canada, and in behalf of the popular body of that country, that which they had never done in other colonies under the Crown. In the constitution given last year to the Cape of Good Hope, the Upper Chamber of that colony was made elective, but it would be unnecessary for him to enter into any detail as to the mode of the election of that body. In an act passed a few years ago for introducing a new form of constitution into the Australian colonies, power had been given to those colonies to reform their own constitutions, and ordinances had arrived in this country within the last few days, from which it appeared that they had framed different forms of constitution, and that some of them had chosen an elective Upper Chamber. But at the close of last session, or shortly afterwards, he had received a memorial from the Legislative Assembly of Canada, by no means the first memorial which had been addressed to the Colonial-office on the subject, urging that measures should be taken to effect the long-desired alteration of bringing the Legislative Council of Canada into greater conformity with public feeling as regarded its constitution. He had subsequently, at the close of the last or the beginning of the present year, received various proposals from Canada, suggesting the form of a bill by which the Legislative Council could be changed from a nominated to an elective body, and embracing all the details which those who had looked into the subject considered necessary to effect such a change. Upon receiving this draught of a bill, which he had been urged to introduce into Parliament, for effecting that change by Imperial legislation, agreeing in the object which it desired to carry out, he felt that it was necessary to consider how that object could be best carried out. Three modes of doing so presented themselves to his mind, the first of which was the adoption of the draught measure which had been sent over from Canada, by which means the House of Lords and the House of Commons of England would have settled the question for Canada. Secondly, he might have invited the Parliament of Canada to send over a bill to be prepared and passed by themselves, which would have required confirmation by an act of the Parliament of this country. The third mode was to repeal those provisions in the Union Act of Canada which prevented at the present moment the alteration being effected by the Legislature of Canada itself. He ought to have mentioned that by certain clauses in the Union Act the Legislative Council of Canada was constituted in a nominative form, and the Parliament of Canada had no power to effect alterations in that form, and other restrictions were placed upon the power of the local Legislature in this and other matters, with regard to one of which, however,—he meant the Canada clergy reserves,—they had last year been removed. With regard to the first of these modes—that of adopting the draught bill which had been sent over from Canada—he felt that it had this advantage, that it would settle at once questions which had for some time been the subject of disputes in Canada, and would obviate the possibility—he hoped it would not be probability—of a difference of views between the existing Houses of Legislature in Canada, which might perhaps last for some years. But he felt that it had also this great disadvantage—that it was at variance with those principles of colonial government which he had long advocated, and which he had endeavoured to carry out while he had held the seals of the Colonial-office; he felt that legislation, in such a form would be at variance with what he believed to be the only sound principles of colonial legislation, and with the principles of the act which he had induced their lordships to pass relating to the clergy reserves, believing as he did that those and all similar matters should be placed under the control of local legislation. He had therefore discarded that mode of effecting his object, and, as regarded the second mode he had mentioned—namely, that of enabling the Legislature of Canada to pass a bill which would subsequently have required an Imperial act of Parliament to confirm it—he felt that it violated, although in a less degree, the principles which would be violated by the first mode to which he had referred, while it would not have the good effect of settling the question once for all, and preventing dissension between the two Houses of Legislature. The third mode, the one which he had adopted, was this,—he proposed to repeal those clauses in the Union Act which prevented legislation by the Parliament of Canada on this subject, leaving to them to adopt such measures as they might think fit, subject, of course, to confirmation by the Crown, or to leave the matter as it now stood—in short, to leave the question to be decided entirely by local legislation. This was the sole object of the present bill, to which he now asked their lordships to give a second reading, with the exception of the last clause but one, which carried out an object that had been brought under the consideration of the House, when the Canada Clergy Reserves Bill was under discussion, by his noble friend the Chairman of Committees. His noble friend had on that occasion suggested that it was extremely unfair that, while we removed, as far as regarded the subject of the clergy reserves, the necessity of ordinances framed by the Legislature of Canada being laid upon the table of the house 40 days before they were confirmed by the Crown, we continued that restriction as regarded ordinances upon other subjects. He had then stated that he entirely concurred in his noble friend's view, and that in all probability it would be his duty before long to introduce a measure to remove that restriction, which he apprehended was really without any meaning, while it was attended with considerable inconvenience. So inconvenient was it that, as it was extremely questionable what bills that came to the Colonial-office required to be laid on the table for 40 days before being confirmed, he believed that it had more than once occurred, since the restriction had been imposed, that bills had inadvertently received confirmation without being so laid before the House, the result of which was, that if any litigious person chose to raise the question of the validity of those acts, many of which related to private rights and the titles of individuals to land, great inconvenience and loss might be entailed. Seeing that we had removed this restriction in the case of the Canada Clergy Reserves, believing that it was no longer of any use as regarded questions such as that which was now under discussion, or as regarded questions of any other description, he proposed by the 6th clause to obviate the necessity of bills being laid upon the table of this house for any period before they were confirmed by the Crown; he proposed to assimilate the ordinances sent from Canada in this respect to the ordinances that were received from the various other colonies. Not wishing to trespass on their lordships' time by discussing the general questions involved in this bill further than he had already briefly touched upon them, he would do no more than ask their lordships to give it a second reading, believing that it was in accordance with the soundest principles of colonial legislation, that it could not possibly lead to any mischievous results, and that it removed one of those practical grievances of which the colonists had such just grounds to complain.

The Earl of Desart hoped that the noble duke would have no objection to postpone the second reading of the bill until his noble friend the Earl of Derby could be present to state his opinions with respect to it. It was also important that their lordships, before proceeding with it, should be allowed to examine the draught of the bill which had been sent over by the Canadian Legislature, in order to see what were their intentions upon the subject. In 1850 a similar proposition had been made by the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick to Earl Grey, who replied that, while he saw no prima facie objection to making the Legislative Council elective, he would not pledge himself to assent to any bill for that purpose until he saw what were its provisions, as he would not consent to the Council being made the mere mouthpiece of the Assembly. He strongly doubted the expediency of having an elective Legislative Council at all.

Lord Wharncliffe said that the bill was one of considerable importance, and he should like to be informed whether it was the bill of the noble duke, or whether it had been recommended by the Governor-General, or was the result of a correspondence between the Colonial-office and the local authorities. If any such correspondence had taken place, he hoped it would be laid before the House. He thought it was better to allow the inhabitants of a colony to deal as they pleased with grievances of which they complained, as most of them related to matters upon which it was impossible that the Parliament of this country should be as competent to form an opinion as the local Legislatures; but he was afraid that this measure would lead to results which the House would not willingly contemplate, and he was of opinion that extensive legislative changes ought not to be made in the government of a colony without the sanction of the Crown and of the Imperial Parliament.

The Earl of Ellenborough did not rise to oppose the second reading of this bill, but to express his opinion on a subject of greater importance. We made such progress last year in the work of concession to Canada that the question now was, not whether we should stop in our career, still less whether we should attempt to go back, but whether we should not, in the most friendly manner towards Canada and the other North American colonies, consult with their Legislatures on the expediency of taking measures for the complete release of those colonies from all dependence on the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain. He recollected having a conversation with Mr. Huskisson in 1828, during the time that statesman held the seals of the Colonial-office, in which he intimated most distinctly that the time had already arrived for the separation of Canada from this country, and Mr. Huskisson had even so maturely considered the matter that he mentioned the form of Government which he thought it would be for our interest to have established in Canada when our connexion with the colony should cease. It must be borne in mind that, during the last few years, a complete change had taken place in our relations with the North American colonies. In 1846 we repealed the corn laws without reserving the privileges which Canada enjoyed under them. At a subsequent period we repealed the navigation laws, which gave great advantages in matters of trade and navigation. In addition to those measures, we had altered, to a great extent—if we had not entirely abolished—the discriminating duties on the staple produce of the North American colonies. Thus we had deprived ourselves and North American colonies of the advantages which each formerly derived from the connexion subsisting between them. For several years, too, in dealing with the Legislative Assemblies of the colonies, we had acted on a principle diametrically opposed to that which formerly influenced us; we had established in the colonies what was called responsible government—to speak more intelligibly—we had given them, practically, independent governments. And, really, he could hardly imagine a situation more humiliating than that of the representative of her Majesty in Canada. It was almost wonderful a British gentleman would consent to hold such a situation of nullity, unless indeed, from a consciousness of his own abilities and resources, he should think himself able to be, as Lord Metcalfe was, the Minister of the colony. What was the use—what the practical advantage of continuing our connexion with the colonies? The connexion might be of some small use in time of peace; but, on the other hand, consider the danger arising from it in matters relating to war. There could be no doubt that the chances of collision between this country and the United States were greatly increased by our connexion with the North American colonies. It was equally certain that in the event of war occurring between this country and the United States on grounds totally unconnected with the colonies, they must, from their connexion with us, be drawn into the war, and their whole frontier would be exposed to the greatest calamities. Under these circumstances, it was a matter worthy of serious consideration whether we should not endeavour, in the most friendly manner, to divest ourselves of a connexion which must prove equally onerous to both parties. Now, in case of war, could we hope to defend the colonies successfully? He would advise, not the noble duke opposite, who to his great satisfaction had been released from the duties of the Colonial-office, but the right hon. baronet who had succeeded him, to read a despatch received from Lord Metcalfe in 1846. We were then, it was supposed, on the eve of a war with the United States—a war connected with matters in which Canada had no concern—a war for an object the value of which was not, to either party, equal to the expense of one week's hostilities. Let the Colonial Secretary read Lord Metcalfe's despatch, and see the amount of military aid which would be required to enable us successfully to defend Canada. At the time he (Lord Ellenborough) thought Lord Metcalfe's estimate was extravagant, and he did not attach any great weight to that noble lord's unsupported opinion; but having consulted persons who from their position were most competent to decide upon the question, he found they confirmed Lord Metcalfe's estimate as to the amount of force necessary to defend Canada successfully, and it was utterly beyond the means of this country to provide it. It might be said that we did successfully defend Canada in 1814, and that we had made great progress in wealth since. That he admitted, and he wished he could add that we had made equal progress in military strength. If, however, we had advanced in the career of prosperity, consider the enormous progress which the United States had made in their innumerable railroads, their well-appointed and well-disciplined army—an advantage which they did not formerly possess, for they conducted the war of 1814 with a mere rabble. Considering the increased strength and appliances at the command of the United States, it would hardly be possible to defend Canada with any hope of success. The very idea of a war with the United States was horrible. The event would be one of the greatest evils; one of the direst of human afflictions. Connected as we were in all the details of commerce, it would be more like tearing asunder the limbs of one human body than the collision of two separate bodies. Why, needlessly, increase the chances of war? Our brethren on the other side of the Atlantic were very ambitious, and very sensitive on the point of honor. So were we; and we were also extremely sensitive on the point of justice. Not only would we not endure injustice to ourselves, but we could not tolerate the perpetration of injustice to another. These considerations should lead us to regard a rupture with the United States as an event which might happen at some period. Under these circumstances, he hoped that, at an early period, the Government would communicate with the leading persons in the Legislative Assemblies of the North American colonies, with the view of ascertaining their opinion on the subject of a separation. We should consult with them in the most friendly spirit, as if they were members of one and the same family, in which we felt a deep concern.

The Duke of Newcastle felt bound to express, not only regret, but astonishment—looking to the noble earl's position as a legislator and a statesman—that he should have propounded doctrines which, from his own knowledge, he could assert would be as unpalatable to the colonies as they were to their lordships. (Hear, hear.) The noble earl suggested that the right hon. baronet the Secretary for the Colonies should concert measures for the separation of the colonies from this country. Now, he could assure the noble earl that he would not belong to any government which would be a party to making such proposals to the people of Canada. (Hear.) For his part, he would look upon such a proposal as an offence against the dignity and, he might almost say, the Sovereignty of the country, and hostile to the most important interests of the colonies. What reasons had the noble earl assigned for the course which he recommended? He referred to recent acts of the Legislature of this country, and, when he did so a noble earl opposite cheered. However, our recent commercial legislation had only caused colonists to prize the connexion with the mother country more dearly. Under the new system of commercial intercourse our North American colonies had prospered to even a greater extent than our Australian colonies. The noble earl had referred to a conversation held with Mr. Huskisson in 1828, in which that statesman said that the time had come for effecting a separation between this country and the North American colonies. Now, he was disposed to regard with respect, and almost with reverence, anything propounded by Mr. Huskisson, but let their lordships recollect what were the circumstances of 1828. It was not surprising that in 1828, Mr. Huskisson with prescient mind, looked forward to the probabiliy of the severence of the connexion between Great Britain and Canada. A state of things was then prevailing in that colony which, nine years later, led to an unfortunate rebellion that cost so much blood and treasure. A material change in the condition of Canada had taken place since then, through its connexion with this country, and if Mr. Huskisson were alive now, instead of thinking of separation, he would concur with him (the Duke of Newcastle) in the legislation he was now proposing for the colony. The noble earl had said that the Government of Canada was practically a responsible Government, and that he thought, in consequence of that responsibility, the colony should be separated from this country. He added that he considered the representative of the Sovereign in Canada was placed in a humiliating position, and that he was, in reality, a nullity. What did his noble friend mean? Would he compare the Sovereign of this great country with the Emperor of Russia, and say that because the British Sovereign did not exercise arbitrary power over the colony her sway was a nullity. Undoubtedly he might, if he compared the power that was formerly exercised by the Government in the colony with the power of the colonial Government as it was now carried on under the blessings of the representative principle, describe the Government of Canada as a nullity; but unless his noble friend was prepared to say that a constitutional sovereign of a free country could not exercise authority over a colony, because that sovereign was not possessed of arbitrary power, he (the Duke of Newcastle) must maintain that the representative of the British Sovereign in Canada was not merely not a nullity, but that he occupied, as regarded his position in the hearts of the people, a far more valuable and a far more desirable position than any governor of that colony ever did before. (Cheers.) He knew that these were the sentiments of Lord Elgin, who occupied that position now, and who had contributed by his admirable government very materially indeed to the state of feeling which now existed in that country. His noble friend had said that Canada was of no value to this country in time of peace, and had asked what safe defence could propose for it in time of war; and he had referred to what Lord Metcalfe had said some years ago as to the necessity of maintaining a large army to retain Canada in our possession. So he understood his noble friend. Now, as far as he (the Duke of Newcastle) was concerned, whatever might have been deemed expedient in the time of the government of Lord Metcalfe, he would with the greatest fearlessness declare that no such necessity existed at the present day, and that he had the most entire confidence in the loyalty of the people of Canada. No doubt Lord Metcalf did express the opinion which his noble friend had ascribed to him, but he did so under very different circumstances from those which now existed. But when his noble friend asked what safe defence could we have for Canada in time of war, he would tell his noble friend that the safe defence of Canada was to be found in the loyalty and good feeling of the people themselves. (Hear, hear.) If this country was to be invaded at a moment when our army was fighting on another soil, he should have no fear of the result, because the loyalty of our people would defend our shores, so in the same way would the people of Canada act if that colony should be invaded. But, after all, he must deprecate such discussions as this. (Loud cheers.) His noble friend had said in the course of his observations that the colonists were very sensitive. They were sensitive, and it was because they were sensitive that he regretted that a man of his eminence should have broached such a subject. He assured his noble friend that the people of Canada would look with the greatest possible regret at the fact that there was even one noble lord who could get up in their lordships' house and advocate not only the possibility, but even the propriety of a separation of that colony from this country. (Hear, hear.) No doubt, the proper course to pursue was, that they should legislate no more for the colonies than they could possibly help. Indeed, all their recent legislation had been reduced to this—that of undoing the false policy of former years. It was for that purpose that he had introduced the present bill; and, if they continued in the same course they were now persevering in, he believed that, not only as regarded the wishes of the people—he would not say of this dependency, but of this integral portion of the British empire—but also as regarded the wishes of the people of this country, it would be a very distant day when the House would be called upon to adopt the measure advocated by his noble friend. He knew that the words of the noble lord would be read with the greatest regret in Canada. He spoke this with the greatest confidence, because, although he had been connected with the Colonial Department but for a short period, yet the knowledge he had of the people of that colony convinced him that, to whatever party they belonged, the last thing they desired was that which his noble friend had so strongly advocated.

The Earl of Malmesbury regretted that the present subject should have been brought forward on a day which members of their lordships' House were in the habit of dedicating to another object. The noble duke had alluded to a cheer which had come from him (the Earl of Malmesbury) during the speech of his noble friend (the Earl of Ellenborough). Now, if he cheered at all, it was merely to express his assent to what his noble friend had said in reference to the sort of free-trade principle which had been applied to Canada. He had in his mind at the moment the effect which that principle had had upon the interests of the colony. The difference which the introduction of free trade produced on Canada was this, that, whereas before free trade was established, this country favoured Canada in its commercial communications with that colony, after the free trade principle was established that favour was withdrawn, and it occurred to his mind that the people of Canada could not look upon this country in the same light now as it did before. Their lordships were aware that we had not met with that reciprocity from the United States by which our North American colonies would have been benefitted, which it was hoped, would have resulted from the measures which were adopted by this country. When those measures were originally passed they were told that there was every reason to believe that a treaty would be very speedily settled between this country and the United States on free-trade principles, which would be advantageous to our North American colonies. He should be glad to know how far Her Majesty's Government had advanced with that negotiation, which had now been pending for the last four or five years. That was the subject he had in his mind when he cheered his noble friend. If the noble duke thought that he had intended to express any regret at the passing of those great measures, which had been so fully discussed in both Houses of Parliament, and which were adopted with the approbation of so large a majority of the nation, he very much mistook the opinion he entertained on that subject.

Lord Brougham said, there was one point on which he would venture most humbly and respectfully to tender his advice to the people of Canada. He was induced to do so by the kind confidence he had experienced from them some 15 or 16 years ago, when he appeared in that house as their advocate against certain measures of the then Government of this country. He had then long conferences with the people from Canada upon those differences, which at that time most unhappily prevailed, and he had constant and intimate communications with the leading men connected with the Legislative Councils. It was in consequence of that circumstance that he now ventured to give them his counsel upon the subject of the constitution of a second chamber. The most important object to be attained in the constitution of a second chamber was, that it should be as different as it was possible to make it in its constitution, in its mode of appointment, and in its duration, in order that it might be anything rather than a duplicate of another assembly. That was the great principle which ought to govern the colonists in forming a second chamber. It was not meant that a second assembly should be constituted merely to register the edicts of the first, or merely to examine and discuss that which had been done by the first. It would not do if the second assembly was of a similar nature of the first, or if it derived its origin from the same constitutional body. What would be the consequence if the two bodies did not most materially differ in their constitution, in their origin, and in all the circumstances connected with them? It would only amount to this—that of adding so many stages to each legislative measure which the first assembly might pass. There would be no check to, effectual control over, or security against the acts of the first. But if the origin of the second assembly were totally different from that of the first, or, he should greatly prefer, if the second chamber were not elective at all, but were nominated under certain restrictions and with certain exceptions by the executive Government out of a list to be chosen by persons exercising the elective franchise, then there would be some chance of an effectual control over the acts of the first. If he were called upon to give an instance of the necessity of a second chamber, essentially different in its constitution from the first, where should he look but to the assembly he had then the honour of addressing? He had known bills come up from the House of Commons which had contained such oversights and such gross errors as it was hardly possible to conceive. He remembered that in the year 1834 a bill which had passed with little or no observation and almost as a matter of course in the House of Commons came up to their lordships, which their lordships might have passed had they resembled in their constitution the first chamber. And what would have been the consequence? Why, the whole criminal justice of the kingdom in quarter sessions would have been suspended from and after the 1st of October then next ensuing. When their lordships sent back the bill, cutting out that provision of it, it was a very excellent bill in all respects. He wished to say one word on another subject, after the severe rebuke which had been given by the noble duke. He had the misfortune of coming within the description of persons against whom the noble duke had so powerfully and indignantly declaimed—namely, those who, while desiring a separation of Canada, as a Colony, from the Mother Country, did not wish to throw the colonists over, or to abandon them. And why should the noble duke denounce so vehemently this opinion? It was by no means novel. It had been entertained and expressed by many eminent men. It was an opinion shared in by Lord Ashburton and by Lord St. Vincent; and those who held the doctrine of separation did so, not because they were disposed to undervalue the importance of Canada, but rather because they highly estimated the importance of that country. They believed that after a certain period of time—after what was called "passing the youth of nations," that of a colonial life—the best thing thing that could happen to a country in colonial connexion with an older State was, that, without any quarrel, without any coldness or alienation of any sort, but with perfect amity and goodwill, and on purely voluntary grounds, there should succeed to that colonial connexion a connexion between two free and independent States.

The Earl of Harrowby could not see what advantage would accrue to the people of Canada if that colony were to be separated from this country, and to be erected into what the noble earl called an independent State. They at the present moment enjoyed all the benefits of actual independence, while, by their connexion with this country, they had the bulwark of the British name, and necessarily of British power. He did not believe that the idea of separation was at all entertained by the Canadian people, but if it even were, no measure was more likely to remove it from their minds than such a one as the present; and any step in an opposite direction—any attempt to govern, in a free country, through the instrumentality of the mere nominees of the Government, could produce no other effect than irritation. He only hoped that in the construction of the Second Chamber the Canadians would follow the recommendation of the noble and learned lord, and consider well the importance of not making it a mere shadow of the first, and of securing as much as possible representatives in it of a different class of mind and feeling. He looked upon this measure as one of the greatest importance, being of opinion that the only valuable Second House of Legislation in a colony was one composed of a wisely elected body, and that the mere creature of the Government could never enjoy that consideration which alone could give value to a Second Chamber. The noble earl, in conclusion, inquired whether, by the wording of the first clause, the local Legislature would be able to give to the Upper House an existence, if they so desired, independent of a dissolution?

The Duke of Newcastle replied, that the bill was simply an enabling bill, and there was nothing in it to prevent the local Legislature from so constituting the Upper Chamber as that it should have an existence either permanent (the members sitting during life), or for a definite number of years.

The bill was then read a second time.

ENGLISH NEWS.—We received our letters and files by the "Europa"—which left Liverpool on the 18th ultimo, and reached New York on Friday afternoon last—on Sunday forenoon. The telegraph had already supplied us with the more salient features of the news contained in them. We add some further items below; but the space occupied by the very important debate (which will be found on our first page) in the House of Peers, on the 15th ultimo, upon the position and prospects of Canada, forces us to be brief in our other extracts, and also to postpone comment upon the sentiments openly expressed by such men as Lords Ellenborough and Brougham, in favor of doctrines, which such men as Lords Grey and Elgin have dared to characterize as "little short of treason":

Latest News by Telegraph.

(From Willmer & Smith's European Times.)

EXPECTED ATTACK ON SWEABORG.

The following telegraphic despatch, dated Gothland, June 11, has been received:—"Both fleets are at Boresund, twenty miles from Sweaborg and it is expected they will attack the latter place on the 13th. Admiral Corry is at Dagerhut. There are 16 Russian sail in Sweaborg. The hospital ship has arrived. Russian ships, loaded with stone to sink off Sweaborg. Dauntless gone to England with several prizes."

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

The number of troops embarked from France and Algiers for Turkey, up to the 10th of June, is officially stated to be 72,000 men, and the embarkation of troops is still going on with great activity.

THE CRIMEA.

Two members of the highest families in the Crimea have been condemned to transportation to Siberia for not having included their peasants in the last levy decreed by Prince Menschikoff.

THE ALLIES AT VARNA.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 5.—The Sultan has reviewed the English and French leaving for Varna. Twenty thousand French have arrived there and eight thousand English, who are encamped in a strong position six miles from Varna. The two armies will soon be complete, and it is said, will turn the flank of the Russians by the Danube, supported by the fleets. The fleets are near Varna. The division that was to have sailed for Anapa has not left. Schamyl has joined the Circassians in the plains.

The last English division embarked at Constantinople on the 5th. Prince Napoleon had embarked for Varna.

MALTA, June 12.—Admiral Lyons and the combined fleets were at Baltschik on the 3rd of June. The blockade of the Black Sea was announced on the 1st of June.

AUSTRIA AND RUSSIA.

The Moniteur contains the following:—"The Journal de Frankfort publishes from the Suabian Mercury a fact which has been mentioned to us from different points of Germany. 'It is asserted (says the journal in question) that the Emperor of Austria expressed himself in the following manner, in presence of the Duke of Gotha; "I gave you my word that if the Emperor of Russia does not evacuate the Principalities I will declare war to him.' The Duke having asked if he might repeat the words, the Emperor replied, 'You may repeat them to whoever would like to hear them.' It is also said that the instructions of General Mayerhofer are circulated for a proximate rupture of peace."

RUSSIA AND NORWAY.

Recent advices from the province of Finmark, near the northern frontier of Russian Lapland, contain the following remarks on the designs of Russia in that quarter:—"The Russians are collecting forces in Finland apparently to threaten Sweden and Norway. They are also anxious to get this northern part, which would provide them with fine shelter for their fleet, with the means of putting to sea at any season of the year as our Fiords here do not freeze unless the water be very shallow."

FRANCE.

The fears respecting the crops, excited by the continuance of rain, caused a considerable decline on the Bourse on Thursday. The camp of Boulogne is to consist of 48,000 men. The troops will assemble on the 15th of July. The cholera has broken out with great virulence at Dijon and the neighbourhood. In one small village of 200 inhabitants there has been 80 cases and 15 deaths in a few days. The state of the weather in France is exciting serious alarm.

Yesterday not only the price of wheat and flour in the Paris market was affected from this cause, but also the price of the Funds. Rain has fallen with slight intervails for many days.

RUSSIA.

The letters from St. Petersburg to-day announce another failure at Moscow, the house being that of Mr. Julies Steading, for about £40,000. The misleading statement lately made in the House of Commons, that Archangel was not to be blockaded, had reached St. Petersburg, whence it was said the export trade would consequently become very active, as the route to that port was alleged to be cheaper than to Memel. From many quarters statements continue to be received (in the absence of any coherent system of blockade in the Baltic), and allegations are made, which, however, must be received as very questionable, that from the uncertainty that prevails, the blockade deserves merely to be regarded as a paper one.

EGYPT.

Having learnt that the officers and crew of the Caiman, wrecked in the waters of Aden, were about to traverse Egypt on their way to France, the Viceroy gave orders that a gratuitous passage should be given to them from Suez to Alexandria. His Highness expressed a wish that during the whole of their stay at Cairo they should be boarded and lodged at his expense, and, in addition to this, he stated his regret that he was unable from circumstances to offer them one of his steamers to convey them to France.

GREECE.

ATHENS, June 8.—The news from the provinces and frontier continues to be satisfactory. The defeat of Karatassos, in Macedonia, is confirmed. Tchami-Kara-Tassos, having established himself at the head of 700 men in some houses at Gonitza belonging to the convent of Mount Athos, has been attacked by the Turks. His provisions ammunition, and equipage, fell into the hands of the Ottomans, who have also sent to Salonica two standards of the insurgents and a quantity of arms. His seal and several of his papers were also taken—among the latter, despatches addressed to the Greek government. The insurgents lost 280 killed. Haddji Petros is still in Thessaly, at the head of a band of insurgents. The Greek government has recalled him but his return is doubtful. The insurrection in Epirus is assuming the character of a Guerilla war.

THE FLEET AT HELSINGFORS.

Advices have been received at the Admiralty that Admiral Sir Charles Napier, with nine screw ships of the line, was off Helsingfors on the 4th of June reconnoitering, the rest of the fleet being in the offing. Ten Russian ships of the line were counted in the harbour protected by the batteries. The Swenska Tidningen confirms the arrival of Admiral Napier before Porkala Bay, three miles southwest of Sweaborg. They can descry the Russian fleet, about ten liners, lying at anchors. Admiral Corry is advancing with his squadron. The King of Sweden and the crown prince are going for a few days to inspect the troops in the island of Gothland. We have received the following from Hamburgh, 12th June: "The news from Stockholm says that Admiral Napier was, on the 5th, with fifteen ships, before Sweaborg. Shots had been exchanged."

THE AFFAIR AT KARAKAL.

A letter from Krajova, June 1st, by an Englishman accompanying the Turkish army, gives an account of the fight at Karakal:—

"We had, as I have already told you, four regiments of cavalry, about 3,500 horses, and no cannon, while the Russians had four regular regiments, viz.—the 1st and 10th Hussars, the 9th Lancers, and the 2d Dragoons, six pieces of artillery, and 500 Cossacks. Owing to the admirable tactics of Ismael Pasha and Skender Beg, this force was soundly thrashed before 4 o'clock. The numbers and results, as given officially, are 1,000 Russians killed—almost all the Hussars, who suffered the most; 1,000 wounded; 500 horses brought to Krajova, the same number left dead at Karakal; more than 1,000 muskets, lances, sabres, uniforms, equipments of all sorts and sizes, carriages full of baggage; 115 prisoners, and what, after all, is the best of the thing, and does not often happen in warfare, the six pieces of cannon, all with perfect harness, with their carriages, caissons, &c., au grand complet, all captured by an inferior force without guns, and brought by us in triumph to Karakal. After beating the Russians handsomely, we pursued them as far as the Aluta, where a good number were drowned. The Colonel of the 10th Hussars the Major of the same regiment, and more than ten other officers, were killed. The whole of the Russian artillerymen, without exception, were killed at their guns."

LOSS OF THE TIGER—DEATH OF CAPT. GIFFARD.

We are greatly pained to announce the death of Capt. Giffard, lately in command of her Majesty's ship Tiger. This gallant gentleman received his wounds in defence of his ship, which he only surrendered at the last, when beaten down. He lost one leg, and was badly wounded in the other. In fact, he received several wounds, whilst bravely defending his charge to the last—hopeless as the struggle was against fatal odds, and at every possible disadvantage. The melancholy intelligence of his death was despatched to Vienna by electric telegraph, on the 1st instant, by the Austrian Consul at Odessa. He was to be buried on the 2nd of June, with military honors. The young midshipman, who also fell by his side, was not a nephew, but a more distant relative. After the funeral, the captive crew of the Tiger were to proceed to Risan; the officers are to be sent to Moscow, with the exception of the first lieutenant, who is ordered to St. Petersburg, to attend the Emperor of Russia. By a later despatch we learn that the funeral of Captain Giffard took place on the 2nd inst.

ODESSA, JUNE 3.—General Osten-Sacken, with his staff, two battalions, and two guns, attended the funeral.

ENGLISH MERCHANTMEN AT ODESSA.

The subjoined correspondence was received yesterday at Lloyd's:—"H. M. S. Britannia, off Baljik, May 26, 1854.—Sir,—I beg to acquaint you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, in reply to your letter of the 8th inst., that the Russian government has permitted all the British and French vessels to leave Odessa. In my letter to you of the 23rd ultimo, I expressed my surprise that masters of British vessels should have remained at Odessa after the receipt of the consul's letter of the 29th of March. All the masters of vessels I met with declare this circular to have been individually addressed to the masters of all the vessels at Odessa, which is totally at variance with the statement made by Mr. Thompson.—I have the honor to remain, &c., (signed) J. W. DUNDAS, Vice Admiral."

THE LOSS OF THE EUROPA.

OFFICIAL ACCOUNT.

Accounts have been received to-day, announcing the destruction by fire of the transport Europa, on the night of the 31st May, and the loss of two officers, Colonel Moore, and Veterinary-Surgeon Kelly, four sergeants, twelve men, and one woman, of the 6th Dragoons. The following are the despatches that have been received at the Admiralty:—

Admiralty, 16th June, 1854.

SIR,—I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to request that you will lay before the Duke of Newcastle the accompanying copies of two reports, dated 2nd and 3rd instant, from the Commanding Officer of H.M. ship Tribune, conveying the sad intelligence of the loss of the Europa transport, on the night of the 31st of last month, during her passage to the Mediterranean with a division of the Enniskillen Dragoons; and, my Lords, request that you will state to his Grace, it is with the deepest regret that they have learnt that the catastrophe has been attended with the loss of so many valuable lives.

I am, Sir,
Your very humble servant,
(Signed) W. A. B. HAMILTON.
The Assistant Under Secretary, Colonial Office.

H.M. steam frigate Tribune, at sea, lat. 47 48 N long. 7.43 W. June 2, 1854.

SIR,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, of the total destruction of the Europa, horse transport, by fire, on the morning of the 1st June, in lat. 48.1 N. and long 7.30 W.

About 7.30 A.M. on that day smoke was discovered in the N.W. from the mast heads of H.M.S. Tribune, which, upon closer inspection, was perceived to arise from a vessel on fire. The ship's course was immediately altered, and all sail made to close, and at 9.15 A.M. we had approached sufficiently near to make out the vessel in distress to be a large ship burnt down to the water's edge abaft, with the bows only remaining above water. At 9.40 A.M. she suddenly went down, and shortly after 10 A.M. our boats were hoisted out and lowered, and commenced a minute search amongst the floating spars and wreck, which was continued until 5 P.M., without finding any vestiges of crew or passengers. The weather was fine, the sun was bright, and the horizon clear in every direction for many miles, but no boat was visible from the mast-head before or after the vessel went down. The sea was covered with charred timbers, hen-coops, floating hay, casks, and iron tanks containing biscuit. The contents of the latter remained on fire for some hours after the ship had disappeared.

The presence of a cavalry detachment was manifested by picking up a trooper's stirrup, and a pair of fatigue trowsers, in the pocket of which was found a purse containing some English money, and a receipt addressed to a farrier major a copy of which I enclose. The stern of the ship appeared to have been blown out; the fire must have raged most fiercely in the after part; for the mizenmast was burnt to a cinder, whilst the foremast was comparatively uninjured by fire. The masts had gone overboard at some distance from each other, with the yards and sails hoisted up and sheeted home; some small spars lashed to the head of the mizenmast indicated preparations for making a raft. Finding no appearance of any human being, and no relics of the boats, I felt disposed to think that the crew had made their escape in them, or had found their way on board some other vessel, and after having stood for two hours in the direction which it was assumed the boats would have steered, we fell in with one adrift and abandoned, but quite new and seaworthy and unscathed by fire, containing a few oars and some vegetables.

As a boat of this description would never have been abandoned unless the parties in her had found refuge in better quarters, I am of opinion that a portion, if not the whole of the crew and passengers of this unfortunate vessel have escaped; and this opinion is strengthened by the fineness of the weather, the smooth water, and the number of ships that were passing in all directions during the previous day, both from and towards the scene of this melancholy disaster.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,
(Signed) S. T. CARNEGIE, Captain.

H.M. steam frigate Tribune. At sea, lat. 42 deg. 20 N. lon. 10 55 W. 5th June, 1854.

Sir—In continuation of my letter of the 2d instant, reporting the loss of the Europa transport by fire—

I have now the honour to acquaint you that on the morning of the 4th, when about 120 miles north-west from Cape Finisterre, we had the pleasure of receiving from British brig Clemanthe Lieutenant Black (Admiralty agent), the master, two of the crew, and eight privates of the 1st Dragoons, in the Europa, and later in the day, from the Prussian schooner Kennet Kingsford, and the British barque Maranan, three officers, thirty-five non-commissioned officers and privates one servant and two women, with four officers and twenty-eight seamen, belonging to the Europa; in all eight-five, of whom seventy-seven are on board this ship, and eight on board the Sir Robert Sale transport.

I regret to add, that of the number originally embarked in the Europa, twenty-one have doubtlessly perished; two officers, Lieutenant-Colonel Moore, and Veterinary Surgeon Kelly are amongst the missing, and six non-commissioned officers, ten privates, two of the ship's company, and one woman, have shared the same fate.

The greater number of these were washed away from the wreck of the masts, to which they had clung, but Lieutenant Colonel Moore remained at his post to the last; and having repeatedly declining to leave the burning vessel until all his men had been safely removed, was at last driven into the mizen channels by the violence of the flames, and there unfortunately perished.

From the concurrent testimony of those left on the burning wreck from 11.30 p.m. of the 31st ultimo, to 2.30 a.m. of the 1st, it would appear that the conduct of the master (Mr. Gardner) was marked by great coolness and intrepidity throughout these trying hours; he was the last man to quit the wreck, and had his zealous endeavours to maintain order and save life been so ably seconded by his ship's company, there can be little doubt that the list of casualities would have been reduced.

It is my intention to disembark the crew and passengers at Gibraltar, provided the Governor sees no objection.

The soldiers are in want of many military necessities, with which we are unable to provide them, and the Master is desirous of setting his crew at liberty as soon as possible. This ship is also so inconveniently crowded, that it is in all respects desirable to land our passengers without delay.

Some of the soldiers are suffering from burns and bruises, but none beyond the reach of ordinary medical treatment.

I enclose lists of those who perished, and those who survived the destruction of the Europa.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,
(Signed,) S. T. CARNEGIE, Captain.
Ralph Osborne, Esq., M.P., Secretary of the Admiralty.

A CANADIAN DEFAULTER.—We learn from the Philadelphia papers of the 28th ultimo, that a true bill was found by the Grand Jury at the Quarter Sessions, against Michael William McCabe, recently of Toronto, Canada, now in the county prison here, for fraudulent insolvency. Claims have been entered against him by merchants of Montreal to the amount of $30,000, for goods sold in April, 1853. Other charges are said to be pending against him.

THE ALLEGED £10,000 JOB.—We find by the Toronto papers that, on Wednesday last, the proceedings in this case, in Chancery, were closed on that day. No day was fixed for the judgment being given.

THE MONTREAL ELECTION.—We publish to-day the address of Mr. Dorion to the electors of this city, and believe it is hardly necessary to give to so straightforward and admirable an expression of opinion and intention any recommendation of ours. Mr. Dorion's programme will, we are sure, secure the good opinions and, we hope, the votes of every member of that British portion of the population, who have on two previous occasions fought so well the battle of equal rights, civil and religious, with their French allies. We regard this as a solemn duty that every man owes to himself and his children, for it must be evident to every one acquainted with Montreal, that divided from these allies, the portion of the population to which we now refer are an isolated handful. The crowded state of our columns prevents our saying more to-day, but we shall return to the subject.

MR. HINCKS has issued an address, soliciting the suffrages of the Electors of the South Riding of the County of Oxford. It is also alleged that he seeks to be elected for the New County of Renfrew, on the Ottawa, in which he owns property. There is nothing in his address worthy of notice—containing, as it does, the old stereotyped list of (broken) promises—, with the exception of the last paragraph, which certainly displays an amount of brazen effrontery, which, if ever equalled, has certainly never been surpassed:—Lord Elgin's Maire de Palais tells his friends in Oxford:—

"I have only to state in conclusion that while I regret that the elections will take place at an inconvenient season, and that it has not been in the power of the Administration to bring the new Franchise into operation, or to give effect to the treaty for reciprocal free trade with the United States, or to reduce the tariff, I feel assured that the responsibility for the failure of these measures will be thrown on those on whom alone it should devolve, viz: the majority by whose votes the Government was placed in such a situation as to be compelled either to resign or to recommend a dissolution."

Is it not a gigantic thumper! And this in the face of the distinct declaration, on the part of the opposition, that they were ready and willing, not only to pass the Franchise Bill and any other measures necessary for the public interests, but also to grant the supplies—their only answer being an arbitrary and, we firmly believe, a most unconstitutional exercise, or rather prostitution, of the Royal Prerogative, by which they were sent about their business.

QUEBEC.—A meeting of the electors of Quebec was held, on Thursday afternoon, in St. Rochs, at which the late members, Messers. Dubord and Stuart, addressed them, in opposition to the Ministry. Messers. Chabot and Chauveau also addressed the meeting. Dr. Blanchet and Mr. Legaré are, it is said, to be the government nominees, as also the present Mayor of the city, Mr. Alleyn, but nothing appears to have been definitely decided upon—and there, as here, the Ministerial wigwam appears to be full of difficulties and troubles.

THE COMING ELECTION A NULLITY.—We have received "Richard Roe's" letter, and will publish it to-morrow. If he is right in his reasoning—and we find no law in it—it would certainly appear that no election can legally take place until the 1st January, 1855.

We copy the following from the Toronto Patriot, to which it seems to have been forwarded by a private friend, who had extracted it from a San Francisco paper of the date of May 25th.—We have not seen any notice of it in any other quarter:—

The Diana, a Russian frigate, 6 p. m. just fired four shots into an English bark, and nearly sunk her, and but for the superior sailing power of the bark the Diana's boats would have taken her.—The bark has a cargo on board valued at $17,000 Just as the boats gave up the chase, three in number, a steamer hove in sight, from whose bows, to the great astonishment of the intrepid but chagrined Russians, belched forth an incredible number of grape shot, entirely destroying two boats. The steamer coming up, the other boat was immediately taken without any resistance, the crew appearing completely asphyxiated at the sudden destruction of their comrades. The Russian frigate, from the first shot, seeing the condition her boats were in, made all sail to run away. The steamer proved to be the English steam frigate Virago, which immediately put about, giving the Diana chase. In the course of 25 minutes another shot was fired, carrying away the Diana's maintop mast, and the top-gallant fell over the side; instantly another shot was fired, appearing to strike the rudder. The Diana struck her colors without firing a shot. The English frigate was shortly alongside, when the Union Jack was immediately hoisted. The Diana is now in tow, in a disabled condition, of the English steam frigate Virago, making for this harbour. A large ship with English colours flying—to every appearance a man of war—is within twenty miles making for this port. During the short time the scene lasted it was very exciting.

The Rev. Dr. Bethune begs thankfully to acknowledge the receipt of £10 from Mrs. Chief Justice Reid, being a bequest from the late Miss McGillivray to the Widows' and Orphans' Fund of the Church Society of this Diocese.

CORSE et al, vs. CORSE.—This was an action by the representatives of the late Henry Corse en pétition d'hérédité, to recover a portion of the estate left by him, on the ground of being his nearest of kin along with Roswell Corse the defendant. Three claimed as brothers and sisters, the remaining four as representatives of Willis Corse a deceased brother, that they had a right to recover from the defendant, who was in possession of the estate, equal shares with him in the estate, being in the same relationship to the deceased The defence was, that in 1803, Henry Corse and Roswell Corse, American citizens, came to Canada, took the oath of allegiance to George III, during the war of 1812, continued to reside there and acquired property as naturalized subjects: that the late Henry Corse having died here, his brother Roswell, the defendant, was the only nearest of kin habile à se porter héritier; in other words, that the plaintiffs being aliens, they could not be heirs. The Inventory showed that the estate consisted of moveable and immoveable property. The learned Counsel at the argument seemed to dwell more at length upon a consideration of the rights of the moveables, taking for granted that the 12 Vic. removed disabilities respecting the realty; but if they contemplated both, the opinion of the court would now settle the matter. A good deal of ground was gone over as to the bearings of treaties between England, France, and the United States, but on reference to all authorities the court could not rest these points upon such treaties. The principal objection urged by defendant was under the article of the custom of Paris, which grants the right of succession to those only who are habiles à se porter héritiers, and suffers such to take by succession in exclusion to strangers, though in the same degree related to the deceased; or, in other words, that there exists by the common law of that country a vice de pérégrinité against aliens which excluded them. The discussion turned upon the meaning of the term vice de pérégrinité. The defendant contended that it was a civil law text establishing a certain order of succession, while the plaintiffs replied, on the contrary, that it attached to the person and depended upon his status to transmit or acquire by succession. The coûtume says the vice depended upon the character of the alien, in other words, upon the municipal law. If he was unable to take by succession and held no status as a subject, it was a consideration whether the vice belonged to the status of individuals or attached simply by civil law and so fell within the article of the custom. This point had undergone the decision of all our tribunals, and of the Privy Council in the case of Donegani vs. Donegani, which it was said, ought to have been our guide. It had been there determined that the law of England should decide who the alien was, and afterwards the law of this country who the heir was. This was a fallacy. To determine what an alien was, could have no result. What an alien was, and what an alien could do? was the question. There was nothing, however, in that decision to establish that it extended to personal property; and with all due respect to the learned judges who came to a conclusion so different from theirs, he nevertheless thought it the duty of every Court always to express its opinion where it differed from that of another. First of all, then, it was impossible to separate separate the idea of an alien from his disabilities. Those were aliens in a state who were born out of its sovereignty. So long as this country was a dependency of France, the droit d'aubaine, extending over real and personal property, was an effectual barrier to the alien. The moment it ceased to be so, the public law of France regarding aliens ceased also to exist, and the Province was thenceforward to be governed by the public law of England. The only disability established by the English law was the succession to the real—there was no disability as regarded the personal: for the alien might be appointed the executor, and that involved that he might have possessed the residue of the estate after discharging his office;—or the administrator, which involved the privilege of exercising civil rights. Was the Court here, then, bound to obey the precedent laid down in Donegani vs. Donegani? and if not, in taking the point out of that case, what was the Provincial law which ought to govern? The 12 Vic c. 197, sec. 12, was quite against the pretensions of the defendant. The Provincial law had there settled that whoever afterwards might be born out of the allegiance of the sovereign, could take by succession. The succession of the late Henry Corse did not open until after the coming in force of that act. This law gave the right both to the real and the personal, conferring upon the alien that which was technically termed in the English law heritable blood; the right to succeed was also one and indivisible. In the interpretation of that statute, all disabilities ceased with the plaintiffs, and the Court, therefore, declared them to be proprietors in the estate of the late Henry Corse equally with the defendant, Roswell Corse.

Mr. Justice MONDELET.—The discussion was interesting, affecting a large class of people, and because, also, the Court had to lay down the law in antagonism to the judgment of the Court of Appeals, to which it was bound at all times to pay respect; for the persons who presided in it were eminent as well from their position as in their character of jurists. He was not quite certain that the statute cited by his learned brother had removed all disabilities to the real as well as the personal, and to the personal as well as the real, but would not dissent from the judgment because in doubt; he believed it to be correct. He did not feel so certain as upon another point. He considered that while Canada belonged to France, every Judge was bound to obey the article of the custom; when, however, this country had the good fortune to pass from under the despotic government of France to a constitutional government, then the article vanished. And with the utmost respect to the Court of Appeals, to say that the laws of England were the proper ones to decide who was the alien, and then apply the article of the Custom to regulate his disabilities, seemed to him wrong. He was glad, on the present occasion, to feel that he was not alone in his views, and that they were not always bound to pay implicit attention to the judgments of the Courts of Appeals.

Mr. Justice DAY.—This is entirely a new point, and embraces a large class of interests. I do not go so far upon one point as my learned brethren. The question, as has been already amply stated, is whether certain parties born in the United States can take property belonging to the estate of the late Henry Corse, now fallen into the hands of Roswell Corse, the defendant. The first enquiry is, by what law are the rights of aliens to be governed? The disability of the alien, is it to be sought in the laws of England or in the laws of France as they existed in this country at the time of its settlement? It was settled in the case of Donegani vs. Douegani, that the laws regulating the disabilities, were those of France. The distinction laid down in that case was met by my learned brother here, and I, too, have always thought the distinction wanting in soundness. The whole law of aliens rests upon grounds of public policy. Why do aliens lie under a prohibition? Because the sovereign authority in every state is entitled to make laws for the regulation of its domestic affairs. This is a rule of public law. The prohibition is not imposed as a penalty, but as matter of expediency and policy. The authors are unanimous upon this. For this reason, then, they should be governed by the sovereign policy of the state, and all laws respecting their rights should emanate from that state. That a state shall declare who an alien is and apply foreign laws to regulate their disabilities, is inconsistent with principle, and this was the unsoundness of distinction in Donegani vs. Donegani. In Chitty's Prerogative it will be found to be stated that the disabilities of aliens to inherit are founded upon political and feudal policy. We have consulted also Coke on Lyleton p. 8; Bacon's Abridgment; Blackstone's Com. 289. The French books also agree on this head. [The learned judge cited from Loyseau also.] The law which ought to govern this case is the sovereign law of England. I shall admit that I would not adopt it for judgment in the face of that of the Court of Appeals. Regardful, as I ought to be, of the necessity of settling, finally, these difficult points of jurisprudence, I should refrain from placing myself in opposition to the solemn judgments rendered in that case. In this view, though personally I differ from those judgments, I should feel bound out of respect to bow my personal interprotation to them. I am relieved, however, by the Provincial Statute already alluded to. The disability of the alien is not in the law of nature or of nations; but the difficulty, it is supposed, lies in the article of the Custom of Paris, that they are not habiles à se porter héritiers: that it comes from their want of personal quality, or in terms of the English law, the absence of heritable blood. This quality being personal is indivisible, as stated by my learned brother. It cannot hold good for one kind of succession, and not for the other, because the taint of blood being removed, the disabilities attached to it are, also, in every respect. The statute is in general terms. The object, as stated in the preamble, is to facilitate transmission and succession by aliens. Then comes the enacting clause, which, if it had been in the general terms of the preamble, would have cleared up every doubt. Here, however, the alien is put on the same footing as natural born subjects, with regard to real property only.—Shall, then, the enacting clause, by its narrowness, control the preamble? The Courts of England, where the preamble is larger than the enacting clause, extend the latter, and so vice versa. In the old Naturalization Act 1st Will. 4, cap. 58. and the subsequent cap. made after Donegani and Donegani was decided, it is singular to observe that the same terms real property are mentioned in the preamble and enactment, as in the present case. And yet the old Acts confer upon the alien all the privileges of naturalized British subjects. It is utterly impossible to conceive that the framers of those statutes meant to restrict the rights to real property. The superior description of property always idcludes the inferior. The framers had in mind the law of England where the alien always took the personal, and thus far was accounted capable, and thought it unnecessary to provide for it. The provincial legislation is judicious and clear. Under the 12th Vic., the Plaintiff's disabilities are removed, and they are consequently entitled to recover in equal shares with the defendant out of the estate left by the late Henry Corse.

The following judgments were then rendered by Mr. Justice Mondelet:—

BRODEUR vs. RAMSAY.—An action against a Seignior for a sum paid out by the plaintiff for pacages. Action maintained.

LANGPRES vs. TREMBLAY.—An inscription de faux, the notary's clerk had written a guarantee in the margin, which defendants alleged did not form part of the convention. The inscription was not proved.

A new rule of practice of the Bankrupt Court was promulgated, by which court hours are fixed from 10 to 12 A.M., except during the sittings of the Judge or Commissioner, when the office will be kept open until the Court rises. This being read and approved of by the Bar, was published

CROSS vs. TRUDEAU.—Judgment for plaintiff for £87 5s.

LOWER CANADA.

EASTERN TOWNSHIPS.—It will be seen that Mr. Galt has consented again to become a candidate to represent the Town of Serbrooke in the Provincial Parliament. The numerous and respectable signatures attached to the requisition, is a sure guarantee of his triumphant return, and must be a gratifying evidence to him of their approval of his past, and confidence in his future efforts to serve them. We wish we had more such men to return from the Eastern Townships.

We understand that a requisition has been circulated in Melbourn and Shipton, requesting Wm. Webb, Esq. to become a candidate for the new county of Sherbrooke, and that he will be likely to be well supported. We have also heard U. Aylmer, Esq. and W. L. Felton, Esq., spoken of as probable candidates for that country.

Since the above was in type, he have seen the Reformer, which contains Mr. Webb's address to the electors; and have received the requisition to Mr. Aylmer, and his reply, which will be found in another column.

☞ We believe it is generally understood that Mr. Sanborn will be put up for Compton County; and as we are not aware of any dissatisfaction with his past services, we presume he will be returned by a large majority. It is reported that he will be opposed by Mr. Ross of Lingwick.

☞ Mr. Terrill, of Stanstead it is said, will be a candidate for that County, and that he will be opposed by Mr. M'Connell. It will be seen by the proceedings of the 'Liquor Law Leaugue' at a meeting held on Wednesday, that the Maine Law will be made a question in that County.—Our sympathies will of course be with the Maine Law candidate, provided he is otherwise well qualified.—Sherbrooke Gazette, Saturday.

REMARKS.

The last fortnight has been one of great activity in our port, and the demand for Oak, Elm, Staves and Deals particularly good.

WHITE PINE has not come forward in any excessive quantity, and sales to some extent have been made of fair average timber at 6½., 7d. and 8¼d. measured off for 60 and 65 feet average, while for large and superior quality the price asked is much greater in proportion. At the moment, however, the demand is more particulary for fair ordinary timber, while inferior finds buyers at 5d @ 6d.

Sales of 70 feet in shipping order have been at 9d.

FOR RED PINE there is little or no demand, the extreme prices asked having checked all shipment except where it has been contracted for.

OAK is in great request, and although sales were made last week by the dram at 2s 6d @ 2s 9d, it is now held firmly at the latter quotation.

ELM maintains a high price, and rafts have been sold at 15d @ 16½ for 32 to 37 feet average. In shipping order for 40 feet, 18d @ 20d is the quotation.

TAMARAC is arrriving in larger quantity than last season, but it is generally of large girth and size, and as all other wood for Ship-Building purposes is relatively of exorbitant value, it meets with a fair and ready sale at 7½ @ 10d for flatted, 10d, @ 13d for square.

Both STANDARD and PUNCHEON, STAVES are in good demand, shipments are large and the quantity in market limited.

Sales to some extent of W. O. Puncheon were made at £16 10s, but for small parcels sellers ask £17 @ £17 10s.

Floated deals are in good demand at £16 15s @ £17 for firsts, ⅔rds for seconds and £8 for thirds; while for Bright 10s extra is given for 1sts and 2nds in proportion.

There is a good enquiry for Spruce, and our quotations are realized without any great difficulty.

FREIGHTS continue much as when quoted in our last. We hear of 46s @ 47s being current rate for Liverpool; 46s to Clyde; 48s to Shields; 46s to an out port in Bristol Channel; 48s to Newport and Cardiff. £5 Deals to Liverpool and £6 15s Deals to London.

TO THE ELECTORS

OF THE

CITY OF MONTREAL.

GENTLEMEN,—Requested by a large number of my political friends to accept their nomination as a Candidate for the City of Montreal, at the approaching General Election, I have considered it my duty not to refuse the acceptance of this mark of confidence on their part, and I would now, therefore, respectfully solicit your suffrages.

Belonging to the most progressive section of the Liberal party in Lower Canada, to that party which has always held principles the most conciliatory towards effecting a union of citizens of all origins, the advocate of the widest extension of civil rights, political and religious, that party which, since taking a part in public affairs, has ever, with perseverance and energy, demanded those reforms, which it believed best calculated to favor progress and to develop the resources of the country, my opinions upon the principal questions which now agitate the country, must be pretty well known to you.

The Education of the people has become in Modern Societies one of the essential conditions of all solid and durable progression. To labor in rendering education as general as possible, in bringing it within the reach of all, to spread healthy and useful knowledge over the entire surface of the country, by the instruction of the young, is to multiply the sources of the moral and material well-being of present and future generations; it is to contribute in elevating our population to that rank which it ought to occupy among those, by which it is surrounded, and it is the first duty of the legislature to occupy itself with a subject of such vast importance. In the opinion of all, the present system is of little avail. It is necessary, then, to seek for a remedy by which the necessary force and vigour may be secured to surmount every obstacle and to render education popular and universal.

To render the Legislative Council elective, as well as a great number of offices, the nominations for which are now vested in the Government, to diminish the patronage of the Executive and its means of influence and corruption, is to give to the legislative body and to the servants of the public that independence, which they cannot possess under the system now in operation.

The abolition of the Seigniorial Tenure, while assuring to the Seigniors a just indemnity; the settlement of the question of the Clergy Reserves; reciprocal free trade with the United States on just and reasonable principles; the reduction of duties on importations; such are the principal measures which ought immediately to engage the attention of the Legislature.

Another question of great importance ought, ere long, to come under the consideration of your representatives. Should the seat of government continue alternative, or ought it to be fixed? The ambulatory system has already borne its natural fruits, and public opinion has irrevocably condemned it. In the discussions which will arise for fixing in a permanent manner the place of meeting of the legislature, the claims of Montreal may justly be adduced—her central position and other advantages cannot be forgotten.

Free trade with the United States, and the free navigation of the St. Lawrence will increase the inconvenience now felt from the insufficiency of our harbour. Its enlargement will become a matter of absolute necessity, and I hope that the surveys now being made, under the superintendence of men selected by the citizens and Corporation, will indicate in a satisfactory manner, the most proper means of providing for the wants of our increasing commerce, in accordance with the general interests of our citizens. Montreal is destined to become the entrepot of an immense commerce with the Western Countries, and every measure which tends to develop that commerce, thus furthering the prosperity of the city, will meet my most cordial support.

The opportunity of connecting the waters of the St. Lawrence with those of Lake Champlain, at some point opposite or near the City of Montreal, by means of a Canal, ought naturally to receive the favorable attention of the public, under the new circumstances in which our commercial relations with the United States are about to be placed, but the interests of Montreal, in view of the general interests of the country, ought to weigh in the balance in determining the locality.

In soliciting your suffrages, it is scarcely necessary for me to declare that I shall place myself in direct opposition to the present Ministry.

Nearly three years have elapsed since they attained office, and the Seigniorial Tenure still remains unchanged, the question of the Clergy Reserves is still unsettled, we have no Elective Legislative Council, and little hope of obtaining one, the municipal system has not been ameliorated, education makes no progress from the want of teachers, and the law passed in 1851, for the establishment of a Normal School, remains unexecuted.

The Constitution, which provides that a year shall never pass without a Session of the Legislature, the spirit of which is to secure a Session every year, has been interpreted by the present Ministry, in such a manner as only affords the country one Session of its Parliament in three years. A dissolution, untimely and arbitrary, has been made, without consideration of the urgency of certain measures, which the Assembly offered to pass.

It is under these circumstances and with no other guarantee but the same promises that they made in 1851, that the administration appeals to the country from the condemnation pronounced against it by the Legislative Assembly.

There requires nothing more to justify my want of confidence in that administration, but I feel that I should not have expressed my opinion upon one of the gravest of questions, if I did not explicitely repudiate the principle recently sent forth in the Assembly by the chief of the Cabinet, that a minister might speculate in the public securities and in the public lands, like any other individual. The immoral tendencies of such doctrines could not fail to cover with such a disgrace as would inevitably reflect upon the country itself, men, who, forgetful of the duties of their high position, would descend to play the part of stock-jobbers and place their own private interests above those of the public.

Should these principles meet with your approval and should you place me in the honorable and distinguished position of representing in Parliament the first city in Canada, my most constant efforts will be directed towards the means of attaining those advantages, which must result from their being reduced to practice.

I have the honor, to be,
Gentlemen,
Your very obdt. servant,
A. A. DORION.

Montreal, 1st July, 1854. 107

TO THE

FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS

OF THE

COUNTY OF CHATEAUGUAY.

GENTLEMEN,—Solicited by a great number among you to tender my services, at the approaching Election, to represent you in Parliament, I reluctantly submit to your good-will, well aware, as I am, of my unfitness to fulfill such an honorable and responsible charge. I have only to offer you, as a guarantee, my activity and perseverance for the progress of the Country.

Should the majority of the County select me to be their Representative, it shall be my duty to support all measures tending to the advancement of the County, and its agricultural improvements. I shall give my support to the passing of a law for the regulation of roads, of which the County is much in need of, and one for amending the present School law, which does not work as well as it should. The Abolition of the Seigniorial Tenure shall be one of the first measures that I shall ask for; and all other measures to promote the interests of the country, and of this County in particular, will receive my utmost attention and support. Finally, I may say that an Administration of which the Honble. Messrs. Morin and Drummond form a part, (men so recommendable and devoted to the interests of Lower Canada,) would receive my approbation.

I have the honor to be,
Gentlemen,
Your most obt. hbl. svt.,
MARC ANTOINE PRIMEAU.

BUSINESS NOTICES

LYON'S KATHAIRON,

☞ FOR PRESERVING, RESTORING AND BEAUTIFYING THE HAIR, is the most delightful and wonderful article the world ever produced. Its astonishing success is without a precedent in the history of the Materia Medica. Dark and luxuriant curls, soft and glossy hair, with scores of admirers, (mark this ladies), is the universal effect of the Kathairon. Bald and gray heads were perfectly astonished. "The Kathairon has fully restored my hair after a baldness of 12 years. A. J. COURTRIGHT, 76 Bond Street N.Y." The Kathairon is a certain cure for Nervous Head Ache, and all Cutaneous Diseases. Sold by all dealers, everywhere. Try it. Price only 25 cents in large bottles.

TO THE MILLIONS.

From toothless babes of nameless weeks,
To prattling jokers in the streets;
From girls and boys that read at school,
To office clerks upon their stools;
From the budding of love at sweet seventeen,
To the Caudle explosions of all honeymoon dreams;
From the mid-way years of man and his wife,
To advancing days and reclining life;
From the spectacled few, who with astonishment gaze
At the wondrous things of these modern days,—
Is heard this general exclamation,
HAVE YOU USED LYON'S KATHAIRON?
Grey heads and bald in concert sing,
The magic of this powerful thing,
That starts the roots of hair long dead,
And covers up the once bald head;
While the truant locks, so harsh and stiff,
That used to vex the pretty miss—
Now around her shoulders twirl
In such rich, luxuriant curls,
The sight or touch, you know not which,
Sets men a sinning, and their heads bewitch'd.
The Dandruff—vexed stuff—that once did fall
O'er broad-cloth coats, and collars soil,
You number with the things that were,
By using Kathairon on the hair.
But more than half, or all yet said,
Are facts about the nervous Head,
That sometimes racks and aches with pain,
And doctors' pills are taken in vain.
Now the Kathiron, such pains I'll warrant to cure
In ten minutes. No gossiping, I'm sure;
And for Pimples, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas and Tetter,
And all such diseases, nothing is better.

LYON'S KATHAIRON, so justly celebrated for Preserving, Restoring, and Beautifying the Hair, is sold by every Druggist and principal merchant throughout the World, in large bottles, for 25 cents.

Sold to the Trade at a liberal discount—but never commissioned. Address letters to

ANOTHER CERTIFICATE,

To prove that everybody should use Bowman's Gargling Oil:

ST. PIE, Sept. 1, 1853.

DEAR SIR,—I have been constantly in the habit of using your Gargling Oil for some time past, and can confidently recommend it to the public for reducing all kinds of inflammations, and for healing flesh wounds and burns.

I have found it very beneficial likewise in allaying the extreme pains of rheumatism.

I believe it also extremely valuable for many diseases of horses and cattle, having cured a very bad case of wind spavin on a favorite horse of mine not long since with a bottle of it.

You are at liberty to use the above as you may think proper.

DR. J. A. O. TETRAULT, J.P.

P.S.—This Medicine can only be obtained in the City of Montreal at the Manufactory, M'Gill Street; and for the convenience of the public, at F. Trigg's Fancy Goods Store, opposite, the English Church, Notre Dame Street.

Cholera Cured by the Plantagenet Water

I, THE UNDERSIGNED, wishing to give testimony in favor of the PLANTAGENET WATERS, beg to state that, in the year 1832, I was with a number of men lumbering near those valuable and efficient Springs, and that I was taken with the then prevailing disease (cholera) with a number of my men, who were also taken ill of the same disease. We used it, and we were perfectly cured, whilst those who were against it died almost instantly of the prevailing disease.—Moreover, we took down several barrels with us to Quebec in case of a relapse.

I remain, Sir, yours, &c.,
J. S. CAMERON.
St. Lawrence, Jan. 9, 1849.

MONTREAL, March 24, 1849.

I, the Undersigned, hereby certify that the above certificate of Mr. J. S. Cameron, relative to the Plantagenet Mineral Waters, as being an efficient cure in cases of cholera and other sickness, is strictly true, having witnessed its use in similar cases; and, moreover, in the year 1832, the fact above stated having occurred to my knowledge, I take therefore the liberty of recommending the same.

THIS INSTITUTION was originally established under a different title in the year 1839, on the plan of admitting the assured to participate in four-fifths only of the profits; but the Society has since been remodelled so as to become a strictly "Mutual Association."

The whole of the funds and property belong to, and are accumulated for the exclusive benefit of the Assured.

The profits are divided annually among the Policy-holders, and applied in reduction of the current year's premium; thus constituting, in effect, an immediate cash payment to the Assured.

Half-credit Policies are granted on terms unusually favorable to the holders,—the amount for which credit is given being gradually liquidated out of the profits.

Two Tables of Rates have been computed; one entitling the Assured to participate in the profits after payment of five annual premiums; the other considerably lower, in which the period of participation is deferred two years longer: the premium ultimately payable by the Assured is, however precisely the same, whichever Table of Rates may in the 1st instance be selected.

General Meetings of the Members are held annually; to whom full and complete statements of the affairs and funds of the Society are submitted, and by whom the divisions of the profits are from time to time declared.

At the Annual General Meeting held on the 27th April last, a dividend of 30 per Cent. upon the current year's premium was awarded to all Members who had made the requisite number of payments on their respective Policies.

By order of the Board of Directors,
E. R. FOSTER, Resident Director.

. The "Britannia Mutual Life Association" is altogether distinct from, and independent of, the Proprietary Office transacting business under the name of the "Britannia Life Assurance Company." The only connection between the two establishments is, that their affairs are conducted on the same premises and by the same officers, by which means the entire disbursements of the Mutual Association are reduced to a small per centage on the receipts.

THIS OFFICE insures against Loss or Damage by Fire, all descriptions of Buildings, including Mills and Manufactories, and the Goods, Wares and Merchandise in the same; Ships in harbor or in dock; Craft on Navigable Rivers and Canals, and the Goods laden on the same; and Farming Stock of all descriptions.

The "Equitable" Fire Office will, by a constant analysis of its own experience from time to time, adopt such rates of Premiums as the nature of the risk may justify.

With this view, an annual investigation will be made into each class of risk, and a return of one moiety—or fifty per cent;—of the nett excess will be made to all classes of Insurers, whose Policies have been in force for three years.

The engagements of the Equitable are guaranteed by a responsible proprietary, and an ample subscribed Capital. The insured are free from the liabilities of a Mutual Insurance Society, and entitled, according to the plan of the Company, to a return of half the profits.

Losses are made good, without deduction or discount, and are adjusted and paid in Montreal, without reference to London.

In connection with the Saratoga and Washington and Castleton Branch Railroad.

THE well known and favorite Steamer JOHN JAY, Hosea B. Lake George is indeed a most magnificent sheet of water. Its scenery is surpassed by none in the world, and the natural objects of beauty which continually present themselves alike charm the eye and fascinate the beholder. Its waters are clear and limpid, the average depth being 120 feet, and abound with the most delicious fish.—Along its whole length of 36 miles, almost every island, of which there are estimated 365, is clustered with historic associations. The eye ever delights in viewing the lofty and majestic and beautiful. The sail through the Lake is one of the finest excursions possible, and a day can be most agreeably spent in this delightful journeying. The ruins of Fort William Henry at the head of the Lake, the scene of the terrible massacre in 1757, as also Fort George, are well worthy of a visit.

MILL SITE FOR SALE.

THAT VALUABLE ISLAND at the mouth of the RIVER ST. MAURICE, called L'ISLE LA POTTERIE, containing about 100 arpents in superficies, surrounded by the waters of the St. Lawrence, and two of the Channels of the St. Maurice.

Also, a PART of the TWO other ISLANDS adjacent.

Also, the LAND on CAP DE LA MAGDELAINE, forming a frontage on the Cap of twelve arpents, by half an arpent in depth.

This Property, being situated partly in the River St. Lawrence, forms one of the finest positions in the country on which to erect a Steam Saw Mill.

In addition to the advantages of this Property to draw supplies of logs from the immense resources of the St. Maurice, it could also be made available for supplies of logs from any streams falling into the St. Lawrence above the St. Maurice, thus having advantages such as no other Mill in the county at present enjoys. Vessels of the largest class could load deals from the wharves of this Property, and thus save the expense of rafting, piling, &c.
