

EPH'S COCA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Ephs has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame.—Civil Service Gazette.

GRANBY, FRIDAY, JUNE 4, 1875

A FEW years ago skin-grafting was the greatest novelty in medical science, and, doubtless, it has since proved very advantageous in many cases. Its place among modern surgery, however, seems likely to be superseded by two other extraordinary operations which are just reported. A dentist of the name of Wilson, residing at Poverty Bay, is said to have transferred a superfluous tooth from one side of a boy's mouth to the other side, where there was a vacancy for a molar; and a California journal records the extraordinary fact that an establishment has been opened in that locality for the repair of the hair by grafting. The results are said to be astonishing. Any colored hair may be grafted on anybody's head. Modest youth may be arrayed in silvery locks, and garrulous age in ringlets of jet. In New Orleans, we are told, the treated style is extremely popular. It is described as consisting of patches of hair of varied shades, whereby the pate of the person operated upon is made to present a remarkable similarity to the article of wearing apparel which was handed to Jacob as an evidence of the loss of his favorite son. This style, it is said, seldom fails to produce a profound sensation; and well it might! The process by which these results are obtained are somewhat painful; but what of that? Hundreds of people in this country, as well as in New Orleans, seem to be ready at any moment to endure anything for the sake of producing "a profound sensation;" and if hair-grafting can be brought to the perfection here we are told it is "away off," we shall witness some strange mutations ere long.

This question of a federation of the British Empire has been discussed pretty freely of late. It is an old theory anguished long ago as the best means of keeping England and her Colonies in close compact. Late English papers give an account of a banquet to Sir Geo. Ferguson Bowen, Governor of Victoria, in honor of his distinguished manner of representing the Throne at Queensland, New Zealand and Victoria. His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh presided. In reply to the toast of his health, Sir George Bowen said:—

I must now conclude with a brief reference to the great question of federation. I do not now refer to any scheme for the federation of the whole Empire, for most of you will agree that the time has not yet arrived for the practical discussion of that vast and momentous question, though it will assuredly arise during the lives of many of the statesmen who are here to-night; for at the close of the present century the Crown will have nearly as many of the subjects of European descent in the Colonies as in the United Kingdom, and if they are then called upon for contributions towards the support of the Imperial army and navy, they will claim some voice in the Imperial Councils, as Adam Smith recommended 100 years ago. But since I have been in England I have often been asked:—When will the Australian Colonies be united in one Dominion like the Colonies of British North America? The true reply is that Englishmen at the Antipodes, like Englishmen at home, are thoroughly practical and averse from constitutional changes until some urgent need is felt for them. If, indeed, Australasia were now confederated the new Dominion would at once take its place among the foremost States of the world; for, as the latest official statistics will show, it would have an aggregate trade valued at ninety millions sterling, and an aggregate public Revenue of some four million sterling, and I need scarcely say that the new Dominion would remain, like Canada, in loyal allegiance to the Crown. Still, Canadians often tell us that their Dominion would not have been created as soon had it not been from the pressure without, so to speak, of the great neighboring Republic of the United States. The Australians, on the other hand, are the monarchs of all they survey in the Southern Seas. In the absence of pressure from without the Australian Colonies may prefer, for an indefinite period, to continue to revolve like planets, each in its own separate orbit, around the central sun of England, to which, as I have already said, they are passionately attached. Moreover, there is the question of the tariff, on which Sir Charles De Cane so ably expatiated the other day. But I have no time to allude to this rather burning question further than by remarking that, of course, an Australian Customs League, or Zollverein, must precede an Australian Bond or Confederation. Meanwhile, pending the consummation of a closer union, every Australian, like every other colonist, will continue to feel that the true and supreme federation for the Colonies is the permanent maintenance of the integrity of the Empire, and that the true rallying point for the people of the Colonies, as for the people of the Mother Country, is the Throne.

Hesitation, in any enterprise is fatal to success, and hesitation must necessarily take place when one has to dissect that which has not a perfect acquaintance, and the larger the area over which the operation of a business extends, the more fatal will be the consequence either of hesitation or mistake.
